

HISTORY OF EUROPE

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION

IN M.DCC.LXXXIX.

TO THE RESTORATION OF THE BOURBONS

IN M.DCCC.XV.

BY ARCHIBALD ALISON, F.R.S.E.

ADVOCATE.

"Bellum maxime omnium memorabile que unquam gesta sint me scripturum; quod Hannibale duce Carthaginienses cum populo Romano gessere. Nam neque validiores opibus ullæ inter se civitates gentesque contulei unt arma, neque his ipsis tantum unquam virium aut roboris fuit: et haud ignotas belli artes inter se, sed expertas primo Punico conserebant bello; odiis etiam prope majoribus certai unt quam viribus; et adeo varia belli fortuna, ancepsque Mars fuit, ut propius periculum fuerint qui vicerunt."—Tix. Liv. lib 21.

VOL. III.

PARIS,

BAUDRY'S EUROPEAN LIBRARY, 3, QUAI MALAQUAIS, NEAR THE PONT DES AÈTS; AND STASSIN ET XAVIER, Q, RUE DU COQ. .

SOLD ALSO BY AMYOT, RUE DE LA PAIX; TRUCHY, BOULEVARD DES TALIENS: BROCKHAUS AND AVENARIUS, RUE RICHELIEU; LEOPOLD MICHELSEN; LEIPZIG; AND BY ALL THE PRINCIPAL BOOKSELLERS ON THE CONTINENT.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XX.

CAMPAIGN OF 1796 IN ITALY.

Birth, education, and character of Napoléon—His first service in Corsica and at Toulon—Marriage with Josephine, and share in the 13th Vendémiaire—Character of the early Lieutenants of Napoléon, and commencement of the Italian Campaign—Battles of Montenotte, Millesimo, Dego, and Peace with Piedmont—Passage of the Bridge of Lodi, and fall of Milan—Napoléon advances towards the Venetian frontier—Siege of Mantua—Advance of Wurmser to raise the siege, and Battle of Castiglione—Second advance of Wurmser—His desperate actions and entrance into that fortress—Third advance of the Austrians under Alvinzi—Battles of Caldiero and Arcola—Fourth effort of the Imperialists—Battles of Rivoli and Mantua—Fall of Mantua—Treaty of Tolentino, and Peace with the Ecclesiastical States.—P. 1—60.

CHAPTER XXI.

CAMPAIGN OF 1796 IN GERMANY.

Parliamentary Proceedings in England during the year 1796—Termination of the war in la Vendée—Capture and Death of Charette—War in Germany—Advance of Moreau across the Black Forest into Bayaria, and of Jourdan from the Lower Rhine into Franconia—Retreat and able Design of the Archduke Charles to defeat the invasion—He attacks and overwhelms Jourdan, who is driven back with great loss to the Rhine—Retreat of Moreau through the Black Forest to the Rhine—Sieges of Kehl and Huningen—Maritime and Colonial Successes of England—Dispersion of the French Expedition, under Hoche, on the coast of Ireland—Death and Character of Catharine of Russia, and Retirement and Character of Washington in America.—61—100.

CHAPTER XXII.

INTERNAL TRANSACTIONS AND NAVAL CAMPAIGN OF GREAT BRITAIN IN 1797.

Difficulties of England in the commencement of this year—Suspension of Cash Payments—Debates on Reform—Supplies for the Year—Mutiny in the Fleet—Battles of St.-Vincent's and Camperdown—Character of Nelson—Death and Character of Mr. Burke.—101—124.

VI CONTENTS.

CHAPTER XXIII

CAMPAIGN OF 1797-FALL OF VENICE

Napoléon prepares to invade Austria over the Noric Alps—Battle of the Tagliamento, and retreat of the Archduke Charles—Succession of defeats, till the Imperialists are driven back to Garnntha-Armstice of Looken—Disturbances in the Yenetian territories, and perfidious conduct of France towards that Republic—Overthrow and fall of Venice—Operations on the Upper and Lower Rhine previous to the armstice—Genoa is revolutionized—Treaty of Campo Formo and perfid of Oxpodeon—P 124—164

CHAPTER XXIV

INTERNAL GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE, FROM THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DIRECTORY

Character and first Measures of the Directory after their installation into office—Manners and prevalent Ideas in the French capital after the Reign of Terrort—Gradual return by the Directory to a regular system of Government—Assignats—Financial Embarrassments—Autonal Bankruptey at length openly declared: and Public Funds conflictated—Conspiracy of Babout—Its objects and overthrow—General Reaction in Isyour of Royalist Principles, and its Indurence to the Legislature—Club of Clichy—The Majority of the Directory call in the aid of the Army—Measures of Napoléon and Augereau for their support—Revolution of 18th Freuchor brought shout at Paris—Gruel and Despite Measures of the victorious Party—Banishment of the Royalist leaders to Sinnamari—Ther Sufferings and Death—P 165—163

CHAPTER XXV

EXPEDITION TO EGYPT

Importance of Expo in a political, commercial and geographical point of view—Journey of Appolen to Rastad and Paris—His reception there—Proparations for the Expitin expedition—Voyage to Malts which capitulates—Landing of the French army in Exppt, and advance to Alexandra and Garo—Buttle of the Pyramids and civil government of Napo—Geometric of Napon—Battle of the Nile—Alliance of Turkey and Russia—Expedition of Desils into Upper Expst—Predition into Syria—Srege of Aere and Battle of Mount Thabor—Defeat of the French at Aere, and their reiterat to Exppt—Battle of Aboutir, and total defeat of the Turks—Napoléon secretly sets sail from Alexandria—Touches at Corsica and lands in safety at I rejus in France—191—191.

CHAPTER XXVI

FROM THE PEACE OF CAMPO FORMIO TO THE REVEWAL OF THE WAR

Homester History of Grest Pritain in 1392—Pstablishment of the Volunteer System—Financial Milliculties and national Baskruptey of France—Revolution effected by French induct of in Molland—Usesures of the French to overturn the Interpendence of Switzertand—Goustalann and Con juest of that Confederacy—Myssacre at Schwitz and in Undersal len—Greupaton of the Gristons Ly Austria—Institute of the Roman Republic—Indianous vyolution of Rome by Correments and I stallshowness of the Roman Republic—Indianous vyolution of Rome by the French Authorities—Overthrow of the Constitution of the Cisalpine Republic by the French—Humiliation and Abdication of the King of Sardinia—Invasion of the Roman Provinces by the Neapolitan Troops—Their Defeat, and the consequent Overthrow and Conquest, of Naples—Establishment of the Parthenopeian Republic—State of Ireland—Origin, Progress, and Defeat of the Rebellion in that Country—Collision of France with the United States of America—Negotiations at Rastadt and Seltz—Rupture of the Conferences, and Preparations of both Parties for War.—252—313.

CHAPTER XXVII.

CIVIL HISTORY OF FRANCE FROM THE REVOLUTION OF 18TH FRUCTIDOR, TO THE SEIZURE OF SUPREME POWER BY NAPOLÉON.

Progressive Reaction in France against the Government established by the 18th Fructidor—At length the Malecontents get the Command of the Councils—Revolution of 13th Prairial in consequence—Disturbed and miserable State of France—Universal Enthusiasm excited by the Arrival of Napoléon—His profound Dissimulation and able Conduct—League of all Parties to support him—Revolution of 18th Brumaire—Violent Dissolution of the Legislature at St.-Cloud on the 19th—Formation of the new Constitution, and Appointment of Napoléon as First Consul—Its general Approval by the People—Reflections on this Termination of the Revolution in Military Despotism.—314—350.

HISTORY OF EUROPE

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION.

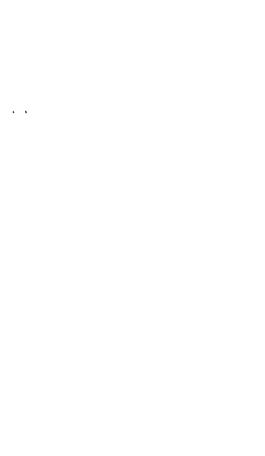

CHAPTER XX.

CAMPAIGN OF 1796 IN ITALY.

ARGUMENT.

Birth and Parentage of Napolcon-His Character, Residence, and Habits when in Corsica-Removed to the Military School at Brienne-His Character there-Is sent to the École Militaire at Paris-Progress and Development of his Character-Enters the army-and with his Regiment espouses the cause of the Revolution-His first service in Corsica-and at the Siege of Toulon—His first acquintance with Junot—Is attached to Dumerbion's Army in the Maritime Alps-Sent to Genoa, where he is arrested and liberated-Returns to Paris-His destitute condition there-Receives the Command from the Directory on the 13th Vendemiaire-His marriage with Josephine-Her History, and remarkable Adventure at the Fall of Robespierre-and Character-He marries her, and receives the command of the Army of Italy-State of the Italian Military force-Calamities which the French Invasion brought on the Peninsula-State of the French Army when Napoléon assumed the command-Character of its Officers-Berthier-Massena-Augereau-Serrurier-Amount of the Allied Forces-Napoleon's first Proclamation to his Soldiers-His plan of the Campaign-Battle of Montenotte-Heroic conduct of Colonel Rampon-Success of the French-Action at Milcsimo, and at Dego-Rold advance of Wuckassowich to Dego, which, at first successful, being unsupported, at length fails-Arrival of the Republicans on the Heights of Monte Zemolo-Actions of Serrurier with Colli-Danger of Napoleon-Action at Mondovi-Immense Advantages gained to the French by these Operations-Consternation of the Court of Turin-They resolve to submit to France-Armistice-Its conditions, followed by a Treaty of Peace between France and Sardinia-Its immense importance to Napoleon-His triumphant Proclamation to his Soldiers-Intoxication at Paris on this Intelligence-Designs of Napoleon-He crosses the Po, and proceeds against Beaulieu-Action at Fombio-Capitulation of the Grand Duke of Parma-Commencement of Napoleon's System of levying Contribution of the Works of Art-Terrible Passage of the Bridge of Lodi-Napoléon enters Milan-His Proclamation there to his troops—Enthusiasm excited by these Successes among the Popular Party in Italy—Gruel dispelling of the illusion by the French Contributions—War made to support War— The Directory, jealous of his power, orders Napoléon to proceed to Rome-He refuses-Alarming Insurrection at Pavia-Storm and Sack of that City by the French Troops-Napoléon enters Brescia and the Venetian Territory-Debates in the Venetian Senate on what should be done-They merely deprecate the hostility of France-Massena enters Verona, and Napoléon is established on the Adige-Description and Blockade of Mantua-Napoléon resolves to proceed against Florence and Rome before the Austrian Succours arrive-Castle of Milan taken-Genocse Fiefs subdued-Enters Modena and Bologna-Submission of the Pope-Violation of the neutral territory of Tuscany and seizure of Leghorn-Massacre of the Peasants at Lugo-Efforts of the Austrians for the relief of Mantua-Advance of Wurmser through the Tyrol with thirty thousand men-Description of the Theatre of War-Austrian plan of attack, and great success in the outset-Extreme peril of Napoléon-He raises the

1

HISTORY OF EUROPE

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER XX.

CAMPAIGN OF 1796 IN ITALY.

ARGUMENT.

Birth and Parentage of Napoleon-His Character, Residence, and Habits when in Corsica-Removed to the Military School at Brienne—His Character there—Is sent to the École Militaire at Paris-Progress and Development of his Character-Enters the army-and with his Regiment espouses the cause of the Revolution—His first service in Corsica—and at the Siege of Toulon—His first acquintance with Junot—Is attached to Dumerbion's Army in the Maritime Alps-Sent to Genoa, where he is arrested and liberated-Returns to Paris-His destitute condition there-Receives the Command from the Directory on the 13th Vendemiaire—His marriage with Joséphine—Her History, and remarkable Adventure at the Fall of Robespierre-and Character-He marries her, and receives the command of the Army of Italy-State of the Italian Military force-Calamities which the French Invasion brought on the Peninsula-State of the French Army when Napoléon assumed the command-Character of its Officers-Berthier-Massena-Augereau-Serrurier-Amount of the Allied Forces-Napoléon's first Proclamation to his Soldiers-His plan of the Campaign-Battle of Montenotte-Heroic conduct of Colonel Rampon-Success of the French-Action at Milesimo, and at Dego-Bold advance of Wuckassowich to Dego, which, at first successful, being unsupported, at length fails-Arrival of the Republicans on the Heights of Monte Zemolo-Actions of Serrurier with Colli-Danger of Napoléon-Action at Mondovi-Immense Advantages gained to the French by these Operations-Consternation of the Court of Turin-They resolve to submit to France-Armistice-Its conditions, followed by a Treaty of Peace between France and Sardinia—Its immense importance to Napoléon—His triumphant Proclamation to his Soldiers—Intoxication at Paris on this Intelligence—Designs of Napoléon—He crosses the Po, and proceeds against Beaulieu-Action at Fombio-Capitulation of the Grand Duke of Parma-Commencement of Napoléon's System of levying Contribution of the Works of Art—Terrible Passage of the Bridge of Lodi—Napoléon enters Milan—His Proclamation there to his troops-Enthusiasm excited by these Successes among the Popular Party in Italy-Cruel dispelling of the illusion by the French Contributions-War made to support War-The Directory, jealous of his power, orders Napoléon to proceed to Rome-He refuses-Alarming Insurrection at Pavia—Storm and Sack of that City by the French Troops—Napoleon enters Brescia and the Venetian Territory-Debates in the Venetian Senate on what should be done-They merely deprecate the hostility of France-Massena enters Verona, and Napoleon is established on the Adige-Description and Blockade of Mantua-Napoleon resolves to proceed against Florence and Rome before the Austrian Succours arrive-Castle of Milan taken-Genoese'Fiefs subdued-Enters Modena and Bologna-Submission of the Pope-Violation of the neutral territory of Tuscany and seizure of Leghorn-Massacre of the Peasants at Lugo-Efforts of the Austrians for the relief of Mantua-Advance of Wurmser through the Tyrol with thirty thousand men-Description of the Theatre of War-Austrian plan of attack, and great success in the outset-Extreme peril of Napoléon-He raises the III.

Napoléon advances against Wurmser-Action near Primo Lano in the Val Sugana-Wurmser

the Austrians

Napoleon Bonaparte was born at Ajaccio, in Corsica, on the 15th August. 1769. The Duke of Wellington was born in the same month, "Providence." said Louis VIII. "owed us that counterpoise (1)"

His family, though noble, had not been distinguished, and had suffered severely from misfortune. He was too great a man to at-\apoleon tempt to derive distinction from any adventitious advantages which did not really belong to him, and could afford to discard all the lustre of patrician descent. When the Emperor of Austria endeavoured, after he became his son-in-law, to trace his connexion with some of the obscure Dukes of Treviso, he answered that he was the Rudolph of Hapsburg of his family; and when the genealogists were engaged in deducing his descent from an ancient line of Gothic princes, he cut short their labours by declaring, that his patent band during the civil dissensions which distracted the island at the time of his birth, and had recently before been engaged in some expeditions on horseback with him. His father died at the age of thirty-eight, of a cancer in the stomach, a complaint hereditary in his family, and which also proved fatal to Napoléon lumself; but the want of paternal care was more than supplied by his mother, to whose early education and solicitude he, in after life, munity ascribed his elevation (5) Though left a widow in the prime of life, his mother had already born thirteen children, of whom five sons and three daughters survived their father. She lived to see one of them wearing the crown of Charlemagne, and another seated on the throne of Charles \ ($)

On the day of his birth, being the festival of the Assumption, she had been at Church, and was seized with her pains during high mass. She was brought

⁽i) Bour, i 18 Cherr : Les Cas 127.
(2) Les Les, i 108 112 Four i 21
(3) "My og m on," and Nomboon, "in, that the future good or had conduct of a th M depends cutirely on the mother "-O'Massa, is 100

⁽⁴⁾ Las Cas 1 117, 119, 120 G'Mears, il 100. D Abr II 378 377

⁽⁵⁾ D thr is 317, Las Can 1 125.

In the years of infancy he exhibited nothing remarkable, excepting irritability and turbulence of temper; but these qualities, as well as the decision with which they were accompanied, were so powerful, that they gave him the entire command of his eldest brother Joseph, a boy of a mild and unassuming character, who was constantly beaten, pinched, or tormented by the future ruler of the world. But even at that early period it was observed that he never wept when chastised; and on one occasion, when he was only seven years of age, having been suspected unjustly of a fault, and punished when innocent, he endured the pain, and subsisted in disgrace for three days on the coarsest food, rather than betray his companion, who was really in fault. Though his anger was violent, it was generally of short endurance, and his smile from the first was like a beam of the sun emerging from the clouds. But, nevertheless, he gave no indications of extraordinary capacity at that early age; and his mother was frequently heard to declare, that of all her children, he was the one whom she would least have expected to have attained any extraordinary eminence (1).

The winter residence of his father was usually at Ajaccio, the place deuce, and deuce, and habits, when there is still preserved the model of a cannon, habits, when weighing about thirty pounds, the early plaything of Napoléon. But in summer the family retired to a dilapidated villa near the isle Sanguiniere, once the residence of a relation of his mother's, situated in a romantic spot on the sea-shore. The house is approached by an avenue, overhung by the cactus and acacia, and other shrubs, which grow luxuriantly in a southern climate. It has a garden and a lawn, showing vestiges of neglected beauty, and surrounded by a shrubbery permitted to run to wilderness. There, enclosed by the cactus, the clematis, and the wild olive, is a singular and isolated granite rock, beneath which the remains of a small summerhouse are still visible, the entrance to which is nearly closed by a luxuriant fig-tree. This was the favourite retreat of the young Napoléon, who early showed a love of solitary meditation during the periods when the vacations at school permitted him to return home. We might suppose that there were perhaps formed those visions of ambition and high resolves, for which the limits of the world were ere long felt to be insufficient, did we not know that childhood can hardly anticipate the destiny of maturer years; and that, in Cromwell's words, a man never rises so high as when he does not know where his course is to terminate (2).

Removed to the Military School of Brienne. His the Military School at the Military character there underwent a rapid alteration. He became thought-Brienne: ful, studious, contemplative, and diligent in the extreme. His proter there. ficiency, especially in mathematics, was soon remarkable; but the quickness of his temper, though subdued, was not extinguished. On one occasion, having been subjected to a degrading punishment by his master, that of dining on his knees at the gate of the refectory, the mortification he experienced was so excessive that it produced a violent vomiting and a universal tremor of the nerves (3). But in the games of his companions he was inferior to none in spirit and agility, and already began to evince, in a decided predilection for military pursuits the native bias of his mind.

During the winter of 4785-4, so remarkable for its severity, even in southern latitudes, the amusements of the boys without doors were completely stopped. Napoleon proposed to his companions to beguile the weary hours by forming intrenchments and bastions of stow, with parapets, ravelins, and horn-works. The little army was divided into two parties, one of which was intrusted with the attack, the other with the defence of the works; and the mimic war was continued for several weeks, during which fractures and wounds were received on both sides. On another occasion, the wife of the porter of the school, well known to the boys for the fruit which she sold, in the control to safety the dozen of thus there to be a line. It is not a few the control to safety the dozen of thus there to be a line.

⁽¹⁾ D'Ahr. i. 49, 52, 54. Las Cas. i. 126. (2) Benson, 4, 6. Scott, iii. 10.

camps," said the future ruler of the Revolution (1).

thematics and the four first rules of arithmetic. Pichegru early perceived the firm character of his little pupil, and when, many years afterwards, he had embraced the Royalist Party, and it was proposed to him to sound Napoleon, then in the command of the army of Italy, he replied, "Don't waste time upon him: I have known him from his infancy, his character is inflexible; he has taken his side, and will never swerve from it." The fate of these two illustrious men afterwards rose in painful contrast to each other. Pichegru was strangled in a dungeon when Napoléon was ascending the throne of France (2).

The speculations of Napoléon at this time were more devoted to political than initiary subjects. Itis habits were thoughtful and solitary; and his conversation, even at that early age, was so remarkable for its reflection and energy, that it attracted the notice of the Abbé. Raynal, with whom he frequently lived in vacations, and who discoursed with him on government, legislation, and the relations of commerce. He was distinguished by his Halian complexion, his piercing look, and the decided style of his expression: a peculiarity which frequently led to a vehemence of manner, which rendered him not generally popular with his school-fellows. The moment their playtime arrived, he flew to the ibrary of the school, where he read with a with a vidit jie.

" - " I hate these thistanding this.

vas intrusted, in his turn, with the enforcing of any regulation which was infringed, he pre-

'le, it was not remarkable; and exhibited many other young

., proficiency—a circumstance

rise to greatness. In the pri-

⁽¹⁾ Bour i 25, 23 (3 Bour i 27, 32, 33, 35 Lu Cas i 116, 27) Lu Cas i 125, 131, O Henr, i, 210 D Air i 111

school, he was characterised as of a "domineering, imperious, and headstrong character (1)."

During the vacations of school, he returned in general to Corsica; where he gave vent to the ardour of his mind, in traversing the mountains and valleys of that romantic island, and listening to the tales of feudal strife and family revenge by which its inhabitants are so remarkably distinguished. The celebrated Paoli, the hero of Corsica, accompanied him in some of these excursions, and explained to him on the road the actions which he had fought, and the positions which he had occupied during his struggle for the independence of the island. The energy and decision of his young companion, at this period, made a great impression on that illustrious man. "Oh, Napoléon!" said he, "you do not resemble the moderns-you belong only to the heroes of Plutarch (2)".

At the age of fourteen, he was sent from the school of Brienne to Is sent to the Ecole Militaire the Ecole militaire at Paris, for the completion of his military studies. He had not been long there, when he was so much struck with the luxurious habits in which the young men were then brought up, that he addressed an energetic memorial to the governor on the subject, strongly urging, that instead of having footmen and grooms to wait upon their orders, they should be taught to do every thing for themselves, and inured to the hardships and privation which awaited them in real warfare. In the year 1785, at the age of sixteen, he received a commission in a regiment of artillery, and was soon promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. in a corps quartered at Valence. Shortly after, he gave a proof of the varied subjects which occupied his mind, by writing a History of Corsica, and an Essay for a prize, proposed by the Abbé Raynal, on the "Institutions most likely to contribute to Public Happiness." The prize was adjudged to the young soldier. These productions, as might have been expected, were distinguished by the revolutionary doctrines then generally prevalent, and very different from his maturer speculations. The essay was recovered by Talleyrand after Napoléon was on the throne; but the moment the Emperor saw it he threw it into the flames (5).

At this period, Napoléon was generally disliked by his companions: he was considered as proud, haughty, and irascible; but with the few whose conversation he valued, and whose friendship he chose to cultivate, he was even then a favourite, and high expectations began to be formed of the future eminence to which he might rise. His powers of reasoning were already remarkable; his expressions lucid and energetic; his knowledge and information immense, considering his years, and the opportunities of study which he had enjoyed. Logical accuracy was the great characteristic of his mind; and his subsequent compositions have abundantly proved, that if he had not become the first conqueror, he would have been one of the greatest writers, as he assuredly was one of the profoundest thinkers of modern times (4).

Ilis figure, always diminutive, was at that period thin and meagre in the highest degree; a circumstance which rendered his appearance somewhat ridiculous, when he first assumed the military dress. Mademoiselle Permon, afterwards Duchess of Abrantes, one of his earliest female acquaintances, and who afterwards became one of the most brilliant wits of the Imperial court,

⁽¹⁾ Bour. i. 37, 38.

⁽²⁾ Las Cas. i. 136, ii. 318.

⁽³⁾ O'Meara, ii. 168, 169. Las Cas. i. 43, 136, 141. Bour. i. 44. D'Abr. i. 76.

(4) D'Abr. i. 111. Las Cas. i. 140, 141.

stopped. Napoleon proposed to his companions to beguile the weary hours hy forming intrenchments and bastions of snow, with parapets, ravelins, and horn-works The little army was divided into two parties, one of which was intrusted with the attack, the other with the defence of the works; and the mimic war was continued for several weeks, during which fractures and wounds were received on both sides. On another occasion, the wife of the norter of the school, well known to the boys for the fruit which she sold, having presented herself at the door of their theatre to be allowed to see the Death of Casar, which was to be played by the youths, and been refused an entrance, the serieant at the door, induced by the vehemence of her manner. reported the matter to the young Napoleon, who was the officer in command on the occasion "Remove that woman, who brings here the license of camps," said the future ruler of the Revolution (1),

It was the fortune of the school at Brienne at this time to possess among its scholars, besides Napoléon, another boy, who rose to the highest eminence in the Revolution, Pichegru, afterwards conqueror of Holland. He was several years older than Napoléon, and instructed him in the elements of mathematics and the four first rules of arithmetic. Pichegru early perceived the firm character of his little pupil; and when, many years afterwards, he had embraced the Royalist Party, and it was proposed to him to sound Napoleon. then in the command of the army of Italy, he replied, "Don't waste time upon him : I have known him from his infancy; his character is inflexible: he has taken his side, and will never swerve from it." The fate of these two illustrious men afterwards rose in painful contrast to each other: Pichegrii was strangled in a dungeon when Napoléon was ascending the throne of France (2).

The speculations of Napoléon at this time were more devoted to political than military subjects. His habits were thoughtful and solitary; and his conversation, even at that early age, was so remarkable for its reflection and energy, that it attracted the notice of the Abbé Raynal, with whom he frequently lived in vacations, and who discoursed with him on government. legislation, and the relations of commerce. He was distinguished by his Itahan complexion, his piercing look, and the decided style of his expression a peculiarity which frequently led to a vehemence of manner, which rendered him not generally popular with his school-fellows. The moment their playtime arrived, he flew to the library of the school, where he read with a righty the historical works of the ancients, particularly Polybius, Plutarch, and Arrian His companions disliked him, on account of his not joining their games at these hours, and frequently rallied him on his name and Corsiem birth. He often said to Bourrienne, his earliest friend, with much bitterness,-" I hate these French-I will do them all the mischief in my power." Notwithstanding this, his animosity had nothing ungenerous in it, and when he was intrusted, in his turn, with the enforcing of any regulation which was infringed, he preing delinquents (5).

.. was not remarkable; and · · I ibited many other young . : oficiency-a circumstance frequently observable in those who ultimately rise to greatness. In the private instructions communicated to government by the masters of the school, he was characterised as of a "domineering, imperious, and headstrong character (1)."

⁽³ Poor 1 27, 37, 33, 33 Los Cas. 1 134 Date i III

During the vacations of school, he returned in general to Corsica: where he gave vent to the ardour of his mind, in traversing the mountains and valleys of that romantic island, and listening to the tales of fendal strife and family revenge by which its inhabitants are so remarkably distinguished. The celebrated Paoli, the hero of Corsica, accompanied him in some of these excursions, and explained to him on the road the actions which he had fought, and the positions which he had occupied during his struggle for the independence of the island. The energy and decision of his young companion, at this period, made a great impression on that illustrious man. "Oh, Napoleon!" said he, "you do not resemble the moderns—you belong only to the heroes of Plutarch (2)".

At the age of fourteen, he was sent from the school of Brienne to the Fcole the Ecole militaire at Paris, for the completion of his military studies. He had not been long there, when he was so much struck with the luxurious habits in which the young men were then brought up, that he addressed an energetic memorial to the governor on the subject, strongly urging, that instead of having footmen and grooms to wait upon their orders, they should be taught to do every thing for themselves, and inured to the hardships and privation which awaited them in real warfare. In the year 1783, at the age of sixteen, he received a commission in a regiment of artillery, and was soon promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, in a corps quartered at Valence. Shortly after, he gave a proof of the varied subjects which occupied his mind, by writing a History of Corsica, and an Essay for a prize, proposed by the Abbé Raynal, on the "Institutions most likely to contribute to Public Happiness." The prize was adjudged to the young soldier. These productions, as might have been expected, were distinguished by the revolutionary doctrines then generally prevalent, and very different from his maturer speculations. The essay was recovered by Talleyrand after Napoléon was on the throne; but the moment the Emperor saw it he threw it into the flames (5).

At this period, Napoléon was generally disliked by his companions: he was considered as proud, haughty, and irascible; but with the few whose conversation he valued, and whose friendship he chose to cultivate, he was even then a favourite, and high expectations began to be formed of the future eminence to which he might rise. His powers of reasoning were already remarkable; his expressions lucid and energetic; his knowledge and information immense, considering his years, and the opportunities of study which he had enjoyed. Logical accuracy was the great characteristic of his mind; and his subsequent compositions have abundantly proved, that if he had not become the first conqueror, he would have been one of the greatest writers, as he assuredly was one of the profoundest thinkers of modern times (4).

His figure, always diminutive, was at that period thin and meagre in the highest degree; a circumstance which rendered his appearance somewhat ridiculous, when he first assumed the military dress. Mademoiselle Permon, afterwards Duchess of Abrantes, one of his earliest female acquaintances, and who afterwards became one of the most brilliant wits of the Imperial court, mentions, that he came to their house, on the day on which he first put on his uniform, in the highest spirits, as is usual with young men on such an occasion; but her sister, two years younger than herself, who had just left her the contract of the stroke told; the libel was too true not to be felt:

⁽¹⁾ Bour. i. 37, 38. (2) Las Cas. i. 136. ii. 318.

⁽³⁾ O'Meara, ii. 168, 169. Las Cas. i. 43, 136, 141. Bour. i. 44. D'Abr. i. 76. (4) D'Abr. i. 111. Las Cas. i. 140, 1.

but Napoleon soon recovered his good-humour, and a few days afterwards, presented her with an elegantly bound copy of Puss in Boots, as a proof that be relained no rancour for her railiery (1)

When the Revolution broke out, he adhered, like almost all the wind life of the good officers of a subaltern rank, to the popular side, and confined the lime of the Constituent Assembly But, on the appointment of the Legislative Assembly, he has himself declared that his sentiments underwent a rapid change; and he soon imbibed, under the Reize of Terror, that profound hatred of the Jacobns.

o diminos po

and that which overturned the throne on the 40th August, and on both he strongly expressed his sense of the runous consequences likely to arise from the want of resolution in the government. An man know better the consequences of yielding to popular elamour, or how rapidly it is checked by proper firmness in the depositaries of power from the weakness shown on the 20th June, he predicted the disastrous effects which so speedily followed on the next great revolt of the populace. When he saw the monarch, in obedience to the rabble, put on the red cap, his indignation knew no bounds "How on earth," he exclaimed, "could they let those wretches enter the palace! They should have cut down four or five hundred with grape-shot, and the rest would seeclib have taken to flight [2].

The first military exploit of Napoléon was in his native country. The disturbances in Corsica having led the revolutionary forces of the disturbances in Corsica having led the revolutionary forces.

besieged, and compelled to evacuate it (5). His tilents, and the high charater which he had received from the masters of the military academy, soon, however, led to a more important employment. At the siege of Toulon, the command of the artillers, after the operations had advanced a considerable length, was intrusted to his direction, and his soon communicated a new impulse to the hitherto languarding progress of the siege. By his advice, the discussion of the siege of the siege of the siege of the sieges of the si eing abandoned in depair, was speedily crowned with complete success. During this operation he was first struck by the lirmness and intrepolity of a young corporal of artilbeauties. It is not to send a despatch from the trenches, he called for some person who could write, that he might dictate the order. A young solds r stepped from the ranks, and resting the paper on the breastwork, began to write as he dictated, when a shot from the enemy's batteries struck the ground close to him, and covered the paper with earth. "Thank you," said the soldier; "we shall have no occasion for sand on with Junot this page." Napoléon asked him what he could do for him. "Every thing," replied the young private, blushing with emotion, and touching his left shoulder with his hand; "vou can turn this worsted into an epaulet." A few days after, Napoleon sent for the same soldier to order him to reconnoitre in the enemy's trenches, and recommended that he should disguise himself, for fear of his being discovered. "Never," replied he. "Do you take me for a spy? I will go in my uniform, though I should never return." And in effect he set out instantly, dressed as he was, and had the good fortune to return unhurt. Napoléon immediately recommended him for promotion, and never lost sight of his courageous secretary. He was Junot, afterwards Marshal of France, and Duke of Abrantes (1).

On another occasion, an artilleryman having been shot while loading a gun, he took up the dead man's ramrod, and with his own hands served the piece for a considerable time. He first took notice, at the same siege, of another young soldier named Dunoc, whom he never afterwards lost sight of, made Marshal of the Palace, and ever treated with the most unlimited confidence, till he was killed by his side on the field of Bautzen. Duroc loved Napoléon for himself, and possessed, perhaps, a larger share of his confidence than any of his other generals; and none knew so well, in after years, how to let the first ebullitions of the imperial wrath escape without producing fatal effects, and allowing the better judgment of his sovereign to resume its sway in cooler moments (2).

The reputation which Napoléon acquired from the successful issue of this siege was very great. All the generals, representatives, and soldiers, who had heard the advice which he gave at the councils, three months before the capture of the town, and witnessed his activity at the works, anticipated a future career of glory to the young officer. Dugommier wrote to the Committee of Public Safety in these words :- "Reward and promote that young man; for, if you are ungrateful towards him, he will raise himself alone (5).

This success procured for Napoléon the command of the artillery blon's atmy of the army of Italy during the campaign of 1794. Dumerbion, who in the Mail-time Alps. Was advanced in years, submitted all the operations to a council of younger officers, among whom Napoléon and Massena soon acquired a decided lead; and the former, from the force of superior talents, gradually came to direct the whole operations of the campaign; and it was his ability which procured for the French armies the capture of Saorgia, the Col di Tende, and all the higher chain of the Maritime Alps. These successes awakened in his ardent mind those lefty visions of ambition which he was so soon destined to realize; one night, in June 1794, he spent on the summit of the Col di Tende, from whence at sunrise he beheld with delight the blue plains of Italy, already to his prophetic eye the theatre of glorious achievement (4).

In July 1794, Napoléon was sent by the Commissioners of the Conven-

(1) Duchess d'Abr. ii. 191. Las Cas. i. 166. Nap. i. 10, 13.

So strongly did Napoléon's character impress Junot at that time, that he quitted his regiment to devote himself to his fortunes as aide-de-camp, and wrote to his father in 1794, in answer to his enquiries, what sort of young man he was to whom he had attached himself,-" He is one of those men of whom nature is sparing, and whom she does not throw upon the earth but with centuries between them." [D'Abr. ii.193. Las Cas. i. 165.]

(2) Las Cas. ii. 156, 157. Scott, iii. 35.

(3) Nap. iii. 15.

(4) Nap. iii. 26, 31.

tion to Genoa upon a secret mission, in which he was connected with here are Robespierre's brother, then intrusted with the supreme command registed. at Toulon This mission saved his life, the younger Robespierre, for whom, at that period, he had conceived the highest admiration, carnestly entreated Aspoleon to accompany him to Paris, whither he was returning to support his brother, but he was inflexible in his refusal, flad he yielded, he would infallibly have shared the fate of both, and the destinies of Europe would have been changed. As it was, he was exposed, from his connexion with these leaders, to no inconsiderable dangers even on his Italian mission Within a month after, he was, in consequence of the fall of Robespierre, arrested by the new commissioners, whom the Thermidorien party sent out to the army of Italy, and made a narrow escape with his life. He addressed, in 6th Au, 1 91 consequence, an energetic remonstrance to the commissioners. remarkable for the strong sense, condensed thought, and powerful expression which it contains, while his friend Junot was so penetrated with grief at his misfortune, that he wrote to the commissioners, protesting his innocence, and imploring to be allowed to share his captivity. It was attended with complete success, a fortnight afterwards, he was provisiopally set at liberty, and immediately returned to Paris' He was vas de-

I to the attack of the Sections on the Convention, in October 4793, he has himself described as the happiest in his life (2). Living almost without money, on the bounty of his friends, in coffee-houses and theirres, his ardent imagination dwelf incessnilly on the future, and visions floated across his mind, tagged yithe path mind itself.

has in re-

plenishing the secret fountains from which the joys or sorrows of existence are drawn. During these days of visionary romance, he dwelt with peculiar pleasure on his favourite idea of repairing to Constantinople and offering his services to the Grand Signior, under the impression that things were too stable in the Western World, and that it was in the East alone that those great revolutions were to be effected, which at once immortalize the names of their authors. He even went so far as to prepare, and address to the French government, a memorial, in which he offered, with a few officers, who were willing to follow his fortunes, to go to Turkey, to organize its forces against Russia, a proposal which, if acceded to, would probably have changed the fate of the world. This impression never forsook him through life, it was, perhaps, the secret motive of the expedition to Moscow, and, even after all the glories of his subsequent career, he looked back with regret to these early visions [5); and, when speaking of Sir Sidney Smith and the check at Acte, repeatedly said—"That man made me miss in destina"

nives we So low, however, were the fortunes of the future I mperor faller mean, which he could not afford to purchase himself. His brother I treen and he brought the black bread received in their rations to Malaine Bourrienne, and received in exchange loaves of white four, which she had claudetimely.

⁽¹⁾ Four 1 CO &1 59 *O Lay Cas 157 D.Abr. (3) O'Hears II 155 Las Cas i 177 Four I-1 194 "2 73 (2 O'Hears II 1 5

and at the hazard of her life, received during the law of the Maximum, from a neighbouring confectioner. At this period she lodged in a new house in the Rue des Marais. Napoléon was very anxious to hire, with the assistance of his uncle, afterwards Cardinal Fesch, the one opposite. "With that house," said he, "the society of yourself, a few friends, and a cabriolet, I should be the happiest of men (1)."

But another destiny awaited the young soldier. The approaching conflict of the Convention with the Sections was the first circumstance which raised him from the obscurity into which he had recently fallen. His great abilities being known to several persons of influence in government, he was, on the first appearance of the approaching struggle, taken into the confidence of administration, and had been consulted by them for some months before the contest began. When the attack by Menou on the Section Le Pelletier failed, Napoléon was sent for. He found the command Convention in the utmost agitation; and measures of accommodafrom the Directory, on the rath Vendemiaire. and decision saved the government. He painted in such vivid colours the extreme peril of sharing the supreme authority between the military commander and three commissioners of the convention, that the committee of public safety agreed to appoint Barras commander-in-chief, and Napoléon second in command. No sooner was this done than he dispatched at midnight a chief of squadron, named Murat (2), with three hundred horse, to seize the park of artillery lying at Sablons. He arrived a few minutes before the troops of the sections, who came to obtain them for the insurgents; and, by this decisive step, put at the disposal of government those formidable batteries, which, next day, spread death through the ranks of the national guard, and, at one blow, extinguished the revolt. Barras declared in his report, that it was to Napoléon's skilful disposition of the posts round the Tuileries that the success of the day was owing; but he himself never ceased to lament, that his first success in separate command should have been gained in civil dissension; and often said, in after times, that he would give many years of his life to tear that page from his history (3).

(1) Bour. i. 76, 81, 86.
In those days Napoleon wore the grey great-coat, which has since become more celebrated than the white plume of Henry IV; he had no gloves, for, as he said himself, they were a useless expense; his boots, ill made, were seldom blackened; his yellow visage, meagre countenance, and severe physiognomy, gave as little indication of his future appearance, as his fortunes did of his future destiny. Salicetti had been the author of his arrest "He did me all the mischief in his power," said Napoléon; "hut my star would not permit him to pre-vail." [D'Abr. i. 255, 256.] So early had the idea of a brilliant destiny taken possession of his mind. Heafterwards made a generous return to his enemy: Salicetti was ordered to be arrested by the Convention after the condemnation of Romme, the chief of the conspirators, and he was concealed in the house of the mother of the future Duchess of Abrantes. Napoléon learned the secret in consequence of a love intrigue between his valet and their maid; but he concealed his knowledge, facilitated their escape, and sent a letter to his enemy on the road, informing him of the return he had made for his malevolence. [Ibid. 351]

(2) "Murat," said Napoléon, "was a most singular character. He loved, I may rather say, adored me; with me he was my right arm; as without me he was nothing. Order Murat to attack and destroy four or five thousand men in such a direction, it was done in a moment; leave him to himself, he was an imbecille without judgment. In battle he was perhaps the bravest man in the world : his boiling courage carried him into the midst of the enemy, covered with plumes and glittering with gold; how he escaped was a miracle, for, from being so distinguished a mark, every one fired at him. The Cossacks admired him on account of his excessive bravery. Every day Murat was engaged in single combat with some of them, and returned with his sabre dripping with the blood of those he had slain. He was a Paladin in the field; but in the cabinet destitute of either decision or judgment." O'Mrara, ii. 96.

(3) Bour. i. 90, 96. Nap. iii. 67, 74. Though not gifted with the powers of popular oratory, Napoleon was not destitute of that ready talent which catches the idea most likely to divert the populace, and frequently disarms them even in the moment of their greatest irritation. When in command at Paris, after the suppression of this revolt, he was frequently brought in collision with the people in a state of the utmost excitement; and on these occasions his presence of mind was as conspicuous as his humanity was admirable. Above a hundred families, during the dreadful famine which followed the suppression of the revolt of the Sections in the winter 1795-6, were saved from

The next event in Aapoléon's career was not less important on his range with the distinct fortunes. On occasion of the general disarming of the inhabitants after the overthrow of the Sections, a boy of ten years of age came to request from Aapoleon, as general of the interior, that his father's sword, which had been delivered up, should be restored to him. His name was Eugen Bendardon, and Aapoleon was so much struck by his appearance, that he was induced not only to comply with the request, but to visit his mother, Joséphine Beauharnais. Her husband had been one of the most elegant dancers of his day, and from that quality was frequently honoured with the hand of Marie Antoniette at the court balls. Napoléon, whose inclination already begon to revert to the manners of the old regime, used to look around if the windows were closed, and say, "Now let us talk of the old court, let us make a tour to Versailles" From thence arose the intimacy which led to his marriage with that lady, and ultimately placed her on the throng of France (4)

ner in sor Iler history had been very remarkable. She was born in the West and the said and the said she was born in the West state at the should lose her first husband, be extremely unfortunate, but be place that she should afterwards be greater than a queen (2). This prophecy, the authenticity of which is placed beyond a doubt, was fulfilled in the most singular manner. Her first husband, Alexander Beauhirmans, a general in the army on the Rhine, had been guildoined during the Reign of Terror, and she herself, who was also imprisoned at the same time, was only saved from impending death by the fall of Robespierre. So strongly was the prophecy impressed on her mind, that, while lying in the dungeons of the Concience, repecting every hour to be summoned to the revolutionary tribunal, she mentioned it to her fellow prisoners, and to amuse them, named some of them as ladies of the bedchamber, a jest which she afterwards lived to realize to one of their number (3).

death by his beneficence (D.Air ii 28) On one or a hearstow to a cea a mol in a sa a

eeed ngly thin look at me and sav which of m

(2) The an bot heard in a propt cey long before hap from a eleval on to the throne from the Lite Con true of Fath a dithe Count as of A scran who were educated in the same covered with dose; hine and had repeatedly it eath her meat on the a reunstance liverally you.

and the repetition of the series of the critical state class at 13 Me p de Joseph ne per 3.4d Grev et a 231 222 233 North 1 62 Note Josephine berrell narrated this extraord nary passage in her I fe in the fid owing terms in Pass gas married to the piece where the exhaustic where I dept with the I series of Alga Hons sometime where I dept with the I series of Alga Hons sometime to the raid was and took or he was going to take my matrices to give the number property with the series of the Married Hallaned thing hon angerty we have Missione de Prankeras tolks as a better series?—— Now we say and come for the it about to be led to the Concertgree and theore to the guildance.

" it there words my composions in mulertane ver doobted I was mad. But the truth was I was not g i ed with any extraord eary courage but internally persuaded of the truth of the oracle. Malamed Ligation soon after became unwell as I down by towards the oil down of the Inposed to adm through the larne I thin (Fink dip positive) to to adm through the larne I thin (Fink dip positive) the precised a pure woman who have use a dwal ware making a number of given with 1 is a first could not understand. She can to this light pure groun (code); and weight that the had some object in your leaded out rode to which she amounted yet. She then I ded up a shown and post it label to lay who challed the dip up account times I called out your young which she we meet the greaterly post.

p err upon which sheer need the greater jep st perce a og that her signs were understood. Jailoing then the stone to her pobe she experty instants the mot one of cut up of the neck and innocediately begun to drace under once the most extravagant jey. This a spaller partoon me madewed in wif modes a rape hope that poon by Folloppiers might

"At the mountain when we were fleating between hope and four we heard a great mouse in the cor-

Her charge. Joséphine possessed all the qualities fitted to excite admiration: graceful in her manners, affectionate in her disposition, elegant in her appearance, she was qualified both to awaken the love, and form the happiness of the young general, whose fate was now united with her own. Her influence in subsequent times, when placed on the throne, was never exerted but for the purposes of humanity; and if her extravagance sometimes amounted to a fault, it was redeemed by the readiness with which she gave car to the tale of suffering. Napoléon himself said, after he had tasted of all the greatness of the world, that the chief happiness he had known in life had flowed from her affection (4).

Marries her. In the first instance, however, motives of ambition combined and receives with a softer feeling to fix Napoleon's choice; madame Beauharnais mand of the had formed an intimacy in prison with Madame Fontenoy, the elo-Italy. quent and beautiful friend of Tallien: and she was an acknowledged favourite of Barras, at that period the leading character of the Directory, though, with his usual volatility, he was not sorry of an opportunity of establishing her in marriage with the young general (2); and his influence, after the fall of Robespierre, promised to be of essential importance to the rising officer. He married her on the 9th March, 4796; he himself being in the twenty-sixth, and she in the twenty-eighth year of her age. At the same time, he laid before the Directory a plan for the Italian campaign, so remarkable for its originality and genius, as to attract the especial notice of the illustrious Carnot, then minister at war. The united influence of these two directors, and the magnitude of the obligation with Napoléon had conferred -upon them, prevailed. With Joséphine he received the command of the Italian armies; and, twelve days after, set out for the Alps, taking with him two thousand louis-d'or for the use of the army, the whole specie which the treasury could furnish. The instructions of the Directory were, to do all in his power to revolutionize Piemont, and so intimidate the other Italian powers; to violate the neutrality of Genoa; seize the forts of Savona; compel the Senate to furnish him with pecuniary supplies, and surrender the keys of Gavi, a fortress, perched on a rocky height, commanding the pass of the Bocchetta. In case of refusal, he was directed to carry it by assault. His powers were limited to military operations, and the Directory reserved to themselves the exclusive power of concluding treaties of peace or truce; a limitation which was speedily disregarded by the enterprising genius of the young conqueror (5).

At this period, the military forces of the Italian states amounted to one hundred and sixty thousand men under arms, which could with ease have raised, from a population of nineteen millions, three hundred thousand. But, with the exception of the Piedmontese troops, this military array was of no real use; except when led on by French officers, the soldiers of the other Italian states have never been able to bear the sight of the French or Austrian bayonets (4).

Bitterly did Italy suffer for this decay in her national spirit, and extinc-

ridor, and the terrible voice of our jailer, who said to his dog, giving him, at the same tine, a kick, 'Get on, you cursed Robespierre.' That coarse phrase at once taught us that we had nothing to tear, and that France was saved,"—Mém de Joséwhire i occorre vhine, i 252, 253.

⁽¹⁾ Bour. i. 101; viii. 372. Scott, iii. 83.
"Josephine," said Napoléon, "was grace personified. Everything she did was with a grace and delicacy peculiar to herself. I never saw her act inelegantly the whole time we lived together. Her toilet was a perfect arsenal; and she effectually defended herself against the assaults of time."-O'MEARA, ii. 101.

⁽²⁾ Hard. iii. 301. (3) Hard. iii. 302 303. Las Cas. i. 173, Bour. i. 103. Scott, iii. 83, 84.
(4) Th. viii, 220. Nap. iii, 129, 130.

Calabatics ton of her military courage. With the French invasion comwhich the menced a long period of suffering tyranny, under the name of liberty, rapine, under the name of generosity; excitement among the poor, spolition among therich, clamour in public against the ers of freedom
ers of greedom.

universal extinction of it in action, the stripping of churches; the robbery of hospitals; the leveling of the palaces of the great, and the destruction of the cottages of the poor,—all that military license has of most terrible, all that despote the poor is the poor of most contests to Tien d. The pools feel that military license has of most contest to the perfect of the pools feel that the perfect of the p signur to inherit, or the courage to defend them (1) Sincotine When Napolcon assumed the command of the army in the end of bronch March, he found every thing in the most miserable state. The efficient force under arms, and ready for offensive operations, did took the not exceed forty-two thousand men, but it was continually remforced by troops from the depots in the interior, after Napoleon's successes commenced, so that, notwithstanding the losses of the campaign, it was maintained throughout at that amount. The artiflers did not exceed sixty pieces, and the cavalry was almost dismounted, but the garrisons in the rear, amounting to eight thousand men, could furnish supplies when the war was removed from the frontier and the arsenals of Nice and Antibes were well provided with artillery. For a very long period the soldiers of all ranks had suffered the extremity of want. Perched on the inhospitable summits of the Apennines, they had enjoyed neither tents nor shelter, magazines they 1 -1 1/-- the effect of the depreciation of paper, had for years received only eight francs a month of pay; and the stall was entirely on foot. On one occasion the Directory had awarded a gratification of three Iouis-d'or to each general of division, and the future marshals and princes of the empire subsisted for long on the humble present. But, considered with reference to their skill and warlike qualities, the army presented a very different aspect, and were, beyond all question, the most efficient one which the republic possessed. Composed, for the most part, of young soldiers, whom the great levies of 1795 had brought into the field, they had been mured to hardship and privations during the subsequent campaigns in the Pyrences and Maritime Alps; a species of warfare which, by leading detached parties continually into difficult and perilous situations, is singularly calculated to strengthen the frame, and augment the intelligence of the soldier, "Poverty," says Napoleon, "privations, misers, are the school of good soldiers " Its spirit had been greatly ele-. . . ••

of their future halit (2)

berthier, above forty years of age, son of a geographical artist, was chief of Chargeter of the staff, a situation which he continued to hold in all the campaigns tes officers. of Napoléon, down to the battle of Waterloo. Active, indefatigable alike on horseback and in the cabinet, he was admirably qualified to dicharge the duties of that important situation, without being possessed of the originality and decision requisite for a commander-in-chief. He was perfectly master of the geography of every country which the army was to enter, understood thoroughly the use of maps, and could calculate with admirable precision the time requisite for the different corps to arrive at the ground assigned to them, as well as direct in a lucid manner the course they were to pursue (1).

Masséna, a native of Nice, was a lieutenant in the regiment of Royal Italians when the Revolution broke out, but rose rapidly to the rank of general of division. Gifted by nature with a robust frame, indefatigable in exertion, unconquerable in resolution, he was to be seen night and day on horseback, among the rocks and the mountains. Decided, brave, and intrepid, full of ambition, his leading characteristic was obstinacy; a quality which, according as it is right or wrong directed, leads to the greatest successes, or the most ruinous disasters. His conversation gave few indications of genius; but at the first cannon-shot his mental energy redoubled, and when surrounded by danger, his thoughts were clear and forcible. In the midst of the dying and the dead, of balls sweeping away those who encircled him, Masséna was himself, and gave his orders with the greatest coolness and precision. Even after defeat, he recommenced the struggle as if he had come off victorious; and by these means saved the republic at the battle of Zurich. But these great qualities were disfigured by as great vices. He was rapacious, sordid, and avaricious; shared the profits of the contractors and commissaries, and never could keep himself clear from acts of neculation (2).

Augereau, born in the faubourg St.-Marceau, shared in the opinions of the democratic quarter from which he sprung. He had served with distinction both in la Vendée and the Pyrenees. With little education, hardly any knowledge, no reach of mind, he was yet beloved by the soldiers, from the order and discipline which he always enforced. His attacks were conducted with courage and regularity, and he led his columns with invincible resolution during the fire; but he had not the moral firmness requisite for lasting success, and was frequently thrown into unreasonable dejection shortly after his greatest triumphs. His political opinions led him to sympathize with the extreme Republicans; but no man was less fitted by nature, either to understand, or shine in, the civil contests in which he was always so desirous to engage (5).

Serrurier, born in the department of the Aisne, was a major at the commencement of the Revolution, and incurred many dangers in its early wars, from the suspicion of a secret leaning to the aristocracy under which he laboured. He was brave in person, firm in conduct, and severe in discipline; but, though he gained the battle of Mondovi, and took Mantua, he was not in general fortunate in his operations, and became a marshal of France, with less military glory than any of his other illustrious compeers (4).

On the other hand, the Allies had above fifty thousand men, and 200 pieces of cannon; while the Sardinian army, of twenty-four

Nap. iii. 185.
 Nap. iii. 187. O'Meara, i. 239.

⁽³⁾ Nap. iii. 188. (4) Ibid. 190.

And at Depo arms, with fifteen hundred men. Meanwhile, Napoléon hunself, with the divisions of Masséna and La Harpe, attacked and carried Dego after an obstinate resistance, while Joubert made hunself master of the heights of Biestro. The retreat of the Austrians was obstructed by the artillery, which blocked up the road in the defile of Spegno, and the soldiers had no other resource but to disperse and seek their safety on the mountains. Thirteen pieces of artillery and three thousand prisoners fell into the hands of the victors. No somer was this success achieved, than the indefatigable conqueror moved forward the division of Augereau, now divengaged by the surrender of Provera, to the important heights of Monte Zemolo, the occupation of which completed the separation of the Austrian and Piemontese armies Beaulieu retired to Acqui, on the road to Milan, and Golli towards Ceva, to ever Turin (1)

bad as Meanwhile the brave Wukossowich, at the head of six thousand Nustrian grenadiers, made a movement which, if supported, might been the body of the Imperial forces, he advanced to Bego, with the intention of forming a junction with d'Argenteau, who he imagined still occupied that place Great was his surprise when he found it in the hands of the enemy; but instantly taking his resolution, like a brave man, he attacked and carried the destruction of the brave men who had achieved it. Napoléon instantly with a returned to the pool, and commenced a vigorous attack with sufficient for the pool of the pool this action Napoleon was particularly struck by the gallantry of a young chief of halfalion, whom he made a colonel on the spot, and who continued ever after the companion of his glory. His name was I vivrs, afterwards Duke of Montchello, and one of the most heroic marshals of the empire (2).

After the battle of Dego, La Harpe's division was placed to keep the Republic the shattered remains of Reaulien's forces in check, while the weight the shattered remains of Reaulien's forces in check, while the weight the state of the army was moved against the Sardman troops. Augereau drove the Predimenters from the heights of Monte Zemolo, and soon surrounded from afar the promised land. It was a sublime speciacle when the troops arrived on this elevated point, and the soldiers, exhausted with att Th. n. 1 222 210 Hard. Amolted combate, He was end in the mid 1 of few.

I have been a few or few or few or few of the few of the descript of any on when by which my did few of the fe fatigue, and overwhelmed with the grandeur of the sight, paused and gazed on the plains beneath. These gigantic barriers, apparently the limits of the world, which nature had rendered so formidable, and on which art had lavished its treasures, had fallen as if by enchantment. "Hannibal," said Napoléon, fixing his eyes on the mountains, "has forced the Alps, but we have turned them." Soon after the troops descended the ridge, passed the Tanaro, and found themselves in the Italian plains (1).

Serrurier was now detached by the bridge of St.-Michael to turn the right of Colli, who occupied the intrenched camp of Cevo, while Masséna passed the Tanaro to turn his left. The Piedmontese, who were about eight thousand strong, defended the camp in the first instance with success; but, finding their communications on the point of being lost, they retired in the night, and took a position behind the deep and rapid torrent of the Cursaglia. There they were assailed, on the following day, by Serrurier, who forced 19th April. the bridge of St.-Michael; while Joubert, who had waded through Actions of Serrurier with Colli. the torrent farther up, in vain endeavoured to induce his followers to pass, and was obliged, after incurring the greatest risks, to retire. Relieved now from all anxiety about his flank, Colli fell, with all his forces, on Serrurier, and, after a severe action, drove him back again over the bridge. with the loss of six hundred men (2).

This check exposed Napoléon to imminent danger. Colli occupied a strong position at Mondovi in his front, while Beaulieu, with an army still formidable, was in his rear, and might easily resume offensive operations. A council of war was held in the night, at which it was unanimously resolved, notwithstanding the fatigue of the troops, to resume the attack on the following day. All the dispositions, accordingly, were made for a renewed assault on the bridge, with increased forces; but, on arriving at the advanced posts at daybreak, they found them abandoned by the enemy, who had fought only in order to gain time for the evacuation of the magazines in his rear, and had retired in the night to Mondovi. He was overtaken, however, in his retreat, near Mondovi, by the indefatigable victor, who had seized a strong position, where he hoped to arrest the enemy. The Republicans immediately advanced to the assault, and; though Serrurier was defeated in the centre by the brave grenadiers of Dichat, yet that courageous general having been struck dead by a cannon-ball at the moment when his troops, somewhat disordered by success, were assailed in flank by superior forces, the Piedmontese were thrown into confusion, and Serrurier, resuming the offensive, attacked and carried the redoubt of Bicoque, the principal defence of the position, and completed the victory. Colli retired to Cherasco, with the loss of two thousand men, eight cannon, and eleven standards. Thither he was followed by Napoléon, who occupied that town, which, though fortified, and important by its position at the confluence of the Stura and the Tanaro, was not armed, and incapable of resistance; and, by so doing, not only acquired a firm footing in the interior of Piemont, but made himself master of extensive magazines (5).

Immense advantages spained by the French by these operations.

This important success speedily changed the situation of the French army. Having descended from the sterile and inhospitable summits of the Alps, they found themselves, though still among the mountains, in communication with the rich and fertile plains of

⁽¹⁾ Nap. iii. 147. Th. viii. 233. (2) Th. viii. 233. Jom. viii. 88, 91. Hard. iii. 319.

⁽³⁾ Th. viii. 234. Nap. iii. 150. Jom. viii. 92, 95.

At the same time, he despatched his aide-de-camp, Murat, with paint to the standards taken, to Paris, and addressed to his oldiers one of the classic of the standards taken, to paris, and addressed to his oldiers one of one-and-twenty standards, fifty-live pieces of cannon, many strong places, and conquered the richest part of Piedmont, you have made fifteen blowsand prisoners, killed or wounded ten thousand men. Hitherto you have fought on sterile rocks, illustrious, indeed, by your courage, but of no avail to your country, now you rival, by your services, the armies of the Rhine and the North Destitute at first, you have supplied every thing. You have gained battles without cannons, passed rivers without bridges, made forced marches without these, bivousched without bread? The phalanxes of the Republic—the soldiers of liberty,—were alone capable of such sacrifices. But, soldiers, you have done nothing, while any thing remains to do. Neither Turin nor Milan is in your hands, the ashes of the conqueror of Tarquin are still trampled on by the assassins of Basseville! I am told that there are some among you whose courage is giving way, who would rather return to the summits of the Alps and the Apennines. Ao—I cannot believe it. The conquerors of Montenotte, of Viilesimo, of Dego, of Mondovi, burn to carry still farther the clorics of the French name (1)!"

Impactor When these successive victories, these sandards, these proclamative histories arrived day after day at Paris, the poy of the people knew resect in a bounds. The first day the gates of the Alps were opened, the next, the Austrans were separated from the Piedmontese, the third, the Sardman army was destroyed, and the fortresses surrendered. The rapidity of the success, the number of the prisoners, exceeded all that had yet been witnessed. Fivery one asked, who was this young conqueror whose fame had burst forth so suddenly, and whose proclamations breathed the spirit of ancient glory? Three times the Councils decreed that the army of Italy had deserved well of their country, and appointed a fete to Victory, in honour of the commencement of the campaign (2)

Parises I Having secured his rear by this advantageous treaty, Napoléon lost no time in pursuing the disconflited remains of Beaulieus arms, which had retired behind the Po, in the loop of covering the Villarces territory. The forces of the Austrians were plainly now unequal to the struggle, a coup de main, which Beaulieu attempted on the fortresses of Alexandria, Tortona, and Valence, failed, and they were immediately after surrendered to the Republicans, while the army of Napoléon was about to warm; be united to the corps of Kellermann, and the dissipant of the forcement of above twent; thousand men Napoléon, on his side, indulged the most brilliant anticipations, and confidently amounced to the Directory that he would cross the Po, expel the Vustrans from the Milanese territory, traverse the mountains of the Tvroi, unite with the army of the Rhine, and carry the war, by the valley of the Danube, into the heart of the Imperial duminions (5).

shid — The king of Card alak a surrendered at discretion given up three of his attempted of the server and the half at alone a man. If you do not through the accept his making on that produce to it has the accept his making on that the traduct of it has a him you man a man had for a few

Randica wate to the Parectory at this pe

By inserting a clause in the treaty with the King of Sardinia, that the French army was to be at liberty to cross the Po at Valence, he completely deceived the Austrians as to the place where the passage was to be effected. The whole attention of Beaulieu having been drawn to that point, the republican forces were rapidly moved to Placentia, and began to cross the river in boats at that place. Lannes was the first who effected the passage, and the other columns soon crossed with such rapidity that a firm footing was Po. set Introvenie e established on the opposite bank, and two days afterwards Napoléon tenfanst arrived with the bulk of his forces and established a bridge. By Perulien. this skilful march not only the Po was passed, but the Tieino turned, as Placentia is below its junction with the former river; so that one great obstacle to the conquest of Lombardy was already removed (1).

Beaulieu was now considerably reinforced, and his forces amounted to thirty-six battalions, and forty-four squadrons, besides 120 pieces of cannon, in all nearly forty thousand men. He was at Pavia, busily engaged in creeting fortifications, when he received intelligence of the passage at Placentia. He immediately moved forward his advanced guard, consisting of three thousand infantry, and two thousand horse, under General Liptay, to Pombio, a small town a short distance from the republican posts. Napoléon, who feared that he might be strengthened in this position, and was well aware of the danger of fighting a general battle with a great river in his rear, lost no time in moving forward his forces to dislodge him. D'Allemagne, at the head of the grenadiers, attacked on the right; Lanusse by the chaussée on the centre; and Lannes on the left. After a vigorous resistance, the Austrians were expelled from the town, with the loss of above a thousand men. Liptay fell back to Pizzighitone (2). Meanwhile, Beaulieu was advancing with the bulk of his forces; and the leading division of his army surprised General La Harpe in the night, who was killed while bravely fighting at the head of his division, but not before the Austrians had been compelled to retire.

The French troops having now entered upon the states of Parma, of the Grand it was of importance to establish matters on a pacific footing in their rear before pressing forward to Milan. The Grand Duke had no military resources whatever; the victor, therefore, resolved to grant him terms, upon the surrender of what he had to give. He was obliged to pay 2,000,000 of francs in silver, and to furnish 1600 artillery-horses, of which the army stood in great need, besides great supplies of corn and provisions. But on this occasion Napoleon commenced another species of military contribution, which he has himself confessed was unparalleled in modern warfare, that of exacting from the vanquished the surrender of their most precious works of art. Parma was compelled to give up twenty of its principal paintings, among which was the celebrated S.-Jerome by Correggio. The Duke offered a million of francs as a ransom for that inestimable work of art, which many of his officers urged the French general to accept, as of much more service to the army than the painting; but Napoléon, whose mind was fixed on greater things, replied,—"The million which he offers us would soon be weeks, and give me warning; I will get possession of Valence, and march upon Turin. On the other hand, I shall impose a contribution of some millions on the Duke of Parma, detach twelve thousand men to Rome, as soon as I have heaten Beaulien and driven him across the Adige, and when I am assured that you will conclude peace with the King of Sardinia, and strengthen me by the army of Kellermann. As to Genoa, by all means oblige it to pay fifteen millions."—Secret Despatch to Directory, 29th April, 1796. Corresp. Secrète de Napoléon, i 103.

1) Nap. iii. 165. Th. viii. 254, 257. Jom. viii.

⁽²⁾ Th. viii, 258. Nap, iii. 166. Jom. viii. 117.

ment of the conquered states, which the French generals afterwards carrien of ried to such a height, and which produced the noble gallery of the Louvre The French have since had good reason to congratulate themselves that the Allies did not follow their bad example: and that on occasion of the second capture of Paris, they had the generosity to content themselves with enforcing restitution of the abstracted spoils, without, like them, compelling the surrender of those that had been legitimately acquired Certainly it is impossible to condemn too strongly a use of the nowers of conquest, which extends the ravages of war into the peaceful domain of the fine arts, which transplants the monuments of genius from the regions where they have arisen, and where they can rightly be appreciated. to those where they are evolics, and their value cannot be understood; which renders them, instead of being the proud legacy of genius to its country, the mere ensign of a victor's giory; which exposes them to be tossed about he the tide of conquest, and subjected to irreparable injury in following the fleeting career of success; and converts works, destined to elevate and captivate the human race, into the subject of angry contention, and the troplues of temporary subjugation

Terrible On the 10th, Napoleon marched towards Milan; but, before arriv-

their forces had retired to Cassino, and the neighbourhood of Milan. By a rapid advance, he hoped to cut off the bulk of their troops from the hereditary states, and make them prisoners, but, as there was not a moment to be lost in achieving the movements requisite to attain this object, he resolved to force the bridge, and thus get into their rear. He himself arrived at Lodi, at the head of the grenadiers d'Allemagne; upon which, the Austrians withdrew from the town, and crossed the river; drawing up their infantry, with twenty meres of cannon, at the further extremity of the bridge, to defend the passage Aapol(on immediately directed Beaumont, with all the cavalry of the army, to pass at a ford half a league further up, while he himself directed all the artillery which had come up against the Austrian battery, and formed six thousand grenadiers in close column, under cover of the houses at his own end of the bridge. No sooner did he perceive that the distheree of the Austrian artillers was beginning to slecken, from the effect of the French fire, and that the passage of the cavalry on their flank had com-. I de la soldiers, and pare 'ed forward through a cloud of too bir grape-shot for a moment arrested their progress; but finding their selves supported by a cloud of treatleurs, who wadre the stream below the arches, and led on by their druntless general, they soon recovered, and, rushing forward with resulters fure, curried the Austrian guns, and drove lack their infantry. Had the French cavalry been ready to profit by the confusion, the whole corps of the Imperialists would have been destroyed; but, as it had not yet come up, their numerous squadrons protected the ritreat of the lin-fantry, which retired with the loss of two thousand men, and twenty pieces of cannon. The loss of the victors was at least as great. The object of this hold measure was indeed lost, for the Austrians, whom it had been intended to cut off, had meanwhile gained the chaussée of Brescia, and made good their retreat (1); but it contributed greatly to exalt the character and elevate the courage of the Republican troops, by inspiring them with the belief that nothing could resist them; and it made a deep impression on the mind of Napoléon, who ever after styled it "the terrible passage of the bridge of Lodi."

The victory at Lodi had an extraordinary effect on the French army. After each success, the old soldiers, who had at first been somewhat distrustful of their young commander, assembled, and gave him a new step of promotion. He was made a corporal at Lodi; and the surname of "Le Petit Caporal," thence acquired, was long remembered in the army. When, in 1815, he was met by the battalion sent against him from the fortress of Grenoble, the soldiers, the moment they saw him, exclaimed, "Long live our little corporal! we will never oppose him." Nor did this fearful passage produce a less powerful impression on the mind of the general, "The 15th Vendémiaire, and the victory of Montenotte," said Napoléon, "did not induce me to believe myself a superior character. It was after the passage of Lodi that the idea shot across my mind, that I might become a decisive actor on the political theatre. Then arose, for the first time, the spark of great ambition (2)."

After this disaster, Beaulieu retired behind the Mincio, leaving Milan to its fate; and Pizzighitone, with its garrison of five hundred men, capitulated. Serrurier was placed at Cremona, from whence he observed the garrison of Mantua, while Augereau pushed on from Pizzighitone to Pavia. On the 13th, Napoleon Mapoléon made his triumphal entry into Milan at the head of his troops, with all the pomp of war, to the sound of military music, amidst the acclamations of an immense concourse of spectators, and through the lines of the national guard, dressed in three colours, in honour of the tricolor flag (5).

On this occasion the conqueror addressed to his soldiers another mation there of those heart-stirring proclamations which so powerfully contributed to electrify the ardent imagination of the Italians, and added so much to the influence of his victories,—" Soldiers! you have descended like a torrent from the summit of the Apennines; you have overwhelmed and dispersed every thing which opposed your progress. Piedmont, delivered from the tyranny of Austria, has felt itself at liberty to indulge its natural inclination for peace, and for a French alliance: Milan is in your hands; and the Republican standards wave over the whole of Lombardy. The Dukes of Parma and Modena owe their existence only to your generosity. The army which menaced you with so much pride, can now no longer find a barrier to protect itself against your arms: the Po, the Ticinio, the Adda, have not been able to stop you a single day; these boasted bulwarks of Italy have proved as nugatory as the Alps. Such a career of success has carried joy into the bosom of your country: fêtes in honour of your victories have been ordered by the National Representatives in all the communes of the Republic; there, your parents, your wives, your sisters, your lovers, rejoice at your success, and glory in their connexion with you. Yes, soldiers! you liave indeed done much, but much still remains to be done. Shall posterity say that we knew how to conquer, but not how to improve victor?? Shall we find a Capua in Lömbardy. The hour of vengeance has truck, but the people of all nations may rest in peace, we are the friends of every people, and especially of the descendants of Brutus, Scipio, and the other great men whom we have taken for examples. To restore the Capitol; to replace there the statues of the heroes who have rendered it immortal, to rouse the Romans from centuries of slavery—such will be the fruit of our victories, they will form an era in history; to you will belong the glory of having changed the face of the most beautiful part of Europe. The French people, free within and dreaded without, will give to Europe a glorious peace, which will indemnify her for all the sacrifices she has made for the last six years. Then you will return to your homes, and your fellow-citizens will say of each of you in passing—"lie was a soldier in the army of Italy (1)!"

⁽¹⁾ Jom. viii. 123, 126. Scott, iii. 131. Bot. iii. 351. Nap. iii. 172—174. Th. viii. 260, 261.

⁽²⁾ Las Cas. i. 162, 182.
(3) Th. viii. 263. Nap. iii, 176. Jom. viii. 127.

ratherisms and generous part of the Italian people, who has the enthusiasm, unbounded the joy, which these unparatherisms and generous part of the Italian people, who panted for civil liberty before and national independence. To them Apoléon appeared as the there's destined regenerator of Italy, the hero who was to achieve their liberation from Transalpine oppression, and bring back the glorious days of Roman virtue. Its burning words, his splendid actions, the ancient cast of his thoughts, diffused an universal enchantment. Even the coolest heads began to turn at the brilliant career thus begun, by a general not yet six-and-twenty years of age, and the boundless anticipations of future triumph of which he spoke with prophetic certainty. From every part of Italy the young and the ardent flocked to Utlan, balls and festivities gave token of the universal joy; every word and look of the conqueror was watched, the patriots compared him to Scipio and Ilannibal, and the ladies on the popular side knew no bounds to their adulation (2).

But this illusion was of short duration, and Italy was soon destined pell ng of the experience the bitter fate and cruel degradation of every people the tiletion by the who look for their deliverance to foreign assistance. In the midst of the general joy, a contribution of twenty millions of france, or L 800,000 sterling, struck Milan with astonishment, and wounded the Italians in their tenderest part-their domestic and economical arrangements. So enormous a contribution upon a single city seemed scarcely possible to be realized, but the sword of the victor offered no alternative. Great requisitions were at the same time made of horses for the artillery and cavalry in all the Vilanese territory; and provisions were amassed on all sides, at the expense of the inhabitants, for which they received nothing, or Republican naper of no value Nor did the Duke of Modena escape more easily. He was compelled to purchase peace by a contribution of ten millions of francs in money, or stores for the army, and to submit to the exaction of twents paintings from his gallery for the Republican museum. Liberated Italy was treated with more severity than is generally the lot of conquered states (5).

Thus commenced the system of making nar support nar," which the contributed so much to the carly success of the Republican arms, which compensated for all the penury and exhaustion of the Republican territory, which raised to the clouds the glory of the empire, and occasioned with certainty its ultimate destruction. France, abounding with men, but destitute of resources, -incapable of supporting war, from the entire stoppage of domestic industry, but teeming with a restless and indigent population,found in this system the means of advancement and opulence. While the other armies of the Republic were suffering under the horrors of penury, and could hardly find food for their support, or clothes for their covering, the army of Italy was rolling in opulence, and the spoils of vanquished states gave them every enjoyment of life. From that time there was no want of soldiers to follow the career of the conqueror; the Alps were covered with files of troops pressing forward to the theatre of glory, and all the chasms occasioned by the relentless system of war which he followed, were filled up by the multitudes whom the illusion of victory brought to his standard (1).

⁽⁵⁾ The vi 1 215 Jone vist 120 Nap. 1 i 151.

But the Republican soldiers were far from anticipating the terrible reverses to which this system of spoliation was ultimately to lead, or that France was destined to groan under exactions, as severe as those she now so liberally inflicted upon others. Clothed, fed, and lodged at the expense of the Milanese, the soldiers pursued with thoughtless eagerness the career of glory which was stretched before them. The artillery, the cavalry, were soon in the finest condition, and hospitals established for fifteen thousand sick in the different towns in the conquered territory; for to that immense number had the rapidity of the marches, and the multiplicity of the combats, swelled the hospital train. Having amply provided for his own army, Napoléon dispatched several millions by the route of Genoa for the service of the Directory, and one million over the Alps to Moreau, to relieve the pressing wants of the army of the Upper Rhine (2).

These great successes already began to inspire the French Governor, jealous of his power, ment with jealousy of their lieutenant, and they in consequence orders Na. transmitted an order by which Kellermann, whith twenty thousand poléon to men, was to command on the left bank of the Pô, and cover the march to siege of Mantua, while Napoléon, with the remainder of the forces, was to march upon Rome and Naples. But he was both too proud to submit to any division of his authority, and too sagacious not to see that by thus separating the forces, and leaving only a small army in the north of Italy, the Austrians would speedily regain their lost ground, drive their inconsiderable opponents over the Alps, and cut off, without the possibility of escape, the corps in the south of the Peninsula. He, therefore, at once resigned his command, accompanying it with the observation, that one bad general is better than two good ones. The Directory, however, unable to dispense with the services of their youthful officer, immediately reinstated him, and abandoned their project, which was indeed in itself so absurd as would have thrown great doubts on the military capacity of Carnot, the minister at war, if it had not in reality been suggested by the wish to extinguish the rising ambition of Napoléon (3).

⁽¹⁾ Th. viii. 137, 265, 266. (2) Th. viii. 266. Nap. Cor. Conf. i. 159. (3) Th. viii, 269 Nap. iii. 184. Jom. viii. 133. Napoleon on this occasion wrote to Carnot:— "Kellermann would command the army as well as I; for no one is more convinced than I am of the courage and audacity of the soldiers; but to unite us together would ruin every thing. I will not serve with a man who considers himself the first general in Europe; and it is better to have one had general than two good ones. War is, like government, decided in a great degree by tact." To the Directory he observed,—"It is in the highest de-gree impolitic to divide into two the army of Italy, and not less adverse to the interests of the Republic, to place at its head two different generals. The expedition to Leghorn, Rome, and Naples, is a very inconsiderable matter, and should be made by divisions in echellon, ready, at a moment's warning, to wheel about and face the Austrians on the Adige. To perform it with success, both armies must be under the command of one general. I have which he was afterwards so strongly actuated, and which had so nowerful a share in contributing to his downfall (1).

Massered After a short stay at Florence, Napoléon returned to Bologna.

the persons where Augereau took a severe vengeance on the inhabitants of the village of Lugo, which had taken up arms against the Republicans, and killed and wounded some soldiers in a detachment sent for its reduction. The village was carried by assault, burnt to ashes, and the unfortunate peasants, to the number of one thousand, put, with merciless severity, to the sword. This with the battering train taken at the castles of Milan, Urbino, and Ferrara; but for the relief of which place Austria was making the most vigorous exertions (2).

The resolution of Napoleon to sur up a quarrel with Venice was more and more clearly evinced, as matters approached a crisis in the north of Italy. On the 25th July, he had a long and confidential conversation with Pesaro, the commissioner of that Republic; and such was the vehemence of his lan-

(a) It again you will be medited, politic angles of the period of the grain i ingress y a riber i and the section who never ceased to reproach them their partiality to France; that the Senate would do every thing in its power to restrain the public effervescence; and that the armaments, so much complained of, were directed as much against the English and Russians as the French (5). The determination of Napoléon in regard to the Venetian Republic is revealed in his secret despatches at this period to the Directory: "I have seized," said he, " the citadel of Verona, and armed it with the Venetian cannon, and summoned the Senate to dissolve its armaments. Venice has already furmaked three millions for the service of the army; but, in order to extract more out of it, I have found myself under the necessity of assuming a menacing tone towards their commissaries, of exaggerating the assassinations committed against our troops, of complaining bitterly of their armaments; and by these means I compel them, to appeare my wrath, to furnish whatever I desire. That is the only way to deal with such persons. There is not, on the face of the earth, a more perfidious or cowardly government. I will force them to provide supplies for the army till the fall of Mantua, and then announce that they must farther make good the contributions fixed in your instructions (4)"

No sooner had they received intelligence of the defeat of Beaulieu, and the retreat of his forces into the Tyrol, than the Aulic Council resolved upon the most energetic measures to repair the disaster. The army of Beau-

⁽¹⁾ The range and policy of the French as ho-pries consequent on this irreption into Tancans, knew as homods "If our administrative conduct," said Tapeleon, to the Parestors, " was detectable at said Aspeleon, to the Precisors, "was detectable at Explore, our pol terit roundest for any! Toward his form no better "milerne Corre pend of Aspeleon 13th July, 1"36. His views extracted even father, for, on the 2-th, he write in the Directory our Rebolts ate in constitues that the Luperer is $7.00 to the firrud Luke of Turrany, the hear to the thread, will lead saily set out for herons. We must acceptate him, by taking military possessions of the whole of Turrany "authors (Property 20th Arty 12 Box 1, 1797, 1971, 1, 1775).

⁽³⁾ Letter of Latinated to Armina, 24 July, 1792. Corresp. Cambel, do Asp., Stand to 621 (4 Secret Largetth of Sepatra, Jahr, 22 17%. Comme Latt.

Efforts of lieu retired to Roveredo, where they threw up intrenchments to trians for their position, while eight thousand Tyrolese occupied the crests of the mountains, which separated the valley of the Adige from the lake of Guarda. Meanwhile, Marshal Wurmser was detached from the Upper Rhine with thirty thousand men, to assume the chief Wurmser command of the army destined for the relief of Mantua; which, through the Tyrol with by that great reinforcement, and numerous detachments drawn from the interior, was raised to sixty thousand effective troops. These great preparations, which were magnified by report, and had roused the aristocratic party throughout Italy to great exertions, filled Napoléon with the most lively apprehensions. To oppose them he had only fifty-five thousand men, of whom fifteen thousand were engaged in the siege of Mantua, ten thousand in keeping up his communication and maintaining garrisons in the conquered territory; so that not above thirty thousand could be relied on for operations in the field. He had incessantly urged the Directory to send him reinforcements; but, although eight thousand men from the army of Kellermann had joined his standard, and numerous reinforcements from the depôts in the interior, they were barely adequate to repair the losses arising from that wasteful campaign (1).

Nothing but the greatest ability on the part of the general, and courage among the soldiers, could have compensated for this inferiority in numbers: but the genius of Napoléon, and the confidence arising from a series of victories, proved adequate to the task (2). His success was mainly owing to the vicious plan of attack adopted by the Austrians, which, like all the others framed by the Aulic Council, was exposed to defeat from the division of their forces.

The waters which descend from the southern ridges of the Tyrol, Description unite into two streams, flowing nearly parallel to each other, and issuing in the same latitude into the plain of Lombardy, the Mincio. and the Adige. The first forms in its course, the noble sheet of water called the lake of Guarda, flows through the plain immortalized by the genius of Virgil, swells into the lakes which surround Mantua, and afterwards discharges itself into the Po. The latter, after descending from the snowy ridges of the Higher Alps, flows in an open valley to a narrow and precipitous pass above Verona, next emerges into the open country, winds in a deep and rocky bed to Legnago, after which it spreads into vast marshes, and is lost in the dikes and inundations of Lombardy. Three roads present themselves to an enemy proposing to issue from the Tyrol to the Italian plains:—The first, turning sharp to the left at Roveredo, traverses the romantic defiles of the Val Sugana, and emerges into the open country at Bassano. The second passes by the upper end of the lake of Guarda, and comes down by its western shore to Salo and Brescia; while the third descends the left bank of the Adige, and after traversing the gloomy pass of Calliano and Chiusa, reaches the town of Verona. The space between the Adige and the lake of Guarda, though only three leagues broad, is filled by the Montebaldo, whose precipices restrain the river on the one hand and the lake on the other. In this narrow and rocky space a road descends between the Adige and the lake, from Roveredo to the plain (5). It follows the right bank of the stream as far as Osteria della Dugana, when, meeting impracticable precipices, it turns to the right, and ascends the plateau of Rivoli.

⁽¹⁾ Jom. viii. 302, 303, Nap. iii. 231, 232. Th. viii. 360.

⁽²⁾ Jom. iii. 305. (3) Th. viii, 362, 361. Jom. viii. 305.

thrown into confusion, General Pegion, with three pieces of artiflers, cantured by the enemy, and Longto taken Upon this, the French general but himself at the head of his soldiers, and formed the centre into one formidable mass, while the Imperialists were extending themselves towards Saloin the double view of enveloping the French, and opening a communication with Quasdanowich, whose artillery was already heard in that direction Napolcon immediately perceived the error of his adversary. and made a desperate charge, with a column of infinity supported by cavalry, upon his centre, which, being weakened for the extension of the wings, speedily give way Lonato was retaken by assault, and the Austrian army cut asunder. One part of it effected its retreat under Bayalitch to the Minero, but the other, which was moving towards Salo, finding itself irrecoverably separated from the main body of the army, endeavoured to effect a function with Quasdanowich at Salo, but Guyeux, with a division of French, already occupied that place, and the fugitive Austrians, presed between the dragoons of Junot, who assailed their rear, and the infinity at Salo, who stopped their advance, disbanded, and suffered a loss of three thousand prisoners, and twenty pieces of cannon (1)

While the Austrians were experiencing these disasters at I onato, Augereau, on the right, had maintained an obstinate engagement at Castiglione. In that quarter the Republicius were the assalants, and the French general had maintained the combat all day with great resolution against superior forces, when Applicon, braing defeated the centre of the enemy, braitened to his support. After a furious combat, Augereau succeeded in earrying the town, and the Austrians retired towards Mantua, with the loss of one thousand killed and wounded, besides as many prisoners (2). They had not proceeded for when they met the reinforcements which Wurnser was bringing up from that place for their relief

As it was evident that the Austrian veteran was still dispo ed to contend for the empire of Italy in a pitched lattle, Napolcon deemed it indispensable to clear his rear of Quasdanowich before engaging in it. On the following day he employed himself in collecting and organizing his forces at Lonato, with a view to the decisive conflict, while, by moving two divisions against Quasdanowich, whose troops were now exhausted by fatigue, he compelled him to remount the Val Sabbia towards Riva A singular event at this time took place, highly characteristic both of the extraordinarily intersected situation of the two armies, and of the presence of mind and good fortune of Napoleon Surrender He had arrived at I onato to expedite the movement of his forces in the opposite directions where their enemies were to be found, and, from the dispersion which he had directed, only twelve hundred men remained at head quarters. Before he had been long there he was summoned to surrender by a corps of four thousand Austrians, who had already occupied all the avenues by which retreat was possible They consisted of a part of the troops of Bayalitch, which, having been defeated in its endersours to effect a junction with Qu's denowich, was now, in despiration enderrouring to regain the remainder of the army on the Vincio Napol on made his numerous staff mount on horsel rek, and, having ordered the officer bearing the flux of truce to be brought before him, directed the landage to be taken from his eyes, and immediately tell the astonished Austrian, that he was in the millle of the French army, and in presence of its general-in-chief, and that unless they laid down their arms in ten minutes, he would put them all to the sword. The officer, deceived by the splendid cortege by which he was surrounded, returned to his division, and recommended a surrender; and the troops, cut off from their companions, and exhausted by fatigue and disaster, laid down their arms. When they entered the town, they had the mortification of discovering not only that they had capitulated to a third of their numbers, but missed the opportunity of making prisoner the conqueror who had filled the world with his renown (1).

On the following day both parties prepared for a decisive engagement. The Imperialists under Wurmser were twenty-five thousand strong, the corps of Quasdanowich, and that which blockaded Peschiera, being detached, and unable to take any part in the battle; the French about twenty-three thousand. Both parties were drawn up in the plain at right angles to the mountains, on which each rested a wing: the French right was uncovered, while the Imperialists' left was supported by the mill of Medola. Augereau commanded the centre, Masséna the left, Verdier the right, but the principal hopes of Napoléon were rested on the division of Serrurier, which had orders to march all night, and fall, when the action was fully engaged, on the rear of the August. The soldiers on both sides were exhausted with fatigue, but all felt that on the result of this contest depended the fate of Italy (2).

Wurmser fell into the same error as Bayalitch had done in the preceding engagement, that of extending his right along the heights, in order to open a communication with Quasdanowich, who was within hearing of his artillery. To favour this movement, Napoléon drew back his left, while at the same time he accumulated his forces against the Austrians' right; Marmont, with a powerful battery of heavy artillery, thundered against the post of Medola, which Verdier, with three battalions of grenadiers, speedily carried. At the same time, General Fiorilla, who commanded the division of Serrurier, drawn off from Mantua, came up in rear of the Austrians, and completed their confusion by a vigorous attack, which had wellnigh carried off Wurmser himself. Seeing the decisive moment arrived, Napoléon ordered a general charge by all his forces; and the Austrians, pressed in front by Augereau and Masséna, threatened in rear by Fiorilla, and turned on their left by Verdier, fell back at all points. The excessive fatigue of the Republican troops prevented their pursuing the broken enemy far, who fell back behind the Mincio, with the loss of two thousand killed and wounded, one thousand prisoners, and twenty pieces of cannon (5).

This action, the importance of which is not to be estimated by the number of troops engaged, was decisive of the fate of Italy. With a view to prevent Wurmser from reassembling his scattered forces, Napoléon, on the following day, sent Masséna to raise the siege of Peschiera, and after an obstinate engagement, he succeeded in routing the Austrian division before that place, with the loss of ten pieces of cannon, and five hundred prisoners. In this action a young colonel particularly distinguished himself, named Sucher, afterwards Duke of Albufera. At the same time Napoléon advanced to Verona, which the Austrians abandoned on his approach; and Masséna, after some sharp skirmishing, resumed his old positions at Rivoli and the Montebaldo; while Wurmser, having revictualled Mantua, and raised its garrison to fifteen thousand men, composed chiefly of fresh troops, re-

⁽¹⁾ Nap. iii. 213, 215. Th. viii, 375. Jom, viii, 326, 327. Bot. i. 453.

⁽²⁾ Jom. viii. 328. Th. viii. 378, 379.
(3) Nap. iii. 216. Th. viii. 379. Jom. viii. 331.

38 sumed his former station at Roveredo, and in the fastnesses of the Tv-

By this expedition Wurmser had relieved Mantua, and supplied it with a garrison of fresh troops, but he had lost nearly twenty thousand men, and sixty pieces of cannon, and the spirit of his soldiers was, by fatigue, defeat, and disaster, completely broken The great successes which attended the French arms, are mainly to be ascribed to the extraordinary vigour, activity, and talent, displayed by their general-in-chief. The Austrian plan of attack was founded on an undue confidence in their own powers; they thought the main body under Wurmser would be able to defeat the French army, and raise the siege of Mantua, while the detachment under Quasdanowich would cut off their retreat and it must be admitted, in favour of this plan, that it was on the point of being attended with complete success, and against a general and troops of less resolution, unquestionably would have been so When opposed, however, to the vigour and activity of Aanoléon, it offered the fairest opportunity for decisive defeat. The two corps of the of the Imperialists could communicate only by Roveredo and the upper end of the lake of Guarda, a circuit of above sixty miles, while the French, occupying a central station between them, at its southern extremity, were enabled, by a great exertion of activity, to bring a superior force, first against the one, and then against the other. Their successes, however, were dearly nurchised above seven thousand men had been killed and wounded: Wurmser carried with him three thousand prisoners into the Tyrol, and the whole siege equipage of Mantua had fallen into the hands of the enemy (2)

The democratic party in all the Italian towns were thrown into transports of joy at this success, and the rejoicings among them at Milan, Bologna, and Modena, were proportioned to the terror with which they had formerly been inspired But Napoleon, judging more accurately of his position, and seeing the siege of Mantua was to be commenced anew, while Wurmser, with forty thousand men, was still on the watch in the Tyrol, deemed prudence and precaution more than ever necessary. He did not attempt, therefore, to collect a second battering train for the siege of that fortress, but contented himself with a simple blockade, in maintaining which during the autumnal months. his troops became extremely sickly, from the pestilential atmosphere of its marshes. To the powers in the southern parts of the Peninsula who had, during the temporary success of the Austrians, given indication of Blockade of Name of the succession of the hostile designs, he wrote in the most menneing strain, the king of Naples was threatened with an attack from seventy thousand French if he violated the armistice, the Papal legate obtained pardon for a revolt at Ferrara only by the most abject submissions, the Venetians were informed that he was aware of their armaments, though he still kept up negotiations, and continued to live at their expense, while the hing of Piedmont received commands to complete the destruction of the guerilla parties which infested the mountainous parts of his dominions. To the Milanese, on the other hand, who had remained faithful to France during its transient reverses, he wrote in the most flattering terms, and gave them leave to ral e troops for their common defence against the Imperial forces. The most ardent of the south of Lombards were speedily enrolled under their banners; I ut a more efficient force was formed out of the Poles, who, since the last partition of their unhappy country (7), had wan fered without a finne through Europe, and now flocked in such numbers to the Italian standard, as to lay the foundation of the Polish legion which afterwards became so renowned in the Imperial wars.

⁽³ Now 1 with 251, Th win 232 231 For, 1 (4) Tap 217 218 Jwa 1 333 333 17 N | 6 717 218 Twil 371 454 Birt el 345

The troops on both sides remained in a state of repose for three weeks after this terrible struggle, during which Wurmser was assiduously employed in reorganizing and recruiting his forces, while Napoléon received considerable reinforcements from the army of Kellermann and the interior of France. The numbers on both sides were, at the end of August, nearly equal; Wurmser's forces having been raised to nearly fifty thousand men, by additions from the hereditary states, and Napoléon's to the same amount by the junction of part of Kellermann's forces (1). Untaught by former disasters, of the imprudence of forming plans at a distance for the regulation of their armies, the again ad-Aulic Council again framed and transmitted to Wurmser a plan for vances, and the French the expulsion of the French from the line of the Adige. According to this design, he was to leave twenty thousand men under Davidowich, to guard Roveredo and the valley of the Adige, and descend himself, with thirty thousand, by the gorges of the Brenta to Bassano, and so reach the plains of Padua. Thus, notwithstanding their former disasters, they were about again to commit the same error, of dividing their force into two Napoléon, at the same time, resolved to resume the offensive, in order to prevent any detachments from the Imperial army into Bavaria, where the Archduke Charles was now severely pressed by Moreau. The two armies broke up at the same time, Wurmser descending the Brenta, and Napoléon ascending the Adige. Foreseeing the possibility of a descent upon Mantua during his absence, the French general left Kilmaine, with three thousand men, to occupy Legnago and Verona, while ten thousand still maintained the blockade of Mantua, and he himself, with thirty thousand, ascended the Tyrol by the two roads on the banks of the Adige, and that on the western side of the lake of Guarda (5).

columns, while Napoléon occupied a central position equidistant from both (2); with this difference that, instead of a lake, they had now a mass of

The French were the first to commence operations. Early in September, Vaubois, with the division of Sauret, ascended the lake, and, after several combats, reached Tortola, at its upper extremity. On the same day Napoléon, with the divisions of Masséna and Augereau, arrived in front of the advanced posts of the Austrians at Serravale, on the Adige, and on the following day attacked their position. The Imperialists stood firm; but Napoléon sent a cloud of light troops on the heights on either side of their columns, and, the moment they began to waver, he made so vigorous a charge along the chaussée with the hussards, that the Austrians were driven back in confusion; and the Republicans entered Roveredo pell-mell with the fugitives (4).

Davidowich rallied his broken divisions in the defile of Calliano, a formidable pass on the banks of the Adige, formed where the precipices of the Alps approach so closely to the river, that there is only the breadth of four hundred toises left between them. An old castle, which the Austrians had strengthened and mounted with cannon, was placed at the edge of the pre-unpassable mountains between them.

⁽¹⁾ The sick and wounded in the French army at this period were no less than fifteen thousand.— Confidential Despatch, 25th Aug.—Corresp. Conf. i.

⁽²⁾ Th. viii. 393, 391. Nap. iii. 256. (3) Th. viii. 391. Ret. i. 460. Nap. iii. 256. (4) Th. viii. 396. Nap. iii. 259.

cipice, and a ruined wall stretched across the gorge, from the foot of the rocks to the margin of the stream Napolcon threw his light troops on Def at of Day dow ch the mountains upon his own right, placed a battery, which commanded the Austrian cannon, and forming a close column of ten battalions, precipitated them along the high-road upon the enemy. Nothing could withstand their impetuosity, the Imperialists were routed, horse, foot, and cannon rushed in confusion through the narrow defile in their rear, and the Republican cavalry, charging furiously along the chauss'ce, drove them, in the utmost disorder, towards Trent Seven hundred prisoners, and fifteen pieces of cannon fell into the hands of the victors, and the follow-

ክዮሮሮ~ lerated the march of Wurmser through the defiles of the Brenta He now imagined that Napoléon intended to penetrate by Brixen and the Brenner into Germany, in order to co-operate with Moreau in the plains of Bayaria, and the Austrian veteran immediately conceived the bold design of hastening, with his whole disposable force, down the Val Sugana into the plain of Bassano, turning rapidly to the right, seizing upon Verona, and both raising the siege of Mantia and preventing the return of Napolion into Italy The French general, who, by treachery at the Austrian headquarters, was uniformly put in possession of his adversary's plans before they could be put into execution, immediately perceived the danger which would result from this measure on the part of the enemy, and resolved to oppose it by another, equally hold, on his own side. This was, to leave the division of Vaubors alone in the Tyrol to make head against Davidowich, and descend himself, with twenty-four thousand men, the defiles of the Brenta, and attack Wurmser before he had got round to Verona In doing this, he ran the risk, it is true, of being himself shut up in the terrible defiles of the Val Suganz, surrounded by precipices and peaks of a stupendous elevation, between Wurmser in front and Davidowich in rear, but he trusted to the resolution of his troops to overcome every obstacle, and hoped, by driving his antagonist back on the Adige, to compel his whole force to lay down their arms (2)

At break of day on the 6th, the French troops were in motion, and they reached Borgo di Val Sugana at night, after having marched ten leagues. On the following morning they continued their march, and, at the entrance of the narrow defiles, came up with the Austrian rearguard, strongly posted near Primolano. Napoleon put in practice the same manguage which had Art me Bree succeeded so well at Calliano, covering the mountain on either side with his tirailleurs, and forming a close column of infinity to attack the pass along the high-road. Nothing could resist the impetuosity of the French troops. The Austrians, who were greatly inferior in number, being only the rearguard of the main force, were routed, with the loss of two thousand prisoners and nine pieces of cannon. The fugitives were pursued as far as Cesmona, where head-quarters were established. Napokon, in his eagerness to pursue the enemy, outrode all his suite, and passed the night alone, wrapped in his cloak, on the ground, in the midst of a regiment of infinity who bisonacked round the town A private soldier shared with him his rations, and reminded him of it, after he became I my eror, in the camp of Poulogne (5)

⁽¹⁾ Tip 1 2 1 = 3 Th v 1 327 3 5 (2) Th v a v22 Tip 1 2 2 Hart bit $15 (1) Eat 1 401 Top 11 2 3 211 Th + 1.490

On the same day in which this action took place, in the gorges of the Val Sugana, the advanced guard of Wurmser, under Mezaros, had reached to Verona, and was already skirmishing with the posts of the Republicans on the fortifications which had been erected round that city, when they were recalled to make head against the terrible enemy which had assailed their rear. Wurmser collected all his forces at Bassano to endeavour to bar the passages, and throw the French back into the defiles; the heavy infantry and artillery were placed on a strong position in front of the town and round its mouldering towers, while six battalions of light troops occupied the opening of the valley into the plain. These were speedily overthrown, and the divisions of Masséna and Augereau, emerging from the defiles, found themselves in presence of a brilliant force of twenty thousand men, with a powerful artillery, drawn up in battle array. But the Austrians, discouraged by repeated defeats, made but a feeble resistance. Massena speedily routed them on the right, while Augereau broke them on the left: the fugitives rushed in confusion into the town, where they were speedily followed by the victorious troops, who made four thousand prisoners, and captured thirty pieces of cannon, besides almost all the baggage, pontoons, and ammunition of the army (1).

He throws himself into Mantua. During the confusion of this defeat the Austrians got themselves separated from each other; Quasdanowich, with three thousand men, was thrown back towards Friuli, while Wurmser, with sixteen thousand, took the road to Mantua. The situation of the veteran marshal was all but desperate: Masséna was pressing his rear, while Porto Legnago and Verona were both in the hands of the enemy, and the loss of all his pontoons at Bassano rendered it impossible to pass the Adige but at one or other of these places. Fortunately for him, the battalion which occupied Porto Legnago had been withdrawn to Verona during the attack on that place, and the one destined to replace it had not yet arrived. By a rapid march he reached that town before the Republicans, and thus got his troops across the Adige. Napoléon, following his prey with breathless anxiety, no sooner discovered that the passage at Legnago was secured, than he pushed Massona across the river to Cerra, in order to cut him from the road to Mantua. But the Austrians fought with the courage of despair, and their cavalry, five thousand strong, who were unbroken, and whose spirit had not suffered by disaster, proved irresistible to their enemies. Napoléon himself, who had come up during the engagement, had great difficulty in saving himself by flight; and Wurm-er, who arrived a few minutes after, deemed himself so secure of his antagonist that he recommended to his dragoons to take him alive. Having missed so brilliant a stroke, the old marshal continued his march, passed the Molenilla. cut to pieces a body of eight hundred infantry which endeavoured to interrupt his progress, and entered Mantua in a species of triumph which three ? ray of glory over his long series of disasters (2).

Encouraged by these successes, he still endeavoured to leep the field with twenty thousand infantry and five thousand horse, and contains his cuirassions doctround a many and five thousand horse, and contains the first of the his cuirassiers destroyed a regiment of light infantry at Due Gastelli, Description of his transfer at Due Gast was the termination of his transient gleam of prosperity. Napoleon in order up the greater part of his c up the greater part of his forces, and soon after Augerest & Engrape, and made prisoners of the Legnago, and made prisoners a thousand men, and fifteen place in a stroke which by decriping to a stroke which, by depriving Wurmser of the means of processing size

^{(2,} Th. 278, 491, 104, 104, 276 Land In The (t) Th. viii, 401, 402. Nep. iii, 255, 255. Dot. i. 57 . 457, 35%

throw him back on Mantua. On the 19th he was attacked by the divisions of Augereau and Massena with an equal force. The Austrian cavalry at first drove hack Augereau, and the battle seemed for a time doubtful, but a vigorous charge of Massena in the centre restored affairs, and Wurmser was at length driven back into Mantua, with the loss of three thousand men and twenty nieces of cannon. I wo days afterwards, he threw a bridge over the Po. and attacked Governolo, one of the fortresses erected by the French at the conclusion of the dikes, with the design of cutting his way through to the Adige: but he was repulsed with the loss of six hundred men, and four pieces of cannon, and in the beginning of October, kilmaine resumed his old lines round the town, and the Austrians were shut in on every side within its walls. Wurmser killed the horses of his numerous and splendid cavalry. salted their carcasses, and made every preparation for a vigorous defence, while Napoléon dispatched his pide-de-camp, Marmony, afterwards Duke of Ragusa, with the standards taken in these glorious actions, to lay at the feet of the French government (1)

By the result of these conflicts the Austrian army in the field was reduced from fifty thousand to fifteen thousand men, of whom twelve thousand, under Davidowich, had taken refuge in the defiles leading to Mount Bremer, while three thousand, under Quasdanowich, were in the mountains of Friuli Wurmser, it is true, had brought sixteen thousand into Mantua, but this force, accumulated in a besieged and unhealthy town, was of no real service during the remainder of the campaign, and rather, by increasing the number of useless mouths within the place, accelerated the period of its ultimate surrender. Before the end of October, ten thousand of the carrison were in the hospitals, so that the besieged were unable either to make any use of their superfluous numbers, or get quit of the unserviceable persons who consumed their scanty provisions. But these successes, great as they were, had not been purchased without a very heavy loss to the French army, who, in these rapid actions, were weakened by above fifteen thousand men, in killed, wounded, and prisoners (2) Vest e fo ts Both parties remained in mactivity for a considerable time after these exhausting efforts, during which the Austrians were energetically employed in repairing their losses, and the Republicans in drawing forces from the other side of the Alps. They took advantage of the delay to organize Revolutionary powers throughout all the north of Italy Bologna and Ferrara were united under a provisional government, Republuan forces, and Iacolun clubs established, and all the machiners of demoeracy put in full operation. Modena was revolutionized, the old government replaced by a popular assembly, and French troops admitted within its walls, while legions of national guards were organized throughout the whole of Lombardy (3)

But more efficient auxiliaries were approaching. Twelve battalions from the army of la Vendée, besides the remainder of the forces of kellermann, joyfully crossed the Ains, happy to exchange the scene of utter penury and inclorious warfart, for the luxurious guarters and shiming achievements of the Italian army In the end of October, Alvinzi, who had assumed the command of the army in Friuli, had assembled forty thousand men under his standards, while the corps of Davidowich was raised, by the junction of a large body of the Tyrolese militia, a force admirably adapted for mountain warfare, to eighteen thousand men. To oppose this mass of assailants, Nanoléon had twelve thousand men under Vaubois, on the Lavis, in front of Trent; twenty thousand on the Brenta and the Adige observing Alvinzi, and ten thousand guarding the lines round Mantua. The disproportion, therefore, was very great in every quarter, and Napoléon, justly alarmed at his situation, and chagrined at the Directory for not putting a larger force at his disposal, wrote to the government that he was about to lose the whole of his Italian conquests (1).

⁽¹⁾ N p : 273 Bot : 472 473 Th v 405 (2) Hard th 450 Nap :: 212 Jour is 176 (3) Jour ix 133 145 Th i 405

The Austrian preparations being completed, Alvinzi, on the 1st Alvinzi November, threw two bridges over the Piave, and advanced against ngnin ad-Masséna, whose headquarters were at Bassano. At the approach of the Imperialists in such superior force, the French fell back to Vicenza, and Napoléon hastened, with the division of Augereau and the reserve, to their support. On the 6th, a general battle took place. Masséna overthrew the Austrian left, commanded by Provera and Liptay, and drove them with loss over the Brenta; while Napoléon himself defeated the right, under Quasdanowich, and would have carried the town of Bassano, which the Imperialists occupied in force, had not Honenzollenn, who advanced at the head of the Austrian reserve, made good the place till nightfall. But early on the following morning, the general received intelligence from Vaubois, in the Tyrol, which not only interrupted his career of success, but rendered an immediate retreat on the part of the whole Republican army unavoidable (2).

In obedience to the orders he had received, that general, on the Vanhols by same day on which the Austrians crossed the Piave, commenced an attack on their position on the Lavis; but he was not only received with the utmost intrepidity, but driven back in disorder, through the town of Trent, to the defile of Calliano, with the loss of four thousand men. There he made a stand; but Davidowich, having caused a large part of his forces to cross to the right bank of the Adige, passed that post, and was moving rapidly down on Montebaldo and Rivoli, so as to threaten his communications with Verona, and the remainder of the army. Nothing was left for Vaubois but to retire in haste towards Verona (5), which was seriously menaced by the increasing forces of the Tyrolese army, while their progress on the Montebaldo could only be arrested by bringing up Joubert in the utmost haste from the lines of Mantua.

Napoléon hastens in person to

of Rivoli.

No sooner was this disastrous intelligence received by Napoléon, than he drew back his whole force through Vicenza to Verona, the Plateau while Alvinzi, who was himself preparing to retire, after his check

(1) Th. viii. 448, 449. Jom. ix. 158. Nap. iii.

8th Oct. Napoléon's letter was in these terms:—1796. "Mantua cannot be reduced before the middle of February; you will perceive from that how critical our situation is; and our political system is, if possible, still worse. Peace with Naples is indispensable; an alliance with Genoa and Turin necessary. Lose no time in taking the people of Lombardy, Modena, Bologna, and Ferrara under your protection, and, above all, send reinforcements. The Emperor has thrice reformed his army since the commencement of the campaign. Every thing is going wrong in Italy; the prestige of our forces is dissipated; the enemy now count our ranks. It is indispensable that you take into your instant consideration the critical situation of the Italian army, and forthwith secure is friends both among kings. and forthwith secure it friends both among kings and people. The influence of Rome is incalculable; you did wrong in breaking with that power; I would have temporized with it, as we have done with Venice and Genoa. Whenever the general in Italy is not the centre of negotiation as well as military operations, the greatest risks will be incurred. You may ascribe this language to ambition; but I am satiated with honours, and my health is so broken, that I must implore you to give me a successor. Ken, that I must implore you to give me a successor.

—I can no longer sit on horseback; my courage alone is unshaken. Every thing was ready for the explosion at Genoa; but Faypoult thought it expedient to delay. We must conciliate Genoa till the new order of things is more firmly established."—Confident. Desputches, Oct. 8, 1796, ii. 92, 93.

(2) Nap. iii. 437. Th. viii. 543.

(3) Nap. iii. 348, 349. Th. viii 453, 455.

on the preceding day, immediately resumed the offensive. Napolicon in person proceeded, with such troops as he could collect, in the utmost haste to the Montebaldo, where he found the division of Vaubus all assembled on the plateau of Biroh, and so much reinforced as to be able to withstand an attack. He here deemed it necessary to make a severe example of the regiments whose painc had so nearly proved fatal to the army. Collecting the troops into a circle, he addressed them, with a severe tone, in these words—"Soldiers, I am displeased with you 'to have evinced neither discipline, nor valour, nor constancy. You have allowed yourselves to be chased from positions, the processing of the chased from positions, and the plane allowed yourselves to be chased from positions, the processing of the pr ith a menicing voice, micu.

regiments with consternation and laws of discipline could not restrain the sounds of grief which burst from their ranks. They broke their array, and, a constal that he would lead them into action, ing to yield to their prayers, promised to suspende

after they behaved with uncommon gallantry, and regained their place in his esteem.

Notwithstanding his check on the Brenta, the operations of Alvinzi which is the second of the second with the most brilliant success. He had estable regained possession of the whole of the Italian Tyrol, and of all the plan of Italy between that river and the Adige. But the most difficult part still remained, which was, to pass the latter stream in the face of the enemy, and effect a junction with the right wing under Davidowich, which had achieved such important advantages.

Republicans, who took a position on defend the road to Verona to the very uttermost. Napoteon attack Alimin and resolved to attack Alimin ;

had neglected to occupy, but the imperior and a second

the post, and made the brigade prisoners. The action continued the remaining of the day along the whole line, without decisive success to either party, but the rain, which fell in torrents, and the mud which clogged their wheels, prevented the French artiller; from being brought up to meet the fire of the Austrian cannon, which, in position, thundered with terrible effect upon the Republican columns (2). Wearied and dispirited, they drew back at might, yielding, for the first time in the campaign, the victory in a pitched battle to their enemies.

The startion of Napoléon was now, to all appearance, utlerly desperate. He had lost four thousand men under Vauboss, three thousand in the recent actions with Alvinzi, his troops, dispirited with these disasters, had lost much of their confidence and courage, and a depressing feeling of the great strength of the enemy had gained every breast. The army, it was true, had still the advantage of a central position at Verona, in the midst of their encmies; but they could resume the offensive in no direction with any appearance of success. In the north they were arrested by the defiles of the Tyrol; in the east by the position of Caldiero, known by recent experience to be impregnable; in the south the blockading force was hardly able to make head against the frequent sorties of the garrison of Mantua. The peril of their situation rapidly gained the minds of the French soldiers, more capable than any others in Europe of judging of the probable course of events, and extremely susceptible of strong impressions; and it required all the art of the general, aided by the eloquence of his lieutenants, to hinder them from sinking under their misfortunes. Napoléon wrote in the most desponding terms to the Directory, but in public he assumed the appearance of confidence; and the wounded in the city, hearing of the peril of the army, began to issue, with their wounds yet unstanched, from the hospitals. (1).

But the genius of Napoléon did not desert him in this eventful crisis. Without communicating his design to any one, he ordered the whole army to be under arms at nightfall, on the 14th November, and they began their march in three columns, crossed the Adige, and took the road to Milan. The hour of departure, the route, the universal ignorance in regard to their destination, all inspired the belief that they were about to retreat, and relinquish to their insulting rivals the plains of Italy. Breathless with anxiety, the troops defiled through the gates of Verona; not a word was spoken in the ranks; grief filled every heart; in the dark columns, the measured tread of marching men alone was heard; when suddenly the order was given to turn rapidly to the left, and all the corps, descending the course of the Adige, arrived before daybreak at Ronco. There they found a bridge of boats prepared, and the whole army was rapidly passed to the other side, and found itself in an immense sea of morasses. A general feeling of joy was immediately diffused over the army: the soldiers now perceived that the contest for Italy was not abandoned, and passing quickly from one extreme to another, prepared with alacrity to follow the footsteps of their leader, without any regard to the fearful odds to which they were exposed (2).

(1) Th. viii. 458, 460. Nap. iii. 356, 357.

The gloomy anticipations of Rapoleon at this period are strongly depicted in the following interesting secret despatch to the Directory:—" If the events I have to recount are not propitious, you will not ascribe it to the army; its inferiority, and the exhaustion of its brave men, give me every reason to fear for it Perhaps we are on the eve of losing Italy None of the promised succours have arrived; they are all arrested at Lyon or Marseille. The activity of our government at the commencement of the war can alone give you an idea of the energy of the Court of Vienna; hardly a day clapses that they do not receive five thousand men, and for two months I have only been joined by a single battalion. I do my duty; the army does its part; my soul is lacerated, but my conscience is at ease. I never received a fourth part of the succours which the Ministra of West and the succours which the Minister of War announces in his despatches.

"To-day I shall allow the troops to repose; but to-morrow we shall renew our operations. I despair of preventing the raising the blockade of Mantua; should that disaster arrive, we shall soon be behind the Adda, if not over the Alps. The wounded are few, but they are the elite of the army. Our best officers are struck down; the Army of Italy, reduced ' to a handful of heroes, is exhausted. The heroes of Lodi, of Millesimo, of Castiglione, of Bassano, are dead, or in hospital; there remains only their reputation, and the pride they have given to the sol-diers. Joubert, Lanusse, Victor, Murat, Charlot, are wounded: we are abandoned in the extremity of

"I have lost few soldiers, but those who have fallen are the flower of the army, whom it is impossible to replace. Such as remain have devoted them-Augereau, of the interpid Masséna, of Berthier, is about to strike; what then will become of these brave soldiers? This consideration renders me circurate the strike is the soldiers? cumspect; I know not how to brave death, when it would so certainly be the ruin of those who have so would so certainly be the ruin of those who have so long been the object of my solicitude.

"In a few days we shall make a last effort; should fortune prove favourable we shall take Mantua, and with it Italy. Had I received the 83d, three thousand five hundred strong, I would have answered for every thing; in a few days forty men will perhaps not give me the same Confidential Despatch, 14th Nov., ii.

(2) Th. viii. 461. Nap. iii. 357.

Having perceived, during the former action at Caldiero, that the position was too strong to be carried by an attack in front. Napothe stan or lean had resolved to assail it in flank, by the village of Arcola, and no thon of Itoli had best read to asset the midst of the morasses, which stretched from thence to the banks of the Po He thought with reason that, on the narrow causeways which traversed these marshes, the superiority of numbers on the part of the enemy would be unavailing. every thing would come to depend on the resolution of the heads of columns . and he hoped that the courage of his soldiers, restored by being thus brought to combat on equal terms with the enemy, and animated by this novel species of warfare, would prevail over the discipline and tenacity of the Germans The position which he had chosen was singularly well adapted for the purpose in view. Three chaussees branch off from Ronco, one, following the left bank of the Adige, remounts that river to Verona . one in the centre leads straight to Arcola, by a stone bridge over the little stream of the Alpon, the third, on the right, follows the descending course of the Adige to Albando. Three columns were moved forward by these chaussées, that on the left was destined to approach Verona, and observe that town, so as to secure it from any sudden attack of the enemy, that in the centre, to attack the flank of their position by the village of Arcola, that on the right, to cut off their retreat (1)

At day break on the 15th, Massena advanced on the first chaussée as far as a small eminence, which brought him in sight of the steeact ons ples of Verona, and removed all anxiety in that quarter Augereau, with the division in the centre, pushed, without being perceived, as far as the bridge of Arcola, but his advanced guard was there met by three battahons of Croats, who kept up so heavy a fire on the head of the column. that, not withstanding the greatest exertions on the part of the soldiers, they were driven back. In vain Augereau himself hastened to the spot, and led them back to the charge the fire at the bridge was so violent, that he was overthrown, and compelled to halt the column Meanwhile, Alvinzi, whose attention was fixed on Verona, where he imagined the bulk of the enemy's forces to be, was confounded in the morning at hearing a violent fire in the marshes At first he imagined that it was merely a few light troops, but soon intelligence arrived from all quarters that the enemy were advancing in force on all the dikes, and threatened the flank and rear of his position. He immediately dispatched two divisions along the chrussees by which the enemy was approaching, that commanded by Mitrouski advanced to defend the village of Arcola, while that under Provera marched against the division of Massena The latter column soon commenced an attack on their antagonists, but they were unable to withstand the impetuous shock of Massena's grenadiers, and were driven back with heavy loss Mitrouski, at the same time, passed through Arcola, crossed the bridge, and attacked the corps of Augereau, but they also were repulsed and followed to the bridge by the victorious French There commenced a desperate struggle, the Republican

were received with line of infantry stay staggered and fell dispensable not only to his future operations, but to the safety of his own army, put himself with his generals at the head of the column, seized a standard, advanced without shrinking through a tempest of shot, and planted it on the middle of the bridge; but the fire there became so violent that his grenadiers hesitated, and, seizing the general in their arms, bore him back amidst a cloud of smoke, the dead and the dying. The Austrians instantly rushed over the bridge, and pushed the crowd of fugitives into the marsh, where Napoléon lay up to the middle in water, while the enemy's soldiers for a minute surrounded him on all sides. The French grenadiers soon perceived that their commander was left behind; the cry ran through their ranks, "Forward to save the general," and, returning to the charge, they drove back the Austrians, and extricated Napoléon from his perilous situation. During this terrible strife, Lannes received three wounds. His aide-de-camp, Meuron, was killed by his side, when covering his general with his body, and almost all his personal staff were badly wounded (1).

Meanwhile Guieux, who commanded the column which had been directed against Albaredo, had arrived at that place, and was directly in rear of the village of Arcola: but it was too late. During the desperate stand there made by the Austrians, Alvinzi had gained time to draw off his baggage and artillery, and it was no longer possible to take the enemy in rear. Towards evening, the Austrians abandoned Arcola, and drew up their army, facing the marshes, at the foot of the heights of Caldiero (2).

During the night, Napoléon, on his side, drew back his forces to the right bank of the Adige, leaving only an advanced guard on the left bank; while the Austrians re-occupied the village of Arcola, and all the ground which had been so vehemently disputed on the preceding day. They even advanced, in the confidence of victory, along the dikes, to within six hundred yards of the village of Ronco; but when they were thus far engaged in the defiles, the French attacked them with the bayonet, and drove back their columns, after an obstinate engagement, to the vicinity of Arcola. The battle continued the whole day, with various success, and at nightfall both parties retired, the Austrians over the Alpon, the Republicans across the Adige (5).

During the whole of these eventful days, big with the fate of Italy and the world, the conduct of the Austrian generals was timid, and unworthy of the brave troops whom they commanded. Davidowich, while the contest was raging on the lower Adige, remained in total inactivity on the upper part of that stream; while Alvinzi, fettered by secret instructions from the Aulic Council to attempt nothing hazardous, and rather keep on the defensive, in order to facilitate the hidden negotiations which were going forward or about to commence, repeatedly halted in the career of success, and lost the fairest opportunities of crushing his adversary. Napoléon, aware, from the treachery which constantly prevailed at the Imperial headquarters, of these secret restrictions, augmented the irresolution of the commander-in-chief by privately dispatching intelligence from Verona to him of the approaching mission of Clarke to conduct negotiations for peace, of the conferences opened at Paris with England, and the probability of an immediate accommodation. Alvinzi rejected the proposal for an armistice which he made, but suspended his movements to join Davidowich, and paralysed every successful operation for fear of injuring the negotiations: To such a length did this timidity proceed, that when, after the repulse of the French from Arcola, his bravest officers besought him instantly to form a junction with Davidonich, and ' ad of following the carnage, and both parties auvanced, with diminished humbers but undecaying fury, to the , .1 .

(2) Nap. iii. 364. Th. viii (3) Nap. iii. 366, 367. T

bridge of Ronco, where the action was restored by a regiment which Napoleon had placed in ambuscade among the willows on the side of the road, and which attacked the victorious column in flank, when disordered by success, with such vigour, that they were almost all driven into the marshes. Mas-

"was only enabled to column, and leading Towards noon, however, Napoleon, perceiving that the enemy were exhausted with fatigue, while his own soldiers were comparatively fresh, deemed the moment for decisive success arrived, and ordered a general charge of all his forces along both chaussees, and, having cleared them of the enemy, formed his troops in order of battle at their extremity, on the firm ground, having the right towards Porto Legnago, and the left at Arcola By the orders of Napoleon, the garrison of that place issued forth with four pieces of cannon, so as to take the enemy in rear, while a body of trumpeters was sent, under cover of the willows, to their extreme left flank, with orders to sound a charge, as soon as the action was fully engaged along the whole line. These measures were completely successful The Austrian commander, while bravely resisting in front, hearing a cannonade in his rear, and the trumpets of a whole division of cavalry in his flank, ordered a retreat, and, after a desperate struggle of three > in pieces, and declared conduct brought disthis dreadful strife at

Arcola, had neither evinced the capacity nor the spirit of a general worthy to combat with Aapolcon, -not that he was in reality deficient in either, but that the rumous fetters of the Aulic Council paralysed all his movements; and the dread of hazarding any thing on the eye of a negotiation, made him thron away every chance of success (5) While this desperate struggle was going forward in the marshes of Arcola, Davidowich, who had opened the campaign with such brilliant success, was far from following up his advantages with the vigour which might have been expected. He merely advanced with his forces to the neighbourhood of Verona on the 18th, following Vaubois, who abandoned the positions of Corona and Rivoli on his approach, whereas, had he pressed him hard on the preceding days, Napoléon would have been compelled to cross the Adige, and raise the siege of Mantua. Without losing an instant, the French general returned with a large part of his forces through Verona, and compelled Davidowich to retire into the Tyrol, while the French resumed their old positions at Corona and Rivoli; and Augereau drove them from Dolce, with the loss of one thousand prisoners and nine pieces of cannon. The inhabitants of that town were lost in astonishment when they beheld the army which had left their walls by the gate of Milan three days before, return in triumph, after so terrible a combat, by the gate of Venice; and without halting, pass through the town to make head against the fresh enemies who approached from the Tyrol (1).

⁽¹⁾ Hard or 67,75. (2) Vap at 358, 369. Th that 470, 472 Jom ix 173, 192

Alvinzi, when Napoléon was absent in pursuit of Davidowich, advanced towards Verona, now chiefly occupied by invalids and wounded men, and a universal joy pervaded the army when the order to march in that direction was given; but his old irresolution soon returned; the instructions of the Aulic Council prevailed over his better genius, and the final order to retire to Vicenza again spread grief and despair among his heroic followers (2).

Results of the battle of Arcola, how glorious soever to the these actions. The results of the battle of Arcola, how glorious soever to the these actions. French arms, were by no means so decisive as those of the previous victories gained in the campaign. The actions had been most obstinately contested; and though the Imperialists ultimately retired, and Mantua was unrelieved, yet the victors were nearly as much weakened as the vanquished. The loss of the French in all, including the actions with Davidowich, was fifteen thousand men, while that of the Austrians did not exceed eighteen thousand. During the confusion consequent on such desperate engagements, the garrison of Mantua made frequent sorties; and Wurmser availed himself with such skill of the temporary interruption of the blockade, that considerable convoys of provisions were introduced into the place, and, by putting the garrison on half rations, and calculating on the great mortality among the troops, which daily diminished their number, he still held out hopes that he could maintain his position till a fourth effort was made for his relief (5).

Extraoiding The intelligence of these hard-fought victories excited the most enthusiastic transports throughout all France. The battle of Arcola especially, with its desperate chances and perilous passages, was the object of universal admiration. The people never were weary of celebrating the genius which had selected, amidst the dikes of Ronco, a field of battle where numbers were unavailing and courage irresistible; and the heroic intrepidity which made the soldier forget the general, and recalled the exploits of the knights of romance. Every where medals were exhibited of the young general on the bridge of Arcola, with the standard in his hand, in the midst of the fire and smoke. The Councils decreed that the Army of Italy had deserved well of their country, and that the standards which Napoléon and Augereau had borne on that memorable occasion, should be given to them, to be preserved as precious trophies in their families (4).

Vast efforts Nor were the Austrians less distinguished by patriotic feeling. of the Austrians. While the triumphs of the Archduke Charles on the Danube had saved Germany, and raised to the highest pitch the ardour of the people, the reverses in Italy came to damp the general joy, and renew, in a quarter where it was least expected, the peril of the monarchy. With unconquerable resolution they prepared to face the danger; the affectionate ardour of the

⁽¹⁾ Nap. iii. 371. Th. viii. 472.

⁽²⁾ Hard, iv. 75.

⁽³⁾ Jom. ix. 231. Nap. iii. 371, 372. Th. viii, 472, 473.

⁽⁴⁾ Th. viii, 473.

hereditary states showed itself in the moment of alarm, the people every where flen to arms, numerous regiments of volunteers were formed to repur the chasms in the regular forces, Vienna alone raised four regiments. which received standards embroidered by the hand of the Empress, and, before the end of the year, a fourth army was formed in the mountains of Triuli and Tyrol, nowise inferior either in numbers or resolution to those which had wasted under the sword of Napoleon (1) After the battle of Arcola, the negotiation, the commencement of the kind of which had been attended with such fatal effects to the Imperial process of the fortunes during the action, was continued with the greatest actions and the such action of th tivity between the headquarters of the two armies General Clarke, the Republican envoy, arrived at the headquarters of Nanoleon. and it was at first proposed to conclude an armistice of three months, in order to facilitate the negotiations, but this the French general, who saw the command of Italy on the point of slipping from his grasp, and was well aware that the fate of the war depended on Mantua, resolutely opposed (2) Clarke, however, continued to argue in favour of the armistice, and produced the instructions of his government, which were precise on that point, but Napoleon, secure of the support of Barras, at once let him know that he was resolved not to share his authority with any one "If you come here to obey me," said he, "I will always see you with pleasure, if not, the sooner you return to those who sent you the better (5) " Clarke felt he was mastered, he did not answer a word, from that moment the negotiation fell entirely into the hands of Aapoleon, and came to nothing So completely, dalous depredations of the civil and military authorities, both on the Italian states and the funds of the Republic, an employment which soon absorbed all his time, and was attended with as little success as those of Aapolcon hunself had been. The conferences which were opened at Vicenza in December, were broken up on the 5d January, without having led to any result, and both parties prepared to try once more the fate of arms (5)

indeed, did the Republican envoy fall under the government of the young

For two months after the battle of Arcola, and during this negotiation, both parties remained in a state of mactivity, and great efforts were made on weather, and ten thousand men flocked to his standards from the interior, so that, by the beginning of January 1797, he had forty-six thousand men under arms. Ten thousand blockaded Mantua, and the remainder of the army was on the line of the Adige, from the edge of the Po to the rocks of Montebaldo (6).

```
(1) Toul v 142 Jon x 257 Hard iv 152
```

lose the no cy (30 000 000 ve expert fro n Rone which cann t be : fluenced b t by the fall of Man t a and the Emperor be ng nearer tile a.e + of action will recru t his army juich more effectually

s to cut surselves o t of a l cha cr of succes-is a word every il adepends on the fall of the in - Lore p Confd i 425

(4) Head by 133 134

¹⁾ Report Des 1-98 ly (larke Confil Correspo (5) Il tel er 136 146 149 (6) Jone ex 262 Th v U 507

It was high time that the Imperialists should advance to the relief of this fortress, which was now reduced to the last extremity, from want of provisions. At a council of war, held in the end of December, it was decided that it was indispensable that instant intelligence should be sent to Alvinzi of their desperate situation. The English officer attached to the garrison volunteered to perform in person the perilous mission, which he executed with equal courage and address. He set out, disguised as a peasant, from Mantua, on the 29th December, at nightfall, in the midst of a deep fall of snow, cluded the vigilance of the French patrols, and, after surmounting a thousand hardships and dangers, arrived at the head-quarters of Alvinzi, at Bassano, on the 4th January, the day after the conferences at Vicenza were broken up. Great destinies awaited this enterprising officer (1). He was Colonel Graham, afterwards victor at Barrosa, and the first British general who planted the English standard on the soil of France.

The Austrian plan of attack on this occasion was materially different to referre to referent from what it had formerly been. Adhering still to their falieve vanitum vourite system of dividing their forces, and being masters of the course of the Brenta from Bassano to Roveredo, they transferred the bulk of their troops to the Upper Adige, where Alvinzi himself took the command of thirty-five thousand men. A subordinate force of lifteen thousand was destined to advance by the plain of Padua to Mantua, with a view to raise the siege, extricate Wurmser, and push on to the Ecclesiastical States, where the Pope had recently been making great preparations, and from whose levies it was hoped the numerous staff and dismounted dragoons of the veteran marshal would form an efficient force. This project had every appearance of success; but, unfortunately, it became known to the French general, from the despatches which announced it to Wurmser falling into his hands, as the messenger who bore them was on the point of clearing the last lines of the blockade of Mantua (2).

On the 12th January, 1797, the advanced guard of Alvinzi attacked the Republican posts on the Montebaldo, and forced them back to the plateau of Rivoli; while, on the same day, the troops in the plain pushed forward, drove in all the French videttes towards Porto Legnago, and maintained a desultory fire along the whole line of the lower Adige. For some time Napoléon was uncertain on which side the principal attack would be made, but soon the alarming accounts of the great display of force on the upper part of the river, and the secret intelligence which he received from treachery at the Austrian headquarters, left no doubt that the enemy's principal forces were accumulated near Rivoli; and accordingly he set out with the whole centre of his army to support Joubert, who was there struggl-14th Jun 1797, ing with immensely superior forces. He arrived at two in the morning on the plateau of Rivoli; the weather was clear and beautiful; an unclouded moon silvered the fir-clad precipices of the mountains; but the horizon to the northward was illuminated by the fires of innumerable bivouacs, and from the neighbouring heights his experienced eye could discover the lights of nearly forty thousand men. This great force was divided into five columns, which filled the whole space between the Adige and the lake of Guarda: the principal one, under Quasdanowich, composed of all the artillery, cavalry, and a strong body of grenadiers, followed the high-road on the right, and was destined to ascend the plateau by the zigzag and steep ascent which led to its summit Three other corps of infantry received orders to climb the amphitheatre of mountains which surrounded it in front, and, alon the action was engaged on the high-road, descend upon the French as directed to wind round the base of rear, and cut off their retreat to Ve-rong The plan was any concerned, and had nearly succeeded (1) with a general of inferior ability to Napolcon, and troops of less resolution than his army, it unquestionably would have done so

To oppose this great force, Napoleon had only thirty thousand men, but he had the advantage of being in position on a plain, clevated among the mountains, while his adversaries must necessarily be fatigued in endeavouring to reach it, and he had sixty pieces of cannon, and a numerous body of cavalry, in excellent condition He immediately perceived that it was necessary, at all hazards, to keep his groung on the plateau, and, by so doing, he hoped to prevent the junction of the enemy's masses, and overthrow them senarately Before daybreak he moved forward the tirailleurs of Joubert to drive back the advanced posts of the Imperialists, who had already ascended to the plateau, and, by the light of the moon, arranged his whole force with admirable precision on its summit (2)

The action began at nine o'clock, by the Austrian columns, which descended from the semicircular heights of the Montebaldo, attacking the French left After a desperate resistance, the regiments stationed there were broken, and fled in disorder, upon which Napoleon galloped to the village of Rivoli, where the division of Massena, which had marched all

, had forced down upon the Imperial grenadiers appeared at the top of the zigzag windings of the high-road, having, by incredible efforts of valour, forced that perilous ascent, and to debouche upon the level surface at its on of Lusignan, which had wound unper-' - their rear, army cer-

chiffs, and clapped their hands, as they successively took up their ground tain, gate to a c The Republicans, attacked in front, flank, and rear at the same time, saw their retreat cut off, and no resource from the bayonets of the Austrians but os of the Alus (5)

ace of mind of Napoleon did not forsake mal o in consequence of the allivar of a co

- were to be spension, at istrians was

suspended at the very moment when the so diers, claiming-" We have them, we have them " Junot repaired to the Austrian headquarters, from whence, after a conference of an hour, he returned, as might have been expected, without having come to any accommodation; but meanwhile the critical period had passed; Napoléon had gained time to face the danger, and made the movements requisite to repel these numerous attacks. Joubert, with the light infantry, was ordered to face about on the extreme right to oppose Quasdanowich, while Leelerc and Lasalle, with the light cavalry and flying artillery, flew to the menaced point; and a regiment of infantry was directed to the heights of Tiffaro, to make head against the corps of Lusignan. Far from being disconcerted by the appearance of the troops in his rear, he exclaimed, pointing to them, "These are already our prisoners;" and the confident tone in which he spoke soon communicated itself to the soldiers, who repeated the cheering expression. The head of Quasdanowich's division, which had so bravely won the ascent, received in front by a terrible fire of grape-shot, charged on one flank by Lasalle's horse, and exposed on the other to a close discharge of musketry from Joubert, broke and staggered backwards down the steep. The fugitives, rushing headlong through the column which was toiling up, soon threw the whole into inextricable confusion; horse, foot, and cannon struggled together, under a plunging fire from the French batteries, which blew up some ammunition-waggons, and produced a scene of frightful disorder. No sooner was the plateau delivered from this flank attack, than Napoléon accumulated his forces on the troops which had descended from the semicircle of the Montebaldo, and that gallant band, destitute of artillery, and deprived now of the expected aid from the corps in flank, soon gave way, and fled in confusion to the mountains, where great numbers were made prisoners (1).

During these decisive successes, the division of Lusignan had gained ground on the troops opposed to it, and came to the heights in rear of the army, in time to witness the destruction of the three divisions in the mountains. From that moment they foresaw their own fate. The victorious troops were speedily directed against this brave division, now insulated from all support, and depressed by the ruin which it had witnessed in the other parts of the army.

Decisive Victory of Napoléon.

For some time they stood firm; but the fire of fifteen pieces of heavy artillery, to which they had nothing to oppose, at length compelled them to retreat; and, before they had receded far, they met the division of Rey, the reserve of Masséna, which was approaching. Such was the consternation produced by this unexpected apparition, that the whole division laid down its arms; while Quasdanowich, now left to his own resources, retired up the valley of the Adige, and the broken remains of the centre divisions sought refuge behind the rocky stream of the Tasso (2).

He hastens to the Lower Adige. Not content with these splendid triumphs, Napoléon, on the very Adige. night in which they were gained, flew to the assistance of the troops on the Lower Adige, with part of the division of Masséna, which had marched all the preceding night, and fought on the following day. It was full time that he should do so, for on the very day on which the battle of Rivoli was fought, Provera had forced the passage of the Adige at Anghiari, and marched between Augereau and the blockading force by Sanguenetto to the neighbourhood of Mantua, of which he threatened to raise the siege on the following morning. Augereau, it is true, had collected his forces, attacked the rearguard of the Austrians during their march, and taken fifteen hundred prisoners and fourteen pieces of cannon; but still the danger was imminent that the main body of Provera's forces would gain the fort of Strāth Jen George and put the blockading force between two fires Fully aware of the 1 41 •• LI " e following day, lves, at sunrise on the 18th, at the gate of St -George, and being dressed in white cloaks. were nearly mistaken for a regiment of French, and admitted within the walls. But the error having been discovered by an old sergeant who was cutting wood near the gate, the drawbridge was suddenly drawn up, and the alarm communicated to the garrison Hohenzollern advanced at the gallon. but before he could get in, the gates were closed, and a discharge of graneshot repulsed the assailants. All that day, the garrison under Miollis combated on the ramparts, and gave time for the succours from Rivoli to arrive Provera sent a bark across the lake to warn Wurmser of his approach Opr a ons and concert a general attack, on the next day, upon the blockadte forced to ing force, and in pursuance of the summons, the brave veteran presented himself at the trenches on the following morning with a large part of the garrison But the arrival of Aapolcon not only frustrated all these preparations, but proved fatal to Provera's division. During the night he pushed forward four regiments, which he had brought with him, between the fort of Favorite and St -George, so as to prevent Wurmser from effecting a junction with the Austrians, who approached to raise the siege, and strengthened Serrurier at the former point, in order to enable him to repel any attack from the garrison. At day-break, the battle commenced at all points Wurmser, after an obstinate conflict, was thrown back into the fortress, while Provera, surrounded by superior forces, and tracked in all his doublings, like a furious stag by ruthless hunters (2), was compelled to lay down his arms, with six thousand men In this engagement the 57th regiment acguired the surname of the Terrible, from the fury with which it threw itself on the Austrian line. It was commanded by Victor, afterwards Duke of Bellupo

⁽¹⁾ Jom. viii. 282, 283. Th. viii, 518. Nap. iii. (2) Th. 518, 519. Jom. viii. 283, 284. Nap. iii.

Thus in three days, by his admirable dispositions, and the extra-Result of ordinary activity of his troops, did Napoleon not only defeat two Austrian armies of much greater force, taken together, than his own, but took from them eighteen thousand prisoners, twenty-four standards, and sixty pieces of cannon. Such was the loss of the enemy besides, in killed and wounded, that the Austrians were totally disabled from keening the field, and the French left in undisputed possession of the whole peninsula. History has few examples to exhibit of successes so decisive, achieved by forces 50 inconsiderable (5)

This was the last effort of which Austria was capable, and the immediate consequence of its defeat, the complete subjugation of the peninsula. The remains of Alvinzi's corps retired in opposite directions; one part towards Trent, and another towards Bassano. Napoléon, whose genius never appeared so strongly as in pursuing the remains of a beaten army, followed them up without intermission. Loudon, who had taken post at Roveredo with eight thousand men, in order to defend as long as possible the valley of the Upper Adige, was driven by Joubert successively from that town and Trent, with the loss of five hundred prisoners, while Masséna, by a rapid march over the mountains, made himself master of Primolano, descended into the gorges of the Val Sugana, turned the position of Bassano, and drove the Austrians, with the loss of a thousand prisoners, through Treviso to the opposite bank of the Tagliamento; where Alvinzi at length, by the valley of the Drave, reunited the remnant of his scattered forces (1).

⁽³⁾ Jon viii 230 Th v ii 520 (2) Th viii 521 Nap iii 421 Jon vii 230 233 m sfortunes. General Bonaparte himself says in h s

⁽³⁾ Jom vi i 294 Nap iii 422 in their report on these d sa ters the Aut o Council generiusly threw no blane on Nivinzi but

Notwithstanding these disasters, the public spirit of the Austrian monarchy remained unsubdued, and the cabinet of Vienna continued unshaken in its resolution to prosecute the war with vigour. On the other hand, the Directory were so much impressed with the imminent risk which the Italian army had run, both at Arcola and Rivoli, and the evident peril to the Republic, from the rising fame and domineering character of Napoléon, that they were very desirous of peace, and authorized Clarke to sign it, on condition that Belgium and the frontier of the Rhine were given to France, an indemnity secured to the Stadtholder in Germany, and all its possessions restored to Austria in Italy. But Napoléon again resolutely opposed these instructions, and would not permit Clarke to open the proposed negotiations. "Before Mantua falls," said he, "every negotiation is premature, and Mantua will be in our hands in lifteen days. These conditions will never meet with my approbation. The Republic is entitled, besides the frontier of the Rhine, to insist for the establishment of a state in Italy, which may secure the French influence there, and retain in its subjection Genoa, Sardinia and the Pope. Without that, Venice, enlightened at last as to its real dangers, will unite with the Emperor, and restrain the growth of democratic principles in its Italian possessions." The influence of Napoléon again prevailed; the proposed negotiation never was opened, and Clarke remained at Milan, occupied with his subordinate duty of investigating the rapacity of the commissaries of the army (2).

Surrender of Mantua did not long hold out after the destruction of the last army destined for its relief. The half of its once numerous garrison was in the hospital; they had consumed all their horses, and the troops, placed for months on half rations, had nearly exhausted all their provisions. In this extremity Wurmser proposed to Serrurier to capitulate: the French commander stated that he could give no definitive answer till the arrival of the general-in-chief. Napoléon in consequence hastened to Roverbella, where he found Klenau, the Austrian aide-de-camp, expatiating on the powerful means of resistance which Wurmser enjoyed, and the great stores of provisions which still remained in the magazines. Wrapped in his cloak near the fire, he overheard the conversation without taking any part in it, or making himself known; when it was concluded, he approached the table, took up the pen, and wrote on the margin his answer to all the propositions of Wurmser, and when it was finished said to Klenau, "If Wurmser had only provisions for eighteen or twenty days, and he spoke of surrendering, he would have merited no favourable terms; but I respect the age, the valour, and the musfortunes of the marshal, here are the condutions which I offer him, if he surrender to-morrow, should he delay a fortught, a month, or two months, he shall have the same conditions, he may wait till he has consumed his last morsel of bread. I am now about to cross the Po to march upon Rome return and communicate my intentions to your general. The aidedecamp, who now perceived that he was in presence of Napoléon, was penetrated with gratitude for the generously of the conqueror, and finding that it was useless longer to dissemble; confessed that they had only provisions left for three days. The terms of capitulation were immediately agreed on, Aapoleon set out himself to Florence to conduct the expedition against it is not to much grandedur of mind to insult the domech grandedur of mind to insult the presence on the occasion, his delicacy was observed by all Europe, and, like the statues of Brutus and Cassius at the funeral of Junia, was the more present to the mind because he was withdrawn from the sight (1)

By this capitulation, Wurmser was allowed to retire to Austria with all his staff and five hundred men, the remainder of the garrison, which, including the sick, was still eighteen thousand strong, surrendered their arms, and was conveyed to Trieste to be exchanged Fifty standards, a bridge equipage, and above five hundred pieces of artillery, comprising all those captured at the raising of the first siege, fell into the hands of the conqueror (2)

Napoléon I Tomber A Napoléon d'anted I e arme tourité Rome

feeble for

refused to ratify the treaty of Bologna, and had openly engaged in hostile measures at the conclusion of the campaign, in conjunction with the forces of Austria The French troops, in consequence, crossed the Apennines, and

It to, be frustrated The papil troops were routed on the banks of sense inke the other Italian armies, they field on the first onset, and Junot, after two hours' hard riding, found it impossible to make up with their cavalry. Ancona was speedily taken, with twelve hundred men, and one hundred and twenty pieces of canon, while a small column on the other side of the Apreniumes pushed as far as Foligno, and threatened Rome itself Nothing remained to the Vatican but submission, and peace was concluded at Tolerant on the 19th February, on terms the most humilating to the Takons we have been supported to close his ports agrunt the Alles, Planes and the to cede Nigmon and the Venasin to I rance, to abandon Bologna,

Person Ferrara, and the whole of Romagna to its allies in the Milanese; to admit a garrison of French troops into Ancona, till the conclusion of a general peace, and to pay a contribution of thirty millions of frances to the victorious Republic. Desides this, he was obliged to surrender a hundred of his principal works of art to the French commissioners. the trophies of ancient and modern genus were seized on with intercless rapacity; and in a short time the noblest specimens of the fine arts which existed in the world, the Apollo Belvidere, the Laocoon, the Transfiguration of Raphael, the Madonna del Foligno and the St.-Jérôme of Dominichino, were placed on the banks of the Seine (1).

Such was the campaign of 1796—glorious to the French arms, of the cam-paign. memorable in the history of the world. Certainly on no former occasion had successes so great been achieved in so short a time, or powers so vast been vanquished by forces so inconsiderable. From maintaining a painful contest on the mountain ridges of their own frontier, from defending the Var and the Maritime Alps, the Republicans found themselves transported to the Tyrol and the Tagliamento, threatening the hereditary states of Austria, and subduing the whole southern powers of Italy. An army which never mustered fifty thousand men in the field, though maintained by successive reinforcements nearly at that amount, had not only broken through the barrier of the Alps, subdued Piedmont, conquered Lombardy, humbled the whole Italian states, but defeated, and almost destroyed, four powerful armies which Austria raised to defend her possessions, and wrenched the keys of Mantua from her grasp, under the eyes of the greatest array of armed men she had ever sent into the field. Successes so immense, gained against forces so vast, and efforts so indefatigable, may almost be pronounced unparalleled in the annals of war (2).

But although its victories in the field had been so brilliant, the internal situation of the Republic was in the highest degree discouraging; and it was more than doubtful whether it would continue for any length of time even so glorious a contest. Its condition is clearly depicted in a secret report, presented, by order of the Directory, on 20th December, 4796, by General Clarke to Napoléon:-" The lassitude of war is experienced in all parts of the Republic. The people ardently desire peace; their murmurs are loud that it is not already concluded. The legislature desires it, commands it, no matter at what price; and its continued refusal to furnish to the Directory the necessary funds to carry on the contest, is the best proof of that fact. The finances are ruined; agriculture in vain demands the arms which are required for cultivation. The war is become so universal, as to threaten to overturn the Republic; all parties, worn out with anxiety, desire the termination of the Revolution. Should our internal misery continue, the people, exhausted by suffering, having found none of the benefits which

This treaty was concluded by the French under the idea that it would eventually prove fatal to the Holy See. Napoléon proposed to overturn at once the papal government :--" Can we not," said he, "unite Modena Ferrara, and Romagna, and so form a powerful Republic? May we not give Rome to the King of Spain, on condition that he recognises the new Republic? I will give peace to the Pope on condition that he gives us 3,000.000 of the treasure at Loretto, and pays the 15,000,000 which remain for the armistice. Rome cannot long exist deprived of its richest possessions; a revolution will speedily break out there." [Corres. Secrète de Nap. ii. 543. Hard. iv. 181]—On their side, the Directory wrote as follows to Napoléon: "Your habits of reflection, general must have trackly true that the Repres Corporal must have trackly true the Representation. as follows to Kapoleon: " Tour names of reflection, general, must have taught you, that the Roman Catholic religion is the irreconcilable enemy of the Republic. The Directory, therefore, invite you to do every thing in your power to destroy the papal government, without in any degree compromising they expected, will establish a new order of things, which will in its turn generate fresh revolutions, and we shall undergo, for twenty or thirty years, all the agonnes consequent on such convulsions (1)

⁽¹⁾ Jom. viii. 312, 313. Nap. iii. 425. O'Meara, the fate of your army,—either by subjecting Rome ii. 127. to another power, or, what would be better still, by establishing in its interior such a government as may render the rule of the priests odious and contemptible, secure the grand object, that the Pope and the car-dinals shall lose all hope of remaining at Rome, and may be compelled to seel, an asylum in some foreign state, where they may be entirely stripped of temporal power."—Corres. Conf. de Napoléon, ii. 349. Hand. iv. 181. 182.

⁽²⁾ In his Confidential Despatch to the Directory (2) in his Confidential Despatch to the Directory of 28th December, 1796, Napoléon states the force with which he commenced the campaign at thirty-eight thousand five hundred men, the subsequent reinforcements at twelve thousand six hundred, and the losses by death and incurable wounds at seven thousand. There can be no doubt that he enormously dimitished his losses and reinforcements: for the diminished his losses and reinforcements; for the Directory maintained he had received reinforcements to the amount of fifty-seven thousand men-Corres. Conf. ii. 312.

Much of Napoléon's success was no doubt owing to the admirable on of character, unwearied energy, and indomitable courage of the troops which composed the French army. The world had never seen an array framed of such materials. The terrible whirlwind which had overthrown the fabric of society in France, the patriotic spirit which had brought its whole population into the field, the grinding misery which had forced all its activity into war, had formed a union of intelligence, skill, and ability, among the private soldiers, such as had never before been witnessed in modern warfare. The middling-even the higher ranks-were to be seen with a musket on their shoulders, the great levies of 1795 had spared neither high nor low, the career of glory and ambition could be entered only through the humble portals of the bivouac. Hence it was that the spirit which animated them was so fervent, and their intelligence so remarkable, that the humblest grenadiers anticipated all the designs of their commanders, and knew of themselves, in every situation of danger and difficulty, what should be done. When Napolcon spoke to them, in his proclamations, of B utus, Scipio, and Tarquin, he was addressing men whose hearts thrilled at the recollections which these names awaken, and when he led them into action after a night-march of ten leagues, he commanded those who felt as thoroughly as himself the mestimable importance of time in war. With truth might Napoleon say that his soldiers had surpassed the far famed celerity of Casar's legions (2)

Cortical Dut much as was owing to the troops who obeyed, still more was foundation. But much as was owing to the troops who obeyed, still more was forward to the general who commanded in this memorable campaign. In this struggle is to be seen the commencement of the new system of tacties which Aapoléon brought to such perfection, that of accumulating forces in a central situation, striking with the whole mass the Montenotte he broke into the centre of the Austro-Sardman army, when it was executing a difficult movement through the mountains, separated the Predmontese from the Imperialists, accumulated an overwhelming force against the latter at Dego, and routed the former when detached from their allies at Mondoy. When Wurmser approached Verona, with his army divided into parts separated from each other by a lake, Napolton was on the brink of ruin; but he retrieved his affairs by sacrificing the siege of Mantun, and failing with superior numbers, first on Quis-danowich at Ionato, and then on Wurmser at Castiglione. When the second irruption of the Germans took place, and Wurmser still continued the system of dividing his troops, it was by a skilful use of his central position that Napoléon defeated these efforts, first assailing with a superior force the sub-idiary hody at Boyeredo, and then pursuing with the rapidity of lightning the main body of the invaders through the gorges of the i restored the balance; checking, in the first instance, the advance of Davidowich on the plateau of Rivoli, and next engaging in a mortal strife with Alvinzi in the marshes of Arcola. When Austria made her final effort, and Alvinzi surrounded Joubert at Rivoli, it was only by the most rapid movements, and almost incredible activity, that the double attack was defeated; the same troops crushing the main body of the Austrians on the steeps of the Montebaldo, who afterwards surrounded Provera on the lake of Mantua. The same system was afterwards pursued with the greatest success by Wellington in Portugal, and Napoléon himself at Dresden, and in the plains of Champagne.

Vaubois was routed in the . perate, but the central .

But it will But towards the success of such a system of operations it is indisnot succeed pensable that the troops who undertake it should be superior in against bodily activity and moral courage to their adversaries, and that equalty the general-in-chief can securely leave a slender force to cope with the enemy in one quarter, while he is accumulating his masses to overwhelm them in another. Unless this is the case, the commander who throws himself at the fiead of an inconsiderable body into the midst of the enemy, will be certain of meeting instead of inflicting disaster. Without such a degree of courage and activity as enables him to calculate with certainty upon hours, and sometimes minutes, it is impossible to expect success from such a hazardous system. Of this a signal proof occurred in Bohemia in 1815, when the French, encouraged by their great triumph before Dresden, threw themselves inconsiderately into the midst of the Allies in the mountains of Toplitz; but, meeting there with the undaunted Russian and Prussian forces, they experienced the most dreadful reverses, and in a few days lost the whole fruit of a mighty victory.

The disasters of the Austrians were mainly owing to the injudicious the dis-asters of the system which they so perseveringly adopted, of dividing their force Austrians. into separate bodies, and commencing an attack at the same time at stations so far distant that the attacking columns could render little assistance to each other. This system may succeed very well against ordinary troops, or timorous generals, who, the moment they hear of their flank being turned, or their communications menaced, lay down their arms, or fall back; but against intrepid soldiers, and a resolute commander, who turn fiercely on every side, and bring a preponderating mass first against one assailant, and then another, it is almost sure of leading to disasters. The Aulic Council were not to blame for adopting this system, in the first-instance, against the French armies, because it might have been expected to succeed against ordinary troops, and had done so in many previous instances; but they were inexcusable for continuing it so long, after the character of the opponents with whom they had to deal had so fully displayed itself. The system of concentric attacks rarely succeeds against an able and determined enemy, because the chances which the force in the centre has of heating first one column and then another, are so considerable. When it does, it is only when the different masses of the attacking party, as at Leipsic and Dresden, are so immense, that each can stand a separate encounter for itself, or can fall back, in the event of being outnumbered, without seriously endangering, by such a retreat, the safety of the other assailing columns.

The Italian campaign demonstrates, in the most signal manner, the vast importance of fortresses in war, and the vital consequence of such a barrier to arrest the course of military conquest. The surrender of the fortresses of Coni, Alexandria, and Tortona, by giving the French a secure base for their operations, speedily made them masters of the whole of Lombardy, while the single fortres of Mantua arrested their victorious arms for six months, and gave time to Austria to collect no less than four powerful armies for its deliverance. No man understood this better than Aapoleon, and accordingly, without troubling himself with the projects so carriestly pressed upon him of revolutionizing Predmont, he grasped the fortresses and thereby laid the foundation for all his subsequent conquests, without the surrender of the Predmontese citadels, he would not have been able to push his advantages in Italy beyond the Po, but for the bastions of Mantua, he might have carried them, as in the succeeding campaign, to the Danube

It is melancholy to reflect on the degraded state of the Italian powers during this terrible struggle An invasion, which brought on all her people un-

men who were to be the reward of the strife. The country of Casar and Scipio, of Cato and Brutus, beheld in silent dismay the protracted contest of two provinces of its aneuent empire, and prepared to bow the neck in abject submission to either of its former vassals which might prove victorious in the strife. A division of the French army was sufficient to disperse the levies of the Roman people. Such is the consequence of political divisions and long-continued prosperity, even in the richest and most favoured countries, and of that fatal policy which withers the spirits of men, by habitualing them to degrading occupations, and renders them incapable of asserting their national independence, by destroying the warlike spirit by which alone it can be permanently secured.

Finally, this campaign evinced, in the most signal manner, the able tense to per-evering character and patriotic spirit of the Austrian people, Austrant and the prodigious efforts of which its monarchy is capable, when roused by real danger to vigorous exertion. It is impossible to contemplate, without admiration, the vast armies which they successively sent into the field, and the unconquerable courage with which they returned to a contest where so many thousands of their countrymen had perished before them. Had they been guided by greater, or opposed by less ability, they unquestionably would have been successful, and even against the soldiers of the Italian army, and the genius of Aapoleon, the scales of fortune repeatedly hung equal. A nation, capable of such sacrifices, can hardly ever be permanently subdued, a government, actuated by such steady principles, must ultimately be triumphant. Such, accordingly, has been the case in the present instance aristocratic firminess in the end asserted its wonted superiority over democratic vigour, the dreams of Republican equality have been forgotten, * I --- and anged, the French eagles have much blood-hed, has finally

CHAPTER XXI.

CAMPAIGN OF 1796 IN GERMANY.

ARGUMENT.

Great Difficulties of the French Government at the commencement of this year-Put her Foreign Relations had signally improved Triple Alliance of Austria, Russia, and England -Painful division of Opinion in England on the War-Violence of the parties in the close of 1795-Attack on the King when going to Parliament-Arguments of the Opposition on the War Answer of the Government-Real objects in view by the different Parties-Supplies voted by Parliament-Bills against Public Meetings-Arguments against and for them-They pass into Laws-Reflections on these Statutes-Proposals for Peace by the British government, which are rejected by the Directory-Operations of Hoche in la Vendée-Previous Successes of Charette and Stofflet during the Winter-Death of Stofflet-Heroic conduct of Charette-But he is at length taken and Shot His Death and Character-Fine Observations of Napoléon upon him-Termination of the war in la Vendée-Preparations of the Austrians-Archduke Charles put at the head of the Army in Germany-Forces of the contending Parties on the Rhine-Designs of the Aulic Council - Plan of the Republicans -They cross the Lower-Rhine, and gain some Success-But are driven back across that River by the Archduke-Operations of Moreau on the Upper-Rhine-Ilis Origin and Character-Organization of his Army-Passage of the Rhine by Moreau-Admirable skill shown in that Operation Cautious Movements of Moreau-He advances towards the Black Forest -The Archduke hastens to the scene of Danger-Indecisive Action on the Rhine-The French gain Success on the Imperial Right - The Archduke resolves to Retreat into Bavaria -Operations on the Lower-Rhine-Erroneous Plan of the Campaign by the Directory-Admirable Plan of the Archduke to counteract it - He retires through the Black Forest-Indecisive Action at Neresheim-Operations of Jourdan-He advances into Franconia-The Archduke joins Wartensleben, and falls with their united Force on Jourdan-Who is defeated at Amberg-He is again routed near Wurtzburg-Great effects of this Victory-Continued and disastrous Retreat of Jourdan-Archduke again defeats him, and drives him across the Rhine-Severe struggle of Latour with Moreau on the Danube-Archduke threatens Moreau's retreat at Kehl-Moreau resolves to retreat, which he does in the most firm and methodical manner—Defeats Latour at Biberach - And retires leisurely through the Black Forest-Battle of Emmindingen, between Moreau and the Archduke-Retreat of Moreau-Austrians refuse an Armistice on the Rhine-Long and bloody siege of Kehl-Fall of the Tête-de-pont at Hungingen-Reflections on this Campaign-Prodigious Contributions levied by the Republicans in Germany-Disgust consequently excited there-Noble and patriotic spirit of the Austrian people-New Convention between France and Prussia-Deplorable State of the French Marine-Successes of the English in the East and West Indies Capture of Ceylon-General joy which these Conquests diffuse in England Continued Deplorable State of St.-Domingo-Treaty of Alliance between France and Spain-Overtures for a General Peace made by Great-Britain which prove unsuccessful-alarming St te of Ireland-Designs of the Directory, and Hoche, against that Country-The Expedition sets Sail-It is dispersed by Tempests-And regains Brest-Reflections on the Failure of this Expedition-Death of the Empress Catharine-Her Character-Retirement of Washington from Public Life-His perfect Character, and admirable Valedictory Address to his Countrymen.

Great difficulties of the When the Directory were called, by the suppression of the insurevenuent at the cointies of the Sections, and the establishment of the new constituties cointies ton, to the helm of the state, they found the Republic in a very mencement of this year. critical situation, and its affairs externally and internally involved in almost insurmountable difficulties. The finances were in a state of increasing and inextricable confusion; the assignats, which had for long constituted the sole resource of government, had fallen almost to nothing; ten thousand francs in paper were hardly worth twenty francs in specie, and the

On the other hand, it was argued by the Administration, that it was necessary to consider the bill attentively before representing it in such odious colours, that it imposed restrictions only on public assembles, and left untertied the press, the great palladium of liberty in every representative monarchy; that public meetings required to be narrowly watched in turbulent times, because it was in such great assemblages that the passions tool, fire, and men were precipitated, by mutual applause, into violent taps.

levelled, was notorious, being nothing less than the occurred of monarchy, and the formation of a republican constitution similar to that exhibited with such disastrous effects in France; that the proposed enact-ordinary remedies; and that no danger was to be approximated by infreedom, as long as the press was unfettered, and juries regarded with so much jealousy, as they now did, all the measures which emanated from the latter of government. The bill passed the House of Commons by an amounty of two hundred and fourteen to forty-two, and the duration to three years, and, after passing both houses, received the royal assent (2).

House of Lords by sixty-six to seven (1)

On coolly reviewing the subject of such vehement contention in the Parliament and the nation, it is impossible to deny that it is beet with difficulties; and that nothing but the manifest danger of the times could have furnished an excuse for so wide a deviation from the principles of British freedom. At the same time, it is manifest that the bills, limited as they were in their duration, and partial in their operation, were not calculated to produce the mischiefs which their opponent so confidently predicted. The proof of this is decisive—the bills were passed, and the liberties of England not only remained entire, but have since that time continually gone on increasing In truth, the immagement of a country which has become infected with the contagion of democratic ambition, is one of the most difficult matters in povernment and of which the principles are only now beginning to be but the passion springing from popular automation and medical founded in reason and justice, is easily dealt with: it subsides

of power, is insatiable; it melcanes win tree, at

conducts the nation, through blood and suffering, by a sure and rapid process. to military despotism. The same danger to freedom is to be apprehended from the prevention of the expression of real suffering, as from the concession of fuel to democratic ambition. Reform and redress are the remedies suited to the former; resistance and firmness the regimen adapted to the latter. In considering, therefore, whether the measures of Mr. Pitt at that period were justifiable or not, the question is, did the public discontents arise from the experience of real evils, or the contagion of democratic ambition? and when it is recollected from what example, in the neighbouring kingdom, these passions were excited, how much the liberties of England have subsequently augmented, and what a career of splendour and prosperity has since been opened, it is evident that no rational doubt can be entertained on the subject. And the event has proved, that more danger to freedom is to be apprehended from concession than resistance in such circumstances; for British liberty has since that time steadily increased, under all the coercion applied by a firm government to its excesses; while French enthusiasm has led to no practical protection of the people; and the nation has perpetually laboured under a succession of despots, in the vain endeavour to establish a chimerical equality.

8th March, 1796. Proposals Previous to the opening of the campaign of 1796, the British go-Proposals vernment, in order to bring the French Directory to the test, for peace by authorized their agent in Switzerland, Mr. Wickham, to make adovernment vances to their minister on the subject of a general peace. The rejected by the Directory replied, that they could only treat on the footing of the constitution; in other words, that they must insist on retaining the Low-Countries. This at once brought matters to an issue, for neither Austria nor England was as yet sufficiently humbled to consent to such terms. The declaration of this resolution, however, on the part of the Directory, was of great service to the English cabinet, by demonstrating the impossibility of treating without abandoning all the objects of the war, and putting France permanently in possession of a salient angle, from which it threatened the liberties of all Europe, and which experience has proved cannot be left in its hands, without exposing them to imminent hazard. Mr. Pitt accordingly April 19, 1796, announced the resolution of the Directory to the British Parliament. and immediately obtained further supplies for carrying on the war, -an additional loan of L.7,500,000 was negotiated, upon as favourable terms as the former, and echequer bills, to the amount of L.6,000,000 more, put at the disposal of government, out of which L.5,000,000 was granted to Austria (1).

Operations of Hoche in la Vendée, where the Republican general, Hoche, commanded an army of 100,000 men. This vast force, the greatest which the Republic had on foot, composed of all the troops in the west of France, and those drawn from Biscay and the western Pyrenees, was intrusted to a general of twenty-seven years of age, whose absolute power extended over all the insurgent provinces. He was every way qualified for the important but difficult duty with which he was charged. Endowed by nature with a clear judgment, an intrepid character, and an unconquerable resolution; firm, sagacious, and humane, he was eminently fitted for that mixture of gentleness and resolution which is necessary to heal the wounds and subdue the passions of civil war. This rare combination of civil and military qualities might have ren-

had he lived, to have followed the example or " ... stops of Casar or Cromwell (1)

Hoche's plan, which was approved of by the Directors, was to reduce la and all the provinces to the south of the Loire, before making any

> Repubostilities asantry,

were continued, and to levy the necessary requisitions are or of the Republicans were to be

Pardon was proclaimed ule those who continued

the contest were ordered to be shot (-) occurs of During the absence of Hoche at Paris, in the depth of winter, -rong no the nion with the Directory, the Royalist chiefs, stofflet, gained considerable successes.

provinces had made little progress;

in the rear of the Republica

tored vigour and unanimity to their operations. Charette was closely pur-1 mes under the command of General Travot; while Stofwith the other Royalists, was driven back a last resource, Charette collected all his forces, and attacked his antagonist at the passage of La Vie The Royalists. seized with a sudden panic, did not combat with their accustomed vigour; their ranks were speedily broken, their artillery, ammunition, and sacred standard, all fell into the hands of the enemy; Charette himself defeated with difficulty made his escape, with forty or fifty followers, and, wandering through forests and marshes, owed his safety to the incorruptible fidelity of the peasants of the Marais. In vain he endeavoured to elude his pursuers and join Stofflet, that intrepid chief, himself pressed by the forces of the Republic, after escaping a thousand perils, was betrayed by one of his followers at the farm of Pegrimaud, where he was seized, gagged, and conducted to Angers. He there met death with the same

. 1 1 1 - 1 distinguished his life (5)

disensted with his situation, that no toling is an anthe command But Carnot, aware of his abilities, instead of accepting his resignation, confirmed him in his appointments, and, as a mark of the esteem of government, sent him two fine horses, a present not only highly acceptable, but absolutely necessary to the young general For though at the head of one hundred thousand men, and master of a quarter of France, he was reduced to such straits by the fall of the paper in which the whole pay of the army was received, that he was absolutely without horses, or equipage of any kind, and was glad to supply his immediate necessities by taking half-adozen bridles and saddles, and a few bottles of rum, from the stores left by the English in Quiberon bay (1).

Heroic conduct of Charette was now the only remaining obstacle to the entire sub-duct of Charette jugation of the country; for as long as he lived, it never could be considered as pacified. Anxious to get quit of so formidable an enemy on any terms, the Directory offered him a safe retreat into England with his family and such of his followers as he might select, and a million of francs for his own maintenance. Charette replied-"I am ready to die with arms in my hands; but not to fly and abandon my companions in misfortune. All the vessels of the Republic would not be sufficient to transport my brave soldiers in England. Far from fearing your menaces, I will myself come to seek you in your own camp." The Royalist officers, who perceived that further resistance had become hopeless, urged him to retire to Britain, and await a more favourable opportunity of renewing the contest at the head of the princes and nobility of France. "Gentlemen," said he, with a severe air, "I am not here to judge of the orders which my sovereign has given me: Iknow them; they are the same which I myself have solicited. Preserve towards them the same fidelity which I shall do; nothing shall shake me in the discharge of my duty (2)."

This indomitable chief, however, could not long withstand the length taken immense bodies which were now directed against him. His band and shot. was gradually reduced from seven hundred to fifty, and at last, ten followers. With this handful of heroes he long kept at bay the Republican forces; but at length, pursued on every side, and tracked out like a wild-beast by blood-hounds, he was seized, after a furious combat, and conducted, bleeding and mutilated, but unsubdued, to the Republican head-quarters.

General Travot, with the consideration due to illustrious misfortune, treated him with respect and kindness, but could not avert his fate. He was conducted to Angers, where he was far from experiencing from others the generous treatment of this brave Republican general. Maltreated by the brutal soldiery, conducted along, yet dripping with blood from his wounds, before the populace of the town, weakened by loss of blood, he had need of all his fortitude of mind to sustain his courage; but, even in this extremity, his firmness never deserted him. On the 27th March he was removed from the prison of Angers to that of Nantes. He entered into the latter town, preceded by a numerous escort, closely guarded by gendarmes and generals glittering in gold and plumes; himself on foot, with his clothes torn and bloody, pale and extenuated; yet more an object of interest than all the splendid throng by whom he was surrounded. Such was his exhaustion from loss of blood, that the undaunted chief fainted on leaving the Quarter of Commerce; but no sooner was his strength revived by a glass of water, than he marched on, enduring for two hours, with heroic constancy, the abuse and imprecations of the populace. He was immediately conducted to the military commission. His examination lasted two hours; but his answers were all clear, consistent, and dignified; openly avowing his Royalist principles, and resolution to maintain them to the last. Upon hearing the sentence of death, he calmly asked for the succours of religion, which were granted him, and slept peaceably the night before his execution (3).

⁽¹⁾ Th. viii. 214.

⁽³⁾ Beau. iv. 201, 202.

70

On the following morning he was brought out to the scaffold. The rolling of drums, the assembly of all the troops and national guard, a countless multitude of spectators, announced the great event which was approaching. At . . " - "p the stairs of the prire the execution was to advanced to the ani

... Il s death Thus perished Charette, the last and most indomitable of the Venand cha acdean chiefs Though the early massacres which stained the Royalist cause at Machecoult were perpetrated without his orders, yet he had not the romantic generosity, or humane turn of mind, which formed the glorious . characteristics of Lescure, Larocheraquelein, and Bonchamps. His mind, cast in a rougher mould, was steeped in deeper colours; and in the later . stages of the contest, he executed, without scruple, all the severities which the terrible war in which he was engaged called forth on both sides. If his jealousy of others was sometimes injurious to the Royal cause, his unconquerable firmness prolonged it after every other chance of success was hopeless; his single arm supported the struggle when the bravest of his followers were sinking in despair, and he has left behind him the glorious reputation of being alike invincible in resolution, inexhaustible in resources, and unsubdued in disaster (2)

The death of Charette terminated the war in the west of France, and gave more joy to the Republicans than the most brilliant victory over the Austrians. The vast army of Hoche spread over the whole country from the Lorge to the British Channel, gradually pressed upon the insurgent provinces, and drove the persantry back towards the shores of the ocean. The policy pursued by the Republican general on this occasion was a model of wisdom; he took the utmost pains to conciliate the parish priests, who had so powerful an influence over the minds of the people, and as his columns advanced, seized the cattle and grain of the persantry, leaving at their dwellings a notice that they would be restored to them when they gave up their weapons, but not till then The consequence was, that the poor people, threatened with famine, if these their only resources were withheld, were compelled universally to surrender their arms. The army, advancing slowly, completed in this way the disarming of the peasantry as they proceeded, and left nothing in their rear from which danger was to be apprehended. At length Termination they reached the ocean; and though the most resolute of the insurgent bands fought with the courage of despair when they found themselves native energy of his mind. While still a youth, he (1) Beau 201 202 Lac xiii 78,79 Jom visi 39

⁽²⁾ Th viii 217 Lac x i 79 Beau iv 203 The character of this Illustrious chief servations cannot be better g ven that stithe words of hape on the Charette, said he was a great character; the true hero of driven back to the sea-coast, yet the great work was at length accomplished, the country universally disarmed, and the soldiers put into cantonments in the conquered district. The people, weary of a contest from which no hope could now be entertained, at length every where surrendered their arms, and resumed their pacific occupations; the Republicans, cantoned in the villages, lived on terms of friendship with their former enemies, mutual exasperation subsided, the clergy communicated openly with a leader who had first treated them with sincerity and kindness, and before the end of the summer, Hoche, instead of requiring new troops, was able to send great reinforcements to the Directory for the support of the armies on the Rhine and in Italy (1).

Meanwhile, the cabinet of Vienna, encouraged by the brilliant tions of the Austrians, achievements of Clairfait at the conclusion of the last campaign, Archduke Charles put at the head of the army in German). Ing the utmost efforts to prosecute the war with effect. A new levy of twenty-five thousand men took place in the hereditary states; the regiments were universally raised to their full compliment; and every effort was made to turn to advantage the military spirit and numerous population of the newly acquired province of Galicia. Clairfait, the conqueror of the lines of Mayence, made a triumphal entry into Vienna with unprecedented splendour; but the Aulic Council rewarded his achievements by the appointment of the Archduke Charles to the command of the armies on the Rhine; a step which, however ill deserved by his gallant predecessor, was soon justified by the great military abilities of the young prince (2).

The character of this illustrious chief cannot be better given than in the words of his great antagonist. "Prince Charles," said Napoléon, "is a man whose conduct can never attract blame. His soul belongs to the heroic age, but his heart to that of gold. More than all, he is a good man; and that includes every thing when said of a prince (5)."

Forces of the forces of the contending parties on the Rhine were nearly ing parties equal; but the Imperialists had a great superiority in the number and quality of their cavalry. On the Upper Rhine, Moreau commanded 71,000 infantry and 6,500 cavalry; while Wurmser, who was opposed to him, was at the head of 62,000 foot and 22,000 horse; but, before the campaign was far advanced, 50,000 men were detached from this army to reinforce the broken troops of Beaulieu in Italy. On the Lower Rhine, the Archduke was at the head of 71,000 infantry and 21,000 cavalry; while the army of the Sambre and Meuse, under Jourdan, numbered 65,000 of the former arm, and 11,000 of the latter. The disproportion between the numerical strength on the opposite sides, therefore, was not considerable; but the superiority of the Germans in the number and quality of their cavalry gave them a great advantage in an open country, both in profiting by success and arresting disaster. But, on the other hand, the French were in possession of the fortresses of Luxemburg, Thionville, Metz, and Sarelouis, which rendered the centre of their position almost unassailable; their right was covered by Huningen, new Brisach, and the fortresses of Alsace, and their left by Maestricht, Juliers, and the iron barrier of the Netherlands; while the Austrians had no fortified point whatever to support either of sage of the Moselle, carry the war into Flanders, and rescue that flourishing province from the grasp of the Republicans, and for this purpose they had brought the greater mass of their forces to the Lower Rhine. On the Upper, they proposed to lay siege to Landau, and, having driven the Republicans over the mountains on the west of the valley of the Rhine. blockade Strasburg But for some reason which has never been divulged. they remained in a state of mactivity until the end of May, while Beaulieu with fifty thousand men was striving in vain to resist the torrent of Nanoléon's conquests in Lombardy The consequences of this delay proved fatal to the whole campaign. Hardly was the armistice denounced in the end of May, when an order arrived to Wurmser to detach twenty-five thousand of his best troops by the Tyrolese Alps into Italy: a deduction which, by necessarily reducing the Imperialists on the Upper Rhine to the defensive, rendered it hardly possible for the Archduke to push forward the other army towards the Moselle There still remained, however, one hundred and fifty thousand Imperialists on the frontiers of Germany, including above forty thousand superb cavalry, a force which, if earlier brought into action, and placed under one leader, might have changed the fate of the war. The French inferiority in horse was compensated by a superiority of twenty thousand foot soldiers. The Austrians had the im-pont at Dusseldorf, so far removed to the north as to be of little service in commencing operations.

⁽¹⁾ Th. viii. 218. Jom. viii. 41, 49. (2) Jom. viii. 51. Th. viii. 307.

The events of this struggle demonstrate in the most striking manner the great importance of early success in war, and by what a necessary chain of consequences an inconsiderable advantage at first often determines the fate of a campaign. A single victory gained by the Austrians on the Sarre or the Voselle would have compelled the Preuch armies to dissolve themselves in order to garrison the frontier towns, and the Directory, to defend its own territories, would have been obliged to arrest the career of Appellon in the Italian plains, while, by taking the initiative, and carrying the war into Germany, they were enabled to leave their fortresses defenceless, and swell, by their garrisons, the invading force, which soon proved so perilous to the Austrian monarchy (5)

the start of the Sambre and Meuse by Dusseldorf, to the right bank of the Sambre and Meuse by Dusseldorf, to the right bank of the Rhine, in order to thretten the communication of the Archduke with Germany, induce limit to recross it, and facilitate the prisage of the upper part of the stream by Vorcau. In conformity with this design, kleber, on the 50th Max, crossed the filmon at Dusseldorf, and, with twenty-five thousand men, began to press the Austrans on the Sieg, where the Archduke had only twenty thousand, the great bulk of his army, vivix thousand strong, being on the right bank, in front of Mayence. The Republicans succeeded in defeating the advanced posts of the Imperialists, crossed the Sieg. turned the position of Ukerath, and drove them back to Altenkirchen. There the Austrians stood firm, and a severe action took place. General Nev, with a body of light troops, turned their left, and threatened their communications; while Kleber, having advanced through the hills of Weversbusch, assailed their front; and Soult menaced their reserve at Kropach. The result of these movements was, that the Austrians were driven behind the Lahn at Limburg, with the loss of fifteen hundred prisoners, and twelve pieces of cannon (1).

June 4. They cross the Lover Rhine and . gain some Success.

This victory produced the desired effect, by drawing the Archduke, with the greater part of his forces, across the Rhine, to succour the menaced points. On the 10th, he passed that river with thirty-two battalions and eighty squadrons, arrived in the neighbourhood of Limburg four days after, and moved, with forty-five thousand infantry and eighteen thousand cavalry, against the Republicans on the German side, Jourdan, upon this, leaving Marceau with twenty thousand men near Mayence, crossed the Rhine driven back across the Rhine by the Archduke.

at Neuwied, with the bulk of his forces, to support Kleber. His intention was to cover the investment of Ehrenbreitzen, and, for this purpose, cross the Lahn and attack Wartensleben, who comz6th June. manded the advanced guard of the Imperialists; but the Archduke, resolved to take the initiative, anticipated him by a day, and commenced an attack with all his forces. The position of the Republicans was in the highest degree critical, as they were compelled to fight with the Rhine on their right flank, and between them and France, which would have exposed them to utter ruin in case of a serious reverse. The Archduke judiciously brought the mass of his forces against the French left, and, having overwhelmed it, Jourdan was compelled to draw back all his troops, to avoid being driven into the river, and completely destroyed amidst its precipitous banks. He accordingly retired to Neuwied, and recrossed the Rhine, while Kleber, received orders to retire to Dusseldorf, and regain the left bank. Kray pursued him with the right wing of the Austrians, and a bloody and furious action ensued at Ukerath, which at length terminated to the disadvantage of the French; in consequence of the impetuous charges of the Imperial cavalry. Kleber indignantly continued his retreat, and regained the intrenched camp around the tete-de-pont at Dusseldorf (2). Operations Meanwhile the army on the Upper Rhine, under the command of Morean of Moreau, had commenced offensive operations. This great geneon the Upral, born in 1765, at Morlaix in Brittany, had been originally bred to the bar, but, during the public dangers of 1795, having been called to the profession of arms, he rapidly rose to the rank of general of division. His talents, his virtues, and his misfortunes, have secured him a distinguished place in the page of history. Gifted with rare sagacity, an imperturbable coolness in presence of danger, and a rapid coup d'wil in the field of battle, he was eminently qualified for military success; but his modesty, moral indecision, and retiring habits, rendered him unfit to cope in political life with the energy and ambition of Napoléon. He was, accordingly, illustrious as a general, but unfortunate as a statesman; a sincere Republican, he disdained to accept elevation at the expense of the public freedom; had considerably weakened. The French centre, thirty thousand strong, cantoned at the foot of the Vosges mountains, was placed under the orders of Desiry (2); the left wing, under Sr -Crn, had its headquarters at Deuxponts, while the right, under Moreau in person, occupied Strasburg and Humingen The Austrians, in like manner, were in three divisions; the right wing, twenty-two thousand strong, was encamped in the neighbourhood of kayserslautern, and communicated with the Archduke Charles, the centre, under the orders of Starray, amounting to twenty-three thousand infantry and nine thousand horse, was at Muschbach and Manheim, while the left wing, comprehending twenty-four thousand infantry and seven thousand cavalry, extended along the course of the Rhine from Philipsburg to Bale, Thus, notwithstanding all their misfortunes, the Imperialists still adhered to the rumous system of extending their forces; a plan of operations destined to bring about all but the ruin of the monarchy (5).

⁽¹⁾ Jom. viii. 182, and Pièces Just. No. 12. Th. (2) Arch. Ch. ii. 74, 92. Jom. viii. 185, 194. vili. 308. Ney, i. 155, 177. Arch. Ch. ii. 64, 74. Th. viii. 309. Ney, 180, 197.

Moreau resolved to pass the Rhine at Strasburg, as that powerful the Rline fortress was an excellent point of departure, while the numerous wooded islands which there interrupted the course of the river, afforded every facility for the concealment of the project. The fortress of kehl on the opposite shore, being negligently guarded, lay open to surprise, and, once secured, promised the means of a safe passage to the whole army. The Austrians on the Upper Rhine were, from the very beginning of the campaign, reduced to the defensive, in consequence of the large detachment made under Wurmser to the Tyrol, while the invasion of Germany by the army of Jourdan, spread the belief that it was in that quarter that the serious attack of the Republicans was to be made. To mislead the Imperialists still further from his real design. Moreau made a general attack on their intrenchments at Manheim, which had the effect of inducing them to withdraw the greater part of their forces to the right bank, leaving only fifteen battalions to guard the tele-de-pont on the French side. Meanwhile, Wurmser having departed at the head of twenty-eight thousand choice troops for Italy, the command of both armies devolved on the Archduke Moreau deemed this functure favourable for the execution of his design upon kehl, and accordingly, on the evening of the 25d, the gates of Strasburg were suddenly closed, all intercourse with the German shore was rigidly prohibited, and columns of troops marched in all directions towards the point of embarkation (1).

The points selected for this hazardous operation were Gambsheim and hehl. Twelve thousand men were collected at the first point, and sixteen thousand at the second, both detachments being under the orders of Desaix, while the forces of the imperialists were so scattered, that they could not

^{(1) 75} viil 307, 310 Join vi i 159 193 Arch Ch ii 19

⁽²⁾ will all the generals I ever had under me and hapa con, thesaux and KI ber possessed the greatest ta e ils e pec a ly Das a at ble er only greaters to ease e pec of p to a x as not or only loved war as it was the towns of I counce ig his tables and pleasures whereas break loved glory for attelf and despised every thing else. Denaix was wholly wrapt up to war and glory. To him riches and pleasures were valueless nor dille gire them a morrent's thought. He deep sed count it and convenerce, wropt in a cloak. In threw his nelf under a gun and sight accon ent diy as in a paire? I right and housest is all his i proceedings, he was call by the trabs the funt but at Kaber and liese a were an irreparable luss to the Frei channy assemble above seventeen thousand men in forty-eight hours in any quarter that might be menaced. At midnight, the troops defiled in different columns and profound silence towards the stations of embarkation; while false attacks, attended with much noise and constant discharges of artillery, were made at other places, to distract the attention of the enemy. At half-past one Desaix gave the signal for departure; two thousand in the pasfive hundred men embarked in silence, and rowed across the arm of the Rhine to the island of Ehslar Rhin, which was occupied by the Imperialists. They fell, without firing a shot, with so much impetuosity upon their videttes, that the Germans fled in disorder to the right bank, without thinking of cutting the bridges of boats which connected the island with the shore. Thither they were speedily followed by the Republicans, who, although unsupported by cavalry or artillery, ventured to advance into the plain, and approach the ramparts of Kehl. With heroic resolution, but the most prudent in such circumstances, the commander sent back the boats instantly to the French side, to bring over reinforcements, leaving this little band alone and unsupported, in the midst of the enemy's army. Their advanced guard was speedily assailed by the Swabian contingent, greatly superior in numbers, which were encamped in that neighbourhood; but they were repulsed by the steadiness of the French infantry, supported by two pieces of artillery, which they had captured on first landing on the shore. Before six o'clock in the morning, a new detachment of equal proves sucstrength arrived, a flying bridge was established between the cessful. island and the left bank, and the Republicans found themselves in such strength, that they advanced to the attack of the intrenchments of Kehl, which were carried at the point of the bayonet, the troops of Swabia, intrusted with the defence, flying with such precipitation, that they lost thirteen pieces of cannon and seven hundred men (1). On the following day, a bridge of boats was established between Strasburg and Kehl, and the whole army passed over in safety.

⁽³⁾ Arch Ch il 21 Jon vil. 196, 197, 51 . Cyr 1 : 33 31

⁴⁾ Th vili 310, 311 Jam. viii 199 20.

Such was the passage of the Rhine at Kehl, which at the time was celebrated as an exploit of the most glorious character. Without doubt, the secrecy, rapidity, and decision with which it was carried into effect, merit the highest eulogium. But the weakness and dispersion of the enemy's forces rendered it an enterprise of comparatively little hazard; and it was greatly inferior, both in point of difficulty and danger, to the passage of the same river in the following campaign at Dursheim, or the passages of the Danube at Wagram, and of the Berezina at Studenki by Napoléon (2).

Cautious Moreau had now the fairest opportunity of destroying the Ausof Moreau. trian army on the Upper Rhine, by a series of diverging attacks, similar to those by which Napoléon had discomfited the army of Beaulieu in Piedmont. He had effected a passage, with a superior force, into the centre of the enemy's line; and, by rapid movements, might have struck right and left as weighty blows as that great captain dealt out at Dego and Montenotte. But the French general, however consummate a commander, had not the fire or energy by which his younger rival was actuated, and trusted for success rather to skilful combinations or methodical arrangements, than those master-strokes which are attended with peril, but frequently domineer over fortune by the intensity of the passions which they awaken among mankind (5).

⁽¹⁾ Th. viii. 342. Jom. viii. 209, 211. St.-Cyr, iii. 54, 55. Th. viii. 314. Jom. viii. 33, 46. Arch. Ch. ii. 102, 110. (2) Jom. viii. 211. Th. viii. 313.

Having at length collected all his divisions on the right bank, Morio the first he reau, at the end of June, advanced to the foot of the mountains fro the of the Bluck Forest, at the head of seventy-one thousand men
This celebrated chain forms a mass of rock, hills covered with fir, separating the valley of the Rline from that of the Neckar The Swabian contingent, ten thousand strong, was already posted it Renchen, once so famous in the wars of Turenne, occupying the entrance of the defiles which lead through the mountains They were there attacked by the Republicans, and driven from their position with the loss of ten pieces of cannon, and eight hundred men (1)

Many hule, the Imperalists were collecting their scattered forces by the the utmost liste, to make head against the formidable enemy eldow, who had thus burst into the centre of their line. The Archduke Charles had no sooner received the intelligence, than he resolved to hasten in person, to arrest the advance of an army threatening to fall upon his hie of communications, and possibly get the start of him on the Danube. For this purpose he set off on the 26th, with twenty-four hattalions and thirty-nine squadrons, from the banks of the Lahn, and advanced by forced marches towards the Black. Forest, while the scattered divisions of Wurmser's army were converging towards the menaced point (2)

Moreau's plan was to descend the valley of the Rhine, with his centre and left wing, under the command of Desaix and St -Cyr, while his right, under Fering, attacked and carried the defiles of the Black Forest, and pushed to the banks of the Acckar The Austrians on the Upper Rhine and the Murg were about forty-eight thousand strong, while the Archduke was hastening with half that number to their support Previous to advancing to the northward, . Moreau detached some brigades from his centre to clear the right flank of the army, and drive the enemy from the heights of the Black Forest, which was successfully accomplished Meanwhile, the left wing continuing to descend the valley of the Danube, through a broken country intersected with woods and rayines, approached the corps of Latour, who defended the banks of the Murg with twenty-seven thousand men. He was attacked there by the centre of the Republicans, with nearly thesame force, the left under St -Cvr, not having yet arrived, and after an indecisive engagement, the Austrans retired in the best order, covered by their numerous cavalry, leaving to their antagonists no other advantage but the possession of the field of battle. Important reinforcements speedly, came up on both sides, the Archdoke arrived with twenty-four thousand men to the support of the Imperialists, while Moreau counterbalanced the acquisition, by bringing up St -Cir, with his whole left wing, to his aid. The forces on the two sides were now nearly equal, amounting on either to about fifty thousand men, and their situation was nearly the same, both being at right angles to the Rhine, and extending from that stream through a marshy and wooded plain, to the mountains of the Black Forest (5)

The Archduke, who felt the value of time, and was apprehensive a summer of being speedly recalled to the defence of the Lower libine, repeated to solved to commence the attack, and, in order to runder his numerous catalry of service, to engage as much as no sible in the plain. For this purpose he advanced the Saxons on his left to turn the French right in the mountains, and threatened their rear, strengthened the plateau of Rothensol, where his left centre rested, advanced his centre to Malsch, and arranged his formidable cavalry, supported by ten battalions, so as to press the left of the Republicans in the plain of the Rhine. His attack was fixed for the 40th July; but Moreau, who deemed it hazardous to remain on the defensive, anticipated him by a general attack on the preceding day. Wisely judging that it was of importance to avoid the plain, where the numerous cavalry of the Austrians promised to be of such advantage, he entirely drew back his own left, and directed the weight of his force by his right against the Austrian position in the mountains. St.-Cyr, who commanded the Republicans in that quarter, was charged with the assault of the plateau of the Rothensol, an elevated plain in the midst of the rocky ridges of the Black Forest, the approaches to which were entangled with shrubs, scaurs, and underwood, and which was occupied by six Austrian battalions. These brave troops repulsed successive attacks of the French columns; but, having on the defeat of the last, pursued the assailants into the rugged and woody ground on the declivity of the heights. their ranks became broken, and St.-Cyr, returning to the charge, routed the Imperialists, carried the position, and drove back their left towards Pforzheim. Meanwhile Desaix, with the French centre, commenced a furious attack on the village of Malsch, which, after being taken and retaken several times. finally remained in the power of the Austrians. Their numerous cavalry now deployed in the plain; but the French kept cautiously under cover of the woods and thickets with which the country abounded; and the Austrians. notwithstanding their great superiority in horse, were unable to obtain any further success than repulsing the attacks on their centre and right, towards the banks of the Rhine (1).

⁽¹⁾ Jom vil 213 Th v 315 Arch Ch i (3) Th v i 315 Arch Ch si 134 135 Jom v 720 225 v 725 Arch Ch ii 173 St.-Cer i 50 Ti Jom v 720 225

The relative situation of the contending parties was now very singular. Moreau had dislodged the Imperialists from the mountains, and by throwing forward his right, he had it in his power to cut them off from the line of communication with the Hereditary States, and menace their retreat to the valley of the Danube. On the other hand, by so doing, he was himself exposed to the danger of being separated from his base in the valley of the Rhine, seeing Desaix crushed by the victorious centre and numerous cavalry of the Austrians, and St.-Cyr isolated and endangered in the mountains. A general of Napoléon's resolution and ability would possibly have derived from this combination of circumstances, the means of achieving the most splendid successes; but the Archduke was prevented from following so energetic a course by the critical circumstances of the Austrian dominions, which lay exposed and unprotected to the attacks of the enemy, and the perilous situation in which he might be placed in case of disaster, with a hostile army on one side, and a great river lined with enemy's fortresses on the other. For these reasons he resolved to forego the splendid to pursue the prudent course; to retire from the frontier to the interior of Germany, and to regain by the valleys of the Maine and the Neckar the plain of the Danube, which river, supported by the fortresses of Ulm and Ratisbon, was the true. frontier of Austria, and brought him as much nearer his own, as it withdrew the enemy from their resources. With this view he retired; by a forced march, in the evening, to Pforzheim, without being disquieted in his movement; and, after throwing garrisons into Philipsburg and Manheim, prepared to abandon the valley of the Rhine, and retreat by the Neckar into the Bava-

⁽¹⁾ Th, viii. 320. Join. viii. 227, 233. Arch. Ch. ii. 138, 149. St.-Cyr, iii. 68, 69.

78 HISTORY OF EUROPE

the Imperialists broke up on the 14th from lowly and in the best order, towards Stut-Veckar. By so doing, they drew nearer to ained the great object of obtaining a cenamed the great object of obtaining a central and interior line of communication, from which the Archduke soon derived the most brilliant advantages. Meanwhile Moreau advanced his right centre under St-Cyr, through the mountains to Pforzheim, while the right wing, under 1 crine, spread itself through the Black Forest to the frontiers of Switzerland. The result was, that by the middle of July, the Republican army covered a space fifty leagues broad, from Stutgardt to the Lake of Constance (2)

Operations Meanwhile important operations had taken place on the Lower of the manager was Jourdan informed of the passage of the milder. Hinne at hehi, and the departure of the Archduke to reinforce the army of Wurmser, than he hastened to recross the same river at Dusseldorf and Neuwied, advancing, as he had always before done, towards the Lahn, with a view to debouche into the valley of the Maine. The Imperialists, un-might have been easily beaten in detail by an enterprising enemy; but lan allowed them to concentrate their troops belund the Lahn, without below deriving any advantage from his superiority of force. After some inconsiderable skirmishing, the Republicans crossed that river, and the Austrans having stood firm in the position of Friedberg, a partial action ensued, which terminated to the disadvantage of the latter, who, after a vigorous resistance, finding their right flank turned by I efebvic, retreated with the loss of two pieces of cannon and twelve hundred men. After this success, Jourdan advanced to the brinks of the Maine, and by a bombardment of two great eaty of Frankfort, and under Wartensleben to thirty thousand infantry and fifteen thousand casalry, while Jourdan's army on the right bank of the Maine was swelled by the addition of some of the blockading corps to forty-six thousand of the former arm, and eight thousand of the latter (5).

The Austrians now drew all

arm, and eight union to the feature (o).

The Directory in prescribing the conduct of the campaign to the planet of generals, were constantly influenced by the desire to turn at once both flanks of the enemy an injudicious design, which, by giving the conduction of the communication of the communicatio

ers which signifized giving a concentric

arriving at a point where he could fill, with an overwhelming force, on either adversary, ably prepared all the triumphs which effaced its early disasters. In conformity

(1) Arch Ch ii 118 117 Jen vin 231 Th. (3 Th * n 27) Jen v i 264, 275 Arch C voi, 222, 226 °C 4.75, i 51 57 in 150, 175 McCv., i 87, 97 (2) Jen vin 237 Arch Ch ii 175 with these different plans—while Moreau was extending his right wing to the foot of the Alps, pressing through the defiles of the Albis and the Black Forest into the valley of the Danube, and Jourdan was slowly advancing up the shores of the Maine towards Robemia—the Archduke regained the right bank of the Neckar, and Wartensleben the left bank of the Maine: movements which, by bringing them into close proximity with each other, rendered unavailing all the superiority of their enemies. In truth, nothing but this able direction of the retreating, and injudicious dispersion of the advancing force, could have enabled the Imperialists at all to make head against their enemies: for, independent of the deduction of twenty-eight thousand men dispatched under Wurmser into Italy, the Austrians were weakened by thirty thousand men, whom the Archduke was obliged to leave in the different garrisons on the Rhine; so that the force under his immediate command consisted only of forty thousand infantry, and eighteen thousand cavalry, while Moreau was at the head of sixty-five thouplan of the Archduke to

through the Black Potest.

counternet it. sand of the former force, and six thousand of the latter. But the admirable plan of operations which that able general sketched out at Pforzheim, "to retreat slowly, and disputing every inch of ground, without hazarding a general engagement, until the two retiring armies were so near, that he could fall with a superior force upon one or other of his adversaries," ultimately rendered abortive all this great superiority, and brought back the French forces with disgrace and disaster to the Rhine (1).

Having assembled all his parks of artillery, and thrown provisions 14th July. into the fortresses, which were to be left to their own resources and 27th July. during his short stay at Pforzheim, the Archduke commenced his retreat, during which his force was still further weakened by the withdrawing of the Saxon and Swabian contingents, amounting to ten thousand men, the government of whose states, alarmed by the advance of the Republicans, now hastened to make their separate submissions to the conquerors. By the 25th July, the Austrian forces were concentrated on the right bank of the Neckar, betwixt Cronstadt and Esslingen. They were there attacked, on the following morning, by Moreau, with his whole centre and left wing; and after an obstinate engagement, both parties remained on the field of battle. Next day, the Imperialists retired in two columns, under the Archduke and Hotze, through the mountains of Alb, which separate the valley of the Neckar from that of the Danube. The one followed the valley of the Rems and the route of Schorndorf, the other the valley of the Filz. Their united force did not now exceed twenty-five thousand infantry and ten thousand cavalry. Moreaufollowed them nearly in a parallel march; and on the 25d debouched into the plains near the sources of the Danube, and the upper extremity of the valley of Rems (2).

The Archduke took a position at the top of the long ridge of Bominkirch, with the design of falling upon the heads of the enemy's columns, as they issued from the valleys into the plain, and to gain time for the evacuation of the magazines of Ulm; and the formidable nature of his position, compelled Moreau to halt for several days to concentrate his forces. Six days afterwards, he resumed his retreat, which was continued with uncommon firmness, and in the best order till he reached the Danube, where he prepared to resume the offensive. He there found himself in communication with his left wing,

⁽²⁾ Jom. viii. 238, 241. 215. St.-Cyr, iii, 105, 113. Archduke, iii, 191 (1) Arch. Ch. ii. 176, 179. Jom. viii. 282, 283. St. Cyr, iii. 93, 100.

he could infinite, and four thousand cavalry, while the corres-

ГСиар ХХІ

P 401 (-116

80 under Frælich, which had retired through the Black Forest, and amounted

Lat Marana and ich.

иеге ensued. His design in so doing, was to g till time ior a of his magazines at Ulm, and be enabled to continue his retreat with more lessure towards Wartensleben, who was now falling back towards the Aaab; but as he gave battle with his rear to the river, he ran the risk of total destruction in case of defeat By a rapid movement, he succeeded in forcing back and turning the right of Moreau, and pressing forward with his left wing, got into his rear, and caused such an alarm, that all the parks of ammunition retreated in haste from the field of battle. But the centre, under St -Cyr, stood firm, and the Austrian force being disseminated into several columns, over a space of ten leagues, the Archduke was unable to take advantage from his success, so as to gain a decisive victory Meanwhile Moreau, nowise intimidated by the defeat of his right wing, or the alarm in his rear, strengthened his centre by his reserve, and vigorously repulsed all the attacks of the enemy, and at two o'clock in the afternoon the firing ceased at all noints, without any decisive success having been gained by either party, both followed by Ferino, between whose lorces several proving actions took place (2) But more important events were now approaching, can I man (4)

and those decisive strokes about to be struck, which saved Germany, and and levied to resume lyance into "the empite the commercial n thousand men, up the valley of the Maine, on the great road to Wurtzbourg; while Wartensleben retired, with a force somewhat inferior, through the forest of

1 of it is town Wurtzbourg soon after surgeneral retired successively to Zeil. ction ensued between the cavalry of the two armies, in which the riench honourably resisted a superior force. From thence he continued his retreat towards the Anab, and after and Molfering in which riser. The converging direction of the renting comwhich have apprised so experienced an officer as Jourdan of the object of the Directory; and instead of theer one armies, continued his eccentric movement to turn their outermost flank (5).

(5) Arch Ch II 260 254 Jon v. 1 283, 201 (1) Th vai 387 Arch Ch n 215, 279 Jom Joureso SO ED

vin 220, 255 McCyr, in 141 175 (2) Jom, vii 359, 360 Arch, Ch ii 251 The time had now arrived when the Archduke deemed it safe to put in practice his long meditated movement for the relief of Wartensleben. In the reliable of August he set out from the environs of Neuburg on the Danube, with twenty-eight thousand men, and moved northward towards the Naab, leaving General Latour with thirty-five thousand to make head during his absence against Moreau. He arrived on that river on the 20th, and orders were immediately given for attacking the enemy. By the junction of the corps under the Archduke with that under Wartensleben, their united force was raised to sixty-three thousand men, while the troops of Jourdan's army opposed to them, did not exceed, after the losses it had sustained, above forty-five thousand. Thus this young prince had solved the most difficult and important problem in war, that of accumulating, with forces upon the whole inferior, a decided superiority at the decisive point (4).

Bernadotte, who commanded the advanced guard of Jourdan's army, which had crossed the ridge of hills which forms the northern boundary of the valley of the Danube, had taken post at Teining. He was there attacked by the Archduke, and after an obstinate resistance, driven back into the mountains he had recently passed, which separate the valley of the Maine from that of the Danube; while Hotze, who came up towards the close of the action, pursued his discomfited troops to the gates of Neumark. Early on the following morning the Austrians resumed the pursuit, and drove the Republicans from that town, so far back that they found themselves on the flank of Jourdan's army on the Naab, which was no sooner informed of these disasters, than it retired to Amberg. Leaving Hotze to pursue the remains of Bernadotte's army towards Altdorf, the Archduke turned with the bulk of his forces upon Jourdan; and having put himself in communication with Wartensleben, concerted with him a general attack upon the main body of the Republicans at Amberg. The Austrians, under defeated at Amberg. the Archduke, advanced in three columns; and when the soldiers perceived, far distant on the horizon to the northward, the fire of Wartensleben's lines, the importance of whose co-operation the whole army understood, opening on the enemy's flank, nothing could restrain their impetuosity, and loud shouts announced the arrival of the long wished-for moment of victory. The French made but a feeble resistance; assailed at once in front and flank, they fell back to the plateau in the rear of their position, and owed their safety to the firmness with which General Ney sustained the attacks of the enemy with the rearguard (2).

Dangerous Situation of Jourdan was now in the highest degree critical. By this success at Amberg, the Archduke had got upon his direct road to Nuremberg, through which his retreat necessarily lay, and he was in consequence compelled to fall back through the mountains which separate the Naab from the Maine by cross roads, with all his baggage and parks of artillery. During this critical operation, the firmness and discipline of the French troops alone saved them from the greatest disasters. Ney with the rearguard, continued to make head against the numerous cavalry of the enemy, and after a painful passage of six days, during which they were pressed with the utmost vigour, and incurred great dangers, they at length extricated themselves from the mountains, and reached Schweinfurt on the forces to the right bank of the river. Jourdan, deeming an action indispensable in order to obtain some respite for his retreating columns, prepared himself for a general attack on his pursuers, at the same time that the Archduke was collecting his forces for an action on his own part. The courage and vi-

III.

The French army was drawn up on the right bank of the Maine. war shore from Wurtzburg to Schweinfurt, partly on a series of heights which formed the northern barrier of the valley, and partly on the plains which extended from their foot to the shores of the river Jourdan imagined that he had only to contend with a part of the Austrian force, and that the Archdoke had returned in person to make head against the Republicans on the Danube; but instead of that, he had rapidly brought his columns to the right bank, and was prepared to combat his antagonist with superior forces A thick fog. which concealed the armies from each other, favoured the motions of the Imperialists, and when the sun broke through the clouds at eleven o'clock, it glittered on the numerous squadrons of the Austrians, drawn un in double lines on the meadows adjoining the river. The action commenced by kray attacking the left flank of the French, while Lichtenstein spread humself out in the plain, followed by Wartensleben, who threw himself at the head of the cavalry into the river, and followed close after the infantry, who had defiled along the bridge. The French general, Grenier, who was stationed at the menned point, made a vigorous resistance with the Republican cavalry and pulsed, but the reserve of Austrian currassiers having assailed the Republican squadrons, when disordered by success, they were broken, thrown into confusion of hr:

Gramchatz Victory declared for the Imperialists at all points, and Jourdan esteemed lumself fortunate in being able to reach the forests which stretched from Gramchatz to Arnheim, without being broken by the redoubtable Austrian squadrons (2).

Gratefies Such was the battle of Wurtzburg, which delivered Germany and of the determined the fate of the campingn. The troplues of the victors were by no means commensurate to these momentous results, amounting only to seven pieces of cannon, and a few prisoners. But it prinduced a most

Rhine Disastrous as it was in its consequences, the buttle itself was highly

⁽i) Th vid 390 405 Arch Ch is 43, 108. (2) Jonn. in 35 Arch Ch in 29 216 Th vid Jourday, 130, 146, Ary, i 218, 239 Jonn in 19. 403, 410 Jourday, 160 112 Ney, I 218 care he died a few days after, and was buried with military honours amidst the tears of his generous enemies (1)

84

dan 212 220

Such was the demoralized and disjointed state of the Republican army. that not withstanding the great reinforcements which they had received they were totally unable to make head against the enemy. They recrossed the Rhine on the 20th at Bonn and Neuwied, and were reduced to a state of total machinity for the remainder of the campaign, having lost not less then twenty thousand men since they left the frontiers of Bohemia, by the sword, sickness, and desertion (2) While the Austrian prince was pursuing this splendid career of While the Austrian prince was pursuing this spiendid career of before the victory on the banks of the Maine, the corps left under the com-

the Danube mand of Latour to oppose Moreau, which did not exe oil thirtisfour thousand men of every arm, even including the detachment of Frebeb was sustaining an unequal conflict on the banks of the Danube. Had the French general, the moment that he received intelligence of the departure of the Archduke, followed him with the bulk of his forces, the Imperialists. placed between two fires, would have been exposed to imminent danger. and the very catastrophe which they were most anxious to avert, viz the function of the Republican armies in the centre of Germany, been rendered inevitable Fortunately for the Austrians, instead of adonting so decisive a course, he resolved to advance into Bayaria, hoping thereby to effect a diversion in favour of his colleague, a fatal resolution which, though in some degree justified by the order of the Directory to detach fifteen thousand men at the same time into the Tyrol, utterly ruined the campaign, by increasing the great distance which already senarated the Benublican armies. After remaining several days in a state of mactivity, he collected an imposing body. fifty-three thousand men, on the banks of the Lech, and forced the fords of that river on the very day of the battle of Amberg Latour, who had extended his small army too much, in his anxiety to cover a great extent of country, found his rearguard assailed at I riedberg, and defeated. with the loss of seventeen hundred men, and fourteen nieces of cannon After this disaster he retreated behind the Iser, in the direction of Landshut, his centre fell back to the neighbourhood of Munich, while the left wing stretched to the foot of the mountains of Tyrol Moreau continued for three weeks occupied in inconsiderable movements in Bayaria, during which a severe combat took place at Langenberg, between four thousand Austrian horse and Desaix's division, in which, after the French troops had been at first broken, they ultimately succeeded by heroic efforts in repulsing the The Archduke was nothing moved by these disasters, but resolutely continued his pursuit of Jourdan "Let Moreau advance to Vienna,' said he, on parting with Latour, " it is of no moment, provided I beat Jourdan " - Memorable words' indicating at once the firmness of a great man, and the rust eye of a consummate general (5)

This resolute conduct had the desired effect - After the battle of Wurtzburg, the Archduke detached Murferd with a small division to join the garrison of Manheim, and combine an attack on the têtede-pont at held. The French were driven into the works, which were assaulted with great bravery by the Imperialists, and though the attack was repulsed, it spread great consternation through the French army, who saw how nearly they had lost their principal communication with their own country. Moreau, who began to be apprehensive that he might be involved in disaster if he advanced further into Germany, proceeded with great circumspection, and 21th Sept. arrived on the Iser on the 21th September. Being there informed of the disasters of Jourdan, and that a part of Latour's corps, under Nauendorf, was advancing rapidly upon Ulm to turn his left flank, he halted his army, and next day began his retreat (1).

⁽¹⁾ Jom ix 40 168 Th vi 410 Arch Ch i) 149 173 Jourdan 189 210 Ver 1 278 279 (2) Jom ix 48 Arch Ch iii 178 180 Joan (3) Arch Ch 1 : 5" 52 Jonn in 50 56 51 Cyr, 1 : 183 272

Moreau's situation was now in the highest degree critical. Adretreat. Vanced into the heart of Bavaria, with the defiles of the Black Forest in his rear, at the distance of 200 miles from the Rhine, with Latour with forty thousand men pressing the one flank, and the Archduke and Nauendorf with twenty-five thousand ready to fall on the other, he might anticipate even greater disasters than Jourdan before he regained the frontiers of the Republic. But on the other hand, he was at the head of a superb army of seventy thousand men, whose courage had not been weakened by any disaster, and who possessed the most unlimited confidence, both in their own strength and the resources of their commander. There was no force in Germany capable of arresting so great a mass. It is not with detached columns, or by menacing communications that the retreat of such a body is to be prevented (2).

Which he does in the most firm is so likely to produce disaster in a retreat as any symptoms of apprehension of it in the general, he resolved to continue his retrograde movements with the utmost regularity, and to dispute every inch of ground with the enemy when they threatened to press upon his forces. The Austian armies likely to assail him were as follows:—Nauendorf, with 9500 men, was on the Danube, ready to turn his left flank; Latour, with 24,000, in Bayaria, directly in his rear; Frælich, with 44,000, on the Upper Iller and in Tyrol; while the Archduke, with 16,000 or 18,000, might be expected to abandon the Lahn, and hasten to the scene of decisive operations on the Upper Rhine. It was by maintaining a firm front, and keeping his forces together in masses, that the junction or co-operation of these considerable forces would alone be prevented (5).

- Aware that the Archduke might probably block up the line of retreat by the Neckar, Moreau retired by the valley of the Danube and the Black Forest. Resting one of his wings on that stream, he sent forward his parks, his baggage, and his ammunition, before the army, and covering his retreat by a powerful rearguard, succeeded both in repulsing all the attacks of the enemy, and in enabling the body of his army to continue their march without fatigue or interruption. Want of cencert in the Austrian generals at first eminently favoured his movements. Having retired behind the lake of Federsee, he found that Latour was isolated from Nauendorf, who was considerably in advance on the Danube, and the opportunity therefore appeared favourable for striking with superior forces a blow upon his weakened adversary. This was the more necessary, as he was approaching the entrance of the defiles of the Black Forest, which were occupied by the enemy, and it was of the last importance that his movement should not be impeded in traversing those long and difficult passages. Turning, therefore fiercely upon his pursuers, he assailed Latour near Biberach. The Austrian

⁽¹⁾ Jom. ix. 63, 65. Arch. Ch. iii. 186, 208. St.-Cyr, iii. 222, 258. (2) Th, viii. 412.

86 and def as general, believing that a part only of the enemy's force was in the front, gave battle in a strong position, extending along a series of wooded heights, fined by a formidable artiflery. The action was for a long time fiercely contested, but at length the superior forces and abler manuringers of the Republicans prevailed (1) Desaix broke their right, while St -Cyr turned their left, and a complete victory crowned the efforts of the French. which cost the Austrians four thousand prisoners, and eighteen pieces of

After this decisive blow, Moreau proceeded leisurely towards the Black Forest, directing his steps towards the Valley of Hell, in hopes of being able to debouche by Friburg, before the Archduke arrived to interrupt his progress. He had already passed the separation of the road by the Neckar, and Nauendorf occupied that which passes by the Valley of Kinzig. He therefore directed his centre towards the entrance of the Valley of Hell, under the command of St -Cyr, while he stationed Desaix and Ferino on the right and left, to protect the motions of the principal body. The Austrian detachments in the mountains were too weak to oppose any effectual resistance to the passage of the French army St -Cyr speedily dissipated the clouds mer y to the of light troops which infested the pine-clad mountains of the Valley of Hell, and Latour, rendered cautious by disaster, without attempting to harass his retreat, moved by Homberg to unite himself to the Archduke so ably were the measures of the French general concerted, that he not only passed the defiles without either confusion or loss. but debouched into the valley of the Rhine, rather in the attitude of a congueror than that of a fugitive (2) Meanwhile the Archduke Charles being now assured of the direction which Moreru had taken, directed Latour and the detached parties to join him by the vailey of hinzig, while Nauendorf covered their movements by advancing between them and the French columns. The greater part of the Austrian Ba le f Emanda gubiveen forces were thus collected in the valley of the Rhine in the middle of October, and though still inferior to the enemy, he resolved to lose no time in attacking, and compelling them to recross that river Moreau, on his part, was not less desirous of the combat, as he intended to advance to held, and either maintain himself at the tele-depont there, or cross leisurely over to Strasbourg. The action took place at Emmendingen, on the slopes where the mountains melt into the plain, and afforded an example of the truth of the military principle, that in tacties, or the operations of actual combat, the possession of the mountains in general secures that of the valleys which he at their feet. Waldkirch was felt by both parties to be the decisive point, from the command which it gave over I managed strong to rozel at Navendorf, who descended from the heights of the Black Forest, and after a bloody action drove St -Cyr, who commanded the Republicans, out of the town with severe loss. Meanwhile the success of the Austrians was not less decisive at other points, the Austrian columns baying at length surmounted the difficulties of the roads, attacked and carried the village of Matterdingen. while their centre drove them back from Finmendingen, and at length Moreau, defeated at all points, retired into the forest of Nemburg, behind the Elz, with the loss of two thousand men (4).

20th Oct. The Archduke made preparations on the following morning for re-Retreat of establishing the bridges over the Elz, and renewing the combat: but Moreau retreated in the night, and commenced the passage of the Rhine. Desaix passed that river at Old Brisach, while the general-in-chief took post in the strong position of Schliengen, determined to accept battle, in order to gain time to defile in tranquillity by the bridge of Huningen. The valley of the Rhine is there cut at right angles by a barrier of rocky eminences, which stretches from the mountains of Hohenblau to the margin of the stream. It was on this formidable rampart that Moreau made his last stand, stand at his left resting on the Rhine, his centre on a pile of almost inac-Hohenblau: cessible rocks, his right on the cliffs of Sizenkirch. The Archduke but is driven across the divided his army into four columns. The Prince of Condé on the right drove in the Republican advanced posts, but made no serious impression; but Latour in the centre, and Nauendorf on the left, gallantly scaled the precipices, drove the Republicans from their positions, and chasing them from height to height, from wood to wood, threw them before nightfall into such confusion, that nothing but the broken nature of the ground, which prevented cavalry from acting, and a violent storm which arose in the evening, saved them from a complete overthrow. Moreau retreated during the night, and on the following day commenced the passage of the Rhine, which was effected without molestation from the Imperialists (2).

After having thus effected the deliverance of Germany from both its invaders, the Archduke proposed to the Aulic Council to detach a powerful reinforcement by the Tyrol into Italy, in order to strengthen the army of Alvinzi, and effect the liberation of Wurmser in Mantua—a measure based on true military principles, and which, if adopted by the Imperial government, would probably have changed the fate of the campaign. Moreau, on refuse an armistice on his side, proposed an armistice to the Austrians, on condition that the Rhine should separate the two armies, and the Republicans retain the tête-de-pont of Huningen and Kehl; a proposal which the Archduke received with secret satisfaction, as it promised him the means of securely carrying into effect his meditated designs for the deliverance of Italy. But the Austrian government, intent upon the expulsion of the French from Germany, and deeming the forces put at the disposal of Alvinzi adequate for the relief of Mantua, declined both propositions, and sent positive orders for the immediate attack of the fortified posts possessed by the Republicans on the right bank of the Rhine (5).

Long and blordy siege with an open communication between the besieged and the great army on the opposite bank, presented obstacles of no ordinary kind; but the perseverance and energy of the Austrians ultimately triumphed over all obstacles. Thirty thousand men, under the command of Desaix and St.-Cyr, were destined for the defence of the works, while a powerful reserve was stationed in the islands of the Rhine; and the troops engaged in the defence were changed every three days, to prevent their being overwhelmed with the fatigues of the service. Forty thousand Austrians, under Latour, formed the besieging force, while the remainder of the army was cantoned in the

⁽¹⁾ St.-Cyr, iv. 10, 26. Arch. Ch. iii. 218, 260.

Jom. ix. 78, 80.

(2) Jom. ix. 84, 89. Arch. Ch. iii. 272, 280. St.
Cyr, iv. 27, 40.

(3) Arch. Ch. ii. 290. Jom. ix. 238.

CILLE, XXI.

hand Wurm-

valley of the Rhine Though the fort was invested on the 9th October, no material progress was made in the siege, from the extreme difficulty of bringing up the battering train and heavy stores, till the end of November. This long delay gave time to the indefatigable Desaix to complete the works. which, when the Imperialists first sat down before the place, were in a very unfinished state. The trenches were opened on the 21st November: and about the same time a grand sortic was attempted, under the command of Moreau in person, to destroy the works, and gain possession of the Austrian park of artillery. This attack was at first successful the Republicans carried the intrepchments of Sundheim, and had nearly penetrated to the magazines and parks, but the Archduke and Latour having come up with reinforcements to the menaced point, they were at length repulsed, with severe loss, carrying with them nine pieces of cannon, which they had cantured during the affray, Moreau and Desaix exposed themselves to the hottest of the fire, and were both slightly wounded After this repulse, the labours of the siege were continued without any other interruption, than that arising from the excessive severity of the weather, and the torrents of rain which, for weeks together, filled the trenches with water. On the night of January 1, the Imperialists carried by assault the first line of intrenchments round the Republican camp, and a few days afterwards the second line was also stormed after a bloody resistance held was now no longer defensible, above 100,000 cannon-balls, and 25,000 bombs, projected from forty batteries, had riddled all its defences. The Imperialists, masters of the intrenched camp, enveloped the fort on every side, and the Republicans, after a glorious defence, which does honour to the memory of Desaix and St -Cyr, evacuated the place by expitulation on the 9th January (1).

Fall of the During the siege of held, the Imperialists remained in observation at the ingen before the tite-de-nont of Huningen, but no sooner were they at liberty, by the surrender of the former place, than they prosecuted the siege of the latter with extraordinary vigour Ferino had been left with the right wing of the French to superintend the defence of that important post, but notwithstanding all his exertions he was unable to retard their advances; the trenches were opened in form on the 25th of January, and a sortic having been repulsed on the night of the 51st, the place was evacuated by capitulation on the 1st of February, and the victors found themselves masters only of a heap of ruins (2)

Reflections This last success terminated the campuign of 1796 in Germany , on this emporer the most remarkable, in a military point of view, which had occurred, with the exception of that of Napoléon in the same year in Italy, since the commencement of the war. The conquerors in both triumphed, by the application of the same principles, over superior force-viz, the skilful use of a central position, and interior line of communication, and the fapid accumulation of superior forces against one of the assailing armies, at a time when it was so situated that it could not receive any assistance from the other. The movements of the Archduke between the armies of Mareiu and · a disastrous from the inser on the opposite sides of the lake of Guarda; and of Alvinzi and Provera, on the plateau of Rivoli and the shores of the Mincio. The difference only lies in the superior energy and activity with which the Republican general flew from one menaced point to another, the accurate calculation of time on which he rested, and the greater difficulties with which he had to struggle from the closer proximity of the attacking forces to each other.

The results of this campaign proved the justice of the observation of Napoléon, that the decisive blows were to be struck against Austria in the Valley of the Danube; and that Carnot's plan of turning both flanks of the Imperialists at once, along the vast line from the Maine to the Alps, was essentially defective, and offered the fairest opportunity to an enterprising general, aware of the importance of time and rapid movement in war, to fall with a preponderating force first on the one and then on the other. If, instead of dispersing the invading host into two armies, separated from each other by above 400 miles, and acting without concert, he had united them into one mass, or moved them by converging lines towards Ulm, the catastrophe of 1805, to Austria, at that place, or of Leipsic, in 1815, to France, might have been anticipated with decisive effect upon the issue of the war. And after giving all due praise to the just views and intrepid conduct of the Austrian hero, the deliverer of Germany, it must be admitted that he did not carry his enlightened principles into practice with such vigour as might have been done; and that had Napoléon been in his place on the Murg and at Amberg, he would have struck as decisive blows as at Rivoli and Castiglione (1).

The unsuccessful irruption of the French into Germany was at-Produgious contribu-tions levied tended with one important consequence, from the effectual manner by the Republicans in which it withdrew the veil from the eyes of the lower classes as Germany. to the real nature of democratic ambition, and the consequences to the real nature of democratic ambition, and the consequences with which it was attended to the inhabitants of the vanquished states. The, Republicans, being destitute of every thing, and in an especial manner denuded of money, when they crossed the Rhine, immediately put in practice their established principle of making war support war, and oppressed the vanguished people by the most enormous contributions. The lesser which it German states only purchased neutrality by the most enormous excited in Germany, sacrifices (2). The people contrasted these cruel exactions with the seductive promises of war to the palace and peace to the cottage, and all learned at length, from bitter experience, the melancholy truth, that military violence, under whatever names it may be veiled, is the same in all ages; and that none are such inexorable tyrants to the poor as those who have recently revolted against authority in their own country. Although, therefore, the terror of the Republican arms at first superseded every other consideration, and detached all the states whose territory had been overrun from the Austrian alliance, yet this was merely the effect of necessity; the hearts of the people remained faithful to the cause of Germany, their exasperation broke out in unmeasured acts of violence against the retreating forces of

⁽¹⁾ Nap iii. 314, 339. Th. viii. 419. Arch. Ch. iii. 313, 314.

⁽²⁾ The Duke of Wirtemburg was assessed at 4.000,000 fraies, or nearly L.200,000 sterling; the circle of Swabia. 12,000,000, or nearly L. 600,000. besides 8000 horses, 5000 oven, 150,000 quintals of corn. and 100,000 pairs of shoes. No less than 3,000,000 or L. 400,000, was demanded from the circle of Franconia, besides 6000 horses; and immense contributions from Frankfort, Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Nuremburg, and all the towns through which they passed. These enormous exactions, which amounted in all to 25,000,000 francs (L. 1,000,000), 12,000 horses, 12,000 oxen, 500,000 quintals of wheat, and 200,000 pairs of shoes excited an universal alarm.

aa Jourdan, and they looked only for the first opportunity to resume their I coan lar & /41

kened the predilection of the spelt of the 10 Hell Graces ich principles, operated most powerfully in rousing the ancient and hereditary loyalty of the Austrian people to their own sovereigns. When the Republicans approached Bohemia, and had well nigh penetrated through Bayaria to the hereditary States, the Emperor issued an animating appeal to his subjects in the threatened provinces, and, with the spirit of Maria Theresa, called on them to repel the renewed Gallic aggression. Austria, in this trying emergency, relied on the constant success which has so long attended its house through all the vicissitudes of fortune, and unsubdued by defeat, maintained that - of te are, and so often unconque le nobly answered is found the appea speedily raised. contributions of stores of every kind were voted by the nobility (2), and from the first invasion of France may be dated the growth of that patriotic spirit which was destined ultimately to rescue Germany from foreign subaugation New Con This year witnessed the still closer contracting of the unhappy bands which united Prussia to France, and so long perpetuated on the continent the overwhelming influence of Gallic power Bardenberg and Haugwitz, who directed the cabinet of Berlin, and who, notwithstanding their differences on many other points, were cordially united in all measures calculated to augment the influence of Prussia in the north of Germany, had laboured assiduously all the summer to form a federal union for the protection of the states in that portion of the empire, and they had succeeded in obtaining a convocation of the circle of Lower Saxony and of Westphalia on the 20th June, to arrange the formation of a formidable army of observation, of which Prussia was the head, to cause their neutrality to be respected by the belligerent powers. The French minister at Berlin, artfully improving upon the terrors produced by Aapoléon's successes in Italy, and Jourdan's irruption into I rancoma, easily persuaded Haugwitz that the period had now arrived when the interests of Prussia indispensably required the breaking up of the old Germanic Empire, and the recognition of the left bank of the Rhine to France, and in consequence, two conventions, one pullic, the other secret, were signed at Berlin on the 5th August By the first, which alone at that time was published, the line of demarcation, beyond which hostilities were not to pass, was extended, and made to run from Wesel on the Rhine, following the frontiers of the mountains of Thuringia, extending along the North Sea, including the mouths of the Elbe, the Weser, and the I ms, and so round by the frontiers of Holland to Wesel again Beyond this, in addition to the line already agreed to by the treats of Bale, the Directory agreed not to push their mi litary of erations 1 v the second, which was kept secret, Prussia recognised the extension of France to the Rhine, and the principle, that the dispossessed German princes were to be indemnified at the expense of the ecclestastical princes of the empire. The third article provided an indemnity to the Prince of Orange, non evidently and apparently finally expelled from his dominions, and Prussia engaged to endeavour for this purpose to procure

Cont much deplorable

76

Ill the efforts,

[Cuap, XXI

maintained a doubtful contest with Rome after its land forces had subdued the acquisitions of the Republicans at land they observed that Rhodes long they looked to the conquests of the British at sea as likely to counterbalance began to be turned tonards the probable result and final 1581 e of the war Indian Archipelago. The attention of the people, by these great acquisitions, emportum of the Chua trade, and opened up the vast commerce of the ne had acquired in the plains of Hindostan, while the latter secured the half-nay-house to india, and indispensable to the mighty empire which the British nation it was justly observed, that the former was a Cerlon, and the Malaceas, diffused the most general joy through These important successes, particularly the reduction of the Cape, forces (1) of Trincomalce, were, early in the year, taken possession of by the British settlements of Ceylon, the Malaceas, and Cochin, with the important harbour by Admiral Elphinstone in the Bay of Saldanha, while the Batreian sand land 1100ps, destined to retake the Cape of Good Hope, was captured three frigates, and many resels of inferior size, having on board two thou-

HISTORY OF LUROPF.

shopen of as acquisitions which should never be abandoned (2) not only of statesmen, but of practical men, and the Cape and Ceylon to be market they would open for its manufactures, began to engage the thoughts bon er of fingland, and enriching the parent state by their commerce, and the empeacing an the quarters of the globe, held together and united by the naval to the Erecian martime power. The formation of a great colonial empire, that nature had given that advantage to the European, which she had denied nater to the land forces of its opponent," and it was impossible not to see brevailed over Lacedemon, if Athea had been an island maccessible save by from every quarter of the globe "Athens," said lenophon, " nould hive own islands afforded, and the far more extensive commerce which enriched it monnealth, from the superior internal strength which the population of its wonld have incomparably greater chances of success than the Grecian com-Spain, Carthage, and part of Gaul, and that in a similar contest Great Britain

French Republicans, and the frightful flames of a servite war which into which it had been thrown by the risionary dreams of the

of - Domingo still continued in the distracted and unfortunate state

Action of the disastrous state of ber principal colons, and the great re-establish the summe authority of the Republican communities or breuch service with the division he had organized (3), in the vain attempt to connence in the command of these desultory forces, and was taken into the rayages of famine or the enord of the enemy. Toussaint had already risen to melied anay more rapidly under its faial ecening gales, than either by the deadly climate, maintained a successful contest with European forces, who beateetly acquainted with the country, and comparatively maccesable to its prosperous colons which they had lost The blacks, laught by expenence, the northern part of the island, without attempting to regain the splendid and inhabitants, and the former nere hardly able to retain a seanty fooling in enticient force to make any serious impression on its numerous and francie and sayage population, proved unsuccessful. The latter had never been in both of the brench and Lughelt, to restore any thing like order to its furious ned been lighted up by their extracant philauthropies.

too clearly betrayed the quarter from which it had Gibraltar, arrayed in sterce hostility against her (1). all her maritime allies, but the whole coasts of Europe, from the Texel to menced the war with so many confederates, say herself not only deprived of on the part of Spain against Great Britain. Thus England, which had comfollowed, in the beginning of October, by a formal declaration of war four thousand land troops, thirty ships of the line, and six frigates. This was New World, and engaged to assist each other, in ease of attack, with twentymutually guaranteed to each other their dominions both in the Old and the with France, on the footing of the family compact. By this treaty, the powers 19th August concluded a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, lined in future to experience such disastrous effects, and on the considerations, the Spaniards fell into the snare, from which they were des-Rapoleon, in ease they joined the Republican alliance. Influenced by these by holding out the hopes of some acquisitions in Italy, won by the sword of improving these advantages, had fanned the Spanish discontents into a flame, which is so easily excited among the European states. The Directory, artfully lican influence, and given way to that scalousy of the british naval power, of Bale from all connexion with the Allies, had lately fallen under the Repubher allies, had become sufficiently alarming. Spain, detached by the treaty standing her naval successes, the situation of England, from the disasters of sacrifices to France to obtain a general peace. In truth, notwith-Great Britain showed herself disposed during this year to make great Detween Treaty of losses which she had sustained in her maritime possessions, bas ognimon to the expedition to St Domingo and ". that description. always ready to receive and redress complaints of nished on the spot, or the courts of London were British government; and even if some irregularities had been pushed, they might have been pushed, they might have been pushed. odi izniega ininiqmoo io bunorg otsmijigol on emrof landing their erews on the coasts of Chili and Peru, the alleged misconduct of some merchant begalf, all and one whose impartiality is above all suspicion, were fully heard before the only competent tribunal, claims of all parties in regard to the condemnation of the St. Jago, captured by his Majesty's forces, since that time himself done; and inflicted no injury whatever on the subjects of that monarchy. The has a right to do, or than bis Spanish Malesty bas 19woq inore than what every independent power the common enemy. The treaty with America did that he did more than his proportion of mischiel to in alliance, and making a common cause in war, of the commanding officers of two powers, acting instance that it has been imputed as a crime to one it was really due. The charge of misconduct on the part of the British admiral at Toulon is unprecedented and absurd, and this is pechaps the first ness to institute enquiry, and grant redress, where which his Mojesty has always professed his willingmisconduct of unauthorized individuals, concerning duced, nor effect alleged, or of complaints of the opinions and intentions, of which no proof is adeither of matters perfectly innocent, or of imputed The acts of hostility attributed to England, consist Spain has afforded the smallest ground of complaint. charges which it contains, must be sufficient to satisfy every reasonable and impartial person that no part of the conduct of Great Britain twenter declaration, and a bare enumeration of the frivolous his crown; that a simple reference to the Spanish of England to take measures to assert the dignity of Init of Spain had at length compelled the King proceeded, it was replied by the British govern-ment, that " the unprovoked declaration of war on

To this manifesto, the acrimonious style of which xxxviii, 196. State l'apers.] exhausted our partence and moderation, has rendered a declaration of war unavoidable." [Ann. Reg. commerce, and by her despotism, which has nises no other laws, than the aggrandizement of her nation has proved to the universe, that she recogar concluded, " equally deep and unparalleled, that of a court in London, authorizing the arrest of its ambassador for a small sum. " By all these insults," of Galicia and at Trinidad; and, finally, that the majesty of Spain had been insulted by the decrees violated by descents of tenglish ships on the coast Mediterranean; that the Spanish territory had been the English cruisers upon Spanish vessels in the nuente and acts of violence had been committed by of the Dutch settlement of Demerara; that frequent Antilles and St Domingo, and her recent requisition territories, by sending a considerable force to the Intention of seizing part of the Spanish colonial these valuable possessions, and had evinced a clear on a contraband trade, as well as reconnoitered frequently landed on the coast of Chili, and carried and in the intercepting of animination for the Spanish squadrons; that the crews of her ships had subsisting convention, ought to have been restored, afterwards retaken by the English, which, by the seized the St Jago, at first taken by the French, but the United States, in the injustice with which they cluded, without regard to the rights of Spain, with ther appeared in the treaty of 19th Nov. 1791, conthat the bad faith of the English government fursoon as it could be done with safety to the monarchy; cabinet of Madrid to make peace with France as in the expedition of Toulon, had determined the war, but especially at the siege of Toulon, and the British cabinet, in an able state paper, drawn by Mr. Canning, it was urged by the Spanish court that the conduct of the English during the sion; but they met with a decisive refutation from ed in the Spanish manifesto on this occabib Oct. Many grounds of complaint were assign-(1) Th. viii. 251, 352. Ann. Meg. 1797, 2.

numerous and powerful party in Great Britain who contended Impressed with these dangers, and desirous also of disarming the HISTORY OF EUROPE.

hours, and he immediately returned to his own country (3), But ph the directory ordering Lord Malmesbury to quit Paris in in enty-four tiations had been continued for two months, they were abruptly broken off, submitted to such reasonable propositions; and, accordingly, after the negothey could have maintained their place at the head of affairs, if they had cuticely dependent on popular favour, would consent to these terms, or that Republican government, engaged in so dazzling a career of victory, and so burg, Namur, Nice, and Savoy (2). It was hardly to be expected that the der, and evacuate all their conquests in Italy, but they were to retain Luxemshould restore the Low Countries to the Emperor, Holland to the Stadtholof the war. In relurn for these concessions, they meisted that the French to Erance and Holland which had been conquered since the commencement nuncessant. by the British government, and the restitution of all the colonies uned prove English government. These were, the recognition of the Republic of the inhabitants, and proposals of peace were immediately made by the British envoy arrived at Paris on the 22d October, amudst the acclamations for the aid of sixty thousand auxiliary troops to the Austrian forces (1). The entertained, as nearly at the same time an alliance nas concluded nith Bussia, negotiations; but it is probable that no great hopes of their success were French government. Lord Malmesbury was dispatched to Paris to open the the close of this year, made overtures for a general peace to the against the nar, as both unnecessary and impolitic, Mr. Pitt, in assend 18-1 offered to treat on terms of equality with that from which it had so fittle to power which had been uniformly victorious on its own element should have it must ever be a matter of pride to the British historian, that the

which she was saved rather by the winds of heaven than any exertions of the French government, which placed England in the utmost peril, and from While these negotiations nere jet pending, a measure nas undertaken by willing to have abandoned all her own acquisitions. dread, and that England, to procure tavourable terms for her allies, was to send the control of the control o

bat an bacoutalde adherence to the engagement granut whom no came of rough at is preseded. was to to take up atom against one of those powers in whose cause the had professed to feel the atomig-est futerest, and to measer with hostifity seeders, complaint regarding the alliged decree against the Souther even houn berieft can bear sermony. den, Arg. 1796, 1471 Siete Popers,

> Snot on to wone out at entracting mit on a the ceded territory was to terminale in order that their short their solds to brench against the french > their denies of maintaining present the they reportedly to the fail of the fai negotiation (1). from this operation, which led to the long delay and final rupture of the her own. It was the extravagant expectations they had formed of success prepared to turn it to the best account (2). accurately informed by their emissaries of what was going forward, were fully had but an imperfect account of their danger, while the French Directory, With such secreey were the preparations made, that the Brutah government the French troops to proclaim the insurrection in every part of the country. arms where secretly provided, and nothing was wanting but the arrival of were enrolled under generals, colonels, and officers, in all the counties; of that generous country have always been distinguished. The malcontents into the project, with that ardent but inconsiderate xeal for which the people against the naval forces of England, the patriots of Ireland rushed blindly how an insular power, detached from the continent, was to maintain itself sions of the Republic had occasioned to its inhabitants, without considering of France, in its stead. Overlooking the grinding misery which the convolturning the established government, and erecting a republic, after the model men, in all parts of the country, were engaged in a vast conspiracy for overrevolt against the authority of England, and above two hundred thousand needy and ardent characters in that distracted nation to project a similar The successful issue of the French Revolution had stimulated the numerous popular passion, was at this period in a state of unusual excitation. Ireland, long the victim of oppressive government, and now of

'punoj og oj and where in so wast a number so few traitors are done, where the secret has been so religiously kepliwhich has continued for so many years as this has constitued it a whole people can besaid to conspire scaled it with their blood, I suppose there is no France and Ireland, and several of them have already tance and support. The oath of their union recites, by mile a minimal to the faithful of their mations of the most auxious expectation to brance for asisa figure to be the people of Ireland, are turned with this whole body, which may be said almost without of the wretched peasantry of Ireland. The eyes of uninpuos sin kuismad sin bue tuojadinen deilhau clected as their generals, and whose object is the to one of their soundity, the survivers on of opedience to the orders of these whom they have Dailigui ei noinn riodt do olgi bitrg odt pereloenodt tesbertiva quetricis? and officered by men chosen by niste og guillingy plan, divided according to their ment who are enjed defendable are completely organism tended into Monster, the temaining province. These Leinster, and Connaught, three-fourths of the na-tion, and I have little doubt that it has since extraining possession of the province of clater poserdus je trei sone di req. G poe sone siut or pur teafficial sit as consider politice attales and the attack is it is not the least government, their best blood. England, which has often deluged the country with to notionimob bine Vamerel and tental of binod cere liepublicans, warmly attached to the cause of France, and as Irishmen, and as Catholics, doubly -nis one it ocquios only nour teaned bug olds oil to the Catholics throughout the nation. I can add, from my personal knowledge, that a great majority mirdad to vith odt to sinomovom odt gobioob doidw To sbaim odt no nomonflut teory vrov a gosegezog ban representative Lody chosen by the fatholies at large, tholics, which is called the General Committee, a "There is also a further organization of the Ca-

Ruoule bewoodt tuode ore stilling off ..

Fitz-Gerald, i. 275, 500. (2) Hard. ii. 187, 189. Th, viii, 352, 180, Monte's (1) Hard, iv. 107.

tory. "The Catholics of Ireland are 3,150,000, all!" one of their principal leaders, to the French Direcbeseed in a memorial presented by Wolfe Fourbuicollol our mont bootersbau read od llin foil -duqall manadill na lo noisantol adl anl anoitated length to which they had in secret carried their pre-The intentions of the frish revolutionists, and the Lears they have fixed their eyes most earneafly on and abhorismes of the English name. For these fire trained from their infancy in an bereditary hatted

occasion, raise the entire force of the province of Ulster, the most populous, warlike, and best inforand could, I have not the smallest doubt, on a proper Their members are all bound by an oath of secreey, frame a free Republic on the broad basis of liberty and exequally. These clubs were rapidly filled and exequally in the last over two-thirds of that province. England, establish the independance of Ireland, and the object of which was to subvert the tyranny of union, Corresponding clubs were rapidly formed, and (atholics were seen together in harmony and because in that club, for the first time, Dissenters first formed the club of United trishmen, so called, misery, and inflamed by detestation of the English nume. In the year 1791, the Dissenters of Bellast the support of the Dissenters, actuated by reason and reflection, as nell as the Catholics, impelled by " The hepublic may also rely with confidence on displayed in the cause of liberty and their country. iny head, there are 500,000 men, who would fly to the standard of the Republic, if they saw it once France, whom they look upon, with great justice, as fighting their buttles, as well as those of will sub-kind who are oppressed, of this class, I will slake mentioned, but composed of Carbolics only. Until mencing about the same time with the clubs last "The Catholics also have an organization commed in the nation.

of the Itub people, free and independent, and in shoold be to declare themselves the Repie

the theories, could need

e e in the French Republic, I palating that needler own out the faul fault we proce with budget breef we the harville harved beared and result of the state of the lent tempest arose immediately after its departure, and though the mist with disasters from the very moment of its leaving the harbour. A vio-12sp Dec fore the negotiation nas broken off at Paris; but it encountered The exped! The expedition set sail in the middle of December, in o days benems really effected (2) cies of resistance which they might expect in the event of such an invasion by a prudent foresight, and gave the French government an idea of the speterior, precautions which in the end proved unnecessary, but were dictated of a descent being effected, all the cattle and provisions driven into the inmilitia in readiness, a vigilant watch kept up on the coasis; and, in the event really intended to be struck. Orders were transmitted to Ireland to base the these artifices, the British government readily discerned where the blow was the West Indies, at others, for the shores of Portugal, but, not uthetanding spread of the object of the expedition, sometimes, that it was destined for To distract the attention of the enemy, the most inconsistent accounts nere motive for breaking off the negotiation (1) bury left Paris, and their expectations of its consequences nere the principal Directory transmitted orders for it to sail several weeks before Lord Malmessuch nere the hopes entertained of the result of the expedition, that the best in Hoche's army, the general-in-chief was sangume of success, and the line, under Richery, from the harbour of Rochefort. The troops were the the thousand land forces. This armament was to be joined by seven ships of and fifty men, and of transports and other ressels, conveying in all twentydred soldiers, in elve frigates and six correttes, each carrying in o hundred of fifteen slups of the line, on board each of which were embarked six liunpated from the dilapidated state of the French navy. It consisted Liunos prepared at Brest, more formidable than could have been anticiagaost pus Lion influence, and by their joint exertions an expedition nas shortly Des gns off 297 (1 94) guet, the minister of marine, seconded him narmly nith all his country than either the rictory of Fleurus or the triumple of Rivoli Truerippling the ancient rival of France, and achieving greater benefits for his blow against the English power in that quarter, he had an opportunity of a theatre worthy of his army and his reputation, and by striking a decisive exploits of hapolton and Moreau against the Imperial forces, Ireland offered ocean, in la lendee and Brittany, burned with the desire to celipse the great Hoche, at the head of a hundred thousand men, on the shores of the

119 133

nary risks which attend a maritime expedition in comparison with a land the rulers of both countries. To the French, as demonstrating the extraordichance of success. Its result was pregnant with important instructions to expedition, vable quarter in which it might be attacked with the greatest on the find Great Britain in suspense, and revealed to its enemies the vulne-Such was the issue of this expedition, which had so long kept army, to the command of which they destined that able general (1). greater part of his forces to the Rhine, to replace the losses of Jourdan's and the Directory, abandoning the expedition for the present, moved the himself, after escaping a thousand perils, was landed on the island of Rhe; violence of the elements, and the other by the attacks of the English. Hoche ships of the line, and three frigates, had been lost; one of the former by the whither he was soon followed by the scattered divisions of his fleet, after two had the good fortune to reach Brest on the last day of December, the destor his way back to the French harbours. He set sail accordingly, and fail, from the long time that they had been at sea, Bouvet resolved to make chief, and apprehensive that provisions for the crews of the vessels would hazarding a part only of the land forces in the absence of the general-insuch a succession of disasters, unwilling to undertake the responsibility of armed men who appeared on the coast to oppose a landing. Dispirited by to reconnoitre, were speedily made prisoners by the numerous bodies of impossible, and the crew of a boat, which was sent through the surf by the tenegious swell of the sea on that iron-bound coast, rendered that peats, and the surt and such the surt impossible, and the crew of a boat, which was sent through the surt It is dispersed sand land forces; but the violence of the tempest, and the prodiline, and some of the transports, were assembled, having on board six thouin command, resolved to land the troops, although only eight ships of the departure from the French harbour. Admiral Bouvet, the second atty Dec. tion reached the point of rendezvous, in Bantry bay, eight days after its remainder of his squadron; and after a stormy passage, a part of the expedisea. Hoche himself, who was on board a frigate, was separated from the persed. This tempestnous weather continued the whole time the fleet was at isle of Ushant and perished; several were damaged, and the fleet totally disof the British squadron, yet one ship of the line struck on the rocks near the which it was accompanied enabled the French admiral to clude the vigilance ['964] HISTORY OF EUROPE. £6

by an insular power, is a well-disciplined army, and the patriotism of its own monstrate, that the only basis on which certain reliance can be placed, even time to weaken an overweening confidence on naval superiority, and to deare fitted to abate the confidence of invasion, they are calculated at the same in the most vulnerable part of their dominions. While these considerations valour of her armies, but the fury of the elements, saved them from danger the mercy of the enemy, and that neither the skill of her sailors, nor the the face of superior maritime forces, her possessions were for sixteen days at empire of the seas does not always afford security against invasion; that in defeat the best concerted enterprises; to the English, as showing that the a great fleet, and the unforeseen disasters which frequently on that element campaign; the small number of forces which can be embarked on board even the Irish shores. To those who consider, indeed, the patriotic spirit, indomihad Hoche succeeded in landing with sixteen thousand of his best troops on It is a curious subject for speculation, what might have been the result which led to the suspension of each payments in the following spring, it already pressing upon the treasury, and preparing the dreadful catastrophe in the muting at the fore, and what serious financial embarrassments nere Britain at that period, in what a formidable manner it soon after broke out the spirit of discontent was diffused even through the population of Great saving itself from dismemberment. When it is considered, also, how widely gies of the empire might for a very long period have been employed in nould have engendered a dreadful domestic nar, and that the nhole enerand so able a commander, to the numerous bodies of Irish malecontents, appear doubiful, but it is equally exident that the addition of such a force, plete command they had of the sea, the final issue of such a contest cannot eer appeared in so remarkable a manner to the British islands since the which the deeds of free agents are rendered subscritent, its protection neenergy which it infuses into the cause of justice, and the moral lans to that, if ever Providence interferes in human affairs otherwise than by the mar pe admitted that the nation then stood upon the edge of an abyes; and her joungest son on the throne of Constantine, the thus seemed to be fast her farourite project of dismembering the Turbish dominions, and placing Creat Britain and Austria secured to her the concurrence of these powers in cently made herself mistress of Derbent in Persia, and the alliance with flattery contined to add Courland to her immense dominions; She had rewar and destiny of the norld Shortly before her death, she had by art and throne; an event of no small importance to the future fate of the panettie Calharine, and the accession of the Emperor Paul to the Russian given orders for the levy of $50,000 men, destined to take a part in me ucetron in the sixty-coventh year of her age, and the thirty-JUJS the cross planted on the domes of St -Sophia, when death interrupted all her approaching the grand object of her ambition, and might have lived to see page of history, or have left in their conduct on the throne a more the charae Fen sovereigns will occupy a more conspicuous place in the Thich closed the nat (1) trepid hand, might have accelerated by nearly (wenty years the eatastrophe man campaigns; a design, which, if carried into effect by her firm and ina more littuous age. But there great qualities nere counterbalanced by as Jution, she dignified a despotic throne by the magnaminty and patriotism of only by lotty intellects, munificent in public, tiberal in persale, firm in resodiscerning in the choice of her counsellors, and snayed in militers of state tithout the alloy, at least in public allairs, of sorbid or sulgar inclinations; trons, but of great and splended objects only, passionately found of glory, commende resolutions, but regorous in carrying them into execution, ambiexalted reputation Prudent in council, and intrepid in conduct, cautious in enst' and capricious 303 gino 2411 of ent . more than man, " lettement, sen-:  of England, it n sew on Tep-offt 1 , ,, " remarkable vices- and more trul perhaps of her than of the birgin Queen the gratification of her passions; tyrannical, overbearing, and sometimes cruel in her administration, she filled her subjects with unbounded an e for her authority. In the lustre of her administration, however, the career of her victories, and the rapid progress of her subjects under so able a government, mankind overlooked her dissolute manners, the occasional elevation of unvorthy favourites, frequent acts of tyranny, and the dark transaction which signalized her accession to the throne; they overlooked the frailties of the woman in the dignity of the princess; and paid to the abilities and splendour of the Semiramis of the North that involuntary homage which commanding qualities on the throne never fail to acquire, even when stained by irregularities in private life.

table ratour, and persevering character of the English people, and the com-[Cure AXI. HISTORY OF EUROPE.

The close of this year was marked by the death of the Empress winds dispersed the Spanish Armada.

The end of the same year witnessed the resignation of the presiin the French democracy. Accordingly, after having signalized his life by and which were opposed to nothing so much as the extravagant love of power those practical ideas which America had inherited from her English descent, to liberty, but not licentiousness; not to the dreams of enthusiasts, but to independent and dignished without either asperity or pride. He nas a friend was modest without diffidence; sensible to the voice of same without vanity; composition of uninspired wisdom which can bear a comparison (1). He countrymen an address on leaving their government, to which there is no when the independence of his country was secured; and bequeathed to his than disposition, he was the first to recommend a return, to pacific councils 17th Sept 1756 for the art of war. A soldier from necessity and patriotism, rather designs, and the perseverance of his character, than any extraordinary genius it by inclination, and prevailed over his enemies rather by the wisdom of his he was forced into greatness by circumstances, rather than led into to his roun. of a victorious republic the simplicity and innocence of rural life; be where firm in conduct, incorruptible in integrity, he brought to the helm so spotless a character to commemorate. Invincible in resolution, public life, his voluntary retirement into private life. Modern history has not of Wishing dency of the United States of America by General Washington, and pender of the society within the limits prescribed by the lanes, and to mainthin the trace and protondal enjoyment of the rights of person and pro-१९४० है को है। public, the refuser of the timerrean erown, at a time when the circer of happicon had hardly commenced in Europe!—See Ann, Neg., xxxxiii, 298, turns this despots in the purpose of his own is-turns this despots in the the purpose of his own is-turns, on the runs of public liberty." What words, to be spoken by the founder of the American Re-table founder of the American strong and adding more thic, or more fortunate than his competitors, hir absolute power of a magic and absoluted in interior and in the charles and a some polytopic for the control of the charles and a some polytopic and a so esodar pur firmes of men to securify and echoen The disorders and miscrice which result, gridually at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. ties, is itself a most horrid despotism. But this leads commune pire berberregt pe most porrid enoumio barty dissension, which in different ages and another, shirpened by the spirit of revenge natural enem? The alternate domn ion of o ie faction over in its Resiret tachness, and it is truly their worst oppiesed, but in those of the popular form it is seen all governments, more or less stiffed, controlled, or the hum in mind the exists under different shapes in generally it is unfortunately meeparable from our inture, bayes gais an the strongest passions of perty "Let me now ward you, in the most solemn man-ner, agrinset the dineful effects of the spirit of party

> (1) See Ann. Res. 1796. State Papers, 293. This great man observes, in this admirable com-

withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each than a name, where the government is too feeble to adjusted, its surest guirdian. It is indeed little else as is consistent with the potitice security of liberty is indispensable, Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted. extensive as ours, a government of as much viscous nagement of your common interests, in a country so from the endiese rariely of he pothesis and opinion. thesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change, foculty in an angles, upon the mere credit of by podency of the existing constitution of a country, that the surest standard by which to test the real tenas of other human metatrious, that experiment is as me cess ity to fix the true ch iracter of governments, Do invited, remember that time and habit are at least and thus to undernine what cannot be directly overtheover, in all the banges to which you may tions which will impair the energy of the system, be to effect in the forms of the constitution afternaspecious the prefexts. One method of assemt may ledged authority, but also that you restel with care comprusince treegalar oppositions to its acknowterminent, and the perminence of jour present position .. Coward, the preservation of your go-which inherited in its years the genuine principles of British freedom. revolutions of other states, real liberty has arisen in that country alone, communicated to her own offspring, and that, amidst the convulsions and dismember, received its first rude shock from the courage which she had which neither the ambition of Louis My nor the power of Aspoleon, could herself, and indulge with satisfaction in the reflection, that that rast empire pe schiered, and the great qualities which he exhibited, in the confest with her dominions, she may at least feel a legitimate pride in the victories which number him among those who have extended her provinces or augmented birth, even amidst Transadantic wilds, to such a man, and if she cannot Restern beobje purpeston ed It it is the bighest glory of England to have given state, closed his career by a voluntary relinquishment of the poner which a poant torsed his country, by his exertions, to the rank of an independent nes a Cromnell without his ambition, a Sylla without his crimes and after infercourse bein een the mother country and its emancipated offspring. He shortly before his resignation, ratified a treaty of friendly and commercial rice to cultivate the friendship of Great Britain, and by his easting vote, successful resistance to English oppression, he closed it by the narmest ad-

CHAPTER XXII,

INTERNAL TRANSACTIONS AND MAYAL CAMPAIGN OF GREAT BRITAIN IN 1797.

ARGUMENT.

descent in Pembroke Bay-Capture of Trinidad-Death of Mr. Burke-Ilis Character. Effect of this Victory—Honours bestowed on Admiral Duncan and Six John Larvis—Abortive Victory—Birth and Parentage of Selson—His Character—Buttle of Camperdonn - Immensor -First appearance of Relson and Collingwood-Great effect produced in Europe by this at this Crisis-The Autiny was totally unconnected with France-Battle of St.-Vincent's -Admirable Conduct of Mr. Pitt on the occasion-Clorious Firmness of Admiral Duncan Conduct of the Channel Pleet-The mutineers at length submit. Parker is tried and executed against the Autineers passes by a great majority—The Insurgents become divided—Patriotic London-Firmness of the King and Government-Roble Conduct of Parliament-Bill ni nottenrotzenod ludbeord—orok odt ta guituk znimrell.—ontlejozid znirotzor ni zboodouz Insurgents-The demands of the Fleet are granted by Government, and Lord Howe at length tents in the Savy - First breaks out in the Channel Fleet-Perfeet Order maintained by the Year-Naval Preparations of France and Spain-Mutny in the Fleet-Origin of the Disconthis subject—Aryuments for and against a Continuance of the War-Supplies voted for the Arguments on the other side by Mr. Pitt-It is rejected by Parliament-Reflections on brought forward by Mr. Grey-Ilis Plan of Reform, and Arguments in support of it-Set of Causes which affect the Volue of Covernment Paper-Parliamentary Reform is rary, then till the Conclusion of the War-Immense Consequence of this Change-Double ment-bill perpetuating this Suspension brought in and carried by Mr. Pitt; at first tempo-Important Order in Council suspending Cash Payments-Debates on the subject in Parlia-Cloomy Aspect of Public Affairs in England in the beginning of 1797-Crisis of the Bank-

Attnocen the war had now continued four years, and it was obvious to all the world that England and France were the principals in the contest, yet these two states had not as yet come into immediate and violent collision. Inferior powers required to be struck down, weaker states to be removed from the combat, before the leaders of the fight dealt their blows at each other; like the champions of chivalry, who were separated in the commencement, before the leaders of the dight dealt their blows at each ment of the affray by subordinate knights, and did not engage in mortal comment of the affray by subordinate knights, and did not engage in mortal comment of the affray by subordinate knights, and did not engage in mortal comment.

The period, however, was now approaching, when this could no longer continue, and the successes of France had been such as to compel Britain to fight, not merely for victory, but existence. All the allies with whom, and for whose protection she had engaged in the contest, were either struggling in the extremity of disaster, or openly arrayed under the banners of her enemies. Austria, after a desperate and heroic resistance in Italy, was preparing for the defence of her last barriers in the passes of the Alps. Holland was virtually incorporated with the conquéring Republic. Spain had recently joined its forces; the whole conquéring Republic. Spain had recently arrayed against Great Britain, and all men were sensible that, in spite of her maritime superiority, she had in the preceding winter narrowly escaped invasion in the most vulnerable quarter, and owed to the winds and the invasion in the most vulnerable quarter, and owed to the winds and the waves her exemption from the horrors of civil war.

The aspect of public affairs in Britain had never been so clouded since the commencement of the war, nor indeed during the whole of the 19th rencommencement of the war, nor indeed during the whole of the 19th rencommencement.

penditure in all departments of goscimment, and the enormous loans to cause of this column, was to be found in the excessive and extravagant exange ministere, that the real

Luos Addequa aqu sopun pe .

peq uom Baigaiqt ffe ifniqu that enspending to of guino our ern tibere to any temporary disastice, but rehement debate in both Houses of Parliament. On the one hand, it was urged in Great Britain, was unmediriely made the subject of anxious and ter see and unportant const quences to the prosperty and fabric of society This frest and momentous measure, fraught with such lasting BO PASTO E

etal credit of the country (2) means of restoring one zuranten to encom

'ղչբշ ա العرسون دهم موه م Jusp adene Louns I

pences, and were on the verge of meolyenes, when an order in mbon that establishment that they were reduced to payment to six-Inter ant es, educa easily gaulosotiggs ed of bemees that a some buldnort hat ar alenthe dread of invasion, and the anxiets of every man to convert his paper into the close of that year, by the run upon the country banks, which arose from severely experienced through the whole of 1796, was brought to a crisis in earnestly represented to government. The pressure arising from these causes, the peril of the continued advances for the imperial loans was strongly and assistance from them, and during the whole of that and the following year wish that he would so arrange his finances as not to depend on any further bank directors informed the Chancellor of the Exchequer that it was their January 1795, the influence of these causes was so severely fell, that the extensive loans to the Imperial government had occasioned. So early as and parily to the great drains upon the specie of the country, which the demand for gold and silver, which resulted from the distresses of commerce, period the bank had experienced a pressure for money, owing partly to the gagements, would have proved fatal to the credit of government. For a long a free state, results from long-continued fidelity in the discharge of its enacquainted with the unlimited confidence in government that, in cross of the first of these disasters was one which, in a despote state un-vailed which is at once the cause and the effect of public misfortune (1) city of note in the empire, and that general distrust and depression preministers and an alteration of government were presented from almost every they stood at the commencement of the contest, petitions for a change of three per cents were sold as low as 51, having fillen to that from 98, at which of this accumulation of disasters n as a rapid fall of the public securities, the on the bank threatened a total dissolution of public credit. The consequence mercial embarrassments nere rapidly increasing, and the continued pressure provailed in many districts of Ireland, discontents and suffering in all, comspirit raged with uncommon violence in every part of the empire. Insurrections while the prospect of success was continually diminishing Party sures to be taken for its ultimate regulation(1). report on the funds and engagements of the bank of England, and the meaand therefore that the matter should be referred to a secret committee, to vency, and the necessity which existed for the measure which was adopted, was indispensable, however, that Parliament should be satisfied of this solinterval which had elapsed since the Order in Council was issued; that it engagements, and so the public had already become convinced, in the short abou it! that the bank was perfectly able ultimately to make good all its to meet the heavy demands which unexpected circumstances had brought nent regulation, but a temporary expedient to enable the bank to gain time make bank-notes a legal tender; that the measure adopted was not a permafriends of administration, that it never was the intention of government to already so severely suffered. On the other hand, it was contended by the costly expeditions, from which both the national honour and security had sumption, augmented expenditure, and a continuance of the frantic and the value of bank-notes, a rise in the price of all the articles of human conbe seen as in a mirror in the adjoining Republic of France; a constant fall in foreign states; that the consequences of this measure were certain, and might pay in specie was never again imposed till Mr. Peel's act in 1819. till the conclusion of a general peace (2); and the obligation on the bank to ofterwords renewed from time to time; and, in Sovember 1797, continued The bill was limited in its operation to the 24th June; but it was arrest on meane process for payment of debt between man and the nace jo noisajo collectors of taxes, and have the effect of stopping the issuing of At length, vided, that bank-notes should be received as a legal tender by the bill for the restriction of payments in specie was introduced, which pronecessary, for a limited time, to suspend the eash payments. Upon this, a ing a balance of L.5,800,000 in favour of the establishment; but that it was were 1.17,597,000, while its debts were only 1.15,770,000, leavsuspension, appointed, which reported shortly after that the funds of the Bank This measure having been earlied by Mr. Pitt, a committee was mits ultimate consequences, all but the disasters of a revolution. creation of property in some, and destruction of it in others, which equalled, bouring poor: a vacillation of prices, unparalleled in any age of the world, a creased wages, general prosperity, and occasional depression among the laprodigious profile, and frequent disasters among the commercial rich: inand extravagant habits in all classes of society; unbounded speculation, in the value of money; increased expenditure, the growth of sanguine ideas beneficial and glorious; the continued and progressive rise of rents, and fall system must be ascribed ultimate effects as disastrous, as the immediate were rope, in English pay, against France, on the banks of the Rhine. To the same at length to a triumphant issue, and arrayed all the forces of Eastern Euthe Roman people in the zenith of their power; which brought the struggle war, and to maintain for years armaments greater than had been raised by enabled the empire to carry on for so long a period so costly a •อ¤แะทุว tain, which ultimately produced such astonishing effects; which

រសារពាធាវ

Such was the commencement of the paper system in Great Bri-

When government paper is made, either directly, or by implication, a legal tender in all the transactions of life, two different causes may conspire

[Cuap XXII. HISTORY OF PUROPE,

104

former, seldom exceeds a duplication of their wonted amount an effect, hundredth part of its debts - whereas, the variation of prices arising from the assigned, because government may not be deemed capable of discharging a tion possesses of making good its engagements. To this fall no limits can be distrust in the ultimate solvency of government, or the means which the nathe far greater, and sometimes unbounded depreciation, which arises from from an excess in the supply of these articles in the market. The second is arises from the same causes, as the fall in the money price of grain or caltle, hand to purchase This change of prices proceeds on the same principles, and the nation which it represents, or is destined in its transmission from hand to ing medium, when compared with the commodities in the general market of without any distrust in government, from the mere increase in the circulatfrom the unrestrained issue of paper, and this effect takes place consequent rise in the price of every article of life, which results soorgob, Pol The first is the general fall in the ralue of money, and to test to speet prices, tending to the same effect, but in very different

of government was almost extinct, a dinner which, when paid in gold, paid in hank-notes than in gold, whereas, in trance, when the credit country, or that at any period a higher price was exacted for articles when there does not appear to have ever been any traces of the latter effect in this hotvithstanding all that the spirit of party may have alleged, nary difference beincen prices when discharged in a paper and a metallic not only a rise in prices, even when paid in gold or silver, but an extraordiraine when paid in specie and when paid in paper, the mark of the latter is, prices of every commodity, but without any difference between the money The true test of the former effect is to be found in a general rise in the time, to make one-half of the property of the kingdom change hands honever, which is perfectly sufficient, it continued for any considerable witnessed in our history saffering among the industrious classes long exceeded any thing ever before and, upon the recurrence to a metallic currency in 1819, the distress and doubled in price, and continued above twenty sears at that high standard, the most wide-spread effects, in this country Liery article of life was speedily thousand france But the former consequences prevailed long, and with cost a louis (1), could only be discharged in assignate for twenty-eight of representation, which is chiefly remarkable as containing the outlines Grey, brought forward his promised motion for a change in the system of continuing the present system On the Both May, Mr., afterwards Earl, with consternation, and di posed many true patriots to doubt the possibility failure of the attempt to negotiate with Irance, had filled all men's minds pany' the mating of the feet, which will be immediately noticed, and the bear tornard their favourite project of Parliamentary Reform, as the Burid of thinutoqqo olderuorst s till bomeod noticoqqO oifT.

turned should be mereased from 92 to 112, that the franchise should be electors should remain as it was, but that the members they re-British constitution He proposed that the qualification for county he ples of affairs in 1851, and subsequently made so givil a change on the of that rash scheme which convided the nation when he was at the head extended to copyholders, and lease-holders holding leases for a certain dura-

0 1 1x 3£1 (1)

from them all the rational and virtuous of the community." and the power of the disaffected be permanently crippled, by severing the blessings of the constitution, and they will join with ardour in its defence; things was death. "Give, on the other hand," said he, "to the people and though this road might be pursued for a season, that the end of these complaint could not be silenced by a sullen refusal to remedy the grievance, exist while the House was constituted as it then was; that the voice of itself had once declared, that no upright or useful administration could them into republicanism and revolution; that the head of the government demands should be conceded in time; that further resistance would drive of the people, which rendered it absolutely indispensable that their just now a deep and wide-spread spirit of disaffection prevalent in the minds the ready instrument of their abuses and encroachments; that there was watching with jealous care over the other branches of the legislature, into mons had become perverted from its original office, which was that of from the gradual and growing influence of the crown, the House of Comwho seconded the motion, further argued, in an eloquent speech, that, scats not for the public good, but their private advantage. Mr. Erskine, place in the legislature, namely, the nominees of great families, who obtained and those only excluded whom no man would wish to see retain their the respectable classes of the community, would be adequately represented; By this scheme, he contended, the landowners, the merchants, and all dom at once, and a large portion of the smaller boroughs be disfranchised. proposed further, that the elections should be taken over the whole kinghe returned by one description of persons alone, namely householders. He tion; and that the whole remainder of the members, 400 in number, should the French Revolution, which had entirely altered the grounds on which the murder were the necessary attendants on any innovation since the era of conceal the approaches of revolution; and that rapine, confastration, and enemies of the constitution. That reform was only a disguise assumed to retormers would induce them to make common cause with the irreconcilable and he could never give credit to the assertion, that the temper of moderate of reform as a practical advantage, and maintained it on constitutional views; rope,—were actuated by similar views with those who prosecuted the cause and fell with the success or decline of Jacobinism in every country of Euprinciples had produced in a neighbouring state, -who, on the contrary, rose that the men who remained unmoved by the dismal spectacle which their was very far indeed from being the case. That it was impossible to believe since the commencement of the French Revolution, it was too plain that this secure that they would rest content with the redress of real grievances; but so still, had men's minds been in a calm and settled state, and had he been that he had himself at one period been a reformer, and he would have been render it soon impossible to maintain the defence of the body of the place; now deleaguered on all sides, and to surrender the ontworks would only still more extensive acquisitions; that the fortress of the constitution was make every acquisition the means of demanding with greater effect principles which would never be satisfied with any concession, but would probably induce. That it was clearly not prudent to give an opening to benefit was worth the chance of the mischief it might possibly, or would sentation might not be attended with advantage, but whether the degree of associate by question was not whether some alteration in the system of repre-On the other hand, it was contended by Mr. Pitt, that the real

[CHAP XXII INSTORY OF EUROPE. 90 L

in so far as it excites democratic ambition, confers mordinate power, and the people essential to the preservation of freedom, it necessarily does good, experienced grievance, or supplies a practical defect, or concedes powers to temper of the times, it is likely to be followed. In so far as it remedies any nale produce, and the opposite consequences with which, according to the double effect which any change in the constitution of government must althe country, one important consideration, to be always kept in mind, is the n bich has so long dieided, and still dieides so many able men in Reference In deciding on the difficult question of Parliamentary Reform, (1) Ce ieniege 8ce to girrotem i ed ieol es m nouom able in theory and unsupported by experience On a division, Mr Grey's to that, the specific plan, non brought fornard, was both highly exceptionthe government in the present heated state of men s ininds, but, in addition has espoused. That these objections applied to any alteration of it septends question of reform was rested, and the class of men by whom it physical these principles to the question of Partiamentary Reform, as it beobled spores of the Emerald Isle quility, brought only mereased agitation and more rehement passions to the opation to the fierce outers of the frish Catholics, instead of peace and trauof the State-General, did not avert his tragic fate and the granting of emanunhappy monarch to the block, the submission of I outs to all the demands of Chailes I, extorted by the vehemence of the long Partirment, brought that the boroughs, led to the glories of Luropean cirilication, while the concession gradual relatation of the fetters of feudal tyranay, and the emanerpation of extravagant expectations. Examples exist on both sides of the rule, the demands will probably lead to nothing but merersed confusion, and more the people in a state of evertement from other causes, concession to their peral from a denial of change at the east is inconsi lerable or imaginary, and tinuance, unalloyed good may be expected from its removal, and serious grievance is great, and the public disposition unruffled, save by its conny hich these opposite ingredients are mingled in the proposed measure, and on the temper of the people among whom it is to take place. If the real of making any considerable change, therefore, depends on the proportions sartly does mischief, and may lead to the dissolution of society. The expedience an alone or tosters passions inconsistent with public tranquillity, it neces-

152 ELE TET 355 and Test terelf 151 616 i sex low Ault HeT (1)

and soon entered on a splendid and untrialled enter of ploty; it was conthroan into confusion, the nation became daily freez and more unitid, nes refused by the Commons in 1737, and so far fro n being culter enslaved the flame and the event has proved the truth of these princil he, reform where it was not eithed for, and such a concession is only throwing fuel on to the necessities of freedom, but to the desire of poner in circumstances granted, therefore, would neather have been to impatituace of suffering, nor mars and additional expenses could have been anticipated. The concession, it greater infusion of popular power into the legislature, nothing but fictory far from being pacific, are the nost ambitious of initiary remorn from a and experience has proved in every age, that the most democratic states, so diminished in any great deares the public burdens without slopping the nat. or removed any prolific source of discontent, because they could not have loudly demanded could not have rediessed any considerable real grievance, nas then agitated, there seems no doubt that the changes which nere so ceded by the Commons, in a period of comparative tranquillity, in 1851, and a century will not develope the ultimate effects of the change, which, hitherto at least, has done any thing rather than augment the securities of durable liberty. Still less was it called for as a safeguard to real freedom, because, though it was constantly refused for four-and-thirty years afterwards, the power of the people steadily increased during that period, and at length effected a great democratic alteration in the constitution.

most hollow intentions. evinced by the British ministers in the course of a negotiation begun with the ties (1), which had been unfortunately gained through the diplomatic skill the wrong, and throw upon its government the blame of continuing hostiliobject, it was evident, was only to gain time, to put France apparently in impossible to expect that a victorious enemy would accede; that the real posed very different terms from those actually offered, and to which it was nister was not sincere in his desire for a negotiation, or he would have proanswered by increased conquests and more splendid victories; that the mievery fall; that all the predictions of failure in its resources had only been to the arms of the Republic, which, like Antwus, had risen stronger from it had been undertaken; that Holland and Flanders had successively yielded taxes, the nation was farther than ever from achieving the objects for which dition of 200,000,000,000 to the national debt, and 9,000,000 annually to the Opposition, it nas contended that, after four years of war, the adplace in the debates of the British Parliament. On the side of the The question of continuing the war again occupied a prominent would serve as courier on the occasion (2)." would sanction the measure, nor an individual in the British dominions who which would sign the proposals, that there is not a heart in the House that all they shall impose? I hope there is not a hand in his Majesty's councils haughty and supercitious republic, to do what they require, and submit to energy worthy of the English name, or to prostrate ourselves at the feet of a In these circumstances, then, are we to persevere in the war with a spirit and ambassador insulted, and not even the semblance of terms offered in return. to obtain better terms for our allies; but our offers have been rejected, our divided; we have offered peace on the condition of giving up all our conquests the result of the conduct we have pursued, England united and France to secret preparations for renewed hostilities; we may expect to see, as such terms as will secure its real blessings, and not serve as a cover merely disappointment without despair. "We wish for peace," said he, "but on regret and disappointment, but it was regret without despondency, and into which we had been unwillingly dragged. This failure was a subject of by which he had fondly hoped that a termination would be put to a confest Mr. Pitt lamented the sudden and unforeseen stop put to the negotiations,

Supplies Parliament having determined, by a great majority in both supplies were rotted to the magnitude of the armaments which were required. The proportioned to the magnitude of the armaments which were required. The sums for the expenses of the war, in two successive budgets, amounted, exclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, In this immense aggreestclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, In this immense aggreestclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, In this immense aggreestclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, In this immense aggreestclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, In this immense aggreestclusive of the interest of the debt, to L.A.,800,000, and another of L.A.,900,000,000 and another of L.A.,900,000,000 and another of L.A.,900,000,000 and another of L.A.,900,000,000 and another of L.A.,900,000,000,000 and another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000 another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000 another of L.A.,900,000,000 another of L.A.,900,000 another of L.A.,90 entrants appeared in the secrety and ability with which the incasires of the speedily obtain redress of their grievances. The influence of these new sua hed the earlors, that, by acting unmannously and decide fiv, they would from commercial embarras ment had drigen mit the nave, and who I ernumber of persons of superior station, whom the general distress arising blamed of, were rendered more exasperating by the inflammatory acts of a the officers towards the men was harsh and revolung. These crits, long comto tanbura with excessive and undue severity, and that the conduct of distributed, and an undue proportion given to the officers, that discipline been augmented since the reign of Charles II, that prize-money was une fually serietes of life had more than doubled in price, their pay had not and its olida sind reasons the callors complained with reason, that while all the existed, and must, if unredressed, have somer or later, I rought on an evthe adjoining states, but it had its origin in a variety of real grievances which the democratic and turbulent spirit which had spread from I rance through enied in the British navy This was, no doubt, partly brought to maturity by serious consideration, a feeling of discontent had for a very long period pre-Unknown to gorernment, or at least without their having taken it into

we are a commence the period as the period and and in a quantic rhere it was a calamity of a hand and in a quantic rhere it was conserved in this was the famous fluting in the Liest, which, ai the very most denicable, and her thrusces most embardable, and her thrusces most embardable, and her thrusces may embard a character of the period of the configuration of th

Figure 4. Intailed issue of the provious altempt against Ireland, the indeficition of the communication of the communication of the communication of the Channel Trenty series that series of the Channel Trenty series alone of the Channel Trenty and the Channel Trenty and the Creaty of the Channel, where the control of the Creaty of the Channel, where they expected to assemble sixty five or seventy single of the lime, a force much greater than assemble sixty five or seventy single of the lime, a force much greater than assemble sixty five or seventy single of the lime, a force much greater than assemble sixty five or seventy single of the lime, and or the control of the clearing of the control of the clear of the control of the creaty of the control of the creaty at the lines of the lime, and or Lead Bradgort, in the cleaned of the creaty of the

ment To definy the inferest of these loans, now above, to the anount of a mount of a long of the control of the now become tery considerable how ise discouraged by the unformalcontents were taken, and the general extension of the conspiracy, before its existence was known to the officers of the fleet (4).

First breaks The prevalence of these discontents was made known to Lord out in the Champel Howe and the Lords of the Admiralty, by a variety of anonymous Field.

Field communications, during the whole spring of 4797; but they met with no attention; and, upon enquiry at the captains of vessels, they all declared, that no mutinous disposition existed on board of their respective ships. Aleanwhile, however, a vast conspiracy, unknown to them, was already organized, which was brought to maturity on the return of the Channel fleet to ganized, which was brought to maturity on the return of the Channel fleet to the Queen Charlotte, by Lord Bridport, to weigh anchor, on the 15th of that month, instead of obeying, its crew gave three cheers, which were returned by every vessel in the fleet, and the red flag of mutiny was hoisted on every by every vessel in the fleet, and the red flag of mutiny was hoisted on every weekly seed to be a constituted of the charlotte.

This unexpected mutiny produced the utmost alarm both in the charged (5). the pay of wounded seamen was not continued till they were cured or dismained at L.7; that their allowance of provisions was insufficient, and that that the pensions of Chelsea were L.15, while those of Greenwich still re-Charles II, though every article of life had advanced at least one-third in value; complained; that their pay had not been augmented since the reign of loyalty to their king and country, but detailing the grievances of which they in the most respectful, and even touching terms, declaring their unshaken warded, one to the Admiralty, and one to the House of Commons, drawn up that betrayed it. Three days afterwards two petitions were forevery vessel as a signal of the punishment that would be inflicted on those administered to every man in the fleel, and ropes reeved to the yard-arm of ships to meet in Lord Howe's cabin, an oath to support the common cause were sent ashore without molestation; delegates were appointed from all the the most scrupulous attention was paid to the officers; those most obnoxious numanity and moderation; order and discipline were universally observed; pletely in possession of the insurgents, they used their power firmly, but with · Perfect In this pernous crisis, the oriented to a state of obedience, but tained by the the utmost to bring back their crews to a state of obedience, but tained by the to the utmost to bring back their crews in vain. Meanwhile, the fleet being commitment of the conference of the oriented by the fleet being commitment. In this perilous crisis, the officers of the fleet exerted themselves masthead (2).

The demodiately transferred to Portsmouth to endeavour to appease it.

Earl Spenser hastened to the spot, and after some negotiation, the granted by the fleet were acceded to by the Admiralty, it being agreed that the pay of able-bodied seamen should be raised to a shilling a-day; that of petty officers and ordinary seamen in the same proportion, and the Greenwich pension, augmented to ten pounds. This, however, the seamen refused to pension, augmented to ten pounds. This, however, the seamen refused to liament; the red flag, which had been struck, was rehoisted, and the fleet, liament; the red flag, which had been struck, was rehoisted, and the fleet, open mutiny. Government, upon this, sent down Lord Howe to reassure the mutineers, and convince them of the good faith with which they were animutineers, and convince them of the good faith with which they were animated. The personal weight of this illustrious man, the many years he had mated. The personal weight of this illustrious man, the many years he had commanded the Channel fleet, the recollection of his glorious victory at its past, the whole fleet returned to its duty, and a few day afternards faithfully keep its promises, and grant an unlimited amnesty for the tions, and in consequence of his assurance that government nould head, all conspired to induce the sailors to listen to his representa-HISTORK OF EUROPE,

2 m el. Je vn ≥ n The bloodless termination of this revolt, and the concession to the of Brest barbour (1) but to sea, amounting to thenty-one ships of the line, to resume the blockade e stavouss drew themselves up in order of battle across the Thames, stopped all vessels Texel, excepting his own line-of-battle ship and two fingates. These ships nere joined by all the ressels of that fleet, from the blockading station off the squadron, broke out into open muting, and on the 6th June they a mg 19 the 22d May, the fleet at the Nore, forming part of I ord Duncan's Lep per Joy throughout the nation, but this satisfaction was of short duration. On seamen of what all felt to be their just demands, diffused a general deemed totally madinisable by government far in other respects, and were couched in such a menacing strain, as to be which had been overlooked by the Channel mutineers (2), but they went so their demands related chiefly to the unequal distribution of prize-money, was distinguished by undaunted resolution and no small share of ability. Sandwich, who assumed the title of President of the Hoating Republic, and of the insurrection was a man of the name of Parker, a seaman on board the ing, to take their station in the middle of the formidable array. At the head for the fleet, and compelled the ships, whose crews were thought to be naver-Come up or down the river, appointed delegates and a provisional government sternation so great, and never was England placed so near the verge of descommencement of the new serer, during the whole contest, new the concents nere sold as low as forty-five, after having been nearly 100 before the upon the brinest bearts, and such was the seneral panie, that the three per the cessation of their wonted palinents from the treasury Despair served the public crediture apprehended the speeds dissolution of box ernment, and dreaded a stoppage of the colliers, and all the usual supplies of the metropolis, secured on the point of deserting the national colours. The citizens of London suspended payment, and now the fleet, the pride and glory of England, be fating at once, their armies had been defeated, the bank had Dradlet n + o' n 1a Loudon sternation seized all classes in the nation. Every thing seemed to At the intelligence of this alarming insurrection, the utmost con-

most encircule measures to face the danger. All the buors at the mouth of had been redressed, government resolved to make a stand, and adopted the present formidable meurrection, and conscious that the chief real grice ances Channel fleet had an mented the audacuty of the carbes, and given rise to the odney to and emergened. Perceising that the success of the mutineers in the danger could shake, and a minister at the helm whose capacity was diek or the world, a monarch was on the throne whose trumes no Fortunaich for Great Britam, and the cause of freedom through-(c) nonana

the Thames nere removed, Specences, which was menaced with a bombard-

(1) Y20- Keg 1" st. 215-211

(1) Aun Peg 1197 214 215 Jom. 205 50 (1)

cess to the harbour. These energetic measures restored the public confidence; the nation rallied round a monarch and an administration who were not wanting to themselves in this extremity; and all the armed men, sailors, and merchants in London, voluntarily took an oath to stand by their country, in this eventful crisis (1).

cordingly passed (5). a revival of these affections,—was justly deemed conclusive, and the bill accountry, would probably induce the return to duty which could alone obtain their duty, and that a separation from their wives, their children, and their misguided men were the sole avenue which remained open to recall them to submission. But Mr. Pitt's reply, -that the tender feelings of these brave but ciliation and concession were the only course which could ensure speedy and a few of the most violent of the Opposition, upon the ground that conliable to the same punishment. This bill was opposed by Sir Francis Burdett, who should endeavour to seduce either soldiers or sailors from their duty were the revolt had been declared by proclamation; and all persons any person to hold communication with the sailors in mutiny after both Houses of Parliament. By this act, it was declared death for bill for the suppression of the muliny passed by a great majority, through worthy feelings, the Opposition at length joined the administration, and a three centuries of glory (2)." Availance by this splendid example to more he, "to mutinous sailors? Never, for in one moment we should extinguish eloquence into the balance in favour of his country. "Shall we yield," said came nobly forward, and threw the weight of his great name and thrilling danger into the means of overturning the administration; but Mr. Sheridan Mr. Fox, at first held back, and seemed rather disposed to turn the public taken into consideration. The greater part of the Opposition, and especially municated to both Houses by the King on the 1st June, and immediately Parlament of its glorious history. The revolt of the fleet was formally com-The conduct of Parliament, on this trying occasion, was worthy the 15th, three other sail of the line and two frigates openly left them, and and abandoned the insurgents, amidst a heavy fire from the whole line; on insubordination. On the 9th June, two ships of the line slipped their cables rat disapprobation of the nation, gradually checked the spirit of getic conduct of both Parliament and government, and the genethe Channel JO 10npuos return to their duty. This remonstrance, coupled with the ener-Datriotic tism, by reprobating their proceedings, and earnestly imploring them to sailors on board the Channel fleet gave a splendid proof of genuine patriosensible that they had engaged in a desperate enterprise; the whole nature of the demands on which they insisted. By degrees they became with the whole nation in which they were engaged, and the unreasonable insurgents, by representing the hopeless nature of the contest The insurgents however, gave government lime to sow dissension among the fusal, the immediate recurrence to extreme measures. These parleys, prought forward to exclude all accommodation, and justify, by their rethreatening a manner, that they had the appearance of having been mulineers; but their demands were so unreasonable, and urged in so paired on the first alarm to Sheerness, and received a deputation from the Meanwhile a negotiation was conducted by the Admiralty, who re-withliaw one reach from the blackade of Brest, wedleuted in presence of tuch a rescut, and the most and, nevertheless, recollect, that the in the bolt and, nevertheless, recovered from a financial extent transfer tine to pe for which with a board were thanks were to errotest has a mann warmen and to harry que I let ever, averes he fore shopped to a st st is a show the sere, averes the fore surpresed in pure of the Strates a small of a males forth, its that I have been surpresed by the subsets to the state of the lug they have no priesantes. To be deserted by my flest in the face of the enemy, is a dug are which with a sectionful brest, from whit I have heltely neves of the diselfection of the diecky I call a diselfections (3) " My Lada, -1 nece more tall you berthit.

Cadis or the Treeff it was the frances ad encined human beart (5). His erem nere dissolved in tears, and declated, in the and manif eloquence, so nell known in antiquit, which at once metts the ne cren on dech, and addressed them ...

on the station in this extremity his fire and at length the admiral, in his own sl in presence of the enemy. They were suredily followed by several others; ships of the line deserted to the mulineers, leaving hun with an inferior force

int came Couce of the insurfection was received, and immediately four bruve He was with his fleet, blockading the Texel, when intelli-Admiral Duncan's conduct at this critical juncture was above an Icgt' " " " pottop and unless a due display of firmness accompany daene non ste o porder upon vices, but even from acts of justice the most deplorable conce-

on the least opening being afforded, to run riot, ingt not out, we out mine pur poes of those ve

hore multiment they elecked the spirit of democracy which had arisen out of the navy, while by resolutely withstanding the audacious demands of the causes of complaint, and detached from their cause an one patrione, or co to shusman tent at the guideoconceding all the just demands of humanity, of Justice and concession, which can alone bring a government of political medon, and the happiest example of that union of firmness and conduct adopted towards the insurgents may be regarded as a masterprece event in the reign of George III and in the administration of Pitt(2) The it had been placed since the Spanish Armada, is the most glorious 10 28730 and the extrestion of the nation from the greatest perit in mich to Part of The suppression of this dangerous revolt with so little bloodshed, glorious victory of Camperdovn (1) under sentence of death, were pardoned, by royal proclamation, after the on board the prison-ship, and got safe to Calais, and a large number, still leaders of the revolt nere found guilty and excented, but some escaped from only that merey would be extended to his associates. Several of the other firmness, acknowledging the justice of his sentence, and hoping patnoora has by 12 solemn trial, condemned to death; which he underwent with great. ti 19 Avet Parket of the meurrection, was seized on board his own ship, and, after a The mullineers I'm cent the ocean and the metropolis was restored Parker, the leader remaining ships struck the red flag of muting, and the communication beothers followed their example; and at length, on the foth, the whole took refuge under the cannon of Sheerness, on the following day, several most energetic manner, their unshaken loyalty, and resolution to abide by him in life or death. Encouraged by this heroic conduct, he declared his determination to maintain the blockade, and, undismayed by the defection of so large a part of his squadron, remained off the Texel with his little but faithful remnant. By stationing one of the ships in the offing, and frequently making signals, as if to the remainder of the fleet, he succeeded in deceiving the Dutch admiral, who imagined that the vessels in sight were only the inshore squadron, and kept his station until the remainder of his ships joined him after the suppression of the insurrection (1).

The multipy in straight of the time that this formidable mutiny was instigated by the arts of the French government. But though was instigated by the arts of the French government. But though fortune, and anxious to turn it to the best advantage, and though the revolutions their which was abroad was unquestionably one cause of the commotion, there is no reason to believe that it arose from the instigation of the companees at all connected with any treasonable or seditious projects. On the contrary, after the minutest investigation, it appeared that the griedine contrary, after the minutest investigation, it appeared that the griedine contrary, after the minutest investigation, it appeared that the griedine when they were throughout true to their country, and that, at the rerestine when they were throughout true to their country, and that, at the rerestine when they were blockading the Thames in so menacing a manner, they would have fought the French fleet with the same spirit, as was afterwards winced in the glorious victory of Camperdown (2).

The ultimate consequences of this insurrection, as of most other popular gommotions which originate in real grievances, and are candidly but firmly met by government, were highly beneficial. The attention of the cabinet was forcibly turned to the sources of discontent in the navy, and from that a series of changes which, in a very great degree, improved the condition of raised to their present standard of a shilling a-day (5); and those admirable regulations were soon after adopted in regard to pensions, prize-money, and regulations were soon after adopted in regard to pensions, prize-money, and retired allowances, which have justly endeared the memory of the Duke of retired allowances, which have justly endeared the memory of the Duke of rork and Lord Melville to the privates of the army and navy.

Danie of But whatever may have been the internal dissensions of the Bri-Cape St.

Cape St.

Ca

has overflowed, and made us wanton. The allwise Providence has given us this cleek as a wanting, and I hope we shall improve by it. On Ilim, then, let us trust, where our only security is to be found. I find there are many good men among us: for my own part, I have had full confidence in all in this allp, and ence more the given and in this ship, and ence more beg to express my appreciation of your conduct.

Jiay God, who has thus far conducted you, conducted you, who has thus far conducted you, the glory inner to do so; and may the British nary, the glory and support of our country, he restored to its wonted splendour, and he not only the bulwarh of British but the terror of the world. But this can only be effected by a strict adherence to our duty and obedence; and let us pray that the changhty God may dience; and it in the right way of thinking—God blees you all! "—Ann. Reg. 1797, 214.

Jon all! "—Ann. Reg. 1797, 214. Jonn. x. 211.

(2) Ibid. 1797, 219, 221. Jonn x. 220.

I flatter myself, much good may result from your example, by dringing those deinded people to a sense of their duty, which they one not only to their hing and counity, but to themselves, that liberty which has been handed doint wo train that our ancestons, and which, I trust, we shall maintain our ancestors, and which, I trust, we shall maintain to the latest posterrity; and that can only be done by and obtaining abolished themselves by and other, accounted to be and out the latest of a grade of a grade for lunding a comfort will also have from their by will also have a comfort whith the listing, and not like the the same standard leading and out of the lating. And the latest well made to have a served from their duly.

The same standard was a supplied of the same standard latest duly.

The same standard latest duly.

"It has been often my pride with you to look into the Texel, and see a fee which dreaded coming out to meet us. My pride is now humbled indeed? —my feelings cannot easily be expressed. Our cup storms of winter, and at this period lay in the Tagus with fifteen sail of the efforts, repaired various losses which his fleet had sustained during the Jarus, who was stationed off the coast of Portugal, had by the greatest ever recorded even in the splendid annals of the English navy. Admiral mards adopted in 1803, was defeated by one of the most memorable victories the British squadron. This design, the same as that which hapoleon afterharbour, forming a junction with the Dutch fleet, and clearing the Channel of put to sea, with the design of steering for Brest, raising the blockade of that CHAP. AMIL. HISTORY OF EUROPE.

the San fridro, ecremis-four, so close, that a man might leap from the one of the ships which followed (1) Collings ood immediately came alongside but she was again compelled to strike, and tinally taken possession of by one from her antagonist, again borsted her colours, and recommenced the action, pressed by greatly superior forces, passed on, and the Salvador, relieved of beaten encures, and seeing his old nucesmate, Aclson, ashead and hard numb ceased; abou which that noble officer, disdining to take possession a quarter of an hour the Spanish three-decker struck ber colours, and 1 er but such was the tremendous effect of the Englishman's broadsides, that in the action began ٠, ", olid ansold orit . bate/noquios ned) nearly an hour with the utmost fury against fearful odds, which were more noble prize The action, on the part of these gallant men, continued for not point apic, in the confusion of so close a light, to take possession of the polling the former to strike, although it escaped in consequence of Aclson of 112, and succeeded, by a tremendous fire to the right and left, in comdada, of 456 guns, commanded by Admiral Cordova, and the San Josef, tenty-four guns, between two Spanish three-deckers, the Santissima Trini-Captains Coccivenoon and Troubridge, he ran his ship, the Captain, of selumself into the tery middle of the hostile squadron. Brately seconded by design, disregarded his orders, stood directly towards him, and precipitated modore Arreov, who was in the sterningst ship, perceiving his tu than be a close and was wearing round the rear of the British Imes, when Com-Trueppear admiral upon this, endeavoured to regain the lost part of this fleet, their taking any part in the engagement which followed. The Spanish slups, and by a rigorous cannonade, drove them to leenard, so as to prevent the British admiral doubled with his whole force upon mue of the Spanish in regular order of battle. Passing boldly through the centre of their fleet, stragging in disorderly array, in close combat, before they had time to form succeeded in engaging the enemy, who were very loosely scattered, and yet He dren up his fleet in the lines, and bearing down before the wind, received intelligence of their approach, and immediately prepared for battle he metantly put to sea, and was cruising off Cape St -Vicerts, when he line, and six frigates. The moment he heard of the enemy's having sailed, ships, one of which was a three-decker, to stilke to him, with seventy-lour Though Collingwood bad thus alread; forced in Spanish ince-of-battle signal to secure the prize. and nas taken powersion of by the Larely frigate, to whom the Admiral made

The combat was not of long duration, in ten minutes the Spaniard afruch, to the other, the two resels engaging thus at the muzzles of their guns.

While Relson and Collingwood were thus precipitating themselves with English ship lay a perfect wreck beside its two noble prizes. presenting his sword to Relson on his own quarter-deck (4), while the enthusiastic courage; the Spanish admiral speedily hauled down his colours, exclaiming, "Westminster Abbey, or victory!" Mothing could resist such pushed on across it to its gigantic neighbour, himself leading the way, and that the prize was severely galled by a fire from the San Josef, of 142 guns, guns, and speedily hoisted the British colours on the poop; and finding resuming his wonted energy, he boarded the San Kicholas, of seventy-four in succession. No sooner was Nelson relieved by Collingwood's fire, than tissima Trinidada, which already had been assailed by several British ships seeing Nelson's ship effectually succoured, passed on, and engaged the Sangagement, the Spaniard's fire ceased on that quarter; and Collingwood, and actually struck Nelson's balls from the other side. After a short enthe shot from the English ship passed through both the Spanish ressels, to use his own words, you "could not put a bodkin between them," and on the other. So close did he approach the former of these vessels, that, on one side, and the Santissima Trinidada, a huge four-decker of 156 guns, to relieve Nelson, who was now engaged with the San Nicholas and San Josef guns only, yet he was not contented with his achievement, but pushed on vessels, but, after a distant cannonade, retreated in the night towards ing aspect of the English fleet, that they made no attempt to regain their lost consternation produced by the losses they had experienced, and the imposformed a force still greatly superior to the British squadron, yet such was the the detached part of the Spanish fleet rejoined the main body, and thereby of 112 guns, and the San Micholas and San Isidro of 74 each. Towards, evening but the British squadron kept possession of the San Josef and Salvador, each rapidly closed in and deprived Captain Saumarez of his magnificent prize (2): and ultimately effected her escape. The remainder of the Spanish fleet now the captured Spaniard was encouraged, though dismantled, to try to get off, but moved on a-head of the Santissima Trinidada after the admiral, so that fortunately, in the smoke, this vessel did not perceive the token of surrender; passed it, leaving to the ship astern the easy task of taking possession. . had hoisted the white flag on her quarter and the British union fack over it, not heave to, in order to take possession; but thinking it sufficient that she Orion; but that intrepid officer being intent on still greater achievements did and Collingwood, she struck to Captain, now Lord de Saumarez, in the proached her. At length, after having been most gallantly fought by Jarvis decks seemed to threaten destruction to every lessor opponent which apin succession the Santissima Trinidada, whose tremendous fire from her four destructive broadsides into that huge three decker; and passing on engaged Mundo, followed by the Barfleur, Admiral Waldgrave, poured the most his furious attack. The Victory, passing under the stern of the Salvador del was pierced, they were the rear on the larboard, where Relson had begun though from being the one on the starboard tack, by which the enemy's line of 100 guns was also engaged in the most gallant and successful manner; board, the other column of the fleet, headed by Sir John Jarvis in the Victory unexampled hardihood into the centre of the enemy's squadron on the larlingwaed, i. 48, 49. Southey's Melson, i. 170.

⁽¹⁾ Nelsan's Marrative. Collingwaed, i, 53. Col.
lingwaed, i. 48, 49. Southey's Melson, i. 170.
lingwaed, ii, 46, 63. De Saumarez's Life, i. 171.
lingwaed, ii, 46, 51.
lingwaed, ii, 48, 64, Ann. Reg. 1797, 94, 95. App.

911

Velson's 11ght arm (5)

This important victory, which delivered England from all fears of mia-HISTORY OF EUROPE,

Greatener Idmiral lattis followed the beaten fleet to Cadix, whither they in military warfare (1) that element, compared to the triling results which attend fields of carnage which sometimes follow an inconsiderable expenditure of human life on than those bein cen land forces, and a striking example of the great effects staps which struck alone, a signal proof how much less bloody sea-fights are board Aelson's ship, while abore five hundred were lost on board the Spanish with the loss of only three hundred men, of whom nearly one-half were on sion, by preventing the threatened junction of the hostile fleets, nas achie, ed

Spanish ships, Jet they crinced the magnitude of the disaster which they had son (2), and although these attacks nere more mauling than turtful to the Cadiz on three different occasions, under the direction of Commodore Aeldecisive nature of the victory was speedily evinced by the bombardment of ful Erounds the Republicans rested their hopes of subduing this island nay, filled all Lurope with astonishment, and demonstrated on what doubtthe exident superiority of skill and seamanship n high it exinced in the British The defeat of so great an armament by little more than half their number, and product of had retired in the deepest dejection, and with larnished honour

Janis, they were ultimately repulsed, with the loss of seven hundred men and tires successful, and the town for a short time was in the liands of the assarbut though the attack, conducted with his wonted courage and skill, was at ment of Cadiz, he was sent on an expedition against the island of Tenerifle, selves on the same island ther the battle of St - Incents, and the bombatders both at land and sea in that struggle should have first signalized themof Corsica, which he reduced, a singular conteidence, that the greatest leadthe recolutionary contest, he was employed in the suge of Bastia in the island limiselt is a suballern in various actions during the emerican war. Larly in Subsequently he went on a volute to the Greenland seas, and distinguished of a feeble constitution, he was ent on slupboard at the age of thirtien He early evinced so decided a partirlity for a sea life, that, though nas born at birdam Thorpe, in the county of hortolls, on the 20th Septemand was destined to leave a name immortal in the rolls of fame, Horatio Acison, who bore so glorious a part in these engogements, purq g sustained, and inflicted a grievous wound on the pride of the Castilians occasion calculated to call them forth. On one occasion, during a stokent roll) in clanger were so matural to him, that they arose undidden or every The soul nas constantly striving for grant exploits, generoutly and magnant ment, that sacred inc, which is the meanable characteristic of betone min is. contract, and was mecessaitly consumed by that passion for areat achievecountry, like the youth in Tacitus, he lasted danger itself, not the renards of thusiastic, the whole energies of his soul nerre concentrated in the love of his qualities of a consummate commander Centrous, open-bearfed, and enquick determination, and coolness in danger, which constitute the rarest and undecaying energy, delson was also possesed of the eagle glance, the n course . Citled by nature with undannied courage, indomiable resolution, harbour, Nelson embraced him as his deliverer, and commenced a friendship will not leave you." What he promised he performed, and on arriving in bring you in safe: I therefore must not, and, by the help of Almighty God, I took his own trumpet, and in a solemn voice replied, "I feel confident I can trumpet, and, with passionate threats ordered Ball to set him loose. But Ball her hold, and deeming his own case desperate, he seized the speaking in tow. Relson thought, however, that Ball's ship would be lost if she kept storm off Minorea, Melson's ship was disabled and Captain Ball took his vessel.

His whole life was spent in the service of his country; his prejudices, and which continued for life (1).

from none of the obloquy consequent on the fascination of female wickedthat cruelty should never be palliated, and the rival of Rapoleon shielded Naples, history would dwell upon him as a spotless hero; but justice requires serious delinquencies. If a veil could be drawn over the transactions at been subject. In one unhappy instance, however, he was betrayed into more virtue, and to which, heroic characters in all ages have, in a peculiar manner, ardent temperament of his mind; they arose from passions nearly allied to fascination of wickedness. These, weaknesses, indeed, were owing to the perpetually liable to the delusion of art, and sometimes seduced by the of his domestic duties; an ardent lover, he was a faithless husband. He was in a less favourable light. Vain, undiscerning, impetuous, he was regardless genius afloat, only, that this transcendant praise is due; on shore he appears ments as momentous to commemorate. But it is to his public conduct, and the world has seldom characters so illustrious to exhibit, and few achievein the same manner as Napoléon practised in battles at Jand. The history of ing deadlong into the enemy's fleet, and doubling upon a part of their line, the French navy, by fearlessly following up the new system of tactics, plunghe had many, were all owing to the excess of patriotic feeling; he annihilated squadron from the Tagus in February 1797, in sufficient time to intercept to be deemed impossible by all but himself, he succeeded in fitting out his exertion of vigour and capacity with which, in a period of time so short as It is doubtful if even Nelson would have been equal to the extraordinary of his conduct, and the perfect nautical skill which he was known to possess. both of his officers and men by the impartiality of his decisions, the energy rigorous in the exaction of them from others, he yet secured the affections effusion of human blood. A severe disciplinarian, strict in his own duties, reducing the most mutinous vessels to obedience with a singularly small by the mingled firmness and clemency of his conduct, he succeeded in its ramifications in the fleet under his command, off the Spanish coast: and out with such violence in the Channel fleet and at the Nore in 1797, had also skill even in that war so fertile in great exploits. The mutiny which broke of eighty-four guns, was one of the most extraordinary displays of valour and Seven Year's War. An action which he soon after fought with the Foudroyant in the glorious operations which terminated in the capture of Quedec in the He early distinguished himself in his profession, and was engaged with Wolfe illustrious rival, were not less calculated for great and glorious achievements. British navy, possessed qualities which, if not so brilliant as those of his greatest and most renowned admirals that ever appeared in the Character of Sir John Jarvis, afterwards created Earl St.-Vincent, one of the trious men, but Hone was one of the most distinguished men hillering in many essential particulars from both of these illus-(L E34) and Justice (1) " pa the megnantmous beart which beats only to the measures of Senerosity virtue, the capacity of the statesman, and the ratour of the hero, outshone outward eplendour of the die, the lighest talents sustained by the pure t test Erestness, is found in the genuine ralue of the mass, as well as in the gives birth to no feeling of Jealousy or envy, and the character which stamps where kindred genius ording only mutual admiration and honest rivality, thustrious men, gathers a soothing refreshment from such scenes as these, the deeds of human baseness, and mortified with contemplating the frailty of mind of the historian, as it has been well observed, "weary with recounting was more willing to concede the highest much of praise to each other. The whole emulation consisted in mutual efforts to serve their country, and none carned fame But these two great men had no jealousy of each other their with the means of studing a blow destined to eclipse even his una nell terranean at the head of the best ships in his own fleet, and furnished him evinced than in his conduct in 1798, when he despatched Aelson to the Medinothing, perhaps, was in energy and disinterested character more clearly exposed to the utmost danger the naval supremacy of Great britain But in which invariably seizes the English on the return of peace, and has so often too much facility to that unhappy mania for reducing our establishments, upon that important branch of the public service, although he jielded with in rooting out many lucrative corruptions which had fastened themselves praisenorthy zeal and anxiety for the detection of abuses, and he succeeded Admiralty, with which he was entrusted in 1802, he exhibited a most and defeat the Spanish fleet in the lugh official duties as first Lord of the perpoke the mildness and humanity of his disposition. So one ever conserious east and dark, but relaxing at times into a sweet smile, where case in person he was tall and well proportioned, his countenance of a for the salety of the ship and eren, this conviction set his mind I effectly at feetly well, for as he had taken every possible precaution be fore it was dark, Bet any rest from anxiety of min! Lard flowe replied that he had sleft live. inquired of Howe, how he had slept, for that he himself had not been alle to most mirepid officer, next day went on board the Queen Charlotte, au ! spierable danger of running foul, Lord Gardner, then third in command, a Channel fleet, after a dark and borsterous might, when the chips were in conin danger may be judged of from one anecdote. When in command of the quick in conception, prompt in execution, impetuous in action " the coolines "Their triendship," savs Nalpole, " was like the umon of cannon and gunpowder Nowestrong in mind, solid in judzment, firm of purpose, Holfu Lett in the expedition against the Isle d'Aix in Basque Roads in 110 be confracted an intimate friend-hip with general Nolle, and was employed a simost universified in those intrusted with supreme command. In early life tematic arrangement, with an hybitial self-command and humanity to others, but these qualities in him were combined with coolness, firmness, and sys-Egipur pearing so Concertin all otheers in the naval service of Great Britain, that he hyed without fear and without reproach. He had the enterprise and any other of its illustrious chiefs may it be said, as of the Chevalier Bayard, which the English navy ever produced. Of him, perhaps, more truly than who had served in his naval exploits. ever made, of Government, were for their neglect of the inferior naval officers loaded him, with gratitude, but without desire (1): the only complaints he ambition of every kind, and received the rewards with which his Sovereign owing. A disinterested lover of his country, he was entirely exempt from of tactics to which the unexampled triumphs of the war were afterwards the subject, he first succeeded in reducing to practice, that admirable system of English admirals, and by his profound nautical skill, and long attention to formidable mutiny in the Channel fleet. He was the first of the great school authority, that he succeeded in suppressing, without effusion of blood, the was more by the attachment which they bore to him, than by any exertion of his humanity and consideration for the seamen under his command, that it ing to eighteen hundred pounds, to the bank, as his contribution. Such was gifts for the expenses of the war, he sent his whole annual income, amountcharities were unbounded, and in 1798, when government received voluntary larger share of benevolent feeling. Disinterested in the extreme, his private of his own men and his adversaries, or mingled its heroic courage with a ducted the stern duties of war with more consideration for the sufferings both immediate rebellion (2). and containing at least two hundred thousand men, organized, and ready for projected expedition against that island, now fermenting with discontent, the dest of its way to the harbour of Brest, in order to co-operate in the longthe troops to be disembarked, and the fleet to set sail, and make Yarmouth roads by stress of weather, the Dutch Covernment gave orders for the beginning of October, when the English fleet having been driven to destined for the invasion of Ireland, he did not attempt to leave the Texel till rage and experience. Revertheless, being encumbered with land forces, manded the armament, was a staunch Republican, and a man of tried couhad yet occurred from the commencement of the war. De Winter, who comwith the English fleet would be more obstinate and bloody than any which the well-known courage of the sailors, it was anticipated that the contest man their vessels with a choice selection both of officers and men; and from stoppage of the commerce of the Republic had enabled the government to thing attempted by the United Provinces for above a century past. The preparations in Holland had been most extraordinary, and far surpassed any seamen, was made by the Dutch Republic. For a very long period the naval the season, another effort, with an inserior sleet, but more experienced Great pro-Great pro-purations of The great victory of St.-Vincents entirely disconcerted the well-purations of conceived designs of Turguet for the naval eampaign; but later in The great victory of St.-Vincents entirely disconcerted the well-down.

Admiral Duncan was no sooner apprized by the signals of his baving of campers.

With all imaginable haste, and stretched across the German Ocean, with so much expedition, that he got near the hostile squadron before it was out of sight of the shore of Holland. The Dutch fleet consisted of filteen ships of the line and eleven frigates; the English, of sixteen ships of the line and the shore of Holland. The Dutch fleet is sleen ships of the line and three frigates. Duncan's first care was to station his fleet in such a manner as to prevent the enemy from returning to the Texel; and having done this, he hore down upon his opponents, and hove in sight of them, on the following. hore down upon his opponents, and hove in sight of them, on the following. morning, drawn up in order of battle at the distance of nine miles from the morning, drawn up in order of battle at the distance of nine miles from the morning,

(2) The two contracts and the state of the s and Tell individual to Andrews and Colline of the Tell individual to Tell and the Tell and to Tell and the Tell and Tell harmedo y (instance nd tong and shad we needemented by take we ad a west per to did a tritori sit as see it. I we have weight as to tritorial medianengapa menta adi and has weight as to tritorial medianengapa menta del sits and to see the total control of the see A hases. I see the see that the season of the see that the distribution of the seesant the first in the

where may dree now Jam to much sholoms water the butch squared to the Dutch squared to the foreign and the constitution of the foreign and the constitution of the foreign and the foreign and the foreign and sought relagon in the feating collected the seathered remains of this flore, in and sought in the feating while buncan returned with the prizes to Jamounth tooks as a sea building when the belieful when the belieful and which the the belieful and the belieful and which the thin the alternation in which the third the belieful and state the commences on which the unional

both i to be

Impa which succeeded, nine only were secured (5), ho less skilful than brave, Twelve sail of the line had struck their colours, but owing to the bad weather the of hity-six guns, and the frigates, were in the hands of the victors after struck to Idmiral Onslow, and by four a'clock, eight ships of the line, ship, he alone should have been spared (2) The Dutch vice-admiral soon that, in the midst of the carnage which literally floated the deck of his noble man on his quarter-deck who was not either hilled or wounded, he lamented his ship incapable of making any farther resistance De Vinter was the only at length he struck his flag, after half his crew were killed or wounded, and fell one by one or erboard, amidst the loud cheers of the British sailors, and nithm pistol-shot, but by degrees the Dutchman's fire slackened, his masts which followed bor three hours, Admiral Duncan and De Umfer fought still and discipline soon appeared in the engagement, Jard-arm to jard-arm, nimost efforts of ralour on the part of the Dutch, the superiority of English not generally percented, and but partially obeyed homithstanding the to unite in close order, but from the thickness of the smoke, his order was De hinter, perceiving the design of the enemy, gave the signal for his fleet

bein cen them and the lee-shore

the action became general, each English ship engaging its adversary, but still the centre and laid hunself alongside of De Vinter's flag slup, and shortly followed by Duncan humself, at the head of the second line (1), who pierced quafely lay alongside, and engaged at three hards' distance. He was soon and the other with not less into the lice-admiral's bons, whom he immepoured one breadside with tremendous effect into the starbeard slup s stern, to let hun pass, and he entered the close-set line. In passing through, he As he approached the Dutch line, lus captain observed, the enemy were lying so close that they could not penetrate '' The Monarch will make a passage," so close that they could not penetrate '' The Dutch linp opposite gave my replied Onslow, and held on undannted 'The Dutch sinp opposite gave my gonists Admiral Onslow first broke the line, and commenced a close combat British ressels, which, for the most part, drew more water than their aniaby precenting their nilhdrawing into the shallows, out of the reach of the attach, and proved the principal cause of the glorious success n bich followed, movement which was immediately and skilfully executed in two lines of the signal to break the line, and get between the enemy and the shore-a which after rards inspired a similar resolution to lelson at thoular tie gave coast bein cen Camerdon's and Egmont. With the same instinctive genius, hopes had been so long rested. Towards the conclusion of the action the action the Mercules, one of the Dutch ships, was found to be on fire, but it was soon extinguished by the coolness and presence of mind of the crew on board the Triumph, to which she had struck. During the two days of tempestuous weather which ensued, two of the prixes mutinied against the English guard on board, and escaped into the Texel; and the Delft, a seventy-four, went down, astern of the ship which had her in tow. But eight line-of-battle ships, and two of fifty-six guns, were brought into Yarmouth roads, amidst the cheers two of fifty-six guns, were brought into Yarmouth roads, amidst the cheers of innumerable spectators, and the transports of a whole nation (1).

with the fleets of an inconsiderable Republic. equal to a contest with the united navies of Europe, as she was then to a war Provinces had declined both in vigour and resources. Britain was now as. had quadrupled in strength since the days of Charles II, while the United · perate conflict were visible. But the contest was no longer equal; England with shot, as to be altogether unserviceable. On every side marks of a desfought engagement (2). The Dutch were all either dismasted, or so riddled mies, which accounts for the great loss in killed and wounded in this wellging; like their worthy adversaries, the Dutch fired at the hull of their eneengagements; no masts were down, little damage done to the sails or rigclose of the action, was very different from what it usually is after naval amounted to above six thousand. The appearance of the British ships, at the one thousand one hundred and sixty, desides the crews of the prizes, who which, in the British, was one thousand and forty men, and in the Batavian, of Van Tromp and De Ruyter, as was evinced by the loss on either part, was attended. The Dutch fought with a courage worthy of the descendants sides during the engagement, but the important consequences with which it Improse of this action was one of the most important displayed on both victory. Tevolutionary war, not only from the valour displayed on both victory. This action was one of the most important fought at sea during the French at land, and, secure in her sea-girt isle, to trust in those defenders secure. England now learned to regard without dismay the victories of the longer felt; the threatened invasion of Ireland was laid aside; Britain was portance of this victory was chiefly made manifest. Despondency was no as were the external results, it was in its internal effects that the vast imof reviving the principles of the armed neutrality were laid aside. But great dubious previous to this great event, were struck with terror; and all thoughts soon amounted to L.52,000. The northern courts, whose conduct had been into for the widows and orphans of those who had fallen in this battle, and it peril of invasion which it effected. A subscription was immediately entered patriotism of the seamen still was, and the deliverance from the immediate elevated the national spirit by the demonstration it afforded how true the muliny at the Nore, and coming so soon after that formidable event, it both by the fleet which had recently struck such terror into every class by the of Britain, were in the highest degree important. Achieved as it had been But the effects of this victory, both upon the security and the public spirit

". Whose march is o'cr the mountain wave, W hose home is on the deep."

The joy, accordingly, upon the intelligence of this victory, was heartfelt and unexampled, from the sovereign on the throne, to the beggar in the hovel. Bonfires and illuminations were universal; the enthusiasm spread to every breast; the fire gained every heart, and amidst the roor of artiflery and 77 L festivities which took place on the joyful intelligence being received in that Shropshire, whose earliest recollection is of the sheep-reasung and rural the author, then residing under his paternal roof, in a remote parish of their first acquaintance with the events of life, among whom may be reckoned negleet Aumbers date from the rejoicings consequent on this achievement secladed district.

Cusp XXII.

The individual partition is a file title of the title of title of the title of title The national gratitude was liberally bestowed on the leaders in

Camperdown, and Commodore Aclson that of Sir Horaito Aelson. numeration Lat St - Incents, Admiral Duncan that of Viscount Duncan of gradually subsided, from the excitation of new passions, and the force of disasters, she arose at once into security and renown, the democratic spirit existence, from the deepest dejection, and an unexampled accumulation of this country. Her subsequent victories nere for conquest, these nere for all classes, and that re-olute British spirit, which never afterwards deserted Krom these rictories may be dated the commencement of that concord among more ennobling recollections; and the rising generation, who began to mingle

The remaining marting operations of this year are hardly deserveres (inetar madt to the patriotic spirit which had been nursed amulat the dangers and the glories in public affairs, non sensibly influenced national thought, by the display of exbegition, under General Abercroudly, captured the island of the real point of attack, met with the result which might have been anderintended to distract the attention of the British government from freland, of deserters and banditti, in the bay of Pembroke, in February, ing of notice A descent of fourteen hundred men, chiefly composed the festive light of cities, faction disappeared, and discontents sunk into the whole y ٠. ٠ orer the navy of their combined enemies, was entinently conspicuous during Porto Bico; notwithstanding which, however, the superiority of the british in the harbour; but two months after, the same force failed in an attack on Trinidad, with a garrison of seventeen hundred men, and a ship of the hing withers the results M entire, paenos enomolg ocadi greatet bas genfeps 11

by the death of his son, and who had long lat on the Bilt fully, 1797. His counsels on hughen pource -- a ing megenees, at length breathed me last at months before his derth, is distinguished by the same ferrent cloquence, pro-Ungland, His last work, the Letters on a Regierde Peace, published a few which had made his soice sound as the note of a trumpel to the heart of ful moments, were of the same direct, lotty, and uncompromising start to I anneathed, the signification tound nisdom, and farsecour sa, acity, which characteristed his carber fro-cumb. It is a struggle for your existence as a nation. If you must die, die with the sword in your hand. But I have no lears whalever for the result. There is a salient living principle of energy in the public mind of England, which only requires proper direction to enable her to withstand this, or any other ferocious foe. Persevere, therefore, till this tyranny be overany other ferocious foe. Persevere, therefore, till this tyranny be overany other ferocious foe.

he lived, it was not so great as it has since become; and strongly as subsequent Great, accordingly, and deserved, as was his reputation in the age in which the elevation to which he was at once borne on the wings of prophetic genius. and left to posterity the difficult task of reaching, through pain and suffering, the prevailing feeling of the majority. He was ever in advance of his age, they were more profound; he did not address himself with equal felicity to not so impressive as those of Mirabean in the Vational Assembly, only because patient investigation, boundless research. His speeches in Parliament were exhibited the rare combination of these great qualities with deep thought, with a powerful understanding, an inventive fancy, a burning eloquence, he three, unrivalled, perhaps, in any other age or country. Endowed by nature ardour of imagination, the richness of genius; it was a combination of the. such shining name to exhibit. His was not the mere force of intellect, the annals of treland, graced though they be with splendid characters, have no digal as it is of great men, has no such philosophic statesman to boast; the the fulness of glory, Edmund Burke. The history of England, pro-Thus departed this life, if not in the maturity of years, at least in His charac-

times have felt the truth of his principles, they are destined to rise into still more general celebrity in the future ages of mankind.

then divided society, prepossessions only on the other side, a heart long on the contrary, he brought to the consideration of the great questions which the possession of power, the prejudices of birth, or the selfishness of nealth; mankind. His was not the instinctive horror at revolution which arises from reached, and which are yet far in advance of the general understanding of principles of political wisdom than any intellect, save that of Bacon, had the prosecution of his efforts in defence of order, he was led to profounder ardour of his disposition, he instantly espoused the opposite side; and, in which was to cover the universe with darkness. With the characteristic light, he at once discerned, amidst the deceiful blaze, the small black cloud of the greatest men of his age were dazzled by the brightness of its morning were confirmed by the first aspect of the French Revolution; and while many vagance of its supporters than by the efforts of its enemies. These doubts cause of liberty might not, in the end, be more endangered by the extraimprovement of the species, and suggested the painful doubt, whether the pears to have given the first rude shock to his visions of the elevation and empire, and the establishment of a pure Republic beyond the Atlantic, aporder and property; and the severing of the United States from the British ever, the friend of freedom only in conjunction with its indispensable allies, mising leader of the Opposition in Parliament. He was, from the outset, howby the conduct of the English government, he stood forth as an uncomproduring the American war, when those principles appeared to be endangered heart, Mr. Burke was strongly attached to the principles of freedom, and, Like all men of a sound intellect, and ardent disposition, and a feeling warmed by the feelings of theerty, a disposition enthiasiacter in its support, a blicture spent in its service. Be was led to combat the principles of Jacobara from an early and clear perception of their consequences, from arean from an early and clear perception of their consequences, from the second fluid they be the different and it is a property of the clean of the second fluid the set, in the end, from the set of search and set in the fraction of the mass of the contraction in character on which the most resolute, because the most endightened and the least selfish, resistance to democratic accordency will be founded.

CHAPTER XXIII.

CVNLVICH OF 1797-FALL OF VEHICE.

ARGUMENT,

•puelgan cratic Party-Striking Contrast exhibited at the same period by the Mobility and People of cious Conduct of Austria-Weakness of the Venetian Aristocracy—Insonity of the Demo-Rapoleon in this transaction—Important light which it throws upon his Character—Atrothe Treaty-Great Sensation excited by this event in Europe-Infamous Conduct of of Campo Formio-Its Secret Articles-Norror excited at Venice by the Publication of the Spolistion of Venice-Its Infamy rests exclusively on Napoleon-Terms of the Treaty fears of Napoleon-His Secret Motives for Signing this Treaty-The Directory had forbid the Regoliations at Udina-Terms are at length spreed to Simulated strongs and real England-They are broken off by the vehemence and arrogance of France-Progress of Predmont-Regulations between England and France opened at Lisle-Moderation of People-Rural Insurrection breaks out-which is suppressed-Deplotable Humiliation of rously support the Democratic Party—Senate upon this Submit—Violent Passions of the by the French-The Senate defeat the Insurgents-The French then Interferenand vigo-Udina in Italy - Splendour of Kapoleon's Court there-Revolution at Genoa brought about trospect of the Astonishing Successes of Napoleon-Commencement of the Negotiations at Accession of Frederick William III-His Charocler-Early Measures and Policy-Re-Leoden-State of Prussia during this year-1ts Policy-Death of the King-Ilis Character-River forced at Neuwied—Defeat of the Austrians—Mostilities stopped by the armistice of Leoden-Commencement of operations by Hoche on the Lower Rhine-Passage of that River at Diersheim, and Deseat of the Austrians-Operations cut short by the armistice of isth May between Rapoleon and Venice—State of the Armies on the Rhine—Passage of that the Subjugation of the State-But Venice falls-Joy of the Democratic Party-Treaty of denice itself—The Senate abdicate their authority—The Populace still endeavour to resist sides-Universal Revolt of the Continental Towns of the Venetian Territory - Anarchy in -Massacre at Lido-Efforts of the Venetian Senate to avert the storm-Resources still at anger of Rapoleon-Massacre at Verona, which is speedily suppressed by the French Troops immensely-Continued Indecision of the Venetian Senate in regard to France-Affected rection-Hostilities break out between the two Parties-The Counter-Insurrection spreads the Insurgents, or let the Venetians do so-Venetians at last resolve to crush the Insurat Venice-The Senate send Deputies to Napoleon-Ilis Duplicity, and refusal to act against out in the Venetian Provinces, which soon spreads to all the chief Towns - Consternation Territory, which are secretly encouraged by Kapoleon-Democratic Insurrection breaks continued Decline-Rupid Progress of Democratic Ideas in the Cities of the Venetian Injustice of this Treaty as far as regards Venice-State of Venice at this period-Its longand Tyrol-Extreme Danger of Rapoleon-Conditions of the Preliminaries-Enormous Disasters—Preliminaries are agreed to at Leoben—Disastrous State of the French in Croatia to Judembourg, and the Archduke relires towards Vienna-Terror excited there by these retreating imperialists—They are Defeated at the Gorge of Neumarkt—Napoleon pushes on makes Proposals of Peace to the Archduke, and at the same time severely presses the of these Actions-Perilous Condition notwithstanding of Napoleon-Ile in consequence General Alarm in the Tyrol-IIo marches across to join Napoleon at Klagenfurth-Results Action at the Pass of Clausen, which is at length carried-Joudert Advances to Sterzing-Bayalitch's Division is Surrounded, and made Prisoners—Napoleon crosses the Ridge of the Bayalitch's Division is Surrounded, and made Prisoners—Napoleon crosses the Ridge of Libertale Occupies Klagenfurth—Successful Operations of Jouhort in the Tyrol—Desperate of the Col-de-Tarwis-Desperate Actions there-It is finally won by the Republicans-Massina on the left—Passage of the Isone by Bernadotte-Massena makes hinself Master Soldiers-Great Interest excited in Europe by the approaching Contest-Operations of Roads and Rivers-Vapoleon resolves to turn the Austrian left-lits proclamation to his ell-in Volerans-Danger of that Plan Description of the Theatre of War-Its of the Imperialists—Great Spirit in the Nereditary States—Appoléon anticipates the Arrival Bernadolle's and Delmas's Divisions John Kapoleon-Disposition of his Forces-Preparations Russia recedes from the contemplated Measures of Catharine-Plans of the Directory-

The year 1797 was far from realizing the brilliant prospects which thr. Pitt had formed for the campaign, and which the recent alliance with the rushed upon the enemy

Linpress Calharine had rendered so thely to be fulfilled The a fairl blow mught be struck at the heart of the tustrian power, before the thing, therefore, conspired to indicate, that by an early and sigorous effort, Upper Rhune to defend the Appine frontier of the Hereditary States. Every must clayse before the reterans of the trebduke could be drawn from the Prusery was still neutral, and it was ascertained that a considerable time tope, seemed absorbed only in the domestic concerns of his vast empire from evincing any disposition to mingle in the contentions of Southern Eulery of 450,000 men, which she had ordered for the Lieneh war, and so far ments. The Linperor Paul, who succeeded her, countermanded the great gorous measures to counteract it, dissolved all the projected armaappreciated the full extent of the danger, and the necessity of 11-resources of the monarchy could be collected to repel it (1)

companda, and make head against the redoubtable enemy who threatened Membilic the absence to report the electron the control obses of the Meanwhile the Austrian government had been actively employed that wathke province (5)

(2) 10m x 30 Ih 12 61

bead against the formidable forces which the Imperialists were assembling in that of Massena at Bassano, Serrurier at Castelbranco, Augereau at assembled in the Trevisane March in the end of February, 112

dent of sixteen thousand n ho n ere scattered from Ancona to Milan, t the command of happleon to sixty-one thousand men, indepen-The airival of these troops raised the army immediately under best and the charge to sound, and they faced the tempest as they would have and the guides recommended a halt, but the officers ordered the drums to depth of ninter (2) in ascending Mont Cenis, a riolent snow-storm arose, to strengthen the trmy of fialy. These brave men crossed the Alps in the nadotte and Delinas, above twenty thousand strong, were sent from the fibine other, and on a parallel and far distant line of operations. The divisions of Berthe armies of eighty thousand each in Germany, acting independent of each batched to the army of the Rhine, the plan being to open the campaign with which he received the command, while large remiorcements were also disdirected Hoche to send his forces to the sang of the Sambre and Meuse, of disasters of the preceding campaign had not taught them to distrust, they Italian conqueror Obstinately adhering to the plan of Carnot, which all the their forces at the disposal of so ambitious and enterprising a general as the designer of the government prevented them from placing the major part of was the most rulnerable side on which the enemy could be assailed, but the nere already in a great measure overcome. Every thing indicated that that of the Republic in a quarter where the barriers of the Imperial dominious Directory to send him powerful reinfore ments, and put forth the strength A spoleon had in the beginning of the preceding winter urged the man the Anare of the necessity of commencing operations carly in spring, by those of Delmas and Baraguay D Hilliers, was stationed in Igrol, to mal e Treviso, and Bernadotte at Padua Joubert, with his own division, reinforced tions of the army I our divisions, destined for immediate operations, nore and employed in or crawing the Pope, and securing the rear and communica with his division, which successive additions nould raise to twenty thousand and bictor, who was still on the spennines, was destined to more forward force the passes of the Hahan Tytel, and drive the enemy over the Brenner, the same time Joubert, with seventeen thousand men, received orders to 2 (85) powerful division, while the three others attached them in front at est that sens, accordingly, to turn the right flank of the enemy with his Mapolcon resolves to bosinous pl the Alps which commanded them He directed Mas-men, to the Adige, to keep in check the lenetian levies, and secure the com-

Adriatic sea, did not present any formidable obstacles. The Piave and the the rivers. The rivers which descend from this chain of mountains into the nates at Klagenturth

Lay bach and hisgeniurth, the third, setting out from Marburg, also termiof the foure, joins, at Tarwis, the route of Carinthia (2), the second connects that of Carmola, the first branches off from Gonzia, and following the course at tituch. The lateral roads lead from the chaussee of Tyrol to that Graiz, the capital of that province, and joins the immediately preceding road goes through Laybach, crosses the Save and the Drave, enters Styria, passes the plain of Vienna. The third by Carmthia, passes the Isonzo at Gradisca, the course of the Mucr, mounts the Summering, from whence it descends into cends into Carinthia, crosses the Drave at Villach, and, by Klagenfurth and Piare and the Tagliamento, surmounts the Alps by the Col-de-Tarnis, des-

Ens The second traverses the Arcentine and Trevisane Marches, crosses the Salzbourg into that of the Danube, and descends to Lienna after passing the right of the Brenner into the valley of the lun, from n bence it passes by lowing the line of the Adige by Bolzano and Brixen, crosses the that of fyrol, that of Carmibia, and that of Carmola The first, fol-

Three great roads lead from letona across the Alps to lienna; same standard (1). of tustria, while the last might be expected, on the least reverse, to join the and the Yenetian states, the first of which was warmly attached to the bouse communications with the Adige might be cut off, and on his right Croatia thousand men, learing on his left the nathle prosince of Tyrol, by which his tion into the Austrian states, and scale the Noric and Julian Alps with sixty their racillating councils. Thus Kapoleon was left alone to hazard an irrupto leave a considerable force in the neighbourhood of Verona, to overance of altertation from the Republican interest, which obliged the Trench general exactions, not only declined his overliers, but manifested some symptoms republic, but its haughty, get timid aristocracy, norn out nith the French he had laboured all the nunter to conclude an alliance with the Venetian rear and maintain the communications of his army. To compensate this loss, from the Upper Rhine (1). while thirty thousand of his best troops were only deginning their march the remainder of his army, fifteen thousand strong, were in Tyrol at Bolzano, the Archduke in person, were assembled on the left bank of the Tagliamento; munications of the army. Thirty-five thousand of the Austrian forces, under the manners, the property of a brave people; you will bring freedom to the of the Hereditary States: in seeking it there, you will respect the religion, sufferings of the Continent. Peace can no longer be found but in the heart that perfidious cabinet, which, a stranger to the evils of war, smiles at the Republic, the Emperor alone maintains the contest; but he is blindly led by yourselves worthy of them! of all the enemies who were leagued against the Genoa, Corsica; and now still higher destinies await you will show tached from the coalition. You have chased the English from Leghorn, Kings of Sardinia, of Naples, the Pope, the Duke of Parma, have been dein front, and within twenty-four hours sail of the country of Alexander! The The French colours now fly, for the first time, on the shores of the Adriatic, lie; the Transpadane and Cispadane Republics owe to you their freedom. centuries. You have conquered the finest countries in Europe for the Repubthe Museum of Paris with 500 chefs-downers of art, the produce of thirty sides, sent 50,000,000 of francs to the public treasury. You have enriched quished countries have clothed, fed, and paid the army, and you have, beand four sets of pontoons. The contributions you have levied on the van-100,000 prisoners, taken 500 pieces of field artillery, 2,000 of heavy calibre, victorious in fourteen pitched battles and seventy combats: you have made has given you eternal titles to the gratitude of your country. You have been diers! The fall of Mantua has terminated the war in Italy, which proclamaand addressed the following order of the day to his army: -- . Sol-Napoléon moved his headquarters to Bassano on the 9th March, s'noslogeM tory by the one was to be won by rapidity of attack; success could be hoped fore, was the policy of the former, impetuous advance of the latter; vicwar, were attached to the Austrians, and hostile to the French; retreat, thereother hand, the people of the provinces, around and behind the theatre of Archauke, the existence of the empire of the Casars in Germany. On the the maintenance of the Republican sway in Italy; on the success of the Imperial the more fully equipped: on the victory of Napoléon depended of the ancient faith: the Republican army was the more numerous; the arms alone, but the newly-roused passions; the latter with the weapons only the last, of soldiers dispirited by disaster: the former combated not with calm and judicious: the first was at the head of troops hitherto unconquered; ses which they supported. The one was audacious and impetuous; the other, they had to rely in the contest which was approaching, as various as the cau-But their dispositions were extremely different, and the resources on which both was the same; their courage equal, their mutual respect reciprocal. Italy; the other illustrious, from the deliverance of Germany: the age of severally achieved. The one appeared resplendent, from the conquest of swords, and the great deeds which, on different theatres, they had the magnitude of the eause with they respectively bore upon their rest exerted leon excited the utmost interest throughout Europe, both from by the the magnitude of the eause with they respectively bore upon their Great inte-

The approaching contest between the Archduke Charles and Napo-

valiant Hungarian nation (2).

nog into the nater, son tingl quantons reselved exclaimed Bernadotte, for by the other only by protracing the contest. Great reinforcements nere [Cuar. XXIII, HISTORY OF EUROPE, hapoleon; but if the contest could be protracted, it might be expected to brought into action. Success at first, therefore, seemed within the grasp of gery, while his adversary could expect no assistance, beyond n hat he at first hastening to the Archduke from the fibine, the Hereditary States, and Hun-

130

On the 10th March all the columns of the army nere in motion, desert the Republican for the imperial banners (1).

paoue spe several ic though the neather was still rigorous, and snow to the depth of defeated, with the Pare in .

the Taghamento, and concentrate his army behind the latter stream. On the duke, to avoid his right flank being turned, to fall back from the Piave to self. By pressing forward through the higher Alps, he compelled the Arcu-

sen make appointed, were drawn up on the opposite shore, ready to fall on the stones and gravel The imperial squadrons, numerous and magnificently are fordable, and covers the ground for a great extent permeet mem " it is fater, at mme o'clock in the morning, the three divisions of the French

the regularity and fir a more majestic or imposing manner. The troops yied with each other in the exercise of a field-day, never did an army advance upon the enemy in selves into the fiver The precision, the beauty of the movements, resembled by echellon, flanking each other in the finest order, and precipitated themarms, and, forming with inconcervable rapidity, advanced quickly in columns ass dinier, the signal was given by the French general the soldiers ran to over for the day, withdrew his forces into their camp in the rear Then all and begin to cook their victuals, the Archduke, concering all chance of attack the troops to retire without the reach of the enemy's fire, establish a bivouse, seeing the enemy so well prepared, had recourse to a stratagem : he ordered artiflery already scattered its balls among its numerous branches. Rapoleon, French infantry the moment that they crossed the stream, and a vast array of of cannon and 500 men and, what was of more importance, the presmiles from the field of battle. In this action the imperialists lost aix pueces Rhine, ordered a retreat; and the French light troops pursued him tour engage in a decisive action before the arrival of his divisions from the dule, seeing the passage achieved, his flank turned, and being unwilling to bank. Soon the firing became general along the whole line, but the Archbut it was too late, they were already established in battle array on the tert presenting to the spot, but a spot on the left at St.-Daniel. Soon after, he made unacer. Aleany hile Massena, on the cen dence of his soldiers in contending with i tige of a first success. In truth, the Archdule never regained the confi-

of the chaussée of the Ponteba, which was not occupied in force, pushed on to the Venetian chiusa, a narrow gorge, rudely fortified, which he also carried, and drove the Austrian division of Ocksay before him to the ridge of Tarwis (1).

Serrurier ascended the course of the Isonzo, by Caporetto, and the horse occupied Trieste, the greatest harbour of the Austrian monarchy; and Bernadotte marched upon and took possession of Laybach, while a thousand dards. This success had most important consequences: the division of their arms, in number 2000, with ten pieces of artillery, and eight stanquarter, appeared on the heights in the rear, upon which they laid down their success, the division of Serrurier, which had crossed in another this attack; but while the Imperialists were congratulating themselves upon grape and musketry, which swept off 500 men, speedily repulsed whence he rashly advanced to assault the place. A terrible fire of tians stationed on the opposite shore, succeeded in foreing the passage, from commonly low, notwithstanding a shower of balls from two thousand Croaplace, and instantly plunging into the torrent, which at that time was unthree thousand men. Bernadotte's division arrived first before the after pushed on to Gradisca, situated on the Lower Isonzo, and garrisoned by léon occupied Palma Zuova, where he found immense magazines, and soon Lower Isonzo. The day after the battle of the Tagliamento, Napoby the Isonzo towards Tarwis, while the remainder of his forces relired by the purpose he dispatched his parks of artillery, and the division of Bayalitch, which Kapoleon would probably follow in his advance upon Vienna. For this the Isonzo, because the Carinthian road, being the most direct, was the one to regain it by the cross-road, which follows the blue and glittering waters of continuing his retreat by the direct road to Carinthia; he resolved, therefore, The occupation of the Ponteba by Massena, prevented the Archduke from non thundered above the clouds; the earalry charged on fields of commanders exposed their persons like the meanest of the soldiers; the canground. The troops on both sides fought with the utmost resolution, and both or the campaign depended, made the most vigorous efforts to regain his of which the fate of the Austrian division coming up the Isonzo, and the issue sena, who was well aware of the importance of this post, upon the possession self on the summit with the grenadiers and the division of Ocksay. But Maspassage. He was at first successful; and after a sharp action, established himbefore from the Rhine, and with these veteran troops advanced to retake the division of five thousand grenadiers, who had arrived at that place the day northern side of the great chain of the Alps, and put himself at the head of a tant station; and for this purpose, hastened in person to Klagenfurth, on the ridge of Tarwis. He resolved, therefore, at all hazards, to retake that imporup in front by the division of Massena, at the upper end of the defile, on the rear by the victorious troops which followed it up the Isonzo, and blocked actions there danger which the division of Bayalitch would incur, pressed in on the test. rinthia and Dalmatia. The Archduke immediately foresaw the Meanwhile Massens, pursuing the broken remains of Ocksay's dimaster aision, made himself master of the important Col-de-Tarwis, the of the Col-de-Tarwis, of the Col-de-Tarwis, continuanding both the valleys descending to Caderine, erest of the Alpha, commanding both the valleys descending to Caderine. Meanwhile Massena, pursuing the broken remains of Ocksay's di-the net the infinity struggled through drifts of snow. At length the

Austrian chiusa, to regain at Tarwis the route of Carinthia (2).

It is floatify 10 Member 10 only 10

No source had the I tench general established himself on this importan

400 artillery or bacgage-waggons, fell into the hands of the Republicans (2) sisting of the general himself, 5500 men, twenty-five pieces of cannon, and tains by throwing anay their arms, but the greater part of the division, conon the slopes of the Tarmis Anumber of Croatians escaped over the mounrurier, and in front found his advance stopped by the ranguard of Massena impassable mountains, he was pressed in rear by the victorious troops of Sernow remained to Bayahich, shut up in a narrow ralley, between ment, finding itself thus turned, laid down its arms No resource column of infantry assailed it in front, and the Austrian detachminute difficulty, the rocks which overhung the left of the position, while a the French The fourth regiment, surnamed "the Impetuous," scaled, with that impregnable barrier But nothing could withstand the attack of gates of the Austrian chiusa, he deemed himself secure, under the shelter of ascending the tine-clad course of the Isonzo, and, haring at length passed the neral, encombered with artiflery and ammunition-naggons, nas slowly where Bayaluch's division was expected soon to appear Meanwhile, that gethe Archduke had retired, and those descending to the Austrian chiusa, station, than he occupied in force both the defiles leading to Villach, whither ho sooner had the I rench general established himself on this important populoon has pupied and any agained the created full chips, insequence, and pupied in all duple of the duple

the flowblemens, omisciated for their use (3).

While these important operations nets going forward in Carmithas, toubert had general decears, excesses as the follation Yiol Association and the decears care the consequence of the Tagianacuto expelled the importants from field, than that general Iverceved orders to avail bursett of this numerical to accountly, and arror and arror to common the contract of the co

French, after this success, separated into two divisions; the first, under Baraguay D'Hilliers, pursued the broken remains of Kerpen's forces on the great road to Bolsano, while the second, composed of the élite of the troops under Joubert in person, advanced against Laudon, who had come up to Neumarkt, in the endeavour to re-establish his communication with Kerpen. The Imperialists, attacked by superior forces, were routed, with the loss of several perialists, attacked by superior forces, were routed, with the loss of several pieces of cannon and a thousand prisoners; while, on the same day, the other division of the army entered Bolsano without opposition, and made itself master of all the magazines it contained (1).

their indelatigable pursuers. combined effort, fell back towards Brixen, which was soon after occupied by ments formed in close column; and the Austrians, unable to withstand this Joudert, at the same time, charged rapidly in front, at the head of two regidown great blocks of stone, which rendered the pass no longer tenable (2). eeeded in scaling the rocky heights on the right of the Imperialists, and rolled adrantage; but towards evening, their active light infantry sucday the action continued, without the Republicans gaining any ei dout!! after column, which advanced to the attack, was swept away. For the whole cliffs and in the woods, kept up so terrible a fire upon the road, that column formidable defile; but the Austrian and Tyrolean marksmen, perched on the Early in the morning, the French presented themselves at the jaws of this and Much. the raging torrent to the naked cliffs, three thousand feet above. northern a succession of wooded and rocky peaks rises in wild variety from inaccessible precipice shuls in the pass on the southern side, while on the of the stream and the breadth of the road between their frowning brows. An where the mountains approach each other so closely, as to leave only the bed -a romantic and seemingly impregnable pass, three miles above Bolsano, banks of the Eisach to Brixten. Kerpen awaited him in the position of Clausen. remainder of his forces up the narrow and rocky defile which leads by the sand men, in that town, and himself advanced in person with the merion at the Bisach. To command both, loubert left Delmas, with five thou-Bolsano is situated at the junction of the valleys of the Adige and through the whole of Tyrol; an attack on its capital was hourly expected; spruck, still covered with the snows of winter. The alarm spread Tyiof. giarm in the take post on the summit of the Brenner, the last barrier of Inn-Sterzing. his ground, and driven from the castellated heights of Sterzing to Joubert of spansies to French infantry in close column, that he was unable to maintain he was attacked with such vigour by General Belliard, at the head of the over Mount Brenner, and the lateral one which ascended the Pusterthal. But by these, he took post at Mittenwald, hoping to cover both the great road of expert and dauntless marksmen to his standard; and, reinforced fell back, distributed numerous proclamations, which soon brought crowds spirit of the peasantry in that populous and warlike district. Kerpen, as he The invasion of Tyrol, so far from daunting, tended only to animate the

and it was thought the enemy intended to pencirate across the valley of the Inn, and join the invading force on the Rhine (5).

But Joudert, notwithstanding his successes, was now in a dangerous position. The accounts he received from Bolsano depicted in glowing colours the tion. The accounts he received from Bolsano depicted in glowing colours the progress of the levy on masse; and although he was at the head of twelve

⁽¹⁾ Map. iv. 89. Jom. x. 51, 52, (2) Jom. x. 53. Map. iv. 89, 90.

Archduke was driven over the Juhan Alps, the French occupied Thus, in twenty days after the campaign opened, the army of the able force which I audon was organizing in the valley of the Upper Adige (1) prisoners, leaving Servier to make head as he best could against the formid-April, joined the main army in Carinthia with all his forces and five thousand Delmas with his division from Bolsano, and, setting out in the beginning of through the Pasterthal, to Magenturth. He preferred the latter, brought up trace his steps down the Adige, or join Aspoléon by the cross-road from Brixen, ralley of the lan There was no alternative, therefore, but to resurrection, or advance unsupported over the higher Alps into the where he was, in the midst of a warlike province in a state of in-thousand men, it was evidently highly dangerous either to remain on the Rhine were at so great a distance as to be unable to take any part in of their number in the different actions n bich had occurred, n bile the forces Austrians, dispirated by disaster, and weakened by defeat, had lost a fourth deciratly of the Alps, within sixty leagues of Vienna. On the other hand, the force of forty-five thousand men, flushed with victory, was on the northern Carniola, Carinthia, Tricsle, Fiume, and the Italian Tyrol, and a formidable numerous and powerful squadrons of the imperialists, and what were fortymed me valley of the Danube, for it had not cavalry sufficient to meet the crossed that frontier river. The French army could not descend unsupported trom being in a condition to afford any effectual assistance, that they had not jet adequate force to eneck his operation, and the armies of the Rhine were so far Laudon was advancing by tapid strides in the valley of the Adige, with no ultimately involve that poner in hostilities with the French government, preaking out in the Yenetian provinces, which it was easy to see would mice, in many respects, was highly perilous An insurrection was

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

[CHAP XXIII

But notwithstanding all this, the situation of the Republican ar-

rious general, which subsequent events so fully justified, and apprehended or the Republic, but they had already concerned that Jealousy of their victodilatory conduct, which endangered the brayest army and all the conquests Constary districts or the contraction of or the second side 2010t 191110 the Rhine, gloreau's troops could not enter upon the campaign for want of boats to cross despatch received on the Sist March, at Klagenturth, which announced that tions, which long had weighed with Aspoleon, became doubly cogent, from a nae moneand men in the heart of the Austrian empire? These consideraposet to the all thoughts of dictating peace under the walls of Vienna, and comrelied in crossing the Alps, Napolcon nisely determined to forego Deprived of all prospect of that co-operation on which he had lie in con greatest armies under such an aspiring leader (5) less danger from a retreat before the Imperial forces, than a junction of their

tented himself with making the most of his recent successes, by OADD INT

as his campaigns, bear the stamp of his ponerful and impassioned minu 9000 at ulnngeld.

the a pict

131

the defence of the capital (2)

Terror

This rapid advance excited the utmost consternation at the tor the independence of Germany (1) resources of the monarchy were to be collected, and the last battle fought concentrate all insurvisions in the neighbourhood of Vienna, where the whole The Archdule now resolved to leave the mountains, and Leoben tunsi / tered forces, while the advanced-guard occupied the village of bes grod [356 9d] established on the 6th April, and then halted to collect his seatmo triduced after, Aspoteon pushed on to Judemberg, where headquarters nere min army of the Imperialists by the route of Rastadt. The days after a sharp action with the French advanced-guard, succeeded in Joining the defiles of the Muer in pursuit of the column of Sporek, which, compat, and on the following day he despatched Guicux down the rugged the Tyrol and the great chaussée to Vienna, which was carried after a rude of great importance, as it was situated at the junction of the cross-road from riously engaged. Appoleon instantly pushed on to Schutling, a military post Imperialists lost 1500 men, although the division of Massena was alone sedinted for the defence of the capital (2) netrenched camp of Marienhalf, to learn the art which might so soon be refallen into decay, were hashly put into repair, and the militia directed to the tions of Arenna, which had withstood the arms of the Turks, but had since Scars of age, who afterwards became Empress of France The old fortificanere sent to Hungary, amongst whom was Mouse Louiss, then hardly six ticles beyond the reach of danger, the young archdule and archduchesses unite was covered with boals conveying the archives and most precious arthe government yielded to the alarm, and terror froze every heart and demanded with loud erres to be enrolled for the defence of the country, torrent, in rain the lower orders surrounded the public offices, sastresip. by these Austrian capital In vain the Aulic Council strove to stem the

The Emperor, although endoned with more than ordinary firm-

into the plain of vienna (5) confinied in cantonments in a small space ready to debouche, in case of need, which lately extended over the whole Alps, from Brixen to Trieste, was conand herpen, by a circuitous route, joined the Archdul e The French army, tistions At the same time General Joubert arrived in the valley of the priave, the same day headquarters were established at Leoben to conduct the negowhence, in a clear day, the steeples of the capital can be discerned, and on that ridge, the last of the Alps, before they sink into the Austrian plain, from capital of Signa On the 9th, the advanced posts established themselves on Simmring, was to be occupied by the French froops, as well as Gratz, the agreed on at Leoney for mye days. All the mountainous region, as far as the Meerfeld, presented himself at the outposts, and a suspension of arms was the Archdule's chief of the staff, Bellegarde, along with General to at Leo ness of mind, at length prelded to the torrent. On the 7th April, 1 144 dyr 1 2 m n 2 1 into the hands of the insurgents such was the panic they occa-1 Pust 135 4 50 nothing but the suspension of arms prevented Treste from failing place among the Croatians Trume was wrested from the Republicans, and nete tabigly changing for the norse in msurrection had taken rinthia, the prospects of the French in Tyrol, Croatia, and Frith Sast ous a nice of the a d us T This these decisine events nere occurring in the Alps of Ca-sioned, that the detached parties of the French fled as far as Gorizia, on the Isonzo. Meanwhile Laudon, whose division was raised to twelve thousand by the insurrection in the Tyrol, descended the Adige, driving the inconsiderable division of Servier before him, who was soon compelled to take refuge within the walls of Verona. Thus, at the moment that the French centre, far advanced in the mountains, was about to bear the whole weight of the Austrian monarchy, its two wings were exposed, and an insurrection in progress, which threatened to cut off the remaining communications in its rear (1).

".(2) silduqəH ədb nese; had I persisted in advancing to Vienna, I would probably have ruined Po; had I agreed to the project of going to Rome, I would have lost the Milament of the campaign, upon entering Turin, I would never have crossed the have received, I have never got twenty. Had I insisted, in the commencefour thousand eavalry, and instead of the forty thousand infantry I was to contribution in the suburbs of Vienna, and attempt nothing more. I have not it that of the Republic. Impressed with these ideas, I had resolved to levy a have deen dissiblt, and the loss of the army of Italy would have drawn after on the armies of the Rhine and overwhelmed me. In such a case retreat would would, without doubt, have beat them, yet they could still have fallen back himself at the head of his armies, and although, if they stood their ground, I is not yet passed by our soldiers; the moment it is, the Emperor will put and at this moment the heads of their columns are on our flanks. The Bhine the people of Hungary, and of all the Hereditary States, were rising in mass, Vienna: the Archduke and his army were falling back on that of the Rhine; tory, enclosing the preliminaries of Leoben. "The court had evacuated sented than in the words of Rapoleon, in his despatch to the Direc-The perilous situation of the French army cannot be better repre-

When such were the views of the victorious party, the negotiation could not be long in coming to a conclusion. Napoleon, though not furnished with any powers to that effect from the Directory, took upon himself to act in the conferences like an independent sovereign. The Austrians attached great importance to the etiquette of the proceedings, and offered to recognise the French Republic if they were allowed the precedence; but Napoleon ordered that article to be withdrawn, "Efface that," said he: "the Republic is like the satisfie to be withdrawn, "Efface that," said he: "the Republic is like the sun, which shines with its own light; the blind alone cannot see it. In that article to be withdrawn, "efface that," said he: "the Republic is like ands, "such a condition was worse than useless; because, if one fruth," he adds, "such a condition was worse than useless; because, if one day the French people should wish to create a monarchy, the Emperor might ambition of the young general had been fixed upon the throne (5).

Conditions

As the French plenipotentiaries had not arrived, Rapoléon, of his continents, own authority, signed the treaty. Its principal articles were, 1. The animalies, own authority, signed the treaty. Its principal articles were, 1. The of the preint of the Republic, and the extension of its frontial and the Emperor in some other quarter. 2. The cession of Savoy to the same power, and the extension of its territory to the summit of the Piedmonviales of the extension of its territory to the summit of the Piedmonvial the extension of its territory to the cession of Savoy to the same power, and the extension of its territory to the summit of the Piedmonvial the states of Alodena, Cremona, and the Bergamasque. 4. The bardy, with the states of Alodena, Cremona, and the Bergamasque. 4. The Dardy, with the states of Alodena, Cremona, and the Bergamasque. 4. The Oglio was fixed on as the boundary of the Austrian possessions in Italy.

5. The Emperor was to receive, in return for so many sacrifices, the whole democratic party azamst the government, on the other, he gave the governture beincen brance and benice, for while, on the one hand, he excited the double perfids did this hypocritical chief of the staff render meritable a rupdesire. The rehement language and enthusiastic conduct of the French that the authors of the flame can make it stop short at the point n bich they It is an easy matter to eveile the passions of democracy, but it is rarely party and their French allies (4) ment too good reason to adopt measures of coercion against the democratic support them with his forces, but he declined to interfere ostensibly in their to obtain succour, and besought the Republican commander of the eastle to dispatched courters to fittan and the principal towns of Lombardy Penet an gents declared openly that they nere supported by the French, and Democrat c insurrec on Detaka out quence of the arrest of the leaders of the insurrection, the insuring of the 12th March, the revolt broke out at Bergamo, in conseinsurrection ready to explode in all the provinces in his rear. On the mornhis endearours, he marched for the Taghamento, learing the seeds of an my maye the desired concessions to the popular parts, but having failed in sessions, to induce the government to unite cordially in a league with France, constant object was, by the terror of an insurrection in their continental posexpedient for the inferests either of the general or the army. Lapoleon's soldiers, brought on an explosion in the Venetian territories sooner than nas and ourselves (2) " spontd all free people do, let us then for ever remain united, you, the French, these words "Let us live, let us fight, and, it necessary, die together, thus its pherty, and their desire to be united with that state, and concluded with metantly announced to the Cispadane Republic that Bergamo had recovered Republic. A provisional government was immediately established, which behalf, though he countenanced their projected union with the Cisalpine overlurned the Venetian authorities, and proclaimed their union with the were introduced into the gates by a body of French caralty, and speedily neither checked nor supported the insurrection At Crema, the insurgents armed the Venetian troops, in presence of the French soldiers, who present in strengthon of Landrieuz, openly three off its allegrance, and dis-The example speedily spread to other towns. Brescia, under the obstance the sample ground, they were bound either to take some steps to the principal fortresses and easiles of the Republic, and that, having thus necessed exactions. They represented that the French armies had occupied advantage of the terror of the Republic to induce them to submit to արդ և ոչ zia, he feigned surprise at the mielligence, but endeavoured to take EN 01 F8 1 racion i The Venetian deputies came up with the French general at Coriplain of the countenance given by his troops to the resolt of their subjects. Directory, and dispatched Pesaro to the headquarters of hapolcon, to comdeclared themselves supported by the Republican commanders, wrote to the and the Senate, not daring to act openly against insurgents who These alarming revolts excited the ulmost consternation at venice, Cispadane Republic (5)

14 330 332

(3) Jon x 122 Th ix "9, 50 A p 14, 130-21 Doit 11 192 194 31 Join x 122 123 Doit 11 199 200 (1) Des Conf de Map Coof Corr 14 289 Uard the continuit resource distributions of the figure at

timid policy which hoped to avoid danger by declining to face it (1). such the degradation which this ancient Republic prepared for itself, by the for nine months furnished gratuitously all the supplies for his army; and this haughty conqueror treated a nation which was not only neutral, but had donable offence when I am in Germany." Such was the violence with which which might have been overlooked when I was in Italy, becomes an unparlight the sames of war in my rear, you have sealed your own ruin. That proceeding to hostilities. If, while I am engaged in a distant campaign, you sians, Austrians, and English, which are lying in your depots. But beware of he, "take it from the Duke of Modena, or levy it on the property of the Rusanswered that their treasury was exhausted. "If you have no money," said You have nourished my enemies, you must do the same to me." The envoys and you will receive more than a million's worth in the cessation of pillage. month as long as the campaign lasts; the Republic will account to you for it, habitants, and opens the door to innumerable abuses. Give me a million aries. "That is a had mode of proceeding," said Napoléon; " it vexes the inthey had, in consequence commenced requisitions in the Venetian territoto furnish supplies to the French army, had ceased their contributions, and The commissaries, whom the Venetian zovernment had secretly commissioned trian territories, for fear of rousing a national war among the inhabitants. general's intention; for he was desirous of levying no requisitions on the Ausany longer a burden on their resources. This was far from being the French that Napoleon, having now entered the Hereditary States, should cease to be as she had previously done to the Imperial. The Venetian deputies insisted use of the army. Hitherto Venice had furnished supplies to the French army, yield to order and peace." They passed from that to the contributions for the and, without employing force with the Italian people, I will induce them to selves cordially to France; make the requisite changes in your constitution; offer you, in perfect sincerity, my friendship and my counsels: unite yourthe principles of the Revolution; to them I owe in part all my success. But I os op seek to ruin us, is impossible. Rever will I turn my arms against insurgents, or let thu Venetums desend us, in favour of our enemies, against those who hate and to act against the friends, against those who have received us kindly, and wish to selves into the arms of France. "That I should arm against our gung reinsug whole weight of Republican vengeance (2). his own time for wreaking upon the state, alone and unbefriended, the . without endangering the enemy, and allowed the French general to select to all the perils of war, without any of its favourable chances; which irritated Judged step, the result of timidity and irresolution, which exposed them without venturing to engage in hostilities with the French forces; an Illtherefore, by a large majority, to act vigorously against the insurgents, but contributions from a state already exhausted by his exactions. They resolved, instead of taking any steps to queuch the slame, had only demanded tresh which had already joined the Cisalpine Republic; and the general-in-chief, rities, was rapidly spreading in their continental possessions, great part of nized in the name and under the sanction of the Republican authoer delay taking a decided part. A formidable insurrection, orga-Year resolve The Venetian government at length saw that they could no longthem back to their mountains, they were soon after followed by the French under General Lahoz, attached and defeated the mountaincers, and droyo maine, upon this, collected a body of fifteen hundred men, chiefly Poles, soon a severe cannonade commenced on both sides General hit-Brescia. The inhabitants, how ever, prepared for their defence, and the valleys, and soon ten thousand armed men appeared before the gates of immensely to excite the movements, large bodies of peasants issued from French, that they narrowly escaped the same fale. This success contributed hundred Poles, of the legion of Dombrowski, and so completely surprised the attached and routed by a body of mountaincers, who made prisoners inc the town, and was about to take possession of it, when they nere suddenly tians, on the western bank of the lake of Guarda. The expedition reached serred by French gunners, to attack Salo, a fortified ton n, occupied by Yene the state of them their gates, accompanied by four pieces of cannon instantly to commence hostilities. A body of twelve hundred men Tre count The democrats in Brescia, instigated by French agents (2) resolver prepared for the irruption of a considerable force into the plains of Breseia (1) arms, large bodies of the peasantry collected together, and every thing na device. The mountaineers and the inhabitants of the Alpine valleys flew t world, in all probability, have been commenced even without this unworth fire the train, and hostilities, from the excited condition of men's mind the forgery, jet, in the agitated state of the country, a spark nas sufficient t general, and though it bore such absurdity on its face as might have detecte ador, was extensively diffused by Landrieux, the secret agent of the Frenc mas written at Milan, by a person in the French interest, of the name of Sal chase the brench soldiers from the Venetian territory. This fabrication, which cutzens faithful to Venice to rise in arms, to inurder the insurgents, an purporting to be from battaglia, Covernor of Jerona, calling upon th seents at Milan This was the preparation and publishing of an addres nere precipitated by an unworthy fraud, perpetrated by the Republica arretocracy on the one hand, and the populace on the other Matters al quence of the furious passions which were roused by the collision of the and about the same time, in many different parts of the territory, in cons But before that took place turnulis and bloodshed had arriven spontaneous more a government to commence hostilities on their refractory subject brakent itruptions of the Croatians into Friult, encouraged the tenetic The retreat of the French from the salley of the Adige, and th at the same time, in Tytol, produced such apparently well-founded hopes of the approaching downled of the Republicans, that nothing but the view rity of victors corps prevented the Senate from openly declaring against mity of victority of terroins, that he was advancing at the head of stay thousand men, that Aspoleon had been defected in the Aron Alps, and that thousand the fibe corps in this rear would appeal thin to surrender the corps in the stay of th

patrician party, from their proximity to the revolutionary cities, were in imminent danger, and a popular insurrection might hourly be expected. The government, however, deeming it too hazardous to come to an open rupture with the French, continued their temporizing policy (1); they even agreed to give the million a-month which the Republican general demanded, and contented themselves with redoubling the vigilance of the police, and and contented themselves with redoubling the vigilance of the police, and and contented themselves with redoubling the vigilance of the police, and any extensing such of their own subjects as were most suspected of seditious arresting such of their own subjects as were most suspected of seditions suspend his threats, and dispatched two senators to the Republican headhe read the thundering letter of Napoleon; but they prevailed on him to all their armaments. Junot was received by the Senate, to whom French prisoners, surrender to him the authors of the hostilities, and dishandthe Republican vengeance, if they did not instantly liberate the Polish and the Senate, in which he threatened them with the whole weight of Zapoleon. Jo LoStie therelore sent his aide-de-camp, Junot, with a menacing letter to Affected for the Republic, at the expense of the helpless state of Venice. He satisfying the avidity of the Imperialists, and procuring advantageous terms possessions of Venice to Austria, he foresaw in these events the means of cluded his armistice at Leoben, and agreed to abandon the whole continental ceived at Salo, affected the most violent indignation. Having already connions, and the check which the Republican troops, in aiding them, had re-Venetian government had adopted to crush the insurrection in their domi-Meanwhile Napoleon, having received intelligence of the steps which the Chiusa, which capitulated from want of provisions, was inhumanly put to already began to feel the pressure of hunger, and the garrison of Fort were closely invested, the city in many parts was in flames, the French passions of the multitude. The cannonade continued on both sides, the forts at accommodation were made, they were all rendered abortive by the furious flagrations soon broke out in several quarters, and although various attempts the French garrison in the forts, fired on the city with red-hot balls. Contals. Indignant at these atrocious crucities, General Balland, who commanded and put to death in cold blood four hundred wounded French in the hospieffectual support. The tocsin sounded; the people flew to arms, the Senate, and the near approach of the Austrians from the Tyrol promised of Verona; three thousand Venetian troops had been sent into that town by sants, to the number of twenty thousand, had assembled in the neighbourhood too fair a pretext to break off the negotiation. The levy en masse of the peaan explosion took place on the Adige, which gave the French general Veroua. But the yery day after the deputies set out from Venice for Leoben, quarters, to endeavour to bring matters to an accommodation (2).

But the hour of retribution was at hand; and a terrible reverse awaited rath the hour of retribution was at hand; and a terrible reverse awaited hostilities commenced, the intelligence of the armistice was received, and the specially and the commenced, the intelligence of the armistice was received, and the specially and the columns of General Chabran appeared round the town, and invested its are specially and invested its are specially and invested its and invested its are specially passed from the highest exaltation to the deepest dejection; and diately passed from the highest exaltation to the deepest dejection; and diately passed from the highest exaltation to the deepest dejection; and death, to revenge the ravages of the bombardment (5).

(1) Th. ix, 112. Uap. iv. 139. Bott. ii. 211. (2) Bott. ii. 217, 218. Th. ix. 113. Jom. x. 131. (3) Jom. x. 132, 135. Th. ix. 129. Belland and (3)

they now sought only to deprecate the wrath of the conqueror, to whom they have sought only to deprecate the wrath of the conqueror, it is a fact that they shall be sought of the entitle short, a general dearming affected among the extentior, the author of the cruelture short, a general dearming affected among the persently and a contribution of 4,000,000 thancs lovered on the coins and kindmaine occupied successively breath and Polaba, and soon the French standards nere discovered from the steeples of femer on the short Lagura (f) the short of their Lagura (f).

inc caping and tour of the Senate publicly applauded this eruel and modistely after, a decree of the Senate publicly applauded this eruel and uniccessary act (2)

the treachery of the trench, or the rapacity of the unpersulted, the former of when the data state of the the trench of them the data state of the trence before the third go partition of tenice before either of these events took place (5), but they go far to diminish the regret which of these would be (4), at the success of any order of the tenice before the tenice of the clinted or order to the clinted or orde

The Yenchan Boance, ununderstuce, with the neutlegreece and "The Yenchan Boance, ununderstuce with the waith of the yarden should be a full of the yarden of the yarden should be a full to the yarden should and the year. They are the yarden should have a full to the yarden should be year. The to the yarden should be your year. It is not a full all the year. It is not a f and another to Patie, nath ample funds at the command of both, to corrupt

when as for from the Years an Gover we than ug

on a street of services the services of the se

the shores of their Laguna (1). soon the French standards nere discovered from the steeples of Venue on sions of Victor and hilmaine occupied successively Vicenza and Padua, and city, The plants nere speedily covered with I rench troops; the united diviamong the peasantry, and a contribution of 1,100,000 francs levied on the quately made; the authors of the cruckies shot; a general disarming affected they had given so much cause of hostility. Submission was immethey now sought only to deprecate the neath of the conqueror, to whom the Lrench ship having been captured by the galleys on the station, nonade ensued between the batteries on shore and the yessel, and not excepting the Lughsh themselves, nere in use to jueld obedience. A canof Lide, in opposition to a rule of the Yenetian Senate, to which all nations, need A French ressel of four guns approached the entrance of the harbour of the same kind stained the last days of the Venetian government inconstant, when not rightly directed, in all ages and countries, but an event These excesses nere the nork of popular passion, equally sanguinary and nnnecessary act (2). mediately after, a decree of the Senate publicly applianded this cruel and the captain and four of the crew nere massacred, and eleven nounded Im-unprincipled ambition, and the fall of the oldest Republic of the Christian far to diminish the regret which otherwise would be felt at the success of bartition of Jenice before cither of these events took place (3), but they go of whom had metigated the revolt of the Venetian democrats, and signed the the treachery of the French, or the rapacity of the imperialisis, the former humane as the brave and the free They do not in the shightest degree palitate pusilianimity and cruelly are allied to each other, and that none are so truly These sanguinary proceedings sufficiently verify the old observation, that ne jana 1 The Venetian Senate, thunderstruck with the intelligence they elroll I .blio.

Their situation had become to the last degree perilous, for they had received, did their utmost to appease the wrath of the sictors.

the rery time y ben Austria, discomfiled, nere precipitated into hostilities DALL THE state A deputation was sent to Graix to endear our to pacify the conqueror, m the capital used was threatening with overthrow the constitution of the cenza, Treviso, Padua, and all the continental cities, while a vehement faction The democratic party, following the French standards, had revolted at 11when their own dominions had become a 1 -1 - and another to taris, with ample funds at the command of both, to corrupt for nal treaty was drawn t p on the felb at d s good on the fall in Catual a, before even it e first of ngr ed to on the 9th at Jud mberg, winie the the entinent of eaching tertion es on Austria were

(1) kop ir 141 Jom z 140 Boit ii 252 Ailmaines Report Co l Corresp in 155 167

aunot et ge 3 ... Vereile, ne bein, in fact, it secre of April 17, at Vereile, ne budemberg, al a time

.1674 1797

3q May,

tunate a pretext for vindicating it as these excesses had afforded (2). tion of the Venetian territories, which he had just signed, to forego so forble to that species of corruption, but was too deeply implicated in the partiwith Uapoléon were fruitless. He was not only a character totally inaccessiof a very large sum, in gaining over the Directory (1); but all their efforts the sources of influence at these places. They succeeded, by the distribution

Venice had still at its command most formidable means of de-

.ojbis gat equality vainly rose like a passing meteor to illuminate the ruins of a fallof prosperity had corrupted the sources of virtue, and the insane passion for of luxury every desire for independence among the senatorial, classes; ages had extinguished every feeling of patriotism in the middling, the enjoyments at Malmocco. But the men were no longer the same; the poison of democracy the Genoese fleet had seized the gates of the Laguna and blockaded their fleet of Cambray had wrested from them all their territorial possessions, or when they extricated themselves with glory from their difficulties; when the league public were not nearly so desperate as they had been in former times, when bid deliance to all the armies of France (5). The circumstances of the Rethe shore, and with the assistance of the sleets of England, they might have water for two, the nearest islands were beyond the reach of cannon-shot from manded by powerful batteries. Provisions existed for eight months; fresh defence of the Laguna; and all the approaches to the capital were comtroops, thirty-seven galleys and 160 gun-boats, carrying 800 cannon for the gency. They had within the city 8000 seamen and 14,000 regular command Venice, fence, if the spirit of the inhabitants had been equal to the emergesources fill at the

they had really committed, consisted in their not having earlier divined the the massacres complained of were committed; and that the only fault which ing the redels in various encounters with the Venetian forces, long defore of aggression were committed by the French commanders, by publicly assistdemocratic party whom they had roused to open redellion; that the first acts excited by the ungovernable insolence of the Republican soldiery, and of the dividuals whom they could not control; that the popular passions had been sacres complained of were not the work of government, but of inatrocious act. To this manifesto the Venetians replied, that the masesotestinald eyes of the Senate, and the authors of the tragedy publicly rewarded for the sick in the hospitals massacred; the crew of a French galley slain under the was preached in all the churches; their detached hodies murdered, and the disciplined by troops sent out of the capital; that a crusade against the French against France; that yast bodies of peasantry were armed and against Venice, had taken advantage of the holy week, to organize a furious war noologen declared by ration of war against Venice. He there complained that the Senate

On the 5d May, Napoleon published from Palma Muova his decla-

Delween him and the Imperial cabinet. The French troops, in pursuance or ing the execution of that unjustifiable partition which had been decided upon The French general was not long of following up his menaces, and preparthat of every independent state (4).

Austrian armies when combating for a cause which must sooner or later be ambitious designs of the French general, and joined all their forces to the

⁽³⁾ Th. iz. 128. Nop. ir. 147, 149. .171 (1) Two hundred thousand crowns, as a private Infile, were placed at the disposal of Barras.—See Harbararac, v. 19, and Napoleon in O'Marara, ii. (2) Map. iv. 144. Join, x. 142. Bott. ii. 223,

9 lt 10

the shores of their Laguna (1) soon the Ireneli standards were discovered from the steeples of Venice on sions of Victor and hilmsine occupied successively Vicenza and Padua, and end, The plains were speedily covered with French troops, the united diviamong the prasantry, and a contribution of 1,100,000 france levied on the diately made, the authors of the cruelites shot, a general disarming affected they had given so much cause of hostility Submission was immethey now sought only to deprecate the wrath of the conqueror, to whom the captain and four of the crew nere massacred, and eleven nounded Imthe I rench ship has my been captured by the galleys on the station, nodade ensued between the batteries on shore and the ressel, and not excepting the Lightly themselves, were in use to yield obedience. A canof Lido, in opposition to a rule of the Venetian Senate, to which all nations, asself A I rench resset of four guns approached the entrance of the harbour of the same kind stained the last days of the Venetian government inconstant, when not rightly directed, in all ages and countries, but an event These excesses nece the nork of popular passion, equally sanguinary and humane as the brase and the free They do not in the slightest degree pallate pusilianimity and cruelty are allied to each other, and that none are so truly These sanguinary proceedings sufficiently verify the old observation, that nnnecessary act (2) mediately after, a decree of the Senate publicly applanded this cruel and

The Venetian Senate, thunderstruck with the intelligence they er ojij biton unprincipled ambition, and the fall of the oldest Republic of the Christian far to diminish the regret which otherwise would be felt at the success of partition of lenice before either of these events took place (5), but they co of whom had mengaled the revolt of the Venetian democrats, and signed the the treachery of the French, or the rapacity of the imperalists, the former nere precipitated into hostilities with the victorious Republic, at 18 1018 271 14340 Their situation had become to the last degree perilous, for they 5 ens (had received, did their utmost to appease the wrath of the yielors and another to Paris, with ample funds at the command of both, to corrupt state A deputation was sent to Graix to endeavour to pacify the conqueror, in the capital itself was threatening with overthrow the constitution of the cenza, Trer 150, Padua, and all the continental cities, while a vehement faction The democratic party, following the I rench standards, had revolted at 11when their own dominions had become a prey to the most furious discord the very time when Austria, discomitted, was retiring from the strite, and

g rea any easse of to uplant to tha french th y a red i au resent on Tener au Coverrum t ber on the 1st of the state of the the en i bental feuel at terr or es to Austra w re

Scorrs Angelesa 11 415 316

Rell b5

tunate a pretext for rindicating it as these excesses had afforded (2). tion of the Venetian territories, which he had just signed, to forego so forble to that species of corruption, but was too deeply implicated in the partiwith Rapoleon were fruilless. He was not only a character totally inaccessiof a very large sum, in gaining over the Directory (1); but all their efforts the sources of influence at these places. They succeeded, by the distribution

Venice had still at its command most formidable means of de-

.oibis Zaie. equality vainly rose like a passing meteor to illuminate the ruins of a fallof prosperity had corrupted the sources of virtue, and the insane passion for of luxury every desire for independence among the senatorial, classes; ages had extinguished every feeling of patriolism in the middling, the enjoyments at Malmocco. But the men were no longer the same; the poison of democracy the Genoese fleet had seized the gates of the Laguna and blockaded their fleet of Cambray had wrested from them all their territorial possessions, or when they extricated themselves with glory from their difficulties; when the league public were not nearly so desperate as they had been in former linies, when bid defiance to all the armies of France (3). The circumstances of the Rethe shore, and with the assistance of the fleets of England, they might have water for two, the nearest islands were beyond the reach of cannon-shot from manded by powerful batteries. Provisions existed for eight months; fresh defence of the Laguna; and all the approaches to the capital were comtroops, thirty-seven galleys and 160 gun-boats, earrying 800 cannon for the gency. They had within the city 8000 seamen and 44,000 regular Venice. fence, if the spirit of the inhabitants had been equal to the emer-Resources still at tilis that of every independent state (4). Austrian armies when combating for a cause which must sooner or later be ambitious designs of the French general, and joined all their forces to the they had really committed, consisted in their not having earlier divined the the massacres complained of were committed; and that the only fault which ing the redels in various encounters with the Venetian forces, long defore of aggression were committed by the French commanders, by publicly assistdemocratic party whom they had roused to open redellion; that the first acts excited by the ungovernable insolence of the Republican soldiery, and of the dividuals whom they could not control; that the popular passions had been sacres complained of were not the work of government, but of inatrocious act. To this manifesto the Venetians replied, that the maseyes of the Senate, and the authors of the tragedy publicly rewarded for the sick in the hospitals massacred; the crew of a French galley slain under the was preached in all the churches; their detached hodies murdered, and the disciplined by troops sent out of the capital; that a crusade against the French against France; that vast bodies of peasantry were armed and against Venice, nostoden had taken advantage of the holy week, to organize a furious war declared by declared by ration of war against Venice. He there complained that the Senate On the 5d May, Napoleon published from Palma Muova his decla-

Detween him, and the Imperial cabinet. The French troops, in pursuance of ing the execution of that unjustifiable partition which had been decided upon The French general was not long of following up his menaces, and prepar-

⁽³⁾ Th. ix. 428. (4) Bott. ii, 255. Vap. iv. 147, 119. (1) Two hundred thousand crowns, as a private brithe, were placed at the disposal of Barras.—See Maxburbergo, v. 19, and Napoléon in O'Aleker, ii. (2) Map, iv. 144. Jom. z. 142. Bott. fi. 223, sentiments busices, of public virtue. No sooner was the inourful act comin a corrupted age, of public virtue. No sooner was the mourful act compression of the people, than they flocked logeliter from all quarters, and

The pear of the transfer of the tradependence of a thousand years, more become of the transfer of the tradependence of a thousand years, more become of the true forms classes, often the table depositance, of the true for the tradependence of the true for the tradependence of the true for the tradependence of the true for the true for the tradependence of the true for the true for ntonces, is consider and relung in silence to the Shouls from the guidy mutitions tent most space, and the tenter of the state of the

voted, amidst the teats of all frience removed and thelte to fourteen r studied the strength of the garmson, outding the state streturated, by reload of the structured of the garmson, outding the scande, were too powerful for the weak and reculiating countries of the Yoman scande, were too powerful for the weak and reculiating countries of the Yoman cande, were too powerful for the scand into they could not with-Yengian obligately. Relating to the tempera which they assembled in mountful altence on the fall hay, and after passing in eguine the weak and substructed state of the Republic, world, amidet the tears of all from essent aunicului quant e no nomical franciante acti francialistic sent eambrome of insubordination; and the hdehty of the Sciavothans, mis com-

and endeatour ord by unitedly concessions, to satisfy the demands and verver or not constituted upon utter the particular democratic and the popular party; a san expectant, councied upon utter genorance of democratic and notes a successful course; ustures ofverate, the an individual plunged in the career of passon, upon its own destruction. The nativities of the property of the case of the property of the prope

Direct and a certal state of perplexity. The senators met at the doge's palace, in treats of the coben, rapidly executed darmflia, and returning by forced marches on their steps, soon appeared on the confines of the Legams, within the lower of Sir-Mark. As they advanced, the flopublic became a sign of the passions, and found from by the factions, which are the general force-piecy to the passions, and found from the force of the proclamation of wait.

all the towns of the continental possessions of Venner recolled the sign of the copial Every city proclamed its independence, and possessed the significant the capital Every city proclamed its independence, and possessed the significant of the copial Every city proclamed its independence, and possessed the significant of the copial every city proclamed its interesting the significant of the copial Every city proclamed its representation. The copies of the processed the significant of the copies of the force of the force of the copies of the copi with loud cries demanded the restoration of the standard of St.-Mark, and any venice arms to combat for the independence of their country, Several forth bloody contests ensued between them and the revolutionary party; but the populace, however ardent, cannot maintain a contest for any length of time when destitute of leaders. The cannon of the republicans dispersed the frantic assemblages; and, amidst the shouts of the insane revolutionists, the frantic assemblages; and, amidst the shouts of the place of St.-Mark, the French troops were conducted by Venetian boats to the place of St.-Mark, where a foreign standard had not been seen for fifteen hundred years, but triumph by the conquering Republic (5). to Rome, thence to Constantinople, and thence to Venice, were earried off in Among the rest, the famous horses, brought in the car of victory from Corinth ships of the line and two frigates; with many illustrious works of art (2). lions in money, three millions of naval stores, and the surrender of three of a division of French troops into the capital; a contribution of three milof the aristocracy; the formation of a popular government; the introduction the new government of Venice, became known, which stipulated the abolition beingen Rapoléon and Venice. when the conditions of the treaty of Milan, signed by Kapoléon with bitter fruits of republican alliance were still more poignantly felt Treaty of party, when too late, to the consequences of their conduct. The infant Republic; a burden which began to open the eyes of the revolutionary at Venice, where his fleet was paid, equipped, and fed at the expense of the secure the fruit of republican fraternization. In the middle of July he arrived sea; and Admiral Brueys received orders from the Directory to set sail to the line, six frigates, and eleven galleys, were not in a condition to keep the Queen of the Adriatic. The remainder of the fleet, consisting of five sail of fitted out two sixty-four gun-ships, and a few frigates, out of the arsenal of the made prize; but such was its dilapidated condition, that they with difficulty their hands. All that remained in the celebrated harbour of St.-Mark's was 1,800,000 francs, belonging to the Duke of Modena, were all that fell into seized by the French generals; but instead of the vast sums they expected, of future independence. The treasures of the Republic were instantly of their ancient subjection, their allies were depriving them of all the means while the democrats were exulting over the destruction of this emblem of the Senators of Venice, was burnt at the foot of the tree of liberty; and spoils of their revolutionary allies. The Golden Book, the record The French troops were not long of securing to themselves the where the colours of independence were never again destined to wave (1).

strate of the While these memorable events were going forward on the southern increments aide of the Alps, the nar languished on the frontier of the Rhine. Latour commanded the Imperial army on the Upper Rhine; his forces, after the departure of the veteran bands, under the Archduke, did not exceed thirty-four thousand infantry and six thousand horse; while those under the orders of Werneck, in the Lower Rhine, were about thirty thousand, and the orders of Werneck, in the Lower Rhine, were about thirty thousand, and articles only bound the Venetians to furnish three articles only bound the Venetians to furnish three articles only bound the Venetians to furnish three dered the French admiral, Binnys, who was sent to superintend the spointion, to carry off the shole superintend the spointion, to carry off the shole thier, in these terms: "One toute l'artilletie, tous less magasins de guerre et de bouche, qui se trouvent y vinise, soient transportes à Carlon, Ancone et Ferrare, de manière que vous rendiez Venise sans une seule prèce de canon."—See Corresp. Secrète de Mapoleon, nit, 170, and iv, A27.

(1) Butt ii, 276, 278. Th. ix. 138, 139. Jom. x. 150. Solkowski's report to Rapolcon. Conf. Corr. iii, 235, 241.
(2) Jom. x. 152 Bott. ii, 277, 279 Th. ix. 140.
Sec. the secret articles in Corresp. Confid. de Rap.

(3) The seisure of these horses was an act of pure arbiery. The Venetians, in the secret articles, agreed to surrender "twenty pictures and five hundred manuscripts," but no statues, from the less, the French carried off the horses, from the place of St.-blark, and put them on the triumphal sontingents burst forth among the labouring classes, often the last depositaties, in a corrupted age, of public riviue — do sooner was the mouriful act communicated to the people, than they flocked together from all quarters, and homes, exclaimed, with tears, "Yence is no more; St -Nat. like the revolutionists n ere thus battering their country sor the symptoms of reaubordination, and the fidelity of the Scheropians, who constituted the strength of the garrison, could not, it was ascertained, be relied to it. These elements of anarchy, sufficient to have chaken the courage of the former senate, were too powerful for the weak and realising connected of the former senate, were too powerful for the weak and realising connected or the capacity of the facility of the former of the facility of th remained ment; a furrous rabble filled the streets, demanding with loops, the abdication of the Senate, the immediate admission of the French troops, and the establishment of a government formed on a highly democratic basis; and the establishment of a government formed on a highly democratic basis;

in a cruel state of perploxity. The senators met at the dogs's palace, and endeavoured by untimely concessions, to satisfy the demands and renter of democratic ambition, which concessions, deteited by place, can more realisty, but which, in such a successful course, rushes forward; place, in motivational plunged in the career of passion, upon its own destruction. The motivational plunged in the career of passion, upon its own destruction. The states is the career of passion, upon its own destruction. The motivation is the career of passion of the passion in the career of passion, upon its own destruction. The motivation is the career of passion in the own destruction in the career of passion in the career of passion in the own destruction. The motivation is the career of passion in the

in treaty of tooben, rapidly erecuated cannibia, and returning by forced marches on their steps, soon appeared on the confines of the Lagunas, within the contines of the Lagunas, within the general force states of section and the general force and the properties of mathematical force and the properties of the continental possessions of Venner revolted and the force and the continental possessions of Venner revolted and the force and section and the force a there gave cannest of that cool intrepadity and segretous burness of that cool intrepadity and segretous burness of and, in the send, with incirc.

The single having the second of the Republican infantry of the following the single was the meantine, been established, burness began to and the bridge having, in the meantime, began for the bridge having, in the meantime, because statement of the following with the single was the second of the single burness of the second of th

g among the reland from the German shore, and made themselves musicus I rom this they forded the narrow branch of the Rhine which landed, and made prisoners three hundred Croatians, who composed its the shower of balls forced them to take shelter behind an island, where they they came within reach of the grape-shot from the enemy's eaunon, when opposite shore The boats, however, pulled gallantly across the stream, till trans baying taken the alarm, and appearing in considerable force on the following morning, it was evident that a surprise was impossible, the Ausretarded the embarbation of the advanced-guard till six o'clock on the Delays unavoidable in the collection of the flouila having Cuncur above and below that place were prepared, to distract the attention of the directed to Diersheim on the night of the 19th April, while two false attacks were collected in the III, a small stream which falls into the Rhine, and rendering hazardous any attempt to cross near that town. Seventy barks b each on the preparations of the enemy in the neighbourhood of Strasburg The point selected for this important enterprise nas Diersheim, the banks of the Tagiamonto before the middle of March, unbaned the praint of the Cagiamonto before the middle of March, unbaned to rivality of the Georeals on the Hunes, while the onterests of the Republic man between the deal that the campagn should samultaneously be commenced about on the test of the deal monatory. According the displaced should not state the charten monatory, Accordices, or offer the strength of the Austrean monatory. Accordices, such nas the Calaused state of the tree dates and the displacement of the public resempes defining the convusions of the Revolution, that the Directory nas mable to during the convusions of the Revolution, that the Directory nas mable to during the convusions of the part of the Revolution, that the Directory nas mable to during the convusions of the part of the Arris, in the Degmanng of April, and plotting the preparation to pract, and the displacement of the March and the Arris, the degmanng of April, and plotting the preparation to practice for the obstacles having that necessary provide the Hunes of the Hunes, and completed has preparations for construction, be returned to the Hune, and completed has preparations for costing that tree.

thenly thousand nere shut up within the fortresses on that stream. The truth force were much more numerus, the string, which that of the filmre and Moselle, muler bloreau, being sarly thousand strong, which that of the Sambre and Moselle, muler bloreau, cantoned between Dusseldorf and Coblentz, amounted to machy severity thousand. Moselle, was under the command of Hoche, whose origins and blottles gave every promise of success in the ensuing cannyloop or page, while the possession of the feles-de-point at Dusseldorf and Neural Gonzale, while the possession of the feles-de-point at Dusseldorf and Neural Gonzale in the continue of the page of the possession of the feles-de-point at Dusseldorf and Returned for the page of the page of the possession of the feles-de-point at Jacobia, which there were the page of the success on the Lower-Rhine.

quarter (2).

debouche in great strength, upon which the Austrians commenced their debouche in great strength, upon which they sustained considerable loss from the hord decear. Tetreat; during which they sustained considerable loss from the passage of the Rhine secured, and all the fruits of the bloody sieges of Kehl and Huningen lost to the Imperialists. In these actions the loss of the Austrians was 5000 prisoners and twenty pieces of cannon, besides 2000 killed and wounded (4). When it is recollected that this passage was gained not by stratagem but main force, in presence of a considerable part of the not by stratagem but it in undid at once all the advantages gained by them and one of the most memorable military achievements of the revolutionary and one of the most memorable military achievements of the revolutionary.

Operations Taught by the disasters of the preceding campaign, Moreau recourshort colved to push the corps of Starray with vigour, and prevent that a methodical retreat which had proved so beneficial to the Imperialists in the previous year. For this purpose he pushed his advanced-guard across the Renchen the very day after the passage was completed; and was in the high-road to farther successes, when he was interrupted by the intelingence of the armistice of Leoben which terminated the campaign in that ligence of the armistice of Leoben which terminated the campaign in that

The campaign was in like manner cut short in the midst of opening

The army, put there at the disposition of the field of battle (5). and on the following night they effected their junction with the victors on was known that the bulk of the enemy's forces was advancing from Neuwied, advanced to Ukerath and Altenkirchen, which were abandoned as soon as it sixly eaissons. At the same time the left wing of the army crossed the Sieg, men in killed, wounded, and prisoners, twenty-seven pieces of cannon, and sively stormed, and the Austrians driven back, with the loss of five thousand French masses, after which the other redoubts, taken in flank, were succesvillage of Hulsendorf was carried by a concentric attack from several of the less vigorous, and no advantage was gained by the assailants till the fortified resistance of the Imperialists, though greatly inferior in number, was not powerful batteries. The attack of the Republicans was impetuous; but the roads leading from the bridge, was strongly fortified, and covered with manded the Imperialists in that quarter; and his position, blocking up the 13th April. Passage of the Ulune forced at forced at at that place at the head of thirty-six thousand men. Kray comthe snare, than Hoche debouched rapidly from the tele-de-pont front of Neuwied. No sooner did he perceive they had fallen into stop the progress of the troops from Dusseldorf, leaving only a small body in advanced with the greater part of their forces to Altenkirchen, in order to The Austrians were so far deceived by these movements, that they Rhine. the Loner litate that purpose by a simultaneous movement at Dusseldorf. enoiterago no edecul 10 passage, with the bulk of his forces, from Neuwied, and to faciand fine condition of the cavalry and artillery. Hoche resolved to effect the lic ever sent into the field, and particularly remarkable for the numbers Hoche, was one of the most numerous and well appointed which the Repub-

the two divisions of his army; but, finding that he was unable to make head

⁽¹⁾ Jom. x. 77, 85. Th. ix. 111. St.-Cyt, iv. 23 Jom. x. 95, 96. Th. iz. 110. Ney, i. 211, 165, 183. (2) Jom. x. 86, Th. ix. 111, St.-Cyt, iv. 184, 190.

```
[Cuap XXIII.
                    HISTORY OF PUROPE
```

towards the Name, floche concerned the design of cutting them off before the rectorious general, and the imperialists having continued their refreat own, tell back behind the falm thither he was immediately followed by against the immense forces of his opponent, which were nearly double his continued their retreat. The advanced-guard of Lefebrie was at a st Apr I litedil les by ite by ite sim s ce confinned to press the enemy on the ligh road, by which they right wing, under Lefebrre, to Frankfort, while the centre and left they crossed that river I or this purpose, he pushed forward his ligence of the preliminaries of Leoben, to the infinite mortification of the the Euces of that opulent city, when hospities were suspended, by the intelmoderal la been anticipated to the Republic (1) rival, in a career of success, from which the most glorious effects might have French general, who saw himself thus interrupted, by his more fortunate concention of 5th August 1796 The health of the hing had for which was begun by the treaty of tible in 1795, and consolidated by the the protection of the associated states within the prescribed line, Lygod figure 1 of armed neutrality, inclining rather to france, and supporting Prussia, during this eventful year, adhered steadily to the system

coration of the order of the Black Eagle on his favourite minister Itaugon the felh November, having, as his last act, bestoned the de-L6 1 Death of the hing vol a dr long been visibly dechains, and he at length expired at Berlin, histy talents, few monarchs have conferred greater beneuis on Though neither endowed with shining civil nor remarkable mi-(5) 211th torial acquisitions which he made, is to be rechoned the important commertheir country than this sovereign (5) Among the many and valuable terri-something also must be admitted to have arisen from the nisdom of the things, and it chiefly arose from the monstrous partition of Poland 1ct crease is doubiless to be ascribed to a fortunate combination of extraneous that arm as the main foundation of the public strength. Much of this inmereased by A tstula, and h

Hasti flatad ritro no f n fo 1 nthis important monarchy, is to be found one of the principal causes of the reasonable length, and in the unnise desertion of the cause of Lurope by national jealousy of Austria, and partiality for France, were carried an unquered to other states by disaster (4) But in the close of his reign, the and contrised to reap nothing but profit from a stormy period, deeply checabinet, which skilfully turned these circumstances to its own advantage, tpe constqu subject to accordant and uncovernable fits of possess the desirate to preciate the refinements of conversation, good humoured in general, but t --- " " " to no emounem nue coisnut to bnot ni oi osnas

$$ 4 Pash (4)

8

erg erel and his reign (5).

scandalized by the great ascendency obtained by his profuse and rapacious irregularities in private life; and the court during his latter years was and imposing edifices. But his facility and passions led him into several which caused his reign to be illustrated by the construction of several noble malversations, by his successor (4). mistress, the Countess Lichtenau; who was called to a severe account for her own capacity in judging of state affairs, which, at first, threw him, to an Napoleon (2). He entertained a sincere, though undeserved, distrust of his sternness, or excite a spark of chivalry in the cold and intellectual breast of attracted the admiration, though they could not relax the policy or melt the eaptivating qualities were so well fitted to excite, and which afterwards and high-spirited princess, he bore to her that faithful attachment which her solute court, a pattern of every domestic virtue; married early to a beautiful of his reign. Severe and regular in private life, he had lived, amidst a disthe crown; and his character and habits already presaged the immortal glories the 3d August 1770, he was twenty-seven years of age when he succeeded to to such important destinies on the theatre of Europe. Born on William III. now ascended the throne; Frederick Villiam III, afterwards called Very different was the character of the youthful sovereign, who dually removed during the difficulties and necessities of the later periods of unreasonable degree, under the government of his ministers, but was gra-

mately led to such disastrous effects to Prussia and Europe (\hbar) . to cultivate the good understanding with the French Republic, which ultifather had commenced; and in a holograph letter to the Directory, his wish continue those measures for the security of that part of the empire which his circular addressed to all the states in the north of Germany, his resolution to same time, the King, under the directions of Hardenberg, declared, in a remainder of her great fortune being settled on the hospital of Berlin, At the part of her ill-gotten treasures, and assigned a pension of 15,000 francs; the jewels were found in her possession. She was obliged to surrender the greater necessary: her wealth was known to be enormous, and many of the crown than his own wishes, rendered the trial of the Countess Lichtenau unavoidably todacco, which his father had re-established. The public indignation, rather same time, gave an earnest of his sincerity, by abolishing the monopoly of branches of the public service, and was resolved to rectify them; and at the informing them that he was aware of the abuses which had crept into various and policy. his accession, he wrote a circular to the constituted authorities, His first acts were in the highest degree popular. On the day of Evely

Austrians to the defensive in Germany, but enabled the Republicans to carry the Upper Rhine to the valley of the Adige; and thus not only reduced the pelled the Aulic Council to detach Wurmser with thirty thousand men from public. It was his brilliant victories in Piedmont and Lombardy, which compreparing to cross the Rhine, and earry the war into the territory of the Re-Maritime Alps, the Imperialists, greatly superior to their antagonists, were Germany. When he degan his immortal campaign upon the summit of the Successes of justly due to it, not only for the triumphs in Italy, but for those in asionishing possible to refuse to the genius of Napoleon that tribute which is Retrospect. In concluding the survey of these memorable contests, it is im-

⁽³⁾ Hard. v. 36. 43. (4). Hard. v. 36, 43. (1) Hard. v. 34, 37. (2) Napoléon in Las Cascs, ii. 228.

littes into the Hereditary States, and dictated a glorious peace within sight of other aid than that derived from the valour of his own soldiers, carried hostihimself great part of the neight of the Cerman nar, and finally, without any anquished six successive armies in Italy and the Julian Alps, but dren upon reinforced, never at one time amounted to sixty thousand men, he not only defend the Bereditary States Thus, with an army which, though frequently compelled the deaft of thurty thousand of the best troops from Swabia, to monarchy into that quarter, and the advance into the Alps of Carintbia, round the nalls of Mantua, drew off the nhole resources of the Austrian the nar into the centre of that country Subsequently, the desperate conflicts had entered on that dazzling existence which afternards entranced and subsorereign prince, his poner exceeded that of any hying monarch, and he deeds had filled the norld with their renown. Already dapoleon acted as a train, and vied with each other for the admiration of those narriors whose capity sted by the splendour of the spectacle, hastened to snell theillustrious nith so much lustre at the court of the Tuileries, and the ladies of Italy, husband, Pauline displayed those brilliant charms which afternards shone there received the homoge due to the transcendent giornes of her fouthful tron crown nas placed on the brons of Charlemagne Josephine Bonaparte at stake, than had ever been submitted to European diplomacy, since the and there n eightier matters n ere to be determined, and dearer interests n ere examine the claims of thesereral states which nere the subject of discussion, of Genoa, Lenice, haples, Predmont, and the Suiss Republic, assembled to regal splendour, the ambassadors of the Emperor of Germany, of the Pope, gress There the future Emperor of the Hest held his court in more than plenipotentiaries had been retified, and the nork of treaties was in procon tipus mediately commenced, before the end of May, the poners of the Newscome of plain of Lombardy Aegoliations for a final peace nere there intwere in the stabilished himself at the chaicau of Montebello, near Milan, a stabilished himself testlence, n bich overlooked great part of the Commence Meanwhile hapoleon, sheathing, for a time, his victorious sword, the steeples of Vienna these gradual changes neve far from being sufficient for the fervent spirit of Book, who had raised themselves to a rank worthy of that distinction But exclusive, and many plederans had recently been inscribed in the Golden rable number of families, but the principle of government was by no means and from the gradual decay of public spirit, become tested in an inconsidepopular constitutions, the influence in the state had, in the progress of time, than at Venice, was far more resolute and defermined As in all other old there nas rested in an aristocracy, which, although less jealous and exclusive excited an extraordinary degree of enthusiasm at Genoa. The government the French general belief of the presistable poner of the French armies, soon sides of the Po, the fermentation in the Venetian states, and the Ilevolution at G nos The establishment of a republic on a democratic basis on both men and citizens of the Cisalpine republic, who had taken an active part arms of France could reach. In the course of these struggles, some Frenchthe recolutionary party to be subdued in any country which the French then But it was foreign to the system of Republican ambition to allow but for foreign interference, was preserved (2). had prevailed over the fumes of democracy, and the independence of Genoa, tenness of the aristocracy, supported by the courage of the rural population, which the democrats had assumed, was torn down from the walls. The Cenoese colours again doated on the city, and the trivolor flag, the first bursts of the fumult, were regained, the club Morandi dispersed, the revolutionary antagonists. The posts, which had been seized in endeavour to stem the torrent. They soon prevailed over their The beart from the Senate, and brought in their faithful followers from the country, to themselves at the head of their followers, with load cries demanded arms ed by their natural leaders, and seeing the dagger at their throats, put tumult, Upon this some of the patrician families, finding themselves deserttook refuge with the French minister, as the only means of appeasing the reduced to their own resources, were pursued and massacret, and at length the line wavered, the burgher guard could not be trusted, and the senators, that on the following day a general insurrection took place. The troops of calming, he, rather increased the effers escence; and the consequence was, their liberation, and prevent the effusion of blood, Instead of the intervention of the French minister, Enypoult, was sought, to procure party, who had proceeded to acts of sedition, brought matters to a crisis, and the forces with which they were assailed. The arrest of two of the popular tided, did not possess either the moral energy or physical strength to combat on a new and highly democratic basis; while the Senate, irresolute and diof the Directory, and insisted for the immediate formation of the constitution the Prench army (1), they openly announced the assistance and protection concessions. Secretly stimulated by Napoléon, and the numerous agents of house of an apollecary of the name of Morandi, soon insisted on far greater opinions. But the vehemence of the revolutionary club, which met at the the same amount, and the recall of the families exiled for their political or mad a general to envilling our to thought oft yill among a loan to A treaty had been concluded with the French Directory, by which Genea.

pe) ond the end of August (2)

dued the nortd (1)

ascendency. In vain the Senate endeavoured, by half measures, to preserve democratic party, encouraged by this powerful protection, now resumed the brueys, with two sail of the line and two frigates, appeared in the bay. The port these demands, the French troops advanced to Tortona, while Admiral of all the nobles who had instigated any resistance to the innovators. To supof the prisoners, the disarming of the counter-revolutionists, and the arrest den sent his aide-de-eamp, Lavallette, to the city to compel the enlargement nister peremptorily demanded their instant liberation; and Sapo-לרוחטכרגווכ rity into the scale, in favour of the democracy. The French miom 110d instantly made this a protext for throwing the weight of his autho--10211 pur with the popular side, were wounded, and made prisoners; and Sapoleon

(2) Jon. x. 170, 171, Th. ix. 113, 141. Mop. iv. Corresp. iii. 170. north of Italy, which may hereafter he united into one." -- Confid. Despatch, 19th May, 1791, Confid. would there be three democratic republies in the Genon will undergo the fate of that of Venice. Then de Kap. iii, 170. "Genoa," said Napoleon, in his confidential (i) Bott. il. 285. Joni. x. 167. Corresp. Scereto deputies to me to sound my intentions. It is more than probable, that, in ten days, the aristocracy of Jusa end stenoel soft the Sonote de son of the son and stenoel soft (Your dennote soft the Sonote de sonot olmto i

-91

Cuar. XXIII, HISTORY OF EUROPE.

hands, and a doubiful campaign about to begin, without desitation riolated tie treaty By this treaty the Limperor ceded to France, Flanders, and the extended to the summit of the Maritime Alps, he consented to the line of the Rhine, he agreed to the territory of the Republic being frontiers of the Imperial states in Italy, and Mayence, the bulnark of the the Venetian territory, were ceded to France, which acquired Mantua, on the ΙO states of Flanders, Istria, Dalmatia, the Venetian isles in the Adriatic, the On the other hand, the Republic ceded to the Emperor, in exchange for the empire on the Khine.

the conquerors, were in some degree, also extended to the sanquished, side of Poland. The adrantages of the treaty, therefore, how great soerer to tion of nearly the same amount which they had made during the war, on the 3,100,000 souls, lying close to the Bereditary States (5), besides an acquistin the Venetian states a territory of equal riches, with a great seaport, and sinces, rich, indeed, but distant, inhabited by 5,500,000 souls, and received into the hands of the Austrians, who lost in Flanders and Lombardy proof the Po. By this arrangement, lerona, Peschiera, and Porto Legnago, fell far as the eastern shore of the lake of Guarda, the hne of the Adige, and that mouths of the Cattaro, the city of Venice, and its continental possessions as expressly provided that " in acquisition should be proposed to the advantage princes on the left bank of the Rhine, on the right of that river. But it was Austria to Suitzerland, and the providing equivalents to the dispossessed Aigspon of the Rhine and the Mense, the abandonment of the Frielthal by tant towns of inviertil and Wasseburg on the Inn, from Bararia; the free nacession of Salzburg, with its romantic territory, to Austria, with the impornearly equal importance. The most material of these regarded the position these public, the treaty contained many secret articles of iban janaad n as appointed to meet at Bastadt to settle the affairs of the empire. Finally, of Prussia " For the arrangement of these complicated objects, a convention had thrown themselves into the arms of Republican ambition (5). Its territory extreme, and deeply did its people rue the fatal precipitance with which they nies and immortalize his name. The sufferings of Italy in these confests nere of his military career, and which contributed so powerfully to fix his desti-

1, 256 Map er 281. Hard v. 11] (4) fom x 254, 255 Nep 14 268, 267 Hard ardour had been 1 ost det ded (2) Nap 1v 205 266 Dare v 432 (3) 1 m. x 254, 256 Dare v 432 (1) Hard iv 529, 586, 880

(5) The enormous sum of 120 000,000 francs, or which no wealth could purchase, had been torn from their native seats, and of art had followed the ear of Victory; and the works of immortal genius, was partitioned; its independence ruined; its galleries pillaged; the trophies

the publica- mulgation of this treaty excited in Venice. The democratic party, No words can paint the horror and consternation which the proviolently transplanted into a foreign soil (1).

ing thus, by the extremity of grief, the last act of national independence (2). his emotion was such that he fell insensible to the ground; honour-Austrian commissioner to take the oath of homage to the Emperor, tinople by the Venetian crusaders. When the last Doge appeared before the portice of the church of St.-Mark, to commemorate the capture of Constansplendid bronze horses, which, for six hundred years, had stood over the pillage the arsenal, remove every vestige of independence, and take down the occupied Venice, lower the standard of St.-Mark, demolish the Bucentaur, Intionary passions. With speechless sorrow they beheld the French, who bosom, and they were doomed to perish from the effects of their own revoit was too late; with their own hands they had brought the serpent into their imperial rapacity with republican treachery awakened among the Venetians, But, whatever may have been the unanimity of feeling which this union of constitution of their country, hardly ever escape sacrificing its independence. unavailing anguish, that those who join a foreigner to effect changes in the vehement invectives against their former allies, and discovered, with tears of and received a French Farrison within their walls, broke out into the most the government to abdicate in order to make way for a republican régime, her of that in particular, who had allied themselves with the French, compelled democratic faction, though it was obtained at the expense of the existence of portion of the people celebrated with transports of joy the victory over the Yet even in this catastrophe, the fury of party appeared manifest, and a large their country.

Jealousy, which were naturally awakened by the aggrandizement of two belthis liagrant violation of the law of nations. Independently of the feelings of in Europe. voices were raised, even in the legislative body of France, against Great sense. The fall of the oldest commonwealth in Europe excited a general by this event celvilized world. Many The fall of the oldest commonwealth in Europe excited a general resp. de Mopoléon, iv. 212. In reality, it was his desire to acquire the harbour on the marine, and destroy England; that done, Eu-rope is at our feet "-Letter Conful, to the Directory, dated Passeriano, 18th October, 1797-Confud. Cor-tern, de Novolson, in 9.9 noble enterprise. Let us concentrate all our activity et ustion occupion de division of these action establisme a shinking of eight from momental of the establisme and the establisment of th are generous, initigating, enterprising. It is indispensible for our government to destroy the English monarch for it is tillibility be overturned by the interpretation of the artists of the configuration. Marino on no using our toar Long in it is saying active or dangerous, with a view to our milliary pear and aracicious food on electric are less nau kurjajen v og L. angjour Lugpje anogjia. Genous Campo Formio, he concludes : -- Finally, we are still at war with Dugland; that enemy is great Vicenty and strongly as Bagland wavefully starty and strongly expressed. In enumerating the factory of the treaty of the treaty such unexampled secesity that unhappy republic. pedition against legypt and Great Britain, that was one main inducement with Aspoleon to treat with another main such many and the such ma and maral resources of Venice, for his projected ex-> ancerminable hostility to Great Britain. in his future life, the expedition to E31pt, and two objects, which formed such memorable features early period, the mind of Aspoleon was set upon side to novo Alymorts word oldadremore et al (1)

> they are dying of famine. With Alaka and Corfu, n e should soon be masters of the Mediterranean, ready well disposed towards us, for I have confis-cated all the possessions of the order in Italy, and The inhabitants, who amount to 100,000, ure alment combose the whole garrison of la Valette, master of it: 100 knights, and, at the utmost, 500 do blod yel ton on ob." (7871, especially distributed blod yell to see the second cases of the second case of the second cases " " hy," said he, in his letter to the Directory, of

> '921 'Ai -Letter Confid. 13th Sept. 1797-Corresp. Confid. ships of the line, or trigates, and take possession of it, kgypt does not belong to the Grand Seignior." hence, with 25,000 men, escorted by eight or ten precatious authority. We might embark from pean power; the Venetians even there had only a Eypt. That country never belonged to any Euro-"Should we, on making peace with England, be compelled to give up the Cape of Good Hope, it will be absolutely uccessary to take possession of furnal. They angs of a people, nho, after fourteen hundred years of independence, nere with a mingled techng of terror and pity; and sympathized with the sufferillustrious deeds, its constancy in misfortune; they beheld its annihilation had to partition its territories, men contemplated only its long existence, its barbarre invasion. Wilhout enquiring what right, either Trance or Austria nor with such limited resources made so glorious a stand against the tide of Europe. No modern state, from so feeble an origin, had risen to such eminence, had contributed in so powerful a manner to the return of civilisation in template nathout emotion the overthrow of that illustrious Republic, n hich ligerent poners at the expense of a neutral state, it was impossible to con-

the neakness of the Venetian aristocracy, or the insamiy of the Venetian indignation is to be felt at the perfidy of France, the cupidity of Austria, In contemplating this memorable event, it is difficult to say n bether most doomed to pass irres ocably under a stranger's joke (1).

For the conduct of Napoleon no possible apology can be found (2). He first people

Alinetto, the Po, and the Austrian States ' (Ibid, 111, opr under generate Liettiat tentiat gefectu pfin Leoben, which assigned to the Emperor of Austria oth April, usent of Venice offers you no security sessions of I enice, in which he said, -. "The govern-and good understat ding between France and the bestell The object of happing in signing this treaty, is unfolded in cated by the encirens thruselves. paison of Venues is but a momentary operation, so-lected by the Venetans themselves. The Pope is in these words, in his despotch to the Directory lie saitrul ors e voine Venice of enorites fut liet elle btill bergrang up the fergrand eppearance of pro-

(1) Daru, v. 436, 437.

oxcited the revolutionary spirit to such a degree in all the Italian possessions of the Itepublic, at the very time that they were fed and clothed by the bounty of its government, that disturbances became unavoidable, and then aided the rebels, and made the efforts of the government to crush the insurrection the pretext for declaring war against the state. He then excited to the uttermost the democratic spirit in the capital, took advantage of it to paralyse the deformed of the declaring war against the government of the country; established a make the feth May at Milan, by which, on payment of a heavy ransom, the 16th May at Milan, by which, on payment of a heavy ransom, and agreed to maintain the independence of Venice under its new and Revolution.

by relieving him from a war, to which he bimself confesses his forces were unequal.

emoposaj adi jyun Ajjeroj dan temegamog effeminated and corrupted, not less cowardly than hypocritical, the people of Italy, but especially the estito emburos il co elevabili obracios Lucin en ofitica. [Letter, 26th Oct. 1797, Conf. Cor. v. 405.] Divided Besides, the Venetian nation no longer exists. these Lentilemen would make a winter compaign. the establishment of Republics every where I wish terise than by calling them madmen, to rave about panding of declaimers, whom I cannot better characinterests, I know well, that it costs nothing to a alike to the declared wishes of France and its obvious Living as to excepted forth thousand brench, contrary cibic of philosophy or morality which should comsake of other nations. I should like to see the prinbill rol tew guidem to mixem oft borgobe conert terests and advantages to those of Venice. Never has depublic is bound by no treaty to sactifice our inof the degradation of modern fialy, "The French containing it is to be feared, too faithful a picture shang in that Republic, he replied, in yords Μυση Μ. Villetort, τλια εκετείλεγος τη Βεστεί Ιρου της τίου οξ Venice, τς προεξείτεξη γείη διεροξέφη πρου τhe

The same idea is expressed in a letter about the same period to Talleyrand, "You little know the people of Italy, they are not worth the sacrifice of forty thousand Frenchmen I see by your letters four you are constantly labouring under a delusion, You suppose that therty can do great things to a base, cowardly, and supersitious people. You wish may operform miracles, I have not the art of doing so. Since coming into Italy I have derived little it any support from the olove of the Italian people for the liberty and equality, I have not in upy army a single through the attention and equality, I have not in upy army a single that any in the steep of the Italian, excepting filter hundred assents, swepterm the attention of the form of the people for the people in proclamations and public speeches, is now 7th Oct. 1797; Corteer, Conflex for have remained to the conflex for the reason, 7th Oct. 1797; Corteep, Conflex in 2 and 2

tions, 7th Oct. 1797; Corresp. Confed. iv. 206.

It only remains to add to this painful narrative of Italian duplicity, that having no further occasion for the services of Landricux, whom he had emboryed to stir up the revolt in the Italian cities, and having discovered evidence that he bad been in physed to stir up the revolt in the Italian cities, and correspondence with the Venetian government, Nathentic evidence had been discovered of the double part which he acted in that discovered of the double part which he acted in that discovered of the double part which he acted in that discovered of the double part which he acted in that discovered of the tory,—" Landricux excited in Aspoleon in consequence, on the 15th November, wrote to the Directory,—" Landricux excited the resolt in bressia and Aspoleon in consequence, on the 15th November, wrote to the Directory,—" Landricux excited the resolt in bressia and he privately informed the venetian government of his privately informed the Venetian government of his privately informed the Venetian government of the privately in think it right to make an example of such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him such a rascal; and, at all events, not to employ him again," [Letter, 15th Nov, 1707, Conf. ex. iv, 289.]

the French Republic, of Ace the Venetian vessels, and all the navel stores, for the use of Foulon," [Conf Des. iii. 305.] Louion; but my intention is, to take presession, for To onizem out sol essois to disow envilling south time are bound to furnish to the French flepublic Toulon, By a secret article of the treaty, the Venesport? For most manage so as to transport of Venice to lie, making use constantly of the Venetian name. In to engage in our service off the sailors of the flepubtestion of every thing ; taking care, at the same time, and to live in good intelligence with the Venetiaus, and pectable footing. Under this pretext you will take posthe maritime forces of the flepublic be put on a resthem, that, in conformity to the principles which now unite the Republic of France to that of Venice, and the Republic of France like the liepublic of France gives to that of Venice, it is indispensable that france gives to that of Venice, it is indispensable that will, upon the receipt of this, present yourself to the provisional government of Venice, and represent to strangers." [Ibid. iii 291.] Soon alter, be wrote to General Baraguay-d'Hilliers, 13th June :-... You the theatre of the world, free and independent of all solidate your liberties, and to see unhappy Italy at length assume the place to which it is entitled in the in my power to good not sold of my desire to conhy the municipality, and the secret articles by three members. In every circumstance, I shall do what concluded at Milan may, in the mean time, be signed lity of that town, on the 26th May, " The treaty tection to Venice, Sapoleon wrote to the municipa-

These orders were too faithfully executed; and arben every article of naval and unitiary stores had been every article of naval and unitiary stores had been evept avay from Venice, Sapoleon, without he heistation, assigned away his revolutionary alticate artistocratic power of Austria. The history of the artistocratic power of Austria. The history of the artistocratic power of Austria. The history of the simulation.

It is in vain to allege, that the spoliation of Venico was occasioned, and justified, by their attack on the rear of the French army at Verona. The whole continental possessions of the Republic were assigned that event took place, and when nothing had occurred in the Venetian states, but the contests becurred in the Aenetian states, but the contests becurred in the varietocratic and democratic factions, tween the aristocratic and democratic factions, which had been stirred up by the secret emissaries of Napoleon himself.

Ilis conduct throughout this transaction appears this conduct throughout this transaction appears was, to secure such pretexts for a rupture with Venice, as might allord a decent ground for making its territories the holocaust which would, at any time, bribe Austria into a peace, and extricate the French
bribe Austria into a peace, and extricate the French Twice did the glittering prize answer this purpose;
Twice did the glittering prize answer this purpose;
once, when it brought about the anim relies on Leoben,
and saved Napoléon from the ruin which otherwise
and saved Napoléon from the ruin which otherwise
and saved Napoléon from the ruin which otherwise and saved have betallen him, and again at Campo-Formio, nuce have betallen him, and again at Campo-Formio,

for their redress

safety be adopted, and that, whatever may be the defects of government, foreign perd are never those in which considerable internal changes can with the most prudent as nell as the most honourable course, that periods of may be learned both by rulers and nations, that courage in danger is often setable consequences of the pusillanimity of the other, a memorable lesson neal ness From the glorious result of the brimness of the one, and the miof those neighbouring poners nho had fomented its passions to profit by its who should wield them, and the state become an easy prey to the ambition force, the means of national resistance prostrated by the divisions of those which there took place, to see the revolutionary spirit acquire irresistible gor criment done the same, they might have expected similar results to those tentous change in the internal structure of the constitution. Had the British at length to the demands of the populace, and admitted a sudden and porthing to coerce the spurt of disaffection in their own dominions, they yielded stained from hostilities with the revolutionary power, they did nobus 3 d to the British aristocracy were urged to do L rdet

L rdet

re of 67

proof 67

to not 67

to not 67

to not 67

to not 67 They cautiously abas the only means of salvation. The Venetian aristocracy did what assailed by democratic ambition, and urged to concidiate and yield too, nore chaken in credit and paralysed by revolt, they, too, nere ž 1 3

they are the norst enemies of their country who lesgue with foreign nations

CHAPTER XXIV,

INTERNAL GOVERNMENT OF PRANCE, FROM THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DIRECTORY

ARGUMENT.

these Events. Victory—This is the frue commencement of Military Despotism in France—Reflections on viously concerted with Bapoleon—But he is disgusted with the severe use they make of their Guiana-Vigorous and despotic measures of the Directory-This Revolution had been premost illustrious Citizens of France-Cruel fate of the Exiles-Escape of Pichegru from the minority of the Councils-Extinction of the Liberty of the Press-Transportation of the mission of the People-Address of the Directory to the Councils-Tyrannical Measures of Troops—And the Guard there join Augereau—Revolution of 18th Fructidor—Passive subby the Councils-Violent Measures of the Directory-They surround the Tuileries with -Slender Milliary Porce at their Command-Re-organization of the Autional Guard decreed Talents and Eloquence—Their defensive Measures, but they decline to commence Hostiffies Addresses to them from the Soldiers-Strength of the opposite party consisted only in their mation to his soldiers on tith July-The Army strongly support the Directory-Extravagant that purpose sends Lavalette to Paris in Spring 1797—And Augereau in July Mis Proclaround Paris-Measures of Sapoleon-He resolves to Support the Democratic Party, and for rectory resolve on Decisive Measures-They change all the Ministers, and collect Troops Emigrants and Clergy-Great alarm of the Directory-The Republican majority of the Diavert the danger-Camille-Jourdan's Efforts in favour of Religion-Coneral refurn of the licans—General Reaction in favour of Royalist Principles—Measures of the Directory to joins Carnot-Club of Clicby, the great centre of the Royalists-Club of Salm, of the Repubprevail in the New Elections-Barthélemy is chosen a Director in lieu of Letourneur, and period in France— But the Result of the Elections is preparing a Catastrophe—The Royalists Leaders previously arrested. Abortive attempt of the Royalists. Singular Manners at this arrested-His Partisans break out at Crenelle-But are Defeated and Executed-Trial of the Revolutionists—Plans of the Conspirators—The Conspiracy is discovered, and babont Revolutionary Principles—But they fail now in rousing the People—Renewed Efforts of the tenets, and worship of this Sect-Renewed Efforts of the Lacobins-Babwul, his extreme in France—But Irreligion continues triumphant—Theophilanthropists—Singular character, Deputies delivered up by Dumouries-Successful lifforts of the Directory to restore order ties of their Situation—Liberation of the Duchesse d'Angouleme, who is exchanged for the hell, Laréveillière Lépaux-Letourneur-First Measure of the Directory-Extreme Difficulof 1795-Virst Proceedings of the Sow Legislature-Choice of the Directory-Barras, Rowof Democratic Anarchy—State of the Public Mind and Manners in France in the beginning of Democracy, the great object of Civil Covernment-Provision of Nature against the Evil Retrospect of the previous changes of the Revolution—Maximum of Freedom, with Minimum membrance to all classes of citizens; the chimera of equality can no lo wer repose; the contentions, the miseries of former years rise up in fearful re-During this period it is evident that the chief desire of the human mind is for strength refused to lend its aid to the ambition and the illusion of individuals. when its desolating effects had decome generally known, and the public the declining and enfeebled efforts of Republican fury during the period usm. It remains to examine its progress during the receding tide; to trace beign insurrection, sanguinary oppression, civil warfare, and military despoherolution, cial embarrassment, arbitrary confiscation, general distress, pietheir natural stages of public transports, moneyed insecurity, finanորդ յն Տերբացությ traced, show the progress of the principles of democracy through SHOIA of the pre-The different eras of the Revolution, which have hitherto been 122025011211

where the stands of corements of the swell supplied in France, men were now dispelled in France, men were now dispelled in France, men were now dispelled in France, men the standard of the supplied in France, men and in the standard of the supplied of the standard of the supplied of the standard of the supplied of th that extinction, in the necessary consequence of the effects which they produce The necentity, privations, and suffering which they induce, unavoidably lead to military despotism. Some democratic satisfan, shifan, shorence, and sienma, to terminate their discensions, that is columnistical to the joke of a nin-thary teader, others have statement as democratic states and intergrated of democrate state, all they are, in one way or other, oxpoticed the desaily period of domestic state, all they are, in one way or other, oxpoticed the desaily removed from the system, and to shan the horrors of anarchy, shielded them-version from the system, and to shan the horrors of anarchy, shielded them-

ender the state of the state of

decling enjoyments of guilt are speedily lost in its lasting pains, the extraheaven," does to the wild excesses of lust, which finds immates for hell. The genuine liberty, as the chastened attachment of marriage, which " peoples dreedom is to the individual at bears the same relation to the principle of given rise. The democratic passion is to nations what the desire of licentions dily terminate its ascendency, and punish the delinquencies to which it has society, it cannot be indulged to excess, nithout inducing evils which speeare at hand. Lake all other passions, however, whether in the individual or Find, but when it becomes the ruling power, the last extremines of suffering because it is desire, and not reason, which ever governs the masses of manoplects concludes cannot be achieved nithout the excitation of this passion, Erester than the political grievances which an abouted its fury Great national cies, When too rehemently excited, it often becomes an east incomparably under due restraint, than the savage passion for the destruction of the spealnays essential to its security, but it is not a less evil in itself, if not kept military spurit is offen necessary to purchase national independence, and possessent frequently necessary to sustain the conflicts of freedoin, just as the the smallest expenditure of human life. The democratic passion is

Julia To effect the maximum of freedom, with the minimum of demotororment which promises to save them from, the noted of trainines, the government which promises to save them from, the noted of trainines, the mater the consequences of former or of them from with the and demoseduce—the nilment of former and of demoserince—the nilment of free maximum of december.

where a cree, is the great problem of civil government, just as the chief broaden object of native to altern the greates properly, at established before that of Fabricius was restored (1). the strife of Gracchus; but ages revolved, and a different race of mankind was implies a sacrifice of both to patriotic feeling. The age of Nero soon succeeded is extremely difficult from either to the love of genuine freedom, because that suality, because both proceed from the indulgence of individual passion; it tion is easy from the extravagance of democracy to the corruptions of sendirection. This is the natural termination of popular effervescence; the transisumed its wonted order, not by repentance for crime, but a change of its luxury never more prodigal-passion never more unrestrained; society reners never were more corrupted than under the rule of the Directoryof death and the restraints of religion, was indulged without control. Manreturn of pacific ideas, and the passion for enjoyment, freed from the dread fluence of the saloons; female charms resumed their ascendency with the cobins restored the sway of the rich; the recollection of the clubs, the in-All women were in transports at the auspicious change. Horror at the laturned in crowds, with a confidence which afterwards proved fatal to them. singularly contrasted with the disasters of former years: the emigrants rein the enjoyments of existence. Public affairs had an air of tranquillity which monarchy; it seemed as if the nation, long famished, was quenching its thirst theatres, frequented with more avidity than in the most corrupted era of the suspended, were resumed with unprecedented alacrity; balls, festivities, and mence into the enjoyments of private life. The elegancies of opulence, long amelioration in the social system, all classes rushed with unbounded vehejointed, from the chaos of revolution; and in despair of effecting any real and its severity to all beneath itself. Society emerged, weakened and disvernment its vulgar manners and sanguinary ideas—its distrust of all above, had usurped the whole authority of the state, and borne to the seat of gowas still further removed from France of the 10th August, when a single class ardent aspirations, its popular magistrates, and its buoyant population; it of the 14th July, 1789, with its enthusiastic feelings, its high resolves, its Piret proproceed to the deputies were regarded with the utmost solicitude by all confidence of parties upon the completion of the elections. The third part, who the regarded with tolerable fidelity the opinions and wishes of the people who had now become influential in France. They consisted not of those extraordinary and intrepid men who shine in the outset of the revolutionary tempest; but of those more moderate characters who, in politics equally as the past error, and are disposed only to turn the existing state of things to the past error, and are disposed only to turn the existing state of things to the best account for their individual advantage. But their influence was inconsiderable compared with that of the two-thirds who remained from the old siderable compared with from their habits of business and acquired celebrity, continued to have the principal direction of public affairs (2).

Choice of the whole deputies having assembled, according to the directions to the whole deputies by ballot 250 of their number, all above forty, and married, to form the Council of the Ancients. They afterwards proceeded to the important task of choosing the Directors; and after some hesitation, the choice fell on Barras, Rewbell, Lareveillière-Lépaux, Letestiation, the choice fell on Barras, Rewbell, Lareveillière-Lépaux, Letestiation, and Sièyes; but upon the last declining the proffered honour, tourneur, and Sièyes; but upon the last declining the proffered honour, Carnot was chosen in his stead. These fire individuals immediately proceeded to the everses of their new sort-erighty (1).

Though placed at the fread of so great a state, the situation of the Direcfirming as the surrounded with difficultes. When they took possession of tens was at thest surrounded with difficultes. When they took possession of though proceed are the state a state of the Direct and the state of the procession of the state of the state the altempt.

The alter are to conducte in this side his interfect of perish the alter by a parts as a the one of the Bircclory his mass most qualified by his standard by personal during the alter by personal qualifies a carrier of a myose upon the viginary business, he was yet possessed of the firmness, decision, and andstonary business, he was yet possessed of the firmness, decision, and auditable of the viginary business, he was yet possessed of the firmness, decision, and andstonary business, he was yet possessed of the firmness, decision, producing the my production of the firmness, decision, and auditable of the wight, and the firmness, decision, and auditable of the wight of the firmness and the firm of the fall of the fall of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of Robert of the fall of Robert of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the fall of Robert of the firm of the fall of the fall of the firm of the fall of the fall

duct, totally destingte of the multitude, often in a statemart, storoughly and or presented the feet of the multitude of the in a statemart, storoughly and the statemart, storoughly and the statemart, storoughly and the statemart, storoughly and the statemart, storoughly make a stoccto Republican, who had formed the Girondists on the same principles which had been storoughly mad been has sections, gree in the considerable influence with more refloral pointenans, the sections, gree intrinces or cloquence, but he direct his elecation to his member of courtes of allowed to his considerable influence or cloquence, but he direct has elecation to his manner.

bugged with the uterliesous fanalieson of the age, and perpetually decaning the place of earliest and when Catnot came in place of Sueges, he received the the place of earliest and when Catnot came in place of Sueges, he received the department of the marine and the colonies (3).

Figure 2. The first object of the Directory was to calm the passons, the beginning the first object of the Directory was to calm the passons, the second for the direct first of a photose especially as, with the exception of Garnot, there was not only only on the creditation, the credited the cities at a first of any considerable reputation, the credited is the first of the man of genus or of any considerable reputation, the credited and any of the creditation, the credited is a first order of a passon of the first principles were a particular and about the confidence in the could entire about the first order of the first principles in the confidence of the first principles and about the first principles where the first principles is a passon of the first principles.

(1) Th ver 18 (2) Leader 19 (2) (3) "Lea to the control of the con

Extreme

Duchesse

defeat they had sustained (1). seemed rather proud of the perils they had incurred, than subdued by the not humbled, had great influence in the metropolis, and their followers menacing language of the Royalists. The leaders of that party, defeated, but ceived great disquietude from the recent formidable insurrection, and still quently their elevation gave great joy to the Democratic party, who had conthey had all voted for the death of the King in the Convention, and conse-

Within and without, they were surrounded by difficulties. The the unfortunate peasants received only paper, worth not a thousandth part other great towns was obtained merely by compulsory requisitions, for which maximum and forced contributions; and the subsistence of Paris and the sale of all kinds of commodities had ceased from the effect of the law of the treasury, still dripping wet from the manufactory of the preceding night. The a daily issue of paper, which every morning was sent forth from the public ceased to be collected, and the public necessities were provided for merely by individual, even of the humblest rank in society. The revenue had almost nature, in revolutionary disorders, to bring salutary suffering home to every that extreme abuse of paper money, which seems the engine employed by the generals discouraged. The progress of the public disorders had induced The treasury was empty; the people starving; the armies destitute; .noirmile Revolution had left every thing in the most miserable situation. כן וווינוג difficulties.

victory over both, only to the public torpor which recent experience of the had brought the country to this miserable condition; and they owed their labours, they were successively assailed by the different factions whose strife the Republic, have been already considered (5). But in the course of their The brilliant successes by which Kapoléon restored the military affairs of discontented and dejected (2).

destitute of every thing, and unfortunate at the close of the campaign, were of the value at which they were compelled to accept it. Finally, the armies, had been confined since her parents' death. This illustrious printhe daughter of Louis XVI from the melancholy prison where she One of their first acts was a deed of humanity; the liberation of suffering they had endured had produced (4).

republican commissioners, and received by the Austrians with the honour proceeded by rapid journeys to Basle, where she was exchanged for the left the prison where she had been detained since the foth August, 1792, and on the 19th December, 1793, this remnant of the royal captives by Dumouries. Who had been delivered up by Dumouries to the Imperialists; and Who is ex-changed for the Deputies delivered up to the feelings of humanity, agreed to exchange her for the deputies those she had so tenderly loved. The Directory, yielding at length confinement since the fall of Robespierre, and was still ignorant of the fate of from her arms, to be consigned to destruction, -- had been detained in solitary seen her father, her mother, her aunt, and her brother, successively torn of her persecutors would permit, every filial and sisterly duty, after having with which she bore them, after having discharged, as long as the barbarity cess, interesting alike for her unparalleled misfortunes, and the resignation ,əmət nosuv p due to her rank. Her subsequent restoration and second banishment, will ⁽¹⁾ Th. viii, 81, 85. (2) Th. viii. 85. Aign. ii. 402, 403. (3) Loth and A2d chapters.

The first measure of the Directory for the relief of the finances, was to form an interesting episode in the concluding part of this work (3).

Ma bad.

·(c) notici

Cuap. XXIV. HISTORY OF EUROPE,

and though the discontents to which it gave rise appeared in the conspiracy cipation from the tyranny of the mob of the metropolis, nas boildly adopted, to the most necessions classes. This great measure, the first symptom of emanis a libe to the people, which nere thenceforn and to be continued only Creation of oblain a decree authorizing the cessation of the distribution of ra-

the precious metals, they should have been issued at one two hundred-andtion of assignate to a thirtieth part of their value, but to be on a par with like an equality with gold and silver The mandates were, in trull, a reducand redundant at home from its excessive issue, be maintained at any thing paper money, worth nothing in foreign states, from a distrust of its security, to their value as the old assignats by no possible measure of finance could began to decline, and were soon nearly at as great a discount in proportion bosed to be of the same value but before many months had elapsed they dred millions of mandates nere issued, secured over an extent of land supary re-ource but this relief was of short duration I'mo milliards four huntitleen to eighty france, and their success procured for government a momentpublic farour, a mandale for 100 france, rose, soon after it was issued, from became generally understood, it procured for them an ephemeral degree of electual process for getting his paper exchanged for land As soon as this gnate was, that they entitled the holder to a more summary and The only advantage possessed by the mandates over the old assiprevent all speculation on their value, the public exchange was closed (2) soling the mandate for less than its nominal value in gold or silver, and, to nere ordered to be made in it alone, severe penalties nere enacted against give this new paper a forced eirculation, all payments by and to the government of the assignate had been so excessive, that no one would take either themor passed with the great bulk of individuals in the state. The fall in the value servants, nere still suffering the most severe purration, but the crisis had from it, including the public creditors, the army, and the civil fifticih part, being the rate of discount to which the original paper had non Covernment, therefore, and all the persons n to received payment proces terbal At the same time the most violent measures nere adopted to over to the holder of a mandate without any other formality than a simple legal tender, the national domains wereforthwith exposed to sale, and assigned mandates nere declared the currency of the Republic, and became by law a depreciation which the first had undergone. It was immediately acted upon, ferror denomination, and was meant to conceal from the public the enormous thirty for one This nas in truth creating a new kind of assignate, with an interritorial mandates, which were intended to relite the assignals at the rate of Ros criment adopted the plan of issuing a new kind of paper money, to be called to a thousandth part of its nominal value. To stop this enormous evil, the a million in metallic currency in other nords, the paper money had fallen so excessive, that a milliard, or a thousand million of fiance, produced only tive milliards, or about L 2,000,000,000 sterling, and the depreciation became assignate The quantity in circulation at length rose in January, 1796 to fortytion, the government found uself obliged to continue the assue of

After various ineffectual attempts to return to a metallic circula-

of Babout, it was successfully carried into effect (1).

at a small advance to the purchasers of the national domains (1). who bought them for a twentieth part of their nominal value, and sold them torial mandates were nowhere to be seen but in the hands of speculators, were effected by harter or exchange for the precious metals, and the terrientirely ceased to be a medium of exchange; transfers of every description the conquest of Planders, Italy, and the German states, the government paper victories of the Republic increased, and gold and silver were obtained from for which they afterwards became so celebrated under the empire. As the deserted, the Boulevards and Chaussée d'Antin began to exhibit that splendour degree, their former activity; and though the former opulent quarters were change, internal trade and manufactures regained, to a certain til semonall bed alageab their families. From the general prevalence of this rude intertimes at a loss, and by which the higher classes were enabled to maintain of every description, which were retailed sometimes at a profit, and someconverted into vast magazines for the storing of silks, velvets, and luxuries likely to procure a ready sale in the market. The most opulent houses were of any fortune, realised it in the form of the luxuries of life, which were modity with another, had usurped the place of side; and all those possessed their successors in change. Barter, and the actual interchange of one com-

.(2) Jush whom they were fearful of discovering a former acquaintance or depenvoice, or with an averted head, imploring charity from crowds, among of which they had formerly been the principal supporters, and in a disguised crowding round the doors of the opera and other places of public anusement, vivors, of the Revolution. Under the shadow of night they were to be seen subsisted upon the charity which they obtained from the more fortunate surto daily labour for their subsistence; others, unable to endure its faligues, of the Reign of Terror. Many, driven to extremities, had recourse, late in life, produced many more suicides among that unhappy class, than all the horrors trees, which inevitably follows such a convulsion. The prospect of famine under its wheels. Then was seen the unutterable bitterness of private distants who had swelled the multitude of its votaries, were now equally crushed capitalists who had fanned the first triumphs of the Revolution, the annuithe rentiers, were overwhelmed by unprecedented distress. The opulent in its depreciated paper, were starving. But most of all, the public creditors, were living in luxurious affluence, those on the soil of the Republic, and paid and Rapoléon, paid in the coin they extracted from the conquered states, had flocked to it during the Reign of Terror. While the armies of Pichegru nations; and the soldiers deserted from the armies in as great crowds as they universally shunned; the persons in every kind of service sent in their resignantiversally Employment from government, instead of being solicited, was the line time ditors, still paid in mandates at par, were literally dying of famine.

of the fund. financial crisis, the servants of government, and the public cre-

But while all other classes were thus emerging from this terrible be state of the situation of the armies in the interior was not less deplorable.

State of the armie of the soldiers, alike unable to procure any thing for their the same pay, were maintained only by the forced requisitions which, under the law of necessity, were still continued in the departments. The detachments were dispersed, and deserted on the road; even the hospitals were ments were dispersed, and deserted on the road; even the hospitals were shut up, and the unhappy soldiers who filled them turned adrift upon the shut up, and the unhappy soldiers who filled them turned adrift upon the who composed it, unable to maintain their horses, sold them, and left sions. The gendarmence, or mounted police, were dissolved the soldiers morld, from utter inability to procure them either medicines or provi-

Stangers profited by the general distress of France to carry on a atrocities (1). tural result of the dissolution of society, became the theatre of unheard-of the service, and the high-roads, intested by numerous brigands, the na-

The Cermans, the Swiss, the Russians, and the English, seized considerable degree to restore the precious metals to erreulation, trom tie commetee with its enflering inhibities of France to early on a lived in seclusion and rustic plenty on the produce of a portion of their habited the buildings formerly tenanted by their servants, where they whose estates had escaped confiscation, retired to the country, and inthemselves by selling a part of the materials, and numerous families, and private edifices, which were sold for almost nothing, and reimbursed lators, called to bande Noire, purchased up an immense number of public change in the taste for the fine arts over all Europe A band of specu-Russian and English palaces, and by their general dispersion effected a tues, and furniture of every description, nere cagerly purchased for the procured for their ruined possessors a transitory relief, and pictures, siaceated during the Reign of Terror, left their place of concealment, and sold cheaper at Hamburg than Paris; diamonds and precious stones, conof the most costly description nere bought up by speculators, and metallic riches upon the scattered but splendid morables of France. Hines the moment n ben the assignate nere longet, to fall nith all the poner of taxes should be received either in coin or mandates at that rate, with the raine, which should be published every day at the Treasury, and that the money which they chose, that the mandates should be taken at their current clared that all persons were to be at inberty to transact business in the of a bankrupicy, which had long existed, was adopted It was denes need of the 16th July, 1796, the measure, amounting to an open confession open and the tit was in vain to pursue the chimera of upholding its falue On The excessive fall of the paper, at length made all classes perceive .(%) solutes raine, from the meccure tenure of all possessions, deemed worth thirtyworth one hundred trance in 1790, and still, notwithstanding the fall of its impossible that the holder could be allowed to obtain in exchange for it land the mandate had fallen from one bundred francs to five france, it was make some change as to the purchase of the national domains, for where The publication of the fall of the mandates, rendered it indispensable to sponje stij pe received in pind exception of the department bordering on the seat of war, in which it the undisposed of national domains should be sold for mandales at their and francs (5) It was in consequence determined, on the 18th July, that current yaine

Breater : affer it

-1119408

be cec

(3) 71 g rin 339 Th vin 346, 347 July 15.

2) Lac aus '37 338 me dT (1)

Public

Deprived of the extraordinary resource of issuing paper, the Direc-.STOJ daily more productive from the number and energy of its new cultivasubdivided, required little of the expenditure of capital (4), and became for nothing by the holders of government paper; and the land, infinitely rated from their engagements; the national domains were purchased almost hand, the debtors throughout the whole country found themselves libewere opulent, were reduced to the last stage of misery. On the other creditors, the government servants, in fact, all the classes who formerly with one franc could force a dicharge of a debt of two hundred; the public form in which it permitted payment to be made. In its later stages, a debtor grant and church estates. All debts were in fact annihilated by the elusory fortunes from one hand to another, than even the confiscation of the emiment. It did more to overthrow the existing wealth, to transfer movable bankruptey (2). point of ruin. In these circumstances, it was no longer possible to avoid a the most extreme state of penury, and all the national establishments on the armies of the Rhine, of the Sambre and Meuse, and of the Interior, were in other sources of revenue had failed in the same proportion. Meanwhile, the mainder of the national domains had not been half realized, and all the instead of 250; and the 200 millions expected from the sale of the rethan had been expected. The land tax had produced only 200 millions, cious; the revenue proved greatly less, and the expenditure much greater, been recovered. But the event soon proved that this calculation was fallaof 500,000,000, or L.15,000,000, of the forced loans, which had never yet the revenue for 1796 at 1,100,000,000 or L.50,000,000, including an arrear to accommodate their expenditure to that standard. They estimated Bankrupicy tory were compelled to calculate their real revenue, and endeavour which cut off at one blow two-thirds of their property (3). that they could not take land, this was, to all intents, a national bankruptey, As the great majority of the public creditors were in such circumstances to almost nothing, from the quantity simultaneously thrown into the market: immediately fell to a sixth of their value, and shortly after dwindled away rate of twenty years' purchase. These bills, like the Bons des Trois Quarts, the payment of a capital in bills, secured on the national domains, at the of the debt in specie; and the remaining two-thirds were to be discharged by therefore finally resolved to continue the payment of a third only to this, without taking a decisive step in regard to the debt. It was confiscated. the naor about L.27,000,000, but the expenditure could not be reduced owl bnh to sbridt continued. The income of 1797 was estimated at 616,000,000 francs, mode of payment speedily became so excessive, that it could no longer be altogether unsaleable; and the disorders and partiality consequent on this the three-fourths were from the first at a ruinous discount, and soon became burden was reduced to 62 millions, or L.2,400,000. The bills received for of france, or about L.11,000,000 sterling; so that, by this expedient, the Bons des trois Quarts. The annual charge of the debt was 248 millions and three-fourths in bills, dischargeable on the national domains, called with the rentiers, the Directory at length paid them only a fourth in money, be sacrificed. After exhausting every expedient of delay and procrastination The public creditors, as usual in all such extremities, were the first to ers a h errod ed errog, a obsidity of q z noor ai bloded assmall a brid it over the ni ai and charactust essent pour lo ebasdent charactust of the decision of the reserve that it bosours and a strong some factor of the ferring and the x 26.1 20.1 1 40.5 Lac x

146

na M 281 1 1 62 M (1)

2 Lavalette f "23

al taluga e erre esw lone e al log i row off. I ad f al fall fe tre ti ig at roll ecw au quale II rer before them wae m gut have been templed to em enangogen na ta ft an gin bet er 1800 yearen

the nors yefthe go pel tol) awon en ile mo beraci Jour chidren and cor closic service by the rest of poets of service by the service poets of a new telp, noticy are in the first of the unit of a new telp, noticy are in the first of the unit of the service part of the service of the new telp, notice and the service in the poets of the service of the service

The shock of parties, however, had been too riolent, the nounds inflicted any thought on religious concerns (5) Desem alone remained in the few of the revolutionary party who bestowed steady freedom in that distracted country in rain Larereilière is to be feared, is destined to prevent the growth of any thing the rational or and all the glories of the empire, have not been able to repair, and which, it chasm in the social institutions of France, which all the genius of happleon, portance of this deficiency appeared in the elearest manner, it has left a enpeednengly the immense imthe first elements of religious instruction faith of their fathers, a generation was ushered into the world, destitute of douth of both sexes were brought up without the slightest knowledge of the hiding under the roofs of the faithful remnant of the Christian flock abolished, baptism and communion unknown, the pricets in exile, or in t amp and by the strokes of the Decembers the churches were closed, Sunday improvement. Religion still remained prostrated as it had been in one particular alone, the Directory made no approach towards of the fusion of the revolutionary crucible (1) the immense obligation of having reconstructed the elements of society out afternards committed, France owes to the Directory, during the first year, the purchasers of the national domains. Whatever faults they may have France, the roads were secure, the ancient proprietors lived in peace beside place without violence, the guilloune no longer shed the noblest blood in entremey the press had resumed its independent the elections had taken free the assignals were replaced, without any conculsion, by a metallic idleness of towns, was abolished, the commerce of grain in the interior was maximum, which compelled the industry of the country to pay tribute to the olutionary regime, had been removed or alteriated. The odious law of the the new government, the most frightful exils entailed on France by the re-H ithin a few months after the establishment of effect of their own passions into order, under any government which saves them from the desolating man affairs when the ferer of passion has subsided, that men fall insensibly of necessities Such, in fruit, is the disposition to right themselves in hua termination of political contests had become the most imperious seconded by the efforts of the great majority of the people, to "hom ure of the restore order to the distracted chase of revolutionary France, were extremities to which the doctrines of democracy are necessarily pushed, when principles of their leaders at this juncture are singularly instructive as to the of repose. It was from the Jacobins that the first efforts proceeded; and the too profound, for society to relapse, without further convulsions, into a state and Robespierre, whom they still upheld as objects of imitation to their folthe lacobins; and there instituted a species of idolatrous worship of Marat of the Panthéon, which they trusted would rival the far-famed assemblage of faction re-assembled. They instituted a new club, under the splendid dome their influence at the helm of affairs. Flattered by these prospects, the broken and the character of the Directors inspired them with hopes of regaining voke the aid of their desperate hands, to resist the efforts of the Royalists, revolt of the sections on the thirteenth Vendemiaire, had compelled it to ining of the faubourgs. But the necessities of government, on occasion of the bespierre; and from all influence in the metropolis by the defeat and disarmcivilisation. They had been driven from the government by the fall of Rocharacter; and complete democracy, in spite of the institutions of modern hoped to establish absolute equality, notwithstanding the variety of human Thermidor as the commencement of their bondage. They still Renewed et- This terrible faction had never ceased to mourn in secret the ninth names, it is ever the same aristocracy which oppresses the poor, and keeps a Villiers, a Laborde, a Danton, a Barras, or a Rewbell. Under different the possession of riches, and it matters not whether they are in the hands of from enriching themselves at others' expense. Real aristocracy consists in too timid leaders, piqued themselves on their foolish determination to abstain of a few rich, but without benefiting the poor. The sans-cutoftes, guided by venture to pronounce the word 'Agrarian Law,' He effected the spoliation ensure its lasting success. "Robespierre fell," said he, "because he did not they had not ventured to make that use of their power which could alone ciple was, that the friends of freedom had hitherto failed because His extreme aspired to become the chief of the fanatical band. His leading prin-The head of this party was Babœuf, surnamed Gracchus, who Duchesse v'Averates, vi. 38, 11. (1) Luc. Aiii, 13, Aligu. ii. 411. with the desires, incident to the human race. See temptations, liable to the mislortuncs, and filled the goodness of the Beity, that a permanent impression to the pression is to be made on a being exposed to the polis; it would have undergone the same fate in any others and outers and lowers and voteses, declamations on the beauty of Spring and the contract of the communications of the contract of the communications of the commu merely to the irreligious spirit of the French metroworship. The extinction of this sect was not owing money enough to hire a room to earry on their cupied as their temples, they were unable to raise in the four churches which they had hitherto orsiderable, that when a decree of government, on the dually declined; and they were at length so inconspeedily died a natural death Their number gracourage to publish short works in its desence, which hve years; and two of its members had even the views soon proved correct. The sect lingered on they will speedily prove effectual." Napoleon's upon them; and if I know any thing of the Brench, milingly become martyrs: I shall do them no such honour. No strokes but those of redicule shall fall the Lord's Prayer. You and cour friends would and never embraced any considerable body of the inculcation of the moral virtues, was short-lived, like all other founded upon mere Deism and the brace their opinions." [D'Ab. vi. 37, 38.] I his sect,

moveapua temples 1

they take a deep hold of the body of the people.

Do you wish to see what is truly sublime? Repeat a few commonplace sentences put into bad verse. absurdity. That is what is truly adminable, and not assemblage of the principles of mornity divested of tection to the west, respect to the laws, gentitude to God. The gorpel alone has exhibited a complete escentification of the gorpel alone has exhibited a what do you see in the Widham, the Koran, the Old Telament, or Confucius? Every where pure morality; that is to say, a system incubating procabreity of the people to whom they were addressed, or less absurd, which were necessiry to suit the morality are fine, Apart from certain dogmas, more whose tenets incultate only universal benevolence and the moral virtues?"—" What do you mean by that?" replied the First Consul; "all systems of hun eerne in nour enourity teom out ynone our spend seems that you slighterize those whose chiefs one of the most enthusiastic of their number, " is it helm of affairs in 1799, in their true light, "They are good actors," said he,-" What!" anywered Wapoleon viewed these enthusiasts, some of whom were still to be found in Paris when he seized the complete democratic regime was established. The day for commeneng the democrate, in whom the powers of the state nere to be invested until the fixed on sixty-eight persons who were esteemed the most pure and absolute achieved, was a matter of anxious and difficult deliberation. At length they whom to intrust the supreme authority of the executive, after this was death their leading members, and erect the sovereignty of the people; but to animously agreed to murder the Directors, disperse the Councils, and put to ernment, consisting of " true, pure, and absolute democrats," It was unto divide property of every description, and put at the head of affairs a goadherents Their design was to establish the "Public Good," and for that end that force, named Grizel, whom they considered one of their most important in the camp at Grenelle, and admitted to their secret meetings a captain in and the slavery of the people. They had some communication with the troops Temple of Reason, where they sung songs, deploring the death of Robespierre Paris Babouf was at their head, the chiefs assembled in a place called the thelre confidential agents, with affiliated societies in every part of #15TUOIT Committee of Public Safety, which communicated, by means of cussion, reluced to sanction any such aitempts (2).

(1, Let xo. XII, 7) These doctrace to the fact and the fa

Defected an this attempt, the dacobins formed an insurrectional signs of Communicated by means of the state of the control of the control of the squared the control of the control them perpetually in the condution of the Spartan Helots. The people are excluded from the chief share in the property of France, nevertheless, the people who constitute the whole strength of the state, should be shone in rectified with it, and that too in equal shares. There is no real equality without an equality of riches. All the great of former times should, in those turn, here it should begin a fixed sty without that the fixed between the stopped by reduced to the condition of theore, without that the fixed by the principles which Lycurgus or bare is a principle which Lycurgus or three it should begin. These are the principles where Lycurgus or the out their adoption, the benedit of the Revolution are a metre chimiers $\{1\}$, when their adoption, the benedit of the Revolution are a metre chimiers $\{1\}$, where $\{1\}$ is their adoption, the benedit of the Revolution are a metre chimiers $\{1\}$, where $\{1\}$ is the state of the ferolution are a metre chimiers $\{1\}$, where $\{1\}$ is the state of the ferolution are a metre chimiers $\{1\}$.

the natural result of a long-continued revolutionary strife, indicated a perfect These desperate and extreme measures, worthy of Catiline's conspirators, (1) egalists to pillage (1). or, if they preferred remaining by their colours, they were to get the houses people were to receive instantly a large sum in money, and their discharge; at a low price fixed by the government. All soldiers who should join the were to be obliged to furnish the articles in which they dealt to the citizens, joined in the insurrection; and the bakers, butchers, and wine-merchants quiring every citizen of any property to lodge, and maintain a man who had part in the proceedings, proclamations were immediately to be issued, reout simultaneously in all parts of France. To induce the lower classes to take opened with the Jacobins in other quarters, so that the revolt would break jelegraph, and the arsenal of artillery at Meudon; a correspondence had been Councils, and make themselves masters of the Luxembourg, the treasury, the constitutions to march from different quarters to attack the Directors and the mans of the people should be put to death by freemen." The conspirators were and others having the inscription, "Those who usurp the sovereignty of the bearing the words, "Liberty, Equality, Constitution of 1795, Common Good;" It was to take place on the Alst May. Placards and banners were prepared, insurréction was fixed, and all the means of carrying it into effect arranged.

armed with sabres and pistols, to the camp at Grenelle. They were received they marched in the night, to the number of six or seven hundred, our at Greek months afterwards, and before the trial of the chiefs had come on, The partisans of Baboauf, however, were not discouraged. had yet done, to consolidate the authority of Covernment (2). Court, at Vendome. This act of vigour contributed more than any thing they published the letter, and ordered the trial of the conspirators before the High Republic." Instead of acceding to this extravagant proposal, the Directory sh you concur, with them in measures calculated to effect the salvation of the they recollect that you were once sincere Republicans; they will pardon you, made much noise about the affair; make no more; treat with the patriols; tinct. Abandon the idea of shedding blood in vain; you have not hitherto the chiefs of the conspiracy; it will revive in other bosoms, if theirs are exthat the discovery must have made you tremble. It is nothing to have arrested own; you see what immense ramifications it contains. I am well assured eeg of what a rast party I am the centre; you see that it nearly balances your -said he to the Directory, "to treat with me as an independent power? You ou a footing of perfect equality: "Do you consider it beneath you," just suig monig ould congescend to negotiate with the government. The couspi. Badeut, though in captivity, abated nothing of his haughly bearand with them the documents which indicated the extent of the conspiracy. and all the leaders of the enterprise, were seized at their place of assembly, petone the plot was to have been carried into execution, babout, divulged to government by Grizel, and, on the 20th May, the day. in producing any considerable: effect. The designs of the conspirators were when such opinions inspired all men of any property with horror, they failed the most vehement democratic passions. But; coming as they did at a time knowledge of human nature, and might, at an earlier period, have roused expected, charged and dispersed the motley array. Great numbers were cut by a regiment of dragoons, which, instead of fraternizing with them as they

```
(2) Mign. 11, 414 (2)
opulence, mouer of manufactures, the far
```

opulence, modern yealth began to disp pleasure and aniusement was resumed.

to maintain their families or relations, ladice of the morre barter. The omos Zaiob

the comple: unisab letor men e 1910 in France. 10

mount of let prevailed Тъс, таппел

(2) juamussidai (2) doing yas mort tream.t. to renew the reign of blood, humanely suffered them to escapo niver-Directory. They were funder

. or oldissooseni dragoons, nhol sisting to M ial sil

. Le mal e an ellort to regan their ascengency, in the reger enothubbe adt fairtie. that ever affects the generality of man

uner rogneb of the danger rune 1150 2ui

moilt strawol bournt opposed to act to acwrocedings, they sung the Marseillaise bymn; their nives at chain

Is In Lary? · sustehy Angling

g paseas qenout House] Lite sevi bne bateal tricutation .ip sie ing

ınb

made fortunes in the Revolution, began to shine with unprecedented lustre. the Bonlevard des Italiens, the riches of the bankers, and of those who had

liant circle by which they were surrounded; and never did such destinies the most part, at this I eriod selected their partners for life from the brilsince the fall of the monarchy. The illustrious men of the age, for a lustre over the reviving society of the capital, which had been unknown the grace of Madame Beauharnais, and the genius of Madame de Stael, threw · ordinary destinies. The beauty of Madame Tallien was still in its zenith; while and eagle eye of Kapoléon, already, to persons of discernment, foretold no even of aristocratic habits; while the thoughtful air, energetic conversation, figure, brilliant talents, and rising glory, rendered him the idol of women who had recently extinguished the war in la Vendée, and whose handsome knowledge. There was to be seen floche, not yet twenty-seven years of age, the ancient regime. In a few years the world had lived through centuries of more varied and animating than any thing which had been known under Revolution had produced, rendered the style of conversation incomparably of aristocratic eliquette; and the mixture of characters and ideas which the nence in the Republican armies, bogan here to break through the rigid circle rial court was afterwards formed. The young officers who had risen to emi-In these assemblies were to be seen the elements out of which the Imperals as well as society, which the Revolution had effected (1). an indication of the universal destruction of the ancient landmarks, in moconfusion of ranks and characters which they presented, afforded too clear in particular, were remarkable for their magnificence; but, in the general public eye, to increase the general enchantment. The assemblies of Barras, tributed, by the novel aspect of the charms which were presented to the exhibited, while it proved fatal to many persons of youth and beauty, conextravagance, in the Greeian style; and the excessive nudity which they new-born passion for enjoyment. The dresses of the nomen were carried to was left of elegance in France by the Revolution, assembled to indulge the become the fashion, nere embellished by magnificent feles, where all that Splendid hotels, sumptuously furnished in the Greeian taste, which had now composed of the members of the old Convention, the legislature was, in that the revolt of the Sections at Paris, and two-thirds of the Councils being naving taken place during the excitement produced by the suppression of the sword. The Directory was essentially democratic; but the first elections the horrors of lacobin rule, before she seilled down under the despotism of propagation into a state of repose; and France was again destined to undergo elections is too profound, for society to relapse, without further convulsions, But the passions raised were too violent, the wounds inflicted lemagne; for her daughler, that of Charles V, and for her son, the most son. She little thought that she was declining for herself the throne of Charof his brother Joseph for her daughter, and that of his sister Pauline for her of Abrantes, refused in one morning the hand of Napoleon for herself, that from infancy been intimate, and whose daughter afternards became Duchess of rank and singular attractions, from Corsica, in whose family Rapoleon had depend on the decision or caprice of the moment. Madame Permon, a lady.

: beautiful princess in Europe (2).

to good, he had, during the errors of the to finlent measures, Steadaly pursuing . low me nolones luces Andan 201 10. . Clab of Solin, present th they were . " " man of with hairet . among their number were in direc. that of the facobins had done at rein se mich acquired as 1 club of . . . The chief strength 13 RE 10 " o Conneil of bive Hundred : Barbe-Mathois,)(t Boy alest principles. Pichegru, deputy of the lura, was, amidst loud acclamapud concluded the peace with a reason was -ine government. tion init, tourners 101 Letourneur, 1, n to bridt won elt, at some of this wild masses of the Assembly with The first act of th (1) Ym Ir mosfeat a

-21 (Etal off life retail for or retatorial; and non, when the danger to

(1) Jugn makey, 422, Logaria, 16, Asp. 218 (2) The exact Bollow (2) The

a-Lamix (a nonvou

the war part, winned out favourable to the linguist nuceeses; and so far, but they nuce.

The members of that party carry hostility to the lacibling that they question members of the members of that they question the members of the

but, as usual in such circumstances, was unsuccessful, and shared in the ruin

The reaction in favour of Royalist principles at this juncture was General of the vanquished.

war, which appeared interminable (1). which was decoming inextricable, and dwelling on the continuance of the them into obloquy by continually exposing the confusion of the snances, and, pursuing a cautious but incessant attack upon government, brought liberty of the press, from which their party were reaping such advantages, general applause of the people. The majority in the Councils supported the death. He was indicted for the offence, but acquitted by the jury, amidst the exiled family; an ostence which, by the subsisting laws, was punishable with the Crusades, went so far as to publish a direct éloge on the princes of the the Royalist side. Michaud, destined to illustrate and beautify the History of Harpe, Sicard, and all the literary men of the capital, wrote periodically on Lacretelle, the future historian of the Revolution, the Abbe Morellet, La at Paris, only three or four supported the cause of the Revolution. Royalist so strong, that out of seventy periodical journals which appeared jo anovej

but which could not be carried into effect from its severity. It passed the for the odious punishment which the subsisting law authorized, Meranes of To ward off the attacke, the Directory proposed a law for restriction to a sort ing the liberty of the press, and substituting graduated penalties, the danger for the odious punishment which the subsisting law authorized, the danger To ward off the attacks, the Directory proposed a law for restrictւչչւցոոչ (5)։ multitude, the press generally becomes the instrument of the most debasing power in the state is overbearing, whether it be that of a sovereign or of the Reform fever in 1851, of the second; America of the third. Wherever one France under Napoleon was an example of the lirst; Great Britain during the by despotic power, democratic violence, or purely republican institutions. from its abuse commences when it is in great part turned to one side, either which at length extricate truth from their collision: the period of danger site interests and passions call forth contradictory statements and arguments, perly maintained, and opposing parties divide the state, because their, oppopress is not to be seared in any country where the balance of power is proit alone can restore the light of truth to the generation it has misled. The petuate the most fatal delusions; but still it is the polar star of freedom, and. force (2). It may frequently mislead and blind the people, and for years perlican, or military violence; it is the insurrection of thought against physical, cussion is the natural resource of liberty, whether menaced by regal, repubexecutive authority is in the hands of the popular leaders. Freedom of disis the natural course of things when parties have changed places, and the Jacobin government did every thing in their power to stifle its voice. This of royalty were the strongest supporters of the liberly of the press; while the At this epoch, by a singular but not unnatural train of events, the partisans graves of such as chose to place that emblem there, and relieve the priests ancient worship, allow the use of bells in the churches, the cross on the lans, was repealed, and a proposal made to permit the open use of the ment or transportation, to which the clergy were liable by the revolutionary the worst parts of the revolutionary fabric: the punishment of imprisonin the Royalist party. Encouraged by this success, they attempted to undo Five Hundred, but was thrown out in the Ancients, amidst transports of joy to the scallold (5).

i rientlittinër odt viridet to vir oggan off.

burg' and other towns, where they were eagerly purchased by those which longed attending to resust their native land. The clergy returned in subgreater numbers, and were received with transports of 104 by their faithfull offsets, expensively at all the selection deprincents, who for four years hade been deby survived of all the ordinances and consolations of religion, the infants were accuract they and to enterinance and entering the centents of the children for hims, as on other occasions, however, the performed over the remains of the children on this case, and other consistency of the integral consistency of integra

ر البيانية الم والفودا بالم تتهاما march of the Councils, and the declamations of المراجعة والمراجعة المراجعة المراجعة

oo sol , yd

od: , mur ylisiol Izomis bluow bridt a to godoole guiderorans edit tedi vinterees inajours, to transfer the seat of the legislatice to Rouen, on account or us majours, to transfer the seat of the legislatice to Rouen, on account or us promitly to the nestern provinces, whose Royalisa principles bad always been so decided. The past foction, is as expected, nould nearly extinguist the Royalisation was expected, nould nearly extinguist the following and the transmission was easy for regardes, as the greater part of them were, from the Lu rembourg for the arrest of Danton, who was the leader of their party. which sprung from his baving signed the warrant, during the Reign of Terror, colleagues. Barras and Lareveillière had long borne him a secret grudge, moment, became convinced that his ruin had been determined on by his chances which were accumulated in their favour (1). Carnot, from this office under the Directory at this crisis, was strongly symptomatic of the Revolution, to what was about to prove the victorious side; and his accepting sagacity of this last politician, led him to incline, in all the changes of the in that of the police; and Talleyrand, in that of foreign allairs. The strong ministry of the interior; Hoche, in that of war; Lenoir Laroche, their place were substituted François de Keufchâteau, in the They change inclining to the party of the Councils, were suddenly dismissed. In minister of foreign affairs; and Truguet, of marine; who were all suspected of the interior; Cochon, minister of police; Petiel, minister of war; Lacroix, with all his authority. The ministers were changed: Benezeeh, minister of of the dangers of the Covermient; and he readily undertook to support them superintending the preparations for the invasion of freland, informing him forbade the armed force to cross. Barras wrote to Hoche, who was in Holland circle of twelve leagues round the legislative body, which the constitution most republican in their feelings; and these troops were brought within the strong, from the army of the Sambre and Meuse, which were known to be therefore, drew towards Paris a number of regiments, twelve thousand existing state of affairs, was an assistance of immense importance. They, triumphs, was strongly imbued with democratic principles. This, in the terrour of 1795, and constantly habituated to the intoxication of Republican the army, which having been raised during the revolutionary measures. They could reckon with confidence upon the support of na organi Caopsing out to the Barras, Rewbell, and Lardveillière-Lépaux, resolved upon decisive · In this extremity, the majority of the Directory, consisting of the Urpub.

(1) Lee set 1915 of 1815, and T EE, 625, in 2016 of 2016 of 1817 of 18

brinciples, to that city to support the Government. He declined coming to the zein July, 1797. gereau, a general of decided character, and known revolutionary communicate to him the earliest intelligence; and afterwards dispatched Auhistory of the restoration, to Paris, to observe the motions of the parties, and aide-de-camp; Lavalette, who afterwards acquired a painful celebrity in the March, 1797, his ambitious projects, Early, therefore, in spring 1797, he sent his principles, being those of moderation and peace, were little likely to tavour of the dangers which he might occasion to public freedom, and because their the opposite party had determined upon his dismissal, from an apprehension resolved, however, to support the Directory, both because he was aware that to ensure the success of an enterprise destined for its overthrow. He was and that the miseries of a republic had not yet been sufficiently experienced that the period was not yet arrived for putting such a design in execution, the footsteps of Cæsar, is avowed by himself; but he judged, probably wisely, Egypt. That he hesitated whether he should not, even at that period, follow claim himself Dictator, as he afterwards did on his return from por some nand, his infimate friends advised him to proceed there, and proicemean, and to come to Paris and support the Government; while, on the other success of their enterprise. He was strongly urged by the Directory Napoleon, Mose co-operation was of so much importance to seeme the Barras and Hoche kept up an active correspondence with Mapo-To evanterif

(1) Cainot, 89, et seq. Lac. xiv, 61, 67. Th, ix, 309, 210, Align. i. 421.

ollimer	1 40126990	ւջւկն	иU	, squee u	ઝાવુા	เนอม	ujj a
XXIV.	:[Cuap	٠.	•	тавоыт	OL.	AUO.	LSH

endosel set settoethe by the atroctics of the lacobins Jordan, deputy from Lyon, whose religious and royalist prinfrom the necessity of taking

'qəəəds

-ou oup _ rer than Lotesator go əsneə

ant ar bagadun ereg

longed ardently to revisit their n purg and other towns, where the an interest Europe Fictitious passports were transmitted from Paris to Hamo tred trong the banished priests assembled in growds from every part o the minital denediction pronounced by condeprived of all the ordinances and consolations of religion, the infants nere hocks, especially in the western departments, who for four years had beer greater hunibers, and were receive...

themselves into the bolof that their strength was irresistible, while their pobes' not to an area the vigilance of the recolutionary party; and spoke rather in words than in actions, they arowed too openly the extens or their

tor their own existence, by from receding The Directory b Ennets from its excesses, nau inry way 'oun 'do'i

ան իրան անունության ու certainty that the approaching .. reason of the decided majority o

to the scattold (3). was easy for regirides, as the greater part of them y ere, from the Luxembourg the Resolutionary party; and the Directory nerv again that the transition been'so decided The next election, it was expected, mould nearly extinguish proximity to the nestern proginces, whose Rojalist principles had always. majority, to transfer the seat of the registature to Rouen, on account of its

AT 15 Juta add itte it mall madend (2) (1) Juc xia 30' 24 , 91 Eu n 433' 432

for the arrest of Danton, who was the leader of their party. -which sprung from his having signed the warrant, during the Reign of Terror, colleagues. Barras and Lardveillière had long borne him a secret grudge, moment, became convinced that his rain had been determined on by his chances which were accumulated in their favour (1). Carnot, from thisoffice under the Directory at this crisis, was strongly symptomatic of the Mevolution, to what was about to prove the victorious side; and his accepting sagacity of this last politician, led him to incline, in all the changes of the in that of the police; and Talleyrand, in that of foreign affairs. The strong ministry of the interior; Hoche, in that of war; Lenoir Laroche, their place were substituted François de Zeufeliateau, in the and charte inclining to the party of the Councils, were suddenly dismissed. In minister of foreign alfairs; and Truguel, of marine; who were all suspected of the interior; Cochon, minister of police; Peticl, minister of war; Lacroix, with all his authority. The ministers were changed: Benezech, minister of of the dangers of the Covermient; and he readily undertook to support them. superintending the preparations for the invasion of treland, informing him forbade the armed force to cross. Barras wrote to Hoche, who was in Holland circle of twelve leagues round the legislative body, which the constitution and midling they are equal seems of the second of the seco strong, from the army of the Sambre and Meuse, which were known to be therefore, drew towards Paris a number of regiments, twelve thousand existing state of affairs, was an assistance of immense importance. They, triumphs, was strongly imbued with democratic principles. This, in the ferrour of 1795, and constantly habituated to the intoxication of Republican the army, which having been raised during the revolutionary Destroy. measures. They could reckon with confidence upon the support of Barras, Rewbell, and Laréveillière-Lépaux, resolved upon decisive In this extremity, the majority of the Directory, consisting of principles, to that city to support the Covernment. He declined coming to the zant auf. erer an, a general of decided character, and known revolutionary communicate to him the earliest intelligence; and afterwards dispatched Auhistory of the restoration, to Paris, to observe the motions of the parties, and aide-de-camp; Lavalette, who afterwards acquired a painful celebrity in the March, 1995. his ambitious projects. Early, therefore, in spring 1797, he sent his principles, being those of moderation and peace, were little likely to favour of the dangers which he might occasion to public freedom, and because their the opposite party had determined upon his dismissal, from an apprehension resolved, however, to support the Directory, both because he was aware that to ensure the success of an enterprise destined for its overthrow. He was and that the miseries of a republic had not yet been sufficiently experienced that the period was not yet arrived for putting such a design in execution, the footsteps of Casar, is avowed by himself; but he judged, probably wisely, Egypt. That he hesitated whether he should not, even at that period, follow claim himself Dictator, as he afterwards did on his return from organism hand, his intimate friends advised him to proceed there, and profreeds, and to come to Paris and support the Covernment; while, on the other incurports success of their enterprise. He was strongly urged by the Directory Supplem state item, whose co-operation was of so much importance to seeme the Barras and Hoche kept up an active correspondence with Kapo-

(1) Carnot, 89, et seq. Lac. xiv, 61, 67. Th. ix, 309, 210. Mign. i. 421.

Let the Royalist show themselves, they have ceased to live," Other ad-These are our sentiment, these are bour; these are those of the country.

chambers of their northy patron George III, and the Club of Chely will will take to fight. We will pursue our unworthy eiftzens eren into the He 'dellan'l qemr-prigaq aid the 29th ' Ligues are draigh offar 30 $13tplos o si Librano ęэ . brow seath they besnear nuce reaccour of the Jacobin spir. the signatures attached to them. ' squadrons of the army, and transmitted to the Directory and the Councils with reliement republican spirit, were roted by all the regiments and standing The flame spread from rank to rank; addresses, breathing the most This proclamation proved extremely serviceable to the Directory.

".nouniție on our standards, eternal war to the enemies of the Republic and of the conmanes of the heroes who have died amongst us in defence of freedom, swear they have ceased to exist (2). Have no feats of the result; and sweat by the constitution, to defer cross them with the rapidity of the eagle, if it be necessary, to maintain the Curope in arms, are ready. Mountains separate, us from France. Jou will coccasion he addressed the following order of the day to his troops:--. Solannitersary of the taking of the Bastille on July Ath, by a fele, on which To an aben the republican ardour of his soldiers, Kapoleon celebrated the et the head of the popular party (1).

> which it has received . cans Soldters! the G.

1015 SIU · : o ըսել / or Joile : vi[] '0s

ાક ષ્ટ દેવા ક mothermost sid Asix han eband sid Alus or uillimur unied Alexania langes

Tagonua ao vao cent

men; but government, as their only reply, drew still nearer to Paris the Councils loudly exclaimed against these menacing deliberations by armed addresses, which produced a powerful impression on the public mind. The about to be established. The Directory encouraged and published all these masicie, and that under the name of freedom, a military despotism was Mosello; it was soon evident that the people had chosen for themselves their weakness, in such a strife, filled every breast with gloomy preof the troops from the neighbourhood of Paris. But a sense of their been followed on the next day, by a decree, directing the removal. nization of the national guard under Pichegru, this was to have gor; gebr 3 on the 17th Fructidor, when both Councils had decreed the orga--irourT dire. tion. They had placed the guard under the orders of their own officers; and without a rallying point; the Royalists, scattered, and destitute of organizaconfest with their brethren in arms; the national guard were disbanded, and diers, who could not be relied on, as the event soon proved, in a hinry force, small, Their body guard consisted only of fifteen hundred grena-The actual force at the command of the Councils was extremely. the weight of military power (2): tions of justice, but fatal in presence of enterprising ambition, supported by they had been combating an enemy capable of being swayed by considera-Directory," said they, "all the odium of beginning violence." Sage advice, if the national guard under the command of Pichegru. "Let us leave to the acts of violence, and resolved only to decree, the immediate organization of vulsions, by their scruples of conscience, decided against taking the lead in overborne, as the friends of order and freedom often are in revolutionary conported this energetic course by his weight and authority; but the majority, Pichegru the commander of that legal insurrection, That great general supmarch at the head of the old sectionaries against the Directory, and appoint jemy to the legislative body; and if they refused to obey, sound the tocsin, Barras, Rewdell, and Lareveillière; to summon Carnot and Bartheadopting decisive measures. They proposed to decree the arrest of sive mea chy, lordan, Vaublanc, and Willot, strongly urged the necessity of Their defent that dread tribunal for their earthly injustice. At the Club of Clitheir voice, to the justice of God, and summoned their accusers to answer at of oppression appealed from the kings or pontiffs, who were about to stifle accent, recalled to mind those periods of seudal tyranny, when the victims by the despotism of the sword. This discourse, pronounced in an intrepid he announced the commencement of a reign of blood, which would be closed stiffing of the public voice by the threats of the armies. In prophetic strains rectory themselves, their friends, and the people of france, from this blind. sombre colours, a picture of the consequences which would ensue to the Di-Troncon-Ducoudray, in the Council of the Ancients, drew, in strong and which in civil convulsions is usually found to command success. strength of The party against whom these formidable preparations were dinteresposite rected, was strong in numbers and powerful in eloquence, but party consisted only destitute of that reckless hardihood and fearless vigour, in talout and totally destitute of that reckless hardihood and fearless vigour, of the said totally destitute of that reckless hardihood and fearless vigour, them at Versailles, Meudon, and Vincennes (1). twelve thousand men who had been brought from Hoche's army, and placed

(1) Mign. ii, A27. Nap. iv, 295. Lac. xiv. 83, 85. (2) Mig. ii, 427. Lac. xiv. 85, 86.

(3) Miga. U. 438, 429 Lec. air. 50, 93, Th ix. (1) Lac. xer 89, 91 Mix 11 427. (2) Med, de Steel, Rore, Trang til 184, 185, they testified neuther joy nor sorron at the event. A few detached fraire me. Mere specialors of a strife in which they had taken no part, the nalls covered with proclamations, and military despotism established (5).

Frenches. " The members of the Councils, who hurried in confusion to the spot, Breaking, the Legislative Assemblies, and conducted them to the Temple, Councils, arrested Pichegru, Willot, and theire other leaders of troops they rersed the garden of the Tuileries, surrounded the hall of the of the trit military division, comprehending the environs of Paris, and the principles, decision of character, and rudeness of manners, to the comman sontimonts. Pichegru glone retained, his nonted frimbess and serenity . " HISTORY OF EUROPE, here me The Directory, on the other ٠..

LaimT prestu 'hou .

(1) puim'

streets nere filled, with crowde, who read in silence the proclamations.

inconsiderable numbers demonstrated so clearly the violence done to the continued their meetings in the Odéon and the School of Medicine; but their The minority of the Conneils, who were in the interest of the Directory, were as passive as in a despolic state. "Vive la République! A has les Aristocrates!" But the people, in general, groups, issuing from the faubourgs, traversed the streets, exclaiming (1),

Following the recommendation of that committee, the Councils, by of France (2). ostracism, which condemned to transportation almost all the noblest citizens instructions to prepare a law of public safety; and that proved a decree of of the, Councils yielded to necessity; a council of five was appointed, with · legislative authority to sanction their dictatorial proceedings. The remnant message sufficiently demonstrates the need which the Directory had of some of your country, and secure for ever its prosperity and glory." This pressing with horror from that idea, seize the passing moment, become the liberators country that the hour of royalty has struck. But if, as they believe, you recoil stitution is overturned, and you may at once proclaim to the friends of their -if you delay an instant—it is all over with the liberty of France; the confriends of kings find in you their protectors,—if slaves excite your sympathy that you would not be afraid of the consequences of that first step. It the believed that you were sincerely attached to freedom and the Republic, and bul it was entitled to expect that you would not hesitate to seize them. They have devoted themselves to put in your hands the means of saving france; mislead the legislative body from its duty to the Republic! The Directory binciples, how ruinous the delays, how misplaced the pity which should cipies, of delays, of the pity due to individuals; but how false would be the sugntest indecision would now ruin the Republic. You will be told of prinpower to close it, and yet you deliberate! To-morrow it will be too late: the on the edge of a volcano; it is about to smallow you up; you have it in your moment to tear in pieces the Republic, and to devour yourselves. You are soil of France of that small body of Royalists, who are only waiting for the triumph which they have commenced; and can you desitate to purge the sons. The conspirators already speak of punishing the Republicans for the journalists of the Bourbons and London never ceased to distribute their poitheir audacity; they misled public opinion by infamous libels, while the spirators have watched while you were slumbering; your silence restored yourselves, it is all over both with yourselves and the Republic. The conhesitate in the measures you are to adopt, if you delay a minute in declaring of the country are fixed upon you; the decisive moment has come. If you Republic; and what has the legislative hody done to consolidate it? The eyes and their joy? This is the 19th, and the people ask, Where is the tory to the Councits Have you not observed yesterday the tranquillity of the people, tidor should have saved the Republic and its real representatives. day, the Directory sent them a message in these terms:—" The 18th Fruebut one authorizing the continuance of the troops in Paris. On the following constitution, that they did not venture on any resolution at their first sitting, demned to transportation to Guiana, Carnot, Barthelemy, Pichegru, Camillements, which formed a majority of the legislative bodies, and conthe minority a stretch of power, annulled the elections of forty-eight depart-

(1) Th. iv. 295. Mign. ii. 429, 430. Lac. xiv. (2) Th. ix. 298. Lac. xiv. 94, 99, Mign. ii. 430.

when the present it is a second of the present in the new point and present in the present in th conducted to the page Atternation source accession, to consider the control of the page Atternation source accession for the page Atternation and the page Atterna miscreet, you have sold the frequency and you such one are such to more than a substance of the such care of iest and aminists authornies.

The his decension of pares, and that the dismissed of all the first periodicions of all the state.

licing: and investinguishable hatter as reputating clustry where dieth of a forms we have, both on the construction and anisotropic and anisotropic and experience of the construction and anisotropic and in the most powerful manner the tribustants and in the british seles, counterseichd in the most powerful league which ultimately held to before a fution. That powerful league which ultimately held to before the contraints openly a one ad a national bankrupicy, they cut throw. Finally, the Councils openly as one ad a national part of the testing as angular as recognition by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and are violation by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and the violation by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and the violation by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and the violation by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and the violation by the extinction of steedom, the hamshingent of virtue, and the violation is the virtue of the contraction of the country of virtue, and the violation of the country of the violation of the country of virtue, and the violation of the violation of the violation of virtue and virtue of virtue of independently of the instability of any government which succeeds to so a violation of the laws and the rights of the citizens (1)." eessity could not be alleged in favour of so revolting an injustice, so flagrant only to death. All the armies, all the people, were for a Republic; state ne-Tinville, since he at least put the accused on their trial, and condemned them scriptions of the Roman triumvirs; it was to act more cruelly than Fouquierwho deserved only contempt and a triffing correction, was to renew the proful. What! to punish with transportation a number of writers of pamphlets, either trial or accusation, to perish in the marghes of Sinamari, was frightpreme magistrates, such as Carnot and Barthélemy, condemned, without Fontanes; tried patriots, such as Boissy-d'Anglas, Dumolard, Murinais; suscaliold; but to see men of great talent, such as Portalis, Tronçon-Ducoudray, one or two others, might justly have expiated their treason on the arana jo some cities in the interior; Pichegru, Willot, Imbert, Colonne, and oyein tons arrete use puties, of their appointment, and put them under surveillance in our min right," says he, "to deprive Carnot, Barthélemy, and the lifty dein his Memoirs the strongest opinion on this subject. "It might have been an imminent risk of bringing back the odious Jacobin rule. He has expressed peared in the choice of their victims, would alieuate public opinion, and run verity which they employed, and the indulgence of private spleen which apgovernment made of their victory. He easily perceived that the excessive sewere speedily changed into discontent at the accounts of the use which the he received intelligence of the success of the enterprise. But these feelings olgmol' out or inse bas Carnot has disappeared. enoitoole gnidonorgyge aft, orolod bognedo Alfait, when a nation is emerging from revolutionary convulsions; as so many inwill disperse them by force. This is in an especial manner, to be looked for ing, by legal means, the legislature, the time must inevitably come, when it of a mixed government: unless the executive possess the power of dissolvport. This is a matter of vital importance, and lying at the very foundation had acquired, had no alternative but to invoke military violence for its supter, being composed of ambitious men, unwilling to resign the power they their members, became shortly at variance with the executive; and the latdent of the Directory, and undergoing a change every two years of a third of victorious in the strife. But the French Councils, being altogether indepenappeal to the people; and whichever party the electors incline to, becomes the obvious mode of arranging it is by a dissolution of the latter, and a new opinion on any vital subject arises between the executive and the legislature, the legislative power. In constitutional monarchies, when a difference of by Mecker (2), and consisted in the complete separation of the executive from occasioned its fall. This was ably pointed out from its very commencement the Directory contained an inherent defect, which must sooner or later have stormy a period as that of the Revolution, the constitution of France under the most ardent wish of my heart."—Bourrerers, i. 235, 250, 266, 266, and Hans, iv. 503, 518. At inidnight I put all the troops in motion; before the army of Italy have been lept last night. The Directory was at length induced to act with vigour, or the patriots It is only to be hoped now that is derailed your steps; that is Peneral, my mission is accomplished! the promises of wisdom and energy which you have displayed in this crisis, and has rejoiced smeerely at the success. presume there will be no resistance." And on the 3d September, Augerean wrote to him, "". At last, moneral my market the Directory will arrest filteen or twenty deputies; our sharing to Augerean " "The whole arms applauds the September, 1797, Napoleon wrote in the following. taget wornon-or , sold place to took si , betooqxe, every thing is lost, and a civil war remains as our last resource." On the 31st August, Lavalette informer to fine in experted its about the course expected is about 10 to 10 endor out to see yie on sister out the regard of the read of the see when the control of the see of eryvicas an tue pridges and principal points in the . (1) Nap 14 233,231. Bour. 1.235. ofly were occupied, the legislature surrounded, and 1. (2) Necker, litstone de, la Kevolution, iv, 232, the members, whose manes are enclosed, and 1. Mad, de Stacl, ii, 170, 173

ria algress pur Baol V

n'et Il . . souer I fo tedt es dous mortulo. .

eses fife flehubliegn bistorian, "is a ch urns of Casar, and England to those ing the edge of the shord, from trom any peculia

ascendency of de

Such is the conse

eion of illegal usurpations on the part of the depositaries of power, in

as to the natural tendency and just punishment of revolutionary in the subsequent government of the country was but a tary despotism in France, and as sucu, it was · in 112 pride by ngof ot bequired it eventuitional monarchy; it required to be once, broesised over their immediate enemies, the name.

ignoble that tor us wod vodi . at the Roman ---ne (1U)

μÅ .9 M. ·ue·

out

The 18th Fructidor is the lpe regular occupations essential to the species.

severe, but merciful hand, the consequences of their transgression, and ing Providence, punishing the sins of a guilty age, extending to nations with course of human affairs: let us discover in it the government of an overrulmay discern in this terrific progress the march of fatalism and the inevitable the winding-sheet and the grave of its blood-stained Revolution. Infidelity for its cruelly; the snows of Russia, and the hospitals of Germany, became pursuit of glory, the energies of Republican ambition. France was decimated ing, like the chariot of Juggernaut, through human flesh; exhausting, in the car rolled over the world, erushing generations beneath its wheels; plough-Augereau, sprang up the foreign conquests of Napoléon: -- His triumphant Contemporaneous with the military despotism established by the victory of its own desires the means of bringing upon itself a righteous punishment. country. Its own passions were made the ministers of the justice of Heaven; preparing in the chastisement of present iniquity, the future amelioration of

Delegal fensitate de

of the Siege-U

cription of that to arreve - hit Sidney yamilb s preparations for its ibeli nee-Lominenermen

Prince some of the control of the co

-Disastrous c

Gr at Results of this Viv tory—I errible traces of the detion on shore—ifonours bestoned on Kieson—topoleon a Correspondence with frueza, as to petting the kiest into Herandria and 40 (1964) "Triple and the street of the

Make Committee settlement and the state of t ord the monitories to agracates all-targal to assaingful actonomous but forbilled 140031, appear glicapy nonleged, her tend to a trainerable to the property of the property

ARCUMENT:

EXPEDITION TO ECIPT.

HAPTER XXV.

—Reflections on that Act—Atmy regains Egypt—Contests in Egypt during Napoléon's absence—The Angel El Mody—Conquest of Upper Egypt by Desaix—Great Discontents of the Army Landing of the Turks in Aboukir Bay—Force of the Invaders—Position which the Turks occupied—Rapoléon's Dispositions for an Attack—First Line earried—Second Line also forced, after a desperate strupple—Total destruction of the Turks—Rapoleon is made acquainted with the Disasters of the Republic in Europe—He secretly sets sail for Europe from Alexandria—And stretches along the Coast of Africa to Sardinia—He lands at Alexein and stretches along the Coast of Africa to Sardinia—He lands at Alexein and aroids the far first Fleet—Proof which the Egyptian Experient Alexandria—And stretches along the Carifish Fleet—Proof which the Egyptian Expedition affords of the Superiority of the Arms of Civilisation to those of Savage Life—General Reflections on the probable fate of an Eastern Empire under Rapoléon.

"By seizing the isthmus of Darien," said Sir Valter Baleigh, "you will wrest the keys of the world from Spain." The observation, worthy of his reach of thought, is still more applicable to the isthmus of Suez and the country of Egypt. It is remarkable that its importance has never been duly appreciated, but by the greatest conquerors of ancient and modern times, Alexander the Great and Kapoléon Bonaparte.

The great Leibnitz, in the time of Louis XIV, addressed to the cipal sources of European opulence. bosom those streams of wealth, which in every age have constituted the prinmunication between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, will pour into its and the nation which shall revive the canal of Suez, and open a direct comsteam will restore the communication with the East to its original channel; again become one of the great centres of human industry; the invention of the light of religion illumined the land of its birth, Egypt will -when the desolation of Mahometan rule shall have ceased, and the revolution of ages, civilisation shall have returned to its ancient cradle, "still stand erect and unshaken above the floods of the Nile (1)." When, in of Rome have decayed, the arts of Athens have perished; but the Pyramids of genius have been raised in this primeral seat of mankind. The temples industry accordingly, the earliest efforts of civilisation, the sublimest works spots on the earth. The greatest and most durable monuments of human with riches, it would still be, from its situation, one of the most favoured world,—though the inundations of the Kile did not annually cover its fields regions of Africa. Though it were not one of the most lertile countries in the the Ville floats down to its bosom the produce of the rast and unknown Europe; the Red Sea wafts to its shores the riches of India and China; while of the globe. The waters of the Mediterranean bring to it all the fabrics of point of communication for the varied productions of these different regions and on the shores of the Mediterranean sea, it is fitted to become the central wealth and Western civilisation; at the extremity of the African continent, Great poli-tiest and it to be the great emporium of the commerce of the world. Placed the great Leibnitz, in the time of Louis XIV, addressed to the time of Louis XIV, addressed to the libration.

The great Leibnitz, ments of political foresight. "Sire," said he, "it is not at home that you will succeed in subduing the Dutch; you will not cross their dykes, and you will rouse Europe to their assistance. It is in E ypt that the real blow is to be struck. There you will find the true commercial route to Inflant, you will wrest that lucrative commerce from Holland, you will secure dia; you will wrest that lucrative commerce from Holland, you will secure the eternal dominion of France in the Levant, you will fill Christianity with joy (2)." These ideas, however, were beyond the age, and they lay dormant joy (2)." These ideas, however, were beyond the age, and they lay dormant ill revived by the genius of Napoleon.

1) ie nod big it erolitificien a enuel (t) (1) D Abr n. 265 Bour, il 411.

(4) Correnp. Coul de Asp, er, 178 | Fale eute, tit g 135 Before leaving flaly, after the treaty of Campo, formio, he put the last sure its success(f)

expedition to the banks of the bile, and the amount of force requirite to intory he had alicady, more than once, suggested both the unportance of an Langable activity of bis mind (5); and in his correspondence with the birec-Einel notes in his on in handwerting, indicating the powerful grasp and inde-Laypi, were submitted for his evanimation, and many hore extensive marides taken possession of his mind, that all the books brought from the Am-brosian theary to Paris, after the peace of Campo Formin, which related to was to be destroyed and immortal renoun acquired So completely had thus secured, and a path opened to those Lastern regions, where the brut-b power point of the line n here a breach could be effected and a permanent lougiment tion as the point where a decisive impression was to be made; the weak six prompted uniflions of men." Egypt at once presented itself to his imaginagreat empires or revolutions are to be found but in the Last, where there are tions of manhand " Lurope," said he, " is no field for glorious exploits, no overturning each other, but the memory of which still lives in the recollecconstitues, and the illustrious empires which have there disappeared, after bury of his maneton, he spoke without interrupesion of the celebrity of those occupied his thoughts During his long evening nights in the magnificent ticeh exploits, that the conception of an expedition to Leypt first seriously to stream and when his energence mund turned abroad for the theatre of Hill gar It was at Passeriano, honever, after the campaign nas concluded, for its reception-the Mediterranean and the Red Sea (2) turn the commerce of the East into the channels which nature had formed British possessions in India; and an entrepot established, which nould soon central point armaments might be detached down the Red Sea, to attack the the Mediterrancan, and convert that sea mile a "French Laker," from that stone be seriously affected, that its possession communication with India, that it was there If n'93 his istourie opinion through life, of Tamerlane, I will discover another (1) " indian possessions "The Persigns;" said be, "bare blocked up the route bonce of rustond could never be effectually humbled but by blow at its of the glory which had been there acquired, and firmly convinced that the , gesite to effect a revolution in the East he was hierally hannied by the idea to be obtained From his earliest Jears he had been influenced by an ardent private adventure, and fame, rivaling that of the beroes of aniquity, was apprehension, great things could be achieved, where kingdoms lay open to name of the conqueror of the East. Ropoleon and hardly launched into the Rome in the pleintude of its poner, and still bears, anidst ruins and decay, the thebes, which once beasted of three nullions of inhabitants, and rivalled mer claim mas owns; the foundation of that city; the real of demphis and been as great a benefactor as he was a scourge of the species, the eagle eye of Aleyarder the Great, which fitted him to have.

formed that friendship with Desaix, who had come from the army of the had recently died, after a short illness, in France; and about the same time honour of Virgil a military procession on the death of General Hoche, who to increase the public enthusiasm. At Mantaa, he combined with a felte in brilliant apparition. Every thing he did and said was calculated zerband to vived by his victories, beheld with regret the disappearance of that ted to some The Hallans, whose national spirit had been in some degree re-Adamint lenutines a sew sined of that most gournel s'nobloqu's tree, which is transplanted from the soil of its birth to a distant land. transferred from one country to another, perish as rapidly as the full-grown won, and cannot be conferred; and that the institutions which are suddenly od seum ti tadt ; diworg teowale od to ei doidw one od ei ytrodit zegnieeold or considered the human mind, he would have perceived that, of all human ments of a powerful state; but had Sapoleon looked into the book of history, the fortress of Mantua, and the plains of Lombardy, indeed formed the eleeluos 000,006,6 guiverdmo, eliding Republic, embracing 5,500,000 souls, execute them with force and energy (1)." The wealth and population of the worthy of your desting, make no laws but what are wise and moderate; but position calls you to take a leading part in the politics of Europe. To be are, after France, the richest, the most populous republic in the world. Your convulsions. We have given you freedom; it is your part to preserve it. You have become free without factions, without revolutions, without mentil મુંદર કલાક કરે કેસલાક સ્થાપ other," said he, in his parting address to them, "who and troops of the line, put in full activity. "You are the first republican organization of a directory, legislative assemblies, national guards, of Berthier, to be maintained at the expense of the allied state; and all the force in the new republic was fixed at thirty thousand men, under the orders amidet the tears of all its pairione citizens, to Austria ; the French auxiliary hand to the affairs of the Cisalpine Republic. Venice was delivered over, [.7071 HSTORY OF EUROPE. L61

Soverment; Basle, converted into the vockshop of recolution,—Harle, converted into the vockshop of recolution,—Harle, v. 303, Ap. ii. 268, In. 15, 363, Ap. ii. 268, In. 15, 57, 58, to evel modifier groups thunivarities it soliding immense benefits which had accrued to the Republic from his triumphs, had had achieved, the brief but eloquent language of his proclamations, and the taken from the enemy in his memorable campaigns, the vast conquests he The successive arrival of Kapoleon's lientenants at Paris with the standards return (5). to Paris, where the public anxiety had arisen to the highest pitch for his ters of diplomacy which were there the subject of discussion, he proceeded established; but, foreseeing nothing worthy of his genins in the minute mat-Swiss peasantry. Passing basic, he arrived at Rasladt, where the congress was on vectors the seene of the terrible defeat of the Burgundian chivalry by the progress, however, was rapid: he lingered on the field of Morat to examine get a glimpse of the hero who had tilled the world with his renown (2). His and crowds from the neighbouring countries lined the roads to .busfressind. journey, lis character for approach; he passed the fortresses amidst discharges of cannon; triumphal arches and garlands of flowers every where await, d his vdo Italiliaq vial do etant Marengo. The towns of Switzerland received him with transport; inspire, but which was destined to terminate prematurely on the field of Rhine to visit that of Italy, which mutual esteem was so well calculated to mouths; and that there were, in truth, but two fiecalculated to produce revolution. 'At Genera, he bensted that he would democratice England in three (2) His words, though few, were all such as were soewees, on his admiration for that sublime 0-sian which seems to detach him from the world, on his m cill-known contempt for luxury, for pomp, for him from the world on the pride of ignoble minds, I am continued that, for them

100

dighest triumph, and on this occasion, every frenchman must feet himself wrong, underidual grandeur, far from being dangerous to equality, is its every thing which seems to destroy the equality of the cuizens. But I was account that disquictude, which, in an infant republic, arises from Tailegrand. his great actions, he concluded. " For a moment I did feel on his Talleyrand introduced bim in an eloquent speech, in which, after extolling fire of his eve, excited universal admiration, the court rang with appliance, of the hero, his thin but graceful figure, the Roman east of his features, and nas to present him to the Directory as the bearer of the treaty. The aspect and beauty in Paris 11e made his entry, accompanied by M. Talleyrand, who which note early filled with all that nas distinguished in rank, character, Kormio. Vast galleries nere prepared for the accommodation of the public, conductor himself was to lay at the feet of Concriment the treaty of Campo Italy, inscribed with all the great actions it bad performed, and the fouthful mony, on which occasion soubert was to present the standard of the army of anxiety nas wound up to the bigliest pitch for this imposing cereonories in their now magnificent court of the Luxenidourg The public drummer of the army (5) " knew what I nas doing I nas sure of not being misunderstood by the lonest sion When on my return from listy I assumed the dress of the Institute, I' tual qualities, and none are more sensible of this than the military profes-Lind," said be, " are in the end governed always by superiority of intellece, motives of ambition, and a profound knowledge of the human heart a Manof the dress, and the choice of the society of the institute, he was guided by nothing done, while any thing remained to do (2)." Even in the assumption nas to receive from their admiration of the past the literally "deemed conduct was to produce on men's minds in future, than the gratification be through life, that on every occasion he looked rather to the impression his which he had performed (1) Such was the profound nature of his ambition rounded, it thougainville, and conversed with him on the celebrated vologe out, amidst the splendid cortege of public characters by which he was surcasion of heing presented to Talleyrand, minister of foreign affairs, he singled thier, Desair, Lefebvre, Callarelli, hleber, and a few of the deputies. On oc-Berthold, Laplace, Lagrange, and admitted to his intimate society only Bermember; associated constantly with its leading characters, such as slonge, note the costume of the institute, of which he had recently been elected a himself only by seientific characters, or generals of cultivated mands. He tereme, in the most retired manner, went seldom into public, and su rounded wish by avoiding its gratification. He lived in his own house in the rue Chan-Linew enough of imaulaind to feel the importance of enhancing the general public anxiets, accordingly, to see him'n as indescribable; but be raised to the very highest pitch the enthusiasm of the people. The Barilas sill dreading his ambition, we shall one day have occasion to rouse it anew to alture him from the sweets of studious retirement; France will never lose its freedom; but perhaps he will not for ever preserve his own (1).

deposed on reason, they had kings to combat; to secure a constitution founded on reason, they had kings to combat; to secure a constitution founded on reason, they had eighteen hundred years of prejudices to overcome. Religion, feudality, despotism, have, in their turns, governed Europe; but from the peace now concluded, dates the era of representative governments. Fou have succeeded in organizing the great nation, whose territory is not circumscribed but because nature herself has imposed it limits. I lay at your feet the treaty of Campo Formio, ratified by the Emperor (2). As soon at your feet the treaty of Campo Formio, ratified by the Emperor (2). As soon as the happiness of France is secured by the best organic laws, the whole of Europe will be free." The Directory, by the voice of Barras, returned an inflated reply, in which they invited him to strive for the acquisition of fresh laurels, and pointed to the shores of Great Britain as the place where they were to be gathered (5).

of ideas. The true power of the French Republic should henceforth consist well as the most useful, occupation of men is, to contribute to the extension a tear, are those which are gained over ignorance. The most honourable, as I become their equal. The true conquests, the only ones which do not cause compose the institute. I know well that I must long be their scholar before onw nom bodiesinguistic of the approbation of the distinguished men who sciences. To a deputation of that learned body, he returned an answer:-Lagrange and Laplace, wholly occupied in appearance with the abstract demale influence. At the institute, he was to be seen always scated between from what she anticipated, and singularly characteristic of his opinions on "who has had the greatest number of children;" an answer very different in his opinion, the greatest woman that ever existed. "She," he replied, was asked by Madame de Stael, in presence of a numerous circle, who was, which was distinguished by the good taste and elegance which prevailed, he politeness would permit, to his own house. At that given by M. Talleyrand, these, but they were foreign to his disposition; and he refired, as soon as lative body and the minister of foreign affairs, Napoléon appeared at all sion for military glory. This fele was followed by others, given by the legisage (4), it was sufficient to intoxicate all the youth of France with the pastriumphs so wonderful, that it would have passed for fabulous in any other given to the Army of Italy, and which contained an enumeration of dreossi, bore the magnificent standard which the Directory had On this occasion, General Joubert, and the chief of the staff, An-

of Campo-Formio, It has given freedom to the people of Boiogna, Perrera, Modena, Massa-Carreras, Rosea, Massa-Carreras, Romera, Independent magna, Lombardy, Brescia, Bergamo, Mantaa, Cremona, a part of the Veronese, Elitarenna, Bormio, perial Fiels, Coreyra, and thacea, Sent to Paris the money for Coreyra, and thacea, Sent to Paris the Coffeedwere of Michael Augelo, Guercino, Titian, Perial Fiels, Coreyra, and thacea, Sent to Paris the Coffeedwere of Michael Augelo, Guercino, Titian, Phinal Veronese, Correggio, Albano, the Carraccis, Independent Maphael, Leonardo da Vinci, etc. Triumphed in 18 pitched battles, Montenoute, Millesimo, Mondovi, La Favorite, Bontana Viva, Caldiero, Arcela, Rivoli, La Favorite, the Tagifamorno, Taris, Kowasan, St. George's, Fontana Viva, Caldiero, Arcela, Mivoli, La Favorite, the Tagifamorno, Taris, Kowasan, Marchin, Mondovi, Marchine, Marchine,

(1) bour, 11, 2).

(2) Napoleon had added these words in this piace:—"That peace so ures the jiberty, the prosest parity, and glory of the Republic;" but these nords were strack out by order of the Directory; a sufficient proof of their disapprays of the East,—See Hard.

I see him to turn his face to the East,—See Hard.

Y, 7).

(5) Th, ix, 368. Nap. iv. 283 384.

(4) It bece these words:—" the ring of Italy has made 150,000 prisourers; it has taken 170 standards, 500 preces of beavy artillery, 600 field preces, 5 pontoon trains, 9 ships of the line, 12 frigates, 12 corvettes, 18 galleys. Armestice with the flings of Sardinia, Maples, the Bules of Parma, Modena, and the Pope. Preliminaries of Leobert Convention of the Pope. Preliminaries of Leobert, Convention of Models and Models.

Buu tре

[Силь ХХУ, 500

". They do not long preserve at Paris," said de to his intimate frends, " the remembrance of any thing III remain long unemployed, I am undone, The eessary mystery or a succession of great actions is, to protong its transports. e d of fries of fries of fries Delasie Valonço 1 a greater part of the inhabitants of Paris. bower, after his return from Egypt, his appearance nas still unknoyn to the. only to a concealed boy in the opera (1), and when he assumed the reins of men that he appeared solicitous; he, was never seen in the streets; went to their evertions." But it nas only for the approbation of these illustrious in this, that not a single new idea should exist which does not one its birth ending distractions of democratic institutions (2). monld be soon called for by the meapacity of the Directory and the neverand ready to assume that despote command, which he already foresaw grandeur, he hoped to be still within reach of the march of events in Europe, reputation, and inscribing his name on the elernal monuments of Egyptian imperishable a lustre over the annals of antiquity. While thus sustaining his he fixed his rivalry on those classical heroes, whose exploits have shed so urpsy parated his imagination, distegarding the lapse of the thousand years, where it was to be won the great names of Alexander, Casar, and Hanof Napoleon. Clory was his ruling passion, nothing appeared impossible East, and ne will go to kgipt " These nords give a just idea of the character tear it will, too hazardous, the army of England will become the army of the Lannes, and Solkowsky Should the expedition to Britain prove, as I much brity Mererheless, I am willing to make a tour to the coasts with yourself, to the East, all the great men of the norld have there acquired their celedeclining, this little corner of Europe is too small to supply it We must go inactive, I am undone Every thing here passes ana, my glory is already be done, it is impossible to fix the attention of the people. If I remain longer said he, "I am determined not to remain in Paris, there is nothing here to tered in the East, the original theatre of his visions of glory. "Bourtenne," Directory, but failing in that attempt, his n hole thoughts and passions cena dispensation with the law which required the age of forty for one of the great would go to see me led out to the scallold." He made an effort to obtain you need not talk of the desire of the citizens to see me; crowds at least as am seen three times at the opera, I will no longer be an object of curiosity. renown of one in this great Babylon speedily supplants that of another, If I the armies of the Uhine were brought down to the martinue districts, and harbours for the transport of sixty thousand men. Meanwhile great part of the contegance of the land-troops Means nere soon collected in the northern most exections were making to construct and equip flat-bottomed borts for issue forth, and form a preponderating force in the Channel, where the utto put to sea, that at Brest only awaited, to all appearance, their arrival to and Italy, the fleets at Cadiz and Toulou were soon in a condition 1 erjean in all the liarbours, not only of trance and Holland, but of Spain pop 10 8

⁽¹⁾ Jab sa 322'58@ Sarath's 23 Bont if 23 (3) Bour is 32, 35 Lac. 21* 139

name of the Army of England. This immense force might have occasioned undred and fifty thousand men were stationed on these coasts, under the ned the shores of France and Holland, from Brest to the Texel; nearly one the maritime departments, no immediate preparation for embarcation had ing the invasion into early execution; although the troops were encamped in not appear that the Directory then entertained any serious thoughts of earrythem of all apprehensions of a descent by these numerous enemies. It does owerful navy; but the battles of St.-Vincents and Camperdown relieved great disquietude to the Brilish government, had it been supported by a no sriira lo dange armament (1). leon was appointed commander-in-chief of the Army of England, and he was been made. However, their language breathed nothing but menaces: Napo-beneath him to wield the power of Rome against the pirates: Go, and chain the earth against the oppressor of the waves. Pompey did not esteem it who blushes for his felters. He invokes, in a voice of thunder, the wrath of banners; the ocean will be proud to bear them; it is a slave still indignant, conquerors of the Po, the Rhine, and the Tiber, march under your mand of the of all who would miscalculate the powers of a free people. Let the punishment of the cabinet of London, strike terror into the hearts the great nation owes to its outraged dignity. Go, and by the "Crown," said Barras, " so illustrious a life, by a conquest which dispatched on a mission to the coasts to superintend the completion of the the banks of the Thames; and he dreamt more of the career of Alexander desirous to see Napoleon engulfed in the sands of Lybia, than conquering on moved to Toulon, Genoa, and Civita Vecchia. The Directory were more of the Mediterranean were put in requisition, the élite of the army of Italy made in Italy and the south of France, the whole naval resources parties. concealed very different intentions. Immense preparations were lamities." Under these high-sounding declamations, however, all parties tors, who come not to combat and enslave, but to put a period to its canerous nation, perceiving the dawn of its felicity, will receive you as liberashores of the Thames, ere a unanimous cry will bless your arrival, and that gerights of humanity. Hardly will the tricolor standard wave on the blood-stained the monster who presses on the seas; go, and punish in London the injured

(1) Bour, ii 38, I ac. xiv. 138, 139, Map!iii. 165, (2) Map. ii. 164, Lac. xiv. 136, 139, 140, Map. iv. 287, Bour, ii. 37. (3) Nap. iv. 301. want the domination of thirty or forty individuals founded on the massacre But this, it seems, will not suffice them. I know well what they want; they tionized, Switzerland is revolutionized, Europe will soon be revolutionized. have? France is revolutionized, Holland is revolutionized, Italy is revoluset himself so vigorously to resist. "What," said he, "would these Jacobins grasping insatiable democratic spirit which, through his subsequent life, he and in private he gave vent, in the strongest terms, to his horror at that than one occasion, openly expressed his dislike at the violent revolutionary course which the Directory were pursuing, both at home and abroad (5); Fructidor had placed at the head of the Republic. Already he had, on more sion for the Jacobin party, whom the Revolution of the 18th himself from the government, from his strong and growing avermight immortalize his name, Napoleon was desirons to detach Independently of his anxiety to engage in some enterprise which and of Mahomet, than of the descent of Cæsar on the shores of Britain (2).

Cuap. XXV.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

one motive for the attack on the independence of that mollensive republic (1). Suiss Confederacy during more than tho hundred years, should have been ₹076 expedition utmost activity in all the ports of Italy and the south of France. preparations parations for this armament, which were going forward with the. From his headquarters at Paris, Napolcon directed the vast pre-nell as those who had so ably seconded his efforts in Italy, Lannes, Mural, Republic, Desaix and Aleber, as jet strangers to the fortunes of Aspoleon, as on the incomparable horses of Egypt. The most celebrated generals of the caralty, nere assembled at these different stations, destined to be mounted blocks by the emperor fragan A numerous artillery, and three thousand architecture to the broaze rings, still undecayed, which were fixed in their harbour, transports nere moored alongside of the massy piers of Roman tion of the troops, Toulon, Genoa, Ajaccio, and Civita Vecchia, at the latter Four stations n ere assigned for the assembly of the convoys and the embarka-thier, who could hardly tear himself from the fascination of beauty at Paris, nere ranged under his command Callarelli commanded the engineers; Ber-Junot, Regnier, Barraguay-d Hilliers, Vaubois, Bon, Belliard, and Dommartin, the staff, the most illustrious philosophers and artists of the age, Monge, his fate on the expedition to Egypt -", Yes," he replied; "I have tried every this occasion, asked hapoleon, if he was finally defermined to risk which it was nell known was now ready to burst Courrenne, on that period, Europe an aited with breathless anxiety the course of the storm, mentioned, retarded for fifteen days the departure of the expedition During ampassador of the Republic at the Imperial Court, which will be afterwards The disturbance at Vienna, on account of the fele given by Bernadotte, the uself under the banners of the youthful hero (2) aftended the expedition Centus, in every department, hastened to range Bertholiet, Fourier, Larrey, Desgenettes, Geoffroy St-Illiane, and Denon, sure at Berne , dignant at the in pulat or of its ate nosloqeN to ensetting salf (1) chance of escaping destruction, but by persisting in his Oriental expedition (3). by my exploits" In truth, he was convinced, at this period, that he had no the time for that has not Jet arrived (5); I must first dazzle these gentlemen of that as yet, the nobles nould not consent to it, I have sounded, but I find be necessary to overturn them, and make myself king, but ne must not think thing, but they will have nothing to do with me. If I stayed here, it would book get I wong the strate as and statement in 1 mags case of action between 1 markets in 1 mags case of action between 1 markets in Appendix and the strategies of action between 1 markets in 1 may be a terminal to 1 may be a ter this month, from Berns for Lyon Jou will find the treasury to a humane proclamation to the military commissions of the 9th One of the last acts of Napoléon, before embarking, was to issue designs, even when on the eve of their execution. nations (1)." In such magnificent mystery did this great man envelope his now determined that it should become so of the seas, and of the most distant which has rendered, from its birth, the Republic the arbiter of Europe, has country, the happiness of man, and your own glory. The genius of liberty, you are about to do more than you have yet done for the prosperity of your destinies to accomplish; battles to light; dangers and fatigues to overcome; and united. Soldiers! the eyes of Europe are upon you; you have great , never deserted their standards, because they never ceased to be brave, patient, bated Carthage, by turns, on the seas and on the plains of Zama. Victory Roman legions, whom you have often inntated but not yet equalled, comwar in mountains, plains, and cities; it remains to make it on the ocean. The "Soldiers! You are one of the wings of the Army of England; you have made his usual custom, addressed the following proclamation to his troops:arms, and above 10,000 sailors. Before embarking, the general-in-chief, after gates, 72 brigs and cutters, and 400 transports. It bore 36,000 soldiers of all The fleet consisted of 15 ships of the line, two of 64 guns, 44 frisoldiers. tion to the army. Mever had so spendid an armament appeared on the ocean. supplies the state on the 9th May, 4798, and immediately took the command of the Napoleon having completed his preparations, arrived at Toulon mistance of the idea of the idea of tapoleon, before embarking, was to issue the proclamation to the military commissions of the 9th division, in which Toulon was situated, in which he severely censured the cruel application of one of the harsh laws of the 49th Fructidor to old men above seventy years of age, children in infancy, and women with child, who had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that tyrannical edict. This interposition had been seized and shot for violating that the same with the same interpolation of the same with the same interpolation of the same interpolation of the same interpolation of the same interpolation of the same interpolation.

Expectation amidst the discharges of cannon, and the acclaimations of an imberson of incident the discharges of cannon, and the acclaimations of an immere erowd of inhabitants. The L'Orient grounded at leaving the harbour, by reason of its enormous bulk; it was taken as a sinister omen by the sailors, more alive than any other class of men to superstitious impressions. The fleet castellans, and having effected a junction with the squadron in those harbours, bore away with a fair wind for Malta. In coasting the shores of Italy, they descried from on board the L'Orient the snowy summit of the Alps in they descried from on board the L'Orient the snowy summit of the Alps in the extreme distance. Napoléon gazed with feeling at the mountains which he without emotion the land of Italy; these mountains command the blains where I have so often led the French to victory. Now we are bound for the east; with them victory is still secure." His conversation was pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure." His conversation was pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure." His conversation was pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure." His conversation was pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure. He cannot, and the pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure. He cannot, and the pecutor the east; with them victory is still secure. He cannot, and the pecutor the east; with the whole voyage; every headland, every promontory.

hell said coldly, "You wish to retire from the service, general? If you do, the Republic will doubtlees have a brave and shifful chief; but it has slill enough of sons who will not abandon it." Methin upon this tereation; and Mapoleon, devonting the affront, prepared to follow out his Egyptian expedition, saying, in private, to Bourrienne, "The pear is not yet ripe; let us depart, we shall return when the moment is arrived."—Hard. Vi. 513, 514.

(1) Bour, ii, 48, 54, Th. ix, 81, Jom. x, 391, (2) Bour, ii 59.

hastra and France, induced Appoleon to change bis plan; and he carnegily represented to the birectory the impolicy of continuing the Egyptian project at such a crisis. But the rulers of France were now thoroughly avakened to the danger they ran from the ascendency of Napoleon, and the only answer they made to his representation, was a positive order to leave faris on the 3d May. This led to a warm altercation between him and the Directory, in the course of which he resorted to his former manœuvre course of which he resorted to his former manœuvre of tendering his resignation. But on this occasion it did not succeed. Presenting him with a peu, Rewdid not succeed. Presenting him with a peu, Rewdid not succeed.

[Cusp, XXV,

seemed ready to become the prey of any invader who had inherited the annaries and as many militia the defence of the place, and its noble yorks lost in effeminacy and indolence intrusted to three thousand feeble merce-Lavalette; but the spirit of the order was gone: a few hundred chevaliers, re bashons n ere stronger, its artillery more numerous, than under the heroic translingated the whole force of the Turks under Solyman the Magnificent; the unrullled sea. The fleet anchored before the harbour which had so glosuperb fortifications of Malta appeared in dazzling brilliancy above Aries ou On the full lune, after a prosperous vojage, the white chills and the greatest deeds which have illustrated the annals of mankind (1).

HISTORY OF RUROPE,

ny, or a pension for life of 500,000 francs (2), the brench cheratiers, nere that the Grand Master should obtain 600,000 france, a principality in Cermamodalion nere speedily agreed on; the town was surrendered on condition and advanced without opposition to the foot of the ramparts. Terms of accothe Grand Master and principal officers. Desaix and Savary landed, dien eausgaletarierase va beruses need bed eest en to noticiting, her deland cient spirit of the defenders of Christendom. Before leaving France, the ca-

Callarelli said to hapoleon, "It is nell, general, that there was some one on this occasion, that in passing through the impregnable defences, So strongly nere the generals impressed nith their good fortune naved on the ancient bulnark of the Christian world. promised a pension of 700 france a-year each, and the tricolor dag speedily glorious repose, and the incomparable harbour, which allowed the D'Orient which the Grand Masters had erected during the many centuries of their inserance which it contained, the luxury and magnificence of the palaces examining the boundless fortifications and stupendous inonuments of perse-out firing a shot, so immense an acquisition. They were never weary of one side, and pusillanimity on the other, which had obtained for them, with-

ويأ مساوي مطوستوكم مسورككم

The secret of the easy conquest of this impregnable island by hapoleon, is population in the countries to which their course was bound (3). through the fleet, in order to produce a moral influence on the Mahomeran Turbish prisoners found in the galleys were set at liberty, and scattered left at the head of three thousand men to superintend its defence. All the nor ammunion, and disposing the troops in disadiantescous situations, had so prepared matters, by disarming batteries, proxiding neuther stores any resistance; and the leading knights, themselves chiefs in the conspiracy, broqueed by the eireunistances, that the garrison was incapable of making French and Italian birth by a secret agent of happleon. Such was the division Corman descent, and the mirigues long before practised among the kinghes of Baron Hompesch, the Grand Master, whom they disliked on account of his to be found in the estrangement of the chevaliers of other nations from that resistance was from the first perfectly hopeless. No sooner, however, were the gates delivered up, than these unworthy successors of the defenders of Christendom repented of their weakness. The treasure of St.-John, the accumulation of ages; the silver plate of all the churches, palaces, and hospitals, were seized on with merciless avidity; and all the ships of war, artillery, and arsenals of the order, converted to the uses of the Republic (1).

Meanwhile Melson's fleet had arrived on the 20th June before would succeed by boarding in discomiting the enemy (2). board each, ship of the line, he flattered himself that in a close action they stantly trained to work the great guns; and, as there were five hundred on affairs, contemplated the event with more calmness. The soldiers were conof the result of such an engagement. Napoleon, less accustomed to maritime had nearly two thousand men on board, could not conceal his apprehensions would prove in the event of an action, and especially to the L'Orient, which by the crowded state of the ships, and the encumbrance which the soldiers were to encounter the squadron of Melson. Admiral Brueys, forcibly struck interrupted, however, by the consideration of what would occur if the fleet the decline of the Byzantine empire. These interesting themes were often age of the world, the probable mode of its destruction, the forms of religion, otherwase conversing with Monge and Bertholet on subjects of science, the sation during beautiful sky of the Mediterranean, remained constantly on deck, was uninterrupted by any accident, and the general, enjoying the rison to maintain it for the Republic, Napoleon set sail for Egypt. The voyage Having secured this important conquest, and left a sufficient gar-intelligence of the surrender of Malta, and that the French were steering for Moonies. Candia. He instantly directed his course for Alexandria, where he arrived on the 29th, and finding no enemy there, set sail for the north, imagining that the expedition was bound for the Dardanelles (5). It is a singular circumstance that on the night of the 22d June, the French and English fleets crossed each other's track, without either party discovering their enemy (4).

During the night, as the French fleet approached Egypt, the discharge of cannon was heard on the right; it was the signal which Relson gave to his squadron, which at this moment was not more than five leagues distant, sleering northward from the coast of Egypt, where he had been vainly seeking the French armament (3). For several hours, the two fleets were within a few french armament (3). For several hours, the two fleets were within a few leagues of each other. Had he sailed a little farther to the left, or passed durleagues of each other. Had he sailed a little farther to the left, or passed during the day, the two squadrons would have met, and an earlier battle of Aboukir changed the fortunes of the world.

Esteries At length on the morning of the 1st July, the shore of Egypt was discovered stretching as far as the eye could reach from east to west. Low sandhills, surmounted by a few scattered palms, presented little of interest to the ordinary eye; but the minarets of Alexandria, the needle of this agent contrived, by liberal gifts, promises, and, entertainments, to seduce from their allegiance all that numerous part of the garrison and burghts who were inclined to democratic principles.—Hard, v, 160, 160,

⁽²⁾ App. ii. 169 Bour. ii. 73, 83. Th. x. 57. (2) (2) App. ii. 169 Bour. ii. 75. 85. (2) App. ii. 167. Th. x. 82. (2) App. ii. 167. ii. 229 App. ii. 26. ii. 21. Th. x. 88. Miol. 71. (5) App. ii. 35. Bour. ii. 51. Th. x. 88. Miol. 71.

back, vi 70, 76, 77.

So early as 14th November, 1797, Napokem had be early as 14th November, 1797, Napokem had be early as 14th November, ith his knights of Milton bundary be verole to Talleyrand: "You will regiven to threewith a copy of the commission I have given to threewith a copy of the commission in have given to three projects of his mission is to put the finishing hand to the projects we have in put the finishing hand to the projects we have in yiew on Malin."—Conf. Deep. Navoleon to Talleyre.

John Millin."—Conf. Deep. Navoleon to Talleyre.

part ignorant of its tery elements. Latalette has recorded, that hardly one of considered the Christian faith as an entire fabrication, put nere tot the mos-

-ear omies out actod out to estimomores out too technical pands at . . Johans, show the same regard to their Mutus and Imams as you did to their Contradict them not Behave to them as you have done to the leve and the tirst article of faith 1s, ' There is but one God, and Mahomet is his prophet.' blow. The people with whom we are about to his are Mahometans. Their land the most grievous stroke she can sustain before receiving her deathupon the commerce and errheation of the norid Iou will indict upon Engprinces about to undertake a conquest fraught with incalculable effects the following proclamation to his soldiers - "Soldiers! tou afe Before advancing into the interior of the country, Napoleon issued the obelishs of the Ptolemies, or the sarcophagus of Alexander (5) tion; and men, in want of food and lodging, derived little satisfaction from sering to oil a for solution that to the sad realtites of a life of privaand, wreichedness which they found among the inhabitants, the builtant share the Rastern visions of their chief, n ere soon dissaissied with the pol erty people. The soldiers, who, notwildstanding their military ardour, did not are speedily found to be too extensive for the dechning numbers of the cessant diminution of population, and ramparts, even of recent formation, Asiatic towns, where the tyranny of the government usually occasions an in-In een the exterior nalls' and the inhabited houses, an ordinary feature in The conquerors nere astonished to find a large space filled nith rums be-that entrance, and fled in confusion into the interior of the city (2). defenders of the walls nere speedly taken in rear by those who rushed in at of the Turbs having left one of the principal gates open during the assault, the ardour of the French soldiers overcame every resistance; and the negligence and slenou thrown down from the top of the rampart to the bottom; but the 'peau our uo

the French

f the Mameace not The shouls from the ramparts, and the discharge of some pieces of sand men, being all that nere already formed, ton ards Alexandria. At daybreak, Napolcon, advanced at the head of about five thou-dition through the n hole night, and at one in the morning, as the state of - nemost expe-

*AJREADS

troops, it was

French expe-It was soon learned that the English fleet had only left the roads two days deur and Oriental conquest, which had long floated in the mind of hapoleon. Cleopates, and the pillar of Pompey, an alened those dreams of ancient granthem had ever been in a church; and in Palestine, they were ignorant even of the names of the holiest places in sacred history (1).

III

The soil of this singular valley was originally as barren as the arid ridges covered with the most luxuriant vegetation (2). fertile district of Egypt, being perfectly level, intersected by canals, and the sea for its base, is called the Delta, and constitutes the richest and most other at Damietta. The triangle having these two branches for its sides and itself into two branches which fall into the Mediterranean, one at Rosetta, the alone to be seen. At the distance of fifty hagues from the sea, the Nile divides rise, the soil is of extraordinary fertility; beyond it, the glowing desert is face which is overflowed by the inundations of the Vile; as far as the waters habitable and cultivated portion is entirely confined to that part of the surbreadth, and bounded on either side by the rocky mountains of the desert. Its valley, though of such immense length, is only from one to six leagues in lower valley, 200 leagues long, which forms the country of Egypt. This of the Bahr-el-Abiad, precipitates itself by the cataracts of Sennaar into the for 600 leagues the arid deserts of Africa, and receiving the tributary waters Vile, which, taking its rise in the mountains of Abyssinia, after traversing sition but its physical conformation. It consists entirely of the valley of the the most singular countries, in the world, not only from its geographical powhich became the theatre of such memorable exploits, is one of Egypt, on which the French army was now fairly landed, and ceeding ages (5). wonderful of the many monuments of industry which they have left to sucmade in this respect by the ancient inhabitants, constitute, perhaps, the most to which the water rises by an artificial system of irrigation; and the efforts surface of the soil. Hence cultivation can only be extended beyond the level may elapse without more than a shower of drizzling mist moistening the or two greater depth of water than usual. It never rains in Egypt. Centuries rejoicings are ordered when the Wilometer at Cairo indicates a foot the inundawatched with the utmost anxiety by the inhabitants, and public just in proportion to the height of the inundation; hence it is attains the height of sixteen or eighteen feet. The fertility of the country is middle of June, and continues to rise till the end of September, when it gradually, during a period of nearly three months. It begins to swell in the rains of July and August in the mountains of Abyssinia, cause the river to rise the well-known inundations of the Vile. These floods; arising from the heavy which adjoin it; but it has acquired an extraordinary degree of vichness from

During the inundation, the level plain of Egypt is flooded with water; the villages, detached from each other communicate only by boats, and appear like the islands on the Laguna of Venice, in the midst of the watery waste. No sooner, however, have the floods retired, than the soil, covered to a considerable depth by a rich slime, is cultivated and sown, and the seed, vegetain three months yields a hundred, and under a tropical sun, springs up, and in three months yields a hundred, and sometimes a hundred and fifty fold. In three months yields a hundred, and soored the richest harvests, in three months yields and dotted by innumerable flocks; but in Alarch the great heats begin, the earth cracks from excessive drought, vegetation the great heats begin, the earth cracks from excessive drought, vegetation the great heats of the country is fast relapsing into the sterility of the desert, disappears, and the country is fast relapsing into the sterility of the desert, beneares all the varied productions of the temperate and the forrid zone of the recup flouristics in this favoured region. Besides all the grains of Europe, by naters (1) when the annual thools of the hile again cover it with their visiting fairgue the moving sands, and traverse like a bring ship the ocean of the nonderful gaimel, which can support thirst for days together, tread without spirit, and their incomparable docility, and it possesses the camel, that plain its horses are celebrated over all the world for their beauty, their steamores, in the villages alone, rise above the luxuriant regetation of the Arabia Hardly any trees are to be seen over us vast extent, a few palms and nor coffee, but it is supplied in profusion from the adjoining mountains of senna It has no oil, but the opposite coasts of Greece furnish it in abundance, Egypt produces the finest crops of rice, maize, sugar, indigo, cotton, and

1.1

Arabia on the one side, and the interior of Africa on the other Every year, immense caravans arrive at Cauto from Syria and I r cocc Ea (E) masap

tions to flourish, as long as the narmth of Asia furnishes articles ninch the globe which never can decay, but must, under a tolerable government, connever failing demand. Thus the commerce of Egypt is the only one in the never be able to rival, but for which their opulence and luxury afford a finest productions of the carth, of those which the genus of the Nest will those faroured countries. Cano decomes, at that period, an entrepot for the the numerous slaves which mark the degradation of the human species in feathers, gum, aromatics of all sorts, coffee, tobacco, spices, perfumes with They bring all that belongs to the regions of the sun, gold, 1vory, ostrich of souls, including those who dwelt in the adjoining Osees of the desert. This quests of the Mahometans, the former is said to have comfamed twenty millions enperstance on the Goods of the hife (1) Even at the time of the conpopular of Remey of Rome, and the masters of the north depended for their same subsistence on the Roads of the North depended for their same Deny of the In ancient times, Egrpt and Lybia, it is well known, were the industry and perseverance of Europe are destrous of possessing (5)

caltivation (5) exoschments which the sands of the desert are making on the region of human to ascribe the present hinted extent of agriculture, and the perpetual enof the country which the industry of antiquity had constructed, that we are Litte for the general decay of all the great establishments for the natural under a paternal government, the system of artificial itrigation can be carsoil, wherever water can be conveyed, is considered, and the extent to which, sast population is by no means incredible, if the prodigious fertility of the nithout difficulty, but those of larger dimensions only when lightened of spotes of Palestine Lessels drawing thenty-one feet of nater enter naries of Europe, is the only safe or accessible port bein cen Carlinge and the math nater in extraordinary floods. Its harbour, capable of containing all the umour bro TUP of their harbours having only six feet of water (6) . their guns. Rosetts and Damietts admit only baths, the bar at the entrance

At the period of this expedition to Egypt, the population of the country,

(2) 2 4 45 02 002 11 qe7 (2) (4) 44 44 602 002 11 qe7 (2) Of. 275 il mon .0" i qe' (2)
Of. 275 il mon .0" i qe' (2)

the Copis or natives of the soil (1). four classes; the Mamelukes or Circassians, the Janizaries, the Arabs, and consisting of two millions five hundred thousand souls, was divided into

The office of Bey was not hereditary: sometimes it descended to the son, .(2) bl10w strength of the country, and formed the finest body of eavalry in the of whom was attended by two helots or servants, constituted the military maintained and equipped. This body of twelve thousand horsemen, each able of whom was followed by five or six hundred Mamelukes, whom they This singular militia was governed by twenty-four Beys, the least considerthemselves solely on their horses, their arms, and their military prowess. their country or relations, without either a home or kindred, they prided vince of the Turkish empire. Bred up in camps, without any knowledge of Summing and transported into Egypt, to form the armed force of that protants of the consisted of joung Circassians, torn in infancy from their parents The Mainelukes, who were the actual rulers of the country, of active youths from the mountains of Circassia. shores of the Kile; and their numbers are only kept up by annual accessions seldom have deen perpetuated beyond the third or fourth generation on the the anarchy of feudal rule, and the severity of military despotism. They but necessarily subject to the ascendant of talent, they exhibited alternately divided the country among them in feudal sovereignty; nominally equal, more generally to the favourite officer of the deceased commander. They

The Arabs constituted the great body of the population—at least haughty rule of the Mamelukes (4). handicrafts in the towns, and kept, in a state of complete subjection to the Sultan of Constantinople; but the great majority nere engaged in trades and the guards of the Pacha, who still maintained a shadow of authority for the reality following the standard of the Prophet. Those actually in arms formed but, as usual in the Ottoman empire, with a very few of their number in almost all inscribed on the books of the lanizaries, to acquire their privileges; They were about two hundred thousand in number, of Constantinople. lation, were introduced on occasion of the conquest of Egypt by the Sultans The Turks or lanizaries, forming the second part of the poputo the rapid success with which the invasion of the latter was attended (5). merly had deen; a circumstance which contriduted more than any other when the French landed in Egypt, they were not a half of what they forost the source from which their numbers were recruited, and at the time been seriously weakened by the Russian conquests in Georgia, which cut The force of the Beys was at one period very considerable, but it had two millions out of the two millions and a half of which the inhabitants of pistols and a histoit, on one side is a sabre, on the other a blunder buss, and the servint on loot. gitdle is alwiys to be seen a pair of pistols and a pontate i sliving pontate i suspended another pair a sahre. They are all splendidly armed; in their either cut or thrust." Mor. 61, 63. (3) Hard, vi. 92, 93. Th. x. 100, 101. Nap. ii. store, but avoid the strokes of their adversary by skill in Theeling their burse, while they trust to his limpetus to speec his head from his body, without either out or them? carries a carabine. They soldon parry with the sword, as their fine blades would break in the colli-sion, but avoid the

with hissabres, and the pounnel and back part of the saidle are so high, that the horseman, though wounded, can searcely lose his balance; he can even aftern without felling to be Power both in commanding his borse, and striking rups are extremely short, and give the rider great ful, that the most fiery steeds are speeduly cheeked, even at full career, by an ordinary hand. Their stir-(1) Nap. ii. 213. Th. x. 97 (2) The bits in their berses mouths are so power-

(4) Th, 2, 97; Nap. ii, 216, shawls and turbans, is protected from the strokes of servants; while the Mameluke himself, covered with 214, 215. provisions, all of which are carried by the rider's sleep wilbout falling, as he would do in an arm-char. The horse is nurdened by no hagging or bond gaiberm oil for the med the ... tidt dadqurass aT . . . and is butter but billow rolliel oill 10. or pa tonem' totteindod.

Polyment in Methodist Methol

•(c) basb

the police of dapoleon in intading a country, uniformly was;

adol of the soldiers, who advanced, copfident of victory, under his stanblishments His ardour, courage, and brilliant qualities, rendered him the latter, joung, active, and enterprising, was at the head of its unbitary estatacte understanding, invested with the civil government of the country, the have by At the period of the arrival of the French, two Deys, Brahum by the solvenegath of the solvenegath o

Sesostris (2).

the country were to be found among the descendants of the followers of recolutions which mark the lapse of ages, the greater part of the slaves in spent occubations point of the meanest describtion By one of those nonderful stage of society, their numbers not exceeding two hundred thousand, and the Christian faith which they still profess, they were east down to the lowest ments of immortal endurance how insulted and degraded, on account of who so early excelled in the arts of civilisation, and have left so many monudescendants of the native inhabitants of the country, of those Egyptians The Copie constituted the fourth class of the people. They are the

of regular forces (1) but destrinte of discipline or of the firmness requisite to sustain the attack mounted, and matchless in the shill with which their horses n'ere managed, of the hile they could sen

hiw shi dguordt beredrak e 10 'paipung y Liisnpui

ervilisation, only, like the moving sands, to devour the traces of human mandering life of their forefathers, and re-appeared on the frontiers of theur ravages, and the plunderers, retreating into the desert, resumed the Industry languished, and population declined in the districts exposed to tab rule aimost almays suffered their excesses to escape with impunity. with the spoils of plundered villages The indifference or laxity of the Turkcultivated their fields on the banks of the bile, or fled from its shores loaded the caravans which come to Cairo from Lybia and Arabia, they alternately contrels or horses, driving numerous herds before them, escorting or pillaging roking propensities and barbaric vices of the Bedouin race Mounted on hands A numerous body, hing on the borders of the desert, refained the tenance of its schools, its mosques, its lans, and rebgion, nere in their farmers, and cultivators The whole instruction of the country, the mainof the lan and the ministers of religion, a third class, the little proprietors, nobles who nere the clust proprietors of the country, others, the doctors consist. Their condition was infinitely various; some, forming a body of

and to gain the affections of the Arabs by flattering their leaders, and infulging their prejudices. For this purpose he left the administration of fustice and the affairs of religion exclusively in the hands of the Scheiks, and addressed himself to the feelings of the multitude through the medium of their established teachers. For the Alahometan religion and its precepts he professed the highest veneration; for the restoration of Arabian independence the most ardent desire; to the Beys alone he swore elemal and pendence the most ardent desire; to the Beys alone he swore elemal and uncompromising hostility. In this manner he hoped to awaken in his favour both the national feelings of the most numerous part of the people, and the religious enthusiasm which is ever so powerful in the East; and, inverting the passions of the crusades, to rouse in favour of European conquest the vehemence of Oriental fanaticism (1).

Napoleon was justly desirous to advance to Cairo, before the inperish without merey." kings: wo to those who shall join the Alamelukes to resist us; they shall Thrice happy those who are with us; they will prosper in all their undertain every age the friends of the Most High, and the enemies of his enemies (2)? should constantly make war on your faith? Are we not those who have been destroyed the chevaliers of Malta, because those madmen believed that they preached eternal war against the Mussulmans? Are we not those who have are true Musulmans. Are we not the men who have destroyed the Pope, who that it should terminate. Cadis, Scheiks, Imams, tell the people that we too part of the world; but God, upon whom every thing depends, has decreed of slaves, bought in the Caucasus and Georgia, have tyrannized over the finest it. No! God is just and full of pity to the suffering people. For long a horde Egypt, is their farm, let them show the tenure from God by which they hold that entitle them to appropriate all the enjoyments of life to themselves? If between them, And what are the virtues which distinguish the Mamelukes, sight of God; that wisdom, talents, and virtue alone constitute the difference nerate more than the Mamelukes. Tell them that all men are equal in the punish your usurpers, and revive the true worship of Mahomet, which I vereligion. Believe them not. Tell them that I am come to restore your rights, you will be told by our enemies, that I am come to destroy your the Esymsingular proclamation to the Egyptian people. "People of Egypt! Proceeding on these principles, Napoleon addressed the following His procla-

undations of the Wile rendered military operations in the level advance to Cairo, before the interactions in the level country impossible; but for this purpose it was necessary to accelerate his movements, as the season of the rise of the waters was fast approaching. He made, accordingly, the requisite arrangements with extra-ordinary celerity; left three thousand men in garrison at Alexandria under Nièber, with a distinguished officer of engineers to put the works in a posture of defence, established the civil government in the persons of the Scheiks of defence, established the civil government in the persons of the Scheiks and Imams, gave directions for sounding the harbour, with a view to placing.

ficence." The general-in-chief then traced out the plan of a mosque, which was to exceed that of lemining the state of the army in all this, however, he conversion of the army. In all this, however, he sought only to gain time. Napoleon was, upon this, declared the friend of the Prophet, and specially placed under his protection. The report spread generally, that before the expirty of a year, he soldiers would wear the turban. This produced the very best would wear the turban. This produced the very best could wear the turban. This produced the very best would wear the furban. This produced the very best could wear the furban. This produced the very best would wear the furban. This produced the very best could wear the furban. This produced the very best with the people ceased to regard them as idolaticated.

(1) Map. ii. 226, 227. Th. X. 101, 105.

"The French army," says Mapoleon," since the Revolution, had practised no sort of worship; in Ilaly even, the soldiers never went to church; we took advantage of that circumstance to present the army to the Mussulmans, as readily disposed to embrany in fruites disposed with the conclusion from the sample sign, that circumcision, they arrived at the conclusion, that of the prohibition against sign, that circumcision, and the prohibition against som, that circumcision, and the prohibition against sign, that of the income, was spent in acts of benefin, and thin of the income, was spent in acts of benefinity affaith of the income, was spent in acts of benefinity.

when they found themselves, instead, surrounded by a pathless desert, their selves that they were to find repose and a terrestrial paradise in Egypt, and desire for rest had taken possession of their minds; they had flattered themstragglers-they were filled with the most gloomy forchodings, Already the head, and troops of Arabs flitting across the horizon, to cut off the weary or less plain of sand, without water or shade-with a burning sun above their weether angustel, his troops began then decided the cool of the night; ranced with tolerable checklunkes during the cool of the night; ranced with tolerable checklunkes during a boundmarch of the centrance of the flotilla into the hile. Desaix was at the head of the was directed to move upon Rogella, to secure that town, and facilitate the 50,000 men. At the same time, kleber's division, under the orders of Dugua, duced, by the garrisons of Malta and that recently left in Alexandria, to On the 6th July, the army set out on their march, being now refint gits nth the Turkish government (2). at Constantinopie to assure the Porte of his anxious desire to remain at peace deceased only by the mirage of the desert (1). and they had at length the mortification of discovering that they been pressed on with burning impatience, it for ever fied from their appreach; tened to the enchanting object, but it receded from their steps; in rain they trees clearly reflected in its glassy surface. Instantly the parched troops hasthe soldiers; a lake appeared in the and wilderness, with villages and palm general depression, a sudden gleam of hope illuminated the countenances of the sand, and gave nay to every expression of despair (3). In the midst of the thirst became so excessive, that even Lannes and Murat threm themselves on secretal in the distance by the hostile Bedouins; and soon the suffering from the days, the army resumed its march across the sandy wilderness, still oband sometimes approached within titly jards of the videties. Mer a rest of sautly harassed by the clouds of Arabs who wheeled round their position, stall; the remainder of the troops by onacked in squares on the sand, inceshour, a few houses afforded shelter at night only to the general's nater nere to be found to quench their burning flurst. At Damaneither filled up or exhausted; hardly a few drops of muddy and brackish discontent broke out in loud lamentations. All the wells on the road were write to you as the language of soursety when we are not of und prevent borrible positions, I hope my would dimusts will return, ... Luness, Lond de of braide gand is negob ui ma i mitte it bener perennial fountains. The villages are bais without resources of any kind, bor licaven's sake, do not to the rest in the midet of a fury sheet of Artheron The firmness and resolution of Rapoleon, however, triumphed the was shortly indicated by the increasing bodies of Arabs, with a few Jamelukes, who watched the columns; and at length the long wished for stream was seen glittering through the sandhills of the desert. At the joyful sight the ranks were immediately broken (1); men, horses, and camels, rushed simultaneously to the banks, and threw themselves into the stream; all heads were instantly lowered into the water; and, in the transports of delight, the sufferings of the preceding days were speedily forgotten.

those who have never traversed an Eastern wilderness (2). the shade of palm-trees and sycamores afforded an enjoyment unknown to parable fertility in the soil promised abundant supplies to the troops, and the banks of the river succeeded to the arid uniformity of the desert; incomassigned to them. The landscape now totally changed; luxuriant verdure on were deseated, and the boats arrived at the destined spot at the precise hour place on the Aile, between the French and Egyptian flotiflus, but the Asiaties rested in plenty for a whole day beside the stream. A severe action had taken up, and the flotilla having appeared in sight about the same time, the soldiers assailants by a single discharge of grape-shot. The whole army soon came rapidly forming in squares, with the artillery at the angles, dispersed the and attacked the division of Desaix, which was coming up; but the troops in sight. Finding, however, the leading division prepared, they passed on, arms, and eight hundred horsemen, elad in glittering armour, soon appeared Moneton Riven that the Manielukes were approaching: the drums beat to Actions 301 min While the troops were thus assuaging their thirst, an alarm was

Aile(5). at the same time abandoned the scene of action, and drew off further up the retreated in disorder towards Cairo, with the loss of 600 men, and the hotilia ployed and attacked the village, which was speedily carried. The Mamelukes those who escaped the grape-shot. Animated by this success, the French de-. boint-plank range, and the rolling fire of the infantry soon mowed down intrepidity. The artillery opened upon them as soon as they approached within lop, assailed their moving squares with loud cries, and the most determined league of the enemy, than the Mamelukes advanced, and, charging at full galin the centre of the square. To sooner had the troops approached within half a ber, and still extenuated by the fatigues of the voyage, were placed menaced points. The cavalry, who were only two hundred in num-Action at with the artillery at the angles, and the grenadiers in platoons, to support the diately formed his army in five divisions, each composed of squares six deep, with the enemy before the arrival of the army. Napoléon immethe march of the land forces, and engaged in a furious and doubiful combat ported by a flotilla of gun-boats on the river. The French flotilla out-stripped or foot soldiers, lay on the road, his right resting on the village, and suptowards Chebreiss. Mourad Bey, with four thousand Mamelukes and Fellahs After a day's rest, the army pursued its march along the banks of the Aile,

This action, though by no means decisive, sufficed to familiarize advances to the soldiers with the new species of enemy they had to encounter, unds Cano. the soldiers with the new species of enemy they had to encounter, noter. As you approach the village it recedes from the view; when you rathe at it, you find it is still in the midst of burning sand, and the deception the midst of burning sand, and the deception begins anew with some more distant object." The phenomenon admits of an easy explanation on optical principles,—See Mor, 32, 32, ⁽¹⁾ Las Cas. i. 221. Morthior, 11, 12, 13. Th. x, 109, 110. Sav. i. 50. Miot. 26, 38. 39.

(2) Sav. i. 50. Berth. 13 Th. x. 110, 111.
(3) Dam. ii. 134, 135. Berth. 15, 16. Th. x. 112.

turies confemplate Jour actions "

whoever they should be, filled up the space to the foot of those greanue the pyramids. 'A few thousand Arabs, assembled to pillage the vanquished, norld, with their right resting on the eillage, and their left stretching towards which nere stationed above eight thousand of the finest horseinen in the Mourad Bey, had there collected all his forces consisting of six thousand accustomed to charge, nould yield to their impetuouty too soon, and nould if the infinity nere steady, his only apprehension nas that his soldiers, deep only, to constitute the reserve. Sapoleon had no fears for the result, column of attack, those in rear remaining behind, still in equare, but this c themselves to charge, the three front ranks were to break off and form the the whole were to half, and face outwards on every side. When they were and rear moved fornard in their ranks, but the moment they were chieged, When they were in mass, the two sides advanced in column, those in front deep, the artiflery at the angles, the generals and baggage in the centre desert. The divisions nere all drann up as before, in hollon squares six contions to ensure success against the formidable catality of the With his usual sagacity, the general had taken extraordinary pre-

"Hemember," said he, "that from the summit of those pyramids forth cening his enthusiasm, gazed, as they marched, on the everlasting monuments," to use in height with every step the soldiers advanced, and the army, shar-, usual ardour (2), the sun glittered on those minense masses, which seemed mature of the moment, inspired the French general with even more than his Bugue, and lastly, Ital and Bon The sight of the pyramids, and the anvious ingly began to march, Desaix, with his division in front, next Regnier, then beyond the reach, and out of the direction of the guns. The columns accordto more his army further to the right, tonards the presmuls, in order to be be turned from the direction in which they were placed, than he resolved the cannon in the intrenched camp were immorable, and could not hapoleon no sooner discovered, by means of his telescopes, that

who had been rd the sight of sight of the Praguns, and the town of Cauo. All eyes nere in-nity of the hile, hon-1 ASS FILL The purpose cauguet i . i se troops · of their Curp. XXV.

fortra. Sist July

aynjuu Mit to s the Liney one ve

dəəy io Ayıssəsən

constantly prox orer, subbited t

monuments (1)

 $\mathfrak{T}(1)$ beginber or brought to the immorable firmness which this species of warfare

the action; and several days were occupied after it was over in strif slourad Bey into Upper Egypt. The rictors hardly lost two hundred in the morning, not more than two thousand five hundred eser killed; and of the formidable array which had appeared in such z hands of the victors. Several thousands of the Mamelukes were dro The intrenched camp, with all its artillery, stores, and baggage, fell into the great slaughter, and drove them finally off in the direction of the pyramids. they, forming square again with inconceivable rapidity, repulsed them with proaching from the right, with their nings extended in order of attack; but no possibility of escape in that direction, fell upon the columns who were apportion perished in the attempt. The Mamelukes, rendered desperate, seeing side of the Aile. Aumbers saved themselves by swimming, but a great protheir ranks, and rushed in crowds towards the boats to escape to the other rout of the Annelukes, on whom all their hopes were placed, abandoned in in disorder, trampled under foot the infantry, who, panie-struck at the - horrible confusion now reigned in the camp; the horsemen, driven Bon on the extreme left, stormed the intrenchments. The most an Hank by Xapoleon at the head of Dugua's division, while those of Vial and the camp from whence they had issued. Here, however, they were charged sued from the ranks, and at length the survivors, in despair, fled towards multitudes perished under the rolling fire which, without intermission, is-In vain thousands succeeded, and galloped round the flaming walls of stoel; along the ground, and cut at the legs of the front rank with their seimitars. at the heads of the grenadiers; while many who had lost their steeds, crept dashed their horses against the rampart of bayonets, and threw their pistols as they poured in at the opening. Furious at the unexpected resistance, they an entrance; but an incessant fire from every front mowed them down as fast saix's and Regnier's divisions, and riding round both squares, strove to find With matchjess intrepidity, they pierced through the interval between Dekerry and grape drove them from the front round the sides of the column. the mass arrived, the movement was completed, and a rapid fire of musand died in the midst of the square at the feet of the officers; but before partially broken, and thirty or forty of the bravest of the assailants penetrated, the swiftest of the Manielykes came upon them; they were in consequence being entangled in a wood of palm-trees, was not completely formed when anxiously waited, with their pieces ready, the order to fire. Desaix's division The soldiers, impressed but not panic-struck by the sight, stood firm, and the earth grouned under the repeated and increasing thunder of their feet, with their cries. The glitter of spears and seimitars dazzled the sight, while The horsemen, admirably mounted, and magnificently dressed, rent the air immense body of earnery approached at full gallop the squares of infantry. It was a terrible sight, capable of daunting the bravest troops, when this from the remainder of the army and bore down upon the French columns. Mameluke line, and speedily seven thousand horsemen detached themselves pleting it. An extraordinary movement was immediately observed in the skilful general, he resolved to attack the columns while in the act of com-Finese Mourad Bey no sooner percerves, and morning morning of a solution with a prohibitude of decision worthy of a statement than, with a prompting mile and of com-Journal Bey no sooner perceived the lateral movement of the

(1) Napi il. 236, 237. Th. x. f17.

clain of their magnificent appointments, or fishing up the rich spoils which

Bry ret re to 237 a uo encumpered the banks of the Nile (1)

Яu pə

Per de mes. No sooner nas hapolcon established in Cairo, and his officers emtheir short but fanguing campaign (2) tonards Syria in pursuit of Ibrahim Pacha, tasted the sneets of repose after Egypt, the other divisions, dispersed in the environs of Cairo, or advanced rope. The division of Desaix was destined to pursue Mourad Bey into Upper the East, which for a time compensated to them for their absence from Eubattle, hapoleon entered Cauro, where his soldiers found all the luxuries of

of the West "The Beys," and they, " placed their confidence in their cabrated the overthrow of their Mameluke oppressors by the invincible soldiers y aboutes of fright was combosed by them, in which they celeerench, and by adroitly lattering their ambition, this object was at length which was held in the lighest estimation, a declaration in favour of the the Ereat object was to obtain from the Scheiks of the Mosque of lemilazar, guenges which was so well calculated to captivate Eastern imaginations non their confidence, by a mixture of skilful management with the splendid ample security for their religion and their custonis, and at length completely out hopes of the speedy re-establishment of the Arabian power, promised had originally pointed. He visited the principal Scheils, flattered them, held the dominion over the country to which his proclamations from Alexandria their feet, than he set himself sedulously to follow up the plan for requiring piosed in exploring the Pyramids and City of Tombe, which lay at lukes been dissipated by the heroes of the West, for the Great Allali is irthe Aile are dispersed by the rays of the sun, so has the army of the Jameand confounded their hopes is the rapours which rise in the morning from Fortupe, at the head of the brave men of the Nest, has destroyed their horses, vairy, they ranged their intantry in order of battle that the larburte of Europe, the destruction of the cavalty which had so long tyrannized over pack the most darring accounts of the victories of the incincible legions of rations aluch came to dieces from the interior of those tast regions, carried The Battle of the Pyramids struck terror far into Isia and Africa. Tho ca-" (2) basil tilger sid to rilated against the Mamelukes, and the soldiers of Europe are the thunders

(4) The state of t

ant salt its er edreated to the sees en Li the true adibia a 11 " 16 lo no statemy ing of at - be ate the cut ous proclems on as of cr at the british of ma un sat sidens if w dannt sub nremit la the store of their persense is the but by the shall God, to ourest them sale churches every toted to e sur they tore thuse whembe lover and tall authors Supplier of the state of the said of the s which had dissipated their terrible squadrons, named Napoleon, Sultan Ke-Orientals, whose imaginations were strongly impressed by the flaming citadels \cdot Egypt excited the strongest sentiments of wonder and admiration; and the care."—" Wonderful!" replied the Scheik: "You speak like one inspired by plied Kapoleon; "the was one whose safety Providence had intrusted to my laughing, "that you are in such a rage at his death?" -- "He was more," reand punish the aggressors. "Was the Fellah your cousin," said a Scheik, three hundred horsemen, and two hundred camels, to pursue the robbers, of the village. He instantly ordered that an officer of the staff should take Arabs, of the tribe of Osnadis, had slain a Fellah, and carried off the flocks Rapoleon was surrounded by the Scheiks, information was received that some gular government so completely as under his administration. One day, when of the cultivated country. Rever had Egypt experienced the benefits of reof the desert, who for centuries had devastated with impunity the frontiers send deputies to the Central Assembly; and vigorously repulsed the robbers known the wants of the people; and others, in the different provinces, to tiality in their decisions: established at Cairo a divan, or parliament, to make administered by the Scheiks and Imams, enjoining only a scrupulous imparhe endeavoured to confirm his civil authority. He permitted justice to be metan custom. Nor was it only by an affected regard for their religion that and even balanced his body and moved his lead in imitation of the Maho-Mosque; joined in the responses in their litanies like the faithful Mussulmans; height; partook with the Scheiks and Imams in the ceremonies at the Great honour of the inundation of the Kile, which that year rose to an extraordinary ai leviled oin grift the multitude in celebrating the festival in by the Justice and impartiality of his civil government. He made that come ploits, strove to acquire a lasting hold of the affections of the people who should venture to make known to him the feelings which every one that Rapoleon was obliged to threaten death to any officer, whatever his rank, gloomy presentiments; and at length the discontent reached such a height, of being banished for ever from Europe, on that arid shore, excited the most their country, of their relations, of their amours, of the opera;" the prospect tude took possession of every heart. "They thought," says Bourrienne, " of leisure to contemplate their situation, a mortal feeling of ennut and disquieners. When the excitements of the campaign were over, and the troops had fort; bowed down with tyranny, squalid with poverty, barbarous in manthe monuments of ancient splendour, but totally destitute of modern comillustrious only by the recollections with which it was fraught; filled with experience was sufficient to dissipate all these illusions. They found a land exile, to return with the riches of the East to their native country. A short a region flowing with milk and honey, and after a short period of glorious had been held out to the soldiers as the promised land. They expected to find or the semy, an extraordinary degree of depression prevailed in the army. Egypt Asido-ni-nobusmuoo odi boiquoo engieot taorg oeodi olidw tud ".(2) yidgimlA odt

His able and Sapoleon, in addition to the terror inspired by his military exbir, or the Sultan of Fire (1).

It is a singular proof of the ascendant which Napoleon had acquired over entertained (5).

(1) Scott, iv, 71. (2) Th. x. 128. Bour. ii. 121, 128. Bum. ii. 170, 175. Nap. ii. 222. Las Car. i. 232. (3) Hour. ii, 130, 135. Sav. i. 59, 60. Las Cas. i.

333.

Additional in an all gamerage and obtains as (I w (2)) and the state of the state o

(1) 294 1 C2 Pont # 149 120

The grant of the g

specially dispositions both of limited and his government, and the breast the year of the Ottoman government, and induce them to before that the slumber of the Ottoman government, and induce them to before that the remains on obside designs whatever against them, and that they were in the they were in the present all the present and the other present and the present area, happilean wrote to the Grand Vizier a letter full of assurances of the friendly dispositions both of timeself and his government, and the eternal friendly dispositions both of limited and his government, and the eternal

Treat of Mule secretly conducting these intigues, as nell as openly asoff a submig one of the most valuable provinces of their empire, both topage, sailing one of the most valuable provinces of their empire, both accordingly, this attempt to shake the throne of the Grand Seignor failed of

for the disamembering of the luckale ampire Mith this view, be secretly dispatched his advecting Larlette of All Pacins, the most parallette of All Pacins, the most him to fine Unropean rassals of the Porte, to endearour to stimulate him to fine the bore a fetter from the French general, in which Aspold to subvert him to enter into an immediate concert for measures calculated to subvert him to enter more than the stay of the porte.

vonted, women gen the opportune arrival of the capedinan nas from their periods strained. The object, lowever, of the expedition nas annean they need to the desert the Osyria, learnez Joured Bey alone to maintain the nast in Upper Ezput (1) maintain they are they have been alreaded Applican's intrigues with the maintain they nave they have been alreaded they are they alone to maintain the nave they are the are they are the they are they are they are they are they are they are the they are they are the a Mandaulane and sulliness, the defining behavious, brave-by behavior, the change, though brave-by ledded at these, but soon returning, was as courageously received. The Jamenlukes preded at these, but soon returning, with the French officers had to every sade around their paragrees. In the meter all the French officers had no sustaint desperate personnes and counters, and were too the most part covered women and the influence of the meaning with the opportune arranged them woulded, nothing but the opportune arranged the manded, nothing but the opportune arranged the manded, nothing but the opportune arranged the manded, nothing such as present a p ge in an affair of outposts,

where the process process by the property of Egypt, when the castern part of Egypt, and and carton which librahim had excited in the castern part of Egypt, and and cartoline caste should be descripted as fabricab, on the borders of the descriptable, as their resignant was leastly hele when the poster near transfer urged them to charge the returning columns, who were poster near transfer urged them to charge the returning columns, who were poster near a remarkly urged them to charge the returning columns, and the poster near a remarkly many and a nood of palm-trees. The disproportion of force as excessive, the thance a nood of palm-trees. The disproportion of force as excessive, the flame a nood of palm-trees. The disproportion of force as excessive, the flame and a nood of palm-trees, ordered the alternative and the proportion of the disproportion of disproportion of the disprop n this state of peperson yith the tinguish an insur-

among the honest, though illiterate, rulers of mankind (2). manifestoes, which a sense of perfidious injury seldom fails to produce Towers; and the indignation of the Divan broke forth in one of those eloquent almost activity; the French charge d'affaires, Ruffin, was sent to the Seven these perfidious representations. Preparations for war were made with the Egypt, and it became evident how completely they had been deceived by great was the general indignation, when accounts arrived of the invasion of eations. which, were afforded of the real designs of France. Proportionally Turkish capital, that for long the Divan shut their eyes to the obvious indiwas the ability of that able diplomatist, and of Ruffin, the envoy at the himself to the very utmost to perpetuate the same perfidious illusion. Such been appointed ambassador at Constantinople, received instructions to exert alliance of the Republic with the Mussulmans (1); while Talleyrand, who had makes, the destined ark of European freedom. lution the chains of military power, and preserve safe, amidst the western to balance the destiny of nations, turn from Asiatic wilds to European revothat illustrious man who seemed to have been the instrument of Providence reverse availed Lapoleon at sea, brought about by the genius of -ago leval But while every thing was thus prospering on land, a desperate south-éast from Candia, he determined to return to Alexandria. On the 1st Creece that the French fleet had been seen four weeks before, steering to the dangerous passage, the straits of Messina, and, having received intelligence in from Syracuse for the Morea on the 25th July, steered boldly through that time was now approaching when his nishes were to be realized. He set sail activity and zeal, twice missed the fleet of which he was in search. But the immediately for Candia, upon not finding them there; and thus, through his Alexandria on the 28th, two days before the French squadron. He set sail sail than his antagonists?, that he passed them on the volage, and arrived at French fleet on the 18th; nevertheless, so much more rapidly did his fleet singular cause. Relson had set sail from Sicily on the 21st June, and the which he stood so much in need. The failure of his pursuit was owing to a where he obtained, with extraordinary rapidity, the supplies of Egypt, Nelson returned to Candia, and from thence to Syracuse, Morements After having sought in vain for the French fleet on the coast of ceither, provocation, complaint, or declaration of the most valued to this hour, it has received only marks from phich, to this hour, it has received only marks from phich, to this hour, it has received only marks of friendship,"—See the Manufesto in Harden array, it, 483, 493, dated 10th Se. invaded; without Diw essing to the Porte ste enemies, it has, in the midst of a protonid peace bus ebusirteti use abd notioniteib on es dum sonerd cations, lending to excite the inhabitants to revolt, that And now, as if to demonstrate to the world, that tion, and to spread every where incendiary publiof the Morea, and the islands of the Archipelago. In the Morea winds in the perflex and dissimulathe perfects design of correspond the subjects of some into the sound dail bigs of beases rever ceased to send into the sound of the send of the sound of the send friendly powers; while on the other, the communiand induce it to come to a rupture with other and art of dissimilation to blind it to their real designs, lation and treachery which they have every where practised, gave to the Turkish government, the strongest marks of friendship, and sought by every at Constantinople, making use of the same dissimuleaguing logelher for its destriction "—Despatch, 224 August, 1798, Gorresp. Confid. de Nop. vi. 3, 4. (2) Hard, vi. 278, 280. Turkey, which was a Turkey, which was a Gestaration most alloss. against its natural enemies, who are at this moment vermuent, not only to remain on terms of its ancient for triendship with the Ottoman Porte, but to procure for it a partier of which it stands so much in need -oa doney the resolution of the French gowere. But as he may possibly not yet live arrived at Constantinople, I lose no time in making known triendship that ought to exist between the two poarmy, and to consolidate the ancient and necessary arise from the occupation of Egypt by the French requisite treaties, to remove any difficulties, that may oil ngie bin oleilogou or erowor fint diw bodein France, ambassador, at Constantinople, and he is fur, affairs in France, has been named, on the part of Citizen Talleyrand Perigord, minister 'of, foreign they have committed on the Brench commerce. pus cutered Egypit to punish the Boys for the insults Erench army, which I have the honour to command, off ": smrof ozoft ni erw rottol e'nooloque (1)

paude the French ambassadors, resident of Mar. declaration most able state paper, hear?, On the one (2) and 114 in 22 in and (2) and (4) and 114 in 22 in and (4) and 115 in and 115 in and 115 in and (5)

the squadron advanced to the stack at three o'clock in the attack at three o'clock in the stack of the stack

besides pieces of a lighter calibre Aboular fort was mounted with four pieces of heary camon and two mortais, had two 80-gun ships, the branklin and Guillaume Tell (3) The battery on seventy-fours, whereas the krench, besides the noble I Orient of 120 guns, 1012 guns and 8008 men (1) The British squadran consisted entirely of slups carrying 1196 guns, and 11,250 men, while the English had only the same the brench had a great advantage in the size of their ves cla, their The number of ships of the line on the two sides was equal, but ceed is certain, who may fire to tell the story is a very different question (5) " eaks, -,, There is no , it, in the ease," replied Jelson, " that no shall sucdesign, exclaimed, with transport, "If we succeed, what will the world Captain Berry, his flag captain, when he was made acquainfed with the on the outer bow and another on the outer quarter of each of the enemy's nunct side of the brench line, and station his ships, so far as practicable, one to anchor ' lits plan was to place his fleet half on the outer, and half on the there is room for the enemy to swing, said he, there must be room for us that nav double with his whole force on part of that of the enemy " Where than he resolved to penetrate between them and the shore, and m ho sooner did helson perceive the situation of the French fleet, deprive hinself of the assistance of his fleet, and it was then too litte to descripe the languet, as the English were within sight of the tamparts of Alexandria

-u .

Admiral Bruve's farming been detained, by Apopleor's corters, and the institute of the fulle, and being anable to get into the barbour of the problem of the fulle, and being unable to get into the barbour of Alexandria, had drawn up ins fleet in order of battle, in a position in the bary of Abouhre so etrong, that, in the opinions of beat offects of etropic that the full ore or remire to altee it. The becamonst reseal was close to diesting on the north-nest, and the rest of the fleet formed a sort of euror, with its on the north-nest, and the rest of the fleet formed a sort of euror, with its in the north-nest, and the rest of the fleet formed a sort of euror, with its in the north-nest, and the rest of the fleet formed a sort of euror, with its like the off Abeardra of Abouhr. It leads done has utmost to get has ships into the flaterors of Alexandria, but finding that the draught of water was too small for the largest reseals, he wisely determined not to adopt a measure which, by dividing the great of the original and the flaterors of the control of the flaterors of the control of the discussions which, by dividing the state of the original and the flaterors of the control of the discussions which, by dividing the state of the original and the flaterors of the control of the discussions which, by dividing the control of the original and the original and the control of the original and the original and the original

Iroq oil, eoreist os the ornes yoil, guirroin shi ii noi biode, elegad bed has by hay be with wour, i' wer elegad ii ii nois en travoi elegad bed gell rolorit shi wour, i' wer elegad ii nois elegad super elegad ii nois elegad ii nois equis elegat ii nois elegad ii nois elegad elegad ii nois elegad ii nois could neither aid their friends nor injure their enemies (4). ron, while the other third, moored at a distance from the scene of danger, was to bring an overwhelming force against two-thirds of the enemy's squadpistol-shot of their third ship, the Spartiate. The effect of this manauvre the Vanguard, at the head of five ships, anchored outside of the enemy, within column followed in their order, still inside the French line, while Relson, in totally disabled the Guerrier, which was next in line. The other ships in that Conquerant, while the Zealous, which immediately followed in the same time the French fleet and the shore. In ten minutes he shot away the masts of the steered between the outermost ship and the shoal, so as to interpose between honour nith him; and when he reached the van of the enemy's line, he the Zealous, under Captain Hood, which for some time disputed the post of ready for an anchorage. Captain Folcy led the way in the Coliath, outsailing ployed aloft in furling sails, and below in tending the braces, and making directly down upon the enemy, the men on board every vessel being emthe bows of the leading ships; but, without returning a shot, they bore broadsides of all the resels and the batteries on the island. It fell right on fleet came within range, they were received with a steady fire from the to all appearance, the fate of their country would depend. When the English was covered with multitudes of Arabs, anxious to behold a fight on which, on each other, who were never destined again to see the sun, and the shore bravest in both fleets; thousands gazed in silence, and with anxious hearts, him that an immediate assault was intended. The moment was felt by the course of the British ships as they entered the bay soon convinced .Buk 1et ressed it (2). light of the increasing cannonade, excited the admiration of all who witentered the bay and took up then stations amidst the gloom of night by the fallibly struck on the shoat and perished. The yay in which these ships as a warning to the Alexander and Swiftsure, which would else have inand crew, could take no part in the action which followed; but her late served from the hostile fleets, and, not ithstanding the utmost efforts of her captain loden, which came up sounding after it was dark, ran aground two leagues her guns raked right and left those between which she was placed. The Cutvanguard from all assistance from the rearmost ships of the squadron, while Another ressel, the Leander, was interposed across the line, and cut off the which nere thus placed between two fires, and had no possibility of escape. shore, while six had taken their station on the outer side of the same vessels, passed the line, and anchored between the first nine of the enemy and the the ships took up their positions, the victory was secure. Five ships had Relson had arranged his fleet with such skill, that from the moment that

Dreaded stations; and the great size of several of the English could be defined a successively passed along the enemy's line to take up their appointed stations; and the great size of several of the French squadron rendered them more than a match for any single vessel the English could oppose to and six colours on different parts of the rigging, had every man at the first six and six colours on different parts of the rigging, had every man at the first six and six colours on different parts of the rigging, had every man at the first six and six colours on different parts of the rigging. The Bellerophon dropt her three times swept off before the action closed. The Bellerophon dropt her stern anchor close under the bow of the Porient, and, notwithstanding the stern anchor close under the bow of the Porient, and, notwithstanding the

⁽¹⁾ Southey, i. 228, 229. James, ii. 238, 259. (2) Dum, 11.150. South. 1.231. Ann. Reg. 1798, Ann. Reg. 1798, Ann. Reg. 1798, Lis. Dum, 11.150, Jom, x1.11, 17. . 115.

till her own m iderp əsuəmun $75

sation of the Bellerophon in combatton the litting was now taken by the rey prevented which might have proved falal to both of these elips. The tained a belief the bulk has a friend of an enemy, and thus a catastrophie ressel, had the presence of mind to order his men not to fire, till be ascerny wer for an enemy fortunately, capten Hallowell, who commanded that van der bie en alups meht distinguish each other, she nas si first misand having the lights at the mixen-peak, which Aelson had ordered as a signer along, she came cues tu . . . g r 'panpqns chabinon 10

II amino I out Ergantic oppi Jarboard quarter, and, with the Leander, compieted the des and the bons of the krench admira Sufficure, which opened at once a

Doldwobor Higgs off avens, and rendered orers of inflictual, and the masts and regging were soon wapped directed with such falst precision to the burning part, that all attempts to They spread with frightful rapidity, the fire of the Swift-ure was from the Portent, as she still continued, with unabated energy, her herote had struck, and two were dismasted, and the flames were seen bursting forth honever, soon declared for the British, perore muc, ance,

But the R n jo sajon Charling the the suspended their firms. were pieked up by the Euglish boats, others were dragged into the portthe magazine of the l'Orient, many oflicers and men jumped overboard, and portention of the grants as which the contract of the fire appropriate and the contract of the Joyered colours of so many of their enemies, and loud cheers from the whole the ardour of the British seamen, or exception 8 pue nonithnos paratit welled, and so funus . វិទ្ធាទី១០ -rdrad

tith and a load stad dategraf a musalisted After a pause of ten minutes, the bring recommenced, and continued (5) alemep snows, the gamp mount · · cycrem Luinang เน้า(รักมาเมริยัม)

Jaines, il 210 218, 235, 235, nie eid au boutchae overligidangså odi bac graft

The moment with separates us fro a the olject tool  also a board and her being on a years' misself of a ball mand and business by the board and business by the ball in and and business to an authorise comparing, the death the toon test so as and the ball with all hards. I would not the ball to be a ball to b (1) Anpoleon addressed the following notice letter miles the presidence classicants the periodian rep Conta de Japolese, 7, 483. (3) Doube J. 241. breven feur Libe auten auf bie ewern dauen f eiged er salt these it is a first of the mean to trough the best field first burnes freiter, if cotters truck truck first burnes freiter in the first burnes freiter antime, age ataired I y Adiantal Lautheaume, in bie Successes, il, 100-7he wunnated bie eb en land forces. Merpatra to happines, 224 deg 1348. bell be multibents bintiterb adt at tradition aginests & my de se i see i see freing par best et see i see de se to I that of Band trace entires to tendbetressuit 152, 153 James II 265 Sar f 65, " The Luglub," says bielert," bere bad the dim

(3) James, 11 251, 255 South, f 210 Dum. it -(ont Conf. 4 383, chord of majernal fore, you will prehaps feel some consolution from the ferendality and were success, which is abill ever take in the widow of my friend After barng resemed the toterest ju bile by the

of Alexandria perfectly impossible; and it was not without the utmost exerlight i essels, however, rendered any attack on the shipping in the shoat water want of frigates would be found engraven on my heart!" The want of such a despatch to the Admiralty, he declared, "Nere I to die at this moment, a few hours. So severely did he feel the want of them at this period, that un and small craft in the harbour of Alexandria might have been destroyed in Had Aclson possessed a few frigates or bomb-ressels, the whole transports ·(c) sjuout and after such a victory, their punds could be impressed with such sentinonder such order was preserved in the English navy, when at such an hour, safed to the British arms. The French prisoners remarked that it was no through all the fleet, for the signal success which the Almighty had youthmoment of the thanksgreing, which, by orders of Kelson, was offered up combleted, than a perfect stillness pervaded the whole squadron; it was the tions of both fleets to such them. No sooner, however, was the conquest numerable bodies nere seen floating in the bay, in spite of the utmost exer-The beach, for an extent of four leagues, was covered with wreck, and indestruction which the Europeans were inflicting on each other. Tribbe for engenent, and beheld with mingled terror and astonishment the

The Arabs and Egyptians lined the shore during this terrible enworld do not allord an example of so complete an overthrow of so great an capable of bearing arms rate a regiment of his arm, (2). The annals of the which was all required by Kapolcon, who incorporated the whole who nere on their parole not to serve again till regularly exchanged; an act of humanity nere taken and sent on shore, including the nounded, nith all their effects, hundred and inenty-bre perished, and three thousand one hundred and five Captain Westcolt, a brave and able officer. Of the French, five thousand two in billed and wounded; they had to lament the death of only one commander, was sunk and one burnt. The British loss was eight bundred and minety five teen ships of the line, nine nere taken and two burnt; of four frigates, one that victory nas too feeble a nord; he called it conquest. Of thir-

Such was the battle of the Mile, for which be who gained it felt ful event, both nere swallowed up, and seen no more (1). efforts to save his life; but, in the agitation of the waves following that dreadafter the explosion by some of the British squadron who made the utmost tions and the united co-operation of all the officers and men, that the fleet was refitted so far as to be able to proceed to sea. Having at length, however, overcome every obstacle, and dispatched an overland messenger to Bombay, to acquaint the government there with his success, he set sail from Aboukir bay on the 18th August, leaving three ships of the line to blockade the harbour of Alexandria. Three of the prizes, being perfect wrecks, were burned; the remaining six arrived in safety at Gibraltar (1).

Crest tre-

Honours he heroes of the Mile. Melson was created Baron Melson of the Mile, solved upon the heroes of the Mile. Melson was created Baron Melson of the Mile, with a pension of L.2000 a-year to himself and his two immediate successors; the Grand Seignor, the Emperor of Russia, the King of Maples, the East India Company, made him magnificent presents; and his name was embalmed for ever in the recollection of his grateful country. With truth did Mr. Pitt observe in Parliament, when reproached for not conferring on him a higher dignity, "Admiral Melson's fame will be coequal with the British name, and it will be remembered that he gained the greatest mayal victory on record, when no man will think of asking whether he had been created a baron, a viscount, or an earl (2)."

lieve that you are by this time traffigure de periode de la constante de la co may decide what vessels are to enter." On sounding of the part, have at length announced that their labours are concluded; I shall forthwith transmit the plan, when I have received it, that you manner the plan, when I have received it, that you also may be a produced to be the plan. soin July on Solit July, brury, wrole sgain to him : "The officers whom I have tharged with the line, against which the principal efforts of the conemy will in all prohability be directed " Aud, bensive of that than the other extremity of the dria to put on the sand bank; but I am less appreanchor. I have demunded two mortars from Alexan-July, he again wrote to Napoleon: "I am fortifing my position, in case of being obliged to combat at any thing to your glory." On the 13th r3th July. of the enemy, and should be unable to contribute Alexandria, I should be blochaded by a single vessel Decause I can set sail en masse when I think fit; whereas, even if I could get into the harbour of antunni, it is the more desirable to remain there, tion as impregnable, at least during summer and two extremities of my line; I shall regard the posia position where batteries on shore may protect the are moured, and if I am fortunate enough to discover I shall concert measures with them as soon as we and aitiliery officers to meet me in the bay of Beckier, for the precaution you have taken in sending engineer July, he again wrote to Rapoleon: "I thank you biscuit for fourteen days." On the 7th Վլրբ գրլ և find the fleet; on board many vessels there is only report of that road. Want of provisions is severely sounded the roadstead of Beckier, I will send you a Casa Bianca regard it as impossible. When I have officers on board the fleet. Admiral Villeneuve and measure vilhout incurring the greatest dangers: that is the opinion of the lo noing on it is the hitherto it appears that we cannot attempt such a allow any thing to be permitted to hazard; and The loss of a single vessel is too considerable to is a labour which requires much time and patience, the ships of the line to get into the old port; but it 2d : " I have neglected nothing which might permit wrote to Napoleou, in addition to his letter of the Letter, 2d July, 1798.] On the 6th July, Brueys take shelter in the moorings of Beckier (Aboukir), where the bottom is good, and I could take such a position as would render me secure from the enemy."

(1) James, ii, 266, 267. South, i. 255, 257. (2) Parl, Uist, xxxiii, p. 1560. South, i. 219. Napoleon, who never failed to lay every mistorerrors, has laboured to exculpate himself from the destiny, or the faults of others, rather than his own tune with which he was connected, upon fortune, place. The only thing that I see practicable is, to enemy, if I had the misfortune to await them in this draw, so that entry is impossible. My present position is untenable, by reason of the rocks with which the bottom of the, bay is strewed, and if attacked, I should be infallibly destroyed by the proceed. feet six inches, which our smallest seventy fours ting into the harbour, as the bar has only twenty two ceived are unsatisfactory as to the possibility of get-Aboukir. The day before, Brueys had veritten to Rapoicon: "All the accounts I have hitherto reprior alternative of taking up a desensive position at letters, it appears that Brueys with the full know. ledge of the general-in-chief, proceeded to adopt the a defensible roadstead; and, from the following effect only on failure to get into Alexandria, or find proceed to Corfu. therefore, was conditional; to take Causse, with the Diana, Juno, Alcestes, and Arthe-mise frigates." [Letter, 3d July, 1798.] The order to to Corfu, leaving at Alexandria only the Dubois and Low si fo isaq our gy mill make the best of its will make the Abouhir, against a superior enemy; and if it can do hnow, which berthe squadron can get into Alexandria, of or can defend Methy While Ling in the roads of miral, in the course of to-morrow, will let the general army, retaining only a hundred soldiers in each ship of the line, and forty in each frigate. The adand stores, and the individuals belonging to the will take such measures, that during the course of to-morrow, he may have disembarked the artillery . si than x 31 A in the harbour sufficient draught, he oini issii If there is not cient depth of water. aus Butssaß -filbe time permits, and there is suffior se stania enter the old harbour of Alexandria, thin sons fleet, in the course of to-morrow, to corresponds,uoppodey -" Admiral Brueys will cause the sout an order; but it was conditional, and as follows: way to Corfu, [Nap. ii. 170.] and that the cara-strophe arese from his disobedience. It is true he tonn, or if that was impossible, make the best of his despatch to the Directory, that, on July 6, before to damiral Bracys, directing Alexandria, be wrote to admiral Bracys, directing him to telite within the harbour of ting disaster in Aboubir bay, and declared, in his official things I am preparing my mind to go through them (1) " grandeur to the ancients "-" les," replied hicher, " ne must do great diers, " Hell," said be, " ne must remain bere, or issue from it equal in nothing to escape his tips which could add to the discouragement of his soldisaster, he maintained in public the appearance of equanimity, and suffered so large a portion of its defenders. But, though in secret overn belined by the army of the ftepublic, and endangered its independence by the sacrifice of por the painful certainly that he had doomed to a ingering fate the linest of the resources train which they were to be resured, and nothing remained Oriental resolutions appeared at once to samels, by the destruction of the Turkish empire. All his dreams of European conquests and tace of the norld, to maintain an inglorious and hopelees struggle in a corner frustrated, and himself destined, to all appearance, instead of changing the return, on an inhospitable shore, all means of preserting his recent conquest - -- -- of oil · exiled, without hope of 1 11115 . By this irreparable loss HOU nem on some other and combiguits, that it required all the firmness of the generals to prevent a returning to I rance, except as prisoners of war, they gave vent to such foud intelligence arrived of the destruction of the fleet, and with it of all hope of and suffering, the promised land had turned out an arid wilderness. But when begins in been dispelled, the riches of the East had given place to poverty they were blied Aready, before they reached Capro, the tilusion of the extior officers and soldiers knew no bounds to the despair with which person et enter and properties of the army thus endersoured to conceal the infosequinou preaking out. Many soldiers in despair blew out their brains; others letter was written helso; a fleet altached Bruces was [Corresp Coal v 192, 194, 200 201, 222 237, 266 332 404] and ordered hum forthwith it do so, or proceed to Corlu On the day a ter that it is

451 to may 61 2m. 661 fri x 41 (1) Tapara mas sel ta to d of hos cress usact? attlemente bauen sal beite id a l'eterement I nem er garred ,leit na ted bed f 1 mas et da de ניינו של שנושה נומוש בדנונות מחר ב זבוית זניו כבו" מונו ni mein etabita furene bed uib e l mit reeite an red sa bus atmin tell of olital and as bur ag Perseuling the dissite is the it eriuty sa earlie it lusers gat alde gu mas å soudt m bie lat la gi not to aband in thus, less [land, til 23 | Bowels a denag the arders of the commander-la-th of a ral the ences whether soy pact up the later from so the last I reca, it codmired con evered up he be been dury and equiting team it more in the contract of a burning and equiting team it more in the latest accounting to indicate and indicated accounting to the contract of the contract to the Unrectory [1134 theur in 144 155 315 326] to the University [1134 the ord re, that the University Its that the ord re, or with the es barking lue army, and langhed to mor I at the county; and Bourt es ne declaces, that pressous to amundun na i i terrest in culturen que tubuunn was two able a using hereing to besend such as enable it in stat d out to sea (Bour at 144) He threw themselves into the Mile, and perished, with their arms and baggage. When the generals passed by, the cry, "There go the murderers of the French," involuntarily burst from the ranks. By degrees, however, this stunning misfortune, like every other disaster in life, was softened by time. The soldiers, deprived of the possibility of returning, ceased to disquiet themselves about it, and ultimately they resigned themselves with much greater composure to a continued residence in Egypt, than they could have done had the fleet remained to keep alive for ever in their breasts the desire of returning to their native country (1).

the Mile (2). immediately decreed to restore the authority of the Crescent on the banks of France, the differences with Russia adjusted, and the formation of an army gave vent to their indignation. War was formally declared against armament which had so long spread terror through the Levant, than they Divan at liberty to speak their real sentiments, by the destruction of the tants to the dominion of an European power. No sooner, therefore, was the portant provinces of the empire, destroy its militia, and subject its inhabithat it was an act of friendship to the Porte to invade one of the most imtion of the Sultan; the good sense of the Turks could not easily be persuaded Constantinople had found great difficulty for long in restraining the indignaarmy the whole weight of the Ottoman empire. The French ambassador at publican government; but in the East, it at once brought on the Egyptian viving, as will be detailed hereafter, the coalition against its Remar bemeen disastrous to France. Its effects in Europe were immense, by re-The consequences of the battle of the Nile were, to the last degree, invelerate (5). plunged national antipathies the most violent, and religious discord the most the French Revolution had produced, and the slumber in which it had cibly imprinted upon their minds a sense of the extraordinary alliance which man, were never weary of admiring the magnificent spectacle, which so forand the Turkish minarets; and the multitude, both European and Mussulspread sails; the placid surface of the water reflected alike the Russian masts by the brilliancy of the sun, which shone in unclouded splendour on its fullarmament through the beautiful scenery of the straits, was much enhanced the classic stream of the Hellespont. The effect of the passage of so vast an skies, passed under the walls of the Seraglio, and swept majestically through sence of an immense concourse of spectators, whose acclamations rent the Horn with the Turkish squadron; from whence the combined force, in preeight frigates, entered the canal of the Bosphorus, and united at the Golden spectators. On the 1st September, a Russian fleet, of ten ships of the line and that it produced a profound impression even on the minds of the Mussulman of a danger common to both. This soon led to an event so extraordinary, ancient animosity between the Christians and Alussulmans, in the pressure produced between Turkey and Russia, and the suspension of all the pont by the surprising was the alliance which the French invasion of Egypt Passage of salles Among the many wonders of this eventful period, not the least

The combined squadrons, not being required on the coast of Egypt, steered for the island of Corfu, and immediately established a rigorous blockade of its fortress and noble harbour, which soon began to feel the want of provi-

⁽¹⁾ Bour. ii. 134, 138, Say. i. 65. (2) Hard. vi. 298, 299. (2) Th. x. 113. Dum, ii. 160, 161. Hard. vi. 300. Nap. ii. 172.

and her cours from home, or to regain it in ease of disaster, pressed and aton of critical isolated from their country, unable cities to obtain suc-The situation of the French army was now in the highest degree nere laid, and sent to their respective courts for ratification (1) don, and Constantinople, acted in concert, and the bases of a triple alliance sions Already, without any formal treaty, the courts of St -Petersburg, I on-[CHAP XXV. HISTORY OF EUROPE. 530

menced his march to Upper Egypt, to pursue the broken remains As soon as the inundation of the hile had subsided, Desarx comthe expedition (2) the magnificent work which, under the auspices of Denon, has immortalized accompanied the expedition, prepared, anidst the nonders of Upper Egypt, put in a respectable posture of defence, while the shiful draughtsmen who country, the fortifications of Ro-etta, Damietta, Alexandria, and Salahieli, poises of Arabia, the troops equipped in new clothing, manufactured in the set agoing at Cairo, the cavalry and artiflery remounted with the admirable most extraordinary ardour, a flotilla formed on the hile, printing presses line of the canal of Suez nere explored by hapoleon in person, with the studied with an accuracy unknown in modern times, the extremities and phy, aniquines, increglyphies, and natural history of Fgypt, began to be of the numerous scientific persons who accompanied the army, the geogratute at Cairo, formed on the model of that at Paris, concentrated the labours army independent of external aid for its animination and artiflery. In instinon nere east, and a manufactory of gunpon der and salipetre, rendered the the distinguished talents of Larrey and Desgenettes, a foundery, where cannere formed, where the sick nere treated with the most sedulous care by nere established, in uluch flour was ground as finely as at Paris, hospitals of activity in every department At Alexandria, Rosetta, and Cairo, mills followed the destruction of the fleet were marked by an extraordinary degree anipoint hemily in the conducted country. The months which immediately far from forsaking, only prompted him to redouble his efforts to establish his empire in these discouraging circumstances, the firmuess of happilon, so lation, they were about to be exposed to the formidable forces of the Turkish blockaded by the fleets of Fugiand, in the midst of a hostile popu-

who, during the assault, had committed great carnage on those wounded in and the soldiers returned to take a severe vengeance on a body of the enemy, peing propen and dispersed, the village was stormed with breat staughter, affained the steady sides of the larger squares, and at length, the Mamelukes Ricar as might have been expected (5) All the efforts of the cavalry failed admirable presence of mind, fell on their faces, so that the loss was not so propen by the impelious shock of the Mamelukes, but the soldiers, with butle was a repetition on a smalier scale. The smallest square, however, nas the charges as at the battle of the Pyramids, of which this action in all its two mouseand three hundred strong, they formed three squares, and received reliabs, stationed in the yillage of Sidiman. The krench nere not more than enemy, consisting of four thousand Mamelukes and Arabs, and six thousand of Mourad Bey's corps. On the 7th October, he came up with the 74693 and 1 of stem dem inneu-bis Caits, 1 225 at times bus excess gestigue bet a exist ess gene pe bance out bab. The al. dor becomes a "gestine pells bance out bab. The al. dor becomes a "gestine pell bat. Las aixel obser bas ere bive bell at sans reper energy appeared he would was greu " borne in red to the best of the more desired in the more many and the second (3) Date 1 322, 725, 384 185, Sav 1 66 67 (3) Date 1 320 (3) Date 1 42 (4) Date 1 42 (

nere laid, and sent to their respective courts for ratification (1). sions Already, without any formal treaty, the courts of St -Petersburg, Lon-230 of activity in every department, At Alexandria, Rosella, and Cairo, mills followed the destruction of the fleet were marked by an extraordinary degree authority tirnly in the conquered country. The months which immediately far from forsaking, only prompted him to redouble his efforts to establish his embine In these discouraging circumstances, the firmness of hapoleon, so lation, they nere about to be exposed to the formidable forces of the Turkish plochaded by the fleets of England, in the midst of a hostile popuremote critical tsolated from their country, unable citier to obtain auc-it free cours from home, or to regain it in case of disaster, pressed and of tree.

Diochaded by the fleets of England, in the indest of a hostile popu-The situation of the French army was now in the highest degree don, and Constantinople, acted in concert, and the bases of a triple alliance

Etped tion a nave to ye coon se the inundation of the lade that subsided, Desatz comthe expedition (2). the magnitheent work which, under the auspices of Denon, has immortalized accompanied the expedition, prepared, amidst the wonders of Upper Egypt, but in a respectable posture of defence, while the skillul draughtsmen who country; the fortifications of Rosella, Damietta, Alexandria, and Salabich, horses of Arabia, the troops equipped in new clothing, manufactured in the set agoing at Cairo, the earairy and artillery remounted with the admirable most extraordinary ardour, a flotilla formed on the hile; printing presses the of the canal of Suez were explored by happing in person, with the studied with an accuracy unknown in modern times, the extremities and pp3, anniquines, hieroglyphies, and natural history of Egypt, began to be of the numerous scientific persons who accompanied the army, the geogratule at Carro, formed on the model of that at Paris, concentrated the labours army independent of external aid for its amminiming and artillery. An insitnon nere cast, and a manufactory of gunpon der and saltpetre, rendered the the distinguished talents of Larrey and Desgeneties; a foundery, where cannere formed, where the sich nere treated with the most sedulous care by were established, in which flour was ground as finely as at Paris; hospitals

who, during the assault, had committed great carnage on those wounded in and the soldiers returned to take a severe vengeance on a body of the enemy, peing propen and dispersed, the village was stormed with breat staughter, against the steady sides of the larber squares, and at length, the Mamelukes great as might have been expected (5). All the efforts of the cavairy failed admirable presence of mind, fell on their faces, so that the loss was not so proper by the impeluous shock of the Mamelukes, but the soldiers, with gerte was a repetition on a smalier scale. The smallest square, however, nas the charges as at the battle of the Pyramids, of which this action in all its two thousand three hundred strong; they formed three squares, and received Fellabs, stationed in the village of Sidiman. The breuch were not more than enemy, consisting of four thousand Mamelukes and Arabs, and six thousand of Mourad Bey's corps. On the 7th October, he came up with the ተፈርት ነ ሚያው። menced his match to Opper Egypt, to pursue the broken remains were huddled with the buggage lutu the certiff as arise cens in one page of the property of the Turse ad to motio on a woundiguest t an erst exady (2) hum it 272, 172, 124 125 Say i 66 67 Bour it 602 163 Th x 162 163 164 ibe serent Le 005 te Justi (1)

The a ctum were put to death in pr (2) M of 10 o s gs Th. 2 34(Let y b. ht 2 d'alphan an kiter to the try we cat of thirty beside, a d those of the try we exist that will result that all the a groun gs explained that will the thirty his a groun that the try we will be the second of the property of the property of the try of the try of the second of the try of the try

if nit i es fa ent thrown tu e the Thurst

(1) I'V L 1 182 187 198 (98 1 347 CHA 1 28 establishing an empire, greater than that of the Romans, in the centre of Eu-Lurope, attaching Turkey and fusiria with the whole forces of the Last, and run ludia, and established a colo-sal reputation, he projected returning to Alexander, from the shores of the hile to those of the Canges Haring overtheir territories, and he confidently expected to renew the march of a sam of money, they were willing to allow the passace of his army through had sounded the dispositions of the Persian court, and ascertained that, for unually fixed on the deserts which separated has limor from Persia, no torined the splendid project which filled his innafination. The eyes were conauxiliaries on the Euphrates, and overanc at once Persia, Turkey, and india, titteen thousand French reterans, and a hundred thousand Islatic iry and Asia Minor against the Turkish rule, assemble in army of

to see a naced with a serious attack by land and see from the Turks, Ashe ree ves Being non excluded from all intercourse with Europe, and me-ante Syria, with a part of his troops, and rouse the population of that counassistance from Lurope, indulged in visions of Oriental conquest. To advance his ardent mind, now thrown upon its own resources, and deprised of all But it was not merely defensive operations that the general contemplated, strength, a preponderating force was ready to fall upon the brench army. sponld anticipate the enemy, and not near till, baring assembled their beinging aimy of the Sultan was assembling. Prudence preserbed that he poleon resolved to assail his enemies by an expedition into Siria, where the throwing their corpses, in sacks, every night into the file (2) of the rety time when he was executing thirty of their number a-day, and did happieon expect that he was to gain the confidence of the slussulmans, my commission, and that human efforts cannot prevail against me " Thus known, but the day will come, when all shall know from whom I derived of you, of the most secret thoughts of his soul, since to me every thing is of the horan my coming is forefold. I could demand a rechoning from each West, to accomplish my destined tash. Show them, that in thenty passages mism, and vanquished the Cross, I should come from the distant parts of the time it was ordained, that, haring destroyed the enemies of bla-Man of Destiny, Make the people understand, that from the beginning of m this world or the next Is there any one so blind as not to see that I am the teach the people, that those who become my enemies shall have no refuge ambition of his mind, -. Scheils, Clemats, Orators of the Mosque, no odey be of the same of the experience of the recommendation of the rague

The suppression of the revolts dren from hapoleon one of those " (1) om furnished all the preachers of Christendom with a magnificent text against perished in that manner the Pharach," and Aspoleon, "it would have spore ascended, and the party at length gamed the coast of Egypt " Had I his footing, by this means it was discovered in what quarter the slope of the and shout when he found the depth of water mereasing, and that he had lost their perilous situation. He caused one of his escort to go in every direction, bigly flowing, when the presence of mind of dapoleon extreated them from numbert danger. Alteady the nater was up to their middle, and still ra ropean civilisation. Full of these ideas, he wrote to Tippoo Saib, that "he had arrived on the shores of the Red Sea with an innumerable and invincible army, and inviting him to send a confidential person to Suez, to concert measures for the destruction of the British power in Hindocatan (1)."

cruisers, and come to support the maritime operations (2). to Villeneuve at Malta to endeavour to escape the vigilance of the English Djezzar, was put on board three frigates at Alexandria, and orders dispatched men. The artillery destined for the siege of Aere, the capital of the Pacha reserves left on the banks of the Kile did not exceed in all sixteen thousand with which Kapoleon expected to change the face of the world; while the hundred cavalry, and forty-nine pieces of cannon, constituted the whole force larger number could be spared from the defence of Egypt. These, with nine the period when they landed, by latigue, sickness, and the sword, that no of the transports, yet such were the losses which had been sustained since sent back by the British after the battle of the Kile, and almost all the sailors for although the army had been recruited by the three thousand prisoners these magnificent projects. They consisted only of thirteen thousand men; for the Syrian expedition, were by no means commensurate to Limited ex-The forces, however, which the French general could command disagreeable; and, drenched with rain, they soon came to regret, at least for trated the thin clothing of the troops, and rendered their situation extremely than on the banks of the Nile; the heavy dews and rains of Syria soon peneif the days were more refreshing, the nights were far more uncomfortable passed from the sands of Africa to a land watered by the dew of heaven. But pearance of verdant slopes and clear brooks convinced them, that they had olive groves, and all the features of European scenery; but at length, the aptheir own eyes, when they beheld woods and water, green meadows, and which had so often disappointed their hopes; they hardly ventured to trust hills of Syria. The soldiers at first mistook them for the mirage of the desert, diers, and the suffering troops beheld the green valleys and wood, covered by a veil of clouds, some drops of rain refreshed the parched lips of the solconfines of Asia and Africa; the hitherto clear and glowing sky was streaked infantry, and at length the granite pillars were passed which marked the abandoned by the Mussulman forces at the sight of the French squares of augmented their dissieulty in obtaining subsistence. Damas was trict. The garrison were conveyed as prisoners in the rear of the army, which cessity of bringing his men as rapidly as possible through that perilous disduced the greatest discontent among the soldiers, and Napoléon felt the nethe desert; the excessive heat of the weather, and the want of water, pro-The sufferings of the troops, however, were extreme in crossing ing the night, and after a siege of two days the fort capitulated. leon reached El Arish, where the camp of the Alamelukes was surprised durtimes had been frequented by the human race. Six days afterwards, Napoline of communication between Asia and Africa, which from the earliest tons of men and animals, which had perished on that solitary pathway, the tible amidet the blowing sand, was distinctly marked by innumerable skeledesert which separates Africa from Asia. The track, otherwise impercep-On the 11th February, the army commenced its march over the

.10

the Eules, attached then in flank while they crossed the ditch, and drove grenadices nere derien from the toner, and a body of lurks, issuing from querable firmness of the British and the heroic valour of the Mussulmans, the gether At length the desperate daring of the French yielded to the uncontouched each other, and the spearheads of the standards nere locked tosalants, who fired at them within half pistolehot, the muzzles of the mushets furious contest ensued, the bestead hurled down large stones on the aschouts from the brave men who still defended its rums liminediately a of instant death, and they mounted the long-disputed tower, annual loud the contage of the besteged, who were beginning to quail under the prospect spibs, and led them, armed with pikes, to the breach. The sight reanimated menaced point. In this extremity Sir Sidney Smith landed the crews of the the bay, but several hours must still elapse before they could arrive at the were embarked in the boats, and were pulling as hard as they could across payonets only appearing above the blood, parapet. The troops in the roads ments they had formed, with sand-bags and dead bodies, the points of their redoubling their boldness, were seen intrenching themselves, in the lodgthe of the place was now sensibly slackened, while the desirgers, san displayed the tricolor flag on the outer angle of the toner. The ntrepidity, made their nay to the summit of the rampart, and the morning column to the new breach. The grenndiers, advancing with the most heroic Lannes renemed the attack on the tower, while Ceneral flamband led the rampart was declared practicable, and an as-ault ordered. The division of counterscarp, and batter the curtain At daybreak, another breach in the norbs. The artiflery took advantage of that erreumstance to approach to the this the division of Bon, at ten at night, drove the enemy from their exterior hours, resolved to anticipate its arrival by an assault during the night ealculaing that this reinforcement could not be disembarked for at least six men, and abundance of artillery and ammunition, from Rhodes Aspolton, Acre Soon after a fleet of thirty sail entered the bay, with seven thousand the Ottoman erescent, joined to the English pendant, approach the road of 017 HISTOUA OR EUROPE, smother The division headed by Hambaud succeeded in reaching the sumpar shipe this success was found in one dustler, ruin was impending in them back with great loss to the tremenes (1)

for wergent off from the breach by which they had entered, and driven into surrounded the seraging, and at lenoth the French, who had penetrated so stopped by a tremendous lite from the house-tops and the barrieades which European method, rushed to the spot The progress of the assalants "as ou ground smill, at the bead of a regiment of lanizaries, disciplined in the of the Pacha's serague Livery thing seemed lost, but at the critical moment wit of the rampart, and leaping down into the tower, attained the very garden place greatly increased, he resolved to make a last effort with the division of truit " Mihough the troops in the fleet were now landed, and the force in the

(c) the single bit them is 212 214 Tourse out (c) and the first first day of (c) (c) first (1) can fer 1700, 32 dealers 11 Dem th.

·III

match for the Turkish scimitar. it was proved that, in a personal struggle, the bayonet of the European is no portion of his staff (2). On this occasion, as in the assault on Schumla in 1808, the wounded, Crosier, aide-de-camp of the general-in-chief, and a large prodreadful loss. Among the killed in this last encounter was Ceneral Bon, and Kapoleon, his last reserve, advanced to the attack; they were all repulsed with column to headless trunks. In vain other columns, and even the Guides of sabre in one hand, and the dayser in the other, speedily reduced the whole were assailed with irresistible fury by a body of lanizaries, who, with the garden of the Pacha; but no sooner had they reached that point, than they were permitted to ascend unmolested to the summit, and descend into the ches, and advanced with a firm and solemn step to the breach. The assailants walls (1). A little before sunset, a dark massy column issued from the trenis slain." He kept his word; the fortress held out, but he lay at the foot of the was marching at the head of his regiment to the assault, " be assured Venoux of KSL-Jean d'Acre is not taken this evening," said one of the colonels, as he of its triumph at Mount Thabor, eagerly demanded to be led to the assault. rior of the tower. In the evening, the division of kleber arrived, and, proud eades, and intrenchments, with which the garrison had strengthened the intetroops were there arrested by the murderous fire which issued from the barrinew assault was ordered. The summit of the breach was again attained; butthe and, seeing that it was greatly enlarged by the fire of the preceding days, a dan.. Early on the 10th May, he advanced in person to the foot of the breach, Kleber, which had been recalled in haste from its advanced post on the Jor-

Success being now hopeless, preparations were made for a retreat, at least, after sixty days of open trenches; a proclamation was issued to the troops, amounting that their return was required to withstand a descent which was threatened from the island of Rhodes, and the fire from the trenches kept up with such vigour to the last moment, that the furts were not aware of the preparations made for a retreat. Meanwhile, the baggage, sick, and field-artillery were silently defiling to the rear, the heavy cannon were and field-artillery and, on the 20th May, Napoléon, for the first time in his buried in the sand, and, on the 20th May, Napoléon, for the lirst time in his lifte, ordered a retreat (5).

as I advance with the discontented in every country through which I pass; I or the assault. I will march on Damascus and Aleppo; I will swell my army and arm all Syria, which at this moment unanimously prays for the success town all the treasures of the Pacha, and arms for 500,000 men. I shall raise not to make a last effort. If I succeed, as I trust I shall, I shall find in the that miserable fort has indeed cost me dear; but matters have gone too far Lannes was wounded, he said to his secretary Bourrienne: "Yes, Bourrienne, name of Richard Cour-de-Lion, on the evening of the fatal assault when quest which cut him to the heart. Standing on the mount which still bears the Vast designs which this defeat frus-trated. his chagrin. It was the destruction of his dreams of Oriental conthey were to an army situated as his was, were not the real cause of sion of his invincibility was dispelled. But these disasters, great as them the seeds of the plague, contracted during the stay at Jaffa; and the illuof their wounds; a still greater number were irrevocably mutilated, or had in the repulse at Acre. It had cost him 5000 of his bravest troops, slain or dead No event, down to the retreat from Moscow, so deeply affected Rapoleon as

91

⁽¹⁾ Miot, 199.
(2) Ann. Reg. 1799, 33. Jom. 2. 117. Dum. ii. Miot, 200.
(2) Ann. Reg. 1799, 30.
(2) Ann. Reg. 1799, 200.

taben, I will secure Egypt, Damascus? I have only ingered under these walls because at present I could fall of Acre to declare themselves? Have I not been already offered the keys of the tyranny of the Pachas Do you not see that the Druses natt only for the will announce to the people the breaking of their chains, and the abolition of there destroying the fortifications for three more. The field-still-The army occupied two days in the retreat to Jaffa, and remained Sidney Smith, "That man made me miss my destiny (3)," which he relinquished when he relited from lete, and repeatedly said of Sir Splendid as his situation afterwards was, he never ceased to regret the throne stantinople and the indies, I would have changed the face of the world," can calculate what would have happened (2)? I would have reached Conthousand men; " Say rather six hundred thousand," replied Aspoleon, " who tated" Some one said, he would soon have been reinforced by a hundred nould have joined it; the whole population of the East would have been agi-Euphraice, the Christians of Syria, the Drusce, the Christians of Armenia Aleppo and Damascus, in the twinking of an eye it would have been on the lean d'acre once taken," said he, "the renen army nould have floun to hapoleon, after the lapse of twenty years, on the rock of St -lielena, "St,merely of the enthusiasm of the moment, but nere deliberately repeated by tria (1) " Boundless as these anticipations nere, they nere not the result parts by Adrianople and Lienna, after having annihilated the House of Aug-East, which will fix my place with posterity; and perhaps I may return to masses; or erturn the empire of the Turks, and establish a new one in the . - . . . Constantinople with armed nels, and proclaim becare pendently of the number who were actually the rictims of that dreadful bravest officers. The seeds of the plague were in the army, and, indesands, reduced the soldiers to despair, and shook the firmness even of the, A decouring thirst, total want of water, a faliguing march through burning the inhabitants of the unhappy villages which lay on the ine of the retreat. Ill the horrors of nar were accumulated on the troops and norbaups and to movements of the army, and harassed them incessantly with the light vessels desert, but it all fell into the hands of bir Sidney Smith, who followed the lery was embarked, in order to avoid the painful passage over the 10 [$3 bt ed was sur wifers liber a netwermermen bei bete per ebed in at everenteitel ? further operation a buil erne and everenteitel spre me ment en le a brite fe mit mertit a fem dige wend laum mor ben gegab mal a 126 In ebutent be fad laum und for all for a b m ads in fadeel adt madet ente to tritted the section of defects to re or nein gild . muen in non y ginol ender genege to de fool and busen ern ou sy la remoral a a hose elven mode men enn enn buse elies, elnel eten la mone el Rand ads el sett and world but hew wit bon at ison Lappt be alle ellerbare gemt ba baudial elinen, be age I gadt as abade of a of I's eried lie ment boid done in in tool ofdermunner bal soded I trank to his desert you have a system to trace and to Lon prace col integ this e fociampup Errug ipe mille the decent which especially a band after a with the band of the time will a sold lead to the band of t

(1) Instant 131 1b x 392 11 Abr iv 203.

ethaness ersimped Lunas on as bosogen were evenly Tanced and the dreadful hutchery to an the the ach would feel, a id bould; a proposed to a dual broad and only broad and proposed to a dual feed a proposed to a dual feel and to a soul to a soul and to a soul and to a broad and a soul cles, Iron the beginn ng pred etre this the e rge padi valved shiril sawa sequent dalgad base da draft graft y area and a sept. a series of salved & arabiqued delices as the series of salved saving and the series of saving and series of saving savi tenerge d eine telmeera riers bloepentit all faese ! began it w lie too slender resourrer, and worled the the patients and in account of the region and all of the to be uni iteraphed correct of each of ered lie queuty will be come decable perse, del not esture (2) Inpulcon who bad been bilberto decreatoined with which, in his proclaims on to be it wine, he resided his differtion. Building ton berefraveried Beeuch gei eral en ured monu burler in uite ate. Ibe ett [602 WIN]

eation is to prolong life, and not to extinguish it (7)." the medical staff when the proposal was made by Rapoleon to him, " My voofficers (6), it must record with admiration the answer of the French chief of who fell into their hands, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the British matter, the more especially as the Turks murdered all the prisoners and sick While history, however, must acquit Sapoléon of decided criminality in this If I were so myself, I would implore that the same should be done to me (5)." tion, my advice would be, that he should be treated in the same manner; and son, whom I love as well as any man can love his child, were in such a situaaryo ym H. Sansingatol asodl do dard old mo sondaeing Lany own said he, "would not have preferred immediate death to the horror of being in which he was placed, it could not be considered as a crime. "What man," plied thatit was true. Heargued, and argued justly, that, in the circumstances mit the fact at St.-Helena, but he reasoned in such a manner as plainly imthe ground of necessity but of humanity (1). Napoleon did not expressly adthey arrived, the painful act may perhaps be justified, not only on the mean death awaited them at the hands of those barbarians the moment an hour's march of the place, their recovery hopeless, and a cruel neral; their numbers did not exceed sixty; and, as the Turks were within could not be removed, were, it is to be feared, poisoned by orders of the gesoldiers in regard to the contagious nature of the malady (5). Those who riding whip, in order to remove the apprehensions which had seized all the walked through the rooms, affected a careless air, striking his boot with his beds, and endravour to get into the litters prepared for their use (2). He riod) no eavlasmedt eign of asia of dignerit strength to rise themselves on their fulness and resolution (1). At talk he visited himself the plague hospital, self at the bead of the troops on foot, inspiring all around him with cheerhorse, and that of all his equipage for the use of the sick, he marched himzid zandonada (lainob-llos botsvrotaisib to olquazzo odt vozdodok zai had made; before them, the desert with all its horrors. In the general suffersteps. On their right was the sea, on their left and rear the wilderness they of the columns was at night illuminated by the flames which followed their during the day by the clouds which rose from the burning villages; the march asunder, and let their wounds bleed affesh. The heavens were darkened wounded;" and to prove the truth of what they said, tore their bandages exclaimed with a faltering voice, "I am not sick of the plague, but only of all who approached them. The dring, laid down by the side of the road, malady, the sick and wounded suffered under the unbounded apprehensions they made to rise. 'He has made up his accounts, and one; 'He will not get on lar,' said another; and when the poor wretch fell, for the hast time, and when the poor wretch fell, for the terrate fits of laughter at the convulsive efforts which which they were afflicted, and burst into inmodethey were the objects only of hurror and derision. The soldiers avoided the sick as the presidence with the unhappy sufferers would have done all they could to far from it, Mict, " that in such an extremity, the comrades of pestilence, " I ho would not have supposed," says in the more fortunate soldiers who had escaped the rades, their fate excited little or no commiscention to staffer a few steps after their departing complague expressed the numest horror at being left he-dind, and rose with difficulty from the bed of death mind, that while the soldiers who were ill of the vable effect of such seasons of horror on the human

⁽¹⁾ Bour. ii. 251, 252, Mot. 215. Dum ii. 219.

⁽²⁾ Bour. ii. 267. Las. Cas. vii. 221, 222. (3) Savary. i. 105 (4) Bour. ii. 262, 203. Niot, 206. Sir Robert Wil-

⁽⁵⁾ Las Cas. i. 214. Bour. ii. 264. O'Mea. i. 329, n the form of medicine,"-See Wieson, 176; Mor, pinal of Joffe, died of what was administered to the hose seeks in vain to suppress, some of the wounded at which is often the organ of tardy truth, which power soned, at 580; Niot says merely." If we are to trust the reports of the army and the general rumour, son, 172, Th. x. 393. Sir Robert Wilson states the number of those poi-

⁽⁶⁾ Ann. Reg. 1799, 33, 34. (7) Las. Cas. 1, 214. Th. x, 393. O'Men. i. 330. It is a curious fact, illustrative of the inconcet-

After a painful march over the desert, in the course of which numbers of 116 [Cuar. AAV. HISTORY OF PUROPE.

, eath ynnuc . Lyrpt. During (ins., my par 11 triels on the 1st June, and at length exchanged the presations the sick and nounded perished from heat and suffering, the army reached standing their frequent experience or one . . . out tell files as 20 of trequently rushed to the glassy streams and lakes, which yamshed on their appearance of the unrage, which constantly presented itself, that the men had been sent against him that the insurrection was suppressed, snored the garrison of Damanhour; and it was not till two different directors. tented characters, gave himself out for the angel El-Mody, and put to the trived to assemble together a number of Jameluke, and discon-Ft 210q2 taken place in the Delta A chief in Lower Egypt, who had conabsence of happicon, disturbances of a threatening character had Though Lety in general preserved its tranquility during the approach into air (1)

he relient opponent, had followed the course of the Aile as far as and its leader killed Meanwhile Desair, pursuing with indefaugable activity

Jeom uni 10 and Al I-hamme . : railethatds took proce " " p where he learned that Hourad slam, 'After this disister, Upper Laypt was thoroughly subdued, and the defeat of a large body at Benymany, point of

of Besaix's administration in those distant proxinces, that it procured for confects finite of the flower empire (2) Such nas the niedom and equily brench division took up its confouncities in the villages which formed the Rapoleon, ever anxious to conceal his reverses, made a sort of triumplial mm the appellation of "bullan the Just (5)"

Sea, and Schun, a suries of Constantinophe, built will cause to be shor literata, Joucord, thrabus will cause to be shor literata, Joucord, thrabus if can be shown that the same of the stable at the stable of the same of the same of the stable of the same of the same of the same of the stable of the same rence and explicit are the rul og sentiments of the army sand explicit be well with your countedes . shie truth toust be told; in such a trut, ind ile.

(1) Lour il 255 Street 1 26. (2) Lour il 426 425, 428 Bium. il 231, 221 25 42 1 Jr. war -- we Mior, 220 cuous during the Museites tetrest, and in the vous a genes teren erret the same fatte men teren ten gene genes teren teren erret trans tenen teren and T ditant toon a in the Beld considerers partily executions in province matterns p. Conferent for the Artificial States of the Artificial ed at state se Litt aunt d &, adt all villetten. Trees had been about out be saviner and breamy fiebit & la entechte mirjodius 343 at 3t dam Trei to belond at letters and orders of Vojedena of this ad admid of trusts as a struct of the safe safe month Perhaps the persale correspondence of few con-" A sat tut gardt gas such lud go it tadt ero ind Ethunes s adt statadid at tuilte adt at erade a wadat

netal longua :- " Don well close to be sheet, c tuten grustal, lourgh, a native of Christone, nearlibe Flack

entry upon his return into Cairo, and published a deceifful proclamation, in which he boasted of having conquered in all his engagements, and ruined the fortifications of the Pacha of Acre, in truth, though he had failed in the principal object of his expedition, he had effectually prevented an invasion from the side of Syria by the terror which his arms had inspired, and the desolation which he had occasioned on the frontiers of the desert; and he had abundant reason to pride himself upon the vast achievements of the inconsiderable hody of men whom he led to these hazardous exploits (1).

Influenced by an ardent desire to visit the indestructible monulo sudmed from earrying into effect (2). project which the great personal ascendant of Kapoleon alone prevented them Cairo to Alexandrias to await the first opportunity of returning homes a soldiers and officers, for a time entertained the design of marching from cations, and to such a height did the dissalisfaction rise, that the whole army, ing his benefactor. With Kleber the general-in-chief had several warm altertwice relinquished the project, from a sense of honourable shame at abandonpassion for a lady at Paris, twice solicited and obtained his dismissal, and of dread to every honourable mind. Berthier himself, consumed by a romantic though with such cutting expressions as rendered the concession the object pretexls, leave of absence to return to Europe, which was always granted, probability, Every day some generals or officers demanded, under various mented their minds the farther that it seemed removed from the bounds of from apprehensions of danger, but the desire to return home, which torthe disastrous issue of the Syrian expedition. They did not arise The discontents of the army increased to the highest degree after horse, intending to cut his way across to the forces which had landed at the Turks at Aboukir, descended from Upper Egypt with three thousand force might be brought to the menaced point; Mourad Bey, in concert with full back to Cairo from Upper Egypt, so that, if necessary, the whole French formidable enemies. The division of Desaix was at the same time ordered to mont, which had not ventured to leave'its intrenchments in presence of such sions of Murat, Lannes, and Bon, where he joined the garrison under Marhis troops in full march. On the 25d he arrived at Alexandria with the diviarmy, and on the felle, at four in the morning, he was on horseback, and all he sat up all night, dictating orders for the direction of all the divisions of his This intelligence was received by him on the evening of the 15th at Cairo; any corresponder the protection of the British navy, on the following day. Turks in Aboukir bay. They had appeared there on the 10th July, and landed, governor of Alexandria, announced the disembarkation of a large body of of setting out for Upper Egypt, when a courier from Marmont, ments of ancient grandeur at Thebes, Kapoleon was on the point have done so that coincide is impresses, the proprietal place done so that coince to the Euphrases, Henry IV said truly, Paris is worth a mass. Bo you think the empire of the East, possibly the subjugation of all the matter comes to that; The army would undoubtedly have joined in it, and would only have made a joke of its conversion. Consider the consequences, I would have been best on all sides old institutions would have taken Europe in rear; its old institutions would have been best on all sides; and who, after the consequences, I would have been best on all sides; and who, after the consequences.

 (1) Th x. 391, 395, Bour, ii, 206, 267.
(2) Th x. 391, 395, Bour, ii, 298, 303.

It deserves notice, as an indication of the total disregard of Rapoleon and the French army for the Christian religion, that all his proclamations and addresses to the process, or neonle of Exvis. or the addresses to the process, or neonle of Exvis.

 mont so during a sure that the sure of (b) the sure of the sure of

Thereis actional to becausaftern figurate or (1) 222 11 # 747 222 (3) Jon au 295, 296 31 x 599 340 340 340 340

105 = 41 (c) Our it 221. Jep if 326, 828 (1) grb # 233 gem 201

sured, if ever indensity were charged to the track by seventers by many and a the state of the same and some conques of the teres and the second to th of this agent orgined the others," but you should let the sale at the statements and sale at the sale of the sale mem ti. " firow sals in stel sals shr will m' sitted

it turned by Murat's caralty, but the moment that nas done they fled in The Turks maintained, theyr ground on the height on the left, till they saw second intrenchment. These measures note speedily cronned with success. turn both wings, so as to cut off all communication with the reserve in the arranged in three divisions, "as destined at once to pierce the centre and mecenia nith the like force, the left; nune amen 50H . 'Saje 11)114 s no modery

1011 (1) . તુલાઇ કરાયું કરત અન્ય

I to constructed by the French, and lerminated as one ext. men. The second, a mile in the rear, enbhoried in the centre by a rillage, w. each of which was strongly occupied een bue 'vrolleite ours to sinuou from the lake Maadieb to the sea, extenueu, liage of Aboubit, Անը նեշն, տնոշա

:'ut

ant no rulueds, to aluenting out to those it it. " nould ere long make their appearance on the side of Stria (2). quit of this army, as there was reason to expect that a new host of invaders a secure place of refrest in case of disasler, it was the more necessary to get abore four hundiged toises in breadth, so that the possession of it gave them an hich the Turkish ford a no end I browe out of nom borband sortificating the matter selves masters of the fort c ' '

nere supported by the British squadron; and they had recently inade themother The artillery of those troops nas numerous, ... գրւթու։ Labi 11015

the close of the siege at or to tone uthenous o to retrace by Murat, at the

and annountered near the Lake hatron ta Ajng PROOFF Cuap, XXV,

916

confusion to the second line, and being charged in their flight by the French horse, rushed tumultuously into the water, where almost the whole were either drowned or cut down by grape-shot. The same thing occurred at the other extremity of the line. Lannes attacked the height on the right, while the other division of Murat's cavalry turned it. The Turks fled at the first onset, and were driven by Murat into the sea. Lannes and D'Estaing, now united, attacked the village in the centre. The lanixaries defended them-united, attacked the village in the centre. The lanixaries defended themsely, calculating on being supported from the second line; but the column detached for that purpose from the fort of Aboukir having been charged in the interval between the two lines, and routed by Murat, the village was at length carried with the bayonet, and its defenders, who refused village was at length carried with the bayonet, and its defenders, who refused all quarter, put to the sword, or drowned in the water (1).

From this perplexity he was relieved by the imprudent conduct combat, or rest contented with the advantage already gained (2). extremities, and Rapoleon was doubtful whether he should continue the that they, were repeatedly forced to retire. The attack had failed at both and the lake, they were assailed by such a terrible fire from the gunboats, but when the eavalry attempted to pass the narrow defile between the works the extremity of the lake, and occupied some of the houses in the village; more successful on his side. Lannes indeed forced the intrenchments towards colled from the field of carnage towards the exterior line. Nor was Murat Letoureq was killed, Fuguries wounded, and the column, in disorder, redischarge of musketry from the top of the works, arrested the French soldiers; ments. Here, however, the plunging fire of the redoubt, and the sustained were borne back, struggling every inch of ground, to the foot of the intrenchat length yielded to the steady pressure of the European bayonet, and they to the attack with their formidable sabres in the air; their desperate valour plain. In vain the Lanizaries, after discharging their fusils and pistols, rushed their intrenchments to meet them, and a bloody conflict took place in the of battalions; but the Turks, transported by their ardour, advanced out of to the attack. D'Estaing led his men gallantly forward, arranged in echellon the line in rear. At three o'clock the charge was beat, and the troops advanced were to enter at the open space, between the trenches and the lake, and take left, where the whole eavalry, marching under cover of Lannes' division, attack the intrenchment, while the principal effort was directed against the Napoleon's dispositions were made accordingly. On the right D'Estaing was to leaving a small open space between the intrenchment and the lake Maadieh. the fort of Abouhir to the sea; but on the left it was not earned quite so far, the interior and more formidable line of defence. On the right a trench joined ing a battery to protect their operations, he commenced a new attack upon this purpose, after allowing a few hours' repose to the troops, and establishsecond, the whole remainder of the army might be destroyed. For and with the hope, that by repeating the same managerre with the The extraordinary success of this first attack inspired Kapoléon contact, of test contented with the mas relieved by the imprudent conduct the from this perplexity he was relieved by the imprudent conduct the first of the Turks themselves. No sooner did they see the column which had assailed their right retire, than they rushed out of the fort of Aboukir, in the centre, and began to cut off the heads of the dead bodies which lay scattered over the plain. Rapoléon instantly saw his advantage, and quickly scattered over the plain. Rapoléon instantly saw his advantage, and quickly

" I secondistrol near the Lake hatton 'arynogy

onol out to gailers "" I should mine thousand strong, to I al Louis of the The army, which to retrace his steps, and ... b) Mural, at the fica

march more formidable than any nhich the Crench troops had yet encounph git giqued guilly's editedron, though almost destitute of carany, was Acre from Blodes and had acce selves masters or meaning payanddns arau other. The artil' throw themselve dant of this abore four hundred torses in breadth, so that the possession of it gave focus on a mich the Turkish forces rent to the sword This.

oreupled. Sold July, and, though his torce our not exceed a 943 431 Im Position nonid ere i .

The first, which pey pue 'ejasuu one can the dispositions of the enemy, than he resolved men, including hicher's division, which had just arrived and was

men. The second, a mile in the rear, supported in the centre by a village, v each of which was strongly occupied sen line vanilitar tom the lake Maadich to the sea, executed, or purs jo station finge of Aboulir, the dispositions of the general nere speedily made, Lannes, with (1) 110] and supported by inclie pieces of eaunon, besides those mounted on the The first line was guarded by four thousand men, the latter by five thousand, sea (5), at the other in the lake, Beincen the in o lines was placed the camp. dor't constructed by the Prench, and terminance are

it turned by Hurat's catalts, but the moments that was done they fled in The Turks maintained their ground on the height on the left, till the; saw second intrenchment. These measures were speedily cronned with success. turn both wings, so as to cut off all communication with the reserve in the arranged in three divisions, was destined at once to pierce the centre and the for the libe libe force, the left, while Mural, whose caraity was two thousand men, attached the right of the first line; D'Estaing,

612 'song ne sel has parrie de cara 131 bats us berres and yeares berres, il erec infentej were chriscoli in the trech dy cera eg, ibe lucks plack be tomatrow by mose ma son tenm fait isi atarbin thereis and off to be mediter tigants or (s) and one of and of one negligible to the formation of the desired of the formation of the formatio 155 u nien e terph, 29 (15 u nier eve x af b.2.0.5, 11 aus (1) (2) in mun 1 212 (1) Kap if 224 Beur 306

confusion to the second line, and being charged in their flight by the French horse, rushed tumultuously into the water, where almost the whole were either drowned or cut down by grape-shot. The same thing occurred at the other extremity of the line. Lannes attacked the height on the right, while the other division of Murat's cavalry turned it. The Turks fled at the first onset, and were driven by Murat into the sea. Lannes and D'Estaing, now united, attacked the village in the centre. The lanizaries defended themshifted heaving on being supported from the second line; but the column detacked for that purpose from the fort of Aboukir having been charged in the interval between the two lines, and routed by Murat, the charged in the interval between the two lines, and its defenders, who refused village was at length carried with the bayonet, and its defenders, who refused all quarter, put to the sword, or drowned in the water (1).

combat, or rest contented with the advantage already gained (2). extremities, and Napoleon was doubtful whether he should continue the that they were repeatedly forced to retire. The attack had failed at both and the lake, they were assailed by such a terrible fire from the gunboats, but when the eavalry attempted to pass the narrow defile between the works the extremity of the lake, and occupied some of the houses in the village; more successful on his side. Lannes indeed forced the intrenchments towards coiled from the field of carnage towards the exterior line. Nor was Alurat Letoureq was killed, Fuguries wounded, and the column, in disorder, redischarge of mushelry from the top of the works, arrested the French soldiers; ments. Here, however, the plunging fire of the redoubt, and the sustained were borne back, struggling every inch of ground, to the foot of the intrenchat length yielded to the steady pressure of the European bayonet, and they to the attack with their formidable sabres in the air; their desperate valour plain. In vain the Lanizaries, after discharging their fusils and pistols, rushed their intrenchments to meet them, and a bloody conflict took place in the of battalions; but the Turks, transported by their ardour, advanced out of to the attack. P'Estaing led his men gallanlly forward, arranged in echellon the line in rear. At three o'clock the charge was beat, and the troops advanced were to enter at the open space, between the trenches and the lake, and take left, where the whole earahry, marching under cover of Lannes' division, attack the intrenchment, while the principal effort was directed against the Napoleon's dispositions were made accordingly. On the right D'Estaing was to leaving a small open space between the intrenchment and the lake Maadieh. the fort of Abouhir to the sea; but on the left it was not earried quite so far, the interior and more formidable line of defence. On the right a trench joined ing a battery to protect their operations, he commenced a new attack upon this purpose, after allowing a few hours' repose to the troops, and establishsecond, the whole remainder of the army might be destroyed. For access des with the hope, that by repeating the same managerre with the The extraordinary success of this livst attack inspired Napoléon

Terrade.

The first of the Turks themselves. No sooner did they see the column which had assailed their right retire, than they rushed out of the fort of Aboukir, in the centre, and began to cut off the heads of the dead bodies which lay scattered over the plain. Napoléon instantly saw his advantage, and quickly scattered over the plain. Napoléon instantly saw his advantage, and quickly departure, his ber afterwards expressed the highest indignation at that cir-

to nonniocor eithm.

yes were propertied by Berthere, Lannes, Murch, Androay-Herther, Inserting paned by Berthere, Lannes, Murch, Androay-Herther, Astronom, Androay-Herther, Astronom, Lit, Monge, and Bourtrenne, and eccorted only by fery of his faith-Antronom, Lit, Monge, and Bourtrenne, and eccorted only by fery of his faith-frame, Lit, Monge, and Bourtrenne, and cooking boats, which is set few Irlung boats, which conveyed them out to the fragiles, which list at the party endorse of them out to the fragiles, which list at the history were to return to France, can hardly be conventioned in the first present and the factor of the fragiles of the convention with hickory, whose nucle and correct. Beautiful of parson on the sail sails of parson of the sail sails of parson on the sail sails of the sail sail dately given that two fregares, the Murron and the Carrora, should be made tead; for easy, and Sapole on, presers ing the utwost secrety as to his microted departure, proceeded to Carro, in bere the drew up long and annute firsturetours for history, to whom the command of the army was intrusivel, and timmediately returned to Vicandria (2).

orders nere imme-

chite... In the same time the formen of the coming of Coffu by the species of chitestal size of control and contro

Alexandria ile had ample subject for meditation. Sir Sidney was need a flag of truce on shore to sellle an exin the waves. Mural penetrated into the eamp of Muslepha Pacha, where, with his war houst, to made that commonder process, and shall spell the tremnant of the more that spell the transport of the stanty, amounting to about the chousand men, in the fort of son, which was a househed men, in the fort of the bary of Mouhar Heavy cannon were immediately planted spanies the five househed men and persones about on machine the five the bary of Mouhar. I not thousand coppess housed is either the made persones of war in the fort. Intelliging escaped, a circ, which was the process of war in the fort in the bar, I have been a first of the common and the process of the stants of the process of the first of the confusion for ards in the spa furnation the spa and included the spa furnational in the space of the space of the confusion, per lake, and got into urrical 1 to the best account. Advancing rapidly pull his recerves an admirrable order, he arrested the sorter of the centre, under Lannes required to the alrest of the interactinents, now in a great incesure demided of their detable right. All these attacks proved successful, the whole line of tedouhis, the right. All these attacks proved successful, the whole line of tedouhis, now a finest destitute of troops, was explicitly thing see retail educations, in sence of the country for any length of time was impossible (1). Napoleon with leaving the army in such a state of destitution, that the decounstance, and in a long and impassioned report to this Directory, charged 673 HISTORY OF EUROPE.

posed to land. His project, at times was to make for Italy, take the command template with horror the enni of the quarantine at Toulon, where he pro-This only increased the feverish anxiety of his mind; and he began to con-He there learned the result of the battle of Novi and the death of Joudert. prodigious elevation, the house of his fathers and the scenes of his infancy. Ajaccio in Corsica, where he revisited, for the first time since his He lands at Contrary winds obliged the vessel which conveyed him to put into projects which already filled his mind (2). poleon, from the destruction which it would occasion to the fresh ambitious of rational disquietude to every one on board, but of mortal anxiety to Naoccupied every mind, the dread of falling in with English cruisers; an object recollections gilded the headlands which they passed. One only apprehension conversations enlivened, the weary hours of navigation, no more historical were dispelled, the visions of imagination extinguished; no more scientific killed; Caffarelli, Brueys, Casa-Bianca, viere no. more; the illusions of hope brilliant, anticipations of the former. His favourite sides-de-camp were all sombre disquietude of this voyage afforded, the most striking contrast to the order to run aground; if necessary, to avoid the approach of an enemy. The stretch across to the western side of Sardinia, still keeping near the shore, in thage, a favourable wind from the southeast enabled them to along the reast of the coast of Africa, and at length, after passing the site of Car-For three and twenty days they beat against adverse winds along port, declaring that he would run any danger rather than return to Egypt. land on the deserts of Lybia, and force his way to Tunis, Oran, or some other order that, it escape from the English cruisers became impossible, he might Napoleon directed that the ships should steer along the coast of Africa, in fore his eyes, and dreams of Oriental conquest captivating his imagination, sleet, surrounded by a powerful army, with the visions of hope glittering bewar which attended his arrival on the same shore,—in the midst of a splendid the verge of the horizon. How different from the pomp and circumstance of lights of Alexandria were faintly descried by the glimmering of the stars on. It was almost dark when the boats reached the frigates, and the distant disclosing the English fleet steering peaceably towards the north-east. All s. 'L safety to his oars; but the morning sun dispelled these apprehensions, by resolved, if escape was impossible; to throw himself into a boat, and trust for chase. The night was spent in the utmost anxiety, during which Napoleon Venetian construction, then at peace with Great Britain; they did not give Dut concluding, from the view they got, with their glasses, that they were of vation of the ships; the English saw the frigates, and made signals to them; every man to his post; steer for the north-west.", This order proved the salproposed to return to Corsica, but Napoleon replied, '' No. Spread every sail; was descried in the midst of the rays of the setting sun. Admiral Gautheaume with a fair wind. On the following evening, an English fleet of fourteen sail At length, after a sojourn of eight days at the place of his nativity, he set sail English theet hoped would reach Paris as soon as that of his victory at Aboukir. Sets sail, and of the Italian army, and gain a victory, the intelligence of which lie above a century by the ince-cant tide of huropean enthusiasm, nore unable the rast dominion rould have perished. The Crurades, though supported for hero who had formed, with the energy of the reterans who had cemented it, been more lasting than that of Alexander or Sadir Shah. With the life of the the destinies of mankind, or that the Oriental empire of Lapoleon would have a sudden appartition, how splendid socrer, would have permanently aftered benghis hinn or Tamerlane, But there seems no reason to believe that such the Turbish power, and possibly secured for its ruler a name as terrible as conia have been formed which would have subverted the toltering fabric of headed by that great general, and disciplined by the French veterans, a force in Beneral triple that of their oppressors, there, can be, little doubt, that, where the Turkish population is most abundant, the number of Christians is man paner. When it is recollected, that in the parts of the Ottoman empire. Christian population of Syriz and Asia Minor, against the Museul-the offin Sidney Smith, and had accomplished int pioject of arming the

(1) JP' x' 470' 431 Bonz' nj. $3' 16' 30 Recal settlements of mankind have come, and by its inhabitants all the lasting 100 coqu wire .01 01

ang Baj th savage violence, it will eiged superiority over

.-ob-12 Cout-de-

baladin successfully defended against the united forces of France and England could with ease have wrested that floly Land from the hordes of Asia, which . bersed by half the lighen army of the Republic; and ten thousand, reterans, St.-Louis, from the arroys of the Egyptians; the Jameluke carairy was, disthe same ground where the whole feutial array of France perished, under

-egys a sa, exidites an agent of description of regular solutions, as a sepaof the East, that the invention of fire-arms and, artillery, the im-brailired, to Attacuades'

nenig (33 ad)

landed in a few hours, and set off the same day for Paris, shortly after anchofed in the bay of Freque, The impatience and enthusiasm long-wished-for mountains of Provence appeared; and the trigates was naw spread for France; and at length, on the 8th October, tha, 720 T18 of Christian civilisation.

162

rupted regions of the East, the energy of northern valour and the blessings now overshadows the Asiatic empires, and is pouring down upon the corand from the strife of civilisation at last has arisen that gigantic power which further increased by mutual slaughter the warlike skill of the European states; recoil of his ambition to Europe, which the defeat in Syria occasioned, still plished, not by the capture of Acre, but the conflagration of Moscow. The for a permanent revolution in the East; but it was, destined to be accomconquests of history have been effected. Napoleon indirectly paved the way the first of the states and the state of the states of the berte befestell aben alreneung furit er-fereb Bestere fo ibe beitebente noder beitebeit er the Prench Troops in the Bowsn States. The Acopolisms eater Rome-They ore every in the allitated Republics-Mack Lates the Command. at Sapira Deported Situation of Citon s arrival at Saples, Hoschittes are rashiy tracked on-Porces levied by the Prered Sactions - Allairs of Sapies - Their Military Preparations - The Court coles into Secret condition of a prisoner in his own capital - He is at length foreud to'Af dieale, and retire to " Cruel Humiliations to a hich be bed presidualy been subjected The hang as reduced to the på tpese changes in Lombardy-The Spottetion of the hing of Lidina is resolved oncounces effected by the brench in the Cisalpino Republic - Licessifie Disconignt excited 1, abst 2 price ste merolulionised - New Constitution and Affance with France - forme Rome and Cantus-Resolt of the Roman fropulace-its bloody Suppression-The photo torics-Three disorders excite even the ladigitation of the kiring fing-, tries fluting at Home by the Republicans- Confication of the Church Property in the whole Popal Lerit. in m-lie is removed into I tance, and there dies-Systematic and Abaminable Fillinge of there-Atrocious Cruelty of the Republicans to the Pope-I beir continued Serettly tonages consequence declared by France against Home-Tertluer, adsances to Bome-Revolution Papal Coremment- Dupbot is siam in a Seuffle at die brench Ambaseadot's-if in in Pope-Measures of Sapoleon, and the French Corernment, to hasted the cafastrophe of the dignation excited by it in hatope-filled on the Papal States-Miceobie Situation of the country - Letterne Impolicy, as well as Iniquely of this attach on Saliterland-Orest In-

Clergy-Alays Reding-First Successes, and mlumate Disasters of the Peasonis-Metolic

Interference—Another Lie of the Comparison of th

ARGUVERT.

OCTORER 1787-MARCH 1799,

EGON THE PEACE OF CAMPO FORMIO TO THE RETEWAL OF THE WAR.

CHAPTER XXVL.

have aggravated this evil in that Country—Its inhabitants are as yet unfit for Free Privilence—Intimate Union formed by the Irish Malecontents with France—Revolutionary Organization established throughout the whole Country—Combination of Orangemen to uphold the British Connexion—Treaty of Irish Rebels with France—The Insurrection at Vinegar Hill—Imminent Danger from which England then escaped—Nugatory Efforts of Vinegar Hill—Imminent Danger from which England then escaped—Nugatory Efforts of with the United States—Shameful Rapacity of the French Government—Contributions with the United States—Shameful Rapacity of the French Government—Contributions fertile on the Hanse Towns by the Directory—Retrospect of the late Encroachments of Persing in favour of a Confederacy, in which Mussis joins—Tumult at Vienna, and insult to the Brench Ambassador—Who leaves the Austrian Capital—Progress of the Megolistion at Hastadt—The Secret Understanding between France and Austria is made manifest—Prospect of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the Pinancial Measures of the Directory to meet the Austrian Capital—Progress of the Directory to meet the Austrian Capital Frent.

rivalry of their ministers. midable means for carrying it on, than either the ambition of kings or the be found both a more cogent inducement to foreign conquest, and more forpage of pacific industry which necessarily results from its convulsions, is to itself; and that, in the domestic suffering which it engenders, and the stopbefore a devouring flame, which, the instant it stops, threatens to consume aggression as the only means of allaying internal discontent; that it advances most vehement and enthusiastic classes in the state, it is driven into external toreign warfare; that being founded on popular passion, and supported by the the latent talent which it developes, can find vent only in the enterprise of turbulent activity which it calls forth, the energetic courage which it awakens, that democracy is in its very essence and from necessity ambitious; that the relicity of its citizens. The aristocratic party, on the other hand, maintained the allurements of foreign conquest, thought only of promoting the internal would have quietly turned its swords into pruning-hooks, and, renouncing sure of external danger, and no longer roused by the call of patriotic duty, disement abroad; and that the Republic, relieved from the presthe war. no samed hands with innocent blood at home, nor pursued plans of aggranգու թյյւր government had been let alone, it would neither have stained its Views of the the iniquitous coalition of kings to overturn its infant freedom; that it its whole misfortunes of Europe, and all the crimes of France, had arisen from against its unruly authority. The partisans of democracy alleged that the cessity of the war which had so long been waged by the aristocratic monarchies the French Revolution, entertained different sentiments in regard to the ne-THE two great parties into which the civilized world had been divided by

Had the revolutionary war continued without interruption from its commencement in 1792 till its conclusion in 1815, it might have been difficult to have determined which of these opinions was the better founded. The ideas of men would probably have been divided upon them till the end of times and to whichever side the philosophic observer of human events, who traced the history of democratic societies in time past, had inclined, the great body of mankind, who judge merely from the event, would have leaned to the one or the other, according as their interests or their affections led them to espouse or the other, according as their interests or their affections led them to espouse

the conservative or the innovating order of things.

It is fortunate, therefore, for the cause of historic truth, and the lessons to be drawn from past calamity in future times, that two years of Continental peace followed the first six years of this bloody contest, and that the Repeace followed the first six years of this bloody contest, and that the Republican government, relieved of all grounds of apprehension from foreing publican government, relieved of all grounds of apprehension from foreing

CHAPTER

PROM THE PEACE OF CANTO FORMIO TO THE RE

осторев 1191-иляси 1193

ARGUMENT,

of France-National Bankiupley there-External Policy of the Directory-Atlack upon conduct of the Mountaineers-Commencement of Mochilities in the Canton of Berne-Sur-

-Indianation which it excites among the Seat villan Populace. A fraure, of the frent ti o brench Army in front of Capas-Mack proposes an Aru isuce. of ich is gladly accepted to holteure learlis I-berraud antitique baf -taolienqt bu mell eilf-enfqee abeent of Mach - I he Sespolitan i ouri labe fieluge on board that a dich & legt - 42 ang innnet revolers to tantalt - eachlogene aub to ersteaul dent !- to itrut gmouerbe nodm boisaleif are fer the Prench Troops in the flowen States. The Sespolitans enfer flome-They are every in the affiliated Republics-stack I bes the Command at Sapl, s-Doperard bitunion of Aclon a arreal at Saples, Hostdittes are tashiy tracited on-Forces fered by the brench Satingla- all lie of hat lea-Their Ailitery Viepasaitona-Ala Court enter bito Steret in Steret i condition of a prisoner in bis own capital -lie is at length forcul to Af dieate, and trute to-Cruel Humiliations to which he tad previously been subjected. The Ling is reduced to the "-no britoers at combred to good bir jo not shorts out - thramon in enguen seint gu changes efficied by the brench in the Cisalpino Republic -- I reserve Bisconigni exclied Papel States are Revolutionized- tew Constitution and Alliance with Prance- folink Rome and Mantus-Revolt of the Roman Populace | 14 blood, Suppression-Tir abole torics-II ese disorders excite even the ludigitation of the brench demy. Liest fluing al Rome pa iffe ftebnblicans Confication of the Control Property in the whole Popal terrihim-Ite is temored into brance, and thete dies-Systemplic and Shemitable Pillage of there- Atrocious Cruelly of the Mepublicans to the Pope-Their continued Severtly tonagis consequence declared by France against Rome-Pertluer advances to Rome-Revolution Papal Covernment. Duphol 1s slain in a Scuille at the I reneh Ambasentor, Jest is in " Pope-Messures of Aspoleon, and the breach Covernment, to hasted the calastrof be of the diengion excited by it in harope-Attack on the Papal States-Maerable Situation of the country-Latreme Impolicy as well as Inique is of this other, on putactiona-Circle In-Massacre by the Erench-The Grisons invoke the aid of Justria, which occupies their? forced upon Snitterland-Glorious resistance of Uri, Schwatz, and Undernalden-Cruel duct of the Trench to the inhabitants-An Albance offensing and defensive with France is Defence of the Schwylters at Mortarieu-Dloody Conflicts in the Voleis-Opp reserve con-Clerg)-Alors Reding-First Successes, and ultimate Disasters of the 1 casonis- licture land - Generous efforts of the Mountaineers - Arguments by which they were roused by the Enormous Contributions every where levied by il e krench-hew Constitution of Switter-Swise, their dreadful Excesses after Defeat. Caplure of Lerne its Treasure, and Argenal., reader of Soleure and bribourg-Placedy listile before Terne-Merois Resolution of the

to the County-Origin Little from Controction of Laufe-Center Center of the ment of the Parthenopian Republic - State of Ireland - I effections on il e Melanebaly Mistory Capital - The Freuch force the Cates and I atte-I loods Conficts in the secent-Lathlibe Design Seples-Despetate Ires stance of the Lattatoni-birblut Combals stound the have aggravated this evil in that Country—Its inhabitants are as yet unfit for Free Privileges—Intimate Union formed by the Irish Malecontents with France—Revolutionary Organization established throughout the whole Country—Combination of Orangemen to uphold the British Connexion—Treaty of Irish Rebels with France—The Insurrection at length breaks out—Various Actions with the Insurgents—They are totally Defrated at Vinegar Hill—Imminent Danger from which England then escaped—Yugatory Efforts of Vinegar Hill—Imminent Danger from which England then escaped—Yugatory Efforts of Vience of Economy Eventual States—Shameful Rapacity of the French Government—Contributions leviced on the Hause Towns by the Directory—Retrospect of the late Encroachments of Economy in the Hause Towns by the Directory—Retrospect of the late Encroachments of Economy in Ambassador—Their System rendered the continuance of Peace impossible—Leads to a general Ecoling in Rayour of a Confederacy, in which Russia joins—Tumult at Vienna, and insult to the French Ambassador—The George Understanding between France and Austria is made manifest—Einancial Measures of the Directory to meet the approaching Hostilities—Adoption of the France of the Conscription by the Legislature—Reflections on this Event.

Had the revolutionary war continued without interruption from its comrivalry of their ministers. midable means for carrying it on, than either the ambition of kings or the be found both a more cogent inducement to foreign conquest, and more forpage of pacific industry m hich necessarily results from its convulsions, is to itself; and that, in the domestic suffering which it engenders, and the stopbefore a devouring flame, which, the instant it stops, threatens to consume aggression as the only means of allaying internal discontent; that it advances most vehement and enthusiastic classes in the state, it is driven into external foreign warfare; that being founded on popular passion, and supported by the the latent talent which it developes, can find vent only in the enterprise of turbulent activity which it calls forth, the energetic courage which it awakens, that democracy is in its very essence and from necessity ambitious; that the felicity of its citizens. The aristocratic party, on the other hand, maintained the allurements of foreign conquest, thought only of promoting the internal would have quielly turned its swords into pruning-hooks, and, renouncing sure of external danger, and no longer roused by the call of patriotic duty, disement abroad; and that the Republic, relieved from the presthe wor. hands with innocent blood at home, nor pursued plans of aggranque teggip government had been let alone, it would neither have stained its the iniquitous coalition of kings to overturn its infant freedom; that it whole misfortunes of Europe, and all the crimes of France, had arisen from against its unjuly authority. The partisans of democracy alleged that the cessity of the war which had so long been waged by the aristocratic monarchies the French Revolution, entertained different sentiments in regard to the ne-The two great parties into which the civilized world had been divided by mencement in 4792 till its conclusion in 4845, it might have been difficult to have determined which of these opinions was the better founded. The ideas of men would probably have been divided upon them till the end of time; and to whichever side the philosophic observer of human events, who traced the history of democratic societies in time past, had inclined, the great body of mankind, who judge merely from the event, would have leaned to the one or the other, according as their interests or their affections led them to espouse the conservative or the innovating order of things.

The conservative or the innovating order of things.

further natious exident danger to public credit; that such a system, however of providing for all extraordinary expenses by loan, could not be estrict He stated, that the time had non arrived when the policy himserts pursued, less oppressive in the end than that on which he had previously proceeded. taxation, which, although more burdensome at the moment, is incomparably change in his binancial policy, and made the tirst step towards a system of But in providing for these great expenses, Mr. Pitt unfolded an important of course, of the charges of the debt and sinking fund (2). the threatened invasion from brance, amounted to L. 28, 150,000; exclusive, formard on 25th Ipril, 1798, in consequence of the expenses occasioned by of L 25,500,000 nere voted, which, with a supplementary budget brought mission, manned by one hundred thousand seamen. Supplies to the amount of the line, and three hundred frigates and smaller reseds, nere put in comber innumerable fleets which guarded the seas One hundred and four ships her extensive dominions, considering the great protection she received from sixty-three thousand militia; a force amply sufficient to ensure the safety of gular soldiers were fixed at one hundred and mine thousand men, besides approach of an apparently interminable struggle to her own shores. The re-

now to be engaged, the cessation of all foreign subsidies, and the tand for nere suited to the defensive nature of the nar in which sho nas The estimates and preparations of Great Britain for the year 1798 with the independence of the adjoining states. demonstrated, by actual experiment, whether the existence was consistent dency of the revolutionary system was to be put to the test, and it was to be European ambition (1) Now, therefore, was the time when the pacific tenmeans, to all appearance, of ever returning with his troops to the scene of the finest army, was engaged in a doubiful contest in Africa, without any n eakened by desertion, and the most ambitious general of the Republic, n ith life in the rural departments during the nar, the armies note every nhere consumption of human tendes denerated the encom oils otolomoo o'. than any inclination on the part of the Fnglish government to prolong, at an from the determination of the Directory to break off the recent negotiations, hisry supremacy which the arms of France had there acquired, and rather object, now that the Continent was pacified, or the means of shaking the intand unsubdued, continued the war, but without either any definite military by the cession of a large portion of his dominions. Great Britain alone, firm self had retired from the strite, and gamed the temporary safety of his capital purchased peace by the mo-t diegraceful submissions, and the Emperor him-

the fortified line of the Adige, the Italian powers nere overawed, and had crushed; Lombardy recolutionized, and its frontier secured by Mantua and Pyrenees; Holland was converted into an affiliated republic; Piedmont was with its territory, which had no boundaries but the Alps, the Rhine, and the the interests of the revolutionary state; Flanders was incorporated edury jo confest, but had engaged in a disastrous maritime nar to support was propen down and destroyed; Spain had not only given up the earrying into effect its alleged pacific inclinations. The coalition o rast population of France, had so fair an opportunity presented of powers, and placed with uncontrolled authority at the head of the

Trance of do sed

to provide some subsidiary body which might furnish supplies of men to fill questioned; but its numbers were limited, and it appeared highly desirable gular army. The discipline of that force was admirable, and its courage undefence, without incurring a ruinous expense by the augmentation of the rethe greatest anxiety as to the means of providing for the national nel and the Aediterranean, the british government naturally felt the great armaments preparing both in the harbours of the Chan-During the uncertainty which prevailed as to the destination of Establish. was the Volunteer System, and the general arming of the people. both upon the turn of the public mind, and the final issue of the war. This of Great Britain, fraught in its ultimate results with most important effects, The same period gave birth to another great change in the military policy succeeding years (1). Thich, was speedily abandoned amidst the necessities and improvidence of that of making the taxes raised within the year equal its expenditure, but An admirable plan, and a near approach to the only safe system of sinance; no part of the debt then contracted would remain a burden on the nation. seeseed taxes a year longer; so that, at the expiration of that short period, ing fund; and, to pay off this L.8,000,000, he proposed to keep on the treble because L. 4,000,000, would be paid off in the course of the year by the sinkmeans an addition of only L.S,000,000 would be made to the national debt, ling the assessed taxes on house-windows, carriages, and horses. By this it only L.12,000,000, and raise the additional L.7,000,000 by means of trebposed, instead of making the loan, as in former years, L. 19,000,000, to make penditure, so as to entail no burden upon posterity; and therefore he proto make the sum raised within the year as nearly as possible equal its ex--was at last, to all appearance, engaged; that the great object now should be, was unsuitable to the lengthened single-handed contest in which the nation made to bring the war at once to a conclusion by means of foreign alliances, applicable to a period when an extraordinary and forced effort was to be 255 [.8671 HISTORY OF EUROPE.

must determine whether we are any longer to be ranked as an independent "The truth," said he, " is undeniable, that the crisis which is approaching country, he sought only to rouse the determined spirit which might resist it. English minister. Not attempting to concral the danger which menaced the the kingdom. The speech which he made on this occasion was worthy of an to Ireland, and to provide for the raising of volunteer corps in every part of secretary at war, Mr. Dundas, to permit the regular militia to volunteer to go, step; and soon after a bill was brought into Parliament by the . dom. On the 11th April it was determined by the cabinet to take this decisive of allowing regiments of volunteers to be raised in every part of the king-King, ventured upon the bold, but, as it turned out, wise and fortunate step, which was anticipated, government, with the cordial approbation of the military service was not to be expected; and under the pressure of the danger cient; its officers were drawn from a class from whom the most effective militia, which, in fact, was part of the regular force, was obviously insulfievent of a campaign taking place on the British shores. For this purpose the the chasms which might be expected to occur in the troops of the line, in the

and the expenses having increased to L.3,000,000 beyond the estimates, the loan was angmented to L.5,000,000 for Ireland, L.5,000,000, exclusive of L.2,000,000 for Ireland, besides L.3,000,000, exclusive of L.2,000,000 for Ireland.

(1) James, ii No. 6, App. Ann. Reg. 1798, 182, 1881, 211. Parl. Beb. xxxiii. 1042, 1066.

Even in that very year it was, to a certain degree, broken in upon; the assessed taxes produced only L4,500,000 instead of L.9,000,000, as was expected;

He must fortily the menseed points, he aged, the nomen, the children, and h, are best calculated to meet it, let us that in which popular energy was first appealed to, in order to combat The adoption of these measures indicates an important era in the nar of the Habeas Corpus let continued for another year of krench propagandism, the aben bill nas re-enacted, and the su-pension of these measures (1) It the same time, to guard against the insidious system exdense, of such persons as might suffer in their properties in consequence horses and carriages, and provided for the indemnification, it the public heutenant and generals in command, for the seizure, on such a crisis, of en musse of the population, conferred extraordinary powers up on lordsment, authorize I the hing, in the event of an invasion, to call out the levy ment inother bill, which at the same time received the sanction of I whiaalways did on such occasions, made a noble speech in support of Covernfirty thousand columbers nere in arms in Great Britain. Ur Sheridan, as ho passed the House without opposition, and in a fen weeks a hundred and pendence from the foreign invision which was threatened, that the bill of our renerable constitution So obvious was the danger to national indeup arms, never to use them but in defence of their country, or the support Eaging in popular insurrection, for a narming to all Unions who chall take has been afforded in the neighbouring kingdom of the consequences of entheir arms but for northy purposes. I trust to the melancholy example princh unmense majority of them are animated, will preclude them from ever using of such enemies to their country. I trust that the patriousin by which the to the good sense of the great body of the I copie to resist the factions design the enemy, we were unfrepared with any adequate means of defence trust. rocters, it is nothing to the risk which we should rung it, shen insaded by entrasting arms to a people embracing a considerable portion of such clianith the aroned enemies of their country. But, serious as is the danger of tion, and for that purpose are willing to enter into the closest correspondence. only salutary reforms, many are still intent upon bringing about a regoluwhich still lingers amongst us, I know well that, under the ingel, of pursuing distinction I am no stranger to the disaffection, albeit much diminished, well aware of the danger of intrusting arms to the whole people without hament to hold commissions in the army nithout seeding their scale." I am those who have come forward as volunteers, and authorize member, of Paraccumulate forces round the capital, affix on the churchdoors the names of which they received, they imbilied the truste-olution to defend the cause off all the racillating or ambiguous fectings of former years with the arms standard of their country. Buth the uniform which they put on, they cast principles of patrioti in and loyalty which trat frought them round it a columber corts derrate from their duty, in none did they swerte from the confidence of government had not been im placed. In no matance did the Concest inberty against democratic tyrann,, and the event froved that the arms into the hands of her J copie, to take the lead in the gri at contest of It was a step worthy of bugland, the birst-born of modern freedom, to put which threatened to be equally destructive to the cottage and the throne configently called upon their subjects to join with them in residue, a power the the olution, and governments, resting on the stubborn evidence of facts, complished. which, lifteen years afterwards, the resurrection of the Patherland was ac-. British volunteers of 1798 was found the model of those dauntless bands by wards burned so strongly in Spain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia; and in the example of that touching developement of patriotic ardour which afterisles; it extended to foreign nations and distant times; it gave the first contest. Nor were the effects of this great change confined only to the British come too late to develope the military energy requisite for success in the Sendered all the horrors of civil war; subsequently, it would probably have earlier adopted, it might have, shaken the foundations of society, and en-British empire in the prosecution of the war to be ascribed. Had it been this well-timed and judicious step, was the subsequent unanimity of the the former disaffection from their neighbourhood; and to nothing more than hinteer corps formed so many centres of loyalty, which gradually expelled quarters where sedition had once been most prevalent, the votraig ell efficta. of England. Even in the great manufacturing towns, and the warm opposition; but at length the revolutionary party prevailed, and it. the mulifations which followed the 18th Fructidor, this measure excited a public bankrupter. Notwithstanding the enfechled state of the legislature by altogether unsaleable; so that the measure was to all intents and purposes a part of the value at which it was forced on their acceptance, and soon became, were thus tendered in payment of their claims, the paper fell to a tenth serable fund-holders turning to any account the national domains which what immediately happened, that, from the total impossibility of these misept. 18, 1797. culated at twenty years' purchase: but it was at the time foreseen over the national domains, to the extent of the remaining two-thirds, calinjustice of this proceeding, the public creditors received a paper, secured its annual charge from 258 millions to 86 (2). To cover, indeed, the gross purpose, they at once struck off two-thirds of the debt, and thereby reduced measure was necessary to make the one square with the other. For this obviously within its probable amount, it was evident that some decisive income was calculated at the very highest possible rate, and the expenditure by their rain extricate the government from its embarrassments (1). As the put to reduce the most helpless class, the public creditors, and propradick. tenoties. Lenoties assignats and mandates were exhausted, and nothing remained Prench impossible to earry on the affairs of the state. The resources of great change, and the sacrifice of a large class of existing interests, it was to the administration of the finances, they speedily found that, without some ment, established by the Revolution of the 18th Fructidor, began to attend democratic influence and revolutionary convulsions. When the new governand disgraceful national bankruptcy, the natural consequences of undue good faith and stability of its government, the French tasted, in a ruinous ous state of its finances and the united patriotism of its inhabitants, of the While England was thus reaping the fruits, in the comparatively prosper-

·HI

⁽¹⁾ The most larourable view of the public revenue, and which in the end proved to be greatly overcharged, only exhibited an income of 616,000,000 france. But the expenses of the war were

[|] But the expenses of the war were | 283,000,000 | 285,000,000 | 188,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000,000 | 186,000

Deing just about the same desicit which in 1789 was made the pretext to justify the Revolutio quests, obeying thus the moral law of nature, which, in nations as well as proceeded, a motive for still further aggressions and more insatiable con-Countet to all Europe, felt, in the extremites to which they had already being renewed (2) " Thus the French nation, having thrown down the support which it would have a right to expect in the event of the contest serument nithout depriving brance of a part of its resources, and of the under foot by an insolent aristoeracy, cannot long maintain its present gocratical states. Suitzerland, that ancient asylum of tiberty, now trampled ou establishing a just equilibrium between the movarelical and the demoare only nating for an opportunity for a rupture, demonstrates the necessity England oppose in the way of a general pacification, by showing that they on that account, the less active, and the chicanery which the Emperor and e signed, but the halred which the sovereigns have voned against it, is not, against Franco than against the principles of the Recolution, Peace, it is true, European monarchs "The coaltion," they contended, "nas less formed embleation of the obstitute war which was maintained against them by the states, especially in periods of unusual fervour, and forms the true being of the foreign conduces, which is the unhappy characteristic of democratic The external policy of the Directory soon exinced that passion for inbick (1). gined was to be an invincible rampart between them and national bankvolution which they had so strongly supported, and which they foully imamistortune. Such nere the consequences, to the monied interest, of the fle-expelled the Stadtholder, and compelled its rulers to enter into a costly and conjent with haring recolutionized that ancient commonwealth, hines spoe filositat was the first rectum of the flepublican ambition, Jos.

punishment, by the subsequent and intolerant excesses into which it preindividuals, renders the career of guilt the certain instrument of its ann a mission pince their conquest by Pichegru, the Dutch had had ample opnated in France by the 18th Fructidor. inhabitants to a convulsion of the same kind as that which had been termitpeit engagemente with exemplary idelity, they resolved to subject its runous war to support the interests of france, in which they had performed stitution. The brench Directory beheld with secret disquietude this featilus and bringeges of the prosinces, as settled by I rescription and the old conthe Republicans, had never sentured to interfere with the separate rights tecting, that the hattonal tesembly, which had met on the tiet trump to of tarour of the ancient order of things, and so strong and ferreut was this their harbours. A reaction, in consequence, had become very general in ni Buigos spaces ineigenen mousenna mous pue fuego ont most idone Bell substituted in its stead. Their frade was ruined, their nary defeated, their height of pro-perity and glory, with the democratic rule which had been flouse of Orange, under which they had resen to an unexampled trees con bortunity to contrast the ancient and temperate government of the

entrates tle cotatica

of the interest of the remainder in specie, was felt rather as a rebet than a truction of eng-thirds of their capital, when accompanied by the payment depreciation of the paper circulation in which they note paid, that this des-

to the ancient order of things, and could not endure that the old patrician families should, by their influence in the provincial diets, temper in any degree the vigour of their minister from the Hague: supplied his place by tendency, they recalled their minister from the Hague: supplied his place by Delacroix, a man of noted democratic principles, and gave Joubert the command of the armed force. Their instructions were, to accomplish the overthrow of the armed force. Their instructions were, to accomplish the overthrow of the armed force. Their instruction, overturn the aristocracy, and vest the government in a Directory of democratic principles entirely devoted to the interests of France (1).

The Dutch Assembly was engaged at this juncture in the formation of a constitution, all previous attempts of that description having proved miserable failures. The adherents of the old institutions, who still formed a majority of the inhabitants, and embraced all the wealth and almost all the respectability of the United Provinces, had hitherto contrived to baffle the designs of the vehement and indefatigable minority, who, as in all similar contests, the vehement and indefatigable minority, who, as in all similar contests, represented themselves as the only real representatives of the people, and stigmatized their opponents as a mere faction, obstinately opposed to every stigmatized their opponents as a mere faction, obstinately pad passed some sigmatized their opponents. A majority of the Assembly had passed some decrees, which the democratic party strenuously resisted, and forty-three of its members, all of the most violent character, had protested against their adoption. It was to this minority that the French minister addressed himself adoption. It was to this minority that the French minister addressed himself to procure the overthrow of the constitution (2).

the ancient federal union superseded by a republic, one and indivisible; the . By this constitution the privileges of the provinces were entirely abolished; established in France (3). and introducing a new form of government on the model of that already hayonet, they passed decrees, sanctioning all that had been done in the night, deliberations, where, surrounded by troops, and under the dictation of the the remainder of the Assembly, early in the morning, met in the hall of their fruitless; before daybreak those arrested were all in prison; and Daendels, intrusted with the execution of the order. Resistance was national guard called forth; and the French troops, headed by Joubert and sioners of foreign relations. At the same time the barriers were closed; the twenty-two of the leading deputies of the Orange party and the six commisthe protest assembled at the Hotel of Haarlem, and ordered the arrest of for the 22d January. On that night, the forty-three deputies who had signed the plan for its assassination was soon adopted; and its execution was fixed country?" Amidst the fumes of wine, and the riot of intoxication, will plunge a poniard into the constitution, on the altar of his Makente of At a public dinner, Defactors, area a manner of popular coasts, the french a public dinner, Defactors, area a manner of popular coasts, busching a public dinner of his public exclusion, will plunge a poniard into the constitution, on the altar of his recting. At a public dinner, Delacroix, after a number of popular toasts, the ancient federal union superseded by a republic, one and indivisible; the provincial authorities changed into functionaries emanating from the central provincial authorities changed into functionaries emanating from the central government; a Council of Ancients and a Chamber of Deputies established, in imitation of those at Paris: and the executive authority confided to a Directory of five members all completely in the interest of France. The sitting was terminated by an oath of hatred to the Stadtholder, the federal system, and the aristocracy; and ten deputies, who refused to take it, were deprived of their seats on the spot. So completely was the whole done under the terror of the same on the spot. So completely was the whole done under the terror of the army, that some months afterwards, when the means of intimidation of the army, that some months afterwards, when the means of intimidation of admiring, on the sunny margin of the lake of Zurich, on the vine clad hills upparalleled in any other part of the world The traveller was never weary stigmed, and the aspect of the population exhibited a degree of nell being ment, security to persons and property, freedom in life and religion nere as in Berne, essentially aristocratic, but in all, the great objects of govern nere various in some as the Forest Cantons, inguly democratical, in others, becureions configuou of Lench democracy. The constitutions of the cantons confuries anger their influence, save a large proportion of them from the tants, or the admirable prosperity which they had enjoyed for above five they afforded to persons and property, the simple character of its inhabi could the misdom and stability of its institutions, the perfect protection which ambilion of the Parisian enthusiasts. As little, it must be owned with regrel, sacre of its citizens on the 10th August, could not save it from the devouring ment of the Revolution, the indifference which it had evinced to the mas-. it had maintained between all the contending parties since the commence priest confests for above in o centuries the perfect neutrality which The sectusion of that beautiful country its retirement from all poin the whole country, and the Directors soon became as obnozious as they had country, and the Directors soon became as obnozious as that defining the been agreedable to the pupulace. Asternated in this table of the beautiful and beautiful and beautiful and apprehensive beautiful and beautiful an

⁽¹⁾ Th.x. 26, 27. Jom.x. 281. Ann. Res. 1798, (3) Th. x. 27. Jom. z. 281, 282. Ann. Res. 49, 50, 78, 80. (2) Th.x. 26. Jow. x. 128. (2) Th.x. 26. Jow. x. 128.

The unhabitants of Holland soon discovered that, an the pursuit of the change of the connectation power, they had bet all their ancent indertice. The change of the new furctorier, as to severe predictes, and their man couporate bodies of received but their sound become and declaring that none would be received but from receivibages of men, and declaring that none would be received but from installed indertor where it could make a severe predicting that none amount. If the public intended is to the free and their situations flited by persons of the functionaires were changed, and their situations dilied by persons of the functionaires were changed, and their situations dilied by persons of the functionaires were changed, and their situations dilied by persons of the functionaires were changed, and their situations discussionally downwards as the proceeded of a feature of the adverse mention and received but the most arbitrary manner. The most discussional and server where the most arbitrary manner. The individual and server where adverse party were overy where deprived of their right of other adverse party were overy where deprived of their right of solung in the puratures party were overy where deprived of their right of other adverse party were overy where deprived of their right of other adverse party were overy where deprived of their right of other adverse the covery where deprived of their right of their right of the principle.

yere remoted, a number of depaties who had joined in these acts of usurpation gave in their resignation, and professed against the part they had been compelled to take in the transaction (1) of the Leman sea, in the smiling fields of Appenzel, in the remantic valleys of Berne, and the levely recesses of Underwalden—the beautiful cottages, the property of their inhabitants, where industry had accumulated its fruits, and art had spread its elegancies, and virtue had diffused its contentment; and virtue had spread its elegancies, and virtue had diffused its contentment; and virtue had spread its elegancies, and virtue had diffused its contentment; and the trained the savage magnificance of nature, a nearer approach appeared to have been made to the simplicity of the golden age than in any other quarter of the civilized globe (1).

Of all the European governments, that of Switzerland was the one the weight of which was least felt by the people. Economy, justice, and moderation, were the bases of its administration, and the federal union by which the different cantons of which it was composed were held together, seemed to have no other object than to seeme their common independence. Taxes were almost unknown, property was perfectly seeme, and the expenses of government incredibly small (2). The military strength of the state consisted in the militia of the different cantons, which, though formidable, if united and led by chiefs well skilled in the difficult art of mountain warfare, was little qualitied to maintain a protracted struggle with the vast forces which the reighbouring powers had now brought into the field.

and beneficent system of administration (5). features rarely found in unison, but which cannot coexist but under a paternal trated by the well-being of the peasantry and the density of the population,cies; and the practical blessings of their rule were unequivocally demonsexpenses of the state, but accumulate a large treasure for future emergenhad enabled them, with extremely light burdens, not only to meet all the admitted even by its bitterest enemies; the economy of their administration the moderation and justice of the government of the senate of Berne was the sale of their produce, which was justly complained of as oppressive. Yet addition to the absence of political privileges, were galled by a monopoly in of Argovia and Thurgovia to other cantons; while the peasants of Aurich, in to the canton of Berne, the Italian bailiwicks to that of Uri, and some towns parts of their dominion; In this way the Pays de Yand was politically subject sown the seeds of future dissension and disaffection between the different a participation of the privileges which they themselves enjoyed, and thereby tical power, they had refused to admit the conquered provinces to references federacy was, that with the usual jealousy of the possessors of poli-The chief defect in the political constitution of the Helvetic Con-

The treate one part of the population, by the prospect of the extension of political power, against the other; to awaken democratic ambibinisting the offer of fraternal support, and having thus distracted the state by intestine divisions, they soon found it an easy, matter to triumph over both in subjection, and which varied extremely among each other, in the state by which the elective franchiso was diffused through the people, offered a favourable prospect of undermining the patriotism of the inhabitants, and accomable prospect of undermining the patriotism of the inhabitants, and accomable prospect of undermining the patriotism of the inhabitants, and accomplishing the subjection of the whole by the adoption of this insidious system. The treasure of Berne, of which report had magnified the amount, offered an irresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible bait to the cupidity of the french Directory; and whatever arguiteresistible arguiteresistible of the french Directory of the french Directory of the french Directory of the french Directory of the french Dire troops on the frontier to take possession of that part of the territory of Basic attempt to into ... - ~ m ii mitii

beases will have before the treaty of Campb Formio In July, 1797, their envol. opicet of French ambition, it had been resolved on by the Directory The subjugation of Switzerland, however, continued a farourice mined to assert its independence (5). naced

SPECIED

the libe,

Their united efforts occasioned an explosion at Cenera in 1792, and threatened stitution, and the asc adency of French influence in the whole confederacy, was, by all possible means, to bring about the downfall of the existing conand Colonel Meiss at Berne, formed a secret committee, the object of which pirions demagogue, Pfellir, son of one of the chief magistrates of Lucerne, trate of the confederacy Ochs, grand tribune of Basle, a turbulent and amcity, the authority of Berne, at the bead of which was Steiger, the chief magisgreat object of the recolutionists to counterbalance, by the influence of that the rural districts. Zurich was the centre of their intrigues, and it was the . thought were more active, and the means of communication greater than in their influence being concentrated in the great tonus, where the powers of The Suiss democrats formed a considerable party, formidable chiefly from mas, by no military preparations to meet the coming danger (2).

cause it to be respected, but the most unfortunate when accompanied, as it which they could possibly have adopted, if supported by such a force as to however, persisted in a cautious system of neutrality; the visest course. ner, brooded among the inhabitants of the subject cantons. The government, ration, and reviving those feelings of discontent which, in an especial manchorts and address were not without success in allaying the general exaspesent to Berne as ambassador of France to counteract this tendency, and his' cenno than unshaken fidelity to their duty and their paths Barthelemy was " Barua, were received by the Parsian populace on that occusion, for an othercatastrophe of foth August, and the savage ferecity with which the Swiss But the success of their endearours was for many years prevented by the to induce the inhabitants of its territory to shake off the aristocratic joke n ere the especial object of their attacks, and numerous n ere the efforts made publications to the growth of democratic principles. The patricians of nerne

" three centuries nould afford to the fi-, freedom, they were always met by the consideration of the immense relief ments were adduced in favour of respecting the neutrality of that asylum of .

discontented province, and Kapoléon, in his journey from Alilan to Rastadt, of troops, under Ceneral Menard, was moved forward to the frontiers of that pendencies of that Republic. To increase the ferment, a large body ency in the most incompleted on the Palais, the Pays de Vaud, and all the other desubject coneffect which district in the Swiss confederacy to declare its independence, was This iniquitous proceeding, which openly encouraged every subject subjected to another people (1). principle of still more general application. "That no one people should be enjoyed for three hundred years. This decree was professedly hased on the time of profound peace, of a territory to them of great value, which they had Gisalpine Republic, thereby bereaving the ancient allies of France, during a points between them, annexed the whole insurgent territory to the ·1611 October, 4797, a decree which, instead of settling the disputed Oct. 10, Montebello as mediator between the contending parties, pronounced, on 40th Swiss authorities. Kapoleon, chosen during the plenitude of his power at dependence, rose in insurrection, hoisted the tricolor thus, and expelled the The result was, that the inhabitants of the Valteline openly claimed their inhe, early in the summer 1797, sent his aide-de-camp Leclere to their cottages. in order to sound their intentions, and foment the desire of independence, would rapidly imbibe the spirit of revolt against their German superiors; and, and the common language which they spoke, rendered it probable that they lanese territory, where the revolutionary spirit was then furiously raging, point of the wedge into the Helvetic confederacy. Its proximity to the Miecived in the situation of this sequestered valley the means of inserting the ration with a council of its own for three centuries. Rapoleon, however, perthem their enjoyment of it, and they had govorned it with justice and modeconquered by the Grisons from the Dukes of Milan; Francis I guaranteed to from the source of the Adda to its junction with the lake of Como, had been bailiwicks, and containing one hundred and sixty thousand souls, extending prepared the subjugation of the country. This country, consisting of five takat effect throughout Switzerland, and, by rousing the spirit of democracy, conduct in regard to the Valteline, struck a chord which soon vibrated with tiations for so glaring a violation of existing treaties. But Rapoleon, by his unsuccessful, for the Swiss government confined themselves to simple negowhich was subject to the jurisdiction of the eautons; but here too they were of troops, under Ceneral Menard, was moved forward to the frontiers of that discontented province, and Rapoleon, in his journey from Alilan to Rastadt, took care to pass through those districts, and stop in those towns, where the democratic spirit was known to be most violent. At Lausanne he was surrounded by the most ardent of the revolutionary party, and openly proclaimed as the Restorer of their independence. A plan of operations was soon concerted with Ochs and La Harpe, the leaders of revolutionary projects in that country. It was agreed that a republic, one and indivisible, should be erected, as that was considered as more favourable to the interests of France than the present federal union; that the Directory should commence by taking possession of Bienne, L'Esquil, and Aunsterthal, which were dependencies of possession of Bienne, L'esquil, and Aunsterthal, which were dependencies of the interest of France in the present federal union; that the Directory should commence by taking possession of Bienne, L'Esquil, and Aunsterthal, which were dependencies of the interest of the inte

· [662

this, had recourse to the usual engine of revolution; he stirred up, by his secret emissaries, the lower Valaisans to revolt against the upper Valaisans, be being remon they were held in subjection; and encouraged hy the successful result of the revolt of the Valteliue, declared their independence. [Corresp. Conf. line, declared their independence. [Corresp. Conf. June 21, 1797, and July 13, 1797, llard, v. 295, June 21, 1797, and July 13, 1797.

(1) Map. iv. 196, 200, 202. Jon. x. 202, 262, 265, Ann. Reg. 1795, 22. Hard.'v. 302, 307. June zz. 7797, Mapoleon at the same time dispatched an agent to negotiate with the republic of the chains for a communication over the Simplon, through their territory, with the Cisalpine Republic. The Swiss government, however, had influence The Swiss government, however, had influence amongh, by means of Bartheleury, who, an that period, was a member of the Directory, to obtain a negalive on that altempt. The French general, upon (C10). Artillery and stores in arsenal paz as teau W tol1 1 les 2 Contr butto

as tears. no the Bashi

of the part of the 4) "I e to al | lu der exac ed from il e can on of 1.0 = 23

L 1 100 000, The par colets were as follows

ICC X MOF (9) 45 320 600 ftsuce or F 1 110 000

> 1 900 000 000 011 1

000.011 71

000 000 2

000 000 $ 2 100 000

000 000 4 $30E1.

(1 Th x 323 S 0 S 8 S 19 Lac x 710 t (1) That of Greenis Bra e successive or 167 (1) a 800 000 a balancas and lesses of or or 170 (1) a constant a successive of or or 170 (1) a constant a con 5 000 000 fts cs or L 200 000 worth of art cles stlached to their inherities, proud of their heroic struggles in defence of sequestered regions, communicating little with the rest of the world, ardening (all, rejected the new constitution. The inhabitants of these romantic and people of Schwytz, Ur, Underwalden, Clarus, Sargaus, Turgovie, and St. generous spirit animated the shepherds of the small cantons, The and it is the falling a prey to the recolutionary terrour of the times, a more But while the rich and populous part of Suitzerfind was thus fublic (6) bayonet at their threats, formally agreed to a union with the conquering Reneighbourhood, took possession of the town, and the Senate, with the ables upon which General Gerard, who commanded a small corps in the Senate, to report upon the subject. Their report, however, nas untarourdemanded a union with that power, and a commission was appointed by the able opportunity for recomplishing the object. The democratic party loudly desire, and the divisions by which it now was distracted, afforded a favourcultiossing gehappie. This celebrated city had long been an object of their death (5), Cenera at the same time fell a pres to the ambition of the alla disrespectful manner of the new authorntes, was to be punished with power of the state, and by a lan, northy of Tiberius, whoce er spoke eren in were appointed, with the absolute disposal of the executive and military on 12th Ipril The barriers of nature, the divisions formed by basis of that established in France in 1795, and proclaimed at trau A new constitution use speedily framed for the confederacy, formed on the their country (1) indivisible proclaimed twe directors, entirely in the interest of France, tion, language, and descent, were disregarded, and the Republic, one and mountains, lakes, and torrents, the sarieties of character, occupainvaders (5), and lamented in silence the despotic yole they had brought on Suitectiond was desirozed, throw up their employments in the service of the had been inisted by the fumes of democracy, say, that the independence of horrorstruck at these exactions, and all persons of respectable character, who indulgence of their former bovernment (2) The Swiss revolutionists nere severity and enormity of their exactions, a painful contrast to the lenity and m ledgium and italy, following in the rear of the armies, exhibited, by the the expense of their democratic allies, and the scourge of commissaries, as received prodicious gifts out of the plunder (f), the troops nere clothed at Hermites, the object of peculiar veneration, was despoiled, the generals

the Catholic faith. The priests traversed the ranks, with the crucifix in their and the acrimonious war which they, in an especial manner, waged against was manifested by the French armies in every part of the world, Arguments by which toused by docks. They were justly horrorstruck at the total irreligion which The clergy in these valleys had unbounded influence over their them (1)." independence, no other riches but our herds, our first duty is to defend equality; possessing no other goods in the world but our religion and our said they, "for several centuries, under a republic based on liberty and small cantons unanimously rejected the new constitution. "We have lived," and offering to aid them by their arms. Animated by these feelings, the stimulating their inhabitants to resistance, by the recital of their oppressions, escaping from the theatre of French exactions, fled into their secluded valleys, cantons who had invited the enemy into their bosom; and multitudes, steps. Every day they had proofs of the repentance, when too late, of the that irreligion, sacrilege, and infidelity universally marked, the invaders? envoys had terminated only in ruinous exactions and tyrannical rule, and long be maintained. They saw that the insidious promises of the French all their ancient institutions, the independence of their country could not ambition they were wholly disqualified to contend; and that, in the wreck of they would soon fall under the dominion of the cities, with whose wealth and would be destroyed by the multitude who would share their privileges; that that; when once they were merged in the Helvetic Union, their influence deluded their richer and more civilized brethren. They clearly perceived thers, were not to be seduced by the glittering but deceitful offers which had ancient freedom, and inheriting all the danniless intrepidity of their forefamonarchy had sunk to the ground. the field, fearlessly entered the lists with a power beneath which the Austrian the shepherds of a few cantons, who could not bring ten thousand men into mewed, were already pointed out with exulting anticipations of success; and on which the triumphs of Nacfels, Laupen, and Morgarten were to be remated by such feelings, the peasants confidently hoped for victory; the spots in our valley are ready to march to the desence of their country (2)." Ani-France; we are four hundred, and if that is not sufficient, four hundred more moment. "We do not fear," said the shepherds of Uri, "the armies of recollections of William Tell mingled with the newborn enthusiasm of the five centuries before; the tree of liberty recalled the pole of Gesler; all the tricolor has became the object of the same haired as the Austrian standard ammunition for the combatants; all were engaged in the holy cause. The numbers joined the ranks with their husbands, others carried provisions and but to die as martyrs." The women showed the same ardour as at Berne; the faith of your fathers; you are now called on not only to combat as heroes, your churches; you will no longer be the sons of William Tell it you abandon piety itself is at your gates; the enemy marches covered with the spoils of your ancestors. A peril tar more terrible than heresy now assails you; imthousand times more precious than gold or riches,—the freedom and faith of "to be faithful to the cause of God; you have received from Him gifts a independence and religion of their country. "It is for you," they exclaimed, hands, to exhort the peasants to die as martyrs if they could not preserve the lanned till the Cerman nations nere roused to their relief, forgetting that a annulet the precipiees and woods of the Alps, a bendeen war might be main test in which his countrymen were engaged, but he flattered himself that, and long experience made him fully an are of the perilous nature of the conened to extruguesh all the liberties of the civilized norld. His military talents enunts at that Grasping treanny, which, under the name of freedom, threat antagomest of the Irench in the Spanish war, he was filled with the strongest bers who had perished on the Place du Carrousel on the 10th August, an old they merent founders of Nelsevenndependence, the relative of num Stolk

Curp XXVI , metour, or envose.

(1) bolist bad hope for success in a contest in which three millions of Bretons and I endeeds fen ealleys, niese nhole population nas not eighty thousand, could hardly good use of in the mountain nartare to name they nere soon reduced. No nhere the Smiss got possession of a few pieces of cannon, nhich they made upon the former town, which surrendered by capitulation, and, diale attack on Lucerne and Lurich A body of four thousand men marched set of the campaign, and accordingly it was determined to make an immewhen dispersed over a long line, he might gain a decisive success in the out-Reding, too, was in hopes that, by assaining the French troops of the incendiary might destroy in a moment the nort of centuries b land a into their own territories, as the ray ages of the soldiers or the toreth The peasants nere justly apprehensive of the nar being carried

while the other forced them, after a desperate struggle, from Richtenswyt which, after an obstinate battle, drove the peasants back into Rapperswyl, the Reuss at Mellingen He then divided his men into two divisions, one of prisoners, while Ceneral Nouvion, after a blood, conflict, non the passage of one brigade, surprised three thousand peasants at Lug, and made them all their forces for the defence of their own ralleys In effect, Schan enberg, with thoughts of foreign conquest, it was necessary to concentrate all, thoroughly alarmed, were advancing in great force, and that, abandoning all the other from Richtensull but here they found that the French, now the night, and the struggle was renewed next day with doubtful success of the confested Eround. Fresh remioreements came up on both sides during anxions conflict, which lasted the whole day, the peasants remained masters the French nere borne backwards to the summit of the ridge, and after a before they had come to the bottom of the slope. The shock was presidinte, meet them, and running across the plain, encountered their adversaries their force, descending the hills to the attach. They instantly advanced to pendence At daybreak the French appeared, more than double at Morgarten, already immortalized in the wars of Belvetic indes az fany S tence of pe connity, or perish in the attempt. They took post, under fteding, supplied, its fittle army of three thousand men resolved to defend their by French troops, accepted the new constitution But Schnytz was still un-After these di asters, the canton of Zug, which was now overrun mio the delile of husinehi (2)

(2) Jone x 203 356 Lac x 721 272 'en (l) loin z 316 Inc zie 316

that part of Switzerland (1). cantons soon followed their example, and peace was for a time restored to and the French troops to be withdrawn from their frontier. The other small be allowed to enjoy the use of their arms, their religion, and their property, agreed to a convention, by which they were to accept the constitution and brave Reding, who represented the hopelessness of any further contest, and length they yielded to the persuasions of an enlightened ecclesiastic and the thirds of the canton had fallen was at first carried by acclamation; but at brought to yield to inexorable necessity; a resolution not to submit till twomitted to the invaders. Slowly and reluctantly the men of Schwytz were mained to defend the passes; the auxiliaries of Sargans and Clarus had subrapidly marching in their rear upon Schwytz, where none but women re-Uri and Underwalden had been driven into their valleys; a French corps was rendered a longer continuance of the struggle hopeless. The inhabitants of still unsubdued; but they received intelligence during the night which with blood. Darkness put an end to the contest while the mountaineers were a post of defence, every meadow a scene of carnage, every stream was dyed the thickets, were bristling with armed men; every cottage became unable to gain a decisive success over the invaders. The rocks, the woods, on the part of their adversaries; but, in spite of all their efforts, they were superiority of force, and the greater experience and rapidity of movement, The coolness and skill of the Swiss marksmen counterbalanced the immense

An obstinate conflict ensued at the bridge of La Morge, in front of Sion; on their march to Italy, and driven back towards the Upper Valais. rice. Here, however, they were assailed by a column of the Republicans, where they expelled the French garrison, and pursued them as far as St.-Mautains, which guard the sources of the Rhone, descended from Leuk to Sion, the Valais. The brave inhabitants of the rocky, pine-clad moun-Bloods con-thict in the victor The same chequered fortune attended the arms of the Sviss in tains, and the new constitution was proclaimed with opposition, amidst carried by escalade; the peasants despairing of success retired to their moundevoted courage. At length, however, the post was forced, and the town recovered their intellect amidst the animation of the affray, behaved with twice the Republicans were repulsed; even the Cretins, seeming to have deserted and smoking ruins (2).

French commissaries; and a proclamation of the Directory informed the intreasures which were to be carried off; they were instantly broken by the their country, protested against the spoliation, and affixed their seals to the authorities of Switzerland, now alive to the tyranny they had brought on under a powerful guard, to France, never to return. In vain the revolutionary warlike stores, the provident savings of unsubdued generations, sent off, sighed when they beheld the treasures, the accumulation of ages, and the tion of the Directory; and the warmest supporters of the democratic party of the commissaries and inferior authorities, exceeded even the cruel spoliaseduced the patriotism of its urban population. The rapacity and exactions hard taskmasters proved a sad contrast to the illusions of hope which had inhabitants; the requisitions for the pay, clothing, and equipment of these Opposite of comporary breathing time from hostilities followed these bloody the tree french defeates, but it was a period of bitter suffering and humiliation to to the inhale trench defeates, but it was a period of bitter suffering and humiliation to the inhale trench defeates, but it was a period of bitter suffering and humiliation to the inhale tree quarters upon the binaries. Switzerland. Forty thousand men lived at free quarters upon the habitants that they nere a conquered nation, and must submit to the lot of

(1) paysinburg out

An all ance All the public property, stores, and treasures of the cantons nere

the head of affairs, in hew of those who had resigned in disgust, rain, more subservient Directors were placed by the brench authorities at own weakness in having ever lent an ear to their promises. But it was all in nere non the foremost to exclaim against their rapacity, and lament their crats, who had joined the brench party in the commencement of the troubles, of their country dismissed without trial or investigation. The ardent demothose magistrates who showed the slightest regard for the liberties where soon declared prize by the French authorities, the bherty of the prize three introduced, and the spirite of police introduced, and it all the burdens and dangers of nar, nithout either its adrantages or its norso for Snitzerland than an annexation to brance, as they imposed upon and one to Snabia,-conditions nluch, as forming justly observes, were submit to the formation of two military reads through the Alps, one to Italy, Republics, which bound Switzerland to furnish a contingent of troops, and to and an alliance offensive and defensive continued at Dacis beineen the tra fire, the nomen and children threw themselves upon the enemy's baronets, corruge, was obstinately contested, the dying crawled into the hottest of the sand of the bravest troops of France Every hedge, every thicket, every days it enabled three thousand shepherds to keep at bay abore sixteen thouany discipline, yet such is the force of mere native valour, that for several In their despair they observed hitle design, and nere conducted with hardly hoped for success, an honourable death was alone the object of their wishes talley Oppressed by such overnhelming forces, the peasants no longer the lovely lakes of Lungern and Sarnen, at the nestern extremity of the the number crossed the beech-clad ridge of the brung, and descended by embarked at Lucerne, and landed at Stantz, on the eastern side, while the descuce of their country But resistance was hopeless Eight thousand French mined of the men of Schultz and Un flocked, to sell their lives dearly in manmously declared they would rather perish, and thither the most deterfree it with the utmost reluciance, but the shepherds of Underwalden stillution brought matters to a crists in the small cantons. All took lating on all sides, when the imposition of an oath to the new con-Distinct of The discontents arising from these circumstances nere accuminglorics (2) rent the massacre, rushed into the thickest of the fight, and, after slaying the church Two hundred auxiliaries from Schwylz arriving too fate to preseventy peasants, with their curate at their bead, perished in the flames of filul village of Stantz, entirely built of nood, nas soon consumed, of the bouses, the massacre of the inhabitants, marking their steps. The beausteadily, the French columns forced their way through the valler, the liames heroism and devotion achieve against such desperate odde? Slowly, but the grey harred raised their feeble hands against the invaders but what could double their own number of the enemy, perished to the last man. Might at length drew its veil over these scenes of horror; but the fires from the burning villages still threw a lurid light over the cliffs of the Engleberg; and long after the rosy tint of evening had ceased to tinge the glaciers of the Titlis, the glace of the conflagration illuminated the summit of the mountain (4) its north-western. The allies could never venture to violate the neutrality of south-eastern frontier, than either the Rhine or the iron parrier on neutrality of that country was a better defence to France, on its ompostor, as int care great a fault in political wisdom as in moral duty. The In this unprovoked altack upon Switzerland, the Directory comwould be the principal theatre of their strife (2). apparent that, in the next conflict between these gigantic powers, the Alps nished the force with which they occupied, Switzerland; and it was already ceeding campaign. The French, on their part, augmented rather than dimiwhich were destined to be the scene of such sanguinary conflicts in the sucand spreading through the valley of the Rhine, already occupied those posts institutions. Seven thousand Imperialists entered Coire in the end of October; by ancient treaties, succeeded in preserving their independence and ancient brethren in the forest cantons, and invoking the aid of Austria, guaranteed revolutionary earthquake, took counsel from the disaster of their .61 150 Austria, who is trained democracy. The Grisons, who had felt the shocks of the to follow the example of the Swiss in calling in the aid of the These tragical events were little calculated to induce other states glare of the conflagration illuminated the summit of the mountain (4).

the richest famil es were taken in poyment and une six abbeys alour -- Hans vi 160 181. (2) Jem at. 17, 18 Mard, vi 150, 182.

expected to prove insufficient (5). of frontier, for which even its resources, ample as they were, might be from the Adriatic to the Channel, the Republic was forced to defend an extent · feelings of German Switzerland; while, by extending the line of operations the French could never expect to find amidst the foreign language and hostile base for mountain warfare, and a secure asylum in case of disaster, which besides, with its numerous, warlike, and enthusiastic population, afforded a inconsiderable success in the Crisons or the Italian bailiwicks. The Tyrol, paratively little importance, when they were liable to be turned by any while the fortifications of Mantua and the line of the Adige were of coman invasion in the only quarter where her frontier is totally defenceless; valuelees at any time, by a reverse in Switzerland, and France exposed to lost to the Republic; the bulwark of the Rhine was liable to be rendered the Alps themselves became the theatre of conflict, these advantages were all the invading army from all risk of being cut off from its resources. But when in either of these directions, secure from an attack in flank, and preserved Alps, occupied by a neutral power, rendered their conquests, pushed forward Piedmont gave them the same advantage in Italy; while the great mass of the had the best possible base for their operations in Germany; the fortresses of French, possessing the line of the Phine, with its numerous fortifications, Alps. In offensive operations, the advantage was equally apparent. The disposable forces of the state could be turned to the Rhine and the Maritime the arms of France; no armies were required for that frontier, and the whole the Helvetic Confederacy, lest they should throw its warlike population into expected to prove insulations (3).

Werful an effect in cooling the ardour of its partisans in Europe, and opening verful an effect in cooling the ardour of its partisans in Europe, and opening

(1) Lac. xiv. 229, 230. Ann. Heg. 1798, 34, 35. (2) Jon. 21, 20, 22. (3) Arch. Ch. i. 127, 110. Jon. 2. 289.

these payment states that the contribution of a contribution and a contribution and the the contribution and the this contribution and the this contribution and the this contribution and the think the contribution and the payment and the payment

(4) Liv insolution of yeloleon and the D rectory (3) Dain 1 438 429 four x 331 (3) Perl Dep xxxix 1323

strong all we present the shrings all thosaid of exceptions of part from the shrings and the strong free part of the strong stro

The Ucclesiastical States nere the next object of attack. It had long been an object of ambition with the Republican government to revolutionize the Roman people, and plant the tricolor flag in the city of Brutus $\{J_j\}$, fortresses which elsewhere guards the entrance to its soil (5)?" by the unalterable neutrality of its faithful allies, than by the triple line of out defence, or rather which has hilherto considered it as better defended does it expect more complete than which leaves a whole frontier withof old, on their common concerns? What fidelity, and proof of confidence a canton assemble under the rault of heaven to deliberate, like the Spartans hen it visits with the and sword those fields where the whole inhabitants of bread? What government can pretend to favour in the eyes of the Directory, the industry of the inhabitants, the churtish soil will barely yield its children imagined less alluring to their cupidity than that, where, notwithstanding asked over all Europe, " will the Revolution stop? What country could be of recolutionary brance, if indeed it ever had worn it (2)," " here," it was terest as a political party, confessed that " the mash had fallen from the face tion longer than was consistent either with their own character or their in-The Whig leaders of England, who had palliated the atrocities of the Revoluatrocal, of the my asion called forth the wishes of freedom on the other side. nore an abened in farour of a gallant and suffering people, and the naure the beautiful recesses of the democratic cantons, the sympatines of Europe tution on the mountaineers of the Alps, and desolated with fire and sword the loud declaimers in favour of popular rights forced an obnoxious constiits rulers commenced an unprovoked attack on the Sniss confederacy, when leagued together for its destruction. But when, in a moment of general peace, defending its own liberties, and that the whole monarchies of Europe were notion c cuted by Centinals the eyes of the intelligent and respectable classes in every other and fortune at length presented them with a favourable opportunity to accomplish the design.

public distress. soon fell to an inconsiderable value, and augmented rather than relieved the issuing a paper circulation; but that, in a country destitute of credit (1), were still unabated. In despair, they had recourse to the fatal expedient of a word, all their valuable effects; but the exactions of the republican agents had sold their gold, their silver, their jewels, their horses, their carriages, in demands of the French army, the principal Roman families, like the Pope, the prospect of success. To enable the government to meet the enormous all the principal towns of the ecclesiastical states was daily increasing with treaty of Tolentino; while the activity and zeal of the revolutionary clubs in neal treasury was exhausted by the immense payments stipulated by the tute of the means of resisting so many seen and unseen enemies. The ponticinity, of republican governments in the north of Italy, he was almost destito all the contagion arising from the complete establishment, and close vithe heavings of the democratic spirit within his own dominions, and exposed Campo Formio entirely at the merey of the French Republic; threatened by Annal on The situation of the Pope had become, since the French conquests state, in Italy, in the highest degree precarious. Cut off, by the Cisalpine state, state form any support from Austria; left by the treaty of of the fope, republic, from any support from Austria; left by the treaty of

Joseph Bonaparte, brother to Napoléon, had been appointed ambassador at the court of Rome; but as his character was deemed too honourable for political intrigue, Cenerals Duphot and Sherlock were sent along with him; the former of whom had been so successful in effecting the overthrow of the camer of whom had been so successful in effecting the overthrow of the came the centre of the revolutionary action, and those numerous ardent characters with which the Italian cities abound, flocked there as to a common characters with which the Italian cities abound, flocked there as to a common expected (2). In this extremity, Pius VI, who was above eighty years of age, and sinking into the grave, called to his counsels the Austrian General Proancing into the grave, called to his counsels the Austrian General Provera, already distinguished in the Italian campaigns; but the Directory soon vera, already distinguished in the Italian campaigns; but the Directory soon compelled the humiliated Pontiff to dismiss that intrepid counsellor (5). As by accelerating matters, would only hasten a discolution certain and inevitable. [Corresp. Conf. iii. 515, 516.]

515,516.]

(1) Hatch v. 175, 176. Bot. ii. 443.

(2) It would appear, however, that the French ambassador was by no means astisfied with the first efforts of the floman patriots. "They have manificated," said Joseph Bonaparte to Napoleon," all the disposition to overturn the government, but none of the resolution. If they have thought and felt like Brutus and the great men of antiquity, they know yoken, the women, and acted the children. The government has caused them all to be arrested."—Verment for Name, soil Aspoleon to his brother to the Court of Bone, "said Aspoleon to his brother to the Court of Bone," said Aspoleon to his brother to the Court of Bone, is and declaration of ware. It is not immediately sent away from Rome, the Rovera public will regard it as a declaration of ware. It was the importance to the temoval of the comparing the flowant toops. You four hours he deputs from the Roman toops. You four hours he deputs from the them wild in ward of the commander from the house the compand of the flowan troops, but that within twenty-four hours he deputs from the strain a high fone: it is only by evincing the greatest firmness, and analing use of the most energetic expressions, and analing use of the most energetic expressions.

it will soon crumble to the dust. The revolutionists, so many previous losses, has totally exhausted this old cureass. We are making it expire by a slow free second cureass. too many persons are here dependent upon the ex-penditure of the great. The payment of 30,000 000, stipulated by the treaty of Tolentino, at the close of itself, as I have repeatedly predicted to you. But it is not at Rome that the explosion will take place; Papal states; the government will fall to pieces of your feet Rome and the Papal government." [Ibid. iii. 246, 219.] On 5th August, 1797, he again wrote for Mapoleon i. and its height in the Family of the Mapoleon i. and its height or research. advantage of these circumstances, to prostrate at it is in vain to expect the destitute to pay. I take in view that the people here are exhausted, and that the payments of the contributions. You will keep Milan all the diamonds and jeuels I can collect; I send there also ubatever is made the subject of dispute in or voned mort guitzogenert bus Buitzollos ni beigue suddenly pacific; I think such a system is both for your interest and that of the Directory." [Corresp. Conf. iii, 274, 275.] On the 25th May, 1797, the same ambassador wrote to Napoleou:—" I am occupante all any of the state ambassador wrote to Napoleou. now that it is prostrated at our feet, I am become tope, as long as the tapal gor ernment resisted; but wrong. I always supported a mortal war against the as it would sometimes turn out that we are in the his recovery then seemed hopeless, the mstructions of government to their appreciacly free to delay the proclamation of a republic till this death, when the vacant chair of St.-Pieter might be overturned with titlle difficulty, but such was the activity of the revolutionary agents, that the train was ready to take fire before that event look places, and the ears of the formans were assemted by increasint abuse of the coclearatical government, and vehement declamations in favour of republican freedom (4).

The resolution to certural the Papi decrement, jife all the other ambilitions projects of the fluctiory, received a very great impulse from the recertaint of Jacobin influence at Paris, by the results of the revolution of Jabit Fruction's One of the first measures of the new government was to dispatch an order to Jacoph Bonaparte at Bone, to promote, by all the means the griant of the care that at the Pope's death no successor fourth be cleeked to the claim of Js. Pieter (2) Aapolicon's language to the Roman point! Became the claim of Js. Pieter (2) Aapolicon's language to the Roman point! Became thought to be protected to the pape of that three thousand additional has brother Joseph to intendie to the Pope that three thousand additional business and that the protect was not an according to the continuous protection of the paper of the forthwith be troops had been forwarded to Ansona, that if Provera was not the revolutionity recognized, it would be the esercited, represent sould forthwith be exercised on the cardinals, and that, if the Casalpine republic was not instantly recognized, it would be the signal for immediate hostilities (5). At reaux, the Frendent of the Unrectory, wrote to Supplied - Yie great of the Durectory cored ally approve of the natical successor from Four to your Frendent of prevent a successor from Four to the Frendent of the Frendent o

And Angeles and An

to many move orest break out at fine, so that if see the first and proposed to the first and the first see that the first see the first see that the first see that the first see that t

Talleyrand, on 10th October, move to longer, or control to the 1st i interes more the party of the control to t buried in the womb of futurity, it is not given to me to penetrate its mysreplied in ambiguous terms, "The fate of nations, as of individuals, being French ambassador to invite him to support the insurrection, to which he the insurgents, and deputations of the citizens openly waited upon the of the city; immense collections of tricolor cockades were made to distinguish. with the government. Seditions meetings were constantly held in every part Republicans in Italy. After this great addition, measures were no longer kept denly vomited forth upon the capital several hundreds of the most heated Papal government to liberate all persons confined for political offences, sudand Senigaglia; while at Rome itself, Joseph Bonaparte, by compelling the milar revolutionary movements took place at Corneto, Civita Vecchia, Pesaro, See, the democratic party openly proclaimed "the Anconite republic." Siwithstanding its stipulated restoration by the treaty of Tolentino to the Holy fortress; while at Ancona, which was still garrisoned by French troops, not-St.-Leon, in the Papal duchy of Urbino, and made themselves masters of that the same time, ten thousand troops of the Cisalpine republic advanced to lowed to appease the tumult, narrowly escaped the same fale. A violent ing the patrol of the Papal troops; and the ambassador himself, who had folhe was immediately killed by a discharge ordered by the sergeant commandwho were now contending with the dragoons in the court-yard of the palace; self at the head of one hundred and fifty armed Roman democrats, troops, drew his sword, rushed down the staircase, and put him-Duphot, however, indignant at being restrained by the pontifical insurgents, that their orders were to allow no one to leave its precincts. from the palace of the French ambassador; and they repeatedly warned the nisters sent a regiment of dragoons to prevent any sortie of the Revolutionists the governments of Venice and Genea had rapidly followed. The papal miposition; the danger, was extreme; from similar beginnings the overthrow of surgents displayed the tricolor cockade, and evinced the most menacing disthe French to enable them to plant the tricolor flag on the Capitol. The inexclaimed—" Vive la République Romaine," and loudly invoked the aid of tious cries, and moved to the palace of the French ambassador, where they sion. On the 27th December, 4798, an immense crowd assembled, with sedi-In this temper of men's minds, a spark was sufficient to occasion an explo-"(1) sorror his suite retired to Florence (2).

War is in this catastrophe, however obviously occasioned by the revoluce consequence tionary schemes which were in agitation at the residence of the deliber.

French ambassador, having taken place within the precincts of his palace, was unhappily a violation of the law of nations, and gave the Directory too fair a ground to demand satisfaction. But they instantly resolved to make it the pretext for the immediate occupation of Rome and countermanded, and Berthier, the commander-in-chief, received orders to advance rapidly into the Ecclesiastical States. Meanwhile, the democratic pirit burst forth more violently than ever at Ancona and the democratic spirit burst forth more violently than ever at Ancona and the democratic towns; and the Papal authority was soon lost in all the provinces on the towns; and the Papal authority was soon lost in all the provinces on the scussion several persons were killed and wounded on both sides; and, after remaining several hours in the greatest alarm, Joseph Bonaparte with

⁽¹⁾ Hard. v. 196, 206. (2) Hard. v. 207, Jon. x. 333, 334. Lac, xiv. 140, 147. (2) Joseph Bomparte's Report. Hard. v. 207, Jon. x. 333, 334.

Berthler Lodi (1). spiritual warfare little calculated to arrest the conquerors of Arcola and could only oppose the fasts and prayers of an aged conclave-neapons of eastern slope of the Apennines. To these accumulated disasters, the Pontiff lution in that turbulent district, and secured the fortress, he crossed the sand reteran troops, entered Ancona, Haring completed the work of revoat Tolentino, while the commander-in-chief, at the head of eighteen thoumun to cover the Casalpine republic, a reserve was established orders of the Directory. Six thousand Poles nere stationed at Rieqasucce to Bertluer, without an instant's delay, carried into execution the expelled, derthier kept his troops for five days encamped without the walls. easile of St.-Angelo, from which the feeble guards of the Pope were soon efforts of the inhabitants Contenting lumself, therefore, with occupying the Directory to make it appear that their aid was invoked by the spontaneous cutrance of the French troops; but it was part of the policy of the Rome, almost defenceless, would have offered no obstacle to the (z) nonvalent an rid air granden in arite shut himself up in the Vatican, and spent night and day at the foot of the I chruary before the Elernal City. The Pope, in the utmost consternation, Apendines, and, adrancing by Foligno and Narni, appeared on the 10th of the inhabitants, the tricolor flag was displayed from the summit of the on the indestructible monuments of Roman Grandeur, and, amidst the shouts passed the gates of Aurehan, dehied through the Piazza del Popolo, gazed troops nere invited to enter, the conquerors of Italy, with a haughty air, tumultuously demanded the overthrow of the Papal authority, the French of fourteen hundred years, again floated in the winds (5). The multitude the spirit, of freedom, and the venerable ensigns, S P Q II, after the lapse foundations of the Capitol were made again to resound with the cries, if not a noisy crowd assembled in the Campo Vaccino, the ancient Forum; the old At length the revolutionists having completed their preparations, their inherties, the agents of the Directory were preparing for them can like the selves to a pardonable inforteation upon the fancied recovery of But while part of the Roman populace were surrendering themtan south Capitol

The subsequent treatment of this venerable man was as disgrace--imos risall' disregarded from a triumphant pontill (1). sought that benediction from a captive which they would, perhaps, have sels of the faithful; multitudes fell on their knees wherever he passed, and From his retreat in the convent of the Chartreuse, he yet guided the counthe venerable old man still retained the supreme authority in the church. the hardships of his exile. But though a captive in the hands of his enemies, Tuscany, where the generous hospitality of the Grand Duke strove to soften amidst the brutal jests and sacrilegious songs of the French dragoons, into and seized, and the aged pontist conducted, with only a few domesties, from his fingers, the whole effects in the Vatican and Quirinal inventoried palace, his repositories all ransacked and plundered, the rings even torn to dispossess him of his authority; he was dragged from the altar in his tered alike from the violence and impiety of this." Force was soon employed this life. I stand on the threshold of another world; there I shall be shelregion where it is placed, it fears neither the events nor the sufferings of you may be masters of my body, you are not so of my soul. Free in the may employ force-you have the power to do so; but know that though supreme Pontiff, I am resolved to die in the exercise of all my powers. You firmness of a martyr, "I am prepared for every species of disgrace. to dispossess himself of all his temporal authority. He replied, with the Tuscany; his Swiss gnard relieved by a French one, and he himself ordered soldiers ever since the entry of the Republicans, was directed to retire into the sad realities of slavery. The Pope, who had been guarded by five hundred his eyes (2), the words of Scripture: " Verily, I say unto you, I have not seen ni sing, with the benediction; and he frequently repeated, with tears in which he passed. Multitudes from Gap, Vizelle, and Grenoble, flocked to the devotion and reverence of the people in the provinces of France through even in this disconsolate state, he derived the highest satisfaction from the of the Faithful was allowed to expire, attended only by his confessor. Yet nions; all his old attendants were compelled to leave him, and the Father cate. The cruelty of the Directory increased as he approached their domiin the eighty-second year of his age, and the twenty-fourth of his pontifi-Aus. 29, 1799 reached Valence, where, after an illness of ten days, he expired the night, the Apennines and the Alps in a rigorous season, he at length French altered his destination, and foreing him to traverse, often during persecution of his enemies. Apprehensive of losing their prisoner, the the generous hope of rescuing the father of an opposite church from the and the English cruisers in the Mediterranean redoubled their vigilance, in in March 1799, with the design of transferring him to Cagliari in Sardinia; the continent of Italy, he was removed by their orders to Leghorn, his virtues and sufferings he might have too much influence on unced sevent-ful to the Republican government as it was honourable to his youands the ist piety and constancy as the head of the church. Fearful that from semoned in piety and constancy as the head of the church.

commenced the regular and systematic pillage of the city. Not and abomiand abomiand abomiand surface of the bitter fruits of Republican of Rome by fraternization. Immediately after the entry of the french troops, of Rome by fraternization. But long before the Pope had sunk under the persecution of his such faith, no, not in Israel."

(2) Hard, v. 248, 253. Lac. xiv. 157, 159. Bot. ii. 464. Preces, i. 180, 194. (1) Bot. ii. 463. Lac. xiv. 152, 153. Hard. v. 213, 244. Pacca, i. 172, 171.

name (1) odious from the sordid and infamous erimes which were committed in its the prey of republican cupidity and the very name of freedom soon became Every thing of ralue that the treaty of Tolentino had left in Borne, became Doria palaces, were rescued from destruction only by enormous ransoms line underwent the same fale. Others, as those of the Chigi, Borghese and of the Cardinal Braschi and the Cardinal Jork, the last relie of the Stuart qiq tue bajaces of the Roman nobility escape der astation. The noble galleries furniture, jenels and even the private clothes of the Pope were sold hor directions of the infamous commissary Haller, the domestic library, museum, hausted by the enormous exactions it had previously undergone provisions, and three thousand horses, was imposed on a city already exral desolation I contribution of four millions in money, two millions in of Raphael and Michael Angelo remained in solitary beauty amidst the gene adorned The Valican was stripped to its naked walls, the immortal frescoes parmy, in order to collect from the flames the gold with which they were they possessed. The whole sacerdotal habits of the Pope and cardinals were in the environs of Rome, were plundered of every article of ralue which on the margin of the Alban lake, of Terracina, the Villa Alban, and others Monte Carallo, and the chief nobility of Rome but those of Castel Candolfo, Coths or landals had effected hot only the palaces of the lattean, and the out kurope, nere then seattered abroad. The spoliation exceeded all that the the great norks of art n bich have, since that time, been collected throughtrous each which followed the death of the Constable Bourbon. Almost all much less, but the spoil collected incomparably greater, than at the disashre and the rapacious hands of the Spanish soldiers. The bloodshed was stripped the Eternal City of those treasures which had survived the Cothic every quarter within its walls, seized the most valuable works of art, and pursuit of plunder, and merciless in the means of exacing it, ransacked the nobility, nere laid naste. The agents of the Directory, insatiable in the only the churches and the convents, but the palaces of the cardinals and of co.e. a. a. Over the exactions of the French conflued to the plunder of the seriosical and sent to the exactions of the French controlled and sent to the controlled to the controlled in minor of the army steel alter that exception or the agents about the agents of the agent of the agent

.(2) omini

Italy, had already fixed all their days' march to Lyons and the banks of the troops in Mantua raised the standard of revolt, and, resolving to abandon the direction of the army to General Dallemagne. At the same time the he was compelled to abandon the command, and retire to Ancona, leaving having shortly after been held(1), which his soldiers refused to disperse, and another meeting, at which still more menacing language was used, excepting three thousand, to leave the capital. But they refused to obey; that Massena, who had assumed the command, ordered all the troops, of their large arrears. The discontents soon wore so alarming an aspect, had made such a use of their valour, and insisted for immediate payment they would no longer be the instruments of the ignominious wretches who tation of the extertions which had been practised in Rome, protested that dress was agreed to by General Berthier, in which they declared their detesthe rank of captain downwards, was held in the Pantheon, at which an ad-On the 24th February a general meeting of all the officers, from ayound Rome broke out into open and unmeasured terms of vituperation. corps stationed in the Cisalpine republic, the officers and soldiers in and of the city, and comparing their penury with the luxurious condition of the to that of the civil agents, who were daily becoming richer from the spoils sacks empty. Indignant at the painful contrast which their condition offered been without pay, their clothes were worn out, their feet bare, their knapdiers were suffering the greatest privations. For several months they had verethes who have perpetrated them. We insist that the effects seized from various individuals, belonging to states with whom we are still at peace, per restored; and, independent of one pay, we presist in demanding justice upon the official and elecated monsters, plunged night and day in tuxury and debauchery, who have committed the robberies and spodeauchery, who have committed the robberies and spodeauchery.

The Roman populace, encouraged by these dissensions among populace, the yoke, and recover their independence, But they soon found suppression. the yoke, and recover their independence, But they soon found

resp. Confid. iv. 517, 525. In the midst of so much revolutionary profligacy and corruption, it is pleasing to have to record traits so honourable to the French army.—See. Barkcoux D'Illeeres' Meport, 19th Feb. 1798; Cop. should have gone to the payment of their arrears." rities who had "eindezzled all the funds which their condemnation of the officers and civil authonation. We acts of pillage followed the raising the standard of revolt, though the shops where it broke out were all open and unguarded. The soldiers were qually, as their brethren at Rome, loud in the case equally, as their professers and eight passed, as it in a state of the most perfect subordibut the sentincle saluted the officers when they exhortations of their officers to return to their duty, battalions answered by unanimous refusals all the Not a single officer was insulted or maltreated; the their dayonets from their guns to prevent his boing, their dayonets trong sirid which ensued for in the strife same reason, to resist the mutincers, they unscrewed duty." The chiel of the fourteenth wishing, for the vor recenge our comrade; you are only doing your fellow soldiers immediately exclaimed, " We will he was intrusted, killed one of the grenadiers, His of the twelth demi-brigade, when endeavouring, sword in band, to defend the standard with which Montan, bighly characteristic of the composition of the French army in Italy at this period. The chief A singular occurrence took place at the revolt in of Rome and the Erelesiastical States; we swear that disarow in the sight of Heaven, in whose temple we are assembled, the crimes committed in the city for want of pay, dany millions are in the public officers of the army, the expressions are still more strong :--- 'The soldiers are in the utmost misery The Venetian territory, and above all Padua, is a district teeming with proofs of his immorality." [Hard, v. 326.] In an address to Berthier from the wherever he has been invested with the command. arrival of General Massem, The soldiers have not forgot the committed The third cause of the general discontent is the naked condition of the general body of the army. want of every thing. The excessive luxury of the officers of the staff, affords a painful contrast to the are involved; destitute of pay for five months; in thousand proofs of these assertions. The second cyes of the whole universe. We could furnish a auf in notion dang ant no obergeb lange Burad can find, without giving any receipts. This con-duct, if it remains unpunished, is calculated to and horses; in a word, every acticle of value they Rome, give themselves out for persons authorized to receive contributions, earry off all the gold, Jewels, of our honour. These men enter the chief houses of horde of cobbers, who have insimined themselves into the confidence of the nation, should deprive us a that tryger et discontent is regret that a at this great meeting in the Pautheon beare:-(2) The remonstrance framed by the French army (1) St.-Cyr, Hist. Mil. i. 35, 36. Ann. Reg. 1798, 60, 61. Jon. x. 338. Bot. ii. 470, 171. Hard. v.

we will no longer be the instruments of the was paid to the liberties or wishes of the people (1). dictation of the French ambassador, in the formation of which no attention Rapoleon, was immediately annulled, and a new one established under the land, by a military despotism. The democratic constitution, established by Directory changed, and the government prostrated, as in France and Holsenators opposed to the Prench interest expelled; several members of the cember, the legislative body was surrounded with foreign bayonets; the Dec. 6, 1798. Was openly had to military force. On the morning of the 6th Derent. The discontents went on continually increasing, and at length recourse sively sent in his stead; but all their efforts proved ineffectual to stem the torpower, occasioned the utmost discontent in the Cisalpine repub-These violent changes, introduced by the mere force of military potic power and so much unconcern, you have effected in the Cisalpine declamations of impudent sophists. These changes which, with your desentirely in words and speeches; in the howling of a frantic tribune, and the not made for you, nor you for it; finally, that the liberty of France consists. freedom, is your idol; that that fountain of every thing noble or generous is reform were concealed new, and still more grievous, chains; that gold, not Detter enabled to plunder and oppress them; that under every project of never promised liberty to the Italians but in order that you might be the to those who have never trusted in your promises! They will say, that you having established in Italy! What vast materials for eloquence do you afford to us from France. This is the liberty, the prosperity, which you boast of said, " is the faith, the fraternity, and the friendship which you have brought cool the ardour of the Italian Revolutionists. "This, then," it was lie; and contributed more than any thing that had yet occurred, to all his continental dominions. rewarding him for his faithful adherence to their cause by the forfeiture of They soon found an excuse for subjecting him shally to their power, and king, who had devoted his last soldier and his last gun to their service (5). by intestine divisions, would be a more solid support to their power than a spoliation. The Directory persisted in believing that a rickety republic, torn session of his fortresses had given to their arms, were unable to save him from which he had discharged his engagements, the firm support which the posthis monarch had concluded with their victorious general, the fidelily with acts of humiliation from his merciless allies. The early peace which King of Sar- the French Republic, the King of Sardinia was undergoing the last While Lombardy was thus writhing under the withering grasp of ".(2) oilduqər governments, will assuredly prove the forerunner of the fall of your own

of Italy to France by the fatal cession of the Piedmontese fortresses (4), his After the unworthy descendant of Emmanuel Victor had opened the gates

.86 ,ii founded detectation of the Republic, and prefer their former submission to a sovereign."—Borre, constitutions given to them one day, only to be taken away the next, will finally conceive a well-

MARD, VII. 72. which she owes to the Prince of Piedmont."throne, ' Mever will France forget the obligations ferred by Piedmont on France, was fully admitted by the Directory. "Rever," said they, on congratulating Charles-Emmanuel on his accession to the charing Charles-Emmanuel on the chiracture. -nos sudi noitegildo oli io obutingani ont (4) (3) Jom. x. 365.

(1) Not. iii, 45, 58. Lac. xiv. 172. Th. x. 175, 177. Jonn. x. 364, 365. (2) Bot. ii. 53. Th. x. 177, 178. Lucien Bonaparte did not hesitate, at Milan, to Lucien Bonaparte did not hesitate, at Milan, to right of proposing laws, are worthy of eternal condemnation. Rations, disgusted at last with the vain and empty name of liberty which france is fer upon the Directory, especially the exclusive salpine republic, tending as they do to abridge popular freedom by the excessive power they congive yent to the same sentiments. " Nothing," said he, " can excuse the bad faith which has characterised these transactions. The innovations in the Ci-continually resounding in their ears, and with the Mines arms (4)

The surrender of this impregnable fortress put the lang of Sardi
The surrender of this impregnable fortress put the lang of Sardi
The surrender of the mercy of the French troops. He was no longer parameted the semblance of even of regal authority, French guards attended from all occasions, and, under the semblance of respect, kept lim a state from all occasions, and, under the surplance of respect, kept lim a state from a silencial produce, wrote or of the respect to soverigns, ing Fredmont now a French produce, wrote or of the trespect to soverigns, and from the surrender of the french subsessed or wis now the real sovereign. The republican generals improved the time to reduce the the real sovereign.

primer, state extenders of the treatment vegets with a treatment vegets with a treatment of the constant and the constant and aurgents and Conocse, and defeated them in two engagements, with the first overthrow mes as it band in the first of the control of the first of the withstanding this, they came up with the united forces of the inthi second trontier, lest they should stolate the neutrality of the albed republic. Notattack the rebels in Carrosio, the Trench ambassador forbad them to pass the of Turin. When the troops of Predmont approached the Ligurian territory to laying down their arms and above all, the immediate surrender of the citadel continued to meist for a complete pardon of these rebels, on condition of their game to 1 33 Cente to the utmost of their power, while the French ambassador proclamation, in which they declared their resolution to support the msurdistrict of Carrosio could be reached. This nas soon followed by a menacing that part of their territories which required to be passed before the insulated happic resolutely refused any passage for the Predmontese troops through estadel of Turin in the hands of a French garrison, while the Ligurian restrongly urged the necessity, as a measure of security, of his placing the the meurgenie, but great in opposing any resistance to their wishes, and of revolutionists, that there was no danger in conceding all the demands of brench ambassador, endear oured to persuade the hing, in the usual language at mulday, with drums beging and the tricolor day hing Cinguene, the supported by two thousand troops of the Ligurian republic, who left Genoa assembled to the number of six thousand in the neighbourhood of Carrosio, off the mask. The meurgents of the valleys of the Tanato and the Bormida daily became more menacing to the regal government. At length they threw revolutionary clubs, openly patronised by the French ambassador and agents, contributions for the use of his insatiable albes, while the language of the the emigrants from his dominions, and oppress his subjects by enormous

fultously t

bit continues were traversed in every direction by French columns, of unhappy monarch to despair. They loaded all his ministers, civil and military, with accusations, and insisted on their dismissal from his court and eapital; forced him to abandon all proceedings against the insurgents of every description; new-modelled the government according to their republican ideas, and compelled him to deliver up all the places he had taken from the Genoese republic (1).

He is at length his complete dethronement was effected. He was charged and integrate at length his complete dethronement was effected. He was charged so ableace, at length his complete dethronement was effected. He was charged said tength having, in his secret correspondence with Vienna, allowed a wish to escape him, that he might soon be delivered from his imperious allies; and only made his peace with the Directory by the immediate payment of the Neapolitans, he was ordered to furnish the stipulated contingent of eight thousand men; and this was agreed to. The surrender of all the royal arsebol was next demanded; and during the discussion of that demand, the Brench, under Joudert, treacherously commenced hostilities (2). Movarra, so resist were driven into Turin, where the King, having drained the cup of misery to the dregs, was compelled to resign all his continental dominions, which were immediately taken possession of by the French authorities. A fugitive from his capital, the ill-fated monarch left his palace by torch-light during the night, and owed his safe retreat to the island of Sardinia to the during the night, and owed his safe retreat to the island of Sardinia to the generous efforts of Talleyrand, then ambassador at Turin, who protected him generous efforts of Talleyrand, then ambassador at Turin, who protected him from the dangers which threatened his life. A provisional government was immediately established in Turin, composed of twenty-five of the most violent of the democratic party; while Grouchy seized hold of the treasury, arsenals, and fortresses of the kingdom, and published a proclamation, denoun-of which some copies had been printed. the King disavow the proclamation already quoted, the same officer compelled him to sign the whole articles which I had required."—See Harr, vii. 118, 120. See also the Resignation, correctly given in Harry vii. 122, et seq. The French general made the Electh general made the Electh general made the Electh general made the Electh and Electher and Electher See and Electron See order; and after eight hours of further aftereation, bled in Turin for a mouth past, should be dis-missed; in presence of Clausch, the King signed the all the Piedmontese troops which had been assemtheir point. The conditions I exacted were agreed to. I insisted, as an indispensable preliminary, that morning; my hidden emissaries there had carried impossible, and that unqualified submission alone remained. The Council of State had sat all the columns which had not yet come up; and informed him that the hour of vengeance had arrived, that Turin was surrounded on all sides, that escape was envoy returned to me; I announced the arrival of voluntary. I confined myself to threatening the enroy, and sent him out of the citadel. Meanwhile, to act so that his resignation might appear to be the more necessary, as nor nos not yet declored against the King of Sardinia, and it was necessary event could I be disavowed, Circumspection was King, and that no writing reached me, so that in no was, that these propositions all emanated from the sons were also corrupted; but the great difficulty ne was a man to be gained, and was so; other per-At this crisis, an envoy came to me from the King; which I had prepared were to be put in motion. moment had now arrived, when all the springs neral in his secret report to the Directory,-". The nbou the King, are thus detailed by the same ge-faithfully performed all his engagements to France, it his duty to declare thus publicly, that he has Novarra, Alexandria, Chivasso, and Suza. His Majesty, profoundly afflicted at these events, feels Turin violently seized possession of the towns of commander of the French Farrison in the citadel of But in the midst of these measures, the negotiate concerning other demands, which vere contingent stipulated by the treaty. At the same demanded, he gave orders for the furnishing of the citadel of Turin; and the very day on which it was gone so far as to agree to place in their hands the His mojesty has even exbaust the royal treasury. and which were so hurdensume as entirely to French Republic, both in contributions, clothing, and supplies for the uring of Italy, though greatly exceeding the engagements which it had contracted, "The Piedmontese government, in the anxious wish of sparing its subjects the misfortunes which threatened it, has acceded to all the demands of the tory instantly and carefully suppressed. It bore :this crisis prepared a manifesto, which the Direc-(2) Recovering, in the last extremity, a portion of the courage which, if earlier exerted, might have everted their late, the Piedmontese cabinet at (1) yun. Reg. 1798, 122. Bot. iii. 112, 115. Lac, own palace in case of refusal. [Hard, vii. 117.]

The unworthy intrigues, falsehoods, and menaces by which the resignation of the throne was forced and given no provocation whatever to the disastrons event, which threaten bis kingdom." Grouchy, the French general, forced the King to suppress this proclamation, threatening to bombard him in his

Neg 1798, 125, and 16 ix mot (5) 1207 1007 pri ing 827,7927 (2) Jun x: 35, 31 Lac. 217 16s 16s 100 (2) (1) Hard au 126, 128 Jom zu 59, Le. 21r cratic party n do n cre conduct for political offences, and though this demand nervees by requiring the immediate increation of all those of the demo-grace of the despolitan army since the fall of the Roman empire (3) in the descendants of the Samutes, but n bich has invariably been the abpecially in the infantry, were destitute of courage, a singular circumstance nas in the most deplorable state To cronn the nhole, the common mee, we and the discipline, afternately carried on on the German and Spanish statum, heers, appointed by court intrigue, had lost all the confidence of the soldiers, These troops, such as they were, appeared deficient in military spirit, die of of nated one-third nere required to garrison the fortresses on the trooper and the effects e forces of the monarchy never exceeded sixly thousand men nere experienced in the lee ling and equipping so large a body of 1000fg. and tiperal donations from the nobility and elergy, meanmountable difficulted cattied into full execution; notwithstanding the imposition of heary taxes, and the milita to be quadrupled. But these energetic measures nere neith were ordered to be added to the army, to earry it to the war establishment, to, in inc commencement of the campaign of 1796, Forty thousand men of its forces, the Acopolitan monrechy as 1 to there be Considered merely with reference to the number and equipment

obstous from their occupation of the Gressie, for the purpose of concerting

. . . . wing to me mether encroachments of France na-

- - our tedt folde bei in te frontiet, in the belief their or - attest me conquerors of Arcola and Mrs oh (2).

measures for their common defense 11 - f.

The brench commenced their recodinguisty measures in hapits

- oo and nate half their goods con-er were much they hoped to թու՝ ու -][3 H E

formen

pouditers around ...

Cacana do Anoxem

OTHER PROPERTY AND

* toldebrozenu the off atom Amspul and It while !!

heand (1).

diate turgeion was infemiel 71 ..

CHAP, XXVI, INSTORY OF RUROPE.

their termidable position (1) forces, and began to meditate a new design to dislodge his antagonists from stellana, and at length Mack, unding both his wings defeated, nithdrew his bridge of Rome, thrown over the chasm on the southern side of Civita Canee in the centre, Marshal Bourcard in vain endeavoured to force the of two thousand prisoners, all its baggage, and filteen pieces of artiflery. sanced guard of Macdonald near Acps, and was speedily routed, with the loss artillery. The other, intended to turn it on the right, encountered the adthousand of the Polish legion, and totally defeated, with the loss of all its at the bridge of Borghetto over the Liber, by Kniazwitz, at the head of three Cheratier Sare, destined to turn Civita Castellana on the left, was attacked, they he brought to face the enemy. One of his columns, commanded by the and in truth, their character was such that by no possible exertions could the slowness with which it was performed, and the wretched quality of the steady troops, might have been attended with decisive success, became, from portant position of Term. This movement, which, if rapidly executed with the Tiber, with the design of overwhelming Lemoine in the central and im-Castellana, he transported the main body of his army to the other bank of ing, therefore, Marshal Bourcard with four thousand men in front of Civita point of attach, Mach resolved upon a different disposition of his forces. Learheapol and of his own troops and the rumous selection he had made of the Instructed by this disaster, both in regard to the miscrable quality parpung oats men (2), though both the attacking columns did not exceed three thousand with filteen bundred men, that he laid down his arms with four thousand nas thron into such consternation by the arrival of kniazwitz on his flank soon assailed there by General Mathicu, and driven back to Calvi, where he strong, having descended from the mountains and surprised Otricoli, nas neral Melch, who commanded his advanced guard, five thousand soldiers to whom it was intrusted, the source of irreparable disasters Ge-three thousand men from the main body, and driven to Orbitello, concluded column, the French troops entered Rome, and General Damas, cut off with States to their tate Championnet vigorously pursued the reuring Dec. 12 birg' while Mach retired with all his forces, abandoning the Ecclesistical hastily left Rome in the night, and fled in the utmost alarm to his own cacommenced his retreat towards the Acapohian frontier. The hing of Aaples the part of the troops, Mach despaired of success, and metanliy After this check, accompanied with such disgraceful conduct on a convention with hellermann, by which it was agreed that they should

(5) 16 m destitute of all the discipline and courage requisite to obtain success in them forty thousand men, splendidly dressed and abundantly equipped, but hands of the Republicans, eighteen thousand reterans had driven before at Tern,, but the Republicans had not to contend either with the genius or 765 [CHAP XXVI. HISTORY OF EUROPE.

Instructed by this disaster, both in regard to the miserable quality their formidable position (1) forces, and began to meditate a new design to dislodge his antagonists from stellana, and at length Mach, unding both his wings defeated, withdren his bridge of Rome, thrown over the chasm on the southern side of Civita Ca-Dec 4 1 98 In the centre, Marshal Bourcard in vain endeavoured to force the of two thousand prisoners, all its bag, age, and infeen preces of artiflery anced guard of Macdonald near Acpt, and was speedily routed, with the loss The other, intended to turn it on the right, encountered the adthousand of the Polish legion, and totally defeated, with the loss of all its at the bridge of Borghetto over the Tiber, by Kniazwitz, at the head of three Chevalier Sare, destined to turn Civita Castellana on the left, was attacked, they be brought to face the enemy. One of his columns, commanded by the and in truth, their character was such that by no possible exertions could exposed them to defeat from the veterans of brance at every point of atlack, the troops of happleon Mach, persisting in the system of dividing his forces, beabaud avit men (2), though both the attaching columns did not exceed three thousand with fifteen hundred men, that he laid down his arms with four thousand ness thrown into such consternation by the arrival of Kniazwitz on his flank soon assailed there by Ceneral Mathieu, and driven back to Calvi, where he strong, having descended from the mountains and surprised Otricoli, was neral Metch, who commanded his advanced guard, five thousand soldiers to whom it was intrusted, the source of irreparable disasters. Cethe slowness with which it was performed, and the nretched quality of the steady troops, might have been attended with decisive success, became, from portant position of Term. This movement, which, if rapidly executed with the Tiber, with the design of overwhelming Lemoine in the central and im-Castellana, he transported the main body of his army to the other bank of ing, therefore, Marshal Bourcard with four thousand men in front of Civita point of attach, Mach resolved upon a different disposition of his forces Learto the of his own troops and the runous selection he had made of the destitute of all the discipline and courage requisite to obtain success in them forty thousand men, splendidly dressed and abundantly equipped, but hands of the Republicans, eighteen thousand reterans had driven before expelled at all points from the ecclesiastical territory, Rome n as again in the s enteen days after the opening of the campaign, the Neapolitan troops n ere eracuate the Tuscan states without being considered as prisoners of war Sea convention with hellermann, by which it was agreed that they should three thousand men from the main body, and driven to Orbitello, concluded column, the French troops entered Rome, and Ceneral Damas, cut off with States to their fale. Championnet signrously pursued the retiring pital, while Mach retired with all his forces, abandoning the Ecclesisatical hastily left Rome in the mght, and fled in the utmost alarm to his own cacommenced his retreat towards the Acapolitan frontier. The hing of Asples the part of the troops, Mach despaired of success, and metantly Ret est of A al/

Hier this chech, accompanied with such disgraceful conduct on

411111

1 toll Tg 22 ix mot 791 891 x dT (2)

121 86LT

(5)

3.8 mah 361 281 x dT 62 56 ix not (2)*

threatened (2).

retired to Naples. they were rapidly melting away by desertion, resigned the command and tion (1), Mack, disgusted with the conduct of his soldiers, and finding that glorious peace to its enemies. Shortly after the conclusion of the convenimminent danger of passing through the Caudine forks, enabled to dictate a delivered from a situation all but hopeless, and an army, which ran the most the extraordinary pusilianimity of the Italian troops, was the French general Capua, Acerra, and Benevento, delivered up to the French forces. Thus, by tion that 2,500,000 francs should be paid in lifteen days, and the fortresses of accepted with joy, and an armistice for two months was agreed to, on condiprovisions and the increasing boldness of the insurgents, that the proposal was Jan. 11, 1799. tion of Championnet was become so hazardous, from the failure of direction that might save the capital from the ruin with which it was of Bocca Romana as chiefs of the insurrection, who engaged to give it a was only appeased by the appointment of Prince Moliterno and the Duke three days the city was a prey to all the horrors of anarchy; and the tumult confusion, the viceroy and the provisional government fled to Sicily; for our holy faith; long live the Meapolitan people." In the midst of the general army; and the people, assembling in multitudes, exclaimed, "Long live cry arose that they had been betrayed by the viceroy, the general, and the flew to arms; the regular troops refused to act against the insurgents; the The popular indignation was now worked up to a perfect fury; the lazzaroni ment of the first instalment of the contribution stipulated by the convention. pitch by the arrival of the French commissaries appointed to receive payjudgment on the chance of success. The discontent was raised to the highest and totally destitute of the information requisite to form a correct Mentioges X others of Greek descent, were extremely liable to vivid impressions, excites among the populace of that capital, whose inhabitants, like all Indignation which it

The intelligence of this armistice excited the utmost indignation

their tate was unhappily intrusted, should prove successful. The quarters of who were justly afraid of general pillage, if the unruly defenders, to whom ment, and to these were now added nearly the whole class of proprietors, ever, being attached to democratic principles, desired a revolutionary governle Fou, to be their leaders. Almost all the shopkeepers and burghers, how-Duke of Bocca Romana, and elected two simple lazzaroni, Paggio and Michel they were unworthy of confidence, they deposed Prince Moliterno and the their leaders of rank or property, whose weakness had in truth proved that tion of the lazzaroni assumed a more formidable character. Distrusting all the fury of the parties at each other increased in violence, and the insurrecto be detained a prisoner of war. As the French army approached Naples, the Directory showed they were incapable of appreciating, by ordering him hospitality due to his misfortunes: an admirable piece of courtesy, which pionnet had the generosity to leave him his sword, and treat him with the lazzaroni and his own soldiers, sought safety in the French camp. Chamtowards Naples, while Mack, whose life was equally threatened by the furious Championnet advanced in three columns, with all his forces, Ashtas. estected their junction with the main army on the Volturnus, Advance of the French , Meanwhile, the divisions in the Abruzzi having fortunately

Cuar. XXVI.

Notwithstanding their perilous dispersion of force, the invading I dine sitt . 366

Macdonald's division, but the cannon of the ramparts opened upon them so Thither they were pursued in basic by under the cannon of Capua at the same time abandoned their position and artiflery, and fled for refuge troops on the left, behind the folturius, seized with an unaccountable panie, strong, on the tirst summons of General Rey, with an inferior force. The dominions, which surrendered with its garrison, three thousand six hundred almost impregnable tinckets to Gacta, the strongest place in the Acapolitan their advanced guard rhandoned the wooded chills of litt, fled through their duce the Acapolitan troops to withstand the enemy. After a sharp shirmish, and both its wings covered by a numerous artiflery But nothing could in-Scall's di Cajazzo; having Capua, with its formidable ramparts, in the centre, in a strong position behind the Volturnus, stretching from Castella Mare to Respolitan territory, they found Mach posted with twenty-five thousand men and with at all points met with surprising success. On approaching the

and had the Aeapolitan cavalry obeyed Mack's order to charge at that critical terrible a fire of grape-shot, that they were repulsed with great staughter;

Champon and the capture of Cacta, gave Championnet a solid footing on the But though the junction of the directons of Rey and Macdonald, (1) bo (onte moment, that division of the French army would have been totally dea large assemblage of armed peasants collected at Sessa, the bridge over the meatrection spread with the utmost rapidity in the whole Terra di Lavoro, graisson was insulated in the midst of its conquests. At the same time, the ing confrast to the pusillanumity of the regular forces, and the victorious tuto the bands of the peasants, who evinced a courage which afforded a strikmeurrection, litt, Fondt, and all the posts in the rear of the army, soon fell microst of the Abruzzi choked up with snow, and the villages in a state of mente sent out to kan intelligence, found all the mountain passes in the ligence had been received from the other divisions of the army, the detachsituation was daily becoming more eritical For more than a week no intelgreat road from Rome to Laples, in front of the Volturnus, his forced them to a disastrous retreat (2) to think that, not athetanding the pushfanimity of his troops, he might have rous attack with his whole centre upon Macdonald's division, there is reason the regular forces Had Mack profited by his advantages, and made a vigo-Les e 195 attacked with a fury very different from the languid operations of Volturnus was broken down, and all the meulated detachments of the army

But the Austrian general had non lost all confidence in the forces

from Tuscany, of mme battalions, routed at the passage of the Collurnus, ijji w ozzef cebrequ E sqjk sc 51 TO TA Mack pro-good an arm at ce arm at ce under his command, and the yacillation of the provisional govern-the critical situation of the inraders, by proposing an armistice. The situaperate by these unionard encumstances, he resolved to make the most or of the steintly of the French army to oserturn the monarchy. Rendered desparty, having ramifications in his onn camp, was desirous to take advantage none but the officers had entered haples, and he was aware that a powerful

No sooner was the reduction of Naples effected than the lazzaroni with whom they had so recently been engaged in mortal strife (2). their nation, from one extreme to another, embraced the French soldiers St.-Januarius (1); and the populace, passing, with the characteristic levity of -the Reapolitans, "Vivent les Français;" a guard of honour was given to speedily established. The French soldiers exclaimed, "Vive St.-Januaire," treated, offered to mediate between the contending parties. Peace was ducted to the headquarters of the French general, and having been kindly Michel-le-Fou, the lazzaroni leader, having been made prisoner, was conan end to the strife, and gave the French the entire command of Raples. were repulsed with great slaughter, when an accidental circumstance put tiples, and boiling water fell from the windows, and all the other columns the houses were covered with armed men, showers of halls, flaming combusbut Kellermann was held in check by Paggio, near the Seraglio. The roofs of utmost resistance, they made themselves masters of the fort del Carmine; approached all the avenues to its principal quarters. Notwithstanding the showered down cannon-shot upon the city, and dense columns of infantry on the morning of the 23d, the artillery from the eastle of St.-Elmo resolution. Championnet upon this gave orders for a general attack. Early strong-holds of their city; but still the resistance continued with unabated shed tears of despair when they beheld the tricolor tlag waving on the last and these important posts taken possession of by his soldiers. The lazzaroni sending intimation to Championnet, a body of troops were moved forward, masters of the fort of St.-Elmo, and the eastello del Vovo, and immediately gates, a body of the citizens, attached to the French party, made themselves choked up the causeway. But while this heroic resistance was going on at the city was rendered almost impracticable by the mountains of slain which by durning down or blowing up the edifices, and their advance through the Republicans found they could expel the besieged from their fastnesses only fugilives. Still, however, they made good their ground in the streets. The with the bayonet by the French, who entered the gate pell-mell with the rienced troops from their barrieades into the plain, where they were charged master of the entrance by feigning a retreat, and thus drawing the inexpethere the contribution of the important post, long resisted an and state the charteness and at length the source in making himself consists in the attacks were repulsed with great slaughter; and at length the conficts in the succeeded in making Thiebault, only succeeded in making himself The French with two thousand lazzaroni, was entrusted with the desence of or reeding, clothing, lodging, and paying the troops, to which they were at by the unequal manner in which they were levied, and the additional burden overwhelming in that poor country, and were rendered doubly oppressive one of 15,000,000 france, or L.620,000, burdens which were felt as altogether of 42,000,000 of france, or L.500,000, and upon the remainder of the kingdom sure was to levy upon the exhausted inhabitants of the capital a contribution sional government of twenty-one members was appointed. Their first meathe Parthenopoian Republic, proclaimed in its stead. In the outset, a provi-French troops, royalty abolished, and a new democratic state, called were disarmed, the eastles which command the city garrisoned by scoundred who dotes to govern you? Let him dread the fale of his relative who era-hied by hi sdesponism the rising liberty of the Gauls." (Signee.) "Cura-prouver."—Hard. vii. 179, 113. the investiture of the Pope? Who is the crowned

⁽¹⁾ Not. iii. 166, 169. Jom, xi. 81, 85. Lac. xiv. 218, 244. Hard. vii. 159, 175. (2) The most contumctious proclamations agriust

Capet who pretends to reign over you, in virtue of of Naples. In one of them it was said, " Who is the the reigning samily immediately covered the walls

(2) lour x: 19 Lea 217, 212, Bob 215, 162 163 Hard von 139 164, 149

(3) Boe. vir, 164, 165 Jom zi 79, 89. Lac xiv. A terrible combat ensued at the gate of Capua. The Sniss battalion, which,

nere driven back into the city, still resolved to defend it to the list extre-At length the artillery and shill of the I reach prevailed, the Acapolitans at meht beside their guns, nithin pistol-shot of their indomitable opponents. and the dying, and the Republicans, weary with the nork of slaugiter, slept shot, new multitudes rushed forward, The plain was covered with the dead crond succeeded. As the assailants nere snept donn by solleys of grapeinto which any rapid advance threw the turnultuary ranks. Still crowd after from the want of any reserve to follow up the advantage, and the disorder obboucura' par spees transient moments of success led to no lasting result, Republican ranks nere broken by the impetuous charges of their infurrated siesm, on the other, discipline, shill, and military experience. Often the and Capua,-on the one side, numbers, resolution, and enthu-Dee 1516 dented character For three days the battle lasted, between Aversa lai qan eround the the revolutionary war, truttul as it was in events of unprece-The combat which ensued was one of the most extraordinary of from the gates to meet the conquerors of Italy (2) musting around the city, and the enthusiastic multitude issued in cronds Jace was inflamed by a nocturnal procession of the head and blood of St -lasisting of four battahous and a brigade of cannoniers. The zeal of the poputroops who had not deserted their colours were formed into a reserve, conguards at all the important points in its vast circumference. The few regular chance threw in their way, barricaded the principal streets, and stationed its different approaches, armed the ardent multitude with whatever n capons nues to the city, commenced intrenchments on the heights which commanded energy, they at once drew the artiflery from the arsenals to guard the aveundaunted resolution to defend their country. Acting with inconcertable government, their army, and their natural leaders, prepared nith before, and a second by his approach, and though deserted by their king, their nicenared with But the lazzarom of Naples, brave and enthusiastic, nere not inti-

a furious republican, and formerly one of the narmest partisans of Robesorganized at the French headquarters, having at its head Charles Laubert, Corcument(1) " In effect, a recolutionary committee was unmediately ment for one of a republican form I am about to establish a provisional fidious wretches who excite you to resistance. You will change your governpersons and property, and experience only its protection Disarm the per-Those n ho show themselves friends of the Republic will be secured in their punish unjust and haughty kings, but they bear no arms against the people. which he said, " Be not alarmed, ne are not jour enemies At the same time he issued a proclamation to the Meapolitan people, in all his forces in motion, and advanced in three columns against the city. tisans of the Republic. This assurance having at length been given, he put 51.-Elmo, which commands the town, was put into the hands of the parperate population in the streets of a great city, refused to advance till fort the capital, but the French general, aware of the danger of engaging a desopulent entizens, who offered to assist his forces in effecting the reduction of Championnel, in consequence, nere desieged by deputations from the more

No sooner was the reduction of Kaples effected than the lazzaroni with whom they had so recently been engaged in mortal strife (2). their nation, from one extreme to another, embraced the French soldiers St.-Januarius (1); and the populace, passing, with the characteristic levity of -the Reapolitans, "Vivent les Français;" a guard of honour was given to speedily established. The French soldiers exclaimed, "Vive St.-Januaire," treated, offered to mediate between the contending parties. Peace was ducted to the headquarters of the French general, and having been kindly Michel-le-Fou, the laxzaroni leader, having been made prisoner, was conan end to the strife, and gave the French the entire command of Naples. were repulsed with great slaughter, when an accidental circumstance put tibles, and boiling water fell from the windows, and all the other columns the houses were covered with armed men, showers of halls, flaming combusbut Kellermann was held in check by Paggio, near the Seraglio. The roofs of ulmost resistance, they made themselves masters of the fort del Carmine; approached all the avenues to its principal quarters. Notwithstanding the showered down cannon-shot upon the city, and dense columns of infantry on the morning of the 25d, the artillery from the eastle of St.-Elmo resolution. Championnet upon this gave orders for a general attack. Early strong-holds of their city; but still the resistance continued with unabated shed tears of despair when they beheld the tricolor flag waving on the last and these important posts taken possession of by his soldiers. The laxaroni sending intimation to Championnet, a body of troops were moved forward, masters of the fort of St.-Elmo, and the eastello del Uovo, and immediately gates, a body of the citizens, attached to the French party, made themselves choked up the causeway. But while this heroic resistance was going on at the city was rendered almost impracticable by the mountains of slain which by burning down or blowing up the edifices, and their advance through the Republicans found they could expel the desieged from their fastnesses only fugitives. Still, however, they made good their ground in the streets. The with the bayonet by the French, who entered the gate pell-mell with the rienced troops from their barrieades into the plain, where they were charged master of the entrance by feigning a retreat, and thus drawing the inexpethe streets, chief of the staff, Thiebault, only succeeded in making himself forest bloody Two attacks were repulsed with great slaughter, and at length the that important post, long resisted all the efforts of the Republicans. The Trench with two thousand lazzaroni, was entrusted with the desence of public.

French troops, royalty abolished, and a new democratic state, called public.

French troops, royalty abolished, and a new democratic state, called the Parthenopeian Republic, proclaimed in its stead. In the outset, a provisional government of twenty-one members was appointed. Their first measure was to levy upon the exhausted inhabitants of the capital a contribution of 12,000,000 of francs, or L.500,000, and upon the remainder of the kingdom one of 15,000,000 francs, or L.620,000, burdens which were felt as altogether overwhelming in that poor country, and were rendered doubly oppressive overwhelming in that poor country, and were rendered doubly oppressive overwhelming in that poor country, and were rendered doubly oppressive by the unequal manner in which they were levied, and the additional burden of feeding, clothing, lodging, and paying the troops, to which they were at the investiture of the Pope? Who is the crowned scoundred who dares to govern you? Let him dread the false of his relative who cru-lied by hi adespotism the falsing liberty of the Gauls." (Signel) "Champroxisti"—Ilaab, vii, 172, 173.

(1) Bot. int. 166, 169, Jom. zi. 81, 85. Lac. ziv. 253, 254. Hard. vii. 159, 175.
(2) The most contamelious proclamations against the reigning family immediately covered the valls of Naples. In one of them it was said, "Who is the Of Naples, In one of them it was said, "Who is the Of Appets who pretends to reign over you, in virtue of Capet who pretends to reign over you, in virtue of

(1) For 1 17 2 171 John x: 318, 319 Heard wi 178, 181 government.

possion consequent on every attempt to return to a more lement system of from the measures of severily rendered necessary by the excitation of popular part of the suffering which it has so long undergone, appears to have arisen mereased exasperation, and more formidable insurrections, and the greater andulgence with nluch it lies been often treated, lies led uniformly only to tion of the island, seems to be unabated after the lapse of five centuries, the gence in an akening graftlude. 1 situans Euronpoid in policy sen boncy seem to have been equal. of the known principles of human nature. Severe and concliniory because possible at first sight to explain the causes of its suffering by any henerone in surrequing the annals of this unhappy country, it appears fintota passions on the part of the people unfortunate legislation on the side of government, and of fierce and blinddanger; the theatre, in so many periods of English instory, of oppressive or cracy, and the racillation of Continental resolution. Ireland was the scene of English patriousm was finely contrasted with the fumes of Continental demoundernen. To Yithigatini bits ezann..

Directory, Great Britain State of Ireland assions, was thus every been preceded (1). ogions even to the popular party than the regal authority by which it had tice of their deliverers; and the democratic government soon became more patriots broke out into vehement exclamations against the perfidy and avablican allies. The utmost discontent unmediately ensued in all classes, the capital, disposed of to the ingliest bidder, to fill the pockets of their reputhe beautiful statues of the same metal which adorned the streets of their and sold, and the Meapolitan democrats had even the mortification of seeing without mercy; all the bronze cannon which could be found, melted down and private plunder; the arsenals, palaces, and private houses nere pillaged rais and civil the private ci 'sjenpruput

decree passed, which declared that in every dispute bein cen the barons and bushed, in which not three hundred men were ever enrolled, and, finally a which they had inherited from the ancient customs, a national guard estaelectors named by government, deprived the people of the free tranchises to segotion of benined to colleges of circumstances of the country.

anticipated, fraught with the pointed to draw up a constitution for the new Republic. The constitution supreme command, while a commission of inenty-five members was aprecalled, indicted for his disobedience, and Vacdonald intrusted with the enzbended the decree of the Convention; upon which he was immediately the boncle of the earth. Championnel, ashamed of this odious proceeding, and even the currostics of Herculaneum and Pompen, though still buried in of individuals, the allodial lands, of which the hing was only administrator, all the estates of the monasteries, the whole banks containing the property sary of the Consention, who instantly sequestrated the whole royal property, the same time subjected. Shortly after, there arrived Favpoult, the commis-

to arise from such conciliatory measures, that many able observers have not These effects are so much at variance with what was predicted and expected devastation, and bloodshed, unparalleled in any Christian land. the sierce demand for the Repeal of the Union, and a degree of anarchy, were falsified, and half a century of unbroken indulgence was succeeded by ence. All the promises of tranquillity so often held forth by its advocates followed, have been unprecedented in the long course of its humiliated existthe exasperation, discontent, and violence in Ireland, which immediately fetters of restriction were struck off by the Catholic Relief Bill in 1829, and dulgent policy was immediately followed by the rebellion of 1798. The last course of improvement, concession, and removal of disability, and this inbeneficent policy of George III. From 1780 to 1798, was an uninterrupted hundred years. The more galling parts of this code were removed by the the island remained discontented, indeed, but comparatively tranquil, for a oppressive code was imposed soon after the Revolution in 1688, and under it which was only extinguished by Cromwell in oceans of blood. A severe and gratitude, there broke out, shortly after, the dreadful redellion of 1641, from the days of Henry II. Instead of increased tranquillity and augmented improvement of that important part of the empire, than all his predecessors, true theatre of his glory, and that he had done more in a single reign for the of Ireland was James I. He justly boasted that there would be found the The first British sovereign who directed his attention to the improvement unprecedented circumstances. Ireland is the natural result of these principles acting in peculiar and almost demonstrate that this is not the case, and that the continued turbulence of state of society in which they were called into operation, will be sufficient to however, of the motives which influence mankind on such occasions, and the tion to all the ordinary principles of human nature. A little consideration, hesitated to declare them inexplicable, and to set down ireland as an excep-owners from the inheritance of their forefathers. dependent for their existence upon the exclusion of the heirs of the original proprietors, and introducing a body of men into the country, necessarily rishing profound feelings of hatred in the descendants of the disposessed sure which has been the original cause of the disasters of Ireland, by noustandard of Cromvell (1). It is the great extent of this cruel and unjust meamanner upon the adventurers and soldiers of fortune who followed the English extraction. Above eight millions of acres were destowed away in this and lavished either on the English nobility, or companies, or individuals of first approached its shores, nearly all its landed property has been confiscated, insurrections which that country has witnessed, since the English standard religion, from the great body of the inhabitants. In the greater part of the and its acquisition by persons of a different country, habits, and from confis- subsequent confiscation of so large a portion of the landed properly; The first evil which has attached to Ireland was the original and from the native inhabitants (2); and yet upon that foundation have been were almost entirely, in the course of five centuries, wrested by the Franks from the native in the course of five centuries, wrested by the franks to the Saxons, and thence from the Saxons to the Normans; the lands of Gaul Ireland; nearly all the land of England was transferred, first from the Britons But other countries have been subjected to landed confiscation as well as native magistracy, from whose vindictive or reckless proceedings their chief the last forty years has been singularly gentle and beneficent, but of their own plain is not that of the English Covernment, whose conduct towards them for the British Legislature, and that the severest oppression of which they comtaken place shortly after the greatest boons had been conferred upon them by cumstance, that all the most violent chulitions of Irish msurrection have from which it has arreed. This explains the otherwise unaccountable eitconsess and prolonging the sense of suffering by perpetual the passions happe discontent, by giving the power of complaint without removing its course pursued to a spoiled child, have fostered rather than diminished the which they have experienced under the British government, the a similar power of indulging them, but the alternations of severity and indulgence in a jen Concinions, by extinguishing the passions of the people with the Continued despotism might have healed the nounds of Ireland the extinction of which alone can habits of industry or good order be expected perpetuating of popular passions, and the maintenance of party strife, from From the periodical recurrence of such seasons of excitation has arisen tho

pear oblicated in process of unce, and the release and anquasited people, had it not been oblicated in process of unce, and the release and anquasited been oblicated in process of unce, and the release and and people, had it not been oblicated returnations and advantage of party starle ansuring the pad, its, the meessant agitation and schemence of party starle ansuring from pad, its, the meessant agitation and schemence of party starle ansuring the forms of its from the contoxion with England, and passional character of the forms of a free and representative government to a people who were in a state of civilisation midt for either the decrease, with all nations in an interest of the forms of a free and representative government to a people who were in a maint state of civilisation and the presentation and common reduction of of civilisation and common and Alboret Bruce.

Great as were these causes of discontent, and deeply as they had for an asymptotic first for the foundains of national prosperity, they might jet have the special prosperity of the release and the release and anomalied is, as the special for the foundains of time, and the release and sammelied is, as the special for the special for the forms and the release and the special for the forms and the forms of times and the forms of the forms of times and the forms of the f tremains and properties are to the conditute to the challence of Gauj, the conditute of the conditute of the conditute of the permanent readence of the veterouse nation; that absent proprieties, and their necessary alternatis, and they necessary alternatis, and they have one of conquerous who were the conditive of telegrous animosity supreaded to it c causes of discontent arising from evil distinction. The same progress was beginning in Scolland querily embraced by the viteries along the same progress was beginning in Scolland and the conditive of experiences of religious animosity supreaded to it c causes of discontent engagement of the varieties of experiences of the condition of the varieties of experienced after the condition of the varieties of experienced after the condition of the varieties of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced obligation have not yet fully developed the temperature of experienced of the experience of the experience of experiences of reared the glores of English civilization and the concentrated argour of the fronch monach. Other causes, therefore, must be looked for, coexisting will or succeeding these, which have provented the healing powers of nature them closed flucter, as elsewhere, that glossly wounds, and perpetuated to the charmage age the privation and the amnostuce consequent, on the first butter-land and the amnostuce consequent, on the first butter-and age of the constant of the first butter-land and the constant of the first butter-land age of the constant of the first butter-land and the first butter-land and the first butter-land and are consequent, on the first butter-land and are consequent.

for half a century in the career of real freedom (1). animosity and discord on its peopled shores, which bids fair to throw it back and the repeal of the Union, has produced in our own times a degree of agitation set on foot to effect Catholic Emancipation, the removal of tithes, tion of the United Irishmen; and the excitement consequent on the party democracy, in the close of the eighteenth century, gave rise to the insurrecspeedily generated the horrors of the Tyrone redellion; the fumes of French hence, the fanatical temper of the English nation, in the reign of Charles I, political power, as the West India Negroes or the Bedouins of Arabia; and as incapable of bearing the excitements of political change, or the exercise of miseries are said to have arisen. A people in such circumstances are almost held out hopes to the Irish malecontents, and by every means in lity or secret propagandism, the French government had for years ·uopajeur union form the states which they wished to overthrow, whether by open hostication form.

following out the system which they uniformly adopted towards the forfeited lands (2). with England, the restoration of the Catholic religion, and the resumption of blishment of a republic in alliance with France, the severance of all connexion fourths of its entire inhabitants, soon became leagued together for the estamore enterprising part of the Catholic population, who constituted threeopening the eyes of its inhabitants to its real tendency; and the greater and intense anxiety in Ireland. All the horrors of the Reign of Terror failed in the deginning of the Revolution, accordingly, its progress was watched with proved altogether intoxicating to their ardent and enthusiastic minds. From they went, and which turned so many of the strongest heads in Europe, and the dreams of liberty and equality which the French spread wherever enemy who promised to liberate them from the odious yoke of the Saxons, The trish were already sufficiently disposed to ally themselves with any between the native and the English population. This was no difficult task. their power sought to widen the breach, already, unhappily, too great, were only communicated to the secretaries of the provincial committees, who visional government was elected by ballot; and the names of its members five persons to superintend the whole business of the Union. This promittee; two from every county committee, a provincial one; and they elected superior, body; one or two deputies from these composed a county comall their affairs. From each of these committees a deputy attended in a represented by five members in a committee, vested with the management of was allowed to consist of more than twelve members; five of these were ostensible ones were those dest calculated to allure the populace. No meeting Irishmen, the real objects of which were kept a profound secret, while the association in every part of Ireland, called the Society of United Ireland. nou8no.ui ellicacious, that ever was devised. Persons were sworn into an ppisped zgnon estaone of the most simple, and, at the same time, one of the most ary organt-Revolution. The system by which this immense insurrection was organized was a fourth part, or mearly so, of three numbers.—See Alacana, Parl, Deb. Feb. 9, 1834.

(2) Wolfe Tone, ii. 187, 191. Ann. Reg. 1798, 153, 157, Jon. 3i. 128, 129. Ante, iii. 96. cion Act the serious crimes were at once reduced to crimes reported in Lugland in the same year were 19,647. The population of England and Wales in 1831, was 13,994,000; that of Iteland, 7,784,000. See Parl. Returns, 14th March, 1833; 8th May, 1833, and population census, 1833. By the Coerfest of the Coer

(The Emancipation Bill passed in March), three months of 1829 (1) The serious erimes in Ireland during the last

2296; burglatics, 531; tobbery of arms, 678, The potice; burning houses, 466; attacks on houses, nere 16,669, of which 210 were murders; 1478 rob-

To resist this formidable combination, another society, composed embire (2). the project entertained for the dismemberment and resolutionizing of the believe the poetic biographer of Lord E Fitzgerald (1), was no stranger to stuon party on both sides of the Channel; and even Mr Foz, if we may munds, that these intentions nere communicated to several of the Oppot obliterate the better feelings of our nature, even in the most generous minds infected with party spirit at that period, and so completely did number of the respectable classes on their side. So strongly nere men's most calculated to conceal their ultimate designs, and enlist the greatest Reform was the object ostensibly held out to the country, as being the one Covernment, and the formation of a republic allied to France Parliamentary titude nho followed their steps to adopt, nere the overthrow of the English tion, which they would have had no difficulty in persuading the giddy mulof government was necessary. The real objects of the chiefs of the msurrecorder to effect these objects, it was speciously prefended that a total change Catholic faith, formed the cluet boons presented to the lower classes; and, in tithes and dues to the Protestant clergy, and the restoration of the Roman sand men obeyed the dictates of an unknown authority. Liberation from power was unbounded, their agency was invisible, and many hundred thounere officially intrusted with the scruting of the rotes. Thus, though their 200

lence nere perpetrated by the open enemies of law and order, or its unruly filled the land, and it was sometimes hard to say whether most acts of vioparties soon became universal; deeds of depredation, rapine, and murder the Irish people, signalized their efforts. The feuds bein een these in o great same vehement zeal and ardent passions which have always characterised soon arrailed the activity and energy of the Catholic party. The Dos na 1 7U ascendency, was formed, under the name of Orangemen, who Orangemen of those attached to the British government and the Protestant Comb na connexion with England, and form a republic in alliance with France, It that year, be ready for the invasion of Ireland, to enable it to throw off the it was agreed that a considerable fleet and army should, in the autumn of 1796, where a treaty was concluded with the French Directory, by which with Lister Arthur O'Connor, and Wolfe Tone, nent over to France in June Treateine The leaders of the msurrection, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Mr. defenders (5).

has been already mentioned how these expectations nere thnarted, first by such an effort of reserve and serveey was, I must set, very unusual to b a character It is well in man that Mr Fox lauseif, impationt at the boye.

y the source of the source of

(2) yan Let 1182' 172

(1) Ann Mcz 1198, 154 151 Wolfe Tote; 11 197 201 Dhoore Entgerold i 165 166, 271 197 202 Dhoore Entgerold i 165 166, 271 (2) Cho order to seulte, 227 250ore all di ede (2) Cho order to seulte, 227 250ore all di ede

Larence

[tejanq

the dispersion of the French fleet in Bantry bay in December 1796, and then by the glorious victory of Camperdown in 4797. The vigorous efforts of government at that period, and the patriotic ardour of a large portion of the more respectable part of the people, contributed in no small degree to overawe the discontented, and postponed for a considerable period the final expectable part of the insurrection (1).

desperation their furious and undisciplined multitudes (2). gents, of their own excesses, excited a deep feeling of revenge, and drove to under the British colours, which, though only a retaliation upon the insurcourage at the approach of danger, and many cruelties were perpetrated pay. The yeomanry, forty thousand strong, turned out with undaunted great severity by the British troops and the German auxiliaries in English to avoid massacre and conflagration. These disorders were repressed with counties, soon compelled all the respectable inhabitants to fly to the towns bodies, and, commencing a Vendéen system of warfare in the southern of arms and military organization, however, they were unable to act in large break out into acts of violence in several parts of the country. From want any powerful succour from France, they decame desperate, and degan to But the defeat of the Dutch fleet having left the insurgents little hope of insurrection was to be carried into execution in every county of the island. in different parts of the kingdom, and the leaders appointed by whom the two hundred and lifty thousand men organized in companies and regiments information of the existence of a seditious confederacy; when there were the danger which threatened them. They had received only some vague Government, meanwhile, were by no means aware of the magnitude of plosion of the insurrection (1).

Notwithstanding this untoward event, the insurrection broke Various ac. it of all the chiefs of character, rank, or ability. authorities; but their arrest was a fatal blow to the redellion, by depriving the kingdom (5). The places of these leaders were filled up by subordinate humane offers made by government to enable him to retire in safety from after having rejected, from a generous devotion to his comrades, all the mortally wounded, some months after, when desending himself from arrest, at Dublin; and Lord Edward Fitzgerald, who escaped at that time, was by one of their own leaders, fourteen of the chiefs were arrested conspiracy were unknown: but at length, their names having been revealed Great-Britain. Still, though their designs were discovered, the chiefs of the House of Parliament, and to agree to no terms but a total separation from came to a formal resolution, to pay no attention to any offers from either breaks out. of accommodation was past. On the same day the lrish committees an eloquent speech in their favour in Parliament; but the period ie nomes 1798. Tue insurthe contending parties. On the 19th February, Lord Moira made The deginning of 1798 brought matters to an extremity detween the country: The actempt upon Dublin was frustrated by the vigilance of the lord-lieutenant, who, on the very day on which it was to have taken

⁽¹⁾ Ann. Reg. 1798, 158, 159. Wolfe Tone, ii. 37 Moore's Fitzgerald, i. 2, 77. Hard. vi. 212, 213. 37 (2) Ann. Reg. 1798, 168, 161. Jone, x. A29, 430. Wolfe Tone, ii. 255, 270. Hard. vi. 205, 206.

⁽³⁾ Ann. Reg. 1798, 162. Moore's Fitzgerald, ii.

Years of markened when too late to the importance of the opening which is consistent was thus allowled to their arms, the Oricetory made central stars to rebuild the top the Corner and the constitution of the insurence to the Corner and the Corne

afternards so conspicuous in the Peninsul i war parest of patriotic feeling and developement of military promess which was possibly the imminent peril to the empire might earlier have produced that population of Ircland, would have led to most alarming consequences, and with forty thousand men, in the midst of the immense and discontented on our own shores, it is impossible to deny that the landing of Aspolicon have terminated in the overthrow of the former, even if it had taken place Berton must do, that the struggle beineen France and this country would a distant expedition to the coast of Africa Confidently trusting, as every Noner of their army, their best general, and most powerful squadron, upon of nounding their mortal enemy in this sulnetable point, they had sent the the previous actions at St - Inncent's and Camperdown, and that non, instead the meurrection, that they had exposed their navy to defeat in and the French government made no adequate attempt to support It was fortunate for England, during this dangerous erisis, that and Nextord (1) at the end of July only a tew isolated bands in the mountains of Micklew who n ere in arms at the commencement of the insurrection, there remained Such was the success of these measures, that out of sixty thousand men the exception of a tew leaders who were afterwards brought to justice with a general annesty for all who submitted before a certain day, with completely got under, that government nere enabled to send Lord Cornnallis nere routed in several smaller encounters, and at length the revolt was so a mortal stroke to the redelinon. The insurgents, flying in all directions, number, and their whole ammunition in the hands of the victors. This was the English caralty, and dispersed, learing all their cannon, thirteen in p evailed over unitained valour. They were broken in several charges by dat' me from their tumultuery masses, but at length discipline and skill The resistance nas more obstinate than could have been expected To ally demeurgents, who were biteen thousand strong in their camp at I megar Ilill in the county of Weatord, commenced a general attack on the At length, the British commanders having collected above ten thousand men they nere finally dislodged with great loss, by the yeomonry and militing At Aewiondarry, after having taken and relaken the town several times, massacre, in cold blood, of above a hundred prisoners taken at Hexford the royal troops, and the redels recenged themselves for the disaster, by the the confines of kilkenny, but there they were defeated with great loss by Lollowing up their successes, they advanced against New Ross, on considerable train of artiflery, and opening a point of communication with made themselves masters of the important tonn of Nexford, containing a descated the English at Linniscorthy, captured that burgh, and soon after royal forces, but their principal army, lifteen thousand strong, nere norsted at Rath farm house by Lord Roden, and at Tallanghill by the quarters the recolt broke out with great colonee Bodies of the menigents place, arrested the leaders of the conspiracy in that capital, but in other lance and firmness of their administration (2). selves displayed towards the vanquished, were as conspicuous as the vigiders in its suppression, yet the moderation and humanity which they themalthough many grievous acts were perpetrated by the troops under their orhappy redellion; and it is but justice to, the British government to add, that death closed the melancholy catalogue of executions on account of this unsuicide, accompanied with more than ordinary circumstances of horror. His gone a trial for high treason, prevented a public execution by a deplorable celebrated leader, Wolfe Tone, who, after having with great firmness underwhich regained the ports of the Republic. On board the Hoche was seized the Oct. 12, 1798. taken, after a short action, with the exception of two frigates, squadron under the command of Sir John Borlase Warren, and the whole sleet, and arrived on the coast of Ireland; but they were there attacked by the having on board three thousand men, cluded the vigilance of the Channel French force, consisting of the Hoche of seventy-four guns and eight frigates, led to surrender, after a gallant resistance, by Lord Cornwallis. A arrived in his stead. At length the little corps was surrounded, and compelwhich would have been incurred if Rapoleon, with the army of Egypt, had non and six hundred prisoners;—a disaster which demonstrates the danger feated by this enterprising commander, with the loss of seven pieces of canof four thousand men, consisting chiefly of yeomanry and militia, was deenrolment of revolutionary legions, in the province of Connaught (1) A force speedily commenced the organization of a provisional government and the board the French brig Anacreon, and got sale across the Channel.—See both proclamations in Hand. 223, 225.

Marting The maritime affairs of this year were chiefly distinguished by the affairs of the great strength of year.

(2) Ann. Reg. 1798, 165. Jom. x. 440, 442. Hard.

.861 .761 .iv .anali-".oriqmi deilite ont mort banei inportant ingre." another against the West, was destined to carry into Ireland the principles of the French Revolution, and threatened with destruction her Indian empire, and never did she run greater danger than this year, when one expedition, directed against the East, efforts of France to dismember her dominious. But bonds of her constitution, that she replied to all the the contest, it was by periodical victories of unpre-cedented splendour, by drawing closer together the houds of her contest the conficel to all the of fifty millions sterling 3-year, that she maintained hundred thousand land troops, and an expenditure French Republic. It was with eight hundred ships of war, a hundred and fifty thousand sailors, three peace to come to terms of accommodation with the there produced less anxiety, troubles, and disquietude, than was experienced by those states which had been seduced by the prospect of a fall-scious terrible war to which an empire could be exposed, was unfouched, her arms unconquered. The most the shock with daily increasing energy. Her dignity tome of that cruel perplexity which tormented the continental sovereigns. In vain were the efforts of the Directory directed against that point of the globe, which they assailed with all their weapons, both military and evolutionary. England sustained the chock with All the continuous sustained the continuous sustain where, excited at this juncture the highest admira-tion on the Continent, "In the British cabinet," says Prince Hardenberg," there was then to be seen neather irresolution nor discouragement, no sympment, amidst so many examples of weahness else-The firmness and success of the British govern-

had landed in Killala bay, than he re-embarked on of the reverse sustained by the French corps which vehement protestations; for no sooner did be hear against your oppressors; the eternal war of liberty against lyranny.—Akeven Trans," But the conduct of this leader with these off this leader was far from leoping pace with the property of the conduction of the thrones, Irishmen! declare a war of extermination the the assessing of your friends on their bloody surround you; they cry aloud for vengeance. It is your duty to avenge their death; it is your duty to Aichins to their devotion to your cause; their shades committed in your country; Jour friends have fallen courage, it seeks only to seduce you. But you will trustrate all its efforts. Barbarous crimes bave been ger. No, Irishmen; you will not be the dupe of such base intrigues; feeting its inability to subdue your well to the other, you will see in it the hidden dag-They hold out in one hand the olive branch; look pest of society and the scourge of the human race! of the English soldiery, which massacres inhumanly your best citizens—with a ministry which is the with a government which leaves you at the mercy anital olui guirona to taguadi odi nintalue traniom concessions! will you accept them? Can you for a Trom Napper Tandy vas still more rehement and ". What do I hear? The British government falls of blood cement the glorious fabric of freedom." That nucesented; if it is their destiny to full, may their trumpet colles you; do no let your preturen perish head; he has sworn to break your fellers or perish of all sorts, to aid you in breaking your fetters and recovering your liberties. Rapper Laidy is at their amply provided with arms, artiflery, and munitions diers of the great nation has elanded on your shores, concent the other from Rapper Tandy to his counnonneed by two proclamations, one from the French (1) The landing of the French troops was anAnd the right of the reads of the radio to more than 10 feet and 10 feet of the reads the official te ge Lety 6 oung 92 Lety nere indignantly rejected, the American envoys left l'aris, fetters America as to the loan required for government (2) These terms tory, they mught remain at Paris until they had received further orders from spould plead their cause, the sum required for the private use of the Directped wonig only ,, bad pa was of fees, just as they would to any langer who ricans resolutely resisted this proposal, they were at length informed, that it there who would not confirm him in this statement frading that the Ameconfd be done at Paris without money, and that there was not an American Tolleyrand, but by that minister himself, who openly avoned that nothing nes repeatedly pressed upon the envoys, not only by the subaltern acrils of object was L 1,000,000, and for the last L 20,000 This disgraceful proposal another for the private use of the Directors. The sum required for the tirst a contribution, not only of a large sum as a loan to the government, but of ting them to remain in a private capacity, was to lay the United States under the Directory, in refusing to receive them in public, and permitper referred in riew it restricted to the energy that the intention of which soon unfolded the real object which the krench government in Paris, and a negoliation opened with Talleyrand and his inferior agents, not oblam an audience of the Directory, but they were permitted to remain other ease, by previous usage, nor authorized by treaty. The envoys could submit to the same from the other, though neither sanctioned, as in the from one belligerent party, from inability to prevent them, therefore it must pressive principle, that because a neutral is obliged to submit to exactions ceedings They urged that the deeree of the French proceeded on the opgovernment sent envoys to Paris, in order to remonstrate against these protouched at English harbours, brought into the french ports. The American marque nere issued, and an immense number of American resects, haring who, at that period, note the great neutral carriers of the norld Letters of decree immediately brought the French into collision with the United States, fore found on board English ressels, should be put to death " This barbarous which had so much as touched at an Fughsh harbour, and that neutral saisettlements, that the harbours of brance should be shut against all vessels from the single erreumstance of its coming from England, or any of its foreign was the proprietor of that merchandise, which should be held contraband or in part, any English merchandise, should be held lanful prize, whoever musty 1389, which directed " that all ships having for their cargoes, in whole The origin of these disputes was a decree of the French government in la-

to them during their contest with Great Britain
The origin of these disputes was a decree of the French

propers a So unbounded was the errogence, so recektes this policy of the brown of the strong state of both more and the track government at this time, that it all but involved them in a so when which democrate institutions prevail to the greatest extent, and which democrate institutions prevail to the greatest extent, and where graitfulds to France was most unbounded for the services rendered

Its fortifications, yielded to a British force under the command of General Stroart. In August, the uniabitatis of the little taland of Gozo, a dependence of Mails, recolled against the French garrace, made them presents to the prumber of three chuadred, and completed the thepublicans to shut themselves most rigorous blockade by the British forces by land and sea (1).

of marque were issued by the American President, all commercial intercourse with France was suspended, Washington declared generalissimo of the forces of the commonwealth, the treaties with France declared at an end, and every preparation made to sustain the national independence (1).

courber a set in each made to were not so fortunate in escaping from the expension and every preparation made to were not so fortunate in escaping from the expension of the Directory. Their distance from the Second not save them from French rapacity. Their ships, bearing a neutral flag, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like, were daily made prisoners by the French cruisers, and they obtained like neutral flags.

the most arbitrary and despotic oppression (5). that liberty which they had been promised in name, they were subjected to of France; and that the moment that they endeavoured to obtain in reality other states, was neither more nor less than an entire subjection to the agents which the lacobin agents insidiously offered to the deluded population of tion of revolutionary principles. Experience had proved that the freedom speedily to subvert their whole social institutions by the incessant propagapendence of the other states of Europe by their military power, but promised compact chain of republics was formed, which not only threatened the indethan one-half of Europe. From the Texel to the extremity of Calabria, a its independence, she had succeeded in establishing her dominion over more division of its population, and taking advantage of that division to overthrow discontented multitude in every state; paralysing the national strength by a thenopeian. Pursuing constantly the same system; addressing herself to the its close she had organized three more, the Helvetic, the Roman, and the Parrepublics at her side, the Batavian, the Cisalpine, and the Ligurian. Before lead to a renewal of the war. France began the year 1798 with three affiliated and endless usurpations of the French government could fail to independence remained to the European states, that these incessant Delinitation It was impossible, as long as the slightest hope of maintaining their

Their system of nations, but the principles which hold together the social union, impossible. It was obvious that no time was to be lost; and that the peril incurred was even greater in peace than during the utmost dangers of war. France had made more rapid strides towards universal dominion during one rectors. At a subsequent meeting on the 27th October, the same serief agent said, " Conflemen, you mistake the point; you say nothing of the money you ure to give. You make no olfer of money. On that point you are not explicit."—" We are explicit enough, "replied the American envoys," we will not give you one furthing; and before coming tore ye should have theught such an offer as you now propose would have been regarded as a mortal interestion of the as a mortal interestion of the statement. Take all, "—See the flequent in thear, vi. 14, 22. When the American envoys propose would have been regarded as a mortal interestion." The fact of the flequent in the statement, Take a flew hard insurance and another secret and insurance and insurance are as another that the had neither said, anthem, or done a single thing without the orders of Causen Talleyrand."

tion of L.50,000 in the form of a douceur to the Di-visit from the secret agent of M. Talloyrand (M. Beladari), He ascured as that Citizen Talloyrand had the bribest eater at the tractica and the citizens of the bribest datases to the America and the citizens of the indical states that the vast most auxinus fact that the reconciliation with France. He added, that, with that view, some of the most offensive passages with that view, some of the most offensive passages and a donceur of L. 50,000 sterling put at the disposation of M. Talloyrand for the use of the Directors; and a 20th the expensive of the pleupotocitary, and on this occasion. The spanned in the aparticles for the energy and entire aparticles are entirely man that consider the secret agent, an unitantive friend of Talloynad was present; the expanging of the passages was again insisted on, and it was added, that after the tractical of the insisted on, and it was added, that after words are the form of the place to the principal object. His words are the fact of the first of the place money. On the 23,000,000 (L.1,280,000) as a loan, was fixed at 33,000,000 (L.1,280,000) as a loan, secured on the Duck contributions, and a grainflest secured on the Duck contributions, and a grainflest secured on the Puck for the secured on the puck for the secured on the puck contributions, and a grainflest secured on the puck contributions, and a grainflest secured on the puck contributions, and a grainflest secured on the puck of the puck of the puck of the

⁽¹⁾ Ann. 19cg. 1798, 241, 247. Jom. x 363, Hard. 1, 1, 1 (2) Jon. x. 364. Hard. vi. °' (3) Th. x. 206.

These considerations, strongly excited by the subjugation of Swita of sheed an advanced post, was daily proceeding to fresh conquests, and openly aimed were created, and the principle of democracy, using the ranquished states as nas done, the national independence was subverted; revolutionary interests notes despotes than that from which they hoped to emancipate it; the evil their effects, and that they subjected themselves and their country to a far that those who lent an ear to these suggestions were the first to suffer from ras but a poor consolation to those nho nitnessed this deplotable progress, an ay before the merdious, but meessant efforts of democratic ambition It tain the public fortunes, the independence of nations was silently melting which it gave rise, and without the shock of war, or an effort even to mainrecolutionary mania, with all the extravagant hopes and expectations to tinuance of amicable relations was favourable to the secret propagation of the year of pacific encreachment, than six previous years of hostilities. The con-

the south of Germany (1) of italy, while another, amounting nearly to forty thousand, moved towards army, sixty thousand strong, began its march from Poland towards the north the necessity of joining his great empire to the confederacy, and a Muscovite progress of recolutionary principles. The Emperor of Russia at length saw resist the further encroachments of France, and stop the alarming could desert the European monarchies, of the necessity of a general coalition to zerland and the Papal States, led to a general feeling throughout all at universal dominion fortresses as far back as the frontiers of the hereditary states, and that within tion of the secret articles, evacuate also ingolstadt, Philipsburg, and all the rided, that the Austrian troops should, within thenly days after the rathicasported he given to the Republicans (2) By an additional article it was proreoops' playence, the bulwark of the Cerman empire on the Lower tinue, that on the same day on which that great city was surrendered to the imperial principle on the part of the Emperor, and accordingly it nas agreed, Venice was the glittering prize which induced this dereliction of ment of the empire, by its head, to the rapacity of the Republican government. te secret articles were contained stipulations which amounted to an abandonnes, for their own aggrandisement at the expense of their neighbours, and in tion, it was a league by the great powers, who there terminated their hostilitime. The treaty of Campo Formio was more than an ordinary accommodawere conducted underwent a material change with the lapse of the comment of the company is a male comment of the company in the figure of the company is a managed to a second of the comment of the comme The negotiations at itastadt, notwithstanding their length and in-10 e23 Tg01 T

Ozoppo, and the Italian fortresses as far as the Adige (5). the same period the French forces should retire from Palma Suova, Leginago, from making any effectual resistance to the brench forces, was kept a pro-Ins important military consention, which totally disabled the empire

Great was the consternation in Germany when at length it could no longer .(1) noilib ing the remainder of his residence in Europe prior to the Egyptian expeto the great influence exercised by Kapoléon over that government durtions, which were highly acceptable at Vienna, and furnish the true key time in making his cabinet acquainted with these extraordinary revelapensable that we should both occupy good positions." Cobentzell lost no it cannot wilhstand the shock of war; and therefore it is, that it is indisto the ground. The Directory may maintain its ground-during peace, but will not elapse before that preposterous scallolding of a Republic will fall yers, which cannot much longer oppress France. Believe me, two years march at its head to Paris, and overturn that ridiculous government of lawchannel ostensibly for the invasion of England; but my real object is to the Directory. "An army," said he, " is assembled on the coasts of the acquainted with his secret intention at some future period of subverting however, did the two diplomatists proceed, that Kapoleon made Cobentzell was fixed on very different objects, declined the offer. To such a length, reach of democratic ingratitude." But the French general, whose ambition with 250,000 souls, in order that "he might be for ever placed beyond the the Republican government at Paris, offered him a principality in Germany, the extreme irritation which at that moment the French general felt against Austrian ambassador at Bastadt, insomuch that the Emperor, who perceived made mani- very great degree of intimacy between Napoleon and Cobentzell, the in part at least, be concealed. But in the mean time it led to a The secret, found secret, and only became known to the German princes when, in the first at least being carried into execution, it could no longer, because and in mart at least be concented. But in the mean time it lead to terms to the imperial plenipotentiaries on the subject (2). But, M. Lehrbach any effectual protection; and their deputies expressed themselves in angry by their natural guardians, and the only ones capable of rendering them ed on the German people when they beheld themselves thus abandoned ing towards the frontiers of the hereditary states. An universal stupor seiz-Austrian forces, instead of opposing any resistance, were evidently retirhad been carried by assault on the 25th of the same month; while the which refused to surrender to the summons of the Republican general, on the 13th January; and that the fort of the Rhine, opposite Manheim, Venice, stripped of all its riches, had been abandoned to the Imperialists in presence of, and without opposition from, the Austrian forces: that that Mayence had been surrendered to the Republicans on the Jolh December, at least of the empire had been abandoned. Intelligence successively arrived, the decisive evidence of facts convinced the most incredulous, that a portion cions of the fate impending over them got alloat, but without effect; and soon strances and petitions in consequence rapidly succeeded each other, as suspiror for the empire, on the base of the integrity of the Germanic body." Remonthe armistice of Leoben, "that an armistice had been concluded by the Empe-Emperor had officially announced to the Diet, shortly after the conclusion of at Rastadt to reconcile the dispossessed proprietors to this catastrophe, as the grossing republic. It was the more difficult for the Austrian plenipotentiaries the states on the left bank of that river were to be sacrificed to the enbe concealed that the line of the Rhine had been abandoned, and that all

(2) Hard, v, 78, 96.

forment, the gates and windows were speedily forced, the apartments pilllap,ed, and the carrieges in the yard aboven to pacces. First Houseand persons assembled in the streets, and the brench ambassadors, barrieaded in one of the rooms of this lude, has only do thereful a now other, that the morning by the tegments of curresters, which the imperial governments sent to his relock that y independ at this displaced outside, Bernadotte 1, anamited several darky independ at the displacement of the properties of the problems.

remove the obnoxious standard. He deemed his own honour and that of the th popular exasperation hourly increasing, in rain besought Bernadolle to crowds to the neighbo thood of his hole! The Austrian authorities, seeing direct meult offered to their beloved Emperor, and slocked in menacing The people of Vienna concerned the conduct of the French ambassador to be a eiples being thus brought into contact with each other, a collision look place. gate, nith the nords" Liberte, Egalite," inscribed uponit. The opposing printertamment to his friends, and hoisted an immense tricolor dag before his lete took place, and the French ambassador, in consequence, gave a great enconfigured not withstand the mishes of the defenders of themonarchy; the proposed to ponour of democratic principles at his hole! But the Austrian government nance to it, and declared his resolution, if it was persisted in, to give a dinner French ambassador, General Bernadotte, had testified his repugcountymen it was hazardous to agree to such a proposal, as the teching by a fete in honour of the glorious stand then made by their that capital expressed a strong desire to give vent to the ardour of their patriotic April 13 94 general arming of the Vienna volunteers on April 13, the jouth of sion between the two governments. On occasion of the anniversary of the event occurred at vienna, which threatened to produce an immediate explonords, indemnifying the lay princes at the expense of the chuich, when an had already broached their favourite project of secularizations, in other providing indemnities to the dispossessed princes, and the republican envolu the attention of the plentpotentiaries was chiefly directed to the means of After the cession of the line of the Rhine to France nas finally divulged, replied, when no longer able to concern this dismemberment of the empire, —". All the world is a warse of the sacrifices which Australe absermed each outline world is a warse of the sacrifices which Australe and the sacrifices which a surface when the sacrification is a surface when the sacrification is a surface was not effected to maintain their independence Bingly, a fine base value for the union of all their made for the union of the sacrification of the common cause. The base values of the times to the sacrification to the surface and the sacrification of the surface and the sacrification of the surface and the sacrification of the sacrification bassador, and on the 15th he left Vienna, under a numerous escort of cavalry, disorders which had occurred, nothing would appease the exasperated ama proclamation on the following day, expressing the deepest regret at the.

redoubled activity (2). while the military preparations of the Austrian monarchy proceeded with the march of the Russian armies through Gallicia and Moravia was hastened, drew more closely his bonds of intimacy with the court of St.-Petersburg, and trians could obtain no satisfaction on these points, the Emperor .kg:1 .150 deracy, and extending its dominion through the whole of Italy. As the Aus-Erance in subduing, without the shadow of a prefext, the Helvetic Confethe other hand, the Emperor demanded an explanation of the conduct of satisfaction for the insult offered to the ambassador of the Republic; and, on Seltz, in Germany, were, on the one hand, the Directory insisted on opened at Schize in Germany, were on the one hand, the Directory insisted on tead on a Schize in Germany, were on the one hand, the Directory insisted on When matters were in this combustible state, a spark only was Conferences and took the road for Rastadt (1).

cuq (2): nued without interruption, the negotiations at Rastadt virtually came to an that army as equivalent to a declaration of war; and as their advance conticlared that they would consider the crossing of the Germanic frontier by Moravia. The French government upon that issued a note, in which they destate when they were interrupted by the march of the Russian troops through ing opposite that important point. Matters were in this unsettled of the island of Petersaw, which would have given them the means of crossagreed to that of Ehrenbreitzen; but the Republicans insisted on the cession thatweg, consented to the demolition of Cassel and Kehl, and the Germans river. Subsequently, the French commissioners admitted the principle of the the fortilications of Ehrenbreitzen, all of which lay on the German bank of the Aused to cede Kehl, Cassel, or the tele-de-pont at Huningen, or to demolish middle of its principal stream. As a consequence of this principle, they reshould be that of the thatweg; that is to say, of the division of the valley by the man deputation, on the other hand, insisted that the principle of separation that the important fortress of Ehrenbreitzen should be demolish d. The Gerbe ceded to them at the German end of the bridge of Huningen; and, lastly, then that a piece of ground, adequate to the formation of a tele-de-pont, should ritory opposite to Strasburg, and Cassel and its territory opposite to Mayence; point of view; next that they should be put in possession of Kehl and its terthe islands of the Rhine, which were of very great importance in a military Campo Formio or the independence of Germany. They first demanded all upon a variety of articles, utterly inconsistent with the spirit of the treaty of weighty discussions involved in the Seltz conferences. The French insisted their importance disappeared upon the commencement of the more the mesons Cermanic empire proceeded slowly towards an adjustment; but The negotiations at Rastadt for the settlement of the affairs of the no appearance to adopt measures to make head against the danger. The finances of exciting revolutions in their bosom, the Directory at length began their project for subjugating all the adjoining states by means of Seeing themselves seriously menaced with an armed resistance to tory to meet neasures of the Direc-Emancial

.116

⁽¹⁾ Hard. v. 135, 493, 508. (2) Th. x, 145, 146, 149. Jonn. xi. 8, 9. Lac. x. 341, 388, (3) Jom. xi. 27, 28. Th. x. 154, 157. Hard. vi.

In the midst of this general effery escence, the restraints imposed cant, adversa unt solo imputantur (1) Tacitus .-- "Hac est bellorum pessima conditio . Prospera omnes sibi vindi-Imperial states. But the Directory now experienced the truth of the saying of back on their own frontier, had been following the career of rictory into the had proved far outable, and the Republican armies, instead of being thrown well founded, but they nould never have been heard if the fortune of nar made no preparations to nitheland. These complaints nere, in a great degree, off the European powers, and brought on a war which the government had fiable invasion of neutral rights, which necessarily aroused the indignation of and the Emperor of Russia, while the attack on Switzerland was an unjustiarmy of the Republic, and provoked the hostility at once of the Sublime Porte covered, had given an eccentric direction to the best general and bravest now condemned in no measured terms; the expedition to Egypt, it nas dis-Lyen measures which had formerly been the object of general praise, were known to fame, had been invested with the command of the army of Italy. a retreat, was reduced to the rank of a general of division, and Scherer, unof the inferior agents of the Directory; Moreau, the commander in so glorious conqueror of haples, had been dismissed for striving to repress the rapacity overance the elections; the best generals were in mons, Championnet, the in ective. The old battalions, it was said, had been left in the interior to rection of the armies, all nere made the subject of redement and impassioned their firmest support, gave open rent to their indignation at the "Advocates" against their imbecility and nant of foresight, while the soldiers, bitherto Resuce, the Royalists and the Jacobins, vied with each other in inverging government. The parties who had alternately felt the weight of their venpamphlets, the clubs, nothing was to be beard but declamations against the perrodical press. In every quarter, in the newspapers, the tribune, the the daily journals, and the universal indignation speedily spread to the bating on the frontier. They were, accordingly, no longer enforced against subosed and kept them on was awaning, the soldiers were almost all comdor, could no longer be maintained. The armed force which had of the liber on the liberty of the press after the revolution of the 18th Fructi-

.(g) summ who had brought back the Republican standards to the Alps and the ternation of the provinces, the revalions of the people, the injustice done to painted in the most lively colours the destitute state of the troops, the consstate of extreme termentation, and sent deputations to the Councils, who the south, now threstened with invasion from the Albed army, were in a and deprived the government of all means of resistance. The departments in fortunes in Italy and on the Rhine gave tenfold force to the public discontent, marked out for destruction. The conspiracy was far advanced when the misthree Directors Larer cilliere Lepauz, Treilhard, and Merlin de Douai, were the government (2).

the generals, and the indignation of the soldiers. The nomination of Sièyes to the Directory was the most convincing proof of the temper of the Councils, as he had always and openly expressed his dislike at the constitution and the Directorial government. To elect him, was to proclaim, as it were, that they desired a revolution (1).

such dissimilar opinions on all other subjects, announced the speedily fall of pular clubs had become indispensable. So general a concord among men of them by the revolution of 18th Fructidor, and that the restoration of the poing that the Directory had made a bad use of the dictatorial power given to dervour, the Royalists and Constitutionalists concurred with them in holdunlimited freedom allowed to the press. Without joining in this democratic cies of patriotism would speedily expire if the clubs were not re-opened, and in 1795, and that the same means must be taken to meet it; that every spesuble to electrify the public mind, that the country was in the same danger as law of the 19th Fructidor. The democrats exclaimed that it was indispenthe Directory the arbitrary power with which they had been invested by the the liberty of the press and the popular societies, in order to take away from topic was afforded by the discussions on the proposed alteration of the law on lection, under the present system, was impossible. A still more engrossing were voted by the Councils, but it was apparent to every one that their coltreasury, and the arrears were coming in very slowly. Various new taxes for the year 1799, not more than 210,000,000 france. had been received by the invective. Out of 400,000,000 francs already consumed in the public service eils. The disastrous state of the finances afforded too fair an opportunity for rectors; while the most vehement attacks were made on them in both Counthey refused all accommodation or consultation with the three devoted Dicountry from the perilous situation in which it was placed. For this purpose gain immediate possession of the reins of power, in order to extricate the Councils. It was no longer their object to remodel the constitution, but to bered among their ranks two Directors, and a great majority of both Sièzes soon became the head of the conspirators, who thus numleaures of before the legal period, and instantly proposed that his nomination should thirteen months had been in the Directory, had been appointed four days dexterously availed themselves of the circumstance that Treilbard, who for manent, and every thing seemed to presage a fierce conflict. The commission government. The Directory on their part also declared their sittings pera single commission of eleven members, in other words, a provisional to the message was obtained, and the three committees were constituted into diture, and finance, agreed to declare their sittings permanent, till an answer the Councils, on the recommendation of their committees of war, expenlutionists intended. After waiting a fortnight without receiving any answer, required several days to prepare. But this was by no means what the revoendeavoured to gain time, by promising to give an answer in detail, which of averting them which existed. The Directory, upon receiving this message, the exterior and interior dangers which threatened the state, and the means de la Meurthe, in which they insisted upon being informed of the causes of from the different commissions of the Councils, presented by Boulay noisulareA of Both The first measures of the conspirators were opened by a message birm to poner. Colucr was sincero and honest in his incurious, but ho was armics, possessed none of the influence with the unitiesty so accessory to revive their defined spaces of the influence with the unitiesty so accessive to the ordinarizations but the was so much number the discioust parts in the ordinarizations, but the are so much number the tradectory parts in the general five distributions of this passions on this year, and such first the transfer of the distributions of the passion that the view of the passion of the distributions of the passion of the distributions of the passions of the distributions of the passions of the distribution of the passions of the distribution of the passions of the distribution of the distr

From the hole of the fort for the find the plant of a fairts and a cocerty and had not of the fort for the forth of the first had been controlled in the fairty of the hole of a shall be forty and the medical find the accession on the of the plant of the fine of the medical, then assumed the state Selector, medical, the medical the state for the first had been done of the qualities flut a new political organization of a superior medical, the medical medical the state for the first had been done of the qualities flut a new merely his creature, and had been stated in the medical medical flut of the medical medical flut of the medical medical flut of the medical

Juss, the government of the Inrectory nas overtierned in less than four years after its that establishment, and in twenty months after it had, by a yardent stretch of illegal force, usurped ditelatorial powers. The people of Paravolon, no part in this subversion of their rulers, which say seed of their rulers, when has effected by the force of the internal assemblies illegally directed, tevolutionary ferrour had force of the national assemblies illegally directed, tevolutionary ferrour had expensive intention of the national man and an overtienty to the other, passed over with hardly more expension than a force of the other, passed over with hardly more against on that a force of ministering the other passed of ministering and one extremity to the other, passed over with hardly more against one by the other passed of ministering the other passed of the other be annulled. Lare's oilliere, who was gitted with great political firmness, in rain store to midues Treathest to resist, he saw his larger, and resolved to Just to the storm. He accordingly sont in his resignation, and Coliner, a professional to the storm. He accordingly sont in his resignation, and Coliner, a recommentable of which the store of the councils of the second (1).

Writer, was usined by the Councils in his science (1):

an infatuated republican, who, amidst the general wreek of its institutions, was dreaming only of the social compact and the means of averting a counter revolution. From the moment of their installation, their sentiments on most subjects were found to be so much at variance, that it was evident no cordial co-operation could be expected amongst them (1).

Zewmine The first and most pressing necessity was to stem the fortent of pontact, disaster which had overwhelmed the armies of the Republic. Impontation, disaster which had overwhelmed the armies of the Republic. Imponies of Zurich; and, before the consternation which it occasioned had evacuation of the ridge of the Apennines. These disasters rendered it absortately necessary to take some steps to restore the public confidence, and for this purpose a great change was made in the military commanders of the Republic. Championnet, who had been thrown into prison for evading the orders of the Directory regarding the pillage of the Zeapolitan dominions, was orders of the Directory regarding the pillage of the Zeapolitan dominions, was proposed to establish along the line of the higher Alps; Bernadotte, from was proposed to establish along the line of the higher Alps; Bernadotte, from was proposed to establish along the line of the higher Alps; Bernadotte, from was proposed to establish along the line of the higher Alps; Bernadotte, from was proposed to establish along the line of the higher Alps; Bernadotte, from was; and Joubert, whose exploits in the Tyrol had gained for him a brilliant reputation, nominated to the command of the shattered army of taly (2).

trionts of the Jacobins from their retreats, and the recommencement of the Jacobins from their retreats, and the recommencement of the Jacobins from their retreats, and the recommencement of the Jacobins of the Jacobins from with all the perilons schemes of democratic ambition. Every where the clubs were re-opened; the Jacobins took possession of the Biding-school hall, where the debates of the Constituent Assembly had been held, and began again to pour forth those impassioned declamations from which such streams of blood had already taken their rise. Taught by former disasters, however, they abstained from demanding any sanguinary proceedings, and confined themselves to a streamous support of an agrarian proceedings, and confined themselves to the Councils attended their asgrarian fallen a victim. The leading members of the Councils attended their meetings, and swelled the ardent multitudes who already crowded their assemblies (5), flattering themselves, even in the decreptitude of the revolutionary fervour, with the hopeless idea that they would succeed in directing the torrent.

which to.

The times were no longer the same, and it was impossible to the fine.

The people had not forgotten the bad in 1799 to revive the general enthusiasm which ten years before had intoxicated ever y head in France. The people had not forgotten the Reign of Terror, and the dreadful calamities which had followed the ascendant of the Jacobins; they received their promises without joy, without allusion, and listened with undisguised anxiety to the menaces which they dealt out despair; who were well aware that, without the aid of the populace, they would be unable to overturn what yet remained of the fabric of society. Wo cannot twice," said the citizens, "go through the same fiery ordeal; the lacobins have no longer the power of the assignate at their command; the illusion of the people has been dispelled by their sufferings; the army regards their rule with horror." The respectable citizens, worn out with convulsions, and apprehensive beyond every thing of a return to the yoke of the sions, and apprehensive beyond every thing of a return to the yoke of the sions, and apprehensive beyond every thing of a return to the yoke of the sions, and apprehensive beyond every thing of a return to the yoke of the sions, and apprehensive beyond every thing of a return to the yoke of the multitude, sighed ter the restoration of a stable government, and were prepared to raily round any leader who would subject the passions of the aldasabite te '. 15 indisple ort in the public Recolution to the yoke of despotic power (1).

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 331, 332. Lac. xiv. 358, 360, 361, (2) Th. x. 333. Jom. Vie de Nap. i.361. Align. ii. 446. Gob. Mem. i. 101.

was unminent; and it was much to be feared that the frontiers would be a great supply for the public necessities, but in the mean while the danger armies. These vigorous measures promised, in the course of time, to procure time, a conscription of two hundred thousand men ordered, to recruit the After long debates, this arbitrary measure was adopted, and, at the same in severity with the fortunes of those from whom it was to be extracted. of 120,000,000 of france, or L 4,800,000, upon the opulent classes, mereasing by the service all the classes of the state, and levy a forced loan eint lise of , 5871 .-

with their defence (2). any aded before any ellicient support could be afforded to the armies intrusted anarchy into which the provinces had fallen, and the total absence of all or the treasury difficult of execution, was the complete state of Anarty of What rendered every measure for the supply either of the army in this distracted country; and France was menaced with an anarchy, so But this law, inhuman as it was, proved wholly unadequate to restore order their property be rendered hable for all acis of robbery which there occurred. fransported for every assassination that was committed in that district, and régime, should be seized as bostages, and that four of them should be emigrants, and all those known to have been at all connected with the ancient ever a commune fell into a notorious state of anarchy, the relations of the emigrants were the sole cause of the disorders, they enacted, that whenon the supposition, at once arbitrary and unfounded, that the relations of App adventure on the perious course of democratic innovation Proceeding monument of the desperate tyranny to which those are in the end reduced, the bostoges and carried in the councils, and remains a singular and instructive Greet law of circumstances a law, named the law of the hostages, was proposed the strong pillaged the neak with impunity, as in the rudest ages. In these ments there was no longer any authority obeyed, or order maintained, but merstable consequence of a recolution, arisen, that in most of the departalong the highways. To such a height had these disorders, the natural and the forests, and pillaged travellers and merchandise of every description the refractory conscripts, forming themselves into bands of robbers, occupied companies of the Sun renewed their excesses in the south, and every where The Vendcens and Chouans had, in the west, broken into fearful activity; the authority from the time that the troops had been removed to the frontier.

tournes on The disturbances in the nestern provinces, during this paralysis ·(e) dseaf spr ut nas ananting, nhose tron arm, supported by victory, had then crushed to much the more terrible than that of 1795, as the Committee of Public Safety

the authority of government, had again risen to the most formi-

-- 13. -- to become saverate ecot to mettin bull tille bub

(2) The x. 336, 337 Jour 716 de Asp i. 363, (5) Th x 231,335 M x ii 416 Gob 1 62,08 and Jos 1 doc 1 doc 2 doc supporters. They now felt the severity of the confiscation which they had the Revolution, and thus spread an universal panic through its most opulent former convulsions, it now fell on those classes who had been enriched by verity; and as all the fortunes of the Royalists had been extinguished in the whelmed the country. The forced loan was levied with the last seediction of than the external disasters and internal disorders which over-Nor did the financial measures of government inspire less dread ulmost efforts of the grand army under Cathelineau. entered in triumph into Lantes, which had six years before defeated the strophe of the Royalist army; and Godet de Chatillon, after a brilliant victory, queror of Algiers, a chief of great ability, revenged in Mans the bloody catatories of the Vendeens, menaced la Touraine (1). Bourmour, afterwards consuccesses of the Royalists; and the flame, spreading further than the early vienames immortalized in those wonderful wars, were again signalized by the fresh breaking out of that terrible volcano. Chollet, Montaigne, Herbiers, Britanny, had spread to la Vendee, and the Republic beheld with dismay the In March 1799, the spirit of Chouanism, besides its native departments in kept up against the priests; and it soon rose to the most formidable height. eruel and unnecessary persecutions which the Director Lareveillière-Lépeaux rection. This fresh outbreak of the insurrection, was chiefly owing to the increasing weakness of government, their activity again led them to insur-HISTORY OF EUROPE. [.6671

plain of Marengo (5). barrier of the Great St.-Bernard, and descended like a thunderbolt on the year, found the greater part of those dauntless followers who scaled the battle of Zurich; and it was in their ranks that Napoleon, in the following which enabled Massena to extricate the Republic from extreme peril at the the cause of national independence. It was the reinforcements thus obtained were marched off to the frontier, where they rendered essential service to were no sooner instructed in the rudiments of the military art, than they disciplined at the depôts in the interior of the country. These conscripts great activity; and soon a hundred thousand young men were enrolled and gorous management of Bernadotte, the conscription proceeded with the military forces of the Republic. Under the able and vi-The executive were more successful in their endeavours to repart of the former value of the stock at the commencement of the Revolution. third which the great confiscation of 1797 had left; little more than a sixtieth relic of former bankruptcy, had fallen to six per cent on the remnant of a fourths of its amount (2). The three per cents consolidated, that melancholy circulation. Its collection took three years, and then only realized threeand specie, under the dread of arbitrary exactions, entirely disappeared from in the exhausted state of the country, it was impossible to raise this sum, single exaction. The tax voted was 120,000,000 francs, or L.f.,800,000; but circumstances, the opulent found their whole income disappearing under a gatherers, who proceeded on secret and frequently false information. In these according to the fortune of the individual, but every thing was left to the taxrendered it especially obnoxious. No fixed rule was adopted for the increase inflicted on others. The ascending scale, according to which it was levied, into that state of disorder and weakness which is at once the consequence While the Republic, after ten years of convulsions, was fast relapsing school hall, where their meetings were held, and, supported by the Council Cing copins use electing but to the test the at once closed the fliding-Under the auspices of so rigorous a leader, the power of the la-

(2) Lac. xiv. 390, 400. Goli. i. 73, 75, 78.

of democracy which were again beginning to dissolve the social body (2) res, and inducing him to exert all his strength in combaining those principles importance, for he soon succeeded in confirming the naicring ideas of Batrolution lie accession to the administration at this juncture nas of great of marchy, a vigour and resolution unknown in the former stages of the Reintensted with the direction of allairs, was to exhibit, in combaling the forces eacres of Lyon nere not to be renewed, and that the Jecobin enthusiast, erm out tell band noo, you but the police, but they soon found that the marof Collot d Herbors and a regicide member of the Convention, raised to the anthority by their subsersion. The people beheld with dismay the associate nere striving to reconstruct the elements of society, and establish regular passions, he now resolved to attach himself to that conservative party who tionists nas on the wane, and, having raised himself to emmence by their efforts the perceived at this critical period that the ascendant of the revoluas a spy upon his former friends, and to secure the Directory against their prech of parties to make his own fortune, be nas enimently qualified to act ther by affection nor principle to their cause, and seeking only in the shipsigns, steeped in the atrocities of 1 jon, a recicle and atheist, bound nermemper of the Jacobin club, and thoroughly acquainted with all their dedifferent administrations, but under so many different governments. An old enabled him so long to maintain his influence, not only with many de se gave indication of the great abilities and versatile character n bich in mater of police. This eelebrated man, who under kapoleon eame and in the government of the empire, early and in the foreignment of the empire, early

In these perious circumstances, the birectory named Forcut mito bette in power all the patrione resolutions of his earlier years (1) Council of the Incients, stigmatized as a perfidious priest, who was about tean no overnhelmed with insectives, and Siezes, the president of the projected the expedition to I gypt, the cause of all the public disasters, Mobecame in an especial manner, the object of attack. He was accused of haring bettle of Novi, and the retreat of the army of Italy over the Alps Talleyrand ardent feelings nere roused into a perfect fury, when the news arrived of the toration of their cannon and pikes to the inhabitants of the faubourgs. These the establishment of manufactures of arms on the public places, and the resplood of the people," the eneral disarming of the Royalists, a lety en masse, in foud terms the instant punishment of all "the leeches who lived on the celebrated the manes of the stellins shot on the plain of Greuelle, demanded whole atroctice of 1798 speedily held up for applause and imitation. They all the furious revolutionists of the age, nere there assembled, and the extolled as the perfection of society Felix I epelletier, Arena, Drouet, and Babouf had bequeathed to the last Democrats of the Revolution, universally in an especial manner, the object of invective, and the agrarian law, which been considered as the basis of social union. The separation of property was, ever closed (1). bin club, which had spread such havoe through the world, at last and for August; but it was then earried into effect without opposition, and the Jacocution of the measure was postponed till after the anniversary of the 10th Augments of Fouche, resolved upon the decisive step. The exethe majority, consisting of Sieyes, Barras, and Roger Ducos, persuaded by the of 1795, that the Republic could make head against its enemies. However, that it was only by favouring the clubs, and reviving the revolutionary spirit members as to the expedience of adopting it, Moulins and ot desiring society was contrary to law; but there was a division of opinion among its rested with the power of taking this decisive step, as the organization of the blow by closing their meetings altogether. The Directory were legally inrection to support their ambitious projects. Fouche resolved to follow up his opinion had changed; the people were no longer disposed to rise in insurclamations were renewed with as much vehemence as ever. But public reassembled in a new place of meeting in the Rue du Bac, where their deassemblies in that situation. The Democrats, expelled from their old den, of the Ancients, within whose precincts it was placed, prohibited any further remaining chance of salvation to the country (2). leader who might execute the coup d'état, which he foresaw was the only of his danger, he was already beginning to look around for some military were sufficient to point him out as the victim of republican fury, and, aware of different parties, which had so long desolated the Republic. These opinions France, and that liberty was utterly incompatible with the successive tyranny hesitated to declare openly that a strong government was indispensable to dency of the democratic dogmas with which he commenced in life, and never Republic to Prussia, in truth, he had long ago seen the pernicious tenheld up to public execration as a perfidious priest, who had sold the had so powerful an effect in promoting the Revolution in 1789, was now the author of the celebrated pamphlet, "What is the Tiers-Etat," which stigmatized as the author of the measure. This able, but speculative man, diately were filled with the most furious invectives against Sielyes, who was course to their usual engine, the press; and the journals imme-Yiotence of the daily Deprived of their point of rendezvous, the Democrats had re-

Attack on the meanwhile, the state of the press required immediate attack on the meanwhile, the state of the press required immediate attack on the fouring the fouring the fouring the fouring to subject our regular government. The only law by which it could be restrained, was one which declared that all attempts to subvert the Republic should be punished with death; a sanguinary regulation, the offspring of defined be punished with death; a sanguinary regulation, the offspring of define and called with death; a sanguinary regulation, the offspring of define three directors declared that they could no longer carry on the present the three directors declared that they could no longer carry on the government, and France was on the point of the oxpedient of applying to the present when the Directory thought of the expedient of applying to the prese the article of the constitution which gave the executive power the right to arrest article of the constitution which gave the executive power the right to arrest could be more forced than such an interpretation of this clause (5), which was obviously intended for a totally different purpose; but necessity and the well-known principle, Salus Populi suprema Lex, seemed to justify, on the well-known principle, Salus Populi suprema Lex, seemed to justify, on

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 366, 367, Lac. xiv. 363 Mign. ii. 117, (2) Th. x. 368, Mga ii. 446. Gob. 125, 130. (3), Ant. 114.

s at a s of the ground afternards taken by Charles I, a stretch undispensable

This bold step produced an immediate ebuildion among the dethe unmediate appression of their publications (1) on, which authorized the apprehension of the editors of elecen journals, and for the existence of regular government, and an arrel, was at length resolved

All thoughts were aheady turned tonards a military chief espable of putting nat, n hose attachment to democratical principles nas nell known cessfully rentured on the bold step of dismissing Bernadotte, the minister of nas supported by the nhole force of the Jacobin party, and soon after suc-245 to 171, a proposal of fourdan to declare the country in danger, which confinuing their adrantage, succeeded in throwing out, by a majority of tionary zeal, but not a snord nas drann The three resolute directors, tors, the fall of liberty," and all the other overflowings of revoluera at an inostile measures The tribune resounded with " dietamocrats, but it was confined to declamations and threats, with-shade by the romantic marvels of his Egyptian expedition. The Directory had early campaigns, splendid as they were, had been almost thrown into the youthful bero n ho had inflicted channed victory to his standards, and n hose opposite party in this emergency, all eyes nere already turned ton ards that Augereau and Bernadotte had openly thrown thems: It es into the arms of the requisite for the task, lassena nas famed only as a skilful soldier, nhile military talents, was known not to possess the energy and moral resolution had recently been killed at hori, Moreau, notwithstanding his consumnate thousands of recims already designed, under the name of hostapes, the signal liation re-established under the name of forced loans, assassmation prepared, poner, the apologists of the system of terror thundering in the tribune, sporobbers every where assembled in their infernal caverns, the wicked in was generally persecuted, all men of honour chased from public situations, loning graphic picture of the internal state of France at this period -" Merit A contemporary republican writer, of no common talent, has drawn the folspecis been so gloom;, both from external disaster and internal oppression Bepublic Aerer since the commencement of the war had its proing talent should seize the belm, to save the sinking fortunes of the In truth, it was high time that some military leader of commandrecolutions he was to achieve in the world (2) ror of its fleeting changes, nere filled with conjectures as to the future ral precursor of some great political event, and the journals, a faithful mirppe mind was already in that uncertain and agulated state which is the genethat he recolved to hisse the English erussers and return to I rance. The puintelligence of the disastrous state of the Republic, and it was by their advice and thing But Lucien and toseph Bonsparte had conveyed to Aspoleon full army from the shores of the hile, but it had broken up without achieving alread) assembled an ummense fleet in the Mediterraneau to bring back the nords the 'country is in danger,' the same cries, the same shouls nere heard for pillage, murder, and conflagration anxiously looked for, couclied in the

(2) Th x 35, 377 316,0 d 448 Lac 217 362

in the clubs as in 1795; the same executioners, the same victims; liberly, properly, could no longer be said to exist; the citizens had no security for their lives—the state for its finances. All Europe was in arms against us; America even had declared against our tyranny; our armies were routed, our conquests lost, the territory of the Republic menaced with invasion (1). Such was the situation of France before the revolution of the 18th Brumaire." And such is the picture of the ultimate effect of democratic convulsions, And such is the picture of the ultimate effect of democratic convulsions, this such the miseries which compelled the nation, instead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead of the feeble sceptre of Louis, to receive the dreaded sword of Nainslead

The despatches, containing the account of the expedition into special at this time, and of the marvellous rictories of Mont Thabor and Aboukir, articles, and of the marvellous rictories of Mont Thabor and Aboukir, article at this time, and spread far and wide the impression that the conqueror of Rivoli was the destined saviour of the state, for whom all classes were so anxiously looking. His name was in every mouth. Where is he? What will he do? What chance is there that he will avoid the English cruisers? Were the questions universally asked. Such was the anxiety of the public mind on the subject, that rumour had twice outstripped the hopes of his friends, and announced his arrival; and when at length the telegraph gave the official intelligence that he had arrived at Fréjus, the public transports knew official intelligence that he had arrived at Fréjus, the public transports knew no bounds (2).

hero who was to terminate the difficulties of the Republic (5). orchestra; and more than one enthusiast expired of joy at the advent of the theatres; patriolic songs again sent forth their heart-stirring strains from the joyful intelligence was announced, amidst thunders of applause, at all the much the more entrancing as they succeeded a long period of disaster; the Discourses of this sort, in every mouth, threw the public into transports, so end than the public good and the termination of the misfortunes of the country. edness precluded the idea that he would employ the dictatorship to any other friends of liberty, were it not that his well-known principles and disinterestevidence of the second. So rare a combination might suggest alarm to the bore testimony to the first; his astonishing victories afforded irrefragable the very highest order. His proclamations, his negotiations, his treaties, ramids; in whom all the world recognised hoth civil and military talents of self, who had caused the French standards to float on the Capitol and the Pyand here he was, dropt from the clouds: a fortunate soldier presented himhad been turned towards a hero who could restore peace to desolated France, the capital. The intoxication was universal, the joy unanimous. All wishes announced his arrival, and the important intelligence speedily spread over immediately set out for Paris. The telegraph, with the rapidity of the winds, on board the vessels; Kapoleon, amidst universal acclamations, landed and A multitude, intoxicated with joy and hope, seized the first boats, and rushed government. The laws of quarantine were in a moment forgotten. on their coast, their enthusiasm broke through all the restraints of When the people at Frejus heard that the conqueror of Egypt was nis jourThe conqueror was greeted with the most enthusiastic reception the

The conqueror was greeted with the most enthusiant Vienne, and The first to meet him; his journey Pairs. Lyon, the people came forth in crowds to meet him; his journey resembled a continual triumph. The few bells which the Revolution had left in the course of his journey to Paris, and the intelligence which he there obnoto execution. The enthusiasm, hon e. et, with which he had been received landed in I rance without any fixed project for earrying his design arrived, and resolved to seize the supreme authority, hapoleon 341 A 14 Ipough consinced that the moment be had so long tooked for had moment had presented himself in the capital rectory at the appearance of the renouned conqueror, who at so critical a prevailed on both sides, and a vague disquietude already pervaded the Divictories of the Pyramids, of Mont Thabor, and Aboulur, but mutual distrust appearance, dallering, and splendid encontums were pronounced on the sented in public on the following day (1) his reception then has, to external received by Colner, and it was arranged that he should be prenounced to the government that the dreaded commander had arrived. He was him at Arcola, recognised his figure, and loud cries of Vive Bonaparte I anthe Directory, the soldiers at the grie of the palace, who had serred under out to meet him by another road Ino hours after his arrival he waited on uncepectedly at Paris, his wife and brothers, mistaking his route, had gone the bonfires on all the eminences On the folh October he arrived in the churches were rung on his approach, his course at night marked by Exicances of his own to induce him to desire the overthrow of the Bovertachance of safety was in the authority of a dictator, and who had also private added if Talley rand, who was too elear-sighted not to perceive that the only they pointed him out as the fit associate in his designs, and to these were soon sole hope of the flepublic is in you " These nords nere not lost on Sapoleon, tal e counsel only of jour own gemue, and the dangers of the country, the they never know the raine of time fou can be of no use here Go, general, moment for action has arrived, large bodies are until for the lead of armies, undon, said, " You see how it is, general, they are baranguing when the peads, Sieges apprearied hapoleon, and, taking him into the embrasure of a critical moment of the day, when the Committee of Government had lost their ted his opinion of the nearness of his colleagues to Lapoleon. At the most of the sections on the fair bendemane (forh hos (193), he had testifirm hand of a vigorous and able military leader. Even so far back as the rethe near and oppressive government which was now desolating France, the Suyes, and he had long revolved in his mind the project of substituting, for your of the Directory nere possessed of any personal consideration except The circumstances of the time were singularly tarourable for such a design tanded of the state of the cour try, made him at once determine on the attempt

ال دو معودا الم المعواد

(a) 100m

 $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{2}$, and form, that, previous to happelen's arrival, nationar projects had been not only of the restoration. Deen not only set on a foot, but were far advanced, for the restoration of monarchical authority. The brothere of happelen, adequate happelen, and Luctor, were deeply implicated in these intrigues. The fabre Sucke as one time thought of placing the Pulve of Bruinswick on the though parts were on foot a title Louis VIII to place of placing the Pulvinswick on the Chour bons, and negotiations were on foot with Louis VIII restoration of the Court happen of the court of the court of the court of the fabre of the fa sibility of continuing the government of brance under the Republiindeed, so general was the impression at that period of the impos-strengthoby these species and (c) and control of contro seductions (2). in engaging Bernadotte, whose republican principles were proof against their favour his enterprise; but Moreau hung back, and all their efforts had failed already engaged Macdonald, Leclere, Lefebyre, Angerean, and Jourdan, to inducing the leaders of the army to co-operate in his elevation; they had parte were in a more effectual way advancing their brother's interests, by associates (1). But in the midst of these intrigues, Joseph and Lucien Bonawere to have been his reward, besides two millions to divide among his were fixed for playing the part of General Monk; twelve millions of livres had been dismissed or conceived themselves ill-used by the Direcsounded, hastened to pay their court to him, and with them all who the rue Chantereine, than the whole generals who had been No sooner had Kapoleon arrived at his unassuming dwelling in government seemed to be insensibly gliding into his hands (3). aftendance. Eight days had hardly elapsed, and already the direction of ment of the Seine, an active and intriguing partisan, were assiduous in their tice, Fouche, the head of the police, and Real, a commissary in the departof the military department of the Republic, Cambacéres, the minister of juschiefly superintended the civil concerns, and Moulins, who was at the head of administration, awanting. Sieves and Roger Ducos, the two Directors who to him on his arrival. Nor were official functionaries, and even the members a great number of the leading deputies in both Chambers, had paid their court for his indomitable firmness in the most trying scence of the Revolution, and leader in the municipality, Regnault St.-Angely, long known and respected the legislature were also disposed to favour the enterprise. Roederer, the old illustrious band of military chiefs, many of the most influential members of advances, and affected to consult him on his future designs. In addition to this he was at length won by the address of his great rival, who made the first dictatorship to Kapoleon; and although Moreau at first appeared undecided, dueed, by the desperate state of the Republic, to concur in offering the military standing their many differences of opinion on other subjects, had been inreau, Macdonald, Bournonville, Leelere, Lefebvre, and Marbot, who, notwithand were warmly attached to him, there were now assembled Jourdan, Ange-Besides Lannes, Murat, and Berthier, who had shared his fortunes in Egypt, dervous of the friends of any private individual, how eminent socver. tory. His saloon soon resembled rather the court of a monarch than the renoffering and anxiously pressing upon him the command of the armies (4). and Cohier vainly endeavoured to rid themselves of so dangerous a rival, by rience had proved to be so miserably defective; while the Directors Barras simply at the head of affairs, and to change the constitution, which expe-Club. Sieyes, Talleyrand, Roger Ducos, and Regnier, proposed to place him their power, provided he would maintain the principles of the Riding-school offered Kapoleon a military dictatorship, and agreed to support him with all mous as to the course which should be adopted. The Republican generals The ideas of these different persons, however, were far from being unani-character. Affecting to withdraw from the eager gaze of the multitude, be thorough dissimulation, which formed such striking features of his dissimula-tion of his conduct. was influenced by that profound knowledge of human nature and In the midst of this flattering adulation, the conduct of Napoleon Profound 435 437, x, 125, 437, Nap. iii. 6 i. 65. Gob. i. 212 (1) Capofiguo, Hict. de la Restauration. i. 129, 135. Aap. i. 66. (2) Th. x. 434. Bonr, iii. 11, 45. (5) Gob. i. 211, 212. Zap. i. 65, 65, 74. Th. x.

yabopon. roddas or want he the male, lo notionri.

Republic (1). every success of no moment till that gem was restored to the coroner of the land; he appeared meonsolable for the loss of Italy, and seemed to consider Scratcd to him the successes of Massena in Switzerland, and Brune in Holprofound regret at the misfortunes of brance, in vain the directors exagon scientific subjects; if he spoke on politics at all, it was only to express his tited only the learned men of the Institute, and conversed with them entirely to the intelligence of the age. To private dinners in his own house, he inof a simple code of criminal and civil jurisprudence which might be adapted descender of Louis AVI, conversed long with him and Treilhard on the want feeding langers might be invited; and selecting M. Tronchet, the eloquent reprist, given in his honour by the minister of justice, he requested that the his being recognised. When obliged to accept an invitation to a sumpluous cealed bor, as if to avoid the thunders of applause which always attended presented to him; and, when he went to the theatre, frequented only a congarad to ruonoil oil tiguos oil a shubi ribai baileingartetb to elisit enoromut bride of the Conqueror of the Pyramids. He postponed from day to day the elle ribbon; a dress which, under seeming simplicity, revealed the secret tional institute, or in a grey surtout, with a Turkish sabre suspended by a seldom showed himself in public; and then only in the costume of the Ma-

from it, which has raised him to the Directory; unless you take care, he will connexion with Prussia, the rery thing which should have excluded him pelow the age of forty, which the constitution required for that elevated that he should be taken into the government instead of Steyes, though Daid them in private the greatest attention, but actually proposed to them strached to the Republican side; and, with this view, he not only At hel ma, who refuse president of the directory, and Moulins, who were both strongly that stings and so that or but and bapolcon's lirst attempt was to engage in his interest Cohier, the ever, agreed in thinking that the Republic had more to fear from the joung full to inspire in all the friends of real freedom." Cohier and Moulins, nonthey are dictated alone by the tears which so dangerous an election could not many is much-less material. Ambition has no share in these observations, Recolution was often far more essential than the maturity of age which in constitution did not recollect that the maturity of judenit produced by the in the pursuit of forms no must not forget realities. Those nho framed the him. It is true, I am below the legal age required by the constitution, but self you to the coalesced powers. It is absolutely necessary to get quit of the footsteps of Cromnell, or Monk, or Washington? What change is he liketale of I rance and of the world "What will Bonaparte do? Is he to follow on your busied, in anticipating the changes which he i as to effect in the realistic long, and speculation with its thousand tongues nas creek nhere Reanwhile all Lurope was resounding with the return of Aspothe true career which lay before him was the command of the armies (2) cerse to occupy ourselves more about his concerns, and endeavour, if 1 userble, to cance him to be forgot —Contex, i 216. of a man whose sufentions are so susp crons for a from giving h n a fresh thesive of glory, fet us from giving h na concerns.

3' CON : 502 110 154 x 4T 104 ver oal 10 00 : qer (t)

(3) 1604 1 250 1004 2 and gracion at Napoleon Art 1 is period decyces a natgnation at Napoleon Art 2 is no observed to the stander congressiblete ourself has a nature to a stander to a select on a stander to a select on a stander to a select on a stander to a stander to a select on a stander to a stande

who boasts, with a ridiculous exaggeration, of the great successes of the Republic, he spoke of the Russians beat, and Genor saved, of the innumerable armies which were about to be raised. He even reproached me with not having brought back my soldiers from Igypt - What! I answered, 'you tell me that you are overflowing with troops, that two hundred thousand infintry, and forty thousand cavilry, will soon be on foot If that is so, to what purpose should I have brought back the remains of my army?' He then changed his tone, and confessed that he thought us all lost. He snoke of external enemies, of internal enemies, and at that word he looked steadily in my face I also gave him a glance ,-but patience, the pear will soon be ripe " Soon after, Appoleon expressed himself with his wonted vehemence, against the agitation which reigned among the Jacobins, and of which the Ridingschool hall was the centre "Your own brothers," replied Bernadotte, "were its principal founders, and yet you accuse me of having favoured that club it is to the instructions of some one, I lnow not who, that we are to ascribe the agitation that now prevails" At these words Aspoleon could no longer contain himself "True, general,' he replied with the utmost vehemence, "and I would rather live in the woods than in a society which presents no security against violence" Their conversation only augmented the breach. and soon after they separated in sullen discontent (1)

Though a few of the military, however, held out, the great pro-

made the same request, his brothers, I ucien and Joseph, daily augmented his pirty in the Councils, the 8th and 9th regiments of drigoons, who had served under him in Italy, with the 21st chasseurs, who had been organized by him, were devoted to his service. Moreau said, "He did not wish to be engriged in any intrigues, but that, when the moment for action arrived, he would be found at his post (2)." The people of Paris, who awanted in anxious expectation the unfolding of the plot, could no longer conceal their impatience. "Fifteen days have clapsed," said they, "and nothing has been done (3). Is he to leave us, as he did on his return from Ital., and let the Republic perish in the agony of the factions who dispute its remains?" Every thing announced the among the factions who dispute its remains?" Every thing announced the among the factions who dispute its remains?"

By the able and indefatigable efforts of Lucien Bonaparte, a braguest time at which he himself was president, was given at the Council of the Ameents, in honour of Napoléon It passed off with sombre

⁽¹⁾ Pour i + 46 51
(2) An intere t ng conversat on took place be-small arm es you have frequently defeated large ones — Eventfen "rejoned he si wa always the infer riore with was defeated by the supror When with a small body of men I was in tranquillity. Every one spoke in a whisper, anxiety was depicted on every face, a suppressed agitation was visible even in the midst of apparent quiet. His own countenance was disturbed; his absent and preoccupied air sufficiently indicated that some great project was at hand. He rose soon from table, and left the party, which, although gloomy, had answered the object in view, which was to bring together six, hundred persons of various political principles, and thus engage them to act in unison in any common enterprise. It was on that night, that the arrangements for the conspiracy were finally made between Sièves and Napoléon. It was agreed that the government should be overturned; that, instead of the five directors, three consuls should be anpointed, charged with a dictatorial power which was to last for three months; that Napoléon, Sièves, and Roger Ducos, should fill these exalted stations: and that the Council of the Ancients should pass a decree on the 18th Brumaire (9th Nov.), at seven in the morning, transferring the legislative body to St.-Cloud, and appointing Napoléon commander of the guard of the legislature, of the garrison at Paris, and the national guard. On the 19th, the decisive event was to take place (1).

conspirators in the Conneil of known to a great number of persons, was faithfully kept. The preparations, both civil and military, went on without interruption. Orders were given to the regiments, both infantry and cavalry, which could be relied on, to parade in the streets of Chantereine and Mont-Blanc, at seven o'clock in the morning of the 18th. Moreau, Lefebvre, and all the generals, were summoned to attend at the same hour, with the forty adjutants of the national guard. Meanwhile the secret Council of the Ancients laboured, with shut doors and closed windows, to prepare the decree which was to pass at seven in the morning; and as it forbade all discussion, and the Council of Five Hundred were only summoned to meet at eleven, it was -hoped the decree would pass at once, not only without any opposition, but before its opponents could be aware of its existence (2).

During the three critical days which followed, the secret, though

with all

Meanwhile Napoléon, in his secret intercourse with the different leaders, was indefatigable in his endeavours to disarm all opposition. Master of the most profound dissimulation, he declared himparties self, to the chiefs of the different parties, penetrated with the ideas which he was aware would be most acceptable to their minds. To one he protested that he certainly did desire to play the part of Washington, but only in conjunction with Sièyes: the proudest day of his life would be that when he retired from power; to another, that the part of Cromwell appeared to him ignoble, because it was that of an impostor. To the friends of Sièves he professed himself impressed with the most profound respect for that mighty intellect before . which the genius of Mirabeau had prostrated itself; that, for his own part, he could only head the armies, and leave to others the formation of the constitution. To all the Jacobins who approached him he spoke of the extinction of liberty, the tyranny of the Directory, and used terms which sufficiently recalled his famous proclamation which had given the first impulse to the revolution of the 18th Fructidor (5). In public he announced a review of the

3/

"hi

⁽¹⁾ Bour. ni. 57, 59. Goh. i. 226. Nap. i. 73.

Mign. ii. 450 Th. x. 452, 455.
(2) Th. x. 456, 457. Nap. i. 73, 75. (3) Th. x. 457. Lac. xiv. 408, 409.

At a small dinner party, given by Napoléon at this time, where the Director Gohier was present, the conversation turned on the turquois used by the .

Orientals to clasp their turbans, Riving from his chair, Napoleon took out of a private drawer two brooches, richly set with those jewels, one of which he maye to a he gave to Gohier, the other to Deaix. "It is a he gave to Gohier, the other to Deaix. "It is a little toy," said he, "which we Remblicans may give and receive mill." and receive without impropriety for a the Soon after, the conversation troops on the morning of the 18th Brumaire, after which he was to set off to take the command of the army on the frontier, All the proposed arrangements were made with the utmost precision. By daybreak on the 18th Brumaire (8th Nov.), the boulevards were filled with a numerous and splended cavalry, and all the officers in and around Paris repaired, in full dress, to the rue Chantereine. The Denuties of the Ancients, who were not in the secret, assembled, with surprise at the unwonted hour, in their place of meeting, and already the conspirators were there in sufficient strength to give them the majority. The president of --- menaced ," said he. "is menaced at once by the anarchists, and the enemy, we must instantly take measures for the public safets. We may reckon on the support of General Bonaparte, it is under the shadow of his protecting arm that the Councils must deliberate on the measures required by the interests of the Repubhe" The uninitiated members were startled, and a considerable agitation prevailed in the assembly, but the majority were instant and pressing, and at eight o'clock the decree was passed, after a warm opposition, transferring the seat of the legislative body to St-Cloud, appointing them to meet there on the following day at noon, charging Napolcon with the execution of the decree, authorizing him to take all the measures necessary for its due performance, and appointing him to the command of the garrison of Paris, the national guard, the troops of the line in the military divisions in which it stood, and the guard of the two Councils. This extraordinary decree was ordered to ties, and obeyed by all the citizens (1) Napoleon was in his own house in the rue Chantereine when the rators in the messenger of state arrived; his levee resembled rather the court of a powerful sovereign than the dwelling of a general about to undertake a perilous enterprise. No sooner was the decree received, than he opened the doors, and, advancing to the portico, read it aloud to the brilliant assemblage, and asked if he might rely on their support? They all answered with enthusiasm in the affirmative, putting their hands on their swords. He then addressed humself to Lefebvre, the governor of Paris, who had arrived in ill humour at

[CHAP XXVII.

- 1 2 6 6 6 6 1 -

be instantly placarded on all the walls of Paris, dispatched to all the authori-

"Well, Lefebere

332

let it perish in .

sabre which I hore at the battle of the Pyramids, I give it you as a picuge of my esteem and confidence " The appeal was irresistible to a soldier's feelings "les," replied Lefebvre, strongly moved, "let us throw the advocates into the river." Joseph Bonaparte had brought Bernadotte, but, upon seeing what was in agitation, he rapidly retired to warn the Jacobins of their danger. Fouche, at the first intelligence of what was going forward, had ordered the

f C L as & noteon

barriers to be closed, and all the usual precautions taken which mark a period of public alarm, and hastened to the rue Chantereine to receive his orders; but Napoléon ordered them to be opened and the usual course of things to continue, as he marched with the nation and relied on its support. A quarter of an hour afterwards he mounted on horseback, and put himself at the head of his brilliant suite and fifteen hundred horsemen, and rode to the Tuileries. Names since immortalized in the rolls of fame were there assembled: Moreau and Macdonald, Berthier and Murat, Lannes, Marmont, and Lefebvre. The dragoons, assembled as they imagined for a review, joyfully followed in the rear of so splendid a cortege; while the people, rejoicing at the termination of the disastrous government of the Directory, saw in it the commencement of the vigour of military, instead of the feebleness of legal ascendant, and rent the air with their acclamations (4).

The military chief presented himself at the bar of the Ancients. attended by that splendid staff. "Citizen-representatives," said he, "the Republic was about to perish when you saved it. Wo to those who shall attempt to oppose your decree! Aided by my brave companions in arms, I will speedily crush them to the earth. You are the collected wisdom of the nation; it is for you to point out the measures which may save it. I come, surrounded by all the generals, to offer you the support of their arms. I name Lefebyre my lieutenant: I will faithfully discharge the duty you have intrusted to mé. Let none seek, in the past, examples to regulate the present; nothing in history has any resemblance to the close of the eighteenth century: nothing in the eighteenth century resembles this moment. We are resolved to have a Republic; we are resolved to have it founded on true liberty and a representative system. I swear it in my own name, and in that of my companions in arms."-"We swear it," replied the generals, A deputy attempted to speak: the president stopped him, upon the ground that all deliberation was interdicted till the Council met at St.-Cloud. The assembly immediately broke up; and Napoléon proceeded to the gardens of the Tuileries, where he passed in review the regiments of the garrison, addressing to each a few energetic words, in which he declared that he was about to introduce changes which would bring with them abundance and glory. The weather was beautiful; the confluence of spectators immense; their acclamations rent the skies; every thing announced the transition from anarchy to despotic power (2).

While all was thus proceeding favourably at the Tuileries, the Council of Five Hundred, having received a confused account of the revolution which was in progress, tumultuously assembled in their hall. They were hardly met, when the message arrived from the Ancients, containing the decree removing them to St.-Cloud. No sooner was it read

⁽¹⁾ Lac. xiv. 413. Nap. i. 78. Th. x. 461, 462. Goh. i. 254.

⁽²⁾ Th x. 461, 463. Nap. i. 79, Lac. xiv. 413,

During these events, the anxiety of all classes in Paris on the approaching revolution had risen to the highest pitch. A pamphlet, eagerly circulated at the doors of the Councils, contains a curious picture of the ideas of the moment, and the manner in which the most obvious approaching events are glossed over to those engaged in them The dialogue ran as follows:—"One of the Five Hundred. Between ourselves, my friend, I am seriously alarmed at the part assigned to Bonaparte in this affair. His renown, his consideration, the just confidence of the soldiers in his talents themselves, may give him the most formidable ascendant over the destinies of the Republic. Should he prove a Cæsar, a Cromwell!"—The Ancient. A Cæsar, a Cromwell! Bad parts; stale parts; unworthy of a man of sense, not to say a man of property. Bonaparte has declared so himself on several occasions. 'Il would be a sacrilegious measure,' said he, on one occasion, 'to make any attempt on a representative government in this age of intelligence and liberty,' On another—'There is none but a fool who would attempt to make the Republic lose the gauntlet it has thrown down to the royalty of Europe, after having gone through so many perils to uphold it."—Bourneleane, iii, 76, 77.

Lucien in vain endeavoured to restore his authority. After a long scene of confusion, one of the deptities proposed that the assembly should swear fidelity to the constitution; this proposal was instantly adopted, and the roll cilled for thit purpose. This measure answered the double purpose of hinding the Council to support its authority, and groung time for the Lacobin leaders to be sent for from the capital. In fact, during the two hours that the calling of the roll lasted, intelligence of the resistance of dred, during this delay, hoped that they would have time to communicate

The danger was now imminent to that audacious general, the lave transfer of the members, including Lucien, were compelled to take the eath to the constitution; and in the Ancients, although his adherents had the majority, the contest raged with the utmost violence, and the strength of the minority was every instant increasing. The influential Jacobins were randily arriving from Paris, they looked on the matter as already decided victim Half an hour hence you will thank me for my advice." Notwithstanding this seeming confidence, however, hapoleon fully felt the danger of his situation. The influence of the legislature was sensibly fell on the troops, the boldest were beginning to hesitate, the zealous had already become timid (2) the timid had changed their colours. He saw that there was not a moment to lose, and he resolved to present himself, at the head of his staff, at the bar of the Ancients. "At that moment," said Napoleon, "I would have given two hourderd millions to have had Ney by my side."

In this crisis Napoleon was strongly agitated. He never possessed the faculty of powerful extempore elecution, a peculiarity not unfrequently the accompaniment of the most profound and original thought, and on this occasion, from the vital interests at stake, and the vehiclent opposition with me to explain myself, you have called me and my companious in arms to your aid  but you must now take a decided part I can be a support of the call of the call acclamations, but this appeal to the military, in the bosom of the registature, foud

wrought up to a perfect fury the rage of the Opposition. One of their number, Linglet, rose, and said, in a loud voice, "General, we applaud your words: swear then obedience and fidelity to the Constitution, which can alone save the Republic." Napoléon hesitated; then replied with energy: "The Constitution does not exist; you yourselves violated it on the 10th Fructidor, when the government violated the independence of the legislature; you violated it on the 50th Prairial, when the legislative body overthrew the independence of the executive; you violated it on the 22d Floreal, when, by a sacrilegious decree, the government and legislature violated the sovereignty of the people by annulling the elections which they had made. Having subverted the constitution, new guarantees, a fresh compact, is required. I declare, that as soon as the dangers which have invested me with these extraordinary powers have passed away, I will lay them down. I desire only to be the arm which executes your commands. If you call on me to explain what are the perils which threaten our country, I have no hesitation in answering, that Barras and Moulins have proposed to me to place myself, at the head of a faction, the object of which is to effect the overthrow of all the friends of freedom." The energy of this speech, the undoubted truths and audacious falsehoods which it contained, produced a great impression: threefourths of the assembly arose and loudly testified their applause. His party, recovering their courage, spoke in his behalf, and he concluded with these significant words: "Surrounded by my brave companions in arms, I will second you. I call you to witness, brave grenadiers, whose bayonets I perceive, whom I have so often led to victory; I can bear witness to their courage; we will unite our efforts to save our country. And if any orator," added he, with a menacing voice, "paid by the enemy, should venture to propose to put me hors la loi, I shall instantly appeal to my companions in arms to exterminate him on the spot. Recollect that I march accompanied by the god of fortune and the god of war (1)."

Hardly was this harangue concluded, when intelligence arrived that in the Council of Five Hundred the calling of the roll had ceased; that Lucien could hardly maintain his ground against the vehemence of the Assembly, and that they were about to force him to put to the vote a proposal to declare his brother hors la loi. It was a similar proposal which had proved fatal to Robespierre: the cause of Napoléon seemed wellnigh desperate, for if it had been passed, there could be little doubt it would have been obeyed by the soldiers. In truth, they had gone so far as to declare, that the oath of 18th Brumaire should receive a place as distinguished in history as that of the Jeu de Paume, "the first of which created liberty, while the second consolidated it," and had decreed a message to the Directory to make them acquainted with their resolution. This decree was hardly passed, when a messenger arrived with a letter from Barras, containing his resignation of the office of Director, upon the ground, "that now the dangers of liberty were all surmounted, and the interests of the armies secured." This unlooked-for communication renewed their perplexity; for now it was evident that the executive itself was dissolved (2).

Napoleon, who clearly saw his danger, instantly took his resolution. Boldly advancing to the hall of the Five Hundred, whose shouts and cries already resounded to a distance, he entered alone, uncovered, and ordered the soldiers and officers of his suite to halt at the entrance. In his passage to the har he had to pass one half of the benches. No sooner did he make his appearance, thin half of the assembly rose up, exclaiming, "Death to the tyrant I down with the dictator!" The scene which ensued baffles all description. Hundreds of deputies rushed down from the benches, and surrounded the general, exclaiming, "your faurels are all withered; your glory is turned into infamy; is it for this you have conquered? respect the sanctuary of the Inws; reture." Two grenadiers left at the door, alarmed by the danger of their general, rushed forward, sword in hand, seized him by the middle, and bore him, almost stupfied, out of the hall; in the tunualt one of them had his clothes torn. Nothing was to be heard but the cries, "No Gromwell! down with the dictator! death to the dictator [1]1" lis removal increased rather than diminished the tumult of the model of the second seembly. I use a doing, and unsupported in the president's charry was left to make herd against the tempest. All his efforts to justify his brother were in vain. "You would not hear him," he exclaimed "Down with the tyrant! hors la loi with the tyrant!" resounded on all sides. With rare

him. I renounce the chair, and hasten to the bir to defend the illustrious accused," and with these words, deposing his insignia of president, mounted the tribune. At that instant an officer, dispatched by Napoleon, with ten grenadiers, presented himself at the door it was at first supposed that the troops had declared for the Council, and loud applause greeted their entrance. Taking advantage of the mistake, he approached the tribune and laid hold of Lucien, whispering at the same time in his ear, "By your brothers' orders," while the grenidiers exclaimed, "Down with the assassins!" At these words a mournful silence succeeded to the cries of acclamation, and he was conducted without opposition out of the hall (2)

Disabilities Meanwhile Napoleon had descended to the court, mounted on fit if Fire had a by horsehack, ordered the drums to beat the order to form circle, and force of the solders — "I was about to point out the means of saving the country, and they answered me with strokes of the pointed They desire to folfil the wishes of the Allied sovereigns—what more could England do 'S obliers, can I rely on you?" Unanimous applicase answered the appeal, and soon after the officer arrived, bringing out Lucien from the

of Five Hundred declares to you, that the immense majority of that body is enthralled by a factious band, armed with stilettoes, who besiege the tribune, and interdict all freedom of deliberation! General, and you soldiers,

!

I et that name for ever attach to them, and it they once to show themselves to the people, let all fingers point to them as the representatives of the poniard "..." Soldiers," added Napoleon, "can I rely on you?" The soldiers, however, appeared still to hesitate, when Lucian as a list resource, turned to his brother, and raising his sword in his hand, swore to plunge it in his breast if ever he belied the hopes of the Republicans, or mile an attempt on the liberty of France. This last appeal was decisive. "Vive Reapparte!" was the answer. He then ordered Murat and Leclore to march a battalion into the Council, and dissolve the Assembly. "Charge bayonets," was the word given. They entered slowly in, and the officer in command notified to the Council the order to dissolve. Jourdan and several other deputies resisted, and began to address the soldiers on the enormity of their conduct. Hesitation was already visible in their ranks, when Leclore entering with a fresh body, in close column, instantly ordered the drums to beat and the charge to sound. He exclaimed, "Grenadiers, forward!" and the soldiers slowly advancing, with fixed bayonets, speedily cleared the hall, the dismayed deputies throwing themselves from the windows, and rushing out at every aperture to avoid the shock (1).

Intelligence of the violent dissolution of the Vive Hundred was the conspi-tive conspi-conveyed by the fugitives to the Ancients, who were thrown by this event into the utmost consternation. They had expected that that hady would have yielded without violence, and were thunderstruck by the open use of bayonets on the occasion. Lucien immediately appeared at their har, and made the same apology he had done to the troops for the coup d'état which had been employed, viz. that a factious minority had put an end to all freedom of deliberation by the use of poniards. which rendered the application of force indispensable; that nothing had been done contrary to forms; that he had himself authorized the employment of the military. The Council were satisfied, or feigned to be so, with this explanation; and at nine at night the remnant of the Five Hundred who were in the interests of Napoléon, five-and-thirty only in number, under the direction of Lucien, assembled in the Orangery, and voted a resolution, declaring that Bonaparte and the troops under his orders had deserved well of their country. "Representatives of the people," said that audacious partisan in his opening speech, "this ancient palace of the Kings of France, where we are now assembled, attests that power is nothing, and that glory is every thing." At eleven at night, a few members of the two Councils, not amounting in all to sixty persons, assembled, and unanimously passed a decree abolishing the Directory, expelling sixty-one members from the Councils as demagogues, adjourning the legislature for three months, and vesting the executive power in the mean time in Napoléon, Sièves, and Roger Ducos, under the title of Provisional Consuls. Two Commissions of twenty-five members each, were appointed from each Council, to combine with the Consula in the Consulation of the Consula in the Consula in the Consula in the Consulation of the Consu suls in the formation of a new constitution (2).

Joy in Paris During these two eventful days, the people of Paris, though deeply at these events interested in the issue of the struggle, and trembling with anxiety lest the horrors of the Revolution should be renewed, remained perfectly tranquil. In the evening of the 19th, reports of the failure of the enterprise tranquil spread, and diffused the most mortal disquietude; for all were generally spread, and diffused the most mortal disquietude; pasranks, worn out with the agitation and sufferings of past convulsions, pasranks, worn of the the agitation and sufferings of past convulsions, pasonately longed for repose, and it was generally felt that it could be obtained sionately longed for repose, and it was generally felt that it could be obtained only under the shadow of military authority. But at length the result was communicated by the fugilite members of the Five Hundred, who arrived from St.-Cloud, loudly evelaiming 'against the military violence of which they had been the victims; and at nine at night the intelligence was officially announced by a proclamation of Napoléon, which was read by torchlight to the agitated groups (1).

⁽¹⁾ Nap. i. 93. Mign. ii. 458, 459. Th. v. 479, (2) Nap. i. 91, 95. Je 480. Lac. xiv. 131. Jon. xii. 406, 108. Bour. iii. Golt. i. 311, 331. 95, 97. Goh. i. 309, 311.

General With the exception of the legislature, however, all parties desetherios clared for the revolution of 18th Brumaire. The violation of the

at any price, even the extinction of the very liberty to attain which all these misfortunes had been undergone. The feeling, accordingly, not only of Paris, but of France, was universal in favour of the new government. All parties hoped to see their peculiar tenets forwarded by the change. The Constitutionalists trusted that rational freedom would at length be established; the Royalists rejoiced that the first step towards a regular government had been made, and secretly indulged the hope that Bonaparte would play the part of

of revisiting their country, and drawing their last breath in that France which was still so dear to them. Ten years had wrought a century of experience. The nation was as unaumous in 1790 to terminate the era of Revolution, as in 1780 it had been to commence it (2).

Creater of Napoleon rivalled Casar in the elemency with which he used his Napoleon. No proscriptions or massacres, few arrests or imprisonments, followed the triumph of order over Revolution. On the contrary, numerous acis of mercy, as wise as they were magnanimous, illustrated the rise of the Consular throne. The law of hostages and the forced loan were abolished; the priests and persons proscribed by the revolution of 18th Frietdor permitted to return; the emigrants who had been shipwrecked above a thousand witnesses, only five miles from the most violent marpations against a legislature recorded in history. When such falsehood was employed in matters occurring at & -Cloud in on the coast of France, and thrown into prison, where they had been confined for four years, were set at liberty. Measures of severity were at first put in force against the violent Republicans, but they were gradually relaxed, and finally abandoned. Thirty-seven of this obnoxious party were ordered to be transported to Guiana, and twenty-one to be put under the observation of the police; but the sentence of transportation was soon changed into one of surveillance, and even that was shortly abandoned. Nine thousand state prisoners, who languished at the fall of the Directory in the state prisons of France, received their liberty. Their numbers, two years before, had been sixty thousand. The elevation of Napoléon was not only unstained by blood, but not even a single captive long lamented the car of the victor. A signal triumph of the principles of humanity over those of cruelty, glorious alike to the actors and the age in which it occurred; and a memorable proof how much more durable the victories gained by moderation and wisdom are, than those achieved by violence, and stained by blood (1).

The revolution of the 18th Brumaire had established a provisional government, and overturned the Directory: but it still remained to form a permanent constitution. In the formation of it a rupture took place between Sièves and Napoléon. The views of the former, long based on speculative opinions, and strongly tinged with republican ideas, were little likely to accord with those of the young conqueror, accustomed to rule every thing by his single determination; and whose sagacity had already discovered the impossibility of forming a stable government out of the institutions of the Revolution. He allowed Sièves to mould, according to his pleasure, the legislature, which was to consist of a Senate, or Upper Chamber; a Legislative Body, without the power of debate; and a Tribunate, which was to discuss the legislative measures with the Council of State: but opposed the most vigorous resistance to the plan which he brought forward for the executive, which was so absurd, that it is hardly possible to imagine how it could have been seriously proposed by a man of ability. The plan of this veteran constitution-maker, who had boasted to Talleyrand ten years before, that "politics was a science which he flattered himself he had brought to perfection (2)," was to have vested the executive in a single Grand Elector, who was to inhabit Versailles, with a salary of 600,000 francs a-year, and a guard of six thousand men, and represent the state to foreign powers. This singular magistrate was to be vested with no immediate authority; but his functions were to consist in the power of naming two consuls, who were to exercise all the powers of government, the one being charged with the interior, the finances, police, and public justice; the other the exterior, including war, marine, and foreign affairs. He was to have a council of state, to discuss with the legislature all public measures. He was to be irresponsible, but liable to removal at the pleasure of the Senate.-It was easy to perceive that, though he imagined he was acting on general principles, Sièves in this project was governed by his own interests; that the situation of grand elector he destined for himself, and the military consulship for the conqueror of Arcola and Rivoli (5).

- Napoléon, who saw at once that this senseless project, besides presenting insurmountable difficulties in practice, would reduce him to a secondary part, exerted all his talents to combat the plan of Sièves. "Can you suppose," still be, "that any man of talent or consideration will submit to the degrading situation assigned to the grand elector? Whit min, disposing of the introduction assigned to the grand elector? Whit min, disposing of Senate, which, by a simple vote, could send him from Versailles to a second fit in Paris? Were I a grand elector, I would rime as my Consul of the exterior licithier, and for the interior some other person of the same stamp I would prescribe to them their nominations of ministers, and the instant that they ceased to be my staff-officers I would overturn them "Stêyes replied," (that in that case the grand elector would be absorbed by the Senate." This phrase got minds of the Parisans, II which interfered with the supreme power, which he had antenny resource. I

⁽¹⁾ Nap. in Month. i. 178. Mign. ii. 463. Lac. (2) Dum. 64. Ante, i. 201. xiv. 434, 440. (3) Jom. vii. 413, 415. Mign. ii. 464, 465.

```
Of Hance (1)
The Hers of Napolton were unaltitably interpolate fice.
```

the two others were mertly us and ordered to the two others, whose names appeared to every public act, would soothe the republican jealousy. The creumstances of the times would not permit a better form of government "After long discussion, this project was adopted. The government was in act counsels, but not to restrain him by steed by the Consuls, selected out of the list of candidates who had been chosen by the nation those who were to be the members of the Tribunate and I egislature. Government alone was in"" I'ms. The Legislature Body was interdicted to deliberate and decide upon the quesunate, and the Conneil of State nomig understood to represent the interests of the people, the second that of the government. The Legi-clatre Body was thus transformed from its essential character in a free state, that of a deliberative assembly, into a supreme court, which heard the state pleadings, and by its decision formed the law (2).

The people no longer were permitted to choose deputies for themselves, cultier in their primary assemblies or electoral colleges. They were allowed only to choose the persons eligible to these offices, and from the histi thus furnished, government made its election. The whole citizens first choose a tenth of their number in each arrondissement, who formed the electors of the commane. This body, composed of the electors, again chose out of the list of eligible persons for the department a tenth, who were to form the departmental electors, and they again a tenth of their body, who formed the list out of which the legislature was to be chosen. The Senate, in the close of all, selected such as it chose out of the last list, thus trebly purified, to form the Legislative body. The senators being nominated by the First Consul, and holding their situations for life, the whole legislature was subjected to the control of the executive. Its duty was strictly conservative, to watch over the maintenance of the fundamental laws, and the purification of the other branches of the legislature. All public functionaries, civil and military including the whole judges, instead of being chosen, as heretofore, by the people, were appointed by the First Consul, who thus became the sole depositary of influence. The lowest species of judges, called juges-de-paix, were alone left in the gift of the people (1). By means of the Senate, chosen from his creatures, he regulated the legislature, and possessed the sole initiative of laws; by the appointment to every office, he wielded the whole civil force of the state; by the command of the military, he overawed the discontented, and governed its external relations.

The departmental lists were the most singular part of the new constitution constitution. Every person born and residing in France, above twenty-one, was a citizen, but the rights of citizenship were lost by bankruptcy, domestic service, crime, or foreign naturalization. But the electors were a much more limited body. "The citizens of each arrondissement chose hy their suffrages those whom they deemed fit to conduct public affairs, amounting to not more than a tenth of the electors. The persons contained in this first list were alone eligible to official situations in the arrondissement from which they were chosen. The citizens embraced in this list chose a tenth of their number for each department, which formed the body alone eligible for departmental situations. The citizens chosen by the departmental electors again selected a tenth of their number, which formed the body alone capable of being elected for national situations (2)." The persons on the first list were only eligible to the inferior situations, such as juges-de-paix, a species of arbiters to reconcile differences and prevent lawsuits; those on the second were the class from whom might be selected the prefects, the departmental judges, tax-gatherers, and collectors; those on the third, who amounted only to six thousand persons, were alone eligible to public offices, as the Legislature, any of the Ministries of State, the Senate, the Council of State, the Tribunal of Cassation, the ambassadors at foreign courts. Thus, the whole offices of state were centred in six thousand persons, chosen by a triple election from the citizens. The lists were to be revised, and all the vacancies filled up every three years. These lists of notability, as Napoléon justly observed, formed a limited and exclusive nobility, differing from the old noblesse only in this, that it was elective, not hereditary; and it was, from the very first, subject to the objection, that it excluded from the field of competition many of the most appropriate persons to hold public situations. The influence of the people in the legislature was, by these successive elections, completely destroyed, and the whole power of the state, it was early foreseen, would centre in the First Consul (5). The changes introduced diffused, however, general satisfaction.

All the members of the legislature received pensions from government:

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 420, 421. Mign. ii. 464, 468, 469. Const. Tit. iv. Sect. 41. Bign. i. 27, 28.

⁽²⁾ Const. Tit. i. sec. 78, 79.

⁽³⁾ Nap. i. 139, 141.

that of the senators was 23,000 francs, or L.4000 a year; that of the Tribunite, 15,000 francs, or L.600 yearly; that of the Legislative Body, 40,000 fr. or L.100 a-year. The Senate was composed of persons above forty years of age; the Legislative Body, above thirty. A senator remained in that high station for life, and was ineligible to any other situation (4).

Agreement On the 24th December, 1709, the new constitution was promotivated climed; and the whole appointments were forthwith filled up, proposed without waiting for the lists of the eligible, who were, according to its theory, to be chosen by the people. Two consuls, eighty senators, a hundred tribunes, three hundred legislators, were forthwith nominated, and proceeded to the evereuse of all the functions of government. In the choice of persons to fill such a multitude of offices, ample means existed to reward

"a moderate and seduce the Republican party; and the consuls made

ron estate of Crosne, afterwards changed not tin those various sanders in the park of Versailles, and the democratic fer our of the author of the author of the highest what is the Tres-Ctat?" sunk into the interested apathy tained in that of the police, the mustious has been calm the fears and satisfy the authorion of the Republican party. Sieyes was very adverse to the continuance of Fouche in office; but hapoléon was resolute "We have arrived," said he, "at a new era; we must recollect in the past only the good, and forcet the bad Are, the habits of business, and experience,

~ anli, Nap : 361 362

- Ducos " In trath Ducos got only rest

ey of sile I sthe lave of on Tell

l culous granace rept u. 103 hink

have formed or modified many characters." High salaries were given to all the public functionaries, on condition only that they should live in a style of splendour suitable to their station: a wise measure, which both secured the attachment of that powerful body of mén, and precluded them from acquiring such an independence as might enable them to dispense with the employment of government (1).

Such was the exhaustion of the French people, occasioned by remajority of the people volutionary convulsions, that this constitution, destroying, as it did, all the objects for which the people had combated for ten the new constitution, years, was gladly adopted by an immense majority of the electors. It was approved of by 5,011,007 citizens; while that of 1795 had only obtained 1,801,918 suffrages, and that in 4795, which established the Directory, 1,057,590 (2). These numbers are highly instructive. They demonstrate, what so many other considerations conspire to indicate, that even the most vehement changes are brought about by a factious and energetic minority, and that it is often more the supineness than the numerical inferiority of the better class of citizens which subjects them to the tyranny of the lowest. In 1789, indeed, the great majority of all classes were carried away by the fever of innovation; but these transports were of short duration; and from the time that the sombre days of the Revolution began, their numerical superiority was at an end. It was the terrors and disunion of the class of proprietors, which, by leaving no power in the state, but the populace and their demagogues, delivered the nation over to the horrors of Jacobin slavery.

Such was the termination of the changes of the French Revolu-Reflections on the action; and such the government which the people brought upon Napoleon to the Consular themselves by their sins and their extravagance. On the 25d June, 1789, before one drop of blood had been shed or one estate confiscated, Louis offered the States-General a constitution containing all the elements of real freedom, with all the guarantees which experience has proved to be necessary for its duration; the security of property, the liberty of the press, personal freedom, equality of taxation, provincial assemblies, the voting of taxes by the States-General, and the vesting of the legislative power in the representatives of the three estates in their separate chambers (5). The popular representatives, seduced by the phantom of democratic ambition, refused the offer, usurped for themselves the whole powers of sovereignty, and with relentless rigour pursued their victory, till they had destroyed the clergy, the nobles, and the throne. France waded through an ocean of blood; calamities unheard of assailed every class, from the throne to the cottage; for ten long years the struggle continued, and at length it terminated in the establishment, by universal consent, of a government which swept away every remnant of freedom, and consigned the state to the tranquillity of military despotism (4).

⁽¹⁾ Mign. ii. 468, 469. Jom. xii. 422. 423. Nap. i. 113. Goh. ii. 6, 8.

⁽²⁾ Mign. ii. 469.

⁽³⁾ Sec Vol. i. 203, 207.

⁽⁴⁾ So evidently was this result the punishment of the crimes of the Revolution, that it appeared in that light even to some of the principal actors in that convulsion. In a letter written by Sièyes to Riouffe at that period, he said, "It is then for such a result that the French nation has gone through its Revolution! The ambitious villain! He marches successfully through all the ways of fortune and crime—all is vanity, distrust, and terror. There is here neither elevation nor liberality. Providence wishes to punish us by the Revolution itself. Our chains are too humiliating; on all sides nothing is to be seen but powers prostrated; leaden oppression, military despotism is alone triumphant. If any thing could make us retain some esteem for the nation, it is the ', of per-

that of the senators was 23,000 francs, or L 1000 a year; that of the Tribunite, 13,000 francs, or L 650 yearly; that of the Legislative Body, 40,000 fr. or L 100 a-year. The Senate was composed of persons above forty years of age; the Legislative Body, above thirty. A senator remained in that high station for life, and was incligable to any other situation (4)

Appelies On the 28th December, 4799, the new constitution was proreflected claime in the state of the state

In were, according to its theory, to egible sentors, and the denocratic forms and the content with the mountain of persons to fill such a multitude of offices, ample means existed to reward the moderate, and seduce the Republican party, and the consuls made a judicious and erreumspect use of the immense influence put into their hands suyes, discontented with the overthrow of lus favourite ideas, retired from the government; received as a reward for his services 600,000 franes and the estate of Crosne, afterwards changed for the more valuable domain of la Fasanderie in the part of versalles, and the democratic fervour of the author of the pamphele—"What is the Tiers-Etat?" sink into the interested pathy of the proprietor of fifty thousand pounds. Roger Ducos also withdrew, perment of hoots and spurs, and neither Sie'se nor Roger Ducos was fit for that (2) " Talleyrand was made minister of foreign affairs, and Fouche retained in that of the police, the illustrious La Place received the portfolio of the interior. By the latter appointments hapoléon hoped to calm the fears and satisfy the ambition of the Republican party. Sieyes was very adverse to the continuance of Fouche in office, but hapoléon was resolute. "We have arrived," said he, "at a new era; we must recollect in the past only the good, and forget the bad. Are, the labits of business, and experience,

(1) Const Tit is and in Nap : 261, 362 (2) Les Cas :: 353

pointing to a lureau Do you see that piece of formiture? You will not easily guess what it is worth it continus $00 000 france. During our ma the 18th Brumaire has fallen to your lot while Isbill probably i see only his ne for 17 share in the attempt — What! each and Vapolion—habit not the coordiar commission of your con 17? Tell in homeally what do you won? Sièges, wild at de land on the condition of the coordiary of the condition of the coordinate of the

have formed or modified many characters." High salaries were given to all the public functionaries, on condition only that they should live in a style of splendour suitable to their station: a wise measure, which both secured the attachment of that powerful body of men, and precluded them from acquiring such an independence as might enable them to dispense with the employment of government (1).

Such was the exhaustion of the French people, occasioned by revolutionary convulsions, that this constitution, destroying, as it did, all the objects for which the people had combated for ten the new constitution. years, was gladly adopted by an immense majority of the electors. It was approved of by 5,011,007 citizens; while that of 4795 had only obtained 4,801,918 suffrages, and that in 1795, which established the Directory, 1,057,590 (2). These numbers are highly instructive. They demonstrate. what so many other considerations conspire to indicate, that even the most vehement changes are brought about by a factious and energetic minority. and that it is often more the supineness than the numerical inferiority of the better class of citizens which subjects them to the tyranny of the lowest. In 1789, indeed, the great majority of all classes were carried away by the fever of innovation; but these transports were of short duration; and from the time that the sombre days of the Revolution began, their numerical superiority was at an end. It was the terrors and disunion of the class of proprietors, which, by leaving no power in the state, but the populace and their demagogues, delivered the nation over to the horrors of Jacobin slavery.

Such was the termination of the changes of the French Revolu-Reflections on the action; and such the government which the people brought upon Napoleon to the Mapoleon to the Consular themselves by their sins and their extravagance. On the 25d June, 1789, before one drop of blood had been shed or one estate confiscated, Louis offered the States-General a constitution containing all the elements of real freedom, with all the guarantees which experience has proved to be necessary for its duration; the security of property, the liberty of the press, personal freedom, equality of taxation, provincial assemblies, the voting of taxes by the States-General, and the vesting of the legislative power in the representatives of the three estates in their separate chambers (3). The popular representatives, seduced by the phantom of democratic ambition, refused the offer, usurped for themselves the whole powers of sovereignty, and with relentless rigour pursued their victory, till they had destroyed the clergy, the nobles, and the throne. France waded through an ocean of blood; calamities unheard of assailed every class, from the throne to the cottage; for ten long years the struggle continued, and at length it terminated in the establishment, by universal consent, of a government which swept away every remnant of freedom, and consigned the state to the tranquillity of military despotism (4).

has gone through its Revolution! The ambitious villain! He marches successfully through all the ways of fortune and crime-all is vanity, distrust, and terror. There is here neither elevation nor liberality. Providence wishes to punish us by the Resolution itself. Our chains are too humiliating; on all sides nothing is to be seen but powers prostrated; leaden oppression, military despotism is alone triumphant. If any thing could make us retain some esteem for the nation, it is the luxury of per-

⁽¹⁾ Mign. ii. 468, 469. Jom. xii. 422. 423. Nap. i. 113. Goh. ii. 6, 8. (2) Mign. ii. 469.

⁽³⁾ Sec Vol. i. 203, 207.

⁽⁴⁾ So evidently was this result the punishment of the crimes of the Revolution, that it appeared in that light even to some of the principal actors in that convulsion. In a letter written by Sièyes to Riousse at that period, he said, "It is then for such a result that the French nation

Problem had like this been merely a temporary result, the friends of freedom freedom had like the found some consolation in the reflection, that the electivity of ments at least of ultimate liberty were laid, and that the passing storm had renovated, not destroyed, the face of society. But the said effect of the liberty were laid, and that the passing had been sometimed to be sometimed and outlier to be sometimed and counterrating uniformed are necessary for its existence in the source of the source o

"The principle of the French Revolution," says Napoléon, "being the absolute equality of all classes, there resulted from it a total want of aristoeracy If a republic is difficult to construct on any durable basis without an order of nobles, much more so is a monarchy. To form a constitution in a country destitute of any species of aristocracy, is like attempting to navigate in a single element. The I reach Revolution has attempted a problem as insoluble as the direction of balloons (1) " " A monarchy," says Lord Bacon, "where there is no nobility at all, is ever a pure and absolute tyranny, as that of the Turks, for nobility attempers sovereignty, and draws the eyes of the people somewhat aside from the line royal (2) " In these profound observations is to be found the secret of the subsequent experienced impossible lity of constructing a durable free government in France, or preserving any thing like a balance between the different classes of society. The Revolution had left only the government, the army, and the people, no intermediate rank existed to counteract the influence of the former, or give durability to the exertions of the latter Left to themselves, the people were no match in the long run for an executive wielding the whole military force of the lingdom, and disposing, in offices and appointments, of above L 40,000,000 a-year. In moments of excitement, the democratic spirit may become powerful, and, by infecting the military, give a momentary triumph to the populace, but, with the cossation of the effervescence, the influence of government must return with redoubled force, and the people be again subjected to the yoke of servitude. Casual bursts of democratic passion cannot maintain a long contest in a corrupted age with the steady efforts of a regular government, and if they could, they would lead only to the transference of despotic power from one set of rulers to another. It is hard to say whether liberty has most to dread, in such circumstances, from its friends or its ene-

Durable freedom is to be secured only by the steady, persevering efforts of an aristocracy, supported, when necessary, by the enthusiasm of the people, and lindred from running into excess by the vigour of the executive. In all ages of the world, and under all forms of government, it is in the equipose of these powers that freedom has been formed, and from the destruction of one of them that the commencement of servinde is to be dated. The French Revolution, by totally, destroying the whole class of the aristocracy, and preventing, by the abolition of primogeniture, its reconstruction, has rendered this balance impossible, and, instead of the elements of European freedom, left in society only the instruments and the victims of Assatic despotism. It is as impossible to construct a durable free government with such materials, as it would be to form glass or guippowder with two only of the three elements.

of which they are composed; and the result has completely established the truth of these principles. The despotism of Napoléon was, till his fall, the most rigorous of any in Europe: and, although France enjoyed fifteen years of liberty under the Restoration, when the swords of Alexander and Wellington had righted the balance, and the recollection of subjugation had tamed for a time the aspirations of democracy; yet, with the rise of a new generation and the oblivion of former disaster, the scales were anew subverted, the constitutional monarchy was overturned, and from amidst the smoke of the Barricades, the awful figure of military power again emerged.

Grievous as has been the injury, however, to the cause of freedom effects of the which the ruin of the French aristocracy has occasioned, it is not so great or so irreparable as has resulted from the destruction of the Church, and consequent irreligion of the most energetic part of the population. This evil has spread to an unparalleled extent, and produced mischiefs of incalculable magnitude. If it be true, as the greatest of their philosophers has declared, that it was neither their numbers, nor their talent, nor their military spirit which gave the Romans the empire of the world, but the religious feeling which animated their people (1), it may be conceived what consequences must have resulted from the extinction of public worship over a whole country, and the education of a generation ignorant of the very elements of religious belief. It is the painful duty of the moralist, to trace the consequences of so shocking an act of national impiety, in the progressive dissolution of manners, the growth of selfishness, and the unrestrained career of passion, by which so large a portion of the French people have since been distinguished; but its effects upon public freedom, are, in a political point of view, equally important. Liberty is essentially based on the generous feelings of our nature; it requires often the sacrifice of private gratification for the public good; it can never subsist for any length of time without that heroic self-denial, which can only be founded on the promises and the belief of religion. We must not confound with this generous and elevated spirit the desire for licentiousness, which chafes against every control, whether human or divine; the one is the burst of vegetation in its infancy, and gives promise of the glories of summer and the riches of harvest; the other, the fermentation which precedes corruption. By destroying the Church, and educating a whole generation without any religious principles, France has given a blow to her freedom and her prosperity, from which she can never recover. The fervour of democracy, the extension of knowledge, will give but a transient support to liberty when deprived of that perennial supply which is derived from the sense of duty which religion inspires. "As Atheism," says Lord Bacon, "is in all respects hateful, so in this, that it depriveth human nature of the means of exalting itself above human frailty; and as it is in particular persons, so it is in nations." Passion will find as many objects of gratification under a despotism as a republic; seduction is as easy from private as public desires; pleasure is as alluring in the palace of opulence as in the forum of democracy. The transition is in general slow from patriotic principle or public spirit to private gratification, because they spring from the opposite motives to human conduct; but it is rapid, from rebellion against the restraints of virtue, to thraldom under the chains of vice, for the former gione, atque hac una sapientia, quod Deorum immortalium numine omnia regi gubernarique perspeximus, omnes gentes, nationesque superavimus.

⁽¹⁾ Nec numero Hispanos, nec robore Gallos, nec calliditate Pœnos, nec artibus Græcos, nec denique hoc ipso hujus gentis et terræ domestico nativoque sensu, Italos ipsos et Latinos; sed pietate ac reli-

—Cicero.

proceedings are characterised by moderation, and they are scrupulously attentive to justice and humanity in all their actions: then the people may safely follow in their steps, and anticipate blessings to themselves and their cluldren from the measures they promote. But if the reverse of all this is the case; if the leaders who seek to rouse their passions are worthless or suspicious in private life, if they are tyrannical landlords, faithless husbands, negligent fathers; if they are sceptical or indifferent in religion, reckless or improvident in conduct, runned or tottering in fortune; if they are selfish in their enjoyments, and callous and indifferent to the poor, if their liberty is a clock for licentiousness, and their patriotism an excuse for ambition, if their actions are birsty and inconsiderate, and their measures calculated to do injustice or create suffering to individuals, on the plea of state necessity: - 10 - 0 . perdition: that . on such a basis steps, the day of reckoning will come, and an awful retribution awaits them or their children. lmmense la pulsa given by

The final result of the irreligious efforts of the I'reach people is singularly illustrative of the moral government to which human affairs are subject, and of the vanity of all attempts to check that spread of religion which has been decreed by Almighty power. Christ anity When the Parisian philosophers beheld the universal diffusion of the spirit of scepticism which they had produced; when a nation was seen absuring every species of devotion, and a generation rising in the heart of Europe ignorant of the very elements of religious belief, the triumph of infidelity appeared complete, and the faithful trembled and mourned in silence at the melancholy prospects which were opening upon the world. let in this very spirit were preparing, by an unseen hand, the means of the ultimate triumph of civilized over barbaric belief, and of a greater spread of the Christian faith than had taken place since it was embraced by the tribes who overthrew the Roman empire. In the deadly strife of European ambition, the arms of civilisation acquired an irresistible preponderance, with its last convulsions the strength of Russia was immeasurably augmented, and that mighty power, which had been organized by the genius of Peter and matured by the ambition of Catharine, received its final developement from the invasion of Napoleon The Crescent, long triumphant over the Cross, has now yielded to its ascendant, the barrier of the Caucasus and the Balkhan have been burst by its champions; the ancient war-cry of Constantinople, "Victory to the Cross!" has, after an interval of four centuries, been heard on the Agean Sea, and that lasting triumph, which all the enthusiasm of the Crusaders could not effect, has arisen from the energy infused into what was then an unknown tribe, by the infidel arms of their descendants. In such marvellous and unforeseen consequences, the historian finds ample grounds for consolation at the temporary triumph of wickedness, from the corruption of decaying, he turns to the energy of infant civilisation, while he laments the decline of the principles of prosperity in their present seats, he anticipates their resurrection in those where they were first cradled, and traces through all the vicissitudes of nations, the incessant operation of those general lans which provide, even amidst the decline of present greatness, for the final improvement and elevation of the species

HISTORY OF EUROPE

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION

IN M.DCC.LXXXIX.

TO THE RESTORATION OF THE BOURBONS

IN M.DCCC.XV.

BY ARCHIBALD ALISON, F.R.S.E.

ADVOCATE.

"Bellum maxime omnium memorabile qua unquam gesta sint me scripturum, quod Hannibale duce Carthaginienses cum populo Romano gessere. Nam neque validiores opibus ulla inter so civitates gentesque contulerunt arma, neque his ipsis tantum unquam virium aut roboris fuit et haud ignotas belli artes inter se, sed expertas primo Punico conserebant bello, odiis etiam prope majoribus certirunt quim viribus; et adeo varia belli fortuna, ancepsque Mars fuit, ut propius periculum fuerint qui vicerunt."—Tir. Liv lib 21

VOL. IV.

PARIS,

BAUDRY'S EUROPEAN LIBRARY,
3, QUAI MALAQUAIS, NEAR THE FONT DES ARTS;
AND STASSIN ET NAVIER, 9, RUE DU COQ.

SOLD ALSO BY AMYOT, RUE DE LA PAIX; TRUCHY, BOULEVARD DES ITALIENS; BROCKHAUS AND AVENARIUS, RUE RICHELIEU; LEOPOLD MICHELSEN, LEIPTIG; AND BY ALL THE PRINCIPAL BOOKSELLERS ON THE CONTINENT.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME IV.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

FROM THE RENEWAL OF THE WAR. TO THE BATTLE OF THE TREBBIA.

Preparations for the Alliance of England, Austria, and Russia against France—Internal State and Measures of England—Forces of the opposing Parties on the Continent—Commencement of Hostilities—Defeat of the Austrians in the Grisons—Battle of Stockach, and Defeat of the French in Germany—Dissolution of the Congress of Rastadt—Operations in Italy—Defeat of the French on the Mincio—Retreat of the French in the Grisons, and of Massena to Zurich—Expulsion of the Republicans from the St.-Gothard, and of Massena from Zurich—Arrival of Suwarrow and the Russians in Italy—Their rapid Successes—Passage of the Adda and Conquest of Lombardy and Piedmont—Retreat of Macdonald from Naples to Tuscany—Battle of the Trebbia, between his Army and Suwarrow—Further Successes of the Allies in Piedmont—Counter-Revolution and Massacres at Naples.—P. 1—46.

CHAPTER XXIX.

FROM THE BATTLE OF THE TREEBIA TO THE CONCLUSION OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Preparations of both Parties for a continuance of the Contest—Siege and Fall of Mantua, and of the Picdmontese Fortresses—Commencement of the Siege of Genoa—Battle of Novi, and subsequent Successes of the Allies—March of Suwarrow into Switzerland—His Advance to the St.-Gothard—Separation of the Austrian and Russian forces in front of Zurich—Total Defeat of the latter by Masséna—Bloody Combats on the St.-Gothard, and in Glarus, and disastrous Retreat of Suwarrow into the Grisons—Concluding Operations on the Upper Rhinc—Anglo-Russian expedition to Holland—Its early Success, and ultimate Failure—Operations in Picdmont—Battle of Genoa, and Siege and Fall of Coni—Rupture between the Austrians and Russians—Reflections on the Campaign.—47—92.

CHAPTER XXX.

FROM THE ACCESSION OF NAPOLÉON TO THE OPENING OF THE CAMPAIGN OF MARENGO.

Proposals of Peace by the First Consul to the British Government—Correspondence consequent thereon between the two States—Debates on the subject in Parliament—Domestic affairs of Great Britain at this period—Union with Ireland—Scarcity of Provisions, and efforts of Government to assuage it—Able measures of Napoléon for the Pacification of France—Extinction of the Liberty of the Press—Establishment of the Court at the Tuileries—Establishment of the Secret Police—Correspondence with Louis XVIII,—93—122.

1 3

CHAPTER XXXI.

CAMPAIGN OF MARENCO

Relative Situation of both Parties at the Campaign—Advance of Moreau seross the Black Perest—Alectories of Lingen, Moeskirch, and Biberach—Able Candust of Kray in the Internebel Camp at Ulm—Measures of Bioreau to dislodge him, which at length are success ful—Operations in the Grisons—Armistice of Parsdorf—Operations in the Maritime Alps after Masseda assumed the command—Server Actions round Genos—Blockade and Surrender of that place—Retireat of Sochet to the Var—Passage of the St.-Bernard by Napoléon with the Army of Reserve—Capture of Milan and Battle of Montebello—Dissistrous Reterior of I plain from the Var—Battle of Marengo—Armistice of Alexandria, and Cession of the Perdometers Cortresses—Reflections on this Campaign—123—13

CHAPTER XXXII.

CAMPAIGN OF HOHENLINDEN.

Negotiations of France with Austria and England for a general Peace, which fail—Aboritive Luglish Expedition to the Goast of Spala—Operations in Italy and Switzerland—Abstraced the Austrians from the Inn into Bavaria, and their total Defert at Hohenlanden—Dissative Retirect to Sulfaury—Action there, and conclusion of an Armstice—Movements of Macdonalds army in the Grisson—Passage of the Splagen, and subsequent Operations in the Italian Tyrol—Conflicts between Brune and the Imperalists on the Mincio—Retreat of Bel Ingarde, Inad Armstice of Treviso—Peace with Naples under the Interession of Russa—Operations in Tuscany—Peace of Lunefulle—Reflections on the first general Pacification of the Cooping 1—119—219.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

FROM THE FRACE OF LUNEVILLE TO THE DISSOLUTION OF THE NORTHERN MARITIMS CONFEDERACY.

Origin of the Martime and Neutral Question—Principles of the Law of Nations on the subject and Invasion of them by the Armed Neutrality in 1780—Subsequent Abandonment of three Pretensions by the Northern Powers—Revival of the Question in 1800—Violent Proceedings of Paul against the English Commerce—Formation of the Maritime Confederacy of the Baltic Powers—Expedition to Copenhagen—Victory of Nicson there—Death of Paul—Accession, Character, and early Measures of Alexander—Dissolution of the Nariume Confederacy, and Peace, with the Builtic Powers—222—203

CHAPTER XXXIV

EXPEDITION TO EGIPT-CONCLUSION OF THE WAR

State of the French Army in Egypt when it was abandoned by Nappléon—Convention of El-Arsh—Battle of Heliopolis—Assassination of Richer—Arrival of Sir Raiph/Abertromby's Expedition on the coast—Landing of the troops, and battle of Alexandria—Advance to and Surrender of Canvo—Arrival of Sir D Barrd from India by the Red Sez—Sirge and surrender

Parliament—Statistical details on the comparative progress of France and kingland during the war, and the relative vibration of both countries at its termination —261—313

CHAPTER XXXV.

RECONSTRUCTION OF SOCIETY IN FRANCE BY NAPOLEON.

Measures of the First Consul to restore order in France—Explosion of the Infernal Machine, and consequent measures of severity against the Jacobins—Debates on that subject in the Council of State—On the Legion of Honour, which is carried after a warm opposition—On the re-establishment of Religion, in which Napoléon is also successful—Relaxation of the measures of severity towards the Emigrants—Measures for Public and Military Instruction—Gadastre, and attempts to correct its inequalities—Creation of the Consulship for life, and great change on the constitution—Flattering aspect of Paris during the peace—Rapid increase of the Executive Power—Renewed Correspondence with Louis XVIII—Formation of the Code Napoléon—Revolutionary Law of Succession—Its prodigious Effects—Law of Divorce—Great Public Works set on foot in France.—314—361.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

NAPOLÉON'S ASSUMPTION OF THE IMPERIAL CROWN.

Origin of the conspiracy of Georges, Pichegru, and the Royalists—Measures of Fouché to form a union between them and Moreau, with a view to betray both to the First Consul—Progress of the plot—Arrest of all the leaders, and of Moreau—Seizure, Trial, and Murder of the duke d'Enghien—Trial of Moreau, Georges, and others—Death of Pichegru and Captain Wright in prison—Preparatory Measures of Napoléon for the assumption of the imperial crown—Debates on the subject in the Tribunate—Its adoption by the Senate—Hereditary succession vested in Napoléon's family—Creation of the Marshals of the Empire—Total slavery of the Press, and general prostration of the whole public liberties—Reflections on the causes of these events.—362—390.

HISTORY OF EUROPE

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CAMPAIGN OF 4799.

FROM THE RENEWAL OF THE WAR, TO THE DATTLE OF THE TREBBIA.

ARGUMENT.

Revival of the Spirit of Europe by the Battle of the Nile-Preparations of Austria-and Russia -Treaty of Alliance, offensive and defensive, between England and Russia-Preparations of the British Government-Income-Tax-Observations on the expedience of this tax-Land and Sea Porces voted by Parliament-Universal discontent at the Prench Government -State of the Military Porces of France-I heir disposition over the Theatre of approaching War-Porces of the Imperialists, and their positions-Rumous effects of the Invasion of Switzerland and Italy to the Prench military power—The Prench commence hostilities— Operations in the Grisons-The Republicans are at first successful-The Austrians are driven back with great loss into the Tyrol-But Massena is defeated in repeated attacks on Peldkirch-Jourdan receives a check from the Archduke Charles-Importance of this success -Position of the French at Stockach-Battle of Stockach-Defeat of the French-They Retreat across the Rhine-Congress of Rastadt-Its dissolution-Assassmation of the French Deputies-General horror which it excites in France, and throughout Lurope-Commencement of Hostilities in Italy-Improdent dispersion of the French Forces there-Position of the Imperialists on the Adige-French Plan of Operations-Preliminary Movements of both Parties-First Successes of the French on the Adige-Lead to no decisive result-Scherer experiences a check in endcavouring to cross that river-Countermarches of both parties-Decisive Battle at Magnano-Brilliant attack of Kray with the Reserve gives the Austrians the Victory-Its decisive Results-Disorderly Retreat of the French-Corfu surrenders to the Russian and Turkish Fleets-Operations in Germany-Massena falls back in the Alps-Description of the Theatre of War-General Attack upon Massena's Line in the Grisons-Insurrection of the Swiss in his rear, being unsupported, is crushed-Massena draws back his Right Wing in the Italian Alps-General Attack by the Austrians on the French in the Grisons-Luciensteg is carried-Retreat of Massena behind the Lake of Zurich-Part of the Austrian Left Wing is detached into Lombardy-French Centre is forced by the Archduke-Their Right Wing is driven from the St.-Gothard-Massena's position at Zurich-He is there unsuccessfully attacked by the Archduke-Who prepares a second and better arranged attack-Massena prevents it by a Retreat-Dissolution of all the Swiss forces in the Service of France-Reflections on the magnitude of the preceding operations in the Alps-Arrival of the Russians under Suwarrow on the Mincio-Character of these Troops and their Commander-Moreau succeeds to the Command of the Italian Army -Its wretched condition-He retreats behind the Adda-The passage of that river is forced with immense loss to the French-Surrender of Serrurier with 7000 men-Suwarrow enters Milan in Triumph-Moreau retires to Alexandria and Turin-Whither he is tardily followed by Suwarrow-Check of the Russians under Rosenberg in endeavouring to cross the PoIndecisive betton between Suwarrow and Moreau near Alexandria-Moreau at length Retreats to the crest of the Apeninnes and Turin-Suwarrow surprises Turin-and the

Royalist Party there-Violation of the Capitulation by the Neapolitan Court-Nelson concurs in these inequitous proceedings-Deplorable Fate of Prince Carraccioli on board Nelson's own ship-Reflections on these Unpardonable Atrocities-And on the Inferences to be drawn from the preceding Campaign

nected of The cannon of Aelson, which destroyed the French fleet at Europe by Aboukir, re-ecliced from one end of Europe to the other, and every where revived the spirit of resistance to their ambition. That great event not only destroyed the charm of Republican invincibility, but relieved the Allies of the dread arising from the military talents of Napoléon and his terrible Italian army, whom it seemed to sever for ever from the soil of Eurone. The subjugation of Switzerland and the conquest of Italy were no longer looked upon with mere secret apprehension, they were the subject of loud and impassioned complaint over all Europe, and the allied sovereigns, upon this auspicious event, no longer hesitated to engage in open preparations for the resumption of hostilities (1)

Austria felt that the moment was approaching when she might regain her lost provinces, restore her fallen influence, and oppose a barrier to the revolutionary torrent which was overwhelming Italy She had accordingly been indefatigable in her exertions to recruit and remodel her armies since the treaty of Leoben; and they were now, both in point of discipline, numbers, and equipment, on the most formidable footing. She had two hundred and forty thousand men, supported by an immense artillery, ready to take the field, all admirably equipped and in the finest order, and to these were to be added sixty thousand Russians, who were advancing under the renowned Suwarrow, flushed with the storming of Ismael and Warsaw, and anxious to measure their strength with the conquerors of southern Europe The Emperor of Russia, though he had been somewhat tardy in following out the designs of his illustrious predecessor, had at length engaged warmly in the common cause; the outrage committed on the Order of Malta, which had chosen him for their protector, filled him with indignation, and he seemed desirous not only to send his armics to the support of the Germanic states, but to guarantee the integrity of their Confederation Turkey had forgotten its ancient enmity to Russia, in animosity against France for the unprovoked attack upon Fgypt, and its fleets and armies threatened to enclose the conqueror of the Pyramids in the kingdom he had won. Thus, while the ambition of the Directory in Switzerland and Italy roused against them the hostility of the centre of Europe, their impolitic and perilous expedition to the shores of Africa arrayed against France the fury of Mussulman zeal and the weight of Russian power (1).

On the 18th December, 1798, a treaty of alliance, offensive and there's defensive, was concluded between Great Britain and Russia, for the purpose of putting a stop to the further encroachments of Prance. Ity this treaty. Russia engaged to furnish an auxiliary force of forty-five thousand men, to act in conjunction with the British forces in the north of Germany; and England, besides an immediate advance of 1,225,000, was to pay a monthly subsidy of 1.75,000. The Emperor Paul immediately entered, with all the vehemence of his character, into the prosecution of the war; he gave an asylum to Louis AVIII in the capital of Courland; behaved with munificence to the Trench emigrants who sought refuge in his dominions; accepted the office of Grand Master of the Enights of St.-John of Malta, and excited by every means in his power the spirit of resistance to the advances of republican ambation. All his efforts, however, failed in inducing the Prussian cabinet to swerve from the cautious policy it had adopted ever since the retreat of the Duke of Brunswick, and the neutrality it had observed since the treaty of Basle (2). That power stood by in apparent indifference, and saw a desperate strife between the hostile powers, in which her own independence was at stake, when her army, now 220,000 strong, might have interfered with decisive effect in the struggle; and she was rewarded for her forbearance by the battle of Jena.

positions Great Britain made considerable exertions to improve the brilliant prospects thus unexpectedly opened to her view, Parliament met on the 20th November, 1798, and shortly after entered on the arduous duty of finance. To meet the increased expenses which the treaty with Russia, and the vizorous prosecution of the war in other countries, were likely to occasion, Mr. Pitt proposed a new tax, hitherto unknown in Great Britain, that on property. No income under 1.60 a-year was to pay any duty at all; those under L.105 only a fortieth part, and above L.200 a tenth. The total income of the nation was estimated at 1,102,000,000, including 1..20,000,000 as the rent of lands; and the estimated produce of the tax on this graduated scale was 1.7,500,000. This tax proceeded on the principle of raising as large a portion as possible of the supplies of the year by taxation within its limits, and compelling all persons to contribute, according to their ability, to the exigencies of the state; an admirable principle, if it could have been fully carried into effect, and which, if practicable and uniformly acted upon, would have prevented all the financial embarrassments consequent on the war. But this was very far indeed from being the case. The expenses incurred so far exceeded the income, even in that very year, that a supplementary budget was brought forward on June 6th, 1799, which very much augmented the annual charges (5).

The principle of making the supplies of the year as nearly as possible keep pace with its expenditure, is the true system of public as well as

⁽¹⁾ Arch. Ch. i. 40, 41, 47. Jam. xi. 96. Th. x. 146. Ann. Reg. 1799, 238.

⁽²⁾ Hard. vii. 6, 7, Ann. Reg. 1709, 76, 78. Jom. xi. 9, 10.

⁽³⁾ Ann. Reg. 1799, 176, 191, Parl. Hist. xxxi. 174.

Between the two budgets, loans were contracted to the amount of 1.15,000,000; and the total expenditure, including L.13,653,000 for the army; 1. 8,810,000 for the navy; and a subsidy of 1.825,000 to Russia; amounted, exclusive of the charges of the debt, to no less than L.31.

private finance; which has suffered, in every country, from nosome the thing so much as the convenient but ruinous plan of borrowing -11 --11 1 --1 -1 - f 1 landed proprietor, whose estate is worth thirty years' purchase of the rental at which he is rated; the fundholder, whose stock is worth twenty or twenty-five of the same annual payment; the merchant, whose profits one year may be swallowed up by losses the next season; the professional man. phose present income is not worth five years' purchase; the young annuitant, whose chance of life is as twenty, and the aged spinster, in whom it is not two, are all rated at the same annual sum. The tax, in consequence, falls with excessive and undue severity upon one class, and with unreasonable lightness upon others, it extinguishes the infant accumulations of capital. and puts an end to the savings of laborious industry; while it is commaratively unfelt by the great capitalist and the opulent landed proprietor Unlike the indirect taxes, which are paid without being felt, or forgotten in the eniorments of the objects on which they are laid, it brings the bitterness of taxation, in undisguised nakedness, to every individual, and produces. in consequence, a degree of discontent and exasperation which nothing but the excitement of continual warfare, or a sense of uncontrollable necessity.

high degree of discipline and efficiency, proved, through the whole remainder of the war, the best nursery for the troops of the line, and was inferior only in the quality and composition of its officers to the regular army (1)

The forces with which France was to resist this formidable con-Un versal d scontent federacy were by no means commensurate either to the ambition of the Directory, or the vast extent of territory that they had to defend Both externally and internally the utmost discontent and dissatisfaction existed The Republican armies, which in the outset divided so many states by the delusive promises of liberty and equality, had excited universal hatred by the exactions which they had made, and the stern tyranny to which they had every where subjected their new allies Their most devoted adherents no longer attempted to palliate their conduct, from the frontier of the Jura to the extremity of Calabria, one universal cry had arisen against the selfish cupidity of the Directory, and the insatiable rapacity of its civil and military officers The Swiss democrats, who had called in the French to revolutionize severity w customed. Cisalpine 1 . cobinism reigned in its legislative assemblies, the authorities imposed on them by the French bayonets were in the highest degree unpopular; while in

(1) Pail His XXX 231, 212 James Naval Hist App Vol in than Reg 1799, 193 App to Chron

Holland, the whole respectable class of citizens felt the utmost dissatisfaction at the violent changes made, both in their government and representative body, by their imperious allies. From the affiliated republics, therefore, no efficient support could be expected; while the French government, nevertheless, was charged with the burden of their defence. From the Texel to Calabria, their forces were expanded over an immense surface, in great, but still insufficient numbers; while the recent occupation of Switzerland had opened up a new theatre of warfare hitherto untrod by the Republican soldiers (1).

During the two years which had clapsed since the termination of restatare f terras hostilities, the military force of France had signally declined. Sickness and desertion had greatly diminished the ranks of the army; twelve thousand discharges had been granted to the soldiers, but more than ten times that number had deserted from their colours, and lived without disguise at their homes, in such numbers as rendered it neither prudent nor practicable to attempt the enforcing their return. Five-and-thirty thousand of the best troops were exiled under Napoléon on a distant shore, and though the addition of two hundred thousand conscripts had been ordered, the levy proceeded but slowly, and some months must yet clapse before they could he in a condition to take the field. The result of the whole was, that for the actual shock of war, from the Adige to the Maine, the Directory could only count on one hundred and seventy thousand men; the remainder of their great forces were buried in the Italian peninsula, or too far removed from the theatre of hostilities, to be able to take an active part in the approaching contest. The administration of the armies was on the most corrupted footing; the officers had become rapacious and insolent in the command of the conquered countries; and the civil agents either lived at free quarters on the inhabitants, or plundered without control the public money and stores which passed through their hands. Revolutionary energy had exhausted itself; regular and steady government was unknown, and the evils of a disordered rule and an abandoned administration were beginning to recoil on those who had produced them (2).

The disposition of the Republican armies was as follows: Of one the treate hundred and ten thousand men, who were stationed in Italy, of approaching war. thirty thousand under Macdonald, were lost in the Neapolitan dominions, and the remainder so dispersed over the extensive provinces of Lombardy, Tuscany, and the Roman states, that only lifty thousand could be collected to hear the weight of the contest on the Adige. Forty-two thousand, under General Jourdan, were destined to carry the war from the Upper Rhine, across the Black Forest, into the valley of the Danube. Masséna, at the head of forty-five thousand, was stationed in Switzerland, and intended to dislodge the Imperialists from the Tyrol and the upper valley of the Adige. Thirty thousand, under Bernadotte, were designed to form a corps of observation on the Lower Rhine from Dusseldorf to Manheim; while Brune at the head of fifteen thousand French, and twenty thousand Dutch troops, was intrusted with the defence of the Batavian republic. The design of the Directory was to turn the position of the Imperialists on the Adige by getting possession of the mountains which enclosed the upper part of the stream, and then drive the enemy before them, with the united armies of Switzerland and Italy, across the mountains of Carinthia, while that of the Upper Rhine, of Vienna (1). The forces of the Austrians were both superior in point of tte Impe number, better equipped, and stationed in more advantageous there de to situations Their armies were collected behind the Lech, in the Tyrol, and on the Adige. The first, under the command of the Archdule

Charles, consisted of lifty-four thousand infantry and twenty-four thousand cavalry: in the Grisons and Tyrol, forty-four thousand infantry and two 1 mel 1 mm - of P Hannelp dred horse, tiliact line communic of norte, occupied one torularing, sand cave ... Rhine Thus two hundred and forty-six thousand men were concentrated between the Maine and the Po, and their centre rested on the mountains of Tyrol: a vast fortress, which had often afforded a sure refuge in case of disaster to the Imperial troops, and whose inhabitants were warmly attached to the House of Austria. Above fifty thousand Russians were expected (2): but they could not arrive in time to enter into operations either on the Danube or the Adige at the commencement of the campaign. These dispositions on both sides were made on the principle that the possession of the mountains ensures that of the plains, and that the key to the Austrian monarchy was to be found in the Tyrol Alps; a great error, and which has been since abundantly refuted by the campaigns of Aapoleon, and the reasoning of the Archduke Charles (5) The true avenue to Vienna is the valley of the Danube, it is there that a serious blow struck is at once decisive. and that the gates of the monarchy are laid open by a single great defeat on the frontier. It was not in the valley of the Inn, nor in the mountains of the Grisons, but on the heights of Ulm and the plains of Bavaria, that Napoleon prostrated the strength of Austria in 1805 and 1809; and of all the numerous defeats which that power had experienced, none was felt to be irretrievable but that of Hohenlinden, on the banks of the Iser, in 1800 There is no analogy between the descent of streams from the higher to the lower grounds, and the invasion of civilized armies from mountains to the adjacent plains A ridge of glaciers is an admirable fountain for the perennial supply of rivers, 11 1 1 - - I toon want ang/f) but the Ruinous et fects of the

Sw terland Nothing was so advantageous to them as the neutrality of that the fredch republic, because it covered the only defenceless frontier of the state, and give them the advantage of carrying on the campaigns in Germany and Italy, for which the fortresses on the Rhine and in Piedmont

. . . . f a- of I own turned by a reverse 'he contest was dige was hable to be turned by a single reverse on the Aar or the St -bounded. The surface over which military operations were carried, was by this conquest immensely extended, without any proportionate addition either to the means of offensive or defensive warfare. The Tyrol was a great central fortress, in which the Imperialists had often found shelter in moments of disaster, but no such advantage could be hoped for by the Republicans from their possession of the hostile or discontented cantons of Switzerland; while no avenue to the heart of Austria was so difficult as that which lay through the midst of the brave and indomitable inhabitants of that almost inaccessible province (1).

⁽³⁾ Archduke, i 117 162 Camp de 1796 (4) Jour x 286 and x: 26 Archduke, i 53 (4) Dans : 32 33 Jon x: 90 91 treb th (2, Arch Ch : 10 41 Dem 1, 33 Jon x1 95 Gaerre de 1799

Clr.

Nor had the invasion of the Roman and Neapolitan states, and the banishment of Napoleon to the sands of Egypt, contributed less to weaken the formidable powers with which two years before he had shattered the Austrian monarchy. Now was seen the sagacity with which he had chosen the line of the Adige for tenacious defence, and the wisdom of the declaration, that if he had listened to the suggestions of the Directory, and advanced to Rome. he would have endangered the Republic. Though the forces in the Peninsula were above one hundred and ten thousand, and were soon increased by the arrival of conscripts to one hundred and thirty thousand men, the Republicans were never able to meet the Imperialists in equal force on the Adige; and Italy was lost, and the retreat of the army from Naples all but cut off, while yet an overwhelming force, if it could only have been assembled at the decisive point, existed in the Peninsula (2).

Notwithstanding the deficient state of their military preparations, lostifies, and the urgent representations of all their generals that the actual force under their command was greatly inferior to the amount which the Directory had led them to expect, the French government, led away by ill-founded audacity, resolved to commence hostilities. The Austrian cabinet having returned no answer to the peremptory note, in which the Directory required the sending back of the Russian troops, Jourdan received orders to cross the Rhine, which was immediately done at Kehl and Huningen. and the Republicans advanced in four columns towards the Black Forest. A few days after, Bernadotte, with ten thousand men, took possession of Manheim, and advanced against Philipsburg, which refused to capitulate, notwithstanding an angry summons from the Republican general. Upon receiving this intelligence, the Archduke passed the Lech, and advanced in three columns towards Biberach, Waldsee, and Ravensberg, at the head of thirty-seven thousand infantry and fifteen thousand cavalry; while Starry, with thirteen thousand men, was moved upon Neumarckt, and six thousand men were thrown into the fortifications of Ulm (5).

Operations in the Grissons. While the hostile armies were thus approaching each other, in the space between the Rhine and the Danube, the contest had commenced, on the most extended scale, in the mountains of the Grisons. Dur-March 5 and 6 ing the night of the 5th March, Masséna marched upon Sargantz, and having summoned the Austrian general, Aussena marched upon Sargantz, and having summoned the Austrian general, Aussena marched upon Sargantz, and evacuate the district, his troops advanced at all points to cross the Rhine. The left wing, under Oudinot, afterwards, Duke of Reggio, "a general," said Napoléon, "tried in a hundred battles," was destined to make a false attack on the post of Feldkirch, so as to hinder Hotze, who commanded at that important point, from sending any succour to the centre at Coire, and the right at Reichenau; the right wing, under Dumont, was destined to cross at that place, and turn the position of Coire by the upper part of the stream, while Masséna himself, in the centre, was to force the passage opposite to Luciensteg, and carry the intrenchments of that fort. Subordinate to these principal attacks, Loison, with a brigade, was directed to descend from the valley of Urseren upon Disentis, and support the attack of Dumont; while I ecourbe, who lay at Bellinzona, received orders to penetrate by Tusis, over the snowy summit of the Bernhardin and down the stupendous delife of the Via-mala, into the Engadine. and open up a communication with the Italian army on the Adige (1)

These attacks were almost all successful The Rhine, yet charged Tie trem's with melting snows, was crossed under a murderous fire, after an obstinate resistance, the fort of Luciensteg was carried by the intrendity of the French chasseurs, who scaled an almost maccessible height which commanded it, and eight hundred men, with five pieces of cannon. nere made prisoners Meanwhile Dumont, having forced the pass of kunkel, and made himself master of the central point and important bridge of Reichenau, situated at the junction of the two branches of the Rhine, not only succeeded in maintaining himself there, but made prisoners an Austrian detachment which had resisted Loison at Disentis The result of this movement was, that Auffenberg, who fell back slowly, contesting every meh of ground, towards Coire, found his retreat cut off up the Rhine and, being surrounded there by superior forces, he had no alternative but to lay down his arms, with two thousand men and ten pieces of cannon, while a battalion

he had stationed at Embs underwent the same fate (2) While these successes were gained on the centre and right, Oudi-

driven be & with great loss into the not advanced against Feldkirch Hotze instantly collected his troops, and advanced to meet him, in order to preserve his communication with Auffenberg, but, after maintaining his ground for a whole day, he was at length driven back to the intrenchment of Feldkirch, with the loss of a thousand men and several pieces of cannon.

At the same time, Lecourbe, having broken up from Bellinzona, crossed the Bernhardin, yet encumbered with snow, and arrived at Tusis by the terrible defile of the Via mala, where he divided his forces into two columns, one of which moved over the Julian Alps, towards the sources of the Inn, while the other, under Lecourbe in person, began to ascend the wild and rocky valley of the Albula The intention of the Republicans was to have supported this arruption by Dessoles, who received orders to debouche from the Valteline into the valley of the Upper Adige, but the march of the latter column across the mountains having been retarded by unavoidable accidents, General Bellegarde, who commanded the Austrian forces in that quarter, made preparations, by occupying all the passes in the neighbourhood, to envelope the insaders (3)

March 14 Martinsbruck in consequence was assailed by Lecourbe without success, but although Laudon, in his turn, made an attack with his own troops, combined with its garrison, in all fourteen thousand men, upon the French forces, he was unable to gain any decisive advantage, and the Republicans, awaiting their reinforcements, suspended their operations for ten days At length Dessoles having come up, and other reinforcements arrived, I ecourbe commenced a general attack on Laudon's forces, leading his division against Martinsbruck, while Dessoles and Loison were directed to cross the mountains into the Munsterthal and cut off their retreat To arrive at that valley it was necessary for the division of the former to cross the lughest ridges in Europe, amidst ice and snow, which might have deterred the most intrepid chasseurs. With undaunted courage his soldiers ascended the glaciers of the Wurmser Joch, which separates the sources of the Adda from one of those of the Adige. After having turned the fortifications on the summit, which the Imperialists occupied in perfect security, he descended by the wild and rocky bed of the torrent of Rambach, amidst frightful precipices, where a handful of men might have arrested an army, surprised the post of Taufers, which Laudon had fortified with care, and totally routed its garrison, after a desperate resistance, with the loss of four thousand prisoners and all its artillery. The situation of the Austrian general was now altogether desperate; for while Dessoles was achieving this decisive success, Loison had seized upon Nauders, and Lecourbe forced the post and passage of Martinsbruck, so that all the avenues by which his retreat could be effected were cut off, and he had no resource but to throw himself, with three hundred men, into the glaciers of Gebatch, from whence, after undergoing incredible hardships, he at length reached the valley of Venosta, and joined General Bellegarde, who was marching to his relief. After this glorious victory, achieved with forces hardly half the number of the vanguished, and which cannot be appreciated but by those who have traversed the rugged and inhospitable ridges among which it was effected, Dessoles advanced to Glurns (1); and the French found themselves masters of the upper extremity of the two great valleys of the Tyrol, the Inn and the Adige; but here their advance was arrested by General Bellegarde, who had collected nearly forty thousand men to oppose their progress, and the intelligence of events in other quarters, which restored victory to the Imperial standards.

The intelligence of the first success in the Grisons reached Jourdan on the 11th, and induced him to move forward. On the 12th, he passed the Danube, and advanced in four marches to Pfullendorf and Mengen, between that river and the lake of Constance. Judging, however, that he was not in sufficient strength to attempt any thing until the post of Feldkirch was carried, he urged Masséna to renew his attacks in March 11, 12, that quarter. That important town, situated on a rocky eminence in the middle of the valley, and supported by intrenchments extending from the river Ill, which bathed its feet, to inaccessible cliffs on either side, was repeatedly attacked by Oudinot, at the head of the French grenadiers, with the utmost impetuosity; but all his efforts recoiled before the steady courage of the Imperialists. Masséna, conceiving this post to be of the utmost importance, from its commanding the principal passage from the Vorarlberg into the Tyrol, united the whole division of Menard to the troops of Oudinot, and advanced in person to the attack. But the great strength of the works, and the invincible tenacity of the Austrians, defeated all his efforts. In vain the French sought to establish themselves on the right of the position; the Tyrolese sharpshooters ascended the adjacent eminences, and assailed the Republicans with such a close and destructive fire, as rendered it impossible for them to maintain their ground (2); and Masséna, after beholding the flower of his army perish at the foot of the intrenchments, was obliged to draw off his forces, with the loss of three thousand men, to Luciensteg and Coire, while Oudinot recrossed the Rhine, and established himself at Reineck.

Jourdan, to compensate the inferiority of his force, had taken up a strong position between the lake of Constance and the Danube. Two torrents, the 10

200 dans o Ostrach and the Aach, flowing in opposite directions, the one into the Danube, the other into the lake, from a marsh in his centre. along the front of his position St -Gar, with the left, was sta-

cupied the heights benutiu and range accessible of the line placed at the source of the two torrents, it was to be reached by a chaussée, which crossed the marshy ground from which they descended. It was against this part of the line that the principal efforts of the Imperialists were directed, while subordinate attacks were simultaneously commenced on the right and left against St-Cyr and Ferino The force 111 1 and not Ostrach, under the Archduke in person, was jority of numbers in the attack-irdan; but at length the left, under St.-Cyr, having been outnanked at Mengen, and the centre being on the point of sinking under the increasing masses of the assailants, a general retreat was ordered, and such was the danger of the left wing, that it was continued, without intermission, on the day following, till they reached the position of Stockich (1),

Importance This affair did not cost above two thousand men to the vanquished party, and the loss of the victors was nearly as great, but it had the most important effect upon the fate of the campaign. It broke the charm of Republican invincibility, compelled the French standards openly to retreat before the Imperial, and gave to the Austrians all the advantage of a first success. Now appeared the good use which they had made of their time during the short interval of peace. Their cannon, well served and formidable, were much more numerous in proportion to the troops engaged than they had been in the former war, and the light artillery in particular, formed on the French model, had attained a degree of perfection which entirely deprived the Republicans of their advantage in that important weapon of modern warfare (2). Jourdan clearly saw the importance of the village of Stockach, at Stockach where all the roads to Swabia, Switzerland, and the valley of the Neckar, unite, and beyond which he could not core mue his retreat, without abandoning his communications with Massena and the Grisons Perceiving 1, 1 1 de mas preparing an attack, he resolved to anticipate him,

1. - of importance in . . this time in great nding channel be-ious course in the Mombers in front lake of Constance: their centre occur, 7 Jalone turn the Austrians, and love in effort was to be made, hama . retreat by the single chaussée of Stockach in their rear, where they of necessity must, in case of disaster, have lost all their artillery (5). At five in the morning all the columns were in motion, and the advanced guard of Soult soon came in sight of the videttes of Meerfeld. He was soon attacked so vigorously by that general and St.-Cyr, that he was driven from Liptingen, and thrown back in confusion into the woods which lay along the road of Stockach. Speedily were they expelled from that stronghold; the infantry, in great disorder, retreated to Stockach, and the cavalry on the road towards Mæskirch. Meanwhile the two armics were engaged along the whole March 26. line. Souham in the centre repulsed the light troops of the enemy as far as Wahlweis and Orsingen on the Stockach, and menaced the plateau of Nellemberg, while Ferino was actively engaged on the right. A violent cannonade was heard along the whole front of the army; a decisive success had been gained on one point, the Austrian right was turned, the victory seemed already decided (1).

⁽³⁾ Jom x: 128 Dum i 49, St Cyr, : 133 (1) Arch Ch : (47 151 Th x 233 Dnm 1 43 45 Jom xi 120, 121 St.-Cyr, i, 130, 132 (2 Dum : 42 43 Arch Ch 1 156 165 135 Arch Ch 1 171 175

No sooner, however, did the Archduke perceive the impression which the French had made on his right wing, than he set off at the gallop for that quarter of the field, followed by twelve squadrons of cuirassiers, after whom succeeded six battalions of grenadiers; while a powerful body of cavalry were stationed in the plateau of Nellemberg to protect the retreat of the army, in case of its becoming necessary to have recourse to that extremity. These dispositions, rapidly adopted at the decisive moment, changed the fortunes of the day, and their effect was increased by a faulty step of Jourdan, who, instead of supporting the menaced point with all his disposable force, sent orders to St.-Cyr to advance to Mæskirch, in the idea of cutting off the retreat of the Imperialists. A violent struggle now ensued in the woods of Liptingen, which Soult had gained in the first moment of success. The Archduke attacked them with fresh troops, the Republicans defended them with heroic valour; and one of the most furious combats that occurred in the whole war, took place, without intermission, for several hours. Three times the French advanced out of the wood to meet their enemies, and three times, notwithstanding the most vigorous efforts, they were repulsed by the obstinate perseverance of the Germans. At length the Imperialists became the assailants; the Archduke charged in person at the head of the Hungarian grenadiers. Prince Furstemburg and Prince Anhalt Bemburg were killed while leading on their respective regiments, and the flower of the army on both sides perished under the terrible fire which overspread the field of battle. St.-Cyr, who felt that he had gained what, if properly supported, might have become a decisive success, long and obstinately maintained his ground; but at length, finding that the principal effort of the Austrians was directed against his wing, and that their reserves were coming into action, he ordered Soult to evacuate the wood, and retire into the plain of Liptingen. This perilous movement was performed by that able officer in presence of a victorious enemy, and when his rear-guard was almost enveloped by their cuirassiers, with admirable steadiness; but, when they reached the open country, they were charged by Kollowrath, at the head of the six battalions of grenadiers and twelve squadrons of cuirassiers, which the Archduke had brought up from the reserve. This effort proved decisive. In vain Jourdan charged the Austrian cavalry with the French horse; they were broken and driven back in disorder by the superior weight and energy of the cuirassiers, and the general-in-chief narrowly escaped being made prisoner in the flight. This overthrow constrained the infantry to a disastrous retreat, during which two regiments were enveloped and made prisoners; and St.-Cyr, who was now entirely cut off from the centre of his army, alone escaped total destruction by throwing himself across the Danube, the sole bridge over which he was fortunate enough to find unoccupied by the enemy (1). This great success, and the consequent separation of St.-Cyr from the remainder of the army, was decisive of the victory. Southam and Perino, with the centre and right, had maintained their position, not-maintain their ground against the victorious troops of the Archdule Although, therefore, the French had bravely withstood the superior forces of the enemy, and the loss on both sides was nearly equal, amounting to about five thousand men to each party, yet, by the separation of their left wing, they had sustained all the consequences of a serious defeat, and it

Jourdan was so much disconcerted with the result of this action, that, after reaching the defiles of that forest, he surrendered the command of the army to Ernouf, the chief of the staff, and set out for Paris, to lay in person his complaints as to the state of the troops before the Directory (3).

Retreat of Across the

19

never again occurred to them till the battle of Leipsic. The Archduke clearly perceived that there was the important point of the campaign, and had he been the unfettered master of his actions, he would, in all probability, have constrained the French army to a retreat as disastrous as that from Wurtzburg in 1796, but the Aulic Council, influenced by the erroneous idea that the key to ultimate success was to be found in the Alps, forbade him to advance towards the Rhine till Switzerland was cleared of the enemy. He was compelled, in consequence, to put his army into cantonments between Engen and Wahlweis, while the Republicans leisurely effected their retreat through the Black Forest, by the valley of kintzig and that of Hell, to the April 6 Rhine, which stream they crossed at Old Brisach and held a few days after, leaving only posts of observation on the right bank. This retreat compelled Bernadotte, who, with his little army of eight thousand men, had April 1 already commenced the siege of Philipsburg, to abandon his works with precipitation, and regain the left bank (4); so that, in a month after the campaign had been commenced with so much presumption and so little consideration by the Directory, their armies on the German frontier were every where reduced to the defence of their own territory.

The bad success of their armies at the opening of this campaign, to which L- 11 ant are of Aanoldon's 7:

to the people much of the enthusiasm and vigour of 1795 (5). This was the massacre of the French plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Rastadt.

(1) % Cyr, 1. 139 150 Th x 238 240 Jom x 131, 134 Dum 1 50 52 Arch Ch 1 150, 158 (2) Arch Ch i 150, 252 Jom x 1 36 137 Th z 241 St Cyr, 1 150, 156 Dum i 51

(3) Th x. 241, 242 Jom xt 138 139 St Cyr. 1 160 167 (4) Arch Th : 211, 218 Jom zi 139, 140 Th z 242 (5) Jon x, 141.

Concress of Though at war with Austria, France was yet at peace with the substitute. German empire, and the Congress at Rastadt was still continuing, under the safeguard of neutrality, its interminable labours. When the victory of Stockach had placed that city in the power of the Imperialists, the Cabinet of Vienna ordered the Count Lehbach, their minister plenipotentiary, to endeavour to obtain intelligence of the extent to which the princes of the empire had made secret advances to the Directory. The Count conceived the most effectual way would be to seize the papers of the French embassy at the moment of their leaving the city, and for this purpose he solicited and obtained from his court authority to require an armed force from the Archduke Charles. That gallant officer refused, in the first instance, to comply with the request, alleging that his soldiers had nothing to do with the concerns of diplomacy; but fresh orders from Vienna obliged him to submit, and a detachment of the hussars of Szeckler was in consequence placed at the disposal of the Imperial plenipotentiary (1).

Towards the end of April, the communications of the ministers at Rastadt having been interrupted by the Austrian patrols, the Republicans addressed an energetic note on the subject to the Austrian authorities, and the remonstrance having been disregarded, the Congress declared itself dissolved. The departure of the diplomatic body was fixed for the 28th April, but the Austrian colonel gave them orders to set out on the 19th, as the town was to be occupied on the following day by the Imperial troops, and refused to grant the escort which they demanded, upon the plea that it was wholly unnecessary. The French plenipotentiaries in consequence, Jean Debry, Bonnier, and Roberjot, set out on the same tion of the Irench pleni. evening for Strasburg, but they had scarcely left the gates of potentiaries. Rastadt when they were attacked by some drunken hussars of the regiment of Szeckler, who seized them, dragged them out of their carriages. slew Bonnier and Roberjot, notwithstanding the heroic efforts of the wife of the latter to save her husband, and struck down Jean Debry, by sabre blows, into a ditch, where he escaped destruction only by having the presence of mind to feign that he was already dead. The assassins seized and carried off the papers of the legation, but committed no other spoliation; and leaving two of their victims lifeless, and one desperately wounded, on the ground, disappeared in the obscurity of the night. Jean Debry, whose wounds were not mortal, contrived to make his way, after their departure, into Rastadt, and presented himself, bleeding and exhausted, at the hotel of M. Gærtz, the Prussian envoy (2).

General horror
This atrocious violation of the law of nations excited the utmost which it indignation and horror throughout Europe. The honour of the excites in Germans felt itself seriously wounded by the calamitous event, and throughout Europe. the members of the deputation who remained at the Congress unanimously signed a declaration expressive of detestation at its authors. It is, perhaps, the strongest proof of the high character and unstained honour of the Emperor Francis and the Archduke Charles, that although the crime was committed by persons in the Austrian uniform, and the hussars of Szeckler had been detached from the army of the Archduke to the environs of Rastadt, no suspicion fell upon either of these exalted persons as having been accessary to the nefarious proceeding. That it was committed for political purposes, and not by common robbers; is evident from their having

-

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xi. 142. Lac. xiv. 318. Th. x. 255. (2) Hard. vii. 236, 238. Jom. xi. 142, 143. Lac. xiv. 318, 328. Th. x. 256, 275. Procès-Verbal des

all not us state has nee

The alactacle last at 11 at a 1.1

unauthorized excess by drunken or brutal soldiers of a duty committed to them by their government, requiring more than ordinary discretion and forbearance. But though Austria has escaped the imputation of having been accessary to the guilt of murder, she cannot escape from the disgrace of having been remotely the cause of its perpetration; of having authorized an attack upon the sacred persons of ambassadors, which, though not intended to have been followed by assassination, was at best a violation of the law of nations

an I although the Discotors

it is deserving of the severest reprobation, and, like all other unjustifiable actions, its consequences speedily recoiled upon the head of its authors. The military spirit of the French, languid since the commencement of hostilities, was immediately roused to the highest pitch by this outrage upon their am-

of the campaign

While an implacable war was thus breaking out to the north of ment of his the Alns, reverses of a most serious character attended the first commencement of hostilities in the Italian plains. The approach of the Russians, under Suwarrow, who, it was expected, would reach the Adige by the middle of April, rendered it an object of the last importance for the Republicans to force their opponents from the important line formed by that stream before the arrival of so powerful a reinforcement; but by the senseless dispersion of their vast armies through the whole peninsula, they were unable to collect a sufficient force in the plains of the Mincio, in the commencement of the campaign, to effect that object. The total Impro lent force commanded by Scherer on the Adige was now raised, by the 1 c French arrival of conscripts, to fifty-seven thousand men; Macdonald was at the head of thirty-four thousand at Rome and Naples, ten thousand were in the Cisalpine republic, the like number in Piedmont, five thousand in Liguria: but these latter forces were too far removed to be able to render any assistance at the decisive point, while, on the other hand, the Imperial forces consisted of lifty-eight thousand combatants, including six thousand cavalry, cantoned between the Tagliamento and the Adige, besides a reserve of twenty thousand infantry and five thousand horse in Carinthia and Croatia Their field-artillery amounted to 180 pieces, the park of the army to 170 more, and a heavy train of eighty battering guns, admirably provided with horses and ammunition, was ready at Palma Nuova, for the siege of any of the fortresses that might be attacked. This summary is sufficient to demonstrate the erroneous principles on which the Directory proceeded in their plan of

⁽¹⁾ Nap in Morth vi 40
(2) The Creen of Naples was the real instigutor of this attornous act though the calastrophe in which it terminated was as little interded by her as the single hearted general who detached from his semy the hussers by whom it was commuted -

D ARRASTES II 304 (3) Th x 257 2.0 Jom xt 143, 144 Lac xir

the campaign, and their total oblivion of the lessons taught by Napoléon as to the importance of the line of the Adige to the fate of the Peninsula; while the Imperialists were collecting all their force for a decisive blow in that quarter, half the French troops lay inactive and scattered along the whole extent of its surface, from Piedmont to Calabria (1).

The Austrians had, with great foresight, strengthened their position of the Imperialists on the Adige during the cessation of hostilities. Legnago, commanding a bridge over that river, had become a formidable fortress; the castles of Verona were amply supplied with the means of defence; a bridge of boats at Polo enabled them to communicate with the intrenched camp of Pastrengo, on the eastern slope of the Montebaldo; Venice, placed beyond the reach of attack, contained their great magazines and reserves of artillery stores; all the avenues by which it could be approached were carefully fortified; a flotilla of forty boats, carrying three hundred pieces of cannon (2), was prepared, either to defend the Lagunæ of that capital, or carry the supplies of the army up the Po; while bridges, established over the Piave and the Tagliamento, secured the communication of the army in the field with the reserves by which it was to be supported.

Scherer had obtained the command of the French army; an officer who had served with distinction in the Pyrenees and the Alps during the campaign of 1795, but being unknown to the Italian army, he possessed the confidence neither of the officers nor soldiers; while Moreau, the glorious commander of the retreat through the Black Forest in 1796, occupied the unworthy situation of inspector of infantry. On the side of the Austrians, Melas had obtained, upon the death of the Prince of Orange, the supreme command; an officer of considerable experience and ability, but whose age, above seventy years, rendered him little competent to cope with the enterprising generals of the Republic. Until his arrival, however, the troops were under the orders of General Kray, a Hungarian by birth, and one of the most distinguished officers of the empire. Active, intrepid, and indefatigable; gifted with a cool head and an admirable coup-d'wil in danger, he was one of the most illustrious generals of the Imperial army, and, after the Archduke Charles, has left the most brilliant reputation in its military archives of the last century (5).

French plan The plan of the Directory was for Scherer to pass the Adige, near Verona, drive the Austrians over the Piave and the Brenta, while the right wing of Masséna's army, commanded by Lecourbe, was to form a junction with a corps detached from the Italian army into the Valteline, and fall, by Brixen and Botzen, on the right flank of the Imperial army. But at the very time that they meditated these extensive operations, they detached General Gauthier, with five thousand men, to occupy Tuscany; a conquest which was indeed easily effected, but was as unjustifiable as it was inexpedient, both by weakening the effective force on the Adige, and affording an additional example of that insatiable desire for conquest which the allied powers so loudly complained of in the Republican government. Meanwhile Scherer, having collected his forces, established himself on the right bank of the Adige, opposite to the Austrian army, the right at Sanguinetto, the left at Peschiera; and immediately made preparations for crossing the river. At the same time Kray threw eight thousand men into the intrenched camp of Pastrengo, under Generals Gottesheim and Elnitz, while the divisions

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xi. 147, 148. Dum. i. 58. Th. x. 243, 244. St.-Cyr, i. 172, 173. Arch. Ch, i. 225. (2) Jom. xi. 149. St.-Cyr, i. 173, 175. (3) Jom. xi. 149, 153.

More 33 Laim and Hohenzollern, twenty thousand strong, were established around Verona, with detachments at Arcola, Frecheh and Mercantin, with an equal force, were encamped near Bevilacqua, and klenau, with four thousand, was fationed near Acqua, and the reserves, under Oft and Zoph, read, was fationed near Acqua, and the reserves, under Oft and Zoph, read.

ceived orders to draw near to the Brenta (4)

Proli Inery
The French general having been led to imagine that the bulk of breveneral the Austrian forces were encamped at Pastrengo, between Yerona and the lake of Guarda, resolved to make his principal effort in that quarter. With this view, the three dissistance the left wing, commanded by Serrurier, Delmas, and Grenier, were moved in that direction, while Moreau, with the divisions of Hatry and Victor, received orders to make a false attack near Verona, and, on the extreme right, Montrichard was to advance against Legnago kray, on his part, being led to believe that their principal force was directed against Verona, repaired in haste to Bevilacqua, where he concerted with klenau an attack, on the right flank of the Republicans. Thus both parties, mutually deceived as to each other's designs, maneuvred as if their object had been reciprocally to avoid each other, the bulk of the Austrian forces being directed against the French right, and the principal part of the Republicans against the Imperial left (3)

At three in the morning of the 26th March, the whole French left wing was in motion, while the flotilla on the lake of Guarda set sail during the night to second their operations. In this quarter they met with brilliant success, the redoubts and intrenchments of Pastrengo were carried. Rivali fell into their hands, and the garrison of the intrenched camp, crossing in haste the bridge of Polo, left fifteen hundred prisoners and twelve pieces of cannon in the hands of the Republicans The action did not begin in the centre till near ten o'clock, but it soon became there also extremely warm. The villages in front of Verona were obstinately contested, but after a First suc ress of the desperate resistance, the Republicans pressed forward, and nearly reached the walls of Verona At this sight, haim, who was apprehensive of being attacked in the town, made a general attack on the front and flanks of the assailants with fresh forces, but, although the village of San Massimo, taken and retaken seven times during the day, finally remained in the possession of the Austrians till night separated the combatants, they sensibly lost ground, upon the whole, in that quarter, and the post of Saint I ucie, also the theatre of obstinate contest, was carried by the Republicans But, while fortune favoured their arms on the left, and divided her favours in the centre, the right was overwhelmed by a superior force, conducted by hray in person General Montrichard advanced in that quarter to Legnago, and had already commenced a cannonade on the place, when Frœlich debouched in three columns, and commenced a furious attack along the dikes which led to the French column, while the division of Mercantin advanced as a reserve The Republicans were speedily routed, attacked at once in front and both flanks, they lost all their artillery, and were driven with great loss behind Torre on the road to Mantua (3)

Leads to so. The loss of the French in this battle amounted to four thousand de tree. The loss of the French in this battle amounted to four thousand, but nevertheless, as the success on the left and centre was in some degree balanced by the disaster on the right, they were unable to derive any decisive advantage from this large difference in their favour. The capture of the camp at Pastrengo and of the bridge at Polo was of little importance, as the Austrians held Verona, and the only road from thence to the plain passed through that town. Kray, abandoning the pursuit of Montrichard, hastened to Verona with the divisions of Mercantin and Frælich, leaving a few battalions only to guard the line of the Lower Adige; while the Republicans recrossed the upper part of that river above Verona, and retired towards Peschiera. Thus the bulk of the forces on both sides were assembled near Verona, which was felt to be the key to the Adige equally by the Imperialists and Republicans. Already the courage of the Austrians was elevated by the balanced success which they had obtained (1); and from the hesitation of the enemy in following up his advantage at Pastrengo, they perceived with pleasure that the genius of Napoléon had not been inherited by his successor (2).

⁽¹⁾ Jon x 155 156 Dum 1 58 Th x 215 (3) Jon x 166 170 Th x 217 Dum 1 59 Bot 1 216 217 Arch Ch 1 226 (3) Th x 216 Jon 162 Dum 1 58

scherer ex- After much irresolution, and assembling a council of war, Scherer periences a resolved to descend the Adige with the bulk of his forces, to endeavour-ing to cross attempt a passage between Verona and Legnago at Ronca or Alba-the Adige. redo, while Serrurier, with one division, was thrown agrees at redo, while Serrurier, with one division, was thrown across the upper stream at Polo to distract the attention of the enemy. Preparatory to this design, the army was countermarched from left-right, a complicated operation, which fatigued and embarrassed the soldiers without any adequate advantage. At length, on the 50th March, while the main body of the army was descending the river, Serrurier crossed with seven thousand men at Polo, and boldly advanced on the high-road leading to Trent towards Verona; Kray, debouching from the central point at Verona, assailed the advancing columns with fifteen thousand men of the divisions Freelich and Elnitz, and attacking the Republicans with great vigour, drove them · back in disorder to the bridge, and pressing forward, approached so near. that it would have fallen into his hands, if the French had not sunk the hoats of which it consisted. The situation of Serrurier was now altogether desperate; part of his men dispersed and saved themselves in the mountains; a few escaped over the river at Rivoli; but above fifteen hundred were made prisoners, and the total loss of his division was nearly three thousand men (5).

Notwithstanding this severe check, Scherer persisted in his Countermarches of both parties. design of passing the Adige below Verona. After countermarching his troops, without any visible reason, he concentrated them below villa Franca, between the Adige and the Tartaro; his right encamped near Porlo-Legnago, the remainder in the position of Magnano. Kray, perceiving the defects of their situation, wisely resolved to bring the weight of his forces to bear on the Republican left, so as to threaten their communications with Lombardy. For this purpose, he directed Hohenzollern and St.-Julien to the Montebaldo and the road to Trent; while Wakassowich, who formed for co Bellegarde's corps in the Tyrol, was to more on La Chiesa, by the recommendation side of the lake of Guarda, and he himself debouched from Verezz et the head of the divisions of Kaim, Zoph, and Mercantin, right against the Republican centre at Magnano. The peril of the left wing of the face res now extreme, and it became indipensible to move the right in section towards it, in order to avoid its total destruction. Had Krar, visit and was now raised, by the arrival of his reserves, to forty-live the assessment on the 4th April, he would have surprised the French in the ment in the

⁽¹⁾ Dum. 1. 60, 61. Jom. xi. 172. 173. 5245 Corent animi. Parme of 179, 181.
(2) Saguntinis quia protectore matter of (3) Jonn 1. 11. (3) Jom. xi. 177. In (2) Saguntinis quia preter que monte en 219, St. Cap, 1, 112 112 and the opportunity lost 11.

Desired Art was just when the lateral movement was on the point of being suited before a complished that the hostile armies encountered each other on the plains of Micrano. The French force amounted to thirty-four thousand infantry and seven thousand cavalry; the Austrians were superior, having the field, of whom five thousand were horse.

impossible (2).

The right wing of the French, commanded by Victor and Grenier, overwhelmed the division of Mercantin to which it was opposed. But while this success attended the Republicans in that quarter, the Austrian centre, under haim, penetrated, without opposition, between the rear of Montrebard and the front of Delmas, who were in the act of completing their lateral movement from right to left, and occupied a salient angle in the centre of the French position. Had the Imperialists been in a situation to have supported to the state of the salient angle in the centre of the french position. Had the Imperialists been in a situation to have supported to the salient position. If the salient position is a state of the salient position is a state of the salient position.

quarter, by causing their real about 1000 in the to resist the farther progress of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, but even to attack and carry the village of fluctuations of the enemy, and the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the village of the enemy even to attack and carry the vi

Vactory on every side seemed to many of though decisive success was no longer to be expected from the insulated situation of all the duy were severally because the day, by a decisive of the reserve of fredich, supported to bettern artillery, he fell unavares upon the division of Grenner, and put it to the rout; Victor, trying to restore the combat, was charged in fank by the Imperial horse, and driven bac wing was completed by the att. ralled in its rear Meanwhite, the centre, and Serrurier made miniscin made disanced near to Verona. But the rout of the right wing, which was now driven a mile and a half from the field of battle, so as to leave the centre

now driven a mile and a-half from the field of battle, so as to leave the centre entirely uncovered, was decisive of the victory. Before night, Scherer drew of his shattered forces behind the Tartaro, carrying with them two thousand prisoners and several pieces of cannon, a poor compensation for the loss of four thousand killed and wounded, four thousand prisoners, seven standards, eight pieces of cannon, and forty caissons, which had fallen into the hands of the Imperialists (1).

This victory, one of the most glorious in the annals of the Austrian Its decisive monarchy, was decisive of the fate of Italy. Thenceforth, the French results. fell from one disaster into another, till they were driven over the Maritime Alps, and expelled from the whole peninsula-a striking example of the importance of early victory to the whole fate of a campaign, and of the facility with which the confidence and vigour resulting from long-continued triumphs may, by a single well-timed success, be exchanged for the denression and irresolution which are the sure forerunners of defeat. The advantages gained by the Imperialists were mainly owing to the possession of the fortified posts of Verona and Legnago, and the interior line of operations which they afforded them on the Adige, -another instance, among the many which this war exhibited, of the inestimable importance of a central position in the hands of one who can avail himself of it, and the degree to which it may sometimes, in the hands of a skilful general, counterbalance the most decided superiority in other respects (2).

The Republicans, thrown into the deepest dejection by this deretreat of the French. feat, retired on the following day behind the Mineio; and not feeling themselves in security there, even with the fortress of Mantua on one flank, and that of Peschiera on the other, Scherer continued his retreat behind the Oglio, and then the Adda. This retrograde movement was performed in such confusion, that it entirely lost that general the little consideration which remained to him with his troops, and they loudly demanded the removal of a leader who had torn from their brows the laurels of Rivoli and Arcola. The Austrians, astonished at their own success, and fearful of endangering it by a precipitate advance, moved slowly after the heaten army. Eight days after the battle clapsed before they crossed the Mincio, and established themselves at Castillaro, after detaching Elnitz, with ten thousand men, to observe Mantua, and three battalions to form the investment of Peschiera (3).

While the Republican fortunes were thus sinking in Italy, another renders to the Russian disaster awaited them, in the capture of Corfu, which capitulated to the combined forces of Russia and Turkey, shortly after the commencement of hostilities; and thus deprived them of their last footing in the Ionian isles. Thus on every side the star of the Republic seemed to be on the wane, while that of Austria was rising in the ascendant (4).

While these important events were in progress to the south of the Operations in Ger-Alps, the Austrians evinced an unpardonable tardiness in following up their success at Stockach. In vain the Archduke urged them not to lose the precious moments; the Aulic Council, desirous not to endanger the advantage which they had already gained, enjoined him to confine his operations in clearing the right bank of the Danube by detached parties. After several engagements, the French were finally expelled from the German side, but in their retreat they, with needless barbarity, burned the celebratedwooden bridge at Schaffhausen, the most perfect specimen of that species of architecture that existed in the world (5).

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 251, 252. Jom. xi. 190, 194. Dum. i. 64, 65. St. Cyr, i. 185. 190.

⁽²⁾ Jdm. xi. 195. (3) Th. x. 252, 253. Jom. xi. 198, 199. Dum. i. 66. St. Cyr, i. 191, 195.

⁽⁴⁾ Ann. Reg. 1799, 80. Jom. xi. 199. (5) Jom. xi. 205. Dum. i. 72. Arch. Ch. i. 215, 221.

which they had botherto found for their flanks in the neutral ridges of the Alps, the Republicans were now compelled to maintain one uninterrupted line of defence from the Texel to the gulf of Genoa, and any considerable disaster in one part of that long extent weakened their operations in every other. Massena was well aware that a mountainous country, in appearance the most easy, is frequently in reality the most difficult of defence; because the communication from one part of the line to another is often so much obstructed, and it is so easy for a skilful adversary to bring an overwhelming force to bear against an unsupported part. Impressed with those ideas, he drew back his advanced posts at Taufers, Glurentz on the Adige, and Fintermuntz on the Inn, and arranged his forces in the following manner. The right wing was composed of Lecourbe in the Engadine, Menard in the Grisons, and Lorges in the valley of the Rhine, as far down as the lake of Constance; the centre, consisting of four divisions, supported by an auxiliary Swiss corps, occupied the line of that river as far as Huningen. Headquarters were established at Basle, which was put in a respectable posture of defence. The left wing, scattered over Huningen, Old Brisach, Kehl, and Manheim, was destined to protect the line of the Rhine below that place. The whole of these forces amounted to one hundred thousand men, of whom about two-thirds were stationed in Switzerland and the Grisons (1).

Descript on Three impetuous streams, each flowing within the other, descend from the snowy ridges of the Alps towards the north, and form, by their unction, the great river of the Rine. The first of these is the Rhine itself, which, rising in the Glaciers near the St. Gothard, and flow-river covers the whole of Switzerland, and contains within its ample circuit all its tributary streams. The second is formed by the course of the Linth, which, rising in the Alps of Glarus and the Wallenstatter sea, forms in its course the charming lake of Zurich, and issuing from its northern extremity at the town of the same name, under the appellation of the Limmat, falls into the Aar, not far from the junction of that river with the Rhine. That line only covers a part of Switzerland, and is of much smaller extent than in bound in the four cantons at Altdorf, and leaving its wood-clad clifb at Lucerne, falls into the Aar, near its junction with the Rhine. All these lines, shut in on the right by enormous mountains, terminating on the left in deep rivers, and intersected by vast lakes and ridges of rock, present the greatest adjuntages for defence. Masséna soon found that the exterior circle, that of the Rhine, could not be maintained, with the troops at his disposal, against the increasing forces of the Austrians, and he retired to the inner line, that of the Limmat and Linth, and established his head-quarters at Zurich, in a position of the most formidable strength (1).

Meanwhile Hotze and Bellegarde were combining a general attack upon the whole line of the Republicans in the Grisons. Towards tack upon Massena's the latter end of April, their forces where all in motion along the line in the Grisons. immense extent of mountains from the valley of Coire to the En-April 30. gadine. After a vigorous attack, Bellegarde was repulsed by Lecourbe, from the fortified post of Ramis, in the Lower Engadine, while a detachment sent by the Col de Tcherfs to Zemetz was cut to pieces, with the loss of six hundred prisoners, among whom was the young Prince de Ligne. But as the Imperialists were advancing through the valleys on his flanks, Lecourbe retreated in the night, and next day was attacked by Bellegarde at Suss, whence, after an obstinate resistance, he was driven with great loss to the sources of the Albula. At the same time, a general attack was made, in the valley of the Rhine, on the French posts; but though the Imperialists were at first so far successful as to drive back the Republicans to Luciensteg and the heights of Mayenfeld, yet, at the close of the day, they were obliged to fall back to their former position (2).

This general attack upon the French line in the Grisons, was comof the Swiss bined with an insurrection of the peasants in their rear and in the small cantons, where the desire for revenge, on account of the is cruelties of the French during the preceding year, had become extremely strong. This feeling had been worked up to a perfect fury by an attempt of the Directory to complete the auxiliary forces of eighteen thousand men, which Switzerland was bound to furnish, by levies from the militia of the different cantons. Determined to combat rather against than for the destroyers of their liberties, ten thousand men took up arms in the small cantons and adjoining districts of the Grisons, and fell with such rapidity upon the French posts in the rear, that they not only made themselves masters of Disentis and llantz, but surprised the important bridge of Reichenau, which they strongly barricaded, thus cutting off all communication between the divisions of Lecourbe, at the sources of the Albula, and the remainder of the army. Had the attack of Hotze and Bellegarde succeeded at the same time that this formidable insurrection broke out in their rear, it is highly probable that Masséna's right wing would have been totally destroyed; but the defeat of Hotze at Luciensteg gave the Republicans time to crush it before it had acquired any formidable consistency. Masséna, aware of the vital importance of early success in subduing an insurrection, acted with the greatest vigour against the insurgents; Ménard moved towards Reichenau, which was abandoned at his approach, and pursued the peasants to Ilantz and Disentis. At this latter place they stood firm, in number about six thousand, and, though destitute of artillery, made a desperate resistance. At length, however, they were broken, and pursued with great slaughter into the mountains, leaving above one thousand men slain on the spot. At the same time, Soult proceeded with his division to Schwytz, where he overthrew a body of peasants; and, embarking on the lake of Lucerne, landed, in spite of the utmost resistance, at Altdorf, and cut to pieces a body of three thousand men, supported by four pieces of cannon, who had taken post in the defiles of the Reuss above that place. The brol en remains of this division field by Wasen to the valley of Schollenen, but there they were met and entirely dispersed by I ecourbe, who, after subduing the insurrection in the Vallevantine, bad crossed the St.-Gollard, and fallen upon the fugitives in rear In this affair, above two thousind peasants were killed and wounded, and such was the consternation excited by the military execution which followed, that the people of that part of Switzerland made no further attempt, during the progress of the campaign, to take a part in hostilities. They say that their efforts were of little avail amidst the immense masses of disciplined men, by whom their country was traversed, and suffering almost as much, in the conflicts which followed, from their friends as their enemies, they resigned themselves, in indiginant silence, to be the spectators of a contest, from which they had nothing to hope, and no power to prevent [1].

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 278, 279. Jom, xi, 213.

These movements, however, rendered it indispensable for the traws back French to evacuate the Engadine, as great part of the troops who y or forthe formed the line of defence had been drawn into the rear to quell the insurrection Loison retired from Tirrano, and joined Lecourbe at S -Gircomo, and as the Imperialists, who were now far advanced in Lombardy, were collecting forces at Lugano, evidently with the design of seizing upon the St -Gothard, and so turning the flank of Masséna's position, that active general instantly crossed the Bernhardine, and descending the Misocco, advanced to Bellinzona, in order to protect the extreme right of his interior line, which rested on the St -Gothard, the lake of Zurich, and the Limmat (2) The Archduke, convinced that it was by turning the right of Mastack by the Austrians on sona in the mountains, that he would be most easily forced from the French this strong line of defence, strengthened Hotze by fresh troops, and combined a general attack with I ecourbe for the 14th May The forces they brought into action on that day were very considerable, amounting to not less than thirty thousand men, while those of Menard, since the greater part of Lecourbe's division had retreated to Bellinzona, did not exceed fourteen thousand men I uciensteg, since it fell into the hands of the Republicans, had been greatly strengthened, a narrow defile, bounded by the precinices of the Alps on one side, and a rocky eminence bathed by the Rhine on the other, was crossed by strong intrenchments, mounted with a formidable artillery, but the intelligence which the Archduke received of the approach of thirty thousand Russians to support his army, who had already arrived in Galliera, determined him without delay to commence offensive operations Accordingly, on the 12th May, the columns were every where put in motion in the mountains, and two days afterwards this impor-May 14 * tant post was attacked The assailants were divided into four columns, one was destined to engage the attention of the enemy by a false attack in front, the second to make a circuit by the Alps of Mayenfeld, and descend on the intrenchments in rear, a third to cross the Suvisir Alps, and the fourth, to which the cavalry and artillery were attached, to assail the pass called the Slapiner Joch Hotze commanded in person the attack in front, while Jellachich directed the other columns After twelve hours of fatiguing march, the latter succeeded in bringing his troops in rear to attack the intrenchments When the animating sound of their hurra was heard, Hotze pressed forward to assail the works in front, and, after a stout resistance, the barriers were burst open, and the fort carried, with the loss to the Republicans of fifteen hundred prisoners (1).

This important success occasioned the immediate retreat of the French armies from the Grisons. Their left fell back by Sargans to Wallenstadt; the centre by the gorge of Vettis; the right by Reichenau, Ilantz, and Disentis, into the valley of Urseren. The centre of the army was forced; and had Bellegarde been at hand to follow up the successes of Hotze, it would have been all over with the Republicans in Helvetia. As it was, they did not effect their retreat from the Grisons without sustaining a loss of three thousand men in prisoners alone; while the total loss of the Imperialists was only seventy-one men; an extraordinary, but well-authenticated proof of the immense advantage of offensive operations in mountain warfare, and the great disasters to which even the best troops are subjected by being exposed, when acting on the defensive, to the loss of their communications, by their adversary turning their position (2).

Retreat of Massena to alter entirely his line of deMassena to alter entirely his line of deMassena to alter entirely his line of deMassena to alter entirely his line of defence. The right wing in the Alps being driven back, it was no longer possible to maintain the line of the lake of Constance and the Rhine from Stein to Eglisau. In consequence, he fell back from the Rhine behind the Thur; Lecourbe received orders to evacuate the St.-Gothard and concentrate his forces below the Devil's Bridge, in the valley of the Reuss, while the bulk of his army was assembled round the headquarters at Zurich, all the approaches to which were fortified with the utmost care (5).

Part of the Austrian left wing is have been unable to have maintained his ground with the right detached into Lom. wing against the impetuous attacks of Hotze, had that enterprising general been supported by Bellegarde; but the Aulic Council, conceiving that Italy was to be the theatre of decisive operations, directed him to descend into Lombardy, and reinforce the army there, now commanded by Suwarrow, leaving only ten thousand men to guard the Valteline and gain possession of the St.-Gothard. In pursuance of these orders he crossed the Splugen, and proceeded by the lake of Como to Milan, while Hotze vigorously pursued the retreating enemy in the valley of the Rhine, and every where drove him back to the Swiss frontiers (4).

Encouraged by these successes, and the near approach of the Russian auxiliaries, to push the war with vigour, the Archduke published a proclamation to the Swiss, in which he announced that he was about to enter their territory, to deliver them from their chains, and exhorted them to take up May 22. arms against their oppressors. At the same time the Rhine was passed at all points, a large column crossed at Stein, under Nauendorf; another at Eglisau, while Hotze crossed the upper part of the stream in the Grisons, and penetrated, by the source of the Thur, into the Toggenberg. To prevent the junction of the Archduke and Hotze, Masséna left his intrenchments on the Limmat, and commenced an attack on the advanced guard of Nauendorf. A desultory action ensued, which was maintained with great vivacity on both sides; fresh troops continually came up to reinforce those who were exhausted with fatigue, and though undecisive upon the whole, Oudinot gained a considerable advantage over an Austrian division, commanded by Petrasch, which was defeated, with the loss of fifteeen hundred prisoners.

⁽¹⁾ Dum. i. 123, 124. Jom. xi. 224, 225. Arch. Ch. i. 271, 278.

⁽³⁾ Jom. xi. 228. Dum. i. 127. (4) Dum. i. 124, 126. Jom. xi. 228, Ch. i. 283, 284.

Arch.

May 25 bir ch criter fa f reed by ste treh duke Notwithstanding that check, however, the object was gained, the Archiduke marched on the following day, towards Winterthur, while Hotze descended with all his forces to support him. The important post called the Steigpass was attacked at noon, and by that intrepul general (1), while the Archiduke effected his june.

importunt post called the Stegpass was attacked at noon, and carried by that intrepid general (1), while the Archduke effected his junction with the left wing of his army at Winterthur and Aestenbach Masser, upon this, fell back to Zurich, and the Republicans confined themselves to their defensive position on the Limmat

Their risks While the I rench centre was thus forced back to their interior mixed from him of defence, the right wing, under I ecourbe, was still more desirable severely pressed by the Imperialists No sooner had Bellegarde arrived in Lombards, than buwarrow detached General Haddick, with ten thousand men, to drive them from the St.-Gothard. I roson's division, defeated at the Monte Cenere, by Hohenzollern, retired up the valley of the Tiento, to Nay 39. Airolo, where it was reinforced by several additional battalions, in order to maintain the passage of the St.-Gothard, and give time for the baggage and artillery to defile to Altdorf Overwhelmed by numbers, Loison was at length driven over the snowy summit of that rigged mountain, through the smiling valley of Urseren, and down the deep descent of the Devil's Bridge, to Wasen, with the loss of six hundred prisoners. An Austrian brigade even clas place, at such vigour, that they were obliged to retrace their steps in confusion up the whole valley of Schollenen, and could only prevent the irruption of the enemy into the valles of Urseren by cutting an arch of the Devil's bridge. At the same time, Leneral Vanitrailles, at the head of a strong French division, which Massena had dispatched to the support of the army of Italy, attacked and routed a body of six thousand peasants, which had taken post at Leuk (2), in the upper Valais, and made himself master of Brieg, the well-known village at the foot of the Simplon Austral Meanwhile, the bulk of the Austrian forces were concentrated in the discount of the environs of Zurich, where Massena still maintained, with characteristic obstinacy, his defensive position. The French lines evtended from the intrenched heights of Zurich, through those of Regensherg, and thence to the Rhine, in a direction nearly parallel to the course of the Aar. The camp around Zurich was strengthened by the most formidable redouble, at which the army had laboured for above a mouth, while the whole country by which it could be approached, situated between the Glatt, the Limmat, and the Aar, filled with wooded heights, and intersected by precipious ray mes, presented hilled with wooded heights, and intersected by precipitous ravines, presented the greatest obstacles to an attacking army On the 5th June, the Archduke, having assembled all his forces, assailed him along tree.

of the action The combat at the same time raged in the centre with an certain success; and at length the Archduke, seeing the repulse of Hotze, and decining the heights of the Zurichberg the decisive point, detached General Wallis, with a nortion of the reserve, to renew the attack, while the Prince of Lorraine made a simultaneous effort on the side of the Attisberg. Wallis at first made a great impression, carried the farm of Zurichberg, and, after a vehement struggle, arrived at the palissades of the intrenchments; but Massena, seeing the danger, flew to the spot, at the head of a column of grenadiers, and assailed the Imperialists in flank, while a tremendous fire of grape and muskerry from the summit of the works tore down the foremost of their ranks. Notwithstanding all their efforts, the Imperialists were unable to force the intrenchments; Hotze himself was severely wounded; and, after a bloody conflict, they retired over the Glatt, leaving three thousand killed and wounded on the field battle (1).

He riepues Noways discouraged by this check, the Archduke, after a day's repose, made arrangements for a renewal of the attack; and, taught, arranged atby experience, adopted such dispositions as must have ensured success. Before daybreak on the morning of the 6th, two columns, of eight thousand men each, were destined to assault the heights of Zurich and Wipchengen, while all the left, the reserve, and part of the centre, were to support their attack. But Masséna, apprehensive of the result, retreated during the night, defiled over the bridges of Zurich and Weltingen, and took post, between Lucerne and Zurich, on Mount Albis, a rocky ridge stretching from the lake of Zurich to the Aar, in a position even stronger than the one he had left. The retreat was effected without loss under cover 'of night; but the great arsenal of Zurich, containing 450 pieces of cannon, and immense warlike stores, fell on the day following into the hands of the Imperialists (2).

The evacuation of the intrenched camp at Zurich, drew after it Dissolution of all the of all the Swiss forces the dissolution of the forces of the Swiss Confederacy in the interest of France. The battalions of Berne and Soleure, already in the sermuch weakened by desertion, were entirely dissolved by that event; while those of Zurich and Turgovia, menaced with military execution on their dwellings, if they continued longer with the enemy, made haste to abandon a cause of which they were already ashamed in their hearts. In a week the battalions of the Pays de Vaud, and a few hundreds of the most ardent of the Zurich democrats, alone remained of the eighteen thousand auxiliaries first assembled under the tricolor standard. At the same time, the provisional government of Helvetia, no longer in safety at Lucerne, set off for Berne; the long file of its carriages excited the ironical contempt of the peasantry, still ardently attached to the institutions of their fathers, in the rural districts through which they passed (5).

Reflections The details which have now been given of the campaign in the Alps, though hardly intelligible to those who have not traversed nitude of the precedthe country, or studied the positions with care in an excellent ing operations in the map, offer the most remarkable spectacle, in a military point of view, which the revolutionary war had yet exhibited (4). From the 14th May, when the attack on the fort of Luciensteg commenced, to the 6th June, when the intrenched camp at Zurich was abandoned, was nothing but one

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xi. 249, 251. Dum. i. 169, 170. Th. x.

^{295.} Arch. Ch. i. 327, 344.
(2) Jom. xi. 251, 252. Th. x. 296. Dum. i. 169, 170. Arch. Ch. i. 345, 350.

⁽³⁾ Jom. xi. 255, 256. Arch. Ch. i. 350, 357. (4) Those who have enjoyed the advantage of having travelled over these mountains will require the aid of no map to remind them of places whose relative position is indelibly imprinted in their memory. Those who have not, will find them delineated in the common Carte, Routière de la Suisse..

continual combat, in a vast field of battle, extending from the snowy summits of the Alps, to the confluence of the great streams which flow from their perennial fountains. Posterity will hardly credit that great armies could be maintained in such a situation, and the same unity of operations communi-

these prolonged actions for twenty days; the forced marches by which they were succeeded; the sufferings and privations which the troops on both sides endured; the efforts necessary to find provisions for large bodies in those inhospitable regions, in many of which the traveller or the chamois bunter can often hardly find a footing, combined to render this warfare both the most memorable and the most animating which had occurred since the full of the Roman empire (1).

Arrival While success was thus attending the Imperial standards on the bland moder. Blume and the Alps, events of a still more decisive character ocsewarone curred on the Italian plans A few days after the important battle of Magnano, twenty thousand Russiaus, under Suwarrow, joined the Imperial army, still encamped on the shores of the Mincio. Thus were the forces of the north, for the first time since the origin of the Revolution, brought into collision with those of the south, and that desperate contest commenced which was destined to inflict such terrible wounds on both empures, to wrap in flames the towers of the Kremlin, and bring the Tartars of the Desert to the shores of the Seine, and ultimately establish a new balance of power in Europe, by arraying all its forces under the banners either of Asiatic despotism or European ambition. The Emperor Paul, who now entered, with all the characteristic im-

The Emperor Paul, who now entered, with all the characteristic impetuosity of his character, into the alliance against France, had embraced the most extensive and visionary ideas as to the ulterior measures which should be adopted upon the overthrow of the French Revolutionary power. He laboured to effect the formation, not only of a cordial league between all the soveregas of Europe, to stop the progress of anarchy, but the restoration of all the potentates and interests which had been subverted by the French arms, and the closing of the great schism between the Greek and Catholic Churches, which had so long divided the Christian world. He went even so far as to contemplate the union of the Catholics and Protestants, the stilling of all the controversies which distracted the latter body, and the assemblage of the followers of Christ, of whatever denomination, under the banners of one Catholic reveries of Condorcet (2).

Chester The troops thus brought against the Republicans, though very different from the soldiers of Eylau and Borodino, were still former remaindable by their discipline, their enthusiasm, and their stubborn valour. Their cavalry, indeed, was poorly equipped, and their artillery inferior in skill and science to that of the French, but their infantry, strong, hardy and resolute, yielded to none in Europe in the energy and obstinacy so essential to military success. Field-marshal Suwarrow, who commanded them, and now assumed the general direction of the allied army, though the singularity of his manner and the extravagance of his ideas in some particulars have detracted, in the estimation of foreigners, from his well-earned reputation, was yet unquestionably one of the most remarkable generals of the last age. Impetuous, enthusiastic, and impassioned, brave in conduct, invincible in resolution, endowed with the confidence and ardour which constitute the soul of the conqueror, without the vigilance or foresight which are requisite to the general, he was better calculated to sweep over the world with the fierce tempest of Scythian war, than conduct the long and cautious contests which civilised nations maintain with each other. His favourite weapon was the bayonet, his system of war incessant and vigorous attack. and his great advantage the impression of superiority and invincible power which a long course of success under that method had taught to his soldiers. The first orders he gave to General Chastelar, chief of the staff to the Imperialists, were singularly characteristic, both of his temper of mind and system of tactics. That general having proposed a reconnoissance, the marshal answered warmly, "Reconnoissance! I am for none of them; they are of no use but to the timid, and to inform the enemy that you are approaching. It is never difficult to find your opponents when you really wish it. Form column; charge bayonets; plunge into the centre of the enemy; these are my reconnoissances;" words which, amid some exaggeration, unfold more of the real genius of war than is generally supposed (1).

Fearless and impetuous in conversation as action, the Russian veteran made no secret of the ultimate designs with which his imperial master had entered into the war. To restore every thing to the state in which it was before the French Revolution broke out; to overturn the new republics, re-establish, without exception, the dispossessed princes, restrain universally the spread of revolutionary ideas, punish the authors of fresh disturbances, and substitute for the cool policy of calculating interest a frank, generous, disinterested system, was the only way, he constantly maintained, to put down effectually the Gallic usurpation. The Austrian officers, startled at such novel ideas, carefully reported them to the cabinet of Vienna, where they excited no small disquictude. To expel the French from the whole Italian peninsula, and, if possible, raise up an effectual barrier against any future incursions in that quarter from their ambition, was, indeed, a favourite object of their policy; but it was no part of their designs to sanction a universal restitution of the possessions acquired since the commencement of the war, or exchange the distant and rebellious provinces of Flanders for the rich and submissive Venetian territories adjoining the Hereditary States, and affording them at all times a secure entrance into the Italian plains. Hence a secret jealousy and distrust speedily arose between the coalesced Powers, and experienced observers already began to predict, from the very rapidity of the success with which their arms were at first attended, the evolution of such causes of discord as would ultimately lead to the dissolution of the cońfederacy (2).

The plan of operations concerted between the Archduke and Suwarrow was to separate entirely the French armies of Switzerland and Italy, and to combine the movements of the two allied armies by the conquest of the Italian Alps, Lombardy, and Piedmont, in order to penetrate into France on its most defenceless side by the Vosges mountains and the defiles of the Jura, the

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xi. 261, 262. Dum. i 173. Hard. vii. (2) Hard. vii. 220. 213, 219.

28

HISTORY OF PUROPF.

CHAP XXVIII.

same quarter on which the great invasion of 1814 was afterwards effected. It was on this principle that they maintained so vigorous a contest under Bellegarde and llotze, in the Val-levantine and Grisons, and by their successes the right wing of Massena was forced to retire, the Imperialists were interposed in a salient angle between the Republican armies, and the one thrown back on the line of the Po, the other on that of the Aar (1) Moreau succeeded Sherer in the command of the army of Italy it command of this momentous crisis He found it reduced, by sickness and the sword, to twenty-eight thousand combatants, and, after a vain attempt to maintain the line of the Oglio, the troops retired towards Milan, leaving the immense military stores and reserve artiflery parks at Gremona to the Conquerors, while a bridge equipage, which was descending the Minero from Mantua, with a view to gain the waters of the Po, also fell into the hands of the Imperialists (2) Moreau finding himself cut off from his connexion with Massina in the Alps, and being unable to face the Allies in the plain of lint tie I ombardy, resolved to retire towards the mountains of Genoa, in order to facilitate his junction with Macdonald, who had received orders to evacuate the Parthenopeian republic, and retire upon the Apennines Mantua was invested, and all the frontier towns of the Cisalpine republic were abandoned to their own resources Soon after, Peschiera was carried by assault, Ferrara besieged, and Brescia summoned hray, to whom the right wing was intrusted, carried the latter town without opposition, and the garrison, eleven hundred strong, which had retired into the castle, soon after surrendered at discretion. The French now retired behind the line of the Adda, a rapid stream, which, descending from the lake of Lecco, runs in a deep and swift torrent, over a surface of twenty-four leagues, to the Po The right bank is almost every where so lofty as to command the left, and the bridges at Lecco, Cassana, I odi, and Pizzighitone are defended either by · fortified towns or strong tetes-de-pont. On the 25th April the Allies approached this formidable line, and a sharp skirmish ensued between the Russians, under Prince Bignithios, destined to meet a glorious death on the field of Borodino, and the I reach, before the walls of Lecco, in which the former were repulsed commencing thus a contest which was never destined to be finally extinguished till the Russian standards waved on the heights of Montmartre (5) The progress Sunarrow now left twenty thousand men, under kray, to besiege Peschiera and blockade Mantua, and prepared to force the pressage ns Surred 10 1l e threatened But while actively engaged in this design, the Austrian division me se loss of the Adda To frustrate this intention, Moreau accumulated his troops in masses on that part of the river which seemed chiefly of General Ott succeeded in throwing a bridge, during the night, at Irezzo, and before morning his whole troops had crossed over to the right, while, at the same time, Wukassowich surprised the passage at Brivio. The French line was thus divided into three parts, and Serrurier's division, eight thousand strong, which formed the extreme left, was not only cut off from all support, but even from receiving any orders from the remainder of the army The divisions of Ott and Zoph commenced a furious attack on Grenier's division, and after a brave resistance, drove it back towards Milan, with the loss of two thousand four hundred men, including eleven hundred pri-(3) Jam 31 265 267 Duin : 79 St Cer i (1) Dum 1 174 Jam x1 262 Arch Ch 11 200 207 (2) Jom x: 262 263 Dum : 174 175

soners, while Serrurier, whose division was entirely isolated by the passage of Wukassowich at Brivio, took post at Verderio, in a strong position, determined to defend himself to the last extremity. Guillet, with the brigade under his orders, who was returning from the Valteline, escaped destruction by embarking on the lake of Como, steering for Menagio, and making his way to the lake of Lugano by the beautiful valley which leads from that place to Porlezza. By remaining in his position at Verderio while the Allied army was advancing, Serrurier necessarily was soon enveloped by their of Serrurier with 7000 columns; evincing thus rather the courage of a soldier who disdains to retreat, than the conduct of an officer who knows how to extricate his men from difficulties. He was soon surrounded on all sides by the Imperialists; and, after an honourable resistance, finding his retreat cut off, and the assailants triple his own force, laid down his arms with seven thousand men. At the same time, Melas carried the tête-de-pont at Cassano, and pursued the fugitives with such vigour that he passed the bridge pell-mell with them, and pushed on before night to Gorgonzelo, on the road to Milan (4).

The situation of the French was now in the highest degree critical. enters Milan in these engagements they had lost above eleven thousand men, and could now, even with all the reinforcements which they received, hardly muster in their retreat twenty thousand to meet the great army of the Allies, above sixty thousand strong, which was advancing in pursuit. In these disastrous circumstances, Milan was abandoned, and the army withdrawn behind the Ticino. Suwarrow, the same day, made his triumphal entry into that capital, amidst the transports of the Catholic and aristocratic party, and the loud applause of the multitude, who greeted him with the same acclamations which they had lavished, on a similar occasion, on Napoléon three years before. The Republican army, having left a garrison of two thousand men in the castle, moved slowly in two columns towards Turin, in deep dejection, and heavily burdened with the numerous families compromised by the Revolution, who now pursued their mournful way towards the frontiers of France (2).

Nothing now remained to Moreau but to retire to such a position retires to Alexandria as might enable him to rally to his standards the yet unbroken army which Macdonald was bringing up from the south of the peninsula. For this purpose he divided his forces into two columns, one of which, under his own command, escorting the parks of artillery, the baggage, and military chest, took the road of Turin, while the other, consisting of the divisions of Victor and Laboissiere, moved towards Alexandria, with a view to occupy the defiles of the Bochetta and the approaches to Genoa. Having effected the evacuation of the town and the arsenal, provided for the defence of the citadel, in which he left a garrison of three thousand men, under General Fiorilla, and secured the communications with the adjacent passes of the Alps, the French general moved the remainder of his army into the plain between the Po and the Tanaro, at the foot of the northern slope and principal debouches of the Apennines, where they encircle the bay of Genoa and join the Maritime Alps. This position, extending only over a front of four leagues, supported on the right by Alexandria, and on the left by Valence, affording the means of manœuvring either on the Bormida or the Po, and covering at once the roads from Asti to Turin and Coni (5), and those from Acqui to Nizza and Savona, was better adapted than any other that could have been selected to enable the Republicans to maintain their footing in Italy, until they were reinforced by the army of Macdonald, or received assistance from the interior of France.

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 284. Jom. xi. 276, 278. Dum. i. 112. St. Gyr, i. 191, 199. Arch. Ch. i. 230, 231. (2) Arch. Ch. i. 35, 36. Th. x. 286. Jom. xi. 278,

⁽³⁾ Jon. xi. 280, 284. Th. x. 286, 287. Dum. i 141, 142. St.-Cyr, i. 200, 203.

^{9.} St.-Cyr, i. 199, 201.

Master of all the plain of Lombardy, and at the head of an overis taid by whelming force, Suwarrow did not evince that activity in pursuing fell wed by the broken remains of his adversary which might have been exnected from the general vigour of his character. For above a week he gave himself up to festivities at Milan, while an army hardly a third of his own was 1 . A compa columns, before him. At length, finding his

At the same time Orci, Novi, i councin, a

Alhes, with a hundred pieces of cannon, twenty gun-boats, a siege equipage, and immense stores of ammunition and provisions, an advantage which enabled kray to draw closer the blockade of Mantua, and dispatch Hohen-. . . . one of the castle of Milan On the 9th the Allies

I the I'o and the raid ed his right from Novi to munications with Genoa I to mask his real design.

which was to cross the la, tatu in him to a general and decisis e action Check of The right, or southern bank of the Po, from the junction of the Rose berg, marshy, and approachable only on dykes. Some large islands opvonrous to nosite Mugarone having afforded facilities for the passage, Rosenons directed against Valence, berg at to cross at an that quarter.

was In the night of the Line, no men across the principal arm into a wooded island, from whence they shortly passed over, some by swimming, others by wading, with the water up to their armpits, and and the village of Mugarone. Moreau no sooner heard of this " ---- I noint the nation; assailed on every side, and torn to pieces by a murderous inc. of grape-shot, they were driven back, first into the island, then across to the northern bank, with the loss of eight hundred killed and wounded, four pieces of cannon, and seven hundred prisoners. No sooner was Suwarrow informed of the first success of Rosenberg's attack, than he pushed forward tno divisions to support him, while another was advanced towards Marengo to effect a diversion; but the bad success of the enterprise, which failed because it was not combined with sufficient support at the first (2), rendered it necessary that they should be recalled, and the Allied army was concentrated anen in the intrenched camp of Garofalo

Constantine, defended incustive

⁽²⁾ Jour x: 292 291 Dum i 165 St.-Cyr, I (1) Dum 1 192, 145 Jom x1 289, 290 St Cyr, 1 203 Arch Ch 111 37, 39 201, 205 Th x 288

At the same instant that this was passing in one quarter, Suwar-tween Suwarrow and Moreau near Alexandria.

At the same instant that this was passing in one quarter, Suwar-tween Suwarrow and Moreau near Casa Tenia, and marching upon Sesia. This attempt was not attended with decisive success. A warm action ensued between the division of Victor and the Russian advanced guard, nine thousand strong, under the orders of Generals Bagrathion and Lusignan. Victory was long doubtful, and although the French were at length forced to retreat under shelter of the cannon of Alexandria, the demonstration led to no serious impression at the time on the position of the Republican general (4).

· Tired with the unsatisfactory nature of these manœuvres, Suwarlength re-treats to the row resolved to march with the bulk of his forces upon Turin, erest of the where the vast magazines of artillery and military stores of the and Turin. French army were assembled, in the hope that, by reducing its citadel, and occupying the plains of Piedmont to the foot of the Alps, the position of Moreau on the Po and the Tanaro might be rendered no longer tenable, from the interruption of its communications with France. By a singular coincidence, not unusual in war, at the very time that the Russian marshal was adopting this resolution, Moreau had resolved, on his part, to retire by Asti, upon Turin and Coni, and, abandoning the line of the Apennines, concentrate his forces for the preservation of his communication with the Alps. Invincible necessity had compelled him to adopt this retrograde movement. Great part of Piedmont was in a state of insurrection; a large body of peasants had recently occupied Ceva, another had made themselves masters of Mondovi, which closed the principal line of retreat for the army, the sole one then practicable for artillery and carriages. The recent success of the Russians towards Alexandria led him to believe that the weight of their force was to be moved in that direction, and that he would soon be in danger of having his communications with France cut off. Influenced by these considerations, he detached the division of Victor, without artillery or baggage, by the mountain paths, towards Genoa, in order to maintain the crest of the Apennines, and reinforce, when necessary, the army of Macdonald, which was approaching from Naples, while he himself, having first thrown three thousand men into Alexandria, retired by Asti towards Turin, with the design of maintaining himself, if possible, at Copi, the last fortified place on the Italian side of the Alps, until he received the promised reinforcements from the interior of France (2).

No sooner was Suwarrow informed of the retreat of Moreau, than Suwarrow surprises Turin. Republicans, and, after having moved forward a strong body under Schwickowsky to form the investment of Alexandria, advanced himself with the main body of the army towards Turin. Wukassowich, who commanded the advanced guard, with the aid of some inhabitants of the town who favoured his designs, surprised oné of the gates, and rapidly introducing his troops, compelled the French to take refuge in the citadel. The fruits of this conquest were 264 pieces of cannon, eighty mortars, 60,000 muskets, besides an enormous quantity of ammunition and military stores, which had been accumulating in that city ever since the first occupation of Italy by the arms of Napoléon. This great stroke, the success of which was owing to the celerity and skill of the Russian generals, deprived Moreau of all his resources, and rendered the situation both of his own army and that of Macdonald in the highest degree critical. At the same time, intelligence was received of the fill of the castle of Milan, after four days of open trenches, an advantage which permitted the division of Hohenzollern to remforce the besieging army before Mantua, while the artillery was dispatched to Tortona, which was now closely invested (1)

And the fartle of faken May ai

Unable from these disasters, to maintain his ground in the basin of Piedmont, Moreau now thought only of regaining his position s parents towards armies into France. For this purpose he retired to Savigliano, having first moved forward an advanced guard, under Grouchy, to clear the road he was to follow, by retaking Mondoyi and Ceva, into the latter of which the Austrians had succeeded in throwing a small garrison to support the insurgents who had occupied it That general retook Mondoys, but all his efforts failed before the ramparts of Ceva The closing of the great road through this town rendered Moreau's situation apparently hopeless. Suwarrow, with a superior force, was close in his rear, the only route practicable for artillery by which he could regain the Apennines was blocked up, and he could not retire by the Col di Tende without abandoning all prospect of rejoining Macdonald, and leaving his army to certain destruction. From this desperate situation the Republicans were extricated by the skill and vigour of their general, aided by the resources of Guilleminot and the engineer corps under his directions Aver ti to that town

dered practicable for artillery and chariots, and as soon as this was done, the blockade of Ceva was raised, three thousand men were thrown as a garrison into Coni, which was abandoned to its own resources; and the remainder of the army, after a strong rear-guard and been posted at Murialio to cover the passage, defiled over the parrow and rocky path, and arrived in safety at Loano, on the southern side of the mountains No sooner were they arrived there than they formed a junction with Victor, who had successfully accomplished his retreat by Acqui, Spigno, and Digo, and occupied all the passes leading towards Genoa over the Apennines, Victor was intrusted with the important post of Pontremoli, while the other divisions placed themselves on the crest of the mountains from Loano to the Boc-chetta (2) Suwarrow, on being informed of the retreat of Moreau from the spreads over plain of Piedmont, spread his troops over its rich surface, and up of Preda out the glens which run from thence into the heart of the Alps The Russian divisions entered into the beautiful valleys of Suza, St -Jean de Maurienne, and Aosta Frælich pushed his advanced posts to the neighbourhood of Cont, Pignerol capitulated, Suza surrendered at discretion and the advanced posts of the Albes every where appearing on the summit of the itself master of berrara; that a flotilla from Venice had surprised flavenid, and an insurrection had broken out in the mountainous parts of Tuscany and the Ecclesiastical States, which threatened Ancona, and had already wrested Arezzo and Lucca from the Republican dominions (1),

Still ocen pying the

Thus, in less than three months after the opening of the Campaign and the Adige, the French standards were driven back to the summit of the Alps; the whole plain of Lombardy was regained, with the exception of a few of its strongest fortresses; the conquests of Napoléon had been lost in less time than it had taken to make them; and the Republican armies, divided and dispirited, were reduced to a painful and hazardous defence of their own frontiers, instead of carrying the thunder of their victorious arms over the Italian Peninsula. A hundred thousand men were spread over the plain of Lombardy, of whom forty thousand were grouped under Suwarrow round Turin (2). History has not a more brilliant or decisive series of triumphs to record; and they demonstrate on how flimsy and insecure a basis the French dominion at that period rested; how much it was dependent on the genius and activity of a single individual; how inadequate the revolutionary government was to the long-continued and sustained efforts which were requisite to maintain the contest from their own resources; and how easily, by a combined effort of all the powers at that critical period, when Napoleon was absent, and time and wisdom had not consolidated the conquests of democracy, they might have been wrested from their grasp, and the peace of Europe established on an equitable foundation. But, notwithstanding all their reverses, the European governments were not as yet sufficiently awakened to the dangers of their situation; Prussia still kept aloof in dubious neutrality; Russia was not irrevocably engaged in the cause; and Great Britain, as yet confining her efforts to the subsidizing of other powers, had not descended as a principal into the field, or begun to pour forth, on land at least, those streams of blood which were destined to be shed before the great struggle was brought to a termination.

These successes, great as they were, were yet not such as might have been achieved, if the Russian general, neglecting all minor considerations, and blockading only the greater fortresses, had vigorously followed up with his overwhelming force the retreating army of the Republicans, and driven it over the Maritime Alps. Unable to withstand so formidable an assailant, they must have retired within the French frontier, leaving not only Mantua and Genoa, but the army which occupied the Neapolitan territory, to its fate. This hold and decisive plan of operations was such as suited the ardent character of the Russian general, and which, if left to himself, he would unquestionably have adopted; but his better judgment was overruled by the cautious policy of the Aulic Council, who, above all things, were desirous to secure a fortified frontier for its Venetian acquisitions, and compelled him, much against his will, to halt in the midst of the career of victory, and besiege in form the fortresses of Lombardy. Something was no doubt gained by their reduction (5); but not to be compared with what might have been expected if an overwhelming mass had been interposed between the French armies, and the conquerors of Naples had been compelled to lay down their arms between the Apennines and the Po (4).

⁽¹⁾ Jom, xi. 310, 315. Dum. i. 176, 179. Arch. Ch. ii. 46, 48.

⁽²⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 47.
(3) Arch. Ch. ii. 47, 48. Hard. vii. 248, 249.
(4) A Russian officer of Suwarrow's staff at this juncture wrote to Count Rostopchin at St. Petersburg: -" Our glorious operations are thwarted by those very persons who are most interested in their success. Far from applauding the brilliant triumphs of our arms, the cursed cabinet of Vienna seeks only to retard their march. It insists that our great Suwarrow should divide his army, and direct it at once to several points, which will save Moreau from total destruction. That cabinet, which fears a too

IN HS SUULINGER |

at Naples in the first fervour of revolutionary success, had been involved in those consequences, the invariable attendant on a sudden concession of nower to the people, spoluation of the rich, misery among the poor, and mextricable embarrassment in the finances of the state. In truth, the Directory, pressed by extreme pecuniary difficulties, looked to nothing so much in their conquests as indemnifying themselves for the expenses of their expeditions, and invariably made it the first condition with all the revoluthey which they established, that they should pay the expenses of mocratic ascendency in Naples were found to be bitter in the extreme; a s successive contributions of twelve and lifteen millions of francs on the capital and provinces, of which mention has already been made, excited the intmost dissatisfaction, which was greatly increased soon after by the expe-. . . . P -cotore A Drovi-general alarm; the Jacobin citus specury began to d. . terror of revolutionary times, the national guard totally failed in producing off count force. while the confiscation of the church property, and the Ruffo, in Calabria, succeeded in exciting a reveal, and red to , field an army, fifteen thousand strong, composed of the descendants of the Brutuans and Lucanians, while another insurrection, hardly less formidable, broke out in the province of Apulia. But these tumultuary bodies, imperfectly armed and totally undisciplined, were unable to withstand the veteran t of the late great slat .

tack on . couraged by this success, marched into Apuna, where his rocces no a greatly augmented, and he was reinforced by some regular troops dispatched from Sicily (1).

pub-

11 to from designs which it dares into com-

with Moreau, and concerts measures

with him.

Italy, broke out into insurrection in every quarter. Duhesme left Apulia in open revolt, and had a constant fight to maintain before he reached Canua: a few hundred English landed at Salerno, and, aided by the peasantry, advanced to Vietri and Castello-mare; while the insurgents of the repeatedly Roman and Tuscan states, becoming daily more audacious, interastriled, he rupted all the communications with the north of Italy. Notwithsafety to the standing these menacing circumstances, Macdonald effected his retreat in the best order, and without sustaining any serious loss. He arrived at Rome on the 16th, where he reinforced his army by the divisions of Grenier, continued his route by Acquapendente to Florence, where he rallied to his standards the divisions of Gauthier and Montrichard, who were in the environs of Pistoia and Bologna, and established his headquarters at Lucca in the end of May. The left wing, composed of the Polish division Dombrowsky, took post at Carzana and Aula; the centre occupied the great road from Florence to Pistoia, the right, the high road to Bologna, and all the passes into the Modena, with an advanced guard in the city of Bologna ilself (1). He enters

In this situation, Moreau and Macdonald were in open communication; and it was concerted between them that the chief body of munication their united forces should be brought to bear upon the Lower Po, with a view to threaten the communications of the Allies, disengage Mantua, and compel their retreat from the plain of Lombardy.

For this purpose it was agreed that Macdonald should cross the Apennines and advance towards Tortona; his right resting on the mountains, his left on the right bank of the Po, while Moreau, debouching by the Bochetta, Gavi, and Serravalle, should move into the plain of that river. As the weight of the contest would in this view fall upon the former of these generals, the division of Victor, which formed the eastern part of Moreau's army, was placed under his orders, and a strong division directed to descend the valley of the Trebbia, in order to keep up the communication between the two armies, and support either as occasion might require (2).

The position of the allied armies, when these formidable preparathe Allies at tions were making to dislodge them from their conquests, were as follows: Kray, who commanded the whole forces on the Lower Po, had .24,000 men under his orders, of whom one-half were engaged in the siege of Mantua, while 5,000 under Hohenzollern, had been dispatched to cover Modena, and 6,000, under Ott, watched the mouths of the lateral vallevs of the Taro and the Trebbia: The main body of the army, consisting of the divisions Zoph, Kaim, and the Russians, amounting to 28,000 men, was encamped in the neighbourhood of Turin, with its advanced posts pushed into the entrance of the Alpine valleys. Fredich, with 6,000 men, observed Coni; Wukassowich, with 5,700, occupied Mondovi, Ceva, and Salicetto; Lusignan, with 5,000 combatants, blockaded Fenestrelles; Bagrathion, with a detachment of 1,500 men, was posted in Cezanna, and the Col di l'Asietta; Schwiekousky, with 6,000, men, blockaded Tortona and Alexandria; the corps of Count Bellegarde, 15,000 strong, detached from the Tyrol, was · advancing from Como to form the siege of these two fortresses; while that of Haddick, amounting to fourteen thousand bayonets, which formed the communication between the rear of the army and the left wing of the Archduke mass of Auffenen (1).

⁽²⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 49. Jom. xi. 341, 342. Th. x. (1) Th. x, 297. Jom. xi, 338, 341. Dum, i. 154, 299. 156.

Thus, though the Allies had above a hundred thousand men in the held, they could hardly assemble thirty thousand men at any one point; so immensely had they extended themselves over the plants of Lombardy, and so obstinately had the Aulic Conneil adhered to the old system of establishing a cordon of troops all over the territory which they occupied. This vast dispersion of force was attended with little danger as long as the shittered army of Moreau alone was in the field; but the case was widely different when it was supported by thirty-five thousand fresh troops, prepared to penetrate into the centre and most unprotected part of their line. Had Macdonald been able to push on as rapidly from Horence as he had done in arriving at that place, he might have crushed the divisions of klennu, Holunzollern, and Ott, before they could possibly have been sucalf a pit par on part data proper assemble a sufficient body of men to resist the attack at the menaced point (2)

Macdonald, having at length completed his preparations, raised his camp in the neighbourhood of Pistoia on the 7th June, with an -Flres army, meluding Victor's division, of thirty-seven thousand menand marched across the Apennines to Bologna Hohenzollern, who commanded in the Modena, withdren his posts into the town of Modena, where he was attacked in a few days, and, after a bloody engagement, driven out with the loss of lifteen hundred men. Had the right wing of the Republicans punctually executed his instructions, and occupied the road to berrara during the combat round the town, the whole of the Imnemalists would have been made prisoners. Immediately after this success, Macdonald advanced to Parma, driving the Imperial cavalry before lum, while Oil, who was stationed at the entrance of the valley of the Taro, seeing that his retreat was in danger of being cut off, retired to Placentia, Jeaving the road open to Victor, who upon that debouched entirely from the Apennines, and effected his junction with Macdonald at Borgo Sin Denino, entirely to the north of the mountains. On the day following, Placentia was occurred by the Republicans, and their whole army established in the neighbourhood of that city (5)

No sooner was Suwarrow informed of the appearance of Mac-Able and donaid's army in Tuscany, than he adopted the same energent immed at ly resolution by which Napoléon had repulsed the attack of Wursmer on the Adige three years before All his advanced posts in Piedmont were recalled, the brigade of Lusignan, near Fenestrelles, the divisions Freelich, Bagrathion and Schwickousky began their march on the same day for the general rendezvous at Astl, and hray received orders instantly to were provisioned, a great intrenched camp formed near the tête-de-pont of Valence, and all the stores recently captured, not necessary for the siege of the citadel, removed from Turin. By these means the Allied army was rapidly reassembled, and on the 45th June, although Kray with the troops from Mantua had not yet arrived, thirty thousand infantry and six thousand cavalry were encamped at Garofalo, on the ground they had occupied six weeks before (1).

⁽³⁾ Arch Ch u 51, 52 St. Cyr, i 218 211 (i) Arch Ch is 48 49 Jom xs 343, 344 Dum : 160 182 185 Th x 297, 298 (2) Th x 298, 299 Dam. i, 184, 189 Jom xs, Dam 1 191, 192 Jam, x1 346 349

The intelligence of Suwarrow's approach induced Macdonald to armier meet concentrate his forces; but, nevertheless, he flattered himself with Trebbia. the hope that he would succeed in overwhelming Ott before he could be supported by the succours which were advancing. Three torrents, flowing parallel to each other, from the Apennines to the Po, intersected the plain occupied by the French army; the Nura, the TREBBIA, and the Tidone. The bulk of the Republican forces were on the Nura; the divisions Victor, Dombrowsky, and Rusca, were in advance on the Trebbia, and received orders to cross it, in order to overwhelm the Austrian division stationed behind the Tidone. For this purpose, early on the morning of the 17th, they passed both the Trebbia and the Tidone, and assailed the Imperialists with such vigour and superiority of force, that they were speedily driven back in great disorder; but Suwarrow, aware, from the loud sound of the cannonade, of what was going forward, dispatched Chastellar with the advanced guard of the main army, which speedily re-established affairs. By degrees, as their successive troops came up, the superiority passed to the side of the Allies; the Austrians rallied, and commenced a vigorous attack on the division of Victor, while the Russian infantry, under Bagrathion, supported the left of the Imperialists. Soon after, Dombrowsky, on the left, having brought up his Polish division by a sudden charge, captured eight pieces of cannon, and pushed forward to Caramel; but at this critical moment, Suwarrow ordered a charge in flank by Prince Gortschakoff, with two regiments of Cossacks and four battalions, while Ott attacked them in front. This movement proved decisive; the Poles were broken, and fled in disorder over the Tidone. Meanwhile the right of the Republicans, composed of Victor's division, withstood all the efforts of Bagrathion, and was advancing along the Po to gain possession of the bridge of S.-Giovanni, when the rout of Dombrowsky's division obliged them to retire. This retreat was conducted in good order, till the retiring columns were charged in flank by the Cossacks, who had overthrown the Poles; in vain the French formed squares, and received the assailants with a rolling fire; they were broken, great part cut to pieces, and the remainder fled in disorder over the Trebbia. The Russians, in the heat of the pursuit (2), plunged like the Carthaginians of old into that classic stream, but they were received with so destructive a fire of musketry and grape-shot from the batteries of the main body of the French on the other side, that they were forced to retire with great loss; and the hostile armies bivouacked for the night on the same ground which had been occupied nineteen hundred years before by the troops of Hannibal and the Roman legions (5).

Russians. A similar coincidence will frequently again occur in the course of this work, particularly at Vittoria, Leipsic, Lutzen, Fleurus, and many others; a striking proof how permanent are the eperation of the causes, under every variety of the military art,, which conduct hostile nations, at remote periods from each other, to the same fields of battle,—See Archdurk Charles, ii. 61. The author visited this field in 1818, along with his

⁽¹⁾ St.-Cyr, i. 215, 217. Jom. ai. 349, 353. Dum, i. 193, Arch. Ch. ii. 55.

⁽²⁾ Jom. xi. 354, 357. Dum. i. 195, 197. Th. x. 300, 301. Arch. Ch. ii. 53.

⁽³⁾ It is remarkable, that the fate of Italy has thrice been decided on the same spot; once in the battle between the Romans and Carthaginians, again, in 1746, in that between the Austrians and French, and in 1799, between the French and towards his own right, which was to assail that quarter, his best infantry, consisting of the divisions Bagrithion and Schwickonsky, under the orders of Prince Rosenberg. These troops received orders to pass the Trebbia, and in a division of the property of the trebbia, and in a division of the property of the trebbia of the centre, supported by a powerful reserve under Freibia; while Ott, with a small corps, formed the left, and was established on the high-road to Placentia, rather to preserve the communication with its easile, than to take any active part in the engagement. The day was the anniversary of the battle of shoin; and suwarrow, to stimulate the ardour of the Austrians; gase for the watchword, "Theresa and Kolin," while the general instructions to the army were to combat in large masses, and as much as possible with the bysonet (1).

During the night, Suvarrow brought up all his forces, and, encou-

name of the Macdonald, who intended to have delayed the battle till the day Tribia of the lowing following, had only the divisions Victor, Dombrowsky, and Rusca, with the brigide of Salm, in position on the Trebbia; those of Olivier for the lower of the control of the lower of the control of the lower o commenced at six o'clock, between the troops of Bagrathion and Victor's division, which formed the extreme left of the French and rested on the mountains. The French general, seeing he was to be attacked, crossed the Trebbin, and advanced against the enemy. A bloody battle ensued on the ground intersected by the Torridella, till at length, towards evening, the steady valour of the Russians prevailed, and the Republicans were driven back with great slaughter over the Trebbia, followed by the Albies, who advanced as far as Settime. On the French right, Salm's division, enveloped by superior forces, retreated with difficulty across the river. In the middle of the day, the divisions of Olivier and Montrichard arrived to support the centre; but though they gained at first a dight advantage, nothing decisive occurred, and at the approach of night they retired at all points over the Trebbia, which again formed the line of senaration between the hostile armies (2).

Singular Worn out with fatigue, the troops, on both sides, lay down round of Rosenberg alone had crossed the stream, and reached Settimo, in the rear of the French lines; but disqueted by its separation from the remainder of without distinguishing, on friends and foes, and the extraordinary spectacle was exhibited of a nocturnal combat by moonlight, by hostile bodies up to the middle in water. At length the officers succeeded in putting an end to this useless butchery, and the rival armies, separated only by the stream, sunk into sleep within a few yards of each other, amidst the dead and the dying (1).

The sun arose for the third time on this scene of slaughter; but no tions of both disposition appeared on either side to terminate the contest. Suwarrow, reinforced by five battalions and six squadrons, which had come up from the other side of the Po, again strengthened his right, renewed to Rosenberg the orders to press vigorously on in that quarter, and directed Melas to be ready to support him with the reserve. Hours, even minutes, were of value; for the Russian general was aware that Moreau had left his position on the Apennines, that the force opposed to him was totally inadequate to arrest his progress, and he was in momentary expectation of hearing the distant sound of his cannon in the rear of the army. Every thing, therefore, depended on a vigorous prosecution of the advantages gained on the two preceding days, so as to render the co-operation of the Republican armics impossible. On the other hand, Macdonald, having now collected all his forces, and reckoning on the arrival of Moreau on the following day, resolved to resume the offensive. His plan was to turn at once both flanks of the enemy; a hazardous operation at all times, unless conducted by a greatly superior army, by reason of the dispersion of force which it requires, but doubly so in the present instance, from the risk of one of his wings being driven into the Po. The battle was to be commenced by Dombrowsky moving in the direction of Niviano to outflank the corps of Rosenberg, while Rusca and Victor attacked it in front; Olivier and Montrichard were charged with the task of forcing the passage of the river in the centre; while the extreme right, composed of the brigade of Salm and the reserve of Watrin, were to drive back the Russian left by interposing between it and the river Po (2).

Such was the fatigue of the men on both sides, that they could conflict on the Trebbia not commence the action before ten o'clock. Suwarrow at that hour was beginning to put his troops in motion, when the French appeared in two lines on the opposite shore of the Trebbia, with the intervals between the columns filled with cavalry, and instantly the first line crossed the river with the water up to the soldiers' arm-pits, and advanced fiercely to the attack. Dombrowsky pushed on to Rivallo, and soon outflanked the Russian right; and Suwarrow, seeing the danger in that quarter ordered the division Bagrathion to throw back its right in order to face the enemy, and, after a warm contest, that general succeeded in driving the Poles across the river. But that manœuvre having uncovered the flank of the division Schwiekousky, it was speedily enveloped by Victor and Rusca, driven back to Casaleggio, and only owed its safety to the invincible firmness of the Russian infantry, who formed square, faced about on all sides, and by an incessant rolling fire maintained their ground till Bagrathion, after defeating the Poles, came up in their rear, and Chastellar brought up four battalions of the division of Forster to attack them in front. The Poles, entirely disconcerted by their repulse, remained inactive; and, after a murderous strife, the French were overwhelmed, and Victor and Rusca driven, with great loss, over the Trebbia (5).

In the centre, Olivier and Montrichard had crossed the river, and attacked

⁽³⁾ Jom. xi. 364, 365. C 304. Hard. vii. 256, 257

the Austrana, under Melas, with such algour, that they made themselves masters of some pieces of artiflery, and threw the hac into disorder. Mready Montrichard was advancing against the divison I orster, in the middle of the Russian line, when the Prince of Lichtenstein, at the head of the reserve, composed of the flower of the Allied army, who at that moment was defiling towards the right to support Schwiekousky, suddenly fell upon their flank, when already somewhat disordered by success, and threw them into confusion, which was soon increased into a defeat by the heavy fire of I orster on the other side. This circumstance decided the fite of the day Forster was now so far relieved as to be able to succour Sunarron on the right, while Melas was supported by the reserve, who had been ordered, in the first moment of alarm, in the same direction Prince I ichtenstein now charged the division of Olivier with such fury, that it was forced to retire across the river. At the extreme left of the Allies, Watern advanced, without inceting with any resistance, along the Po, but he was ultimately obliged to retreat, to avoid being cut off and driven into the river by the victorious centre. Master of the whole left bank of the river, Suwarrow made several attempts to pass it but he was constantly repulsed by the firmness of the French reserves, and night at length closed on this scene of carnage (1)

Such was the terrible battle of the Trebbia, the most obstinately contested and bloody which had occurred since the commencement entre los of the war, since, out of thirty-six thousand men in the field, the French, in the three days, had lost above twelve thousand in killed and wounded, and the Allies nearly as many it shows how much more fierce and sanguinary the war was destined to become when the iron bands of Russia were brought into the field, and how little all the advantages of skill and experience avail, when opposed to the indomitable courage and heroic valour of northern states. But though the losses on both sides were nearly equal, the relative situation of the combatants was very different at the termination of the strife. The Allies were victorious, and soon expected great reinforcements from Hohenzollern and klenau, who had already occurred Parma and Modena, and would more than compensate their losses in the field, whereas the Republicans had exhausted their last reserves, were dejected by defeat, and had no second army to fall back upon in their misfortunes These considerations determined Macdonald, he decamped during the might (2), and retired over the hura, directing his march to re-enter the Apennines by the valley of the Taro

Treats: I aris on the following morning, a despatch was intercepted from treats the

Frenc over

jo), and made them resolve to pursue the enemy with the utmost vigour For this purpose, all their divisions were instantly dispatched in pursuit, Rosenberg, supported by Forster, moved rapidly towards the Nura, while Melas, with the divisions Ott and Fredich, advanced to Placentia Victor's division, which formed the rear-guard on the Nura, was speedily resuled by superior forces both in front and flank, and, after a gallant resistance, broken, great part made prisoners, and the remainder dispersed over the mountains Melas, on his side, quickly made himself master of Placentia, where the French wounded, five thousand in number, were taken prisoners, including the generals Olivier, Rusca, Salm, and Cambray; and had he not imprudently halted the division Frœlich at that town, the whole troops of Watrin would have fallen into his hands. Macdonald, on the following day, retired to Parma, from whence he dislodged Hohenzollern, and with infinite difficulty rallied the remains of his army behind the Larda, where they were reorganized June 21. in three divisions. The melancholy survey showed a chasm in his ranks of above fifteen thousand men since crossing the Apennines. At the same time, Lapoype, defeated at Casteggio by a Russian detachment, was driven from the high-road, and with great pain escaped by mountain paths into the neighbourhood of Genoa (1). All the French wounded fell into the hands of the Allies; they made prisoners in all, during the battle and in the pursuit, four generals, five hundred and six officers, and twelve thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight private soldiers (2).

The pursuit of Suwarrow was not continued beyond the Larda, in consequence of intelligence which there reached him of the progress of Moreau. Macdonald retired, therefore, unmolested to Modena and Bologna, where he repulsed General Ott, who made an attack on his army at Sassecolo, and regained the positions which it had occupied before the advance to the Trebbia (5).

In effect, the return of Suwarrow towards Tortona was become indispensable, and the dangerous situation of matters in his rear during the showed the magnitude of the peril from which, by his rapid and against Bellegarde. decided conduct, he had extricated his army. Moreau, on the 16th, debouched from the Apennines by Gavi, and moved in two columns towards Tortona, at the head of fourteen thousand men. He advanced, however, with such circumspection, that on the 18th he had not passed Novi and Serravale; and on that day the fate of the Neapolitan army was determined on the banks of the Trebbia. Bellegarde, unable with four brigades to arrest his progress, retired to a defensive position near Alexandria, leaving Tortona uncovered, the blockade of which was speedily raised by the French general. Immediately after, Moreau attacked Bellegarde with forces so immensely superior, that he defeated him, after a sharp action, with the loss of fifteen hundred prisoners and five pieces of cannon. The Austrians, in disorder, sought refuge behind the Bormida, intending to fall back under the cannon of Valence (4); and Moreau was advancing towards Placentia, when he was informed of the victory of Suwarrow and the fall of the citadel of Turin.

Fall of the The vast military stores found by the Allies in the city of Turin, citadel of tenabled them to complete their preparations for the siege of its cinunc 20. tadel with great rapidity. A hundred pieces of heavy cannon speedily armed the trenches; forty bombs were shortly after added; the batteries were opened on the night of the 10th June, and on the 19th the second parallel was completed. Night and day the besiegers from that time thundered on the walls from above two hundred pieces of artillery, and such was the effect of their fire, that the garrison capitulated within twenty-four hours after, on condition of being sent back to France. This conquest was of immense importance. Besides disengaging the besieging force of General Kaim, which instantly set out to reinforce Bellegarde, and rendering the Allies masters of one of the strongest fortresses in Piedmont, it put into their hands 61 pieces of cannon, 40,000 muskets, and 50,000 quintails of powder, with the loss of only fifty men (5).

⁽¹⁾ Dum. i. 205. Th. x. 306. Jom. xi. 371, 373.
(2) Arch. Ch. ii. 56.
(4) Jom. xi. 379, 380. Dum. i. 201. Th. x. 307.
Arch. Ch. ii. 57.

⁽³⁾ Jon. vi. 374, 375. Duni, i. 205. (5) St.-Cyr, i. 220. Jom. vi. 380, 381. Duni, i. 206.

June 23 Moreau ce treats on

No sooner was Suwarrow informed, upon the Larda, of the advance of Moreau and the defeat of Bellegarde, than, without losing an instant, he wheeled about, and marched with the utmost expedition to meet this new adversary But Moreau fell back as rapidly naid regains Genoral era as he approached, and after revictualling Tortona, retired by Novi and Cavi to his former defensive position on the Apennines The Allies occupied Novi, and pushed their advanced posts far up the valleys into the mountains, while the blockade of Tortona was resumed; and the besieging force, removed from the lines before Mantua, sat down again before that important fortress. Macdonald commenced a long and painful retreat over the Apennines into Tuscany and the Genoese territory; a perilous lateral operation at all times in presence of an enemy in possession of the plain of the Po, and doubly so after the recent disaster which they had experienced. Fortunately for the French, Suwarrow had received at this time positive orders from the Aulic Council, ever attached to methodical proceedings, to attempt no operation beyond the Apennines till the fortresses of Lombardy were reduced (1), in consequence of which he was compelled to remain in a state of mactivity on the Orba, while his antagonist completed his hazardous movements Macdonald arrived, leaving only a detachment on the Apennines near the sources of the Trebbia, at Genoa by Lerici, in the middle of July, in the most deplorable state, his artillery dismounted or broken down, the cayalry and caissons without horses, the soldiers half naked, without shoes or linen of any sort, more like spectres than men. How different from the splended troops which, three years before, had traversed the same country, m all the pomp of war, under the standards of Napoléon (2)! Received Mutual exhaustion, and the intervening ridge of the Apennines, rench ar now compelled a cessation from hostilities for above a month Suwarrow collected forty five thousand men in the plain between Tortona and Alexandria, to watch the Republicans on the mountains of Genoa, and cover the sieges of those places and of Mantua, which were now pressed with activity. The French, in deep dejection, commenced the reorganization of their two armies into one, Macdonald was recalled, and yielded the command of the right wing to St -Cyr, Perignon was intrusted with the centre, and Lemoine, who brought up twelve fresh battalions from France. put at the head of the left Montrichard and Lapoype were disgraced, and Moreau continued in the chief command Notwithstanding all the reinforcements he had received, this skilful general was not able, with both armies united, to reel on on more than forty thousand men for operations in the field, the poor remains of above a hundred thousand that might have been assembled for that purpose at the opening of the campaign (3) The remarkable analogy must strike the most mattentive observer, on war ow saint between the conduct of Sunarrow previous to the battle of the rable con det in the Trebbia, and that of Napoléon on the approach of Wurmser to presed of succour Mantua Imitating the vigour and activity of his great predecessor, the Russian general, though at the head of an army considerably inferior to that of his adversaries, was present every where at the decisive point. The citadel of Turin, with its immense magazines, was captured by an army of only forty thousand men, in presence of two whose united force exceeded lifty thousand, for although Suwarron ordered up great part of the garrison of Mantua to reinforce his army previous to the battle of the Trebbia, they were prevented from joining by an autograph order of the Emperor. who deemed the acquisition of that fortress of greater importance than any other consideration to the Austrian empire (1). The Russian general, therefore, had to contend not only with the armies of Macdonald and Moreau, but the obstacles thrown in his way by the Imperial authorities; and when this is considered, his defeat of the Republicans, by rapidly interposing the bulk of his forces between them, and turning first on the one, and then on the other, must be regarded as one of the most splendid feats which the history of the war afforded.

During these critical operations at the foot of the Apennines, the forts of the Directory had succeeded in assembling a great naval force in the per back the Mediterranean. Already convinced, by the disasters they had experimentally rienced, of the impolicy of the eccentric direction of so considerable a part of their force as had resulted from the expedition to Egypt, they exerted all their efforts to obtain the means of their return, or at least open a communication with that far-famed, now isolated army. No sooner was intelligence received of the defeat of Jourdan at Stockach, than Bruix, minister of marine, repaired to Brest, where he urged, with the utmost diligence, the preparations for the sailing of the fleet. Such was the effect of his exertions, that, in the end of April, he was enabled to put to sea, with twenty-five ships of the line, at the time when Lord Bridport was blown off the coast with the Channel fleet. As soon as intelligence was received that they had sailed, the English admiral steered for the southern coast of Ireland, while Bruix, directing his course straight to Cadiz, raised the blockade of that harbour, which Admiral Keith maintained with fifteen ships of the line, and passed the straits of Gibraltar. The entrance of the combined fleet into the Mediterranean seemed to announce decisive events, but nevertheless it came to nothing. The immense armament, amounting to fifty ships of the line, steered for the bay of Genoa, where it entered into communication with Moreau, and for a time powerfully supported the spirits of his army. But after remaining some weeks on the Italian coast, Bruix sailed for Cadiz, from whence he returned to Brest, which he reached in the middle of August, without either having fallen in with any of the English fleets, or achieved any thing whatever, with one of the most powerful squadrons that ever left a European harbour (2). August 13. The retreat of Macdonald was immediately followed by the recovery of his dominions by the King of Naples. The army of Cardinal Ruffo, which was soon swelled to twenty thousand men, advanced Naples. against Naples, and having speedily dispersed the feeble bands of the revolutionists who opposed his progress, took possession of that capital; and a combined force of English, Russians, and Neapolitans having a few days after entered the port, the fort St.-Elmo was so vigorously besieged, that it was obliged to capitulate, the garrison returning to France, July 3t. on condition of not again serving till exchanged. Capua was next attacked, and surrendered, by capitulation, to Commodore Trowbridge, which was followed, two days after, by the reduction of the important fortress of Gaeta, on the same terms, which completed the deliverance of the Neapolitan dominions (3).

Expulsion of the Republicans from

Dloody re-The French, who surrendered in these two last fortresses, gave up venge of the unconditionally to their indignant enemies the revolted Neapolitans Royalist who had taken a part in the late revolution. A special commission was immediately appointed, which, without much formality, and still less humanity, condemned to death the greater part of those who had been en gaged in the insurrection, and a dreadful series of executions, or rather massacres, took place, which but too clearly evinced the releutless spirit of Italian revenge. But the executions at Naples were of more moment, and peculiarly call for the ritention of the British Instorians, because they have affixed the onlystain to the character of the greatest naval hero of his country. The garrisons of the Castello Nuovo, and the Castella del Tuvo, had capitulated to Cardinal Ruffo, on the express condition that they themselves, and their families, should be protected, and that they should have liberty either to retire to Toulon, or remain in haples, as they should feel inclined, but in this latter case they were to experience no molestation in their persons or pro

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xi. 386. Hard. vii. 250, 251. (2) Jom. xi. 394, 396. Ann. Reg. 1799; 291.

⁽³⁾ Ann. Reg. 1799, 292. Bot, iii. 395, 410.

by Captain a the name granted an ecurity, if preferred following the fortunes of the tricolor standard. In terms of this treaty, two vessels, containing the refugees from Castellomare, had already arrived safe at Marseilles (4).

perty This capitulation was subscribed by Cardinal Ruffo, as viceroy of the Vote on of But these wise and humane measures were instantly interrupted tons by the by the arrival of the king and Queen, with the court, on board of Nespot an Aclson's fleet They were animated with the strongest feelings of revenge against the Republican party, and unfortunately the English admiral, who had fallen under the fascinating influence of Lady Hamilton, who shared in all the feelings of the court, was too much inclined to adopt the same principles. He instantly declared the capitulation null, as not having obtained the king's authority, and entering the harbour at the head of his fleet, made all those who had issued from the castles, in virtue of the capitulation, prisoners, and had them chained, two and two, on board his own fleet. The king, whose humanity could not endure the sight of the numshments which where preparing, returned to Sicily, and left the administration of justice in the hands of the Queen and Lady Hamilton Numbers were immediately condemned and executed, the vengeance of the populace supplied what was wanting in the celerity of the criminal tribunals, neither age, nor sex, nor rank were spared, women as well as men, youths of sixteen, and grey-headed men of seventy, were alike led out to the scaffold, and infants of twelve years of age sent into exile The Republicans behaved, in almost every instance, in their last moments with heroic courage, and made men forgel, in pity for their misfortunes, the ingratitude or treason of which they had previously been guifty (2) p personal. The fate of the Neapolitan admiral, Prince I rancis Carraccioli, Prince Ger was particularly deplorable. He had been one of the principal beauty and leaders of the revolution, and after the capitulition of the castless son own liad retired to the mountains, tic, and brought bound on board the I court-martial was there immediately si officers, by whom he was condemned to death. In vain the old man entreated that he might be shot, and not die the death of a malefictor, his prayers were disregarded, and after being strangled by the executioner, he was thrown from the vessel into the sea. Defore night his body was seen erect in the waves from the middle upwards, as if he had risen from the deep to reproach the English hero with his unworthy fate (1).

For these acts of cruelty no sort of apology can or ought to be on these unoffered. Whether the capitulation should or should not have been pardonable granted, is a different and irrelevant question. Suffice it to say, that it had taken place, and that, in virtue of its provisions, the Allied powers had gained possession of the castles of Naples. To assert in such a case that the King had not ratified the capitulation, and that without such a sanction it was null, is a quibble, which, though frequently resorted to by the French, is unworthy of a generous mind, and destitute of any support in the law of nations. The capitulation of the vanquished should ever be held sacred in civilized warfare, for this reason, if no other existed, that, by acceding to it, they have deprived themselves of all chance of resistance, and put the means of violating it with impunity in the hands of their adversaries—it then becomes a debt of honour which must be paid. The sovereign power which takes benefit from one side of a capitulation by gaining possession of the fortress which the capitulants held, is unquestionably bound to perform the other part of the bilateral engagement, by whomever entered into, which, so far from repudiating, it has, by that very act, homologated and acquiesced in. If the Neapolitan authorities were resolutely determined to commit such a breach of public faith, the English admiral, if he had not sufficient influence to prevent it, should at least have taken no part in the iniquities which followed, and not stained the standard of England by judicial murders committed under its own shadow. In every point of view, therefore, the conduct of Nelson in this tragic affair was inexcusable; his biographer may perhaps with justice ascribe it to the fatal ascendency of female fascination (2); but the historian, who has the interests of humanity and the cause of justice to support, can admit of no such alleviation, and will best discharge his duty by imitating the conduct of his eloquent annalist, and with shame acknowledging the disgraceful deeds (5).

And on the The events of this campaign demonstrate, in the most striking manner, the vast importance of assuming the offensive in mountain warfare; and how frequently a smaller force, skilfully led, may triumph over a greater in such a situation, by the simple expedient of turning its position by the lateral valleys, and appearing unexpectedly in its rear. The nature of the ground is singularly favourable to such an operation, by the concealment which lofty intervening ridges afford to the turning column, and the impossibility of escape to the one turned, shut in on both sides by difficult, perhaps impassable ridges, and suddenly assailed in rear when fully occupied in front. The brilliant successes of Lecourbe at Glarus and Martinsbruck; and of Hotze at Luciensteg, were both achieved, in opposition to superior forces, by the skilful application of this principle. Against such a danger, the intrenchments usually thrown up in the gorge or at the summit of mountain passes, afford but little protection; for open behind (4), they are easily taken by the column which has penetrated into the rear by a circuitous route, and, destitute of casements, they afford no sort of protection against a plunging fire from the heights on either side.

Nor did this memorable struggle evince in a less convincing manner the erroneous foundation on which the opinion then generally received rested,

Napoléon, that he endeavoured to palliate Nelson's,

⁽¹⁾ Southey, ii. 47, 53. Botaiii. 414, 415.

(2) Southey, 47, 53, Botaiii. 415, 416. Hard. misinformation, and the fascinating ascendant of vii. 332, 333.

(3) It deserves to be recorded to the honour of (4) Arch. Chris. 95, 96.

ΠA

The successful irruption of Massena into the Grisons, after the disaster of Stockach brought the Republican standards to the Rhine; or the splendid stroke of Lecourbe in the Engadine, when the disaster of Magnano caused them to lose the line of the Adige? In tactics, or the lesser operations of qually safe against the efforts of an adversary, who by having acquired possession of the entrance of all the valleys leading from thence into the plain, is enabled to cut lum off both from his communications and lus resources. Water descends from the higher ground to the lower, but the strength and snews of war in general follow an opposite course, and ascend from the riches and fortresses of the plain to the sterility and desolation of the mountains. It is in the yalley of the Danube and the plain of Lombardy that the struggle between France and Austria ever has and ever will be determined (1), the lothy ridges of Switzerland and Tyrol, important as an accessory to secure the flanks of either army, are far from being the decisive point.

foundation for the anti-revolutionary alliance, which had been cloquently supported by Mr. Burke, and afterwards became the basis of the great confederacy which brought the war to a successful issue, gave the utmost uneasiness to the cabinet of Vienna. They were terrified at the very rapidity of the Russian conqueror's success, and endeavoured, by every means in their power, to moderate his disinterested fervour, and render his surprising success the means only of securing their great acquisitions in the north of 'Italy. Hence the gelouises, hearthermings, and divisions which destroyed the cordial co-operation of the Alhed troops, which led to the fatal separation of the Russian from the Austrian forces both in Italy and Switzerland, and ultimately brought about all the disasters of the campaign. Had the hands of Austria been clean, she might have invaded France by the defenceless frontier of the Jura, and brought the contest to a glorious issue in 1799, while Appelon was as yet an exile on the banks of the Alie. Twice did the Luropean and hext from the anxiety of Austria, in 1799, to retain her iniquitous

perity is to be found in that strennous, but upright course, which equally the seduction and the violence of wickedness.

CHAPTER XXIX.

CAMPAIGN OF 1799.—PART II.

FROM THE BATTLE OF THE TREEBIA TO THE CONCLUSION OF THE CAMPAIGN.

ARGUMENT.

Dangerous position of the Republic at this juncture-Enormous consumption of human life since the commencement of the Campaign-Clear proof thus afforded of the error of the Directory in attacking Switzerland and Italy-Military preparations of the Allies and Republicans—Objects of the contending generals—Great Levy of troops by the Directory-Their Measures to reinforce the Armies-The Aulic Council injudiciously restrain Suwarrow from active operations. This leads to an agreement for a disastrous separation of the Austrian and Russian forces-Resumption of hostilities by the Republicans around Genoa -Progress of the Siege of Mantua-Description of that fortress-Commencement of the Siege by Kray-Its Surrender-Fall of Alexandria-Commencement of the Siege of Tortona-Position of the Republicans in front of Genoa-Magnanimous conduct of Moreau on Joubert's assuming the Command-Advance of the French to raise the Siege-. Positions of the Allies-and of the French-Joubert had resolved to retreat on learning the fall of Mantua—He is attacked before doing so it is of Joubert—Battle of Novi—The Allies are at first repulsed—Combine is order.—The advance of Melas at length decides the Victory-Great Loss on both sides-Moreau still maintains himself on the crest of the Apennines-Separation of the victorious force-Operations of Championnet in the Alps at this time-Fall of Tortona-Situation of Massena and the Archduke at Zurich-Insane dislocation of the Allied forces at this period by the Aulic Council-Description of the Theatre of War-Plan of the Allies-and of Massena-Commencement of the Attack by Lecourbe on the St.-Gothard—The Imperialists are forced back at all points— They are driven from the Grimsel and the Furca-and the St.-Golhard-Successes of the French near Schwytz, who drive the Austrians into Glarus-Unsuccessful Attempt of the Archduke to cross the Limmat below Zurich-Being foiled, he marches to the Upper Rhine -Austrian left is defeated in Glarus—Successful Expedition of the Archduke against Manheim-Plan of the Allies for a combined attack by Suwarrow and Korsakow on Massena-Relative situation of the French and Russian centres at Zurich-Unfounded confidence of the latter-Massena's able Plan of Attack-The passage of the Limmat is surprised below Zurich-Feigned attacks on Zurich and the Lower Limmat-Dreadful Confusion in the town of Zurich-Brave Resolution of Korsakow to cut his way through the enemy-He does so, but loses all his artillery and baggage -Success of Soult against Hotze above the Lake - Death of the latter officer-Operations of Suwarrow on the Ticino-Bloody Conflict above Airolo-The St.-Gothard is at length forced by the Russians—Dreadful Struggle at the Devil's Bridge —Arrived at Altdorf, Suwarrow is forced to ascend the Schachenthal—Difficult passage of that ridge to Mutten—He finds none of the expected reinforcements there—and is surrounded on all sides, and reluctantly compelled to retreat - He crosses the mountains into Glarus -Desperate Struggle at Nacfels—Dreadful passage of the Alps of Glarus to Ilantz on the Rhine -Bloody Conflicts with Korsakow near Constance - The Archduke hastens to his aid, and checks the further pursuit-Treaty between Russia and England for an Expedition to Holland-Vigorous Preparations for the Expedition in England-The Expedition sails, and lands on the Dutch coast-Action at the Helder-Defeat of the enemy-Capture of the Dutch Fleet. at the Texel-The British are attacked by the Republicans, but repulse them with great loss -The English, joined by the Russians, at length advance—Plan of the attack - Disaster of the Russians on the right-Victory of the British in the centre and left-But the continued retreat of the Russians arrests the British in the midst of their success-Removal of the Dulch Fleet to England-The Duke of York renews the attack, and is successful-His critical Situation notwithstanding-Indecisive Action-Which leads to the Retreat of the British - Who first Retire, and at length Capitulate-Reflections on this disaster in the nation-Affairs of Italy after the Battle of Novi-The Imperialists draw round Coni-Championnet is constrained to attempt its relief-Measures to effect that object-Preparations for a decisive battle-Battle of Genola, in which the French are defeated-Success of St. Cyr near Novi-Siege and Fall of Coni-Gallant Conduct of St.-Cyr in the Bocchetta Pass-Unsuccessful Attempt of the Imperialists upon Genoa-Who go into Winter Quarters-Fall of Ancona-Position of the respective parties at the conclusion of the

Siver the period when the white flag waved at Saumur and the frieolor was displaced at Lyon and Toulon, the Republic had never, been in such danger as after the first pause in the campaign of 4799 It was, in Iruth, I the Allied force, in 1795

field greatly superior note no longer languished in amais retreat on the first reverse; the loss of three or four th

was torn by more veheattacking powers in 1799

: he war

ding to the -1 o with a to luc

onibeen nted v ala-ps were

by concapacity, ies. The e French jot jule
the assiunger was tory; an

force, those cut on or many of supplying these vast charms were much more ample on the part of the Allied Monarchs than the French Directory.

Never, it ancient or modern times, had such immense armies contended on so extensive a field. The right of the Allies rested on the Maine; their centre was posted in Switzerland; while their left stretched over the plain of Lombardy to the foot of the Apennines; and a shock was felt all along this vast line, from the rocks of Genoa to the marshes of Holland. The results hitherto had been, to an unprecedented degree, disastrous to the French. From being universally victorious, they had everywhere become unfortunate; at the point of the bayonet they had been driven back, both in Germany and Italy, to the frontiers of the Republic; the conquests of Napoléon had been lost as they had been won; and the power which recently threatened Vienna, now trembled lest the Imperial standards should appear on the summits of the Jura or the banks of the Rhone.

Ctear proof thus afforded of the mitted in overrunning Switzerland, in extending their forces mitted in overrunning Switzerland, in extending their forces through the Italian peninsula, instead of concentrating them to bear switzerland and Italy. The weight of Austria on the Adige; and exiling their best army and greatest general in Africa at the very time when the Allies were summoning to their aid the forces of a new monarchy and the genius of a hitherto invincible conqueror. But these errors had been committed; their consequences had fallen like a thunderbolt on France; the return of Napoléon and his army seemed impossible; Italy was lost; and nothing but the invincible tenacity and singular talents of Masséna enabled him to maintain himself in the last defensive line to the north of the Alps, and avert invasion from France in the quarter where its frontier is most vulnerable. To complete its misfortunes, internal dissension had paralysed the Republic at the very time when foreign dangers were most pressing, and a new government added to its declining fortunes the weakness incident to every infant administration.

The preparations of the allies to follow up this extraordinary flow preparations of the Miles of prosperous affairs were of the most formidable kind. The forces and Repub- in Italy amounted to one hundred and fifteen thousand men; and after deducting the troops required in the siege of Mantua, Alexandria, and other fortresses in the rear, Suwarrow could still collect above fifty thousand men to press on the dispirited army of Moreau in the Ligurian Alps, which could not muster twenty thousand soldiers around its banners. This army was destined to clear the Maritime Alps and Savoy of the enemy, and turn the position of Masséna, who still maintained himself with invincible obstinacy on the banks of the Limmat. The Archduke had not under his immediate orders at that period above forty-three thousand men, twenty-two thousand having been left in the Black Forest, to mask the garrisons in the tetes-depont which the French possessed on the Upper Rhine, and sixteen thousand in the Grisons and the central Alps, to keep possession of the important ridge of the St.-Gothard. But a fresh Russian army of twenty-six thousand men was approaching under Korsakow, and was expected in the environs of Zurich by the middle of August; and something was hoped from the insurrection of the Swiss who had been liberated from the French armies (1).

To meet these formidable forces, the French, who had directed all the new levies to the north of Switzerland, as the chiefly menaced point, had seventy-five thousand men, under Massena, on the Limmat, and the utmost efforts were made in the interior to augment to the greatest degree this important army. The English and Russians also had combined a plan for the descent of forty thousand men on the coast of Holland, for which purpose seventeen thousand men were to be furnished by his Imperial Majesty and twenty-five thousand by Great Britain; and this force, it was hoped, would not only liberate Holland, but paralyse all the north of France, as General Brune had only fifteen thousand French troops in the United Provinces, and the native soldiers did not exceed twenty thousand (1) Thus, while the summits of the Maritime Alps

50

But although the plan of the Allies was so extensive, the decisive the contend point lay in the centre of the line, and it was by the Archduke that the vital blow was to be struck, which would at once have opened to them an entrance into the heart of France This able commander impatiently awaited the arrival of the Russians under Korsakon, which would

from the interior, he had no such sudden increase to expect as awaited the Imperial forces It was equally indispensable for the Republicans to resume the offensive without any delay in Italy, as the important fortresses of Mantua and Alexandria were now hard pressed by the Allies, and if not speedily 1 - + not only 12 the efall a gott om the ent of common lof the

of trees by exhibited an energy commensurate to the crisis in which they were placed. The imminence of the peril induced them to exhibit at without disguise to both branches of the legislature General Jourdan proposed to call out at once all classes of the conscripts, which, it was expected, would produce an increase of two hundred thousand men to the armies, and to less a forced loan of 120,000,000 francs, or L 4,800,000 on the opulent classes, secured on the national domains. Both motions were at once agreed to by the Councils To render them as soon as possible available, the conscriptions were ordered to be formed into regiments, and drilled in their several departments, and marched off, the moment they were disposable, to the nearest army on the frontier, while the service of Lisle. Strasbourg, and the other fortresses was, in great part, intrusted to the national guards of the vicinity. Thus, with the recurrence of a crisis in the affairs of the Republic, the revolutionary measures which had already been found so efficacious were again put in activity. Bernadotte, who at this crisis was appointed minister at war, rapidly infused into all the departments of the military service his re as I re al to a lead and it lat of all as thorities, that of that it was to the its whom he assembled round the Imperial standards, that not only the victory of Zurich, at the close of the campaign, but the subsequent triumph of Marengo, were, in a great degree, owing (3).

In order to counteract as far as possible the designs of the Allies. Their meait was resolved to augment to thirty thousand men the forces sures to reinforce the armies. placed on the summit of the Alps, from the St.-Bernard to the Mediterranean; while the army of Italy, debouching from the Apennines. should resume the offensive, in order to prevent the siege of Coni and raise those of Mantua and Alexandria; and Massena should execute a powerful diversion on the Limmat ere the arrival of the Russians under Korsakow. For this purpose, all the conscripts on the eastern and southern departments were rapidly marched off to the armies at Zurich and on the Alps, and the fortresses of Grenoble, Briancon, and Fenestrelles, commanding the principal entrances from Piedmont into France, armed and provisioned. At the same time the direction of the troops on the frontier was changed. Championnet, liberated from prison, was intrusted with the command of the army of the Alps, while that of the army of Italy was taken from Moreau, under whom, notwithstanding his great abilities, it had experienced nothing but disaster, and given to Joubert; a youthful hero, who joined heroic valour to great natural abilities, and though as yet untried in the separate command of large armies, had evinced such talents in subordinate situations as gave the promise of great future renown if it had not been cut short in the very outset of his career on the field of Novi (1).

Suwarrow, who was well aware of the inestimable importance of council injudiciously time in war, was devoured with anxiety to commence operations against the army of Moreau in the Ligurian Alps, now not more than twenty thousand strong, before it had recovered from its consternation, or was strengthened by the arrival of Macdonald's forces, which were making a painful circuit by Florence and Pisa in its rear. But the Aulic Council, who looked more to the immediate concerns of Austria than the general interest of the common cause, insisted upon Mantua being put into their hands before any thing was attempted either against Switzerland, Genoa, or the Maritime Alps; and the Emperor again wrote to Suwarrow. positively forbidding any enterprise until that important fortress had surrendered. The impetuous marshal, unable to conceal his vexation, and fully aware of the disastrous effects this resolution would have upon the general fate of the campaign, exclaimed, "Thus it is that armies are ruined!" but nevertheless, obeying the orders, he dispatched considerable reinforcements and a powerful train of artillery by the Po, to aid the siege of Mantua, and assembled at Turin the stores necessary for the reduction of Alexandria. Disgusted, however, with the subordinate part thus assigned to him, the Russian general abandoned to General Ott the duty of harassing the retreat of the army of Naples, and encamped with his veterans on the Bormida, to await the tedious operations of the besieging forces (2).

Leads to an agreement for a disassion of the separation of the Austrian and Russian forces, and the rupture Russian and Austrian of any cordial concert between their respective governments. The cabinet of Vienna were too desirous of the exclusive sovereignty of the conquests in Italy, to be willing to share their possession with a powerful rival; while the pride of the Russians was hurt at beholding their unconquered commander, whom they justly regarded as the soul of the confederacy, subjected to the orders of the Aulic Council, who could not appreciate his energetic mode of conducting war, and frequently interrupted him in the midst of the career of conquest. At the same time, the English government were desirous of allowing the Russian forces to act alone in Switzerland, aided by the insurrection which they hoped to organize in that country, and beheld with satisfaction the removal of the Buscovite standards from the shores of the Mediterranean, where their establishment in a per-

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 25, 26. St.-Cyr, i. 221, 222.

Alexandria and Mantua, should be concentrated in Switzerland under Marshal Sunarrow, that the Imperiolists should alone prosecute the war in Italy, and that the army of the Archduke Charles should act under his separate orders on the Upper Rhine This plan itself was highly advisable, but, from the time at which it was carried into execution, it led to the most calamitous results (1)

The whole forces of the Republic, at this period actually on foot, did not exceed 220,000 combatants, and although the new conscription was pressed with the utmost vigour, it could not be expected that it could add materially

1 m ton of 1 s to 1 mg raise I the French force to forty-eight thousand men, including by the ince thousand cavalry and a powerful artillery, it was deemed indispensable on every account to resume offensive operations, in conjunction with the army of the Alps, which had now been augmented to a respectable amount Every thing, accordingly, was put in motion in the valleys of the Alps and Apennines, and the French army, whose headquarters were at Corneghano, occupied at Voltri, Savona, Vado, and I cano nearly the same position which Napoleon held, previous to his memorable descent into Italy in March 1796 But it was too late, all the activity of Moreau and Joubert could not prevent the fall of the bulwarks of Lombards and Predmont (5)

Progres of The siege of Mantua, which had been blockaded ever since the hattle of Magnano, was pressed in good earnest by General Kray after the victory of the Trebbia. The capture of Turin having placed at the disposal of the Allies immense resources, both in artiflery and ammunition, the defeat of Macdonald relieved them from all anxiety as to the raising of the siege, thirty thousand men were soon collected round its walls, and the batteries of the besiegers armed with two hundred pieces of cannon. The garrison originally consisted of nearly cleven thousand men, but this force, barely adequate at first to man its extensive ramparts, was now considerably weakened by disease. The peculiar situation of this celebrated fortress rendered it indispensable that, at all hazards, the exterior works should be maintained, and this was no easy matter with an insufficient body of troops The soldiers were provisioned for a year, but the inhabitants, thrice impo verished by enormous contributions, were in the most iniserable condition, and the famine with which they were menaced, joined to the natural unhealthiness of the situation during the autumnal months, soon produced those contagious disorders ever in the rear of protracted war, which in spite of every precaution, seriously weakened the strength of the garrison (1)

1/4

Pajolo deepened to such a degree, that it might have prolonged for at least eight days his means of defence, and possibly, by preventing the besieging force taking a part in the battle of Novi, which shortly followed, altered the fate of the campaign (1)

54

While the bulwark of Lombardy was thus falling, after an unextatt of Alexand is pectedly short resistance, into the hands of the Imperialists, Count July 21 Bellegarde was not less emposed. Bellegarde was not less successful against the citadel of Alexandria Trenches were opened on the 8th July, and in a few days, eighty pieces of cannon were placed in battery, and such was the activity with which they were served, that in seven days they discharged no less than forty-two thousand projectiles On the 21st, the garrison, consisting of sixteen hundred men, surrendered at discretion. This conquest was of great importance to the future projects of Suwarrow, but it was dearly purchased by the loss of General Chastellar, his chief of the staff, who was severely wounded soon after the first trenches were opened, an officer whose talents and activity had, in a great degree, contributed to the success of the campaign (2) After the fall of Alexandria and Mantua, Suwarrow, faithful to the orders he had received from Vienna, to leave no fortified place in the enemy's hands in his rear, drew his forces round Coni, and commenced the siege of Tortona His army was soon augmented by the arrival of Ceneral Kray with twenty thousand men from the siege of the latter place, who entered into line on the 12th August. The trenches were opened before Tortona on the 5th August, and on the 7th, the castle of Serravalle, situated at the entrance of one of the valleys leading into the Apennines, was taken after a short cannonade. But the French army, who were now concentrated under Joubert on the Apennines, was preparing un offensive movement, and the approaches to Genoa were destined to be the theatre of one of the most bloody battles on record in modern times (5)

The Republicans at this epoch occupied the following positions. The right wing, fifteen thousand strong, under St -Cyr, guarded the passes of the Apennines from Pontremoli to Torrigho, and furnished the garrison of Genoa The centre, consisting of ten thousand, held the important posts of the Bocchetta and Campo Freddo, while the left, twenty-two thousand strong, was encamped on the reverse of the mountains on the side of Piedmont, from the Post on of the Repub upper end of the valley of Tanaro, and both guarded the commu-I rans in nications of the whole army with France, and kept up the confront of nexion with the corps under Championnet, which was beginning to collect on the higher passes of the Alps. On the other hand, the Albest could only muster forty-five thousand in front of Tortona, General haim, with twelve thousand being at Cherasco to observe the army of the Alps, and klenau in Tuscing, with seven thousand combatants, and the remainder of their great army occupied in keeping up the communications between their widely scattered forces (4) The arrival of Joubert to supersede him in the command of his army, had no tendency to excite feelings of jealousy in the mind of design army, had no tenuency to exercise receivings of a personal feeling losses. his great predecessor. Moreau was incapable of a personal feeling arms and with a manuant. as an ather when the interest of his country was at stake, and with a magnanimity truly worthy of admiration, he not only give his youthful successor the full benefit of his matured counsel and experience, but offered to accompany 56 cumstances, he resolved, late on the night of the 14th, after such irresolution as throws great doubts on his capacity as general-in-chief, whatever his talents as second in command may have been, on retiring into the fastnesses of the Apennines, and only waited for the arrival of his scouts in the morning to give the necessary orders for carrying it into effect, when the commencement of the attack by the Allies compelled him to accept battle in the position which he occupied (1).

Suwarrow's design was to force back the right of the French, by means of the corps of Aray, while Bagrathion had orders to turn tacked be fore do ng their left, and unite in their rear, under cover of the cannon of so by Serravalle, with that corps; while Derfelden attacked Novi in the centre, and Melas commanded the reserve, ready to support any part of the army which required his aid. In pursuance of these orders, Kray commenced the attack at five in the morning, Bellegarde attacked Grouchy, and Ott Lemoine, the Republicans were at first taken by surprise; and their masses, in great part in the act of marching, or entangled in the vineyards, received the fire of the Austrians without being able either to deploy or answer it Notwithstanding the heroic resistance of some brigades, the Imperialists sensibly gained ground, and the heads of their columns were already mounting the plateau, when Joubert hurried in person to the spot, and received a ball in his breast. ing, "Forward, let us throw fell, and with his last breath o

The confusion occasioned by this circumstance would have proved f + 1 ym +11 = 1 1 1 + a strange oncentric.

they were calculated to take place at different times; and while this important advantage was gained on their left, the Russians in the centre were still resting at Pozzolo-Formigaro, and Melas had merely dispatched a detachment from Rivolta to observe the course of the Serivia. This circumstance, joined to the opportune arrival of Moreau, who assumed the command and harangued the troops, restored order, and the Austrians were at length driven down to the bottom of the hill, on their second line During this encounter, Bellegarde endeavoured to gain the rear of Pasturana by a ravine which encircled it, and was on the point of succeeding, when Pérignon charged him so vigorously with the grenadiers of Partouneaux and the cavalry of Dichepanse, that the Imperialists were driven back in confusion, and the whole left wing rescued from danger (3) Hitherto the right of the Republicans had not been attacked, and St -Car availed lumself of this respite to complete his defensive arrangements kray, finding the whole weight of the engagement on his -1 the

> ader iless

⁽¹⁾ Jom at' 103 St Cyr 1 237 243 Suwarrow s order of battle at Novi was highly characteristic of that a newlor warr or it was a mply this: ' Fray and Belle-arle will attack the traded by a few horsemen manually reconneitriag speedily supported, Kray would be compelled to retreat. The Russians advanced with great gallantry to the attack; but a discharge from the division Laboissiere of musketry and grape, at half gunshot threw them into confusion; and, after an obstinate engagement, they were finally broken by a charge by Watrin, with a brigade of infantry, on their flank, and driven back with great loss to Pozzolo-Formigaro (1).

Combined. The failure of these partial attacks rendered it evident that a com-attack of all the columns was necessary. It was now noon, and the French line was unbroken, although the superiority of numbers on the part of the Allies was nearly fifteen thousand men. Suwarrow, therefore, combined all his forces for a decisive movement; kray, whom nothing could intimidate, received orders to prepare for a fresh attack; Derfelden was destined to support Bagrathion in the centre, Melas was directed to break up from Rivolta to form the left of the line, while Rosenberg was ordered in all haste to advance from Tortona to support his movement. The battle, after a pause, began again with the utmost fury at all points. It was for long, however, most obstinately disputed. Notwithstanding the utmost efforts of Kray, who returned above ten times to the charge, the Imperialists could make no impression on the French left; in vain column after column advanced to the harvest of death; nothing could break the firm array of the Republicans; while Bagrathion, Derfelden, and Milaradowitch, in the centre, after the most heroic exertions, were compelled to recoil before the terrible fire of the infantry and batteries which were disposed around Novi. For above four hours, the action continued with the utmost fury, without the French infantry being any where displaced, until at length the fatigue on both sides produced a temporary pause, and the contending hosts rested on their arms amidst a field covered with the slain (2),

The advance. The resolution of any other general but Suwarrow would have of Melat decides the been shaken by so terrible a carnage without any result; but his moral courage was of a kind which nothing could subdue. At four o'clock the left wing of the Allies came up, under Melas, and preparations were instantly made to take advantage of so great a reinforcement. Melas was directed to assail the extreme right of the Republicans, and endeavour, by turning it, to threaten the road from Novi to Genoa, while Kray again attacked the left, and Suwarrow himself, with the whole weight of the Russians, pressed the centre. The resistance experienced on the left was so obstinate, that, though he led on the troops with the courage of a grenadier, Kray could not gain a foot of ground; but the Russians, in the centre, after a terrible conflict, succeeded in driving the Republicans into Novi, from the old walls and ruined towers of which they still kept up a murderous fire. But the progress of Melas on the right was much more alarming. While one of his columns ascended the right bank of the Scrivia and reached Serravalle, another by the left bank had already turned the Monte Rotondo, and was rapidly ascending its sides; while the general himself, with a third, was advancing against the eastern flank of the plateau of Novi. To make head against so many dangers, Moreau ordered the division Watrin to move towards the menaced plateau, but finding itself assailed during its march, both in front and rear, by the divisions of Melas, it fell into confusion, and fled in the utmost disorder, with difficulty cutting its way through the enemy on the road in the rear of the French position. It now became indispensable for the Republicans to retire; for Lichtenstein, at the head of the Imperial cavalry 1 11 1 4 well a roal for Care

mained open but that which led by Pasturana to Orada Sumarion, no an his advantage, was preparing a last and simultaneous attack on the front and flanks of his opponent, when Moreau anticipated him by a general retreat. It was at first conducted in good order, but the impetuous assaults of the Allies soon converted it into a rout. Novi, stripped of its principal defenders, could no longer withstand the assaults of the Russians, who, confident of victory, and seeing the standards of the Allies in the rear of the French position rushed forward with resistless fury and deafening cheers, over the dead bodies of their comrades, to the charge, Lemoine and Grouchy with difficulty sustained themselves, in retiring, against the impetuous attacks of their unwearied antagonist Kray, when the village of Pasturana, in their rear, was carried by the Russians, whose vehemence increased with their success, and the only road practicable for their artillery cut off Despair now seized their ranks; infantry, cavalry, and artillery disbanded, and fled in tumultuous confusion across the vinevards and orchards which adjoined the line of vas railied fatigue to continue the pursuit (1) The battle of Novi was the most bloody and obstinately contested Great loss that had yet occurred in the war. The loss of the Allies was 1800 killed, 5200 wounded, and 1200 prisoners; but that of the French was much more considerable, amounting to 1500 killed, 5300 wounded, and 5000 prisoners, besides 57 cannons, 28 caissons, and 4 standards. As the war advanced, and fiercer passions were brought into collision, the carnage became daily greater; the officers were more produgal of their own blood and that of their soldiers; and the chiefs themselves, regardless of life, at length led them on both sides to the charge, with an enthusiasm which nothing shock of the opposing equadrons, and kray, Bagratmon, and house . . . their troops to the mouth of the enemy's cannon, as if their duty had been that of merely commanding grenadier battalions (2). The consequences of the battle of Novi were not so great as might ton i ues to have been expected from so desperate a shock. On the night of the to the Apennines, and the Apennines, and posted St -Cyr, with a strong rear-guard, to defend the approaches to the Bocchetta. In the first moments of consternation, he had serious thoughts of evacuating Genoa, and the artiflery was already collected at San Pietro d'Arena for that purpose, but finding that he was not seriously disquieted, he again dispersed his troops through the mountains, nearly in the position they held before the battle. St -Cyr was intrusted with the right, where a serious impression was chiefly apprehended, and an attack which Klenau made on that part of the position with five thousand men was repulsed. with the loss of seven hundred men to the Imperialists. Suwarrow himself, informed of the successes of the French in the small forces. cantons of Switzerland, immediately detached Kray, with twelve thousand men, to the Tessino: while he himself, in order to keep an eye on Championnet, whose force was daily accumulating on the Maritime Alps, encamped at Asti, where he covered at once the blockade of Coni and the siege of Tor-Aug. 20. tona (1).

During the concentration of the Allied forces for the battle of Novi. Aug. 10. Opriations this active commander so ably disposed his little army, which only of Chamnionnet in amounted to sixteen thousand combatants, instead of thirty thouthe Alps during this sand, as he had been promised by the Directory, that he succeeded of Torton, in forcing the passage of the Little St.-Bernard, and driving the Imperialists back to Suza. These successes continued even after the Russian commander took post at Asti; and in a variety of affairs of posts in the valleys of the Alps, they succeeded in taking fifteen hundred prisoners and four pieces of cannon. But these advantages were more than counterbalanced by the fall of Tortona, which capitulated on the 25th August, on condition that, if not relieved by the 14th September, the place should be surrendered to the Allies. This conquest was the only trophy which they derived from the bloody battle of Novi. Moreau made an ineffectual attempt to relieve the blockade, and, finding it impossible to effect the object, retired into the fastnesses of the Apennines; while Suwarrow, who had received orders to collect the whole Russians in the Alps, set out, agreeably to the plan fixed on, with seventeen thousand men for the canton of the Tessino (2).

While these great events were passing to the south of the Alps, events of still more decisive importance occurred to the north of the Archthose mountains. Immediately after the capture of Zurich and the retreat of Masséna to Mount Albis, the Archduke established the bulk of his forces on the hills which separate the Glatt from the Limmat, and placed a line of posts along the whole line of that river and the Aar, to observe the movements of the Republicans. Each of the opposing armies in Switzerland numbered about seventy-five thousand combatants; but the French had acquired a decided superiority on the Upper Rhine, where they had collected forty thousand men, while the forces of the Imperialists amounted in that quarter only to twenty-two thousand. Both parties were anxiously waiting for reinforcements; but as that expected by the Archduke, under Korsakow, was by much the most important, Massena resolved to anticipate his adversary, and strike a decisive blow before that dreaded auxiliary arrived. For this purpose he commenced his operations by means of his right wing in the higher Alps, hoping, by the advantage which the initiative always gives in mountainous regions, to dispossess the Imperialists from the important position of the St.-Gothard, and separate their Italian from their German armies by the acquisition of these elevated ridges, which were universally at that period deemed the key to the campaign (5).

location of the Allied forces at this period

At the very time when the French general was making preparations for these important movements, the Aulic Council gave every possible facility to their success, by compelling the Archduke to by the Aulic Coun. depart with his experienced troops for the Rhine, and make way for the Russians under Korsakow, equally unskilled in mountain war-

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 127, 128. Dum. i. 334, 335. St.-Cyr, (3) Arch. Ch. ii, 77, 81. Jom. xii 55, 58. Dum. ii. 1, 3.
(2) Jom. xii. 129, 133, 138. Arch. Ch. ii. 74, 77. i. 296.

Dum, i. 336, 337.

60 fare, and unacquainted with the French tactics. In vain that able commander represented that the line of the Rhine, with its double barrier of fortres-es.

and Austrians on the frontier of the Jura, where no fortresses existed to imnede an invading force; that fifty thousand Russians in Switzerland could not supply the place of seventy thousand Austrians; and the chances, therefore, nere that some serious disaster would occur in the most important part of the line of operations; and that nothing could be more liazardous than to make a change of troops and commanders in presence of a powerful and enterprising enemy, at the very time that he was meditating offensive operations These judicious observations produced no sort of effect, and the court of Vienna ordered "the immediate execution of its will, without further objections (1)."

Description To understand the important military operations which followed, of the the street at it is indispensable to form some idea of the ground on which they took place. The St.-Gothard, though inferior in elevation to many other mountains in Switzerland, is nevertheless the central point of the country, and from its sides the greatest rivers in Europe take their rise On the east, the Rhine, springing from the glaciers of Disentis and Hinter-Rhine, carries its waters, by a circuitous course, through the vast expanse of the lake of Constance to the German ocean; on the north, the Reuss and the Agr., descending in parallel ravines through rugged mountains, feed the lakes of Lucerne, Thun, and Brientz, and ultimately contribute their waters to the same majestic stream; on the west, a still greater river rises in the blue and glittering glacier of the Rhone, and descending through the long channel of the Values, expands into the beautiful lake of Geneva; while to the south, the snows of the St -Cothard nourish the impetuous torrent of the Tessino. which, after foaming through the rocks of Faido, and bathing the smiling shores of the Italian bailliwicks, swells out into the sweet expanse of the Lago Maggiore, and loses itself in the classic waves of the Po.

The line of the Limmat, which now separated the hostile armies, is composed of the Linth, which rises in the snowy mountains of Glarus, and, after

(1) Arch Ch + 80 91 Th x 407 408 The relative a tuation and strength of the two armies at this period is thus given by the Archdole Charles.

r.,
FREYCH	Infantry	Cavalry
From Huningen to the mouth of the Aar .	10 221	3 208
From the month of the Ase to Mon it Cetti.	23 792	3 239
From Mount Albis to the lake of Locerne	11.741	561
From the lake of Lucerne to the valley of Oberhaul ,	7 732
In the Valats, from Brig to St. Maurice,	10 986	556
In the Interior of Switzerland.	2 053	1,125
70	67,250	8 491
Total, .		-75 912
ALLIES	Infantry	Caralry
Between Theis and Watsch,	. 4 269	1.329
From the mon h of the tar to the lake of Zurich,	31 053	10 458
Letween the lake of Zur ch and Lucerne	8 722	834
From the lake of Lucerne to the St -Gothard,	4 156	115
On the Ste-Gothard, the Grimel, and the Lyper Valate,	. 5744	150
In the Grisons	. 1 153	322
	. 3 453
Sw151,
	61,013	13.301

Total. . .

forming in its course the lake of Zurich, issues from that great sheet of water, under the name of the Limmat, and throws itself into the Aar at Bruick. Hotze guarded the line of the Linth; the Archduke himself that of the Limmat. Korsakow was considerably in the rear, and was not expected at Schaffhausen till the 19th August (1).

One road, practicable for cavalry, but barely so for artillery at that period. crossed the St.-Gothard from Bellinzona to Altdorf (2). Ascending from Bellinzona on the southern side, it passes through a narrow defile close to the Tessino, between immense walls of rock between Faido and Airolo; climbs the steen ascent above Airolo to the inhospitable summit of the St.-Gothard: descends, by a torrent's edge, its northern declivity to the elevated mountainvalley of Urseren, from whence, after traversing the dark and humid gallery of the Unnerloch, it crosses the foaming cascade of the Reuss by the celebrated Devil's Bridge, and descends, through the desolate and rugged valley of Schollenen, to Altdorf on the lake of Lucerne. But there all vestige of a practicable road ceases: the sublime lake of Uri lies before the traveller, the sides of which, formed of gigantic walls of rock, defy all attempt at the formation of a path, and the communication with Lucerne is carried on by water along the beautiful lake of the four cantons. The only way in which it is possible to proceed on land from this point, is either by shepherds' tracks towards Stantz and the canton of Underwalden, or by the rugged and almost impracticable pass of the Schachenthal, by which the traveller may reach the upper extremity of the canton of Glarus. From the valley of Urseren, in the heart of the St.-Gothard, a difficult and dangerous path leads over the Furca and the Grimsel, across steep and slippery slopes, where the most experienced traveller can with difficulty keep his footing, to Mevringen, in the valley of Oberhasli.

The plan of the Allies was, that Hotze, with twenty-five thousand Plan of the Austrians, should be left on the Linth; and at the end of Sentember a general attack should be made on the French position along the whole line. Korsakow was to lead the attack on the left with his Russian forces: Hotz in the centre with the Austrians; while Suwarrow, with seventeen thousand of his best troops, flushed with the conquest of Italy, was to assail the right flank of the Republicans, and by the St.-Gothard throw himself into the rear of their position on the Limmat. This design might have been attended with success, if it had been undertaken with troops already assembled on the theatre of operations; but when they were to be collected from Novi and Bayaria, and undertaken in presence of a general perfectly master of the ground, and already occupying a central position in the midst of these converging columns, it was evidently attended with the most imminent hazard, as if any of the columns did not arrive at the appointed time, the whole weight of the enemy might be expected to fall on the first which appeared (5).

Massena intrusted to Lecourbe, whose skill in mountain warfare had already been amply evinced, the important duty of throwing forward his right wing, and expelling the Imperialists from the higher Alps; while he himself, by a false attack along the whole line, and especially upon Zurich in the centre, distracted the attention of the enemy, and prevented him from perceiving the accumulation of force which was brought to bear on the St.-Gothard. Early on the morning of the 14th August, his troops were every where in motion. On the left, the Allied

(3) Th. x. 411. Arch.

⁽¹⁾ Th. x. 409, 410. Arch. Ch. i. 96.
(2) The magnificent chaussee, which now transcorrect till the year 181 outposts were driven in along the whole line; and in the centre the attack was so impetuous that the Austrians were forced back almost to Zurich. where the Archduke rapidly collected his forces to resist the inroad. After considerable bloodshed, as the object was gained, the Republicans drew off, and resumed their positions on the Limmat (1).

The real attack of Lecourbe was attended with very different re-Commence n ent of the sults. The forces at his disposal, including those of Thureau in the Leto the on Valais, were little short of thirty thousand men, and they were directed with the most consummate ability. General Gudin, with five battalions, was to leave the valley of the Aar, force the ridge of the Grimsel. and forming a junction with General Thureau in the Valais, drive the Austrians from the source of the Rhône and the Furca. A second column of three battalions, commanded by Loison, received orders to cross the ridge of the Steinen between Oberhash and the valley of Schollenen, and descend upon Wasen : while a third marched from Engelberg upon Erstfeld, on the lake of Lucerne, and a fourth moved direct by the valley of Issi upon Altdorf Lecourbe himself was to embark from Lucerne on board his flotilla, make himself master of Brunnen and Schwytz on its eastern shore, and combine with The state of the same and the last on I all the posts occupied by the

The Republican parties, under the imperiate Lecourbe and Oudinot, advanced by land and water against Schwytz, forest beet. forced back and after an obstinate combat, the united Swiss and Imperialists were driven from that canton into the Muttenthal, I rom Brunnen, the hardifficulties, had crossed the Steinerberg and the glaciers of Susten, and not only forced the enemy back into the valley of Reuss, but, after five assaults, made himself master of the important elevated post of Wasen, in the middle n driven un from Altdorf uty they had no resource whence they reached by Tavitch the valley of the Rhine (5).

62

Meanwhile successes still more decisive were achieved by the Reme Grief publicans in the other parts of their mountain line. General Thureau at the same hour attacked Prince Roban, who was stationed in the Valais, near Brig, to guard the northern approach to the Simplen, and defeated him with such loss, that he was constrained to evacuate the valley of mountain. He succeeded in stopping the advance of the Republicans up the Values, but during his absence the important posts of the Grimsel and I urca nere lost, General Gudin, at the head of three thousand men, set out from

⁽³⁾ Arch Ch ii 107, 108 Jum nil, 78 80 Dum (1) fram 1 298, 299. (2) Dan 1 299, 301, 305 Arch Cb is. 103 1. 305, 307 Jon 11, 17, 18

Goultanen, in the valley of the Aar, and after climbing up the valley, and surmounting with infinite difficulty the glaciers of Ghelmen, succeeded in assailing the corps who guarded, amidst ice and snow, the rugged summit of the Grimsel from a higher point than that which they occupied. After a desperate conflict, in which a severe loss was experienced on both sides, the Imperialists were driven down the northern side of the mountain into the Valais; and Colonel Strauch, finding himself now exposed on both flanks, had no alternative but to retire by the dangerous pass called the Pas de Nuffenen, over a slippery glacier, to Faido on the Tessino, from whence he rejoined the scattered detachments of his force, which had made their escape from the Valais by paths known only to chamois hunters through the Val Formazza at Bellinzona (1).

Lecourbe, ignorant of the success of his right wing, on the succeeding day pursued his career of victory in the valley of the Reuss. Following the retiring columns of the Imperialists up the dark and shaggy pass of Schollenen, he at length arrived at the Devil's Bridge, where a chasm thirty feet wide, formed by the blowing up of the arch, and a murderous fire from the rocks on the opposite side of the ravine, arrested his progress. But this obstacle was not of long duration. During the night the Republicans threw beams over the chasm; and the Austrians, finding themselves menaced on their flank by General Gudin, who was descending the valley of Urseren from the Furca by Realp, were obliged to evacuate that almost impregnable post, and retire to the heights of the Crispalt, behind the Oberalp, near the source of the Rhine. There they maintained themselves, with great reso-Gothard. lution, against the Republican grenadiers till the evening; but on the following day as they were assailed by the united forces of Lecourbe and Gudin, they were finally broken and driven back to Hantz, with the loss of a thousand prisoners and three pieces of cannon. At the same time, a detachment took possession of the summit of the St.-Gothard, and established itself at Airolo, on the southern declivity of the mountain (2).

Successes of While Lecourbe was gaining these great successes on the right, the French left, who his left, between the lakes of Lucerne and Zurich, was equally fordrive the Imperialists into Glarus. Western bank of the lake of Zurich as far as Weggis, the central columns drove the Imperialists from Schwytz into the Muttenthal, and defeated Jellachich at Ensiedlen; and on the following day, aided by Chabran, who moved against his flank by the Wiggisthal, they totally routed the Austrians, who fell back, with the loss of twelve hundred prisoners, by the lake of Klonthal, into the canton of Glarus. Thus, by a series of operations, as ably executed as they were skilfully conceived, was the whole left wing of the Imperialists routed and driven back in less than forty-eight hours, with the loss of ten pieces of cannon, four thousand prisoners, and two thousand in killed and wounded, and the important post of the St.-Gothard, with all its approaches and lateral valleys, wrested from their hands (5).

These brilliant successes, however, were only gained by Masséna ful attempt of the Arch-through the great concentration of his forces on the right wing. duke to cross the Limmat be. To accomplish this he was obliged to weaken his left, which, lower Limmat be. down in the plain, guarded the course of the Aar. The Archduke

⁽¹⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 105, 107. Jom. xii. 80, 81. Dum. i. 308, 309. Ebel, Manuel du Voyageur en Suisse, 325.

⁽²⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 108, 110. Jom. xii. 81, 82. Dum. i. 308, 309.

⁽³⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 212, 213. Jon., xii. 82, 84. Dum. i. 305.

Many readers will recognise, in the theatre of these operations, the scenes indelibly engraven on their memory by the matchless sublimity of their features.

resolved to avail himself of this circumstance to strike a decisive blow against that weakened extremity, in which he was the more encouraged by the arrival of twenty thousand Russians of horsakow's corps at Schaffhausen, and the important effect which success in that quarter would have in threaten ing the communications of the Republican army with the interior of France For this purpose, thirty thousand ment were assembled on the banks of the river, and the point selected for the passage at Gross Dettingen, a little below the junction of the Reuss and the Aar Hotze was left in Zurich with eight thousand men, which he engaged to defend to the last extremity, while horsakow promised to arrive at Ober Endingen, in the centre of the line, with twenty-three thousand men The march of the columns was so well concealed, and the arrangements made with such precision, that this great force reached the destined point without the enemy being aware of their arrival, and every thing promised a favourable issue to the enterprise, when it proved abortive from the difficulties of the passage, and the mant of skill and due preparation in the Austrian engineers. The bridges for the crossing of the troops were commenced under such a violent fire of artillery Aug 16 and as speedily cleared the opposite banks, but it was found impossible to anchor the pontoons in the rocky bed of the stream, and the rapidity of the current rendered it hopeless to construct the bridges in any other manner Thus, from the want of a little foresight and a few precautions on the part of the engineers, did a project fail, as ably concerved as it was accurately executed by the military officers, and which promised to have altered the fate of the campaign, and perhaps of the war Had the passage been effected, the Archduke, with forty thousand men, would have cleared all the right bank of the Aar, separated the French left wing on the Rhine from their centre and right in Switzerland, compelled Massena to undertake a disastrous retreat into the canton of Berne, exposed to almost certain destruction the small corps at Basie, and opened to immediate inva-

the fortune of war (1) Desirous still of achieving something considerable with his veteran troops before leaving the command in Switzerland, the Archduke, after his troops had resumed their position, again concentrated his left under Hotze But the usual jealousies between the troops and commandto the typer ers of rival nations prevented this project from being carried into execution, and before the end of the month the Austrians, under their able commander, were in full march for the Upper Rhine, leaving twenty-five thou and men, under Hotze, as an auxiliary force to support

sion the defenceless frontier of the Jura, from the united troops of the Archduke, horsakon, and Sunarron The want of a few grappling irons defeated a project on which perhaps the fate of the world depended Such is frequently

horsakow until the arrival of Suwarrow from the plans of Piedmont (2) This change of commanders, and weakening of the Allied forces, tog 3n presented too great chances of success to escape the observation of so able a general as Massena, whose army was now augmented, by reinforcements from the interior, to alove eighty thousand men. The movement commenced with an attack by Soult, with the right wing of the Renublicans, upon flotze, who occupied the canton of Glarus, and, after several sharp shirmishes, a decisive action took place near Aaciels, in which the Austrians were defeated, and compelled to fall back to a defensive line in their rear, extending from the lake of Zurich by Wasen through the Wallenstadter See, by Sargans to Coire, in the Grisons. It was at this critical moment that the Archduke, yielding to the pressing commands of the Aulic Council, was compelled to abandon the army with the great body of his troops, leaving the united force of Korsakow and Hotze, fifty-six thousand strong, scattered over a line forty miles in length, to sustain the weight of Masséna, who could bring sixty-five thousand to bear upon the decisive point around the ramparts of Zurich (1).

The arrival of the Archduke was soon attended with important effects upon the Upper Rhine. The French had crossed that river at Manheim on the 26th August with twelve thousand men, and driving General Muller. who commanded the Imperialists, before them, laid siege to Philipsburg, on which they had commenced a furious bombardment. But the approach of the Austrian commander speedily changed the state of affairs. The columns of that prince rapidly approaching, threatened to cut off their retreat to the Rhine, and they were obliged hastily to raise the siege and retire to Manheim. The insufficient state of defence of that important place, inspired the Archduke with the design of carrying it by a coup-de-main. Its expedition fortifications had, some months before, been levelled by the Reof the Archduke against publicans; but since that time, they had been indefatigable in Manheim. their endeavours to restore them, and they were already in a respectable state of defence. On the 17th, the Austrians, in two columns, one of fourteen thousand men, the other of seven thousand, with a reserve of eight thousand, moved towards Manheim, and on the following day gave the assault. A thick fog favoured the enterprise; the Austrians got into the redoubts almost before the French were aware of their approach, and drove them over the Rhine, with the loss of eighteen hundred prisoners, and twenty-one pieces of cannon. This success threw a momentary lustre over the expedition, for which the Allies were about to pay dear by the disasters experienced before Zurich (2).

Plan of the Allies for a combined attack, by Suwarrow and Korsakow; on Massena. After the departure of the Archduke, it was concerted between Suwarrow, Korsakow, and Hotze, that the former of these commanders should set out from Bellinzona on the 21st September, and attack the Republican positions near Airolo on the Tessino. On the 25th, he expected to be at Altdorf, after having made himself master of the St.-Gothard. From thence he was to form a junction with Korsakow at Zurich, and with their united forces assail the position of Masséna on the Limmat in front, while Hotze attacked it in flank. By this means they flattered themselves that they would be able to march on the Aar with the mass of their forces, and drive the French back upon the frontier of the Jura and their own resources. This project was well conceived, in so far as the turning the French position by the St.-Gothard was concerned, and if it had all been executed as vigorously and accurately as it was by Suwarrow, the result might have been very different, but it presented almost insurmountable difficulties in the execution, from the rugged nature of the country in which the principal operations were to be conducted, the difficulty of communicating from one valley or one part of the army to another, and the remote distances from which the corps who were to combine in the operation were to assemble. It would have been more prudent with such detached bodies, to have chosen the Misocco and the Bernardine for the field marshal's

⁽¹⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 135, 139. Th. x. 412, 413. Jom. (2) Jom. xii, 238, 341. Arch. ii. 149, - xii. 231, 284.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. CHAP. XXIX.

66 march, as that would have brought him down, by roads practicable for artillery, through the Via-Mala into the heart of the Austrian army, under cover of the posts which they still occupied in the Grisons; but it did not promise such brilliant results in the outset as that which he adopted, and it was more suitable to the impetuous character of the Russian veteran to throw himself at once through the narrow-ravines of the St.-Gothard upon the flank of his adversary's line (1).

Meanwhile korsakow collected the greater part of his forces in the here the state of neighbourhood of Zurich, where they were encamped between the and Rustian ramparts of the town and the banks of the Sill. The position which they occupied, and the necessity of striking a decisive blow before the arrival of Suwarrow, suggested to Massena a plan which he conceived and executed with the most consummate ability. He had a superiority, until the arrival of Sunarrow, of ten thousand over the Allies; but the corps which that commander brought with him would turn the balance as far the other way (2). Now, therefore, was the moment, by a decisive blow in the centre, to ruin the Allied army before the junction of that dreaded commander. But the distribution of these troops rendered this superiority still more important; for Massina could assemble thirty-nine thousand on the decisive line of the Limmat (3), while korsakon could only collect twenty-five thousand, the bulk of whom were grouped together under the cannon of Zurich, where their numbers were of no avail, and their crowded state in a narrow space only impeded any military movements tof anded The temper and feeling of the Russian troops, even more than conditioned their defective position, rendered them the ready victims of a skilful and daring adversary. Justly proud of their long series of victories over the Turks, and of the decisive impression which Suwarrow had made in the Italian campaign, they had conceived both an unreasonable confidence in their own strength, and an unfounded contempt for their enemies. This * feeling was not the result of a course of successes over an antagonist with whom they had repeatedly measured their strength, but of a blind idea of superiority, unfounded either in reason or experience, and likely to lead to the most disastrous consequences. In presence of the first general then in Europe, at the head of a greatly superior force, horsakow thought it unnecessary to adopt other measures or take greater precautions than if he had been on the banks of the Dueister, in front of an undisciplined horde of bar-

the bulk of his forces further down the river at Closter-Fahr, where it was slenderly guarded; and thus to turn the position under the ramparts of that

⁽¹⁾ Dum is $8 61 Arch. Ch il 177 178 Jone zu 211, 212 (2, The Frerch army in the field was 76.009; that of the Allies without Suwarrow, 70,000; with

A m. 85 000 .- Jourst, al. 215 (3) Jour ali 245 246 Arch Ch. ii 183, 185 (4) Arch Ch ii 181, 182

⁽⁵⁾ Th x 414, 415 Jour. 15 217, 248

⁽⁶⁾ The presumption and arrogance of Accessore were carried to such a pitch, that, in a conference with the trebduke Charles, shortly hel so the hattle when that great general was pointing out the Positions which should in an especial money be guarded, and said, pointing to the map, whire you

By great exertions the Prench engineers collected, by land-carto riage, twelve pontoons and thirty-seven barks at Dietikon, on the evening of the 23th September, where they were concealed behind an eminence and several hedges, and brought down to the margin of the river at daybreak on the following morning. The Prench masked batteries were then opened, and by the superiority of their fire the opposite bank was speedily cleared of the feeble detachments of the enemy who occupied it, and the passage commenced. Six hundred men, in the first instance, were ferried over, and the French artillery, directed by General Pay, protected this gallant land against the attacks of the increasing force of the enemy, till the boats returned with a fresh detachment. Meanwhile the pontoons arrived, at a quick trot, from Dietikou; the bridge began to be formed, and the troops, ferried over, attacked and carried the height on the opposite side, though defended with the most obstinate valour by three Russian battalions, from whence seven pieces of cannon had hitherto thundered on their crossing columns. Its seven o'clock the plateau of Closter-Pahr, which commanded the passage, was carried 14, with the artillery which crowned it, and before nine the bridge was completed, and Ondinot, with lifteen thousand men, firmly established on the right bank of the river.

While this serious attack was going on in the centre, General Minard on the left had, by a feigned attack, induced the Russian commander, Durassow, to collect all his forces to resist the threatened passage on the lower Liminat, and Mortier, by a vigorous demonstration against Zurich, retained the bulk of the Russian centre in the neighbourhood of that city. His troops were inadequate to produce any serious impression on the dense masses of the Russians who were there assembled; but while he was retiring in confusion, and horsakow was already congratulating himself on a victory, he was alarmed by the increasing cannonades in his rear, and intelligence soon arrived of the passage at Closter-Pahr, the disaster of Markoff, and the separation of the right wing under Durassow from the centre, now left to its own resources at Zurich. Shortly after, he received the most alarming accounts of the progress of Oudinot; he had made himself master of Hong, and the heights which surround Zurich on the north west; and, in spite of a sally which Korsakow made towards evening, at the head of five thousand men, which compelled the enemy to recede to the foot of the heights to the north of the town, they still maintained themselves in force on that important position, barred the road of Wintherthur, the sole issue to Germany, and all but surrounded the Allied army within the walls of the city. Before nightfall. Massena, fully sensible of his advantages, summ or I the linesian commander to surrender, a proposal to which no answer was in turned a nested During these disasters the confusion in Zarich result of the least confusion in pitch. The immense confluence of horsence, with least reaching gage-waggons, suddenly thrown back up in the city, which its streets were soon completely blocked up; the cries of the cavely with their way through the dense mass, and next, with the wounded and the dying to make head against the cavely with the confusion of the cavely with the confusion of the cavely with the

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [CHAP. XXIX. 68

which a parallel can only be found in the horrors of the Moscow retreat. When night came, the extensive watch-fires on all the heights to the north and west of the city, showed the magnitude of the force with which they were threatened in that quarter, while the unruffled expanse of the lake offered no hope of escape on the other side, and the bombs which already began to fall in the streets, gave a melancholy presage of the fate which awaited them if they were not speedily extricated from their perilous situation (1).

l tion of to force h s way

In these desperate circumstances, horsakow evinced a resolution as worthy of admiration as his former presumptuous confidence had been deserving of censure Disdaming the proposal to surrender, he spent the night in making arrangements for forcing, jasses of during le right

ıpòſ

French outposts Strengthened by these reinforcements, horsakow resolved to attempt the passage through the enemy on the following day. At daybreak, on the 28th, the Russian columns were formed in Sept 28 order of battle, and attacked with the utmost impetuosity the troogh the division Lorges and the brigade Bonterns, which had established which remained to them The resistance of the French was obstinate and the carnage frightful, but the Russians fought with the courage of despair, and at length succeeded in driving the Republicans before them and opening a passage. The whole army of horsakow was then arranged for a retreat, but contrary to every rule of common sense, as well as the military art, he placed the infantry in front, the cavalry in the centre, and the artilan manes in the rear leaving only a slender rear guard to defend licans against the cavalry in the centre were more successful. The divisions

Lorges and Gazan, by resterated charges on the moving mass, at length succeeded in throwing it into confusion, the disorder soon spread to the rear; all the efforts of the generals to arrest it proved ineffectual; the brave Sickey, destined to honourable distinction in a more glorious war, was wounded and made prisoner, and amidst a scene of unexampled confusion, a hundred -nd

the Limmat, while Outlinet, carrying every thing printe man, pre from the heights on the north, the garrison defiled after the mun army in confusion; soon the gates were seized, a mortal struggle ensued in the stricts, in the course of which the illustrious Lavater, seeking to save the life of a soldier threatened with death, was barbarously shot. At length all the troops who remained in Zurich laid down their arms; and Korsakow, weakened by the loss of eight thousand killed and wounded, and five thousand prisoners, besides his whole artillery and ammunition, was allowed to retire without further molestation by Eglisau to Shaffbausen (1).

While Zurich was immortalized by these astonishing triumphs, the Section attack of Soult on the Imperial right, on the upper part of the line above the lake, was hardly less successful. Hotze had there retained only two battalions, at his headquarters of Kaltbrun; the remainder were dispersed along the vast line, from the upper end of the lake of Zurich by Sargans, to Coire in the Grisons. Accumulating his forces, Soult skilfully and rapidly passed the Linth, at three in the morning of the 25th. One hundred and lifty volunteers first swam across the river, with their salites in their teeth, during the darkness of the night, and aided by the artillery from the French side, speedily dispersed the Austrian posts on the right bank, and protected the disembarkation of six companies of grenadiers, who soon after made themselves masters of Schenis. Wakened by the sound of the cannon, Hotze ran, with a few officers and a slender escort, to the spot, and Sect. 11 Donto d fell dead by the first discharge of the Republican videttes. This the latter calamitous event threw the Austrians into such consternation, that they fell back from Schenis to Kaltbrun, from which they were also dislodged before the evening. At the same time, the French had succeeded in crossing a body of troops over the river, a little lower down, at Shemersken, and advanced to the bridge of Grynau, where a desperate conflict ensued. These disasters compelled the Austrians to retreat to their position at Wesen, where they were next day assaulted by Soult, and driven first behind the Thiers, and at length over the Rhine, with the loss of three thousand prisoners, twenty pieces of cannon, all their baggage, and the whole flotilla, constructed at a great expense, on the lake of Wallenstadt (2).

While these disasters were accumulating upon the Allied force, which he was advancing to support, Suwarrow was resolutely and faithfully performing his part of the general plan. He arrived at Taverno on the 45th August, and dispatching his artillery and baggage, by Como and Chiavenna, towards the Grisons, set out himself, with twelve thousand veterans, to ascend the Tessino and force the passage of the St.-Gothard, while Rosenberg, with six thousand, was sent round by the Val Blegno, to turn the position by the Crispalt and Disentis, and so descend into the valley of Urseren by its eastern extremity. On the 21st September, the Russian main body arrived at Airolo, at the foot of the mountain, were General Gudin was strongly posted, with four thousand men, covering both the direct road over the St.-Gothard and the path which led diagonally to the Furca. Two days after, the attack was commenced, with the utmost resolution, by the Russian troops; but in spite of all their efforts; they were arrested in the steep zigzag ascent above Airolo by the rapid and incessant fire of the French tirailleurs. In vain the Russians, marching boldly up, answered by Bloods r nheavy platoons of musketry; their fire, however sustained, could produce little impression on detached parties of sharpshooters, who, forcet by the Russians, posted behind rocks and scattered fir-trees, caused every shot to tell upon the dense array of their assailants. Irritated at the unexpected obstacles, the old marshal advanced to the front, lay down in a ditch, and declared his resolution "to be buried there, where his children had retreated over the rugged summit of the St -Gothard to the valley of Urseren. At the same time, Rosenberg had assailed the French detachment on the summit of the Cri-

Assailed by such superior forces, both in front and flank, Lecourbe strength at had no alternative but a rapid retreat. During the night, therefore bents force, he threw his artillery into the Reuss, and retired down the salley of Schollenen, breaking down the Devil's Bridge to impede the progress of the enemy, while Godin scaled the Furca by moonlight, and took post on the inhospitable summit of the Grimsel On the following morning the united Russian forces approached the Devil's Bridge, but they found an impassable gulf, two hundred feet deep, which stopt the leading companies, while a

Reuss to scale the rocks on the left, by which the post at the bridge was turned, and beams being hastily thrown across, the Russian troops, with loud shouts, passed the terrific defile, and pressing hird upon the retiring column of the Republicans, effected a junction with Auffenberg at Wasen, and drove the enemy beyond Altdorf to take post on the sunny slopes where the Alps of Sep 25 Surenen descend into the glassy lake of Lucerne (2).

Arrived at The capture of the St -Gothard by the Russians, and the expulsion of the French from the whole valley of the Reuss, was totally unexpected by Masséna, and would have been attended with important results upon the general fate of the campaign, if it had not been simultaneous with the disaster of Korsakow at Zurich, and the defeat of Hotze's corps by the Republicans on the Linth. But, coming as it did in the midst of these misfortunes, it only induced another upon the corps whose defeat was about to signalize the Republican arms. Arrived at Altdorf, Suwarrow found his progress in a direct line stopt by the lake of I ucerne, whose perpendicular sides precluded all possibility of a further advance in that direction, while the only outlet to join the Allied forces on his right lay through the horrible deble of the Shachenthal, in which even the audacious Lecourbe had not ventured to engage his troops, however long habituated to mountun narfare. There was now, however, no alternative, and Sunarrow, with troops exhausted with fatigue, and a heart boiling with indignation, was comnelled to commence the persions journey (5).

notive to No words can do justice to the difficulties experienced by the passage of the brave men construction of the brave men whole army advanced in single file, dragging the beasts of burden after them.

⁽i) Th. x 421, 422 Jon., xii 2.5 205, Dum. i (3) Jone x 2*2, 2*0 Dum ii $1, 25 Th x 51 Arch, Ch ii 227 225 Th x 422 Dum ii $2 Arch Ch ii 230. (2) Jone xii 237 295 Th x 422 Dum ii $2 51 Arch Ch ii 75, 231 up rocky paths, where even an active traveller can with difficulty find a footing. Numbers slipped down the precipices, and perished miserably; others, worn out with fatigue, lay down on the track, and were trodden under foot by the multitude who followed after them, or fell into the hands of Lecourbe, who closely hung upon their rear. So complete was the dispersion of the army, that the leading files had reached Mutten before the last had left sept. 28. Altdorf; the precipices beneath the path were covered with horses, equipages, arms, and soldiers unable to continue the laborious ascent. At length the marshal reached Mutten, where the troops, in a hospitable valley, abounding with cottages and green fields, hoped for some respite from their fatigues; and where, in conformity to the plan agreed on, they were to have met the Austrian corps of Jellachich and Linken, to threaten the right of the Republicans (4).

But it was too late: the disasters of the Imperialists deprived He finds none of the them of all hope of relief from this quarter. Jellachich, faithful to his instructions, had broken up from Coire and the valley of the ments there. Rhine on the 25th, with eight battalions made himself master of the village of Mollis, and driven the Republicans back to Naefels, at the bridge of which, however, they resolutely defended themselves. But on the following day, the French, issuing from Wasen, menaced the retreat of the Austrians by the side of the Wallenstadter See; and Jellachich, informed of the disasters at Zurich, the death of Hotze, and the retreat of his corps, made haste to fall back behind the Rhine. On the same day, Linken, who had crossed from the valley of the Rhine by the valley of Sernst and the sources of the Linth, after making prisoners two battalions whom they encountered, appeared in the upper part of the valley of Glarus, so as to put Molitor between two fires. His situation now appeared all but desperate, and by a little more vigour on the part of the Russians might have been rendered so; but the retreat of Jellachich having enabled Molitor to accumulate his forces against this new adversary, he was obliged to retreat, and after remaining inactive for three days at Schwanden, recrossed the mountains, and retired behind the Rhine (2).

And is there Suwarrow thus found himself in the Muttenthal, in the middle of surrounded on all sides, the enemy's forces, having the whole of Masséna's army on one and reluc-tantly forced side, and that of Molitor on the other. Soon the masses of the Republicans began to accumulate round the Russian marshal. Molitor occupied Mont Brakel and the Klonthal, the summit of the pass between the Muttenthal and Glarus, while Mortier entered the mouth of the valley towards Schwytz, and Masséna himself arrived at Fluellen, to concert with Lecourbe a general attack on the Russian forces. In this extremity, Suwarrow having, with the utmost difficulty, assembled his weary troops in the Muttenthal, called a council of war, and following only the dictates of his own impetuous courage, proposed an immediate advance to Schwytz, in the rear of the French position at Zurich, and wrote to Korsakow, that he would hold him answerable with his head for one step further that he continued his retreat. The officers, however, perceiving clearly the dangerous situation in which they were placed, strongly urged the necessity of an immediate retreat into Glarus and the Grisons, in order to strengthen themselves by that wing of the Allied army which alone had escaped a total defeat. At length, with the utmost difficulty, the veteran conqueror was persuaded to alter his

E. [Chap. XXIX.

The correct, weeping with which his marvelareer by the faults of the generals placed under his command (1).

Preceded by the Austrian division under Auffenberg, the Rusians ascended Mount Bragel, and classing before them the detachments of follotor, great part of whom were made prisoners near the lake Klonthal, hrew back that general upon the banks of the Linth. It was now the turn of he Fre

'a in the midst of dangers which ordinary commander, he made he me
y nich of ground, and turning every way to face the adversaries who assailed him. Determined to et r block up the passage to the Russians, he ultimately took post at Nacfels, aleady immortalized in the wars of Swiss independence, where he was fule crosses riously attacked, for a whole day, by Prince Bagrathion Both para no into ties fought with the most heroic courage, regardless of ten days' previous combats and marches, in which they had respectively esperate been engaged, but all the efforts of the Russian grenadiers could not prevail over the steady resistance of the Republicans, and towards evenng, having received reinforcements from Wasen, they sallied forth, and lrove the assailants back to Glarus On the same day Massena, with a large force, attacked the rearguard of the Russians, which was winding, encumbered with wounded, along the Muttenthal, but Rosenberg halting, withstood their attack with such firmness, that the Republicans were compelled to give way, and then breaking suddenly from a courageous defensive to a furious offensive, he routed them entirely, and drove them back as far as Schwitz, with the loss of five pieces of cannon, a thousand prisoners, and as many killed and wounded (2)

Product product the Alprid Chargio Indispensible after the work of the Alprid Chargio Indispensible after the work of the Crisons by Lugi, Matt, and the valley of Sernst To effect this in presence of a superior enemy,

Matt, and the valley of Sernst To effect this in presence of a superior enemy, pressing on his footsteps both from the side of Naerels and the klonthal, was not summit of the interpretation of the interpretation of the interpretation of the interpretations of the interpretation of the interpretatio

h presented themliardships, tenfold greater than those wince all but drunted the selves Hardships, tenfold greater than those wincu ail but drunted the on s and augmented the natural immunities of it a credible difficulty the wearied column wound its prinful way amongst inhospitable mountains insingle file, without either stores to sustain its strength, or covering to shelter it from the weather. The suon, which, in the upper parts of the mountains, was two feet deep, and perfectly soft from being newly fallen, rendered the ascent so fatiguing, that the strongest men could with difficulty advance a few miles in a day. Accordages were to be found in these dreary and sterile mountains, not even trees were to be met with to form the cheerful light of the bivouaes, vast grey rocks starting up amongst the snow alone broke the mournful uniformity of the scene, and under their shelter, or on the open surface of the mountain, without any covering or fire, were the soldiers obliged to lie down, and pass a long and dreary autumnal night. Great numbers perished of cold, or sunk down precipices, or into erevices from which they were unable to extricate themselves, and where they were soon choked by the drifting of the snow. With incredible difficulty the head of the column, on the following day, at length reached, amidst colossal rocks, the summit of the ridge; but it was not the smiling plains of Italy which there met their view, but a sea of mountains, wrapped in the snowy mantle which seemed the winding-sheet of the army, interspersed with cold grey clouds which floated round their higher peaks. The Alps of Tyrol and the Grisons, whose summits stretched as far as the eye could reach in every direction, presented a vast wilderness, in the solitudes of which the army appeared about to be lost, while not a fire nor a column of smoke was to be seen in the vast expanse to cheer the spirits of the soldiers. The path, long hardly visible, now totally disappeared, not a shrub or a bush was to be met with; the naked tops of the rocks, buried in the snow, no longer served to indicate the lying of the precipices, or rest the exhausted bodies of the troops. On the southern descent the difficulties were still greater; the snow, hardened by a sharp freezing wind, was so slippery, that it became impossible for the men to keep their footing; whole companies slipped together into the abysses below, and numbers were crushed by the beasts of burden rolling down upon them from the upper parts of the ascent, or the masses of snow which became loosened by the incessant march of the army, and fell down with irresistible force upon those beneath. All the day was passed in struggling with these difficulties, and with the utmost exertions the advanced guards reached the village of Panix, in the Grisons, at night, where headquarters were established. The whole remainder of the columns slept upon the snow, where the darkness enveloped them without either fire or covering. But nothing could overcome the unconquerable spirit of the Russians. With heroic resolution and incredible perseverance they struggled on, through hardships which would have daunted any other soldiers (1); and at length the scattered stragglers were rallied in the valley of the Rhine, and head-quarters established at llantz on the 10th, where the troops obtained some rest after the unparalleled difficulties which they had experienced.

Bloody conBloody conBloody

his pid and clerks ti o further pur twenty-seven battalions and forty-six squadrons arrived in the neighbourhood of Villingen, and the prince himself fixed his headquarters of Donaschingen, in order to be at hand to support the broken remains of horsakow's army. The Allies were withdrawn from the St -Gothard, and all the posts they yet occupied in Switzerland, to the · n the hostile armies, the shausen to Diesenhosen.

While these desperate conflicts were going on in the south of Eutween R s rope, England, at length rousing its giant strength from the state of land for an inactivity in which it had so long been held by the military inexperience and want of confidence in its prowess on the part of government, was preparing an expedition more commensurate than any it had tants, and the means of defence within the power of the Republicans were most inconsiderable By a treaty, concluded on the 22d June, between England and Russia, it was stipulated that the former of these powers was to furmsh 45,000, and the latter 17,000 men, towards a descent in Holland, and that I, 41,000 a-month should be paid by En land for the expenses of the Russian troops, and her whole naval force be employed to support the operations. To re-establish the stadtholder in Holland, and terminate the revolutionary tyranny under which that opulent country groaned; to form the nucleus of an army which might threaten the northern provinces of France. and restore the barrier which had been so insanely destroyed by the Emperor Joseph, to effect a diversion in favour of the great armies now combating on the Rhine and the Alps, and destroy the ascendency of the Republicans in the maritime provinces and naval arsenals of the Dutch, were the objects proposed in this expedition, and which, by efforts more worthy of the strength of England, might unquestionable have been attained (2).

The preparations for the expedition, both in England and the Baltic, were pushed with the utmost vigour, and the energy and skill with which the naval departments and arrangements for disembarkation were made in the British harbours, were such as to exort the admiration of the French hisin the middle of July, Sir Home Popliam sailed for the Baltic to receive on board the Russian contingent; while twelve thousand men, early m August, were assembled on the coast of hent, and twelve thousand more were preparing for the same destination. All the harbours of England resounded with the noise of preparation, it was openly announced in the newspapers that a descent in Holland was in contemplation; and the prepara jour numerous British cruisers, by reconnecting every river and harbour along the Channel, kept the maritime districts in constant alarm from Brest to the Texel The best defensive measures which their circumstances would admit were adopted by the Directory, and Brune, the and a rileng lat the last of the forces of both pations; but he Dutch froops

⁽³⁾ Jem xii 186 181, Dum 11 349 354 (1) Arch Cb i: 259 284 Jom xii 283 286 (2) Jom xii 178 179 Ann Reg 1799 201, and State Lapers 216 217 Dum ii 348 349 (4) Jon xu 182 183 Aun Reg 201 Dum is 351, 352

On the 13th August, the fleet, with the first division of the army, and lands on twelve thousand strong, set sail from Deal, and joined Lord Duncan in the North Sea. Tempestuous weather, and a tremendous surf on the coast of Holland prevented the disembarkation from being effected for a fortnight; but at length, on the 26th, the fleet was anchored off the Helder, in north Holland, and preparations were immediately made for a descent on the following morning. At daylight on the 27th the disembarkation began, the troops led with equal skill and resolution by Sir Ralph Aben-CROMBY, and the landing covered by the able exertions of the fleet under Admiral Mitchell; and never was the cordial co-operation of the land and sea forces more required than on that trying service. The naval strength of England was proudly evinced on this occasion; fifteen ships of the line, fortyfive frigates and brigs, and one hundred and thirty transport vessels covered the sea, as far as the eye could reach, with their sails. General Daendels, who was at the head of a division of twelve thousand men in the neighbourhood, marched rapidly to the menaced point; and when the first detachment of the British, two thousand five hundred strong, was landed, it found itself assailed by a much superior force of Batavian troops; but the fire from the ships carried disorder into their ranks, and they were driven back into the sandhills on the beach, from which, after an obstinate conflict, they were exthe Helder. pelled before six in the evening, and the debarkation of the remain-Defcat of ing divisions effected without molestation. In the night, the enemy the Dutch. evacuated the fort of the Helder, which was taken possession of next day by the English troops. In this affair the loss of the different parties was singularly at variance with what might have been expected; that of the British did not exceed five hundred, while that of the Dutch was more than thrice that number (1).

This success was soon followed by another still more important. the Dutch The position at the Helder having been fortified, and a reinforcement of five thousand fresh troops come up from England, the British fleet entered the Texel, of the batteries defending which they had now the command by the occupation of the Helder, and summoned the Dutch fleet, under Admiral Story, consisting of eight ships of the line, three of fiftyfour guns, eight of forty-four, and six smaller frigates, who had retired into the Vlietu canal, to surrender. At the sight of the English flag, symptoms of insubordination manifested themselves in the Dutch fleet; the admiral, unable to escape, and despairing of assistance, surrendered without firing a shot; and immediately the Orange flag was hoisted on all the ships, and on the towers and batteries of the Helder and Texel. By this important success the Dutch fleet was finally extricated from the grasp of the Republicans, a circumstance of no small moment, in after times, when England had to contend, single-handed, with the combined maritime forces of all Europe (2).

The British are attacked by the Rebyther Republicans, but repulse them with great loss. Seven thousand were French, under the orders of Vandamme, General Brune, who had assumed the command-in-chief, resolved to anticipate the enemy, and resume the offensive. On the 40th of September all the columns were in motion; Vandamme, who commanded the right, was directed to move along the Langdyke, and make lumself master of Ennsginberg; Dumonceau, with the centre, was to march by Schorldam upon Krabbenham, and thereforce the

76

to dikes and causeys, intersecting in different directions a low and swampy ground, it consisted of detached conflicts at insulated points rather than any general movements; and, like the struggle between Napoleon and the Austrans in the marshes of Arcola, was to be determined chiefly by the intrepidity of the heads of columns. The Republicans advanced bravely to the attack, but they were every where repulsed. All the efforts of Vandamme were shattered against the intrepidity of the English troops which guarded the Sand-dyke, Dumonceau was defeated at Krabbenham, and Daendels compelled to fall back in disorder from before Petten. Repulsed at all points the Republicans resumed their position at Alkmaer, with a loss of two thousand men, while that of the British did not exceed three hundred (1)

Instructed by this disaster as to the quality of the troops with joined by which he had to deal, General Brune remained on the defensive at Alkmaer, while the remainder of the expedition rapidly arrived to the support of the British army. Between the 12th and the 15th September, the Russian contingent, seventeen thousand strong, and seven thousand British, arrived, and the Duke of York took the command and attack the enemy As the nature of the ground precluded the employment of large masses, the attacking force was divided into four columns. The first, under the command of General Hermann, composed of eight thousand Russians and a brigade of English, was destined to advance by the Sand-dyke and the Slapperdyke against the left of Brune, resting on the sea , the second, under the orders of General Dundas, consisting of seven thousand men, of whom five thousand were English, was charged with the attack on Schorldam and the French centre, the third, under Sir James Pulteney, which required to advance along the Langdyke, which was defended by powerful intrenchments, was intended rather to effect a diversion than make a serious attack, and was not to push beyond Oude Scarpell, at the head of the Langdyke, unless in the event of unlooked-for success, while the fourth, consisting of ten thousand choice troops, under Sir Ralph Abercromby, was destined to turn the enemy's right on the Zuyder 7ee (2)

Disaster of The action commenced at daybreak on the 19th September with on the rabe a furnous attack by the Russians, under Hermann, who speedily drove in the advanced guard of the Republicans at hamp and Groot, and pressing forward along the Sand-dyke, made themselves masters of Sharldam and Bergen, and drove back Vandamme, who commanded in that quarter, to within half a league of Alkmaer But the assailants fell into disorder in consequence of the rapidity of their advance, and Brune, having speedily moved up the division of Daendels and considerable reinforcements from his centre to the support of his left, Vandamme was enabled to resume the offensive, in consequence of which the Russians were attacked at once in front and both flanks in the village of Bergen, from whence, after a murderons conflict, they were driven at the point of the bayonet. Their retreat, which at first was conducted in some degree of order, was soon turned into a total rout by the sudden appearance of two French battalions on the flank of their column (4). Hermann himself was taken prisoner, with a considerable part of his division, and General Essen, his second in command, who had advanced towards Schorldam, was obliged to seek shelter, under cover of the English reserve, behind the Allied intrenchments of Zyp.

While the Russians were undergoing these disasters on the right, the British in the centre the Duke of York was successful in the centre and left. Dundas carried the villages there, after an obstinate resistance; Dumonceau was driven back from Schorldam, and two of his best battalions were made prisoners. At the same time Sir James Pulteney having been encouraged, by the imprudence of Daendels in pursuing too warmly a trifling advantage, to convert his feigned attack into a real one, not only drove back the Dutch division, but made a thousand prisoners, and forced the whole line, in utter confusion, towards St.-Pancras, under the fire of the English artillery. Abercromby had not yet brought his powerful division into action; but every thing promised decisive success in the centre and left of the Allies, when intelligence was brought to the Duke of York of the disaster on the right, and the rapid advance of the Republicans in pursuit of the flying Russians. He instantly halted his victorious troops in the centre, and marched Russians upon Schorl with two brigades of English and three Russian regicontinue their rements, which was speedily carried, and if Essen could have rallied the British his broken troops, decisive success might yet have been attained. are at length But all the efforts of that brave general could not restore order or repulsed. rescue the soldiers from the state of discouragement into which they had fallen; and the consequence was, that as they continued their retreat to the intrenchments of Zyp, the Republicans were enabled to accumulate their forces on the Duke of York, who, thus pressed, had no alternative but to evacuate Schorl (2), and draw back his troops to their fortified line. this battle the Republicans lost 5,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners; but the British lost 500 killed and wounded, and as many prisoners, while the Russians were weakened by 5,500 killed and wounded, 26 pieces of cannon, and 7 standards.

While these events were in progress, the Dutch fleet was con-Removal of the Dutch veyed to the British harbours. It is remarkable that this measure gave equal dissatisfaction to the sailors on both sides. The Dutch loudly complained that their ships, instead of being employed in their own country, under Orange colours, should be taken as prizes to Great Britain; while the English sailors lamented, that a fleet which could not escape had not fallen into their hands as glorious trophies, like those at St.-Vincents or Camperdown. The officers on both sides were anxious to preserve a good. understanding between their respective crews; but the sailors kept up a sullen distrust: so much more easy is it to accommodate differences between rival cabinets than heal the national animosity which centuries of warfare have spread among their subjects (5). Holland, however, had no reason in the end to complain of British generosity; after a decided, though unwilling hostility of twenty years, she obtained a lavish accumulation of gifts in Flanders and Java from her ancient rival, such as rarely rewards even the steadiest fidelity of an Allied power.

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 200, 203. Dum. ii. 387, 388. Ann. Reg. 1799, 304, 305.

⁽²⁾ Ann. Reg. 1799, 305, 306. Joun. xii, 199, 205. Dum. ii. 387, 389.
(3) Dum. ii. 381, 382.

The Dake of York was not discouraged by the issue of the attack on the 19th September. Having been reinforced, a few days after, beceesta by a fresh brigade of Russians and some English detachments, he arranged his army, as before, in four columns; and although the heavy rains el a man note l'emenet en farm e l'an ala.

nerval eagles. The Allied army on this occasion was about thirty thousand strong, and the Republicans nearly of equal force. At six in the morning the attack was commenced at all noints. The Russian division of Essen. anxious to efface its former disgrace, supported by the English division of Dundas, advanced to the attack in the centre with such impetnosity, that the , villages of Schorl and Schorldam were quickly carried, and the Republicans driven in confusion to the downs above Bergen. An attack was there projected by the Duke of York; but Essen, who recollected the consequence of the former rashness of the Russians on the same ground, refused to move till the advance of Abercromby on the right was ascertained, a circumstance which paralysed the success of the Allies in that quarter. Meanwhile, Aber-

the sandhills, and downs on which they rested. On the left, Sir James Pultency had made little progress, and his measures were confined to demonstrations; but as the English centre and right were victorious, and they had completely turned the French left, Brune retired in the night from the field of battle, and took up a fresh position, abandoning Alkmaer and all his former line. The loss sustained by the Republicans in this contest was above three thousand men and seven pieces of cannon, that of the Allies " a attant on of the French was attracted by who bravely fought up to ongest obstacles, in their attack on the flank of the Republicans (1)

But although they had gained this success, the situation of the lits eritical Duke of York's army was far from encouraging. The enemy's force Lituation Dotte ath was daily increasing, while for his own no further reinforcements could be expected, the autumnal rains, which had set in with more than The former lion or chargels.

its of the inhabitants or Batavian troops in favour of the house of Orange had taken

tain their

ly to furnish the necessary supplies. To achieve the conquest of this important city, the Allied forces were put in motion to attack the French position which occupied the narrow isthmus between Beverwick and the Zuyder Zee, by which it was necessary to pass to approach Haarlem, which was not more than three leagues distant (2).

(2) Ann Reg 1799, 308, 309 Dum. ii 303 309 Jose xii 211, 212, (1) Dum 11 85, 86 Jom, x11 207, 211

Reg 1799, 308

78

The action commenced at seven in the morning, and was obsti-Oct. 6. Indecisive nately contested during the whole day. In the centre the Allies were, in the first instance, successful; Essen bore down all opposition, and Palthod, who commanded the Republicans, was on the point of succumbing, when Brune strengthened him with the greater part of a fresh division, and a vigorous charge threw back the Allies in confusion towards their own position. In their turn, however, the victorious Republicans were charged, when disordered with success, by an English regiment of cavalry, thrown into confusion, and driven back with great loss to Kastricum, where they were with difficulty rallied by Vandamme, who succeeded in checking the advance of the pursuers. The action was less obstinately contested on the right, as Abercromby, who commanded in that quarter, was obliged to detach a considerable part of his troops to reinforce Essen; while on the left the immense inundations which covered the front of the Republican position, prevented Pultency from reaching the French right under Daendels. The loss on both sides was nearly equal, amounting to about two thousand in killed, wounded, and prisoners. That of the English alone was twelve hundred men (1).

Which leads The barren honours of this well-contested field belonged to the Allies, who had forced back the French centre to a considerable the British. distance from the field of battle; but it is with an invading army as an insurrection, an indecisive success is equivalent to a defeat. Haarlem was the object of the English general, without the possession of which he could not maintain himself in the country during the inclement weather which was approaching, and Haarlem was still in the hands of the Republicans. The enemy's force was hourly increasing, and, two days after the action, six thousand infantry arrived to strengthen their already formidable position on the isthmus, by which alone access could be obtained to the interior of the country; and the total absence of all the necessary supplies in the corner of land within which the army was confined, rendered it impossible to remain there for any length of time. In these circumstances, the Duke of York, with the unanimous concurrence of a council of war, resolved to fall back to the intrenchments at Zyp, there to await reinforcements or farther commands from the British Cabinet; a resolution which was strengthened by the intelligence which arrived, at the same time, of the disasters which had befallen the Russians at Zurich. On the day after the battle, therefore, the Allies retired to the position they had occupied before the battle of Bergen (2).

The British first-seine, and at last capitulate, and several sharp skirmishes ensued between the British rearguard and the advanced posts of their pursuers. The situation of the Duke of York was now daily becoming more desperate; his forces were reduced by sickness and the sword to twenty thousand men; the number of those in hospital was daily increasing; there remained but eleven days' provision for the troops, and no supplies or assistance could be looked for from the inhabitants for a retreating army. In these circumstances he rightly judged that it was necessary to lose no time in embarking the sick, wounded, and Oct. 17. stores, with such of the Dutch as had compromised themselves by their avowal of Orange principles and proposed a suspension of arms to General Brune, preparatory to the evacuation of Holland by the Allied troops. Some difficulty was at first experienced from the French insisting as a sine gint non that the fleet captured at the Texel should be restored, but this the British commander firmly resisted, and at length the conditions of the exacuation were agreed on. The principal articles were, that the Alies should, without molestation, effect the total evacuation of Holland by the end of November, that eight thousand prisoners, whether French or Dutch, should be restored, and that the works of the Helder should be given up entire, with all their artillery. A separate article stipulated for the surrender of the brace De Winter, made prisoner in the battle of Camperdown Before the 1st of December all these conditions were fulfilled on both sides the British troops had regained the shores of England, and the Russians were quartered in Jersey and Guernsey [4]

⁽¹⁾ Jom, xii. 212, 216. Ann. Reg. 1799, 309. (2) Jom. xii. 215, 217. Dum. ii. 90, 91. Ann. Dum. ii. 89. Reg. 1799, 310.

Such was the disastrous issue of the greatest expedition which on the state had yet sailed from the British harbours during the war, and the misso only one at all companyments to the only one at all commensurate to the power or the character of Lugland Coming, as it did, after the hopes of the nation had been highly excited by its early successes, and when the vast conquests of the Allies in the first part of the campaign had led to a very general expectation of the fall of the probinal power in France, it produced the most bitter disappoint ment, and contributed, in a signal degree, both on the continent and at home, to confirm the general impression that the English soldiers had irre vocably declined from their former renown, that the victors of Cressy and Azincour were never destined to revive, and that it was at sea alone that any hope for resistance~ he power of the Republic The Oppositi disasters, and ascribed them all to the Administration .

ascribed them at 10 Int while the credulous public, incapablo of just discrimination, and ever governed by the event, overlooked the important facts that the naval power of republican Holland had been completely destroyed by the expedition, and that in every encounter the English soldiers had asserted their ancient superiority over those of Frince and instead of ascribing the failure of the expedition to its real causes, inadequacy of means and the jealousies incident to an Allied force unaccustomed to act together, joined the general chorus, and loudly proclaimed the utter madness of any attempts, by land at least, to resist the overwhelming power of France (2). The time was not yet arrived when a greater commander, wielding the resources of a more courageous and excited nation, was to wash out these stains on the British arms, and show to the astonished world that England was yet destined to take the lead, even of the continent, in the deliverance of Europe, and that the blood of the victors of Poictiers and Blenheim yet flowed in the veins of their descendants.

Make red While the campaign was thus chequered with disaster to the large with onth of the Alps, the successes of the Allies led to more durable consequences on the Itahan plans. The Directory, overwelmed by the command of both the with could only assemble consernts, who guarded

eral Melas, who, after the mmand, had 68,000 men under his orders, independent of 15,000 in garrisons in his rear, and 7000

who marched towards the Arno and the Tiber. In despair at the unpromising condition of his troops, occupying the circular ridge of the mountains from the sources of the Trebbia to the great St.-Bernard, the French general at first proposed to repass the Alps, and after leaving such a force in the Maritime Alps as might secure the south of France from insult, proceed, with the bulk of his forces, to join General Thurcau in the Valais. But the Directory refused to accede to this wise proposition, and instead, prescribed to the French general to maintain his position, and exert his utmost efforts for the preservation of Coni, which was evidently threatened by the Imperialists (1).

The Imperial The cautious and minute directions of the Aulic Council having rialists draw completely fettered the Austrian general, his operations were confined to the reduction of this fortress, the last bulwark in the plain of Italy still held by the Republicans, and justly regarded as an indispensable preliminary to the conquest of Genoa, from its commanding the chief communications of that city with the plain of Piedmont. With this view, both generals drew their troops towards Coni; the Austrians encircling its walls with a chain of posts in the plain, and the French accumulating their forces Sept. 17. 10 overlook it. In the desultory warfare which followed, the Imperialists were ultimately successful. Melas, with the centre, twenty thousand Scot. 25. strong, defeated Grenier at Savigliano, while Kray threw back their left through the valley of Suza to the foot of Mont Cenis. At ; Sept. 29. the same time, the Republicans were equally unsuccessful in the valley of Aosta, where the united forces of Kray and Haddick expelled them successively from Ivrea and Aosta, and forced them to retire over the great St.-Bernard to Martigny (2). Relieved by these successes from all disquietude for his right flank, Melas gradually drew nearer to Coni, and began his preparations for the siege of that place.

Pressed by the reiterated orders of the Directory, Championnet now resolved to make an effort for the relief of Coni. His disposable force for this enterprise, even including the army of the Alps under Grenier, did not exceed forty-five thousand men; but by a vigorous and concentric effort, there was some reason to hope that the object might be effected. St.-Cyr in vain represented to the Directory that it was the height · of temerity to endeavour to maintain themselves in a mountainous region. already, exhausted of its resources, and that the wiser course was to fall back, with the army yet entire, to the other side of the Alps, and there assemble it in a central position. How clear soever may have been the justice of this opinion, they had not strength of mind sufficient to admit the loss of Italy in a single campaign; and the French general set himself bravely about the difficult task of maintaining himself, with an inferior and dispirited army, on the Italian side of the mountains (5).

With this view, the divisions of Victor and Lemoine, forming the Measures to centre of the army, sixteen thousand strong, were directed to move upon Mondovi; while St.-Cyr, with the right, received orders to descend from the Bocchetta, and effect a diversion on the side of Novi. The movement commenced in the end of September. Vico was taken by a brigade of the Republicans; but, finding the Imperialists too strongly posted at Mondovi to be assailed with success, Championnet contented himself with placing his troops in observation on the adjacent heights; while St.-Cyr

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 313, 317. Dum. ii. 262, 263. Arch. Ch. ii. 307, 308. St.-Cyr, ii. 10, 11.

⁽²⁾ Arch. Ch. ii. 309, 310. Jom. aii. 318, 322. Dum. ii. 263, 264. St.-Cyr, ii. 12, 15.
(3) Dum. ii. 266, 267. St.-Cyr, ii. 15, 19.

⁶

HISTORY OF EUROPF. [CHAP XXIX

gained a trifling advantage in the neighbourhood of Novi But intelligence having at this time been received of the decisive victory of Massena in Smitzerland, more vigorous operations were undertaken. St -Cyr, abandoning the route of Novi, threw himself towards Bracco on the rear of the Austrians, and attacked them with such celerity, that he made tuche hundred prisoners, and spread consternation through their whole line. Melas, thus threatened, concentrated the forces under his immediate command, consisting of these st amount man mal - c on the Stura; upon which a with chequered success, whi publican forces. There was an essential error in these measures on the part of Championnet; for the Imperialists, grouped around the fortress where they occupied a central position, could at pleasure accumulate masses sufficient to overwhelm any attack made by the Republicans, whose detached columns, issuing from the mountains, and separated by a wide distance, were unable to render any effectual assistance to each other Nevertheless, the great abilities of St -Cyr on the right wing obtained some brilliant advantages, On the 23d of October, he put himself in motion, at the head of twelve thousand men, with only a few pieces of cannon and no cavalry, and defeated the Austrians at Pozzolo-Formigaro, and occupied Marengo, taking a thousand prisoners and three pic on his left, Melas withdrew where the possession of the St -Bernard, relieved him from all disquietude, and with that reinforcement?

centre, he was repulsed with the loss of a thousand men. Having at length resolved on a decisive action, Championnet made his dispositions. One chlumn was to descend from Mont-Cents by the valley of Perouse, another to advance by the left of the Stura; and a third to assail the enemy in front By this means the French general hoped that, while he engaged the attention of the Austrians in front he would, at the same time, turn both their flinks, forgetting that in such an attempt, with columns converging from such remote and divided quarters, the chances were that the Imperialists, from their central position, would be able to defeat one column before another' could arrive to its assistance (2) Perceiving that the plan of his adversary was to attack him on all sides, Melas wisely resolved to anticipate his movement, and with his concentrated masses assail one of the French divisions before the others could arrive to its assistance. By a rapid accumulation of force he could, in this way, bring above thirty thousand men, of whom six thousand were cavalry, to bear on the French centre, under Victor, who could not assemble above sixteen thousand to resist them. His dispositions were rapidly and ably made, and, on the morning of the 4th November, the Republicans were attacked at all points Championnet was so far from anticipating any such event, that his troops were already in march to effect a junction with the right wing, under St.-Gyr, when they were compelled, by the sudden appearance of the Imperialists in battle array, to halt and look to their own defence. Assailed by greatly superior forces, Victor, notwithstanding, made a gallant defence; and such was the intrepidity of the French infantry, that for long the advantage seemed to lie on their side, until at noon, Melas, by bringing up fresh troops, succeeded in throwing them into confusion, and drove them back towards Valdigi. Hardly was this success gained when news arrived that General Duhesme, with the Republican left, had earried the village of Savigliano in his rear; but, wisely judging that this was of little importance, provided he followed up the advantage he had gained, the Austrian general merely detached a brigade to check their advance, and continued to press on the retiring centre of the enemy. Having continued the pursuit till it was dark, he resumed it at daybreak on the following morning. The enemy, discouraged by the check on the preceding day, did not make a very vigorous resistance. Grenier and Victor, driven from a post they had taken up near Murazzo, were forced to seek safety in flight; a large part of their rearguard were made prisoners, and great numbers drowned in endeavouring to cross the Stura, and regain their intrenched camp. In this decisive battle the loss of the Republicans was seven thousand men in killed, wounded, and prisoners, while that of the Imperialists did not exceed two thousand: and Championnet, with his army cut into two divisions, one of which retired towards Genoa, and the other to the Col di Tende, was obliged to seek safety in the mountains, leaving Coni to its fate (1).

(2) Arch Ch at 313 315 Jone, 211 337, 361 (1) Dam is 268, 273 Arch Ch is 312, 313 Join 21 328, 335 St Cyr, is 25, 23 Dum is 273 275 St Lyr is 39, 41

While Championnet was thus defeated in the centre by the supestater near rior skill and combinations of his opponent, the talents of St.-Cyr again gave him an advantage on the Bormida. The Imperialists being there restored to an equality with the Republicans, Kray attacked St.-Cyr near Novi, and drove him back to the plateau in the rear of that city, so lately the theatre of a bloody and desperate conflict; but all the efforts of the Austrians were shattered against the invincible resistance of the French infantry in that strong position, and, after a bloody conflict, they were forced to retire, leaving five pieces of artillery in the hands of the enemy. St.-Cyr upon this resumed his position in front of Novi, and Kray fell back towards Alexandria, to be nearer assistance from the centre of the army. But this success was more than counterbalanced by fresh disasters in the centre and left. On the 10th, the division Ott attacked Richepanse at Borgo San-Dalmazzo, and, after a gallant resistance, drove him into the mountains; while the other division of the Republicans was assailed at Mondovi, and after an obstinate combat, which lasted the whole day, forced to take refuge in the recesses of the Apennines. The French were now thrown back, on the one side, to the foot of the Col di Tende, and in the valley of the Stura to their own frontiers; while on the other, Victor's division was perched on the summits of the Apennines at S.-Giacomo and S.-Bernardo. Nothing remained to interrupt the siege of Coni (2).

stepe and the investment of this fortress was completed on the 18th Novemfall of Conl. ber, and the trenches opened on the 27th. The governor made a brave defence; but the ignorance and inexperience of the garrison were soon conspicuous, and a tremendous fire on the 2d of December having destroyed great part of the town, and seriously injured the works, he at length yielded to the solicitations of the miserable inhabitants, and, to preserve the city from total destruction, agreed to a surrender. The garrison, who had been left in the place, were of agitation, famine pundit to a - 1 army encamped on the oren this miserable puttainer, in made an attack on their there cirtisne formed .

Gallant cor duct of St Cyr in tie

on '

laning the noa.. nine on there is

e, to France!" In this extremity, St -Lyr presented minious ur : the city alone before the mutinous soldiery "Whither do you, fly, soldiers "-"To France, to France " exclaimed a thousand voices -" Be it so," exclaimed he, with a calm voice and serene air, "if a sense of duty no longer retains you, if you are deaf to the voice of honour, listen at least to that of reason, and attend to what your own interest requires . Your ruin is certain if you persist in your present course, the enemy who pursues you will destroy you during the confusion of a tumultuous retreat. Have you forgotten that you have made a desert between your present position and France? No. your sole safety is in your bayonets, and if you indeed desire to regain your country, unite with me in repelling far from the gates of this harbour the enemy, who would take advantage of your disorder to drive you from the walls where alone the necessary convoys or security can be found " Roused by these words to a sense of their duty, the soldiers fell back into their ranks, and loudly demanded to be led against the enemy (2) t usa cress. It was high time that some steps should be taken to arrest the " to for they were now at the gates of Ge-

Cornic quarters that city, while upon it. A hear fror troc the Austrians, assailed at once on non to perform in quieting life uiscon way 10-0 wh by Torrigho, and regained the banks of the Stura, icaving encirc where they soon after went hunc icult task ınto ' ontinued privation had almost driven to desperation; but at length the long wishedfor sails whitened its splendid bay, and the Republicans, as the reward of their heroic exertions, tasted the enjoyment of plenty and repose.

(3) Jom xii 355, 356 Arch Ch # 324 325 (1) Dum 11 304 300 Join x 1 354 Arch Ch Dum ii 300 302 5: Cyr, 11 75, 81, 99 , Hard. (2) Dum ii 297, 298 St -Cjr, ii 68, 74 Hard. vii 321.

While these great events were passing in the basin of Piedmont, operations of minor importance, but still conducive, upon the whole, to the expulsion of the French from the peninsula, took place in the south of Italy. The eastle of St.-Angelo surrendered, in the end of October, to the Neapolitan forces, whom the retreat of Macdonald left at liberty to advance to the Eternal City; and the garrison of Ancona, after a gallant defence of six weeks, four of which were with open trenches, capitulated on the 45th November to the Russians, on condition of being sent to France, and not serving till regularly exchanged. By this success the Allies were made masters of 585 pieces of cannon, 7000 muskets, three ships of the line, and seven smaller vessels. The whole peninsula of Italy, with the exception of the intrenched camp at Genoa, and the mountain roads leading to it from France, was now wrested from the Republican arms (1).

The fall of Ancona terminated this campaign in Italy, the most the respecdisastrous ever experienced by the French in that country. In the tive parties respective positions which they occupied might be seen the imclusion of mense advantages gained by the Allied arms during its continuance. The Imperialists, whose headquarters were at Turin, occupied the whole plain of Lombardy and Piedmont, from the stream of the Trebbia to the torrent of the Ticino, the left, under Kray, being so cantoned as to cover the vallevs of the Bormida and Scrivia; the right, under Haddick and Rohan, occupying the valleys of Domo d'Ossola and Aosta; and the centre, under Kaim, guarding the passes over the Alps and the important position of Mondovi. The Republicans, on the other hand, on the exterior of this immense circle, occupied the snowy summits of the mountains, which stood the native guardians of the plain; the left, consisting of the divisions Grenier and Duhesme, occupying the Little St.-Bernard, the Mont Cenis, and the passes of the higher Alps; the centre, under Lemoine and Victor, the Col de Fenestrelles, and Tende, and the passes of the Maritime Alps: while on the right, Lahoissière and Watrin held the Bocchetta and other passes leading into the Genoese states (2).

Wider still was the difference between the comforts and resources comforts of of the two armies. Cantoned in the rich plains of Italy, on the the imperialists and banks of the Po, the Imperialists were amply supplied with all the comforts and luxuries of life; while its navigable waters incessantly brought up to the army the stores and supplies necessary to restore the losses of so active a campaign. On the side of the Republicans, again, thirty-eight thousand men, without magazines, or stores of provisions, were stationed on the desolate summits of the Alps and the Apennines, shivering with cold, exhausted with fatigue, and almost destitute of clothing. For five months, they had received hardly any pay; the soldiers were without cloaks; their shoes were worn out, and wood was even wanting to warm their frigid bivouacs. Overwhelmed with the horrors of his situation, Championnet retired to Nice, where he died of an epidemic disorder, which soon broke out among the troops and swept off great multitudes; and his death dissolved the small remnants of discipline which remained in the army. The soldiers tumultuously broke up their cantonments; crowds of deserters left their colours and covered the roads to Frince, and it was only by one of those nervous flights of eloquence which touch, even in the greatest calumities, every generous heart, that St.-Cyr succeeded in stopping the return of a large body which had let Genoa, and was proceeding on the road to Provence. Alarmed at the representations which he drew of the disastrous state of the army, the government, which had now passed from the feeble lands of the Directory into the firm grisp of Napoleon, took the most active steps to administer relief, several convoys reached the troops, and Massena, sent to assume the supreme command, succeeded, in some degree, in stop ming the torrent of desertion and restoring the confidence of the army (1)

٠٠, ٥

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xii. 356, 361. Arch. Ch. ii. 326,

Jatousy be At the same time, the campaign on the Rhine was drawing to a close Notwithstanding the brilliant successes of the Republicans and Aus at Turich, their forces in that quarter were not so numerous as to enable them, in the first instance, to derive any considerable fruit from their victory But no sooner were they relieved, by the failure of the expedition in North Holland, from all apprehension in that quarter, than they resolved to concentrate all their disposable force on the Lower Rhine, of which the command was given to General Lecourbe, who had been so distinguished in the mountain warfare of Switzerland But that which the strength of the Republicans could not effect, the dissensions of their enemies were not long in producing The Russians and Austrians mutually threw upon each other the late disasters, the latter alleging that the catastrophe at Zurich was all owing to the want of vigilance and skill in horsakow, and the former replying, that if Suwarrow had been supported by Hotze, as he had a right to expect, when he descended from the St Lothard, all the misfortunes of the centre would have been repaired, and a brilliant victory on his right wing dispossessed Massena from his defensive position on the line of the Limmat In this temper of mind on both sides, and with the jealousy unavoidable be tween cabinets of equal power and rival pretensions, little was wanting to blow up the combustion into a flame. A trivial incident soon produced this effect Suw irrow, after he had rested and reorganized his army, proposed to the Archduke that they should resume offensive operations against the enemy. who had shown no disposition to follow up the successes at Zurich His plan was to abandon the Grisons blow up the works of Fort St Lucie, and advance with all his forces to Wintherthur, where he was to form a junction with horsakow, and attack the enemy in concert with the Imperialists. The Arch duke apprehended with too much reason that the assembling of all the Russian troops on the banks of the Thur, in the centre of the enemy s line, which extended from Sargans to the junction of the Aar and Rhine, would be both difficult and perilous, and therefore he proposed instead, Spwarrow that the corps of Korsakow should march by Stockach to join the marshal behind the lake of Constance, and that he himself should detach a strong Austrian column to second the operations of the Russians in Switzerland Irritated at any alteration of his plans by a younger him for the projected operations in Switzerland (2) On the following day, however, he changed his resolution; for, declaring that his troops absolutely required repose, and that they could find it only at a distance from the theatre of war, he directed them to winter quarters in Bayaria, be-, tween the Lech and the Iller, where they were soon after joined by the artillery which had come round by Verona and the Tyrol (1).

Oct °o

This secession of the Russian force was not produced merely by between the jealousy of the Austrians, or irritation at the ill success of the calducts of Allied arms in Switzerland. It had its origin also in motives of state policy, and as such was rapidly communicated from the field-marshal's headquarters to the Cabinet of St.-Petersburg. The alliance between Russia and Austria, even if it had not been dissolved by the mutual exasperation of their generals, must have speedily yielded to the inherent jealousy of two monarchies, equal in power and discordant in interest. The war was undertaken for objects which, at that time at least, appeared to be foreign to the immediate interests of Russia; the danger to the balance of power by the preponderance of France seemed to be removed by the conquest of Italy, and any further successes of Austria, it was said, were only likely to weaken a power too far removed to be of any serious detriment to its influence, in order to enrich one much nearer, and from whom serious resistance to its ambition might be expected. The efforts for the preceding campaign, moreover, had been extremely costly, and in a great degree, notwithstanding the English subsidies, had exhausted the Imperial treasury. In these circumstances, the exasperation of the generals speedily led to a rupture between the cabinets, and the Russian troops took no further share in the prosecution of the war (2).

Positions Left to its own resources, however, the Austrian cabinet was far from being discouraged. The Archduke Charles had collected eighty trians when so abandon- thousand men between Offenburg and Feldkirch; but great as this force was, it hardly appeared adequate, after the departure of the Russians, to a renewal of active operations in the Alps, and therefore he kept his troops on the defensive. Massena, on his side in Switzerland, was too much exhausted by his preceding exertions to make any offensive movement. On the other hand, Lecourbe, whose forces on the Lower Rhine had been raised by the efforts of the Directory to twenty thousand men, passed that river in three columns, at Worms, Oppenheim, and Mayence, and moved forward against Prince Schwartzenberg, who commanded the advanced guard of the right wing of the Austrians, which occupied the line of the Bergstrass from Frankfort to Darmstadt. As the French forces were greatly superior, the Austrian general was compelled to retire, and after on the Louer Rhine. evacuating Heidelberg and Manheim, to concentrate his troops to cover Philipsburg, which, however, he was soon obliged to abandon to its own resources. The Archduke, though grievously embarrassed at the moment by the rupture with the Russians, turned his eyes to the menaced point, and, by rapidly causing reinforcements to defile in that direction, soon acquired a superiority over his assailant. The Republican advanced-guard was attacked and worsted at Erligheim; in consequence of which the blockade of Philipsburg was raised; but the French having again been reinforced, well as you; commander, as well as you, of an Imperial army; old, while you are young; it is for you to come and seek me?" He was so profoundly mortified with the defeat of the Russians at Zurich, that, when he reached his winter quarters, he took to bed, and became seriously ill; while the Emperor Paul gave vent to his indignation against the Austrians in an angry article published in the Gazette of St. Petersburg.—Hard, vii 297, 298.

(1) Arch. Ch. ii. 272, 274, 284, 285. Jom. xii. 367, 379.

⁽²⁾ Jom. xii. 370, 371. Arch. Ch. ii. 272, 274. Dum. ii. 317,

88

it was again invested. The Archduke, however, having at length terminated his correspondence with Suwarrow, turned his undivided attention to the menaced quarter, and directed a large part of the Imperial army to reinforce his right These columns soon overthrew the Republicans, and I ecourbe was placed in a situation of such danger, that he had no means of extricating himself from it but by proposing an armistice to Starray, who commanded the Imperialists, on the ground of negotiations being on foot between the two powers for peace Starray accepted it, under a reservation of the approbation of the Archduke, but his refusal to ratify it was of no avail; in the interval the stratagem had succeeded; three days had been guned, during which the Republicans had leisure to defile without molestation over the Rhine (1).

Thus closed the campaign of 1799, one of the most memorable of the whole revolutionary war. Notwithstanding the disasters by ite tiles which its latter part had been chequered, it was evident that the in the cam Allies had gained immensely by the results of their operations, Italy had been regained as rapidly as it had been won, Germany, freed from the Republican forces, had rolled back to the Rhine the tide of foreign invasion, and the blood of two hundred thousand French soldiers had expiated the ambition and weakness of the Republican government. Not even in the glorious efforts of 1796, had the French achieved successes so important, or chained victory to their standards in such an unbroken succession of combats. The conquest of all Lombardy and Piedmont, the reduction of the great fortresses which it contained, the liberation of Naples, Rome, and Tuscany, were the fruits of a single campaign Instead of a cautious offensive on the Adige, the Imperialists now assumed a menacing offensive on the Maritime Alps, instead of trembling for the Tyrol and the Hereditary States, they threatened Switzerland and Alsace The Republicans, weakened and disheartened, were every where thrown back upon their own frontiers, the oppressive system of making war maintain war could no longer be carried on, and a revolutionary state, exhausted by the sacrifices of nine years, was about to feel in its own

Deplorable The internal situation of France was even more discouraging than situation of might have been inferred from the external aspect of its affairs. In truth, it was there that the true secret of their reverses was to be found; the bravery and skill of the armies on the frontier had long concealed, but could no longer singly sustain, the internal weakness of the state. The territory a portion of the evils which it had so long inflicted upon others prostration of strength which invariably succeeds the first burst of revolutionary convulsions, had now fallen upon France, and if an extraordinary combination of circumstances had not intervened to extricate her from the abyss, there can be no doubt she would have sunk for ever The ardour of ' ney had succeeded of generous, had ys General Mathieu arent; the courage and talents of the generals, the valour and intelligence of the soldiers, who, during this dreadful campaign, had sustained this monstrous species of authority, sapped by every species of abuse and the exhaustion arising from the excess of every passion, could no longer repair or conceal the faults of those at the head of affairs Public spirit was extinguished; the resources of the interior exhausted, the forced requisitions could no longer furnish supplies to assuage the misery of the soldiers; the veteran ranks had long since perished, and the young conscripts, destined to supply their place, deserted their standards in crowds, or concealed themselves to avoid being drawn; more than half the cavalry was dismounted; the state in greater danger than it had ever been since the commencement of the war (1)." The losses sustained by the French during the campaign had been prodigious; they amounted to above a hundred and seventy thousand men, exclusive of those who had been cut off by sickness and fatigue (2). In these circumstances, nothing was wanting to have enabled the coalition to triumpli over the exhausted and discordant population of France, but union, decision, and a leader of paramount authority; nothing could have saved the Republicans from their grasp but their own divisions. These were not slow, however, in breaking out; and, amidst the ruinous jealousies of the Allies, that mighty conqueror arose, who was destined to stifle the democracy and tame the passions of ... France, and bring upon her guilty people a weight of moral retribution, which could never have been inflicted till the latent energies of Europe had been called forth by his ambition.

"The alliance between Austria and Russia," says the Archduke the rupture Charles, "blew up, like most coalitions formed between powers of equal pretensions. The idea of a common interest, the illusion of confidence based on the same general views, prepares the first advances; difference of opinion as to the means of attaining the desired objects, soon sows the seeds of misunderstanding; and that envenomed feeling increases in proportion as the events of the war alter the views of the coalesced powers, derange their plans, and undeceive their hopes. It seldom fails to break out openly when the armies are destined to undertake any operation in concert. The natural desire to obtain the lead in command, as in glory, excites the rival passions both of chiefs and nations. Pride and jealousy, tenacity and presumption, spring from the conflict of opinion and ambition; continual contradictions daily inflame the mutual exasperation, and nothing but a fortunate accident can prevent such a coalition from being dissolved before one of the parties is inclined to turn his arms against the other. In all the . varieties of human events, there are but two in which the co-operation of such unwieldy and heterogeneous masses can produce great effects; the one is, when an imperious necessity, and an insupportable state of oppression, induces both sovereigns and their subjects to take up arms to emancipate themselves, and the struggle is not of sufficient duration to allow the ardour of their first enthusiasm to cool; the other, when a state, by an extraordinary increase of power, can arrogate to itself and sustain the right to rule the opinion of its allies, and make their jealousies bend to its determination. Experience has proved that these different kinds of coalitions produce different results: almost all oppressive conquerors have been overthrown by the first; the second has been the chief instrument in the enthraldom of nations (5)." In these profound remarks is to be found the secret both of the long disasters attending the coalition against France, of the steady rise and irresistible power of the alliance headed by Napoléon, and of his rapid and irretrievable overthrow. They should never be absent from the contemplation of the statesman in future times, either in estimating the probable result of coalitions of which his own country forms a part, or in calculating on the chances of its resisting those which may be formed for its subjugation (4).

⁽³⁾ Arch. Ch ii. 273. (4) With regret, the am to the Memoirs of the

HISTORY OF EUROPE. | CHAP. XXIX.

Comparison
The passage of the St.-Berpard by Napolčon, has been the subject of unineasured culogram by almost all the French Instorans; but a content of the content of the state of the subject of the s force his way, sword in hand, through columns of the enemy, long trained to mountain warfare, intimately acquainted with the country, under a leader overthrowing every thing in his course, he found his progress slopped by a lake, without roads on its sides, or a bark on its bosom, and received the intelligence of the total defeat of the army with which he came to co-operate under the walls of Zurich. Obliged to defile by the rugged paths of the Stachenthal to the canton of Glaus, he found himself enveloped by the victorious columns of the enemy, and his front and rear assailed at the same time by superior forces, flushed by recent conquest. It was no ordinary resolution which in such circumstances could dislant to submit, and after fiercely turning on his pursuers, and routing their bravest troops, prepare to surmound the difficulties of a fredi mountain passage, and, annulet the horrors of the Alps of Glarus, hrave alike the storms of winter and the pursuit of the enemy. The bulk of men in all ages are governed by the event; and to such persons who know how to separate just combination from casual disaster, and can appreciate the heroism of valour when struggling with misfortune, will award a still higher place to the Russian hero, and follow the footsteps of Suwarrow over the snows of the St.—Gothard and the valley of Engi with more interest than either the eagles of Napolčon over the St.—Bernard, or the standards of Hamilbal from the shores of the Rhone to the banks of the Fo.

The expedition to Holland was ably conceived, and failed only from the inadequacy of the force employed, and the inherent weakness incident to

Deplorable an enterprise conducted by allied forces. It was the greatest ar-insignificance of the mament which had been sent from Great Britain during the war, but yet obviously inadequate, both to the magnitude of the entertook in the continental prise and the resources of the state mainly interested in its success. In truth, the annals of the earlier years of the war incessantly suggest regret at the parsimonious expenditure of British force, and the great results which, to all appearance, would have attended a more vigorous effort, at the decisive moment. "Any person," says Mr. Burke, "who was of age to take a part in public affairs forty years ago, if the intermediate space were expunged from his memory, would hardly credit his senses when he should hear, from the highest authority, that an army of two hundred thousand men was kept up in this island, and that in Ireland there were at least eighty thousand more. But how much greater would be his surprise, if he were told again that this mighty force was kept up for the mere purpose of an inert and passive defence, and that, by its very constitution, the greater part was disabled from defending us against the enemy by one preventive stroke or one operation of active hostility! What must his reflections be on learning further, that a fleet of five hundred men-of-war, the best appointed that this country ever had upon the sea, was for the greater part employed in the same system. of unenterprising defence? What must be the feelings of any one who remembers the former energy of England, when he is given to understand that these two islands, with their extensive sea-coast, should be considered as a garrisoned sea-town; that its garrison was so feebly commanded as never to make a sally; and that, contrary to all that has been hitherto seen in war, an inferior army, with the shattered relics of an almost annihilated navy, may with safety besiege this superior garrison, and, without hazarding the life of a man, ruin the place merely by the menaces and false appearances of an attack (1)?"

If this was true in 1797, when the indignant statesman wrote these cutting remarks, how much more was it applicable in 1799, when France was reduced to extremities by the forces of Austria and Russia, and the extraordinary energy of the Revolution had exhausted itself? The Archduke Charles, indeed, has justly observed, that modern history presents few examples of great military operations executed in pursuance of a descent on the sea-coast; and that the difficulties of the passage and the uncertainty of the elements, present the most formidable obtacles in the way of the employment of considerable forces in such an enterprise (2); but experience in all ages has demonstrated that they are not insurmountable, and that from a military force, thus supported, the greatest results may reasonably be expected, if sufficient energy is infused into the undertaking. The examples of the overthrow of Hannibal at Zama, of the English at Hastings, of the French at Cressy and Azincourt, and of Napoléon in Spain and at Waterloo, prove what can be effected, even by a maritime expedition, if followed up with the requisite vigour. And, unquestionably, there never was an occasion when greater results might have been anticipated from such an exertion than in this campaign. Had sixty thousand native English, constantly fed by fresh supplies from the parent state, been sent to Holland, they would have borne down all opposition, hoisted the Orange flag on all the fortresses of the United Provinces, liberated Flanders, prevented the accumulation of force which enabled Masséna to strike his redoubled blows at Zurich, hindered the formation of the army of reserve, and intercepted the thunder of Marengo and Hohenlingen.

[CHAP XXIX Cause of the The rapid fall of the French military power in 1799, was the nabeyond its strength, and affords another example of the truth of the maxim, that the more the ambition of a nation in a state of fermentation leads to its extension, the more does it become difficult for it to preserve its conquests (1) Such a state as I rance then was, with a military power extending from the mouth of the Ems to the shores of Calabria, and no solid found ition for government but the gratification of ambition, has no chance of safety but in constantly advancing to fresh conquests. The least reverse, by destroying the charm of its invincibility, and compelling the separation of its armies to garrison its numerous fortresses, leaves it weak and powerless in the field, and speedily dissolves the splendid fabric. This truth was experienced by the Directory in 1799, it was exinced on a still greater scale, and after still more splended triumplis, by Aapoleon in 1815. It is power slowly acquired and wisely consolidated, authority which brings the blessings of civilisation and protection with its growth, victories which array the forces of the vanquished states in willing and organized multitudes under the standards of the victor, which alone are durable Such were the conquests of Rome in the ancient world, such are the conquests of Russia in Europe, and England in India, in modern times The whirlwinds of an Alexander, a Timour, or a Napoléon, are in general as short-lived as the genius which creates them The triumphs flowing from the transient ebullition of popular enthusiasm,

(1) Jon 21 386

92

CHAPTER XXX.

FROM THE ACCESSION OF NAPOLÉON TO THE OPENING OF THE CAMPAIGN OF MARENGO.

NOVEMBER, 1799-MAY, 1800.

ARGUMENT.

Napoléon's Letter, proposing Peace to the British Government-Lord Grenville's Answer-M. Talleyrand's Reply-Debates on this Proposal in Parliament-Arguments of the Opposition for an immediate Peace-And of Mr. Pitt and the Government for refusing to treat-Parliament resolve to continue the Contest-Reflections on this Decision of the Legislature 🕑 -Supplies voted by the British Parliament-Land and Sea forces employed-Mr. Dundas's India Budget—The Union with Ircland passes the Parliaments of Great Britain and Ircland— Its leading Provisions-Views of the Leaders on both sides of Parliament on this great Change-Great Prosperity of the British Empire at this period-Vast Change of Prices-Statistical Details-Bad Harvest of 1799, and consequent Scarcity in 1800-Great efforts of Government to relieve it, and noble patience of the people-Measures of England and Austria for the Prosecution of the War-Treaties entered into for that purpose with Austria and Bavaria—Military Preparations of the Imperialists—Discontented state of the French affiliated Republics—Measures of Napoleon to restore Public Credit in France—Pacification of la Vendée-Iniquitous Execution of Count Louis Frotte-Napoléon effects a Reconciliation with the Emperor Paul-His energetic Military Measures-Revival of the Military Spirit in France-His steps to suppress the Revolutionary Fervour of the People-He totally extinguishes the Liberty of the Press-And fixes his Residence at the Tuileries-Commencement of the Etiquette and Splendour of the Court there—Recall of many Exiles banished since the 18th Fructidor-Establishment of the Secret Police-Napoleon's hypocritical éloge on Washington-Comparison of his system of government with that established by Constantine in the Byzantine empire—Commencement of his great designs for Architectural Embellishment at Paris-Suppression of the fête on 21st January, and elevation of Tronchet-Correspondence between Napoléon and Louis XVIII-General improvement in the Prospects of France.

The first step of Napoléon, upon arriving at the consular throne, was to make proposals of peace to the British government. The debate on that subject in Parliament is the most important that occurred during the war, and forms the true introduction to the political history of Europe during the nineteenth century.

Dec 25. The letter of Napoléon to the King of England, couched in his usual characteristic language, was in these terms: "Called by the wishes of the French nation to occupy the first station in the Republic, I think it proper on entering into office to make a direct communication to your Majesty.

Napoléon's Letter proposing the globe, is it destined to be eternal? Are there no means of composing peace to the British government tions of Europe, powerful and strong beyond what their independence and safety requires, sacrifice to ideas of vain greatness the benefits of commerce, prosperity, and domestic happiness? How has it happened that they do not feel that peace is of the first necessity as well as the truest glory?

"These sentiments cannot be foreign to the heart of your Majesty, who reign over a free nation with the sole desire of rendering it happy. You will see in this overture only the effect of a sincere desire to contribute efficaciously, for the second time, to a general pacification, by a step speedy, implying confidence, and disengaged from those forms which, however neces-

94 . 54 HISTORY OF EUROPL [Chap XXX Surv to disguise the dependence of feeble states, prove only in those which ne strong the mutual desire of deceiving each other "Trance and England may, by the abuse of their strength still for a time.

ville, the English minister of foreign adairs - The hing las given frequent proofs of his sincere desire for the re establishment of secure and permanent tranquility in Europe He neither is, nor has been, engaged in any contest for a vain and false glory. He has had no other view than that of maintaining against all aggression the rights and happiness of his subjects. For these he has contended against an unprovoked attack, and for the same objects he is still obliged to contend. Nor can be hone that this necessity could be removed by entering at the present moment into a negotiation with those whom a fresh revolution has so recently placed in the exercise of power in France, since no real advantage can arise from such negotintion to the great and desirable object of a general peace, until it shall distinctly appear that those causes have ceased to operate which originally produced the war, and by which it has been since protracted, and in more than one instance renewed The same system, to the prevalence of which I rance justly ascribes all her present miseries, is that which has also involved the rest of Europe in a long and destructive warfare, of a nature long since unknown to the practice of civilized nations unknown to the practice of civilized nations

"For the extension of this system, and for the extermination of all esta blished governments, the resources of France have, from year to year, andin the midst of the most unparalleled distress, been lavished and exhausted.
To this indiscriminate spirit of destruction, the Netherlands, the United Provinces, the Swiss Cautons, his Majesty's ancent allies, have been successively sacrificed Germany has been ravaged, and Italy, though now rescued from its invaders, has been mide the scene of unbounded rapine and anarchy lifs Majesty himself has been compelled to maintain an ardious and burdensome contest for the independence and existence of his kinedoms

"While such a system continues to prevail, and while the blood and treasure of a numerous and powerful nation car be lavisled in its support, experience has shown that no defence but that of open and steady hostility cun be availing. The most solemn treaties have only prepared the way for fresh aggression, and it is to a determined resistance alone that is mow due whatever remains in Europe of security for property, personal liberty, social order, or religious freedom. For the security, therefore, of these essential objects, his Majesty cannot place his reliance on the mere renewal of general professions of pacific dispositions. Such dispositions have been repeatedly heles out by all those who have successively directed the resources of France to the destruction of Europe and whom the present rulers have declared to have been, from the beginning and uniformly, incapable of maintaining the reliasistance is at an end, that, after the experience of so many years of crimes and miseries, better principles have ultimately prevailed in France, and that all the grantic projects of ambition, and all the restless schemes of destruction which have endangered the very existence of civil society, have at length been finally relinquished. But the conviction of such a change, however agreeable to his Majesty's wishes, can result only from experience and the evidence of facts.

"The best and most natural pledge of its reality and permanence would be the restoration of that line of princes, which for so many centuries maintained the French nation in prosperity at home and consideration and respect abroad. Such an event would at once have removed, and will at any time remove, all obstacles in the way of negotiation or peace. It would confirm to France the unmolested enjoyment of its ancient territory; and it would give to all the other nations in Europe, in tranquillity and peace, that security which they are now compelled to seek by other means. But desirable as such an event must be, both to France and the world, it is not to this mode exclusively that his Majesty limits the possibility of secure and solid pacification. His Majesty makes no claim to prescribe to France what shall be the form of her government, or in whose hands she shall vest the authority necessary for conducting the affairs of a great and powerful nation. He looks only to the security of his own dominions and those of his Allies, and to the general safety of Europe. Whenever he shall judge that such security can in any manner be attained, as resulting either from the internal situation of the country from whose internal situation the danger has arisen, or from such other circumstances, of whatever nature, as may produce the same end, his Majesty will eagerly embrace the opportunity to concert with his Allies the means of a general pacification (1). Unhappily no such security hitherto exists; no sufficient evidence of the principles by which the new government will be directed; no reasonable ground by which to judge of its stability (2)."

These able state papers are not only valuable as exhibiting the arguments

 Parl. Hist. axxiv. 1799.
 To this it was replied by M. Talleyrand, the French minister for foreign affairs:—"Very far from France having proyoked the war, she had, it must be recollected, from the very commencement of the Revolution, solemnly proclaimed her love of peace, her disinclination for conquests, her respect for the independence of all governments; and it is not to be doubted that, occupied at that time entirely with her own internal affairs, she would have avoided taking any part in those of Europe, and would have remained faithful to her declarations.

"But from an opposite disposition, as soon as the French Revolution had broken out, almost all Europe entered into a league for its destruction. The aggression was real, long before it was public; internal resistance was excited, its opponents were favourably received, their extravagant declamations were supported, the French nation was insulted in the person of its agents, and England set, particularly, this example, by the dismissal of the particularly, this example, by the dismissal of the minister accredited by her; finally, France, was, in fact, attacked in her independence, and her honour, and in her safety, long before war was declared. "Thus it is to the projects of dismemberment, subjection, and dissolution, which were prepared against her, and the execution of which was several times attempted and pursued, that France has a right to impute the evils which she has suffered, and those which have afflicted Europe. Such projects for a long time, without example with respect to so powerful a nation, could not fail to bring on the most fatal consequences. Assailed on all sides, the Republic could not but extend universally the efforts of her defence, and it is only for the main-tenance of her own independence that she has made use of those means which she possessed in her own strength and the courage of her citizens. As long as she saw that her enemies obstinately refused to recognise her rights, she counted only upon the energy of her resistance, but as soon as they were obliged to abandon the hope of invasion, she sought for means of conciliation, and manifested pacific intentions; and if these have not always been efficacious; if, in the midst of the critical circumstances of her internal situation, which the Revolution and the war have successively brought on, the former depositaries of the executive power in France have not always shown as much moderation as the nation itself has shown courage, it must, above all, be imputed to the fatal and persevering animosity with which the resources of England have been lavished to accomplish the ruin of France.

." But if the wishes of his Britannic Majesty, in conformity with his assurances, are in unison with those of the French Republic for the re-establishment of peace, why, instead of attempting the apology of the war, should not attention be paid to the means of terminating it? The First Consul of the French Republic cannot doubt that his Britannic Majesty must recognise the right of nations to choose the form of their government, since it is from the exercise of this right that he holds his crown; but he cannot comprehend how, after admitting this fundamental principle, upon which rests the existence of political societies, he could annex insinuations which tend to an interference in the internal affairs of the Republic, and which are not less injurious to the French nation and its government, than it would be to England and his Majesty, if a sort of invitation were held out in favour of that Republican form of government, of which England adopted the forms about the middle of the last century, or an exhortation to recall to the throne that family whom their birth had placed there, and whom a Revolution had compelled to descend from it. [Parl. Hist. xxxiv. 1199, 1202.]

[CHAP XXX, HISTORY OF EUROPE. • 96 advanced by the opposite parties in this memorable contest, but as containing an explicit and important declaration of the object

rade roll uniformly pursued by Great Britain throughout its continuance The English ministry never claimed a right to interfere in the internal affairs of I'rance, or dictate to her inhabitants the form of government or race of sovereigns they were to choose; the object of the war is there expressly declared to have been, what

, to impose a government other nations, not to par barrier to the inundation of infidel and democratical principles, by mine

the Republic first shook the opinions of the multitude in all the adjoining states, and then shaving divided their inhabitants; overthrew their ındependence most likely to preliminary in any other the Bataviar republics; n peace; afforded ample evidence, and it was one smeath to flacilities because it was then that the point of · propagandists into dur the an 1

The debates, however, within 1000 ca . Lo h Houses of Parliament on this momentous subject, were still more important, as · On the part of the Opposition, it

" that now was the first tune when of the war, that, without annexing any spitnes to it, of accessing paralleled calamities, it could not be tiented that a new eta in any possible

mons tàfte

ken, pronounce that the a vindication of the war, an answer to a specific est interests of mankind. in all fact to war,

Revolution was only to be dicticu by the external war, unless it became impossible, from actual and not speculative of the Oppo sation for an great and un au aggression, to maintain the relations of peace. The question was not, whether the tendency of the Revolution was beneficial or injurious, but what was our own policy and duty as connected with its existence? In Mr. Burke's words, applied to the American Revolution, the question is not, whether this condition of human affairs deserves praise or blame, but what, in God's name, are you to do with it?

"When war was first proclaimed by this country, after the death of Louis, it was rested on 'the late atrocious act perpetrated at Paris.' Then, as now, it was provoked, and peace rejected upon general and unjustifiable objections—speculative dangers to religion and government, which, supposing them to have existed, with all their possible consequences, were more likely to be increased than diminished by the bitterness of war. At that time, ministers were implored not to invite war upon principles which made peace dependent upon systems and forms of government, instead of the conduct of nations: upon theories which could not be changed, instead of aggressions which might be adjusted. France had then, and for a long time after, a strong interest in peace; she had not then extended her conquests; but Europe combined to extinguish France, and place her without the pale of the social community; and France, in her turn, acted towards Europe on the same principles. She desolated and ravaged whatever countries she occupied, and spread her conquests with unexampled rapidity. Could it be expected that so powerful a nation, so assailed, should act merely on the defensive, or that, in the midst of a revolution which the confederacy of surrounding nations had rendered terrible, the rights of nations would be respected? Ambitious projects, not perhaps originally contemplated, followed their steps; and the world was changed with portentous violence, because the government of Great Britain had resolved, that, if changed at all, it should revert to establishments which had reached their period and expired.

"In 1795, without any pacific proposition from France, when the government of France was not a month old, at a time when the alarm was at its height in England, and the probable contagion of French principles, by the intercourse of peace, was not only the favourite theme of ministers, but made the foundation of a system by which some of our most essential liberties were abridged-even these ministers invited the infant, democratic, Jacobin, regicide republic of France to propose a peace. On what principle, then, could peace now be refused when the danger was so much diminished, because the resistless fury of that popular spirit which had been the uniform topic of declamation had not only subsided, from time and expansion, but was curbed. or rather extinguished, by the forms of the new government which invited us to peace? If Bonaparte found that his interests were served by an arrangement with England, the same interests would lead him to continue it. Surrounded with perils, at the head of an untried government, menaced by a great confederacy, of which England was the head, compelled to press heavily upon the resources of an exhausted people, it was not less his interest to propose than it was ours to accept peace.

"It is impossible to look without the most bitter regret on the enormities which France has committed. In some of the worst of them, however, the Allies have joined her. Did not Austria receive Venice from Bonaparte? and is not the receiver as bad as the thief? Has not Russia attacked France? Did not the Emperor and the King of Prussia subscribe a declaration at Pilnitz which amounted to a hostile aggression? Did they not make a public declaration, that they were to employ their forces, in conjunction with the other kings of Europe, 'to put the King of France in a situation to entablish, in perfect liberty, the foundations of a monarchical government equally agreed to the rights of sovereigns and the welfare of the French?' all the whenever the other princes should co-operate with them, did they not interprince and in the context of the princes should co-operate with them, did they not interpret them.

case, declare their determination to act promptly, and by mutual consent to obtain the end proposed by all of them? Can gentlemen lay their hands on their hearts, and not admit that the fair construction of this is, that whenever the other powers should concur, they would attack France, then at peace plained by M Chauvelin, when he declared that it never was meant to proclaim fied with this explanation; and where will be the end of wars, if idle and intemperate expressions are to be made the groundwork of bitter and neverending hostilities?

"Where is the war, pregnant with so many horrors, next to be carried? Where is it to stop? Not till you establish the House of Bourbonl—and this you cherish the hope of doing, because you have had a successful campaign. But is the situation of the Allies, with all they have gained, to be compared with what it was after Valenciennes was taken? One campaign is successful to you; another may be so to them, and in this way, animated by the vindictive passions of revenge, latted, rancour, which are infinitely more flagitious than those of ambition and the thirst of power, you may go on for ver, as, with such black incentives, no end can be foreseen to human misery. And all this without an intelligible motive, merely that you may gain a better peace a year or two hence. Is then peace so dangerous a state, war so crivable, that the latter is to be chosen as a state of probation, the former shunned as a positive evil (1)?"

On the other hand, it was contended by Lord Grenville and Mr. government Pitt, "that the same necessity which originally existed for the for relaxing commencement and prosecution, still called for perseverance in the war. The same proneness to aggression, the same disregard to justice, still actuated the conduct of the men who rule in France Peace with a nation by whom war was made against all order, religion, and morality, would rather be a cessation of resistance to wrong than a suspension of arms in the nature of an ordinary warfare. To negotiate with established governments was formerly not merely easy, but in most circumstances safe; but to negotiate with the government of France now would be to incur all the risks of an uncertain truce, without attaining the benefits even of a temporary peace. France still retains the sentiments, and is constant to the views which characterised the dawn of her Revolution. She was innovating, she is so still; she was Jacobin, she is so still; she declared war against all kings, and she continues to this hour to seek their destruction. Even the distant republic of America could not escape that ravaging power, and next to a state of active and inveterate war were the relations of those two commonwealths for a long time. The Republic, indeed, has frequently published her - - oct but has el a fallan al up that declaration by any tot seen her armies march to iem to her dominions? Have t the wrongs of Switzerland recent and markeu? Lively luly Asia one has carried her lust for dominion, severed from the Porte, during a period of profound peace, a vast portion of its empire, and stimulated 'Citizen Tippoo' to engage in that contest which ultimately proved his ruin?

"The Republic has proclaimed her respect for the independence of all governments. How have her actions corresponded with this profession? Did not Jacobin France attempt the overthrow of every government? Did she not, whenever it suited her purpose, arm the governors against the governed, or the governed against the governors?' How completely has she succeeded, during a period of profound peace which had been unbroken for centuries, in convulsing the population, and so subduing the independence of Switzerland? In Italy, the whole fabric of civil society has been changed, and the independence of every government violated. The Netherlands, too, exhibit to mankind monuments of the awful veneration with which the Republic has regarded the independence of other states. The memorable decree of November 4792, has not slept a dead letter in their statute-book. No, it has ever since been the active energetic principle of their whole conduct, and every nation is interested in the extinction of that principle for ever.

"Every power with whom the Republic has treated, whether for the purpose of armistice or peace, could furnish melancholy instances of the perfidy of France, and of the ambition, injustice, and cruelty of her rulers. Switzerland concluded a truce with the Republic; her rulers immediately excited insurrections among her cantons, overthrew her institutions, seized her fortresses, robbed her treasures, the accumulation of ages, and, to give permanence to her usurpations, imposed on her a government new alike in form and substance. The Grand Duke of Tuscany was among the earliest sufferers by a treaty of peace with the Republic. In every thing he strove to conform to the views of France; her rulers repeated to him her assurances of attachment and disinclination to conquest; but at the very time that the honour of the Republic was pledged for the security of his states, he saw the troops of his ally enter his capital, and he himself was deposed and a democracy given to the Florentines. The King of Sardinia opened the gates of his capital to the Republican arms, and, confiding in the integrity of the French government, expected to be secured in his dominions by the treaty which guaranteed his title and his rights, and communicated to France equal advantages. was, however, in a state of peace, invaded in his dominions, forced to fly to his insular possessions, and Turin treacherously taken possession of by the Republican troops. The change in the Papal government was another part of the same system. It was planned by Joseph Bonaparte in his palace. He excited the populace to an insurrection; and effected the revolution in the capital at the head of the Roman mob. To Venice their conduct was still more atrocious. After concluding an armistice with the Archduke Charles, Bonaparte declared that he took the Venetians under his protection, and overturned the old government by the movements excited among the people; but no sooner was the national independence in this way destroyed, than he sold them to the very Imperial government against whose alleged oppression he had prompted them to take up arms. Genoa received the French as friends; and the debt of gratitude was repaid by the government being revolutionized, and, under the authority of a mock constitution, the people plundered, and the public independence subverted.

"It is in vain to allege that these atrocities are the work of former governments, and that Bonaparte had no hand in them. The worst of acts perfidy have been perpetrated by himself. If a treaty was broken with Sardinia, it was concluded and broken by Bo

100 was entered into and violated with Tuscany, it was entered into and violated by Bonaparte. If Venice was first seduced into revolutionary revolt, and then betrayed and sold to Austria, it was by Bonaparte that the treachery was consummated. If the Papal government was first terrified into submission, and then overturned by rebellion, it was Bonaparte who accomplished the work. If Genor was convulsed in a state of profound peace, and then sacrifieed, it was by Bonaparte that the perfidious invasion was committed If Switzerland was first seduced into revolution, and then invaded and plundered, it was by the decentful promises and arts of Bonaparte that the train was luid. Even the affiliated republics and his own country have not escaped the same perfidious ability The constitution which he forced on his countrymen, at the cannon's mouth, on the 15th Vendemiaire, he delivered up to the bayonets of Augereau on the 18th Fructidor, and overturned with his grenadiers on the 18th Brumaire. The constitution of the Cisalpine republic, which he himself had established, was overthrown by his hentenant Berthier He gained possession of Malta by deceitful promises, and immediately handed it over to the Republic. He declared to the Porte that he had no intention to take possession of Egypt, and yet he avowed to his army that he conquered it for France, and instantly roused the Copts into rebellion against the Mamelukes. He declared to the Mussulmans that he was a believer in Mahomet (1), thus demonstrating that, even on the most sacred subjects, truth was set at mought when any object was to be gained by its violation. 'Nay, he has, in his official instructions, openly avowed this system, for, in his instructions to kicher, he declares, ' You may sign a treaty to evacuate Egypt, but do not execute the articles, and you may find a plausible excuse for the delay in the observation, that they must be sent home to be submitted to the Directory, What rehance can be placed on a power which thus uniformly makes peace or truce a stepping-stone to farther aggressions, and systematically uses perfidy as an allowable weapon for circumventing its enemics? And what is especially worthy of observation, this system is not that of any one man, it has been the principle of all the statesmen, without exception, who have governed France during the Revolution; a clear proof that it from what they are, could afford no sort of security against its continuance "France would now derive great advantages from a general peace. Her commerce would revise, her seamen be renewed, her sailors acquire experience, and the power which hitherto has been so victorious at land, would speedily become formidable on another element. What benefit could it bring to Great Britain? Are our 1 arises from the force of the circumstances in which they are placed, and the ruinous ascendance of irreligious principles in the people, and that the intentions of the present ruler of the country, even if they were widely different our dockyards empty? Hav

able preponderance on the world rapidly passing into the hands of our merchants? Bonaparte would acquire immense popularity by being the means of bringing about an accommodation with this country, if we wish to establish his power, and permanently enlist the energy of the Revolution under the banners of a military chieftain, we have only to fall into the snare which he has so artfully prepared. In turbulent republics, it has ever been an axiom to maintain in-

by proposing to transfer into new hands, on the delusive notion of equality, and in breach of every principle of justice, the whole property of the country, the practical application of this principle was to devote the whole of that property to indiscriminate plunder, and make it the foundation of a revolutionary system of finance, productive in proportion to the misery and desolation which it created It has been accompanied by an unwearied spirit of proselytism, diffusing itself over all the nations of the earth; a spirit which can apply itself to all circumstances and all situations, hold out a promise of redress equally to all nations; which enables the teachers of I'rench liberty to recommend themselves to those who live under the feudal code of the German empire, the various states of Italy, the old republicans of Holland, the new republicans of America, the protestants of Switzerland, the Catholics of Ireland, the Mussulmans of Turkey, and the Hindoos of India; the natives of England, enjoying the perfection of practical freedom, and the Copts of Egypt, groaning under the last severity of Asiatic bondage The last and distinguishing feature is a perfidy which nothing can bind; which no ties of treaty, no sense of the principles generally received among nations, no obligation, human or divine, can restrain Thus qualified, thus armed for destruction, the genius of the French Revolution marched forth the terror and dismay of the world Every nation has in its turn been the witness, many have been the victims, of its principles, and it is left now for us to decide whether we will compromise with such a danger, while we have yet resources to supply the sinews of war, while the heart and spirit of the country is yet unbroken, and while we have the means of calling forth and supporting a powerful co-operation in Europe Cur igitur pacem nolo-quia infida est, mna periculosa, quia esse non potest(1)?" Feb 3 1800 The House, upon a division, supported the measures of Administration by a majority of two hundred and sixty-five to sixty-four. In judging of this decision of the British government, which formed the true commencement of the second period of the war, that in Parl ament which it was waged with Napoléon, it is of importance to recollect the circumstances in which he was placed, and the nature of the government which he had assumed France had not ceased to be revolutionary, but its energies were now, under a skilful and enterprising chief, turned to military objects He was still, however, borne forward upon the movement, and the moment he attempted to stop, he would have been crushed by its wheels. " rst Consul. " The French governemblance to those which surround restrain many different classes of malecontents within its bosom, it stands in need of action, of éclat, and, by consequence, of war, to maintain an imposing attitude against so many enemies."_" Your government," replied Thibeaudeau, " has no resemblance to one newly established. It assumed the toga virilis at Marengo; and, sus-. F 12 - - Il one of inhabitante ils f thead on 1 d

⁽¹⁾ Parl Hist axxiv 1206 1319
It is compossible on this abstract, to give any idea of the sylendid and luminous specches made on this memorable occasion in the British Parliament. They are reported at large in Hansard, and throw to light on the motives and objects of the war than any other documents in existence or it will nerish."-" And to obtain such a result, you see no other method than war?"-" None other, citizen (1)."-" His fixed opinion from the commencement," says Bourrienne, "was, that if stationary he would fall; that he was sustained only by continually advancing, and that it was not sufficient to advance, but he must advance rapidly and irresistibly."-" My power," saidhe, "depends on my glory, and my glory on the victories which I gain. My power would instantly fall, if it were not constantly based on fresh glory and victories. Conquest made me what I am : conquest alone can maintain me in it. A government newly established has need to dazzle and astonish; when its éclat ceases, it perishes. It is in vain to expect repose from a man who is the concentration of movement (2)."

Such were Napoleon's views; and that they were perfectly just, with reference to his own situation, is evident from the consideration that a revolutionary power, whether in civil or military affairs, has never yet maintained its ascendency in any other way. But these being his principles, and the independence of England forming the great stumbling-block in his way, it is evident that no permanent peace with him was practicable; that every accommodation could have been only a truce; and that it never would be proposed, unless in circumstances when it was for his interest to gain a short breathing-time for fresh projects of ambition (5). The event completely proved the justice of these views, and forms the best commentary on the prophetic wisdom of Mr. Pitt. Every successive peace on the continent only paved the way for fresh aggressions; and at length he was precipitated upon the snows of Russia, by the same invincible necessity of dazzling his subjects by the lustre of additional victories which was felt in the commencement of his career. "His power, without and within," says Marshal St.-Cyr, "was founded solely on the celat of his victories. By intrusting himself without reserve to fortune, he imposed upon himself the necessity of following it to the utmost verge whither it would lead him. Unheard-of success had attended enterprises, the temerity of which was continually increasing; but thence arose a necessity to keep for ever awake the terror and admiration of Europe, by new enterprises and more dazzling triumphs. The more colossal his power became, the more immeasurable his projects required to be, in order that their unexpected success should keep up the same stupor in the minds of the vulgar. Admiration, enthusiasm, ambition, the emotions on which his dominion was founded, are not durable in their nature; they must be incessantly fed with fresh stimulants; and, to effect that, extraordinary efforts are requisite. These principles were well known to Napoléon; and thence it is that he so often did evil, albeit knowing better than any one that it was evil, overruled by a superior power, from which he felt it was impossible to escape. The rapid movement which he imprinted on the affairs of Europe was of a kind which could not be arrested; a single retrograde step, a policy which indicated a stationary condition, would have been the signal of his fall. Far, therefore, from making it subject of reproach to Napoléon, that he conceived an enterprise so gigantic as the Russian expedition, he is

⁽¹⁾ Thibaudeau, Consulat, 393.
(2) Bour. iii. 214.
(3) This accordingly was openly avowed by Napoléon himself. "England," said he in January 1800, "must be overturned. As long as my voice has 1800, "must be overturned. As long as my voice has any influence, it will never enjoy any respite, Yesl yes! war to the death with England for ever—ay, till its destruction." [D'Abr. ii. 179, 130.] lie admits, in his own Memoirs, that when he made these proposals to Mr. Pitt, he had no serious intention of completing pages. "I had then" said he tion of concluding peace. "I had then," said he,

[&]quot; need of war : a treaty of peace which would have derogated from that of Campo Formio and annulled the creations of Italy, would have withered every imagination. Mr. Pitt's answer accordingly was impatiently expected. When it arrived, it filled me with a secret satisfaction. His answer could not have been more favourable. From that moment I foresaw that, with such impassioned antagonists, I would have no difficulty in reaching the highest destinies.'
-Nar. in Montu. i. 33, 34.

ruther to be putied for being placed in a situation where he was overruled by necessity, and this furnishes the true answer to those who would ascribe to chance, the rigour of the elements, or an excess of temerity, what was in truth but the mentable consequence of the false position in which for fifteen years France had been placed (4). It is this law of the moral world which rendered durable peace with that country, when headed by a revolutionary power, impossible, and which was ultimately destined to inflict an awful retribution on its guilt land its ambitton.

Experience, therefore, has now proved that Mr. Put's view of the character of the revolutionary war was well founded, and that the seizure of the consular throne by Napoléon, only gave a new and more dangerous direction to that restless and insatiable spirit which had arisen from the convilsions which the Revolution had produced. Justice requires that it should be declared, that, in espousing the cause of the enemy on this occasion, and unformly well at my the cause of the problem part. In the content to Propose the Propose of the Propose o n lish writer in expressing this opinion, because the ablest of the liberal party in France themselves admit that their partisans in this country fell into this enormous error "Nothing," says Madame de Stael, " was more contrary to Bonaparte's nature, or his interest, than to have made peace in 1800 He could only live in agitation, and if any thing could plead his apology with those who reflect on the influence of external circumstances on the human mind, it is, that he could only breathe freely in a volcanic atmosphere It was absolutely necessary for him to present, every three months, a new object of ambition to the French, in order to supply, by the grandeur and variety of external events, the vacuum occasioned by the removal of all objects of domestic interest. At that epoch, unhappily for the spirit of freedom in England, the English Opposition, with Mr Fox at their head, took an entirely false view of Napolcon, and thence it was that that party, previously so estimable, lost its ascendant in the nation. It was already too much to have defended France under the Reign of Terror, but it was, if possible, a still greater fault to have considered Bonaparte as identified with the principles of freedom, when in truth he was their deadliest enemy (2) "-"The eloquent declarations of Mr Fox," says General Mathieu Dumas, "cannot invalidate the facts brought forward by Mr Pitt and Lord Grenville as to the origin of the war The Girondists alone were the cause of its commencement The names of those impostors who, to overturn the monarchical throne of France, prevailed on the king to declare that fatal war, should be consigned to an execrable celebrity, they alone brought down on Europe and their country a deluge of calamities (5) "

The Dis. War being thus resolved on, the most rigorous measures were most in the most by Parliament and the executive, to meet the dangers with which it might be attended Parliament voted the sum of L 500,000 to the crown, for the purpose of immediately aiding Austria in the armaments which she had in contemplation, and Mr Pitt stated that a loan of L 9,500,000 to the Emperor would be advanced (4) The budget brought forward by the chancellor of the exchequer exhibited a most flattering picture of the public credit, and proved that, notwithstanding the immense expenditure of the eight preceding campaigns, the national resources were still unimpaired (1). The extraordinary fact which he mentioned, that, in the eighth year of the war, a loan of eighteen millions and a half had been obtained at the rate of four and three-fourths per cent, proved the enduring credit of the government and the almost boundless extent of the wealth of England; but both that great financier and the British public, misled by the fallacious brilliancy of present appearances, over-looked the grievous burden which the contraction of debt in the three per cents, in other words, the imposition of a burden of L.100 for every L.60 advanced, was ultimately to produce upon the national resources.

⁽¹⁾ St. Cyr II t M l 4 3 4 (2) B ad de Stall Roy Franc 11 268 210 (4) Parl

⁽³⁾ Dam ir 308 312 (4) Parl list axair 1439,

The land forces of Great Britain in this year amounted to 168,000 men, exclusive of 80,000 militia; and for the service of the fleet, 120,000 seamen and marines were voted. The ships in commission were no less than 510, including 124 of the line. From a table laid before Parliament in this year, it appeared that the whole troops, exclusive of militia, which had been raised for the service of the state during the eight years from 1792 to 1800, had been only 208,000; a force not greater than might have been easily levied in a single year, out of a population then amounting to nearly sixteen millions, in the three kingdoms; and which, if ably conducted and thrown into the scale, when nearly balanced, between France and Austria, would unquestionably have terminated the war at the latest in two campaigns (2).

(t) T	lic	Bud	lgct	stood	t	1115	:
---	---	-----	-----	-----	------	-------	---	------	---

Land and Malt Tax, 1.,2,750,00 Lottery, 200,00 Buties on Exports and Imports, 1,250,00 Income Tax, 5,300,00 Surplus of Consolidated Tund, 5,512,00 Loan by Exchequer Bills, 3,000,00 Lent by Brak without interest, 3,000,00 Loan for Great Britain, 18,500,00	67		I	icre	ript	1	II a	94	c n:	1 3	fca:	15.
Lattery 200,000 Duties on Exports and Imports 1,250,00 Income Tax 5,300,00 Surplus of Consolidated Fund 5,512,00 Loan by Exchequer Bills 3,000,00 Leat by Brok without interest 3,000,00 Lean for Great Britain 18,500,00 Expenditure 1,300,00 Lange	Land and Malt Tax				٠.			٠.													1.2.750.000
Buties on Experts and Imports 1,230,000	Latterr																				200.000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Duties on Exports and Imports.		·		·	Ċ	·		·	·		:		Ĭ		٠					1,250,000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Income Tax.	•	•		Ĭ.		-	Ī	Ĭ.		Ĭ	·	•	Ĭ.	Ĭ						5,300,000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Surplus of Consolidated Fund	Ī	•		•		•	•	•	Ċ	·	•	-	-	•	·			-	Ĭ.	5.512.000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Loan by Exchanger Bills	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	:	·	Ĭ	•		3.000.000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Lent la Bank without interest	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•		•	Ī		3,000,000
Lagrandature Lagrandature	Loan for Great Reitain	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	٠	•	•	•		•	•		18.500.000
Expendance		٠	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠
Navy,																					139,612,000
Miscellaneous, 750.00 Interest on Exchequer Bills, 816.00 Deficiencies of year 1799, 440.00 Deficiency of Malt Tax and Land do. 350.000 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Inchequer Bills, 3,000.00 Inchequer Bi							•
Miscellaneous, 750.00 Interest on Exchequer Bills, 816.00 Deficiencies of year 1799, 440.00 Deficiency of Malt Tax and Land do. 350.000 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Inchequer Bills, 3,000.00 Inchequer Bi	Navy,																	•			112,619.000
Miscellaneous, 750.00 Interest on Exchequer Bills, 816.00 Deficiencies of year 1799, 440.00 Deficiency of Malt Tax and Land do. 350.000 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Exchequer Bills, 2,500.00 Inchequer Bills, 3,000.00 Inchequer Bi	Army,																			٠	11 370,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Miscellaneous,						,														750.000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Interest on Exchequer Bills, .						٠	,											•		816,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Deficiencies of year 1799,															•		٠			440,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Deficiency of Malt Tax and Land	do.		٠	٠														٠		350,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Exchequer Bills,					٠											٠	٠			2,500,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Do. for 1798,									•								٠			1,075,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Vote of credit,																				3,000,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Subsidies to Germans and Russian	15.																	,		3,000,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Annual grant for National Debt,								:			٠									200,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, G47,000 Charges of management, 1.37,920,000	Unforeseen emergencies,	•	٠	•		•	•			•	•		•	•		•	•	•		٠	1,800,000
To provide for the interest of this loan, amounting in all to L.21,500,000, Mr. Pitt laid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, G47,000 Charges of management, 1,779,000
Pittlaid on some trifling taxes on spirits and tea, amounting in all to L.350,000, the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the lean was only 42 per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil Expenses, Charges of management, 1,779,000	To provide for the interest of th	is I	oar	ı. nı	mo	unt	in"	in	อไไ	to	19	1.5	66.	იიი	. M	r.
the interest on the bulk of the debt being laid as a charge on the income tax. The interest paid on the loan was only 4½ per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil List, Civil Expenses, Charges of management, L. 21,683,000 647,000 1,779,000
The interest paid on the loan was only 42 per cent; a fact which he justly stated as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public delt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, Civil Expenses, Charges of management, L. 21,683,000 647,000 1,779,000	the interest on the bulk of the de	bt i	bei	ng	laic	l a	5 A	ci	ars	e c	n t	he	inc	om	e to	x.
as extraordinary in the eighth year of the war. The interest on the public debt at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List,	The interest paid on the loan was	onl	v 4	2 N	cr	cen	t : :	ı fa	et s	, thi	ch l	ie i	ust	ly s	tat	cd deht at this time was L.19,700,000, and on Exchequer Bills, etc., L.1,983,000, in all. Civil List, in all	debt at this time was L. 19.700 00	à 'n	md	on	r,	ch	retti	er i	::::		ir	Ť.	16	183 183	ሰቤ	n.
Civil List, 898,000 Civil Expenses, 647,000 Charges of management, 1,779,000	in all.									٠, (• 2) •	,00	1	4-	21	.68	3.0	00
Givil Expenses,
Charges of management, 1,779,000	Civil Farances	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	٠	•	٠	•	•	•	•
charges of management,	Champs of man-		•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	٠	٠	•	٠	•	•
	Other charges of managemen			٠,	•	.,,*	•	٠	٠	٠	•	٠	٠	•	٠	•	•
	Other charges on consc	nna	arc	u J	· ur	u,	•	٠	•	٠	•	,	٠	•	٠	•			2,0	~	25.246.000

Total National Expenditure in 1800. L.63,166,000

[—]See Parl. Hist. xxxiv. 1515, and Ann. Reg. App. to Chronicle for 1800, pp. 151, 152.

(2) James, ii. App. No. 8. Ann. Reg. 1800, 160;
and 144, App. to Chron.

The number of troops raised year for the

Mr. Dundas Several domestic measures of great importance took place in this session of Parliament The bank charter was renewed for twentyone years, there being twelve years of the old charter still to run; in consideration of the advantages of which, the directors agreed to give the public a loan of L 3,000,000 for six years without interest, the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act was continued by a great majority in both houses of Parhament; and Mr Dundas brought forward a full account of the affairs of India (1) The union of Ireland with Great Britain was, after a stormy debate in both houses of Parliament in Dublin, carried by a large majority, chiefly through the powerful abilities, cool courage, and vigorous efforts of Lord CASTLEBEAGH, who then gave the first specimen of that indomitable firmness and steady perseverance which were afterwards destined, on a greater stage. to lead the coalition against France to a glorious issue in the campaign of 1814 This great measure, however, was not carried without the most violent opposition, both in the Irish Peers and Commons, and it left the seeds of an animosity between the two islands, which, fostered by religious rancour and democratic passion, produced melancholy effects in after times upon the tranquility and strength of the empire (2)

by a by the treaty of Union, the Peers for the united Imperial Parbears the four spiritual peers, the former elected for life by the Irish peerage, or of a by the latter by rotation, the commoners fixed at one hundred. The finds and Churches of England and Ireland were united, and provision made for their union, preservation, and the continuance of their discipline, doctrine, and worship for ever Commercial privileges were fairly communicated, the national debt of each was imposed as a burden on its own finances, the test of the proportion of fifteen to Great Britain and the general expenditure ordered to be defrayed, for twenty generated and the general expenditure ordered to fifteen to Great Britain

as follows a woful picture of t	le ignorance which	-	. ~	700 000 m
then preva led as to the means of	f combat ng a revo
I t onzry power;-	-
1793	17 038
1795	38 561	5 000 000
1795	40 160
1796	16 336
1797	16 098
1798	21 457
1799	41 315				•
1800	17 124
Total negltyers	205 383	of i assana v	rearly.

Whereas the French with a population of The rave ue and expenditure were thus dis-28 000 000 raised in 1792 700 000 and in 1793 valed —

1 500 000 sold ers I russ a will a populat on of CI arges Bengal L 6 259 600 I 3 9a2 847 Madr s 2 004 993 2 857 519 Bombay 346 110 996 693 L 8 610 703 1...7 807 065 7 807 065 Surplus L 803 638 Interest on debt . L 7 58 135 } 815 295 Other charges Defe ency L71 657 Commerc al Profits L 629 657 Deduct terrator'al loss 71 651 1.558 000 Annual Surplus and two for Ireland. The laws and courts of both kingdoms were maintained on their present footing, subject to such alterations as the united Parliament might deem expedient. This important step was carried in the British House of Commons by a majority of 508 to 26, and in the Lords by 75 to 7 (1).

See Parl II st xxxv 15 (2) Lael II st xxxv 1411 xxxv 14 15 Ann Reg 1801, 112 115

views of it. The debates on this subject in the British Parliament, which, leaders of although highly important in English, are not of sufficient moment Parliament for quotation in European history, are chiefly remarkable for the complete blindness of all parties to the real and ultimate consequences of the measure which was adopted. Mr. Pitt was most desirous to show that the influence of the crown would not be unduly augmented by the Irish members in the House of Commons (2); while Mr. Grey contended that, "ultimately at least, the Irish members will afford a certain accession of force to the party of every administration, and therefore forty of the most decayed boroughs should be struck off before the Union takes place. He accordingly moved, that it should be an instruction to the House to guard against the increase of the influence of the crown in the approaching Union (5). To us, who know that by the aid of the Irish members, and their aid alone, even after the franchise had been raised from forty shillings to ten pounds by the Duke of Wellington, the great democratic change on the British constitution of 1852 was carried (4), these speculations as to the ultimate consequences of the Union are singular monuments of the difficulty which even the greatest intellects experience in prognosticating the consequences of any considerable change in the frame of government. In truth, the decisive addition which the Irish members furnished to the democratic party of the empire on the first great crisis which occurred, adds another to the numerous examples which history affords of the extreme peril of applying to one country the institutions or government of another, or of supposing that the system of representation which the habits of centuries have moulded to a conformity with the interests of one state, can be adopted without the utmost hazard by another in an inferior stage of civilization, inheriting from its forefathers a more ardent temperament, or under the influence of more vehement passions.

Great protection of the Ever since the great financial crisis of 1797, and the limitation of health are cash payments by the act of that year, followed by the issue of two and one pound notes by the Bank of England, which immediately ensued, the prosperity of the British empire had been steadily and rapidly increasing. The expenditure of above sixty millions a-year by government, either in the current expenses or the payment of interest on debt, and the increase of the issues by the bank from eleven millions to above fifteen during that period (5), had produced a most extraordinary effect on the national industry. Prices of every species of produce had rapidly and steadily

Thus it was the admission of the Irish members which effected that great alteration in the English constitution.

(5)	Bank of I	in	glai	ıd 1	ıot	es i	n c	irc	ulai	tion last quarter, (Five pounds,	of Two and one pounds.	· Total,
	1797,		•	•						L.10,411,700	L.1,230,700	L.11,642,400 12,442,070
										10.711,690	1,730,380 1,671,040	13,006,960
	1800,	٠	•	٠,		٠	٠				2,042,300	15,400,970
a	1 D									20,000,010

-See Ann. Reg. 1800, p. 148, App. to Chronicle.

108 HISTORY OF E

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [CHAP XXX

risen, thirt of grain in 1800, exclusive of the effects of the scarcity of that year, was double what it had been in 1792, and every other article had advanced with the series of the scarcing of the scarcin

One class only, that of annuatants, and all others depending on a consider the fixed income, underwent, during those years, a progressive decline fixer by the fixed or come, underwent, during those years, a progressive decline fixers by the high prices and severe scarcity which followed the disastrous harvest of 4799. The attention of Parliament was early directed to the means of alleviating the famine of that year. Six reports were made by the Commons and two by the I ords on the dearth of provisions, but the government, although severely pressed by the public suffering, steadily resisted all those harsh or violent measures which procure a present rehef at the expense of

-See Muspall & Indust al S tua on of G eat Be ta n 53

-See Pa ! H ! xxx 1563

St steal (2) According to Mr. P. ts statement in 1800, the British exports imports of pp ng ton deta s. mage and revenue in the under men, oned years stood as follows —

				. men buen Jen
				Imports
	On an averag	re of six	years end r	g 5 h Jan 179	3	L 18 685 000
Ł	On an averag	e of six	years e d n	g 5th Jan 180	i	25 259 000
		,			•
				Expo ts
	On an avera-	e of s x	years end :	g 5 h Jan 179	3
		-	M	inufactures		L-14 771 000
			Fo	re gu goods		5 468 000
						1 20 239 000
	_	_
	On an averag	e of a x	years end n	g 5 h Jan 180	l	L 20 085 000
				nufactur s		12 867 000
			10	re ga goods		12 807 000
						1. 37 932 000
				Sh pp ng etc
				5h ps	Tonnage	Seamen
	Sh pp ng	D 1788		13 827	1 353 000	107 925
		1792		16 079	1 510 145	118 286
		1800		18 877	1 905 438	143 661
			Permanent ta	zes exclu e of	war taxes —
	Lear end	ng 51't Ja	n 1793			1,14 284 000
	Do	oh	1794			13 911 000
	Do	do	1795			13 838 000
	Do	do	1796			13 557 000
	Do	do	1797			14 292 000
	Do	do	1798			13 332 000
	Do	do	1799			14 275 000
	Do	do	1800			15 743 000
			Gro	t rece pt from ta	rej
	1797					23 076 000
	1793					30 175,000

33 535 000

Great efforts of government to renoble pre

future confidence in the cultivators. An act was passed to lower the quality of all the bread baked in the kingdom; the importation of rice and maize encouraged by liberal bounties; distillation from grain stopped, and by these and other means an additional supply. to the enormous amount of 2.500,000 quarters, was procured for the use of the inhabitants (1). By these generous and patriotic efforts, joined to the admirable patience and forbearance of the people, this trying crisis was surmounted without any of those convulsions which might have been anticipated from so severe a calamity during a period of almost universal war: and in the latter part of the year, England, so far from being overwhelmed by its reverses, was enabled to present an undaunted front to the hostility of combined Europe.

Measures of Deprived by the secession of Russia of the power from whom they England and had derived such efficacious assistance in the preceding campaign, the prosecu- Austria and England made the utmost efforts to prosecute the war with vigour. By their united influence, the German empire was prevailed upon to sign a treaty, binding the states who composed it to furnish a contingent of three hundred thousand men for the common cause; but very few of the electors obeyed the requisition, and the troops of the empire were of hardly any service in the succeeding campaign. To stimulate their languiddispositions, a vigorous circular was, in the beginning of December, sent by the Archduke Charles to the anterior circles of the empire. in which he strenuously urged the formation of new levies, and pointed out, in energetic terms, the futility of the idea that any durable peace was practicable with a country in such a state of revolutionary excitement as France, and the vanity of supposing that, by concentrating all the powers of government in the hands of a victorious chieftain, it was likely to be either less formidable or more pacific. But although that great general was indefatigable in his endeavours to put the Imperialists on a respectable footing, and make the most active preparations for war, he was far from feeling any confidence in the issue of the approaching contest, now that Russia was withdrawn on the one side and Napoléon was added on the other: and he earnestly counselled the Austrian cabinet to take advantage of the successes of the late campaign, and the recent changes of government in France, by concluding The cabinet of Vienna, however, deemed it peace with the Republic. inadvisable to stop short in the career of success; and not only refused to treat with Napoleon, who had proposed peace on the basis of the treaty of Campo Formio, but deprived the Archduke, who had so candidly stated his opinion, of the command of the army in Germany, and conferred it on General Kray. Notwithstanding the great abilities of the latter general, this change proved extremely prejudicial to the Imperial fortunes: the Archduke was

(1) The resources obtained in this way are thus detailed in the sixth report of the Commons:-

adored by the soldiers, and his retirement not only shook their confidence in •	Quarters.

	Importation of wheat from Jan. 1 to Oct. 1,	170,000 580,000
	Do. of flour from America,	30,000
	~ or winder from Canada, , , , , , , ,	630,000
	Do. of rice, equal to.	40,000
	Stoppage of starch, equal to	360.000
,	Do. of distilleries,
	Use of Coarse Meal, Retrenchment,
		2,510,000

the house of Orange produced $4,000,000 more; national domains to a great extent found purchasers from the increasing confidence in government; and, instead of the forced loans from the opitent classes, which had utterly annihilated credit, and by the flagrant injustice with which they were levied recalled the worst days of the Reign of Terror, a new tax of twenty-live per cent on real property, though a burden that would be deemed intolerable in any state which had tasted of the sweets of real freedom, gave general satisfaction, and soon produced a large increase to the revenue. At the same time the foundations of a sinking fund and a national bank were laid, the public forests put under a new and rigorous direction, monthly remittances from the collectors of taxes established, and the measures commenced which were calculated to revive public credit after a prostration of ten years (1).

Profession The pacification of la Vendee was the next object of the First of Vender Consul. The law of hostages and the forced requisitions had revived the civil war in that country, and sixty thousand men were in the fled, but it was a different contest from the terrible burst which, seven years before, had proved so disastrous to the Republican arms. The devastation of the country and destruction of the population by that bloody string, had an inhibited the elements of resistance on any considerable scale, and mere first proclamations of Napoleon, yet being soon convinced by the tenor of his administration, that a more equitable system than that of the Revolution was about to commence, they gradually listened to his proposals. At the same time, the approach of formidable forces from all quarters, convinced them that they had now a more difficult antagonist to deal with than the weak though tyrannical Directory. Chatillon and d'Autichamps were the first to give the example of submission; and soon after Suzanet and the Abbé Bermer concluded, at Mount Lucon, a treaty highly honourable to themselves In 17, 700x for the termination of hostilines. The able and heroic Count Louis de Frotte was not equally fortunate. He had written a letter to the Intquitous execut on Republican chief, proposing a general pacification of the Chouans, of Coun Louis and was at the place of conference, when the negotiation was protracted beyond the time assigned for the acceptance of terms of peace by the leaders of the insurgents, and although they paid but little attention to the tracted beyond the time assigned for the acceptance of terms of peace by the Royalists. He was then perfidiously seized, along with all his followers, on the ground of a letter be had written to an aide-de-camp during the negotiation, and brought before a military tribunal, by which they were imme-

⁽¹⁾ Nap. 3 107, 310 Jom xus 28
The injust or committed by these forced loans as one of the most six hung instances of the monstrous effects of the democratic ascendency which by the Revolution of 18th Fructidar had obtained in all who paid 4000 frame and spowde at its abile amount. The abstract has we founded on the opinion of a jury, who were entitled to tax the reliance of energetustic earsy person of achieblithis my sum they chose. The effects of an inquison a system may be concerted. Properly disappeared was concrided as studiously as in the dynamic of the Last. Every branch of the public reversal drying up from the catifaction of creat.—See Narockop, 1 (1), and diately ordered to be executed. They underwent the sentence next day, and met death with the most heroic courage, standing erect, with their eves unbandaged. One of the aides-de-camp was only wounded by the first fire: he coolly ordered the men to fire again, and fell pierced to the earth. The unhappy aide-de-camp whose unfortunate discovery of the letter had occasioned this catastrophe, was seized with such despair that he blew out his brains. This murder is a lasting stain on Napoléon's administration, Frotte was not taken in arms, but perfidiously seized by a company of Republicans. When under an escort of the national troops and engaged in a negotiation for a final pacification; but he was deemed too able to be permitted to survive. even in that age of returning elemency; and the intercepted letter, though imprudent, contained nothing which could warrant the captive's execution. It must be added, however, in justice to Napoléon, that it contained expressions extremely hostile to the First Consul, and that, at the earnest solicitation of his secretary Bourrienne, he had actually made out an order for his pardon, which, from some delay in the transmission, unfortunately arrived too late to save the hero's life. About the same time he generously pardoned M. Defeu, a brave emigrant officer taken in arms against the state, and doomed by the cruel laws of the Republic to instant death (1).

Georges, Bourmont, and some others, maintained for a few weeks longer in Britanny a gallant resistance; but, finding that the inhabitants were weary of civil war, and gladly embraced the opportunity of resuming their pacific occupations, they at length came into the measures of government, and were Feb. 23, 1801. treated with equal clemency and good faith by the First Consul, to whom they ever after yielded a willing and useful obedience. In the end of January, General Brune announced by proclamation that the pacification of la Vendée was complete, and on the 23d of the following month a general and unqualified amnesty was published. The Vendean chiefs were received with great distinction by Napoléon at Malmaison, and generally promoted to important situations (2). The curate Bernier was made Bishop of Orléans, and intrusted afterwards with the delicate task of conducting the negotiation concerning the concordat with the Papal government. The rapid and complete pacification of la Vendée by Napoléon, proves how much the long duration of its bloody and disastrous war had been owing to the cruelty and oppressions of the Republican authorities.

The next important step of Napoléon was to detach Russia comeffects a reconciliation pletely from the alliance of Great Britain; an attempt which was much facilitated by the angry feelings excited in the mind of the Emperor Paul and his generals by the disastrous issue of the preceding campaign, and the rising jealousy of the maritime power of Great Britain, which had sprung up from fortuitous events in the minds of the Northern powers, and in the following year led to the most important results.
Aware of the favourable turn which affairs in the Baltic had recently taken, Napoléon lost no opportunity of cultivating a good understanding with the Russian Emperor; and, by a series of adroit acts of courtesy, succeeded at length, not only in obliterating all feelings of hostility, but establishing the most perfect understanding between the two cabinets. Napoléon sent back all the Russian prisoners in France, seven thousand in number, who had been taken at Zurich and in Holland, not only without exchange, but equipped anew in the Russian uniform. This politic proceeding was not lost on

۸,

⁽¹⁾ Bour. iv. 8, 10. Beauch, iv. 498, 504.

⁽²⁾ Nap. i. 129, 133. Jom, xiii. 29, 31. Dum. iii. 19, 21. Ana. Reg. 1800, 166.

the Czar, who had been already dazzled by the lustre of Nupoléon's actories in Haly and Egypt; a contest of civilities and courtesies ensued, which soon terminated in the dismissal of Lord Whitworth from St -Petersburg, and the arrival of Baron Springborton, the Russian ambassador, at Paris (1) The British vessels were soon after laid under embargo in the Russian harbours, and that angry correspondence began, which was shortly terminated by the ring proclamations which were so well calculated to rouse the ardent spirit of the French people. He told them that the English minister had rejected his proposals of peace, that to command it he had need of money, of iron, and soldiers, and that he swore not to combat but for the happiness of France and the peace of the world This animated address, coupled with the magic that encircled the name of Napoleon, produced an amazing effect. Victory seemed about again to attend the Republican standards, under the auspices of a leader to whom she had never yet proved faithless; the patriotic ardour of 1795 was in part revived, with all the addition which the national strength had since received from the experience of later times. The first class of the conscription for the year 1800 was put in requisition, without any exemption either from rank or fortune; this supply put at the disposal of government one hundred and twenty thousand men Besides this, a still more efficient force for immediate service, was formed by a summons of all the veterans who had obtained furlough or leave of absence for the eight preceding years, and who, unless furnished with a valid excuse, were required again to serve; a measure which procured a supply of thirty thousand experienced soldiers. At the same time, the gendarmerie were put on a better footing, and various improvements effected, particularly in the artillery department, which greatly augmented the efficiency of that important arm of the public service. Twenty-live thousand horses, bought in the interior, were distributed among the artillery and cavalry on the frontier, and all the stores and equipments of the armies repaired with a celerity so extraordinary, that it would have appeared incredible, if long experience had not proved, that confidence in the vigour and stability of government operates as rapidly in increasing, as the vacillation and insecurity of democracy does in withering the national resources (2).

Recruit Far from experiencing the difficulty which had been so severely been military felt by the Directory in retaining the soldiers to their colours, the France consular government was powerfully seconded by the patriolic efforts of all classes. Several brilliant corps of volunteers were formed; and the ranks rapults filled up by veterans hastening to renew their toils under a leader to whom fortune had litherto proved so propitious. In consequence, the government soon found itself at the head of two liundred and fifty thousand men to commence hostitities in Italy and Germany, while above one hundred thousand conscripts were rapidly learning the rudiments of war at the degots in the interior, and before six months might be expected to join the armies on the frontier (5)

But it was not merely in such praiseworthy efforts for the security and predication of France, that the energies of the First Consul were employed. Ite already meditated the re-establishment of the monarchy, and early commenced that system of misleading the people by false epithets, and dazzling them by splendid pageants, which was intended to prepare them for the lustre of the throne, and induce them to concur in the reconstruction of all the parts of the social edifice which it had been the object of the Revolution to destroy.

To accomplish this object, he applied himself to what he was tinguish the well aware is at all times, but especially during the decline of reary fervour volutionary fervour, the ruling principle of human nature, viz., of the peolature were endowed with ample salaries; even the tribunate, which professed to be the barrier of the people against the encroachments of government, received above L.50,000 a-year among its eighty members, being at the rate of nearly L.700 a-year to each individual who composed it; a very large allowance in a country where the highest civil functionaries, the heads of the law and church, received only from 1.500 to 1.600 annually (4). From the very first he commenced the demolition of all those ensigns and expressions which recalled the idea of the liberty and equality, from the strife of which his redoubtable power had arisen. The image of the Republic, seated and holding a spear in her hand, which was at the top of all the official letters at the commencement of the consulship, was suppressed. Some doubt existed in the first instance as to which of the consuls should take the chair, and Sièyes openly asserted his pretensions to it, in virtue as well of his seniority as his great services in the cause of freedom; but Napoleon cut the matter short by stepping into the chair himself, and the jealousy of the elder consul was soon removed by the grant of the large property out of the park of Versailles which has been already mentioned. At the same time, the habiliments and ensigns of authority were changed; the Greek and Roman costumes, which recalled the ideas of equality lately so much in vogue, were abolished and replaced by the military dress; the First Consul appeared on all occasions in uniform, with boots and spurs, and all the inferior military functionaries followed his example. The levees, which he held almost daily, were crowded with officers in full dress; and the court of the first magistrate of the Republic was noways distinguishable from the headquarters of its greatest general. At the same time, the institution of sabres and fusils of merit, as a testimony of reward to military distinction, already shadowed out to the discerning eye the Legion of Honour, and the re-establishment of titles of rank and a hereditary nobility; while the daily reviews with all the pomp and splendour of war, in the Place du Carrousel, accustomed the people to those magnificent pageants which were destined to conceal from their gaze the chains of the empire (2).

These measures were all steps, and not unimportant ones, to the re-establishment of monarchical authority. But they were the

(1) The civil list under the F	irst	Co	nsu	l wa	ıs	fixed	l at	the	following sums :-
Legislative Body	, .		•				•		2,400,000 francs.
Tribunate,	•	•		•				•	1,312,000
Archives,									75,000
Three Consuls,									1,800,000
·Council of State,
Their Secretaries	5, .				•		•		112,500
Six Ministers, .	•								360,000
Minister of Fore	iga	Αſſ	air	,	•				90,030

6,821,500 francs, or L. 275,000

116

prelude only to more important changes. In December, 1799, an important arret was published, which, on the preamble-" That a part of the journals printed at Paris are instruments in the hands of the enemies of He totally tuppers es the Republic, and that it is the first duty of the government to watch over its security," decreed, "That the minister of police of the pr s should not suffer to be printed, during the continuance of the war, any journals but the following " Then followed a list of thirteen journals, thus invested with the monopoly of Paris, and from it were only excluded "those exclusively devoted to science, the arts, literature, commerce, or advertisements" It was decreed, by a separate article, that "any journal among those retained which inserted any thing contrary to the sovereignty of the people, should be immediately suppressed." This clause, inserted to blind the people to the real tendency of the measure, received in the sequel, as was foreseen at the time, the most liberal interpretation, and was applied, contrary to its obvious meaning, to sanction the extinction of all journals contrary to the consular government. Thus early commenced the system of Napoleon for the coercion of the press, a system which received, during the remainder of his reign, such ample developement, and which, as Madame de Stacl justly remarks, converted that great engine, generally considered as the palladium of liberty, into the most powerful instrument of bondage, by perpetually exhibiting a series of false and delusive pictures to the human mind, and excluding all others from the view (1) He fire he. The next step of Napoléon was to fix his residence in the Tui

I leries, and sleep in the ancient apartment of the kings of France This great change, however, required considerable caution in its accomplishment, it was so palpable an approach towards royalty, that it might shock the feeling of the people, and endanger the newly established authority Slowly, and with profound dissimulation, therefore, he proceeded in his advances. A fine statue of Brutus was first placed in one of the galleries of the palace, it was thought the most ardent Republicans could apprehend nothing from a change which commenced with honour done to the hero who had slain a tyrant. Orders were next given to repair and put in order the royal apartments in the Tuileries, and under the veil of these words great changes were effected. The bonnets ronges were all effaced, the statues which were to adorn the great gallery chosen by Aapoleon himself, he selected among the ancients, Démosthones and Alexander, Brutus and Casar, among the moderns, Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, Conde, Prince Eugene, Mariborough, Marshal Saxe, Frederic, Washington, Dugommier, Dampierre, and Joubert At length, the translation of the Consuls from the Luxembourg to the Tuileries took place the royal apart-

other Consuls, was drawn in a magnificent chariot by six white horses, the same which the Emperor of Austria had given him after the treaty of Campo Formio, he hore in his hand the splendid sabre presented to him by the same sovereign on that occasion. The cabinet ministers followed in their carriages, the only ones which were to be seen on the occasion, for to transport the council of state they were obliged to have recourse to liackney coaches, such was the miserable destitution in which the Revolution had left the highest civil functionaries of France (1). The real luxury of that period consisted in the splendour of the troops, whose brilliant uniforms and prancing chargers formed a painful contrast to the meanness and simplicity of the civil authorities-last and sad effect of revolutionary convulsions, to cast to the earth every thing but the ensigns of military prowess.

From the opening into the Carrousel, from the quay of the Tuileries Peb. 18. 24 55. to the gate of the palace, the procession passed through a double line of guards: a royal usage, which offered a singular contrast to the inscription on the guard-house by which it passed-" 10th August, 1792-Royalty is abolished in France, and will never be re-established." No sooner had be arrived at the foot of the great stair, than Napoléon, allowing the other Consuls to ascend to the presence chamber, mounted on horseback, and, amidst incessant cries of "Vive le Premier Consul!" passed in review above twenty thousand men. Murat was on his right, Lannes on his left; the brilliant staff who surrounded him bore on their visages the marks of the sun of Italy or the sands of Egypt. When the banners of the ninetieth, the forty-third, and thirtieth demi-brigades, which exhibited only bare poles riddled with shot and surmounted by tatters black with powder, were carried past, he bowed with respect to the monuments of military valour. Enthusiastic acclamations rent the skies; and such was the universal transport, that when the review was concluded, and the First Consul ascended to the audience chamber and took his station in the centre of the room, his colleagues were reduced to the rank of pages following his train. On that day royalty was in truth re-established in France, somewhat less than eight years after it had been abolished by the revolt of the 10th August (2).

No sooner was the First Consul established at the Tuileries, than ment of the the usages, dress, and ceremonial of a court were at once resumed. etiquette The antechambers were filled with chamberlains, pages, and end splend mota esquires; footmen in brilliant liveries filled the lobbies and staircour". cases; the levees were conducted with as much splendour as the dilapidated state of most fortunes would permit; and a drawing-room, composed chiefly of the wives of the young generals who had been the companions of Napoléon, and presided over by the grace and good-breeding of Josephine, already revived to a certain degree the lustre of a court. Napoléon was indefatigable in his attention to these matters. He deemed the colour of a livery, the cut of a court-dress not beneath his notice, endeavouring in every way to dazzle the eyes of the vulgar, and efface all recollection of the Republic before it was formally abolished by the authority of government (5). For the same reason, he revived the use of silk stockings in dress, and re-established the balls of the opera, an event which was so great an innovation on the manners of the

⁽¹⁾ Bour. iii 320, 321. Gob. ii. 15, 19. Thib. 2. (2) 318, 323. Thib. 2, 3.

On the night of his entry into the Tuileries, Na-poleon said to his secretary, "Bourrienne, it is not enough to be in the Tuileries, we must take measures to remain there. Who has not inhabited this palace? It has been the abode of robbers, of mem-hers of the Convention. Ah I there is your brother's house, from which, eight years ago, [See vol. i. 159] we saw the good Louis XVI besieged in the Tuderies and carried off into captivity. But you need not fear a repetition of the scene. Let them attempt it with me if they dare." [Bour.iv.]

(3) The King of Prussia was among the first to recognise the consular government, and Napolcon was highly gratified when an nide-de-camp, whom he dispatched to Berlin, was admitted to the honour of dining at the royal table, M. Lucchesini, in Octoller, 1800, was charged with a special mission to the court of the Tuileries from the Prussian government. The lirst Consul received him at St. Cloud, and was at the balcony when he arrived. He was much struck with the decorations which he bore, and the rich livery of the servants who attended him: and he was heard to exclaim, "That is impossible the servants who attended him to be a servant when the servant was a servant when the servant was the servant when the servant was a servant when the servant was the posing; we must have things of that sort to dazzle the people."—See Thibaudrau, 14—15.

mon (2)

Republic that it erected quite a sensation at that period. But Napolion, in pursuing these measures, knew well the character of the French. "While they are discussing these changes," said he, "they will cease to talk nonsense about my politics, and that is what I want. Let them amuse themselves, let had enough of such novelties. I would rather have the balls of the opera than the saturnaha of the Goddess of Reason (1)."

Read of About the same time an arret was published, which took off the necali of many emi grants ex iled since 18th Fructl dor sentence of banishment against a great number of those who had been exiled by the result of the 18th Fructidor It was only provided that they should be under the surveillance of the police, and reside at the places appointed for each respectively in the decree Among the persons thus restored against an unjust sentence, were many of the most eminent citizens of the Republic Carnot, Barthelemy, Boissy-d'Anglas, Portalis, Villoul, Joyeuse, and above forty others. He immediately made use of the most emment of them in the service of the state Carnot was appointed minister at war in the absence of Berthier, and contributed in a powerful manner to the glorious issue of the succeeding campaign. Barrère also was recalled, and was so desirous to receive employment, that he wrote a long letter justifying his conduct to the First Consul, but the latter never could be persuaded to take into his service that hardened Republican Those proscribed by the Directory were thus early admitted into favour, at a subsequent period he received with equally open arms the Royalists and the victims of the Revolution, the only faction against which to the last he was inveterate was the remnant of the Jacobin party, who retained throughout all his reign the resolution of their character and the perversity of their opi-

Ramia At the time when Napolćon was placed on the consular throne he ment of the organized his secret police, intended to act as a check on the public one of Fouch. Duroc was at first 11 the head of this establishment, to which Junot, as governor of Paris, soon after succeeded. So early did this great leader avail himself of this miserable engine, unknown in constitutional monarchies, the resource of despots, inconsistent with any thing like freedom, but the sad legacy bequeathed to succeeding ages by the convulsions and devastation of the Revolution The spies and agents of this police and counter-police soon filled every coffee-house and theatre in Paris, they overheard conversations, mingled in groups, encouraged seditious expressions, were to be found in saloons and palaces, and rendered every man insecure, from the monarch on the throne to the captive in the dungeon. Lately appointed governor of Paris, Junot had a multitude of inferior agents in his pay to watch the motions of Fouche, and he, in his turn, carried corruption into the bosom of the consular family, and, by liberally supplying funds for her extravagance, obtained secret information from Josephine herself (5) This miserable, system had survived all the changes to which it gave birth, the formidable engine, organized in the heart of Paris, with its arms extending over all France, is instantly seized upon by each successive faction which rises to the head of affairs; the herd of informers and spies is perpetrated from generation to generation, and exercises its prostituted talents for behoof of any government which the armed force of the capital has elevated to supreme power; the people, habituated to this unseen authority, regard it as an indispensable part of regular government; and a system, which was the disgrace of Roman servitude in the corrupted days of the empire, is engrafted on a government which boasts of concentrating within itself all the lights of modern civilisation (1).

Napoléon's "Augustus knew well," says Gibbon, that Augustus knew well," says Gibbon, that Augustus knew well, says Gibbon, that they will in general submit to real washington slavery, if they are told that they are in the enjoyment of free-washington, slavery, if they are told that they are in the enjoyment of free-washington. While he "Augustus knew well," says Gibbon, "that mankind are godom." No man understood this principle better than Napoléon. While he was preparing, by fixing his residence in the royal palace, the appointments of the legislature by the executive, the suppression of the liberty of the press, and the establishment of a vigilant police for the overthrow of all the principles of the Revolution, he was careful to publish to the world proclamations which still breathed the spirit of democratic freedom. Shortly before his installation in the Tuileries, intelligence arrived of the death of Dec. 14, 1799. Washington, the illustrious founder of American independence. He immediately published the following order of the day to the army:-"Washington is dead! That great man has struggled with tyranny; he consolidated the liberty of his country. His memory will be ever dear to the French people, as to all free men in both hemispheres, who, like him and the American soldiers, have fought for liberty and equality. As a mark of respect, the First Consul orders, that for ten days black crape shall be suspended from all the standards and banners of the Republic." Thus, by the skilful use of high-sounding names and heart-stirring recollections, did this

(1) The circumstances of the Roman Comparison empire, as remodelled by Constantine, afford a striking analogy to those of of his system of government France when Napoléon ascended the throne; and it is curious to observe with that established by Constan. how exactly the previous destruction time in the of the nobility and higher classes in Byzantine the two countries paved the way, by cmpire. necessary consequence, for the same despotic institutions. "The Patrician families," says Gibbon, "whose original numbers were never recruited till the end of the commonwealth, either failed in the ordinary source of failed in the ordinary course of nature, or were extinguished in so many foreign or domestic wars. Few remained who could derive their genuine origin from the foundation of the city, when Casar and Augustus, Claudius and Vespasian, created a competent number of new Patrician families. But these artificial supplies, in which the reigning house was always included, were rapidly swept away by the rage of tyrants, by frequent revolutions, the change of manners, and the intermixture of nations. Little more was left, when Constantine ascended the throne, than a vague and imperfect tradition that the Patricians had once been the first among the Romans. To form a body of nobles whose influence may restrain, while it secures the authority of the monarch, would have been very inconsistent with the character and policy of Constantine; but had he seriously entertained such a design, it might have exceeded the measure of his power to ratify, by an arbitrary ediet, an institution which must expect the sanction of time and opinion. He revived, indeed, the title of patricians; but he revived it as a personal, not an hereditary distinction. They yielded only to the transient authority of the armyly excellent. only to the transient authority of the annual consuls;

but they enjoyed the pre-eminence over all the great officers of state. This honourable rank was bestowed on them for life, and as they were usually favourites and ministers at the imperial court, the true etymology of the word was perverted by ignorance and flattery, and the patricians of Constantine were reverenced as the adopted fathers of the emperor and the republic.

"The police insensibly assumed the license of reporting whatever they could observe of the conduct, either of magistrates or private citizens, and were soon considered as the eyes of the monarch and the scourge of the people. Under the warm influence of a feeble reign, they multiplied to the incredible number of 10,000, disdained the mild though frequent admonitions of the laws, and exercised in the profitable management of the posts a rapacious and insolent oppression. These official spies, who corresponded with the palace, were encouraged with reward and favour anxiously to watch the progress of every treasonable design, from the faint and latent symptoms of disaffection, to the actual preparation of open revolt. Their careless or criminal violation of truth and justice was covered by the consecrated mask of zeal; and they might securely aim their poisoned arrows at the breast either of the ann over poisoned arrows at the breast either of the innocent or the guilty, who had provoked their resentment or refused to purchase their silence. A faithful subject of Syria, perhaps, or Britain, was exposed to the danger, or at least to the dread, of heing dragged in chains to the court of Milan or Constantingule to defend his life and fortune a minute. Constantinople, to defend his life and fortune against the malicious charges of these privileged informers." This might pass for a description of the Conservative Senate and police of Napoléon .- See Gibbon, ch. xvii.

great master of the art of dissimulation veil his advances towards absolute power, and enginff an enthusiastic admiration for his despote government on the turbulent passions which had been nourished by the Revolution (1) room not conceive those great designs for the embellishment of Paris and improvement of France, which have thrown such durable lustre over his reign. The inconceivable activity of his mind seemed to take a pleasure in discovering new objects for exertion, and at a time when he was conducting the diplomacy of Europe, and regulating all the armies of France, he was maturing plans for the construction of roads, bridges, and canals through all its wide extent, and setting on foot those great works which have given such splendour to its capital. He early elected M Fontaine and M Peirer as the instruments of his designs, and, added by the suggestions of these able architects, the embellishment of the metropolis proceeded at an accelerated pace. The formation of a quay on the banks of the Seine, opposite to the Tuilcres, forming a vast square between those two sumptuous edifices. At first it was proposed to construct a building across the vacant area, in order to conceal the oblique position in which they stood to each other, but this idea was soon abandoned, as Napoleon justly observed, that " no building, how majestic soever, could compensate for a vast open space between the Louvre and Tuileries" The construction of a fourth side, for the great square opposite to the picture gallery, was therefore commenced, and the demolition of the edifices in the interior soon after began; a great undertaking, which the subsequent disasters of his reign prevented him from completing, and which all the efforts of succeeding sovereigns have not been able as yet to bring to a conclusion The Pont-des-Arts, between the Louvre and the Palace of the Institute, was commenced about the same time, and the demolition of the convents of the Feuillans and Capucines made way for the Rue de Rivoli, which now forms so noble a border to the gardens of the Tuileries. Malmaison at this time was the favourite country residence of the First Consul, but he already meditated the establishment of his court at St -Cloud, and the apartments of that palace began to be fitted up in that sumptuous style which has rendered them unequalled in all the palaces of France (2)

Comment The mind of Napoléon was equally great in every thing which met of the mind of Napoléon was equally great in every thing which see designs t undertook. He had early conceived an admiration for architectural embet tural decoration, which his residence among the stately monuments.

Suppression
The First Consul did not as yet venture openly to break with the stiffer Republican party, but he lost no opportunity of showing in what a my and steman of estimation he held their principles On occasion of the establishsteman ment of the Court of Cassation, the supreme tribunal of France, he said to Bourrienne,—"I do not venture as yet to take any decided step against the regicides; but I will show what I think of them To-morrow I shall be engaged with Abral in the formation of the Tribunal of Cassation. Target, who is its president; declined to defend Louis XVI: Whom do you suppose I am about to name in his place? Tronchet, who so nobly discharged that perilous duty. They may say what they choose; my mind is made up." Trouchet accordingly received the appointment so richly deserved by his heroic conduct. The commemoration of the murder of Louis XVI was at the same time suppressed, and concerts of sacred music were permitted on Sundays at the Opera. Thus, though the Republican calendar was still observed, an approach was made to the ancient mode of measuring time in the public amusements (1).

Louis XVIII at this time wrote several letters to Napoléon, in which he expressed the high esteem in which he held his character, and offered him any situation which he chose to fix on under the government, if he would aid in re-establishing the MIII. throne of the Bourbons. Napoleon replied in firm but courteous terms, declining to have any connexion with the exiled family (2). He clearly foresaw, with admirable sagacity, all the difficulties which would attend the restoration of that unfortunate family, and felt no inclination to make way for such an event. "The partisans of the Bourbons," said he, "are much mistaken if they imagine that I am the man to play the part of Monk. I am not insensible to the hazard to which France may be one day exposed from my decease without issue, as my brothers are evidently unfit for such a throne; but consider the absurdity of the propositions which they have made to me. How could we secure so many new interests and vested rights against the efforts of a family returning with eighty thousand emigrants, and all the prejudices of fanaticism? What would become of the holders of national domains, and all those who had taken an active part in the Revolution? The Bourbons would conceive they had conquered by force; all their professions and promises would give way before the possession of power. My part is taken; no one but a fool would place any reliance upon them (5)."

General im Thus, on all sides, the prospects of France rapidly brightened unin the proce der the auspices of Napoléon. To the insecurity, distrust, and terror which had paralysed all the efforts of patriotism under the Direc-

(1) Pour. iv. 68, 70.

(2) The letter of Louis XVIII was in there terms:-Ich. 4. Por long, general, you must have known the esteem in which I hold you. If you doubt my gratitude, fix upon the place you desire for yourself; point out the situations which you wish for your friends. As to my principles, they are those of the French character. Glemency on principle accords with the dictates of reason.

"No-the victor of Ledi, Castiglione, and Arcolo, the conqueror of Italy and Egypt can never prefer a vain celebrity to true glory. But you are losing the most precious moments. We could secure the happiners of France. I say ac, for I require Bonaparie for such an attempt and he could not achieve it without me. General, Europe observes you-glory awaits you, and I am impatient to restore peace to my people."

Napolion replied: --Sept. 24. 1800. "I have received, sir, your letter. I thank you for the obliging expressions which it contains regarding myself.

"You should renounce all hope of returning to France. You could not do so, but over the bodies of one hundred thousand Frenchmen. Sacrifice your interest to the repose and happiness of France. History will duly appreciate your conduct in so "I am not insensible to the misfortunes of your family, and shall learn with pleasure that you are surrounded with every thing which can secure the tranquillity of your retreat."

This answer was not dispatched for seven months after the receipt of the letter from Louis, and when the Congress of Luneville was about to open .- See Bornales E. iv. 77-79.

Not disconcerted with this repulse, the Bourbon family endeavoured to open a negotiation with Napoleon, through the Duchess of Guiche, a lady of great beauty and abilities, who found no difficulty in penetrating to Joséphine, and conveying to her the propositions of the exiled family, which were, that he should, on restoring them, be made Constable of France and receive the principality of Corsica. Napoleon no sooner heard of it than he ordered the fascinating duchess to leave Paris in ordered the fascinating duchess to leave Paris in twenty-four hours; an order which gave great satisfaction to Joséphine, who already had become somewhat uneasy at the proximity of so charming a personage. It had been proposed that a splendid pillar should be erected on the Place du Carrousel, surmounted by a statue of Napoléon crowning the Bourbons. "Nothing was wanting," said Napoléon, "to such a design except that the pillar should be founded on the dead body of the First Consul."— LAS CAS. i. 289, 290, and Capefique, i. 140. Las Cas. i. 289, 290, and Caperioue, i. 140.

(3) Bour. iv. 72, 83. Capeligue, Hist. de la Restauration, i. 137, 141.

[CHAP. XXX. 122 tory, succeeded confidence, energy, and hope; genius emerged from obscurity to take an active part in public affairs; corruption and profligacy ceased to poison every branch of administration. There is nothing more striking in European history than the sudden resurrection of France under the govern-1 ---- 241 exertions can add to the sum of general felicity.

CHAPTER XXXL

CAMPAIGN OF MARENGO.

From the offsing of the Charles to the achistics of Mexandria.

MATCH-JULY, 1800.

ARGUMENT.

There either of the French Armles at the Opening of the Composin-Formation of the French Army of Reserve-Porces of the Imperialists-Plan of the Austrians for the Campaign-And of the Pirst Consul-Position of Kray's Porces in Germany-And of Moreau's Troops-Pirst Movements of the French General-Irresolution of the Austrian Generals in consequence-Moreou advances as just their Centre-Eattle of Prizen-Victory of the Prench-Its great Results-Retreat of Kray-Battle of Morskirch-Real length terminates in the Defeat of the Imperialists-Perilous Situation of St.-Cyr on the following day-Affair of Biberach-Kray retreats to the Intrenched Camp at Ulm-Advantages of that Position-Kray keeps the Pield with part of his Porce-Great Strength of the Introuched Camp-Measures of Moreau to dislodge him from it-Vigorous streke of the Austrian General against the Left Wing of the Prench-Increasing Perplexity of Moreau-He in an a moves round to Aursburg-He next Edvances on the Left Pank of the Danube-Imminent risk of the Prench Left-At length Moread cuts off his Communications-The Passage of the Danube is effected by the French-Severe Action at Huchstedt-Kray is at length obliged to evacuate Ulm and reaches Nordlingen-Moreau occupies Munich-Kray crosses the Danul e and descends the right bank to Landshut-and falls leach behind the Inn-Operations against the Prince of Reuss in the Tyrol-Polikirch is carried by the Republicans-Armistice of Parsdorf in Germany-Extreme suffering of the French on the Summit of the Maritime Alps-Massen is appointed to the Command-Sapoleon's Proclamation to these Troops-Linergetic Measures taken to restore order-Positions of the Austrians-Description of Genoa-Measures taken for its blockade by Land and Sea-Successful Attack of the Imperialists on the French Position-Suchet is separated from the main body and driven back towards Prance-Desperate and successful Sortic of Massenn-His disposition for re-opening his Communications with Suchet-Austrian Measures to present it, which prove successful-Continued Successes of the Imperialists-Massena is finally driven into Genoa-Defeat of Suchet by Elnitz-Who is driven over the Var into France-General Attack by Ott on the French Positions round Genoa-Which, at first successful, is finally repulsed by Massena-Successful Sally of the Prench-Which leads to another, in which they are defeated and Soult made prisoner-Siege is converted into a Blockade-Extreme want of the Inhabitants-A fresh Sortie is defeated -Agonies endured by the Inhabitants-Massena at length surrenders-Melas sets out to meet Napoléon-Allies advance to Nice-Description of Suchet's Position on the Var-Attack by the Austrians on it, which is repulsed-Fresh Attack, and final Repulse of them-Formation of the Army of Reserve by Napoleon-Skilful Measures taken to conceal its Strength-Description of the Passage of the St.-Bernard-Napoléon resolves to hazard the Passage-Measures taken for the crossing of the Artiflery-Passage of the Mountains-Comparison of the Passage of the Alps by Hannibal, Napoléon, Suwarrow, and Macdonald-The Army is stopped in the Valley of Aosta by the Port of Bard-Great Skill with which the Obstacle was eyaded by the French Engineers-Passage of the St .- Gothard and Mount Cinis by the Wings of the Army of Reserve-Melas in haste concentrates his Army-Different Plans which lay open to Napoléon-He resolves to occupy Milan-His Advance into Lombardy, and Capture of that City-He spreads his Forces over Lombardy, and addresses a Proclamation to his Soldiers-Napoléon advances to meet Melas, who concentrates his forces at Alexandria-The French Vanguard comes up with the Austrians at Montebello-Desperate and Bloody Action there, in which the Austrians are worsted-Position of the French Army in the Pass at Stradella between the Apennines and the Po-Disastrous Retreat of Elnitz from the Var —Gallant Resolution of Melas to cut his way through Napoléon's Army—Arrival of Desaix from Egypt at Napoléon's Headquarters-Preparatory Movements of both parties-Forces assembled on both sides—Battle of Marengo—Early Success of the Austrians—The French Reserves are brought into action under Desaix-After a gallant Charge he, too, is defeated-Decisive Charge of Kellermann converts a Rout into a Victory-Final Defeat of the AusDepth in the first hites, in the following manner —The army of Haly, which is stated to coupled the crest of the Alps from the neighbourhood of Genoa to the road of the couple of the crest of the Alps from the neighbourhood of Genoa to Mont Cents, was thirty-six thousand strong, of which twenty-eight page anon tenis, was thirty-six thousand strong, or which wenty-eight thousand were assembled in Liguria, from the Trebba to the Col di Tende, to guard the passes of the Apennines and protect Genoa from the Imperial forces, which were grouped in the plain round the walls of Uckandria. These troops, however, were for the most part in the most miserable condition, their spirits were depressed by a campaign of unprecedented disaster, their clothing was worn out, their feet bare, their retillery broken down, their eavalry dismounted, and it required all the efforts of St. Cyr and their other officers during the writer to set in them of their calcust.

officers during the winter to retain them at their colours (1) rormat on of The army of Germany, which was afterwards called the army of the French the Danube, was 128,000 strong, including 16,000 cavalry, of which immense force 105,090 men, including 14,000 horse, could be relied on for active operations. An army of reserve of 50,000 men was at the same time formed, the head-quarters of which were nominally at Dijon, but the bulk of the force was in reality disposed at Geneva, Lausanne, and the other towns which lay between the Jura and the Alps. This reserve was destined either to support the army of Italy or that of Germany, as circumstances required, and it was formed of 20,000 veteran troops, brought from Holland, under Brune, to la Vendce, which the pacification of that district rendered disposable for offensive operations, and 50,000 conscripts, directed to that quarter from the central depots. These troops traversed France, with drums beating and colours flying, in the finest order, and their splendid appearance contributed much to revive the martial ardour of the people, which the disasters of the preceding campaigns had so scriously impaired Berthier received the command of this army, and gave up the portfolio of minister of war to Carnot, whom Napoleon sought out in exile to fill that important situation (2)

Forces of the other hard, the Imperialists had collected 96,000 men'n Piedmont and at the foot of the Maritime Alps, besides 20,000, who were dispersed in garrisons in the states of Venice, Lombardy, and Tuscany Their forces in Germany were still more considerable, amounting to 92,000 men, including 18,000 superb cavalry, and they were followed by above 400 pieces of artillery. This was independent of the troops of Bayaria and the minor states in the English pay, which amounted to 20,000 more, making in all 119,000 men. This great force, however, was scattered over an immense line, 200 miles long, from the Alps to the Maine, insomuch thit, in the valley of the Danube, which was the decisive point of the whole, as it at once fed to the Hereditary States, kryy could only assemble 15,000 men to resist the 75,000 which Moreau could direct against that point. The great error of the Austrians in this campaign consisted in supposing that Irdy was the quarter where the decisive attack, was to be made, and collecting in consequence the greater part of their reserves in that country; whereas the valley of the Danube was the place where danger was really to be apprehended, and where the principal forces of the Republicans were collected. But they were deceived by the great successes of the preceding campaign; they were ignorant or incredulous of the rapid change produced on the French armies by the seizure of supreme power by Napoleon; and were dreaming of conquests on the Var and in Provence, when their redoubtable adversary was already meditating strokes in the heart of Bavaria (1).

The plan of the Austrians was to resume the offensive vigorously in Italy, where the great numerical superiority of Melas, as well as the warlike and experienced quality of the troops he commanded, promised the most important results; to throw Massena back into Genoa, and capture that important city; drive the French over the Maritime Alps, and carry the war into the heart of Provence. To co-operate with this design, an English expedition, having twelve thousand troops on board, was to proceed to the Mediterranean, and aid the Imperialists either in the south of France or the Maritime Alps. This being the quarter where active operations were to be undertaken, the war in Germany was intended to be merely defensive, and rather to occupy a considerable army of the enemy on the Rhine than to make any serious impression on his territories in that quarter (2).

On his side, Napoléon determined to prosecute the war vigorously where the Austrians proposed only to pursue defensive measures, and to liberate Italy by the blows struck at the Hereditary States in the heart of Germany. The possession of Switzerland, like a central fortress, gave the French the advantage of being able to take the line of the enemy's operations in rear, either in Italy or Swabia. Napoléon had intrusted the command of the army of Germany to Moreau, a generous proceeding towards so formidable a rival, but which his great military talents, and the unbounded confidence of the soldiers of the army of the Rhine in his capacity, as well as the important services which he had rendered to the First Consul on the 18th Brumaire, rendered indispensable. The plan which he proposed to his great lieutenant was to assemble all his forces in the neighbourhood of Schaffhausen, cross the Rhine by four bridges near that town, move directly in an imposing mass on Ulm, and thus turn the left of the Imperialists, and take in rear all the Austrians placed between the Rhine and the defiles of the Black Forest. By this means he hoped that the army, in a week after the opening of the campaign, would be at Ulm, and such of the Imperialists as escaped would have no alternative but to throw themselves into Bohemia, leaving Vienna and the Hereditary States to their fate. That these brilliant anticipations were not chimerical, is proved by the result of the campaigns of 1805 and 1809; and so strongly was Napoléon impressed with their importance, that he at one time entertained the project of putting himself at the head of the army of the Danube, and directing the army of reserve to its support, which would have brought a force of a hundred and eighty thousand men to bear upon the Austrian line in Germany. But Moreau would not submit to the indignity of acting as second in command to his former rival (5); and the disposition of his troops was too republican, and their attachment to their general too strong, to render it prudent to run the risk of revolt in so powerful an army, even for the sake of the greatest external advantages. An angry

Louis XIV at the head of my army. If the First Consul takes the command, I will send in my resignation,"—Sr. Cva, ii. 103. Hist. Mil.

Arch. Ch. ii. 334. Nap. i. 185, 161. Jom. xiii.
 113. St -Gyr, ii. 108, 137.
 Nap. i. 162. Jom. xiii. 41, 42.
 He said, "I have no notion of seeing a little discussion took place between the two generals, which terminated in the retention of the supreme command by Moreau, and the adoption of a modified plan for the campaign in Germany, in lieu of the brilliant but hazardous one projected by the First Consul, and in consequence Napoléon resolved to direct the army of reserve to Italy, and in person renew the struggle on the scene of his former triumphs on the plains of Piedmont (1)

126

At this period the army of the Rhine was far from cordially supporting the government of the First Consul Independent of the republican principles with which, in common with all the other French troops, they were more or less imbued, they were in a peculiar manner realous of the audacious general who had placed himself at the head of affairs, and seized the sceptre which they thought would have been more worthily held by his more disinterested rival Any attempt to displace Moreau from the command of this great army would probably have led to a collision, which might have proved fatal to the infant authority of Napoleon (2)

Field-marshal Kray had his headquarters at Donauschingen, but his chief magazines were in the rear of his army, at Stockach, Engen, Moeskirch, and Biberach The right wing, twenty-six thousand strong, under the command of Starray, rested on the Maine, its headquarters were at Heidelberg, and it guarded the line of the Rhine from the Renchen to the Maine The left, under the orders of the Prince of Reuss, was in the Tyrol, it consisted of twenty-six thousand men, besides seven thousand militia, and occupied the Rheinthal and the shores of the lake of Constance The centre, forty-three thousand strong, under the command of Aray in person, was stationed behind the Black Forest in the environs of Villingen and Donauschingen, its advanced posts occupied all the passes of that woody range, and observed the course of the Rhine from the lake of Constance to the neighbourhood of Kehl, while fifteen thousand men, under Keinmayer, guarded the passes from the Renchen to the Valley of Itell, and formed the link which connected the centre and right wing (5) Thus, though the Imperialists were nearly one hundred and ten thousand strong, they were stationed at such a distance from each other as to be incapable of rendering any effectual aid in case of need, and were rather to be regarded as three separate armies, the largest of which could not bring above forty thousand men into the field at any one point

Positions of The French army, at the opening of the campaign, was also divided in three corps The right, thirty-two thousand strong, under Lecourbe, occupied the cantons of Switzerland from the St -Gothard to Basic, won at the expense of so much blood in the preceding campaign, from the Imperialists, the centre, under Gouvion St -Cyr, who was transferred to that command from the army of Genoa, consisted of twenty-nine thousand men, and occupied the left bank of the Rhine, from New Brisach to Plobsheim, the left, under Sainte-Suzanne, twenty-one thousand strong, extended from hehl to Haguenau Independent of these, Moreau hiraself was at the head of a reserve, consisting of twenty-eight thousand men, which was assembled in ie enemy to bring nearly sixty thousand men to bear upon the Austrian force of forty thousand in the same quarter, an immense advantage, which was speedily turned to the best account by that able commander. Besides these great forces, the French general had at his disposal the garrisons of the fortresses of Switzerland, Landau, and Spires; the division of Mayence, commanded by Laval, and the troops of the fifth and twenty-sixth military divisions, forming an aggregate of thirty-two thousand men additional, which might be termed the reserves of the army; while the possession of the bridges of Kehl, New Brisach (1), and Basle, gave him the means of crossing the Rhine when ever he deemed it most advisable.

Tirst move. It was part of the plan of Napoléon to detach sixteen thousand men ments of the under Moncey, from Lecourbe's wing stationed in Switzerland, in order to take a share in the great operations which he meditated in the Italian plains; and therefore it was of importance that Moreau should early resume the offensive, both in order to take advantage of his numerical superiority before that detachment took place, and operate as a diversion to the army of Italy, which it was foreseen would soon be hard pressed by Melas in the mountains of Genoa. Orders, therefore, were transmitted to him to open the campaign without delay, and every thing was ready for a forward movement by the 24th April. The plan finally arranged between Moreau and the First Consul was to make a feint on the left against the corps of Keinmayer and the enemy's right; and having thus drawn their attention to that quarter, accumulate all his disposable forces against the Imperial centre, and overwhelm it by a concentration of the French left wing, centre, and reserve. By this means he hoped to break through the Austrian line of defence with a preponderating force, and, after a single battle, cut off their communication with the Tyrol and Italy, and force them back, after losing their magazines at Moeskirch and Engen, to a disadvantageous defensive on the banks of the

The better to conceal this able design, Moreau, for some days before the army was put in motion, made the greatest demonstrations against the enemy's right. Every thing was prepared for the head-quarters at Colmar, and it was publicly announced that the reserve was to be directed against Keinmayer and the Valley of Hell. Meanwhile, the columns moved to the different points assigned to them, and on the 25th, at daybreak, Sainte-Suzanne crossed the bridge of Kehl, at the head of sixteen thousand men, and drove in the advanced posts of Keinmayer towards the entrance of the Black Forest. On the same day, the centre crossed at New Brisach, under the orders of St.-Cyr, and advanced towards Freyburg. Kray upon this moved a considerable part of his centre and reserves to the support of Keinmayer; but Sainte-Suzanne having thus executed his feint, suddenly remeasured his steps, recrossed the Rhine at Kehl, and advanced by forced marches to New Brisach, where he crossed again and formed a second line in the rear of St.-Cyr. On the 25th, Moreau also crossed at Basle with the reserve, and moved in the direction of Lauffenburg (3).

Irresolution of the Austrian generals into the greatest perplexity. Uncertain where the Austrian generals into the greatest perplexity. Uncertain where the storm was likely really to burst, they adopted the ruinous resolution of guarding equally every point; and still inclining to the belief that the right and the Valley of Hell were really threatened, they retained thirty thousand men, under Starray and Keinmayer, on the right, and twenty-five thousand on the left in the rocks of the Voralberg, while their centre and of Engen (2).

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xiii. 110—111. St.-Cyr. ii. 109—110. (3) St.-Cyr. ii. 120, 129., Dum. iii. 94, 99. Jom. (2) Nap. i. 165. Jom. xiii. 116, 117. Dum. iii. xiii. 120, 125. 93, 91.

vine-I surpeak

reserve, now reduced to forty thousand men, were menaced by an attack by Sainte-Suzanne, Moreau, and St.-Cyr, at the head of seventy thousand combards batants. The two following days were employed in concentrating on, capitulated without firing a shot, and the left of Lecourbe entered into communication with Moreau and St. Cyr. Thus the whole French army, with the exception of two divisions of the left wing which observed Keimayer and Starray, were converging towards the Imperial magazines at Engen and Moeskirch, which it was evident could not be saved but by a battle fought against most unequal odds (1).

Ably profiting by the great advantages already gained, Moreau divances against their rected Lecourbe to move towards Stockach, in order to turn the centre of the enemy and cut off their communication with the left wing under the Prince of Reuss, while he himself, with the centre, reserve, and part of Sainte Suzanne's corps, moved directly upon the town of Engen. which it was anticipated would not be abandoned without a struggle, on account of the valuable magazines which it contained hray, on his part, assembled all the disposable force he could command in front of Engen, where he resolved to give battle, to gain time for the evacuation of his magazines upon Moeskirch But while he was concentrating his forces in that central position, the Prince of Lorraine, who formed the communication between the Austrian centre and left wing, and was retiring with inferior forces before Lecourbe, was suddenly assailed by the French advanced guard, under Molitor, and the cavalry of Nansouty, and entirely routed. Three thousand prisoners and eight pieces of cannon were the immediate results of this brilliant affair, but it became still more important by the capture of Stockach, with all its magazines, directly in rear of the position of kray in front

On the same day on which this important success was gained on Eastle of the right, the French centre, under Moreau in person, encountered the Austrian main body in the vast plain which lies before that town kray, with forty thousand men, was there in position, and the cavalry, above nine thousand strong, presented the most imposing spectacle, drawn up in echellon in front of the town. His design was to attack in front himself, at the head of the reserve and part of the centre, while St -Cyr, with his division, was directed to turn the left of the enemy. But that general being five leagues in the rear, could not come up until a late hour of the day; and Moreau, apprehensive lest, if the attack were delayed, the enemy would retreat, commenced the action himself at the head of thirty-two thousand men. The chief efforts of the French general were directed to gain possession of a plateau on the right of the Imperialists, which would both command their line of retreat and facilitate his own junction with St -Cyr, but he encountered the most stubborn resistance kray had skilfully availed lumself of all the advantages of Hohenhowen, the most elevated point on the field of battle, and the Imperialists retired to the village of Ehingen. To restore the combat, the Austrian general strongly reinforced that important post, while Moreau brought up his reserve to expel the enemy from it. At first the Republicans were successful, and the village was carried; but Kray having charged in person at the head of the Hungarian grenadiers, they were driven out with great slaughter, and fled to the plain in the greatest confusion. Moreau instantly advancing to the spot, succeeded in restoring a certain degree of order, and in part regained the ground which had been lost, but the Hungarians continued to hold the village, and at nightfall all the avenues to it were still in their possession (1).

Meanwhile the division of Richepanse, which had established itself the French. on the peak of Hohenhowen, was exposed to a furious attack from the Austrian right; the summit of the mountain resembled a volcano, which vomited forth fire in every direction; and it was easy to see, from the intensity of the light, which, as the twilight approached, illuminated the heavens in that direction, that it was only by the greatest efforts that he could maintain his ground. At seven o'clock, however, the vanguard of the corps of St.-Cyr, which had met with the greatest difficulties in the course of its march, and had been compelled to fight his way against Nauendorf's division through strong defiles, arrived in the field, and soon after began to take a part in the action. The combat now became more equal, and though the fire of artillery on both sides continued extremely violent, it was evident that the enemy fought only to gain time to withdraw his stores and ammunition. In fact, at this hour the Austrian general received intelligence of the defeat of the Prince of Lorraine and the capture of Stockach, which threatened his line of communications (2). He therefore drew off his forces in the direction of Liptingen and Moeskirch, where he formed a junction with that prince, who had retreated with the remains of his division in the same direction. The loss of the Austrians in this battle was above seven thousand men, and that of the French was as great, but the moral consequences of the success with which it terminated to the Republicans, were incalculable. It at once raised the spirit of the army, and produced that considence in themselves, which is the surest prelude to still greater success. Kray finding that the intentions of the enemy were now fully proclaimed, and that he had on his hands the whole strength of the French army, made the utmost efforts when too late to concentrate his forces. Keinmayer was advancing with the greatest expedition by the Valley of Hell, while Starray had received orders to hasten to the decisive point, leaving only six thousand in the neighbourhood of Manheim to observe the enemy's forces in that quarter. Moreau having received intelligence of this intended concentration of force, resolved to make the most of his present advantages, and attack the Austrians before they received any farther reinforcements. On the 4th, the Imperialists retired to a strong position in front of Moeskirch; the whole front of their line was covered by a great ravine, which descends from Hendorf to Moeskirch, and its left by the Ablach, a rocky stream which flows in a rapid course into the Danube; the cavalry, and a reserve of eight battalions of grenadiers, were stationed on the heights of Rohrdorf. Powerful batteries commanded the chaussée which approached the village, and by their concentric fire seemed to render all access impossible. In this formidable position were collected forty thousand foot soldiers, and twelve thousand splendid on airs, hesides above two hundred pieces of cannon (1).

⁽t) Dum. iii. 110, 111. Jom. xiii. 134, 139. (2) Dum. iii. 114, 116. Jom. xiii. 139, 141. St.-St.-Cyr. ii. 156, 161. (2) Cyr. ii. 158, 179.

Cyr. ii 190 191

Pants of Though Moreau had ordered Lecourbe to join him with all his Mostited disposable force, in order to take a part in the general action which has a proposed page, set he had not contribed matters as as to hyme all his force.

was approaching, yet he had not contrived matters so as to bring all his forces into the field at the same time. The consequence was, that Lecourbe, with that portion of his corps which had not taken a part in the action of the preceding day, first commenced the attack. He advanced with the greatest intropidity to the assault of his old antagonist the Prince of Lorraine; but he was received by so tremendous a fire from the cross batteries which hray had established on the heights, that his artillery was instantly dismounted, and he himself compelled to take refuge in the neighbouring woods to avoid the merciless storm Moreau, upon this, brought forward the division Lorges, and attacked the position by its left and the village of Hendorf; but the attacking columns having been assailed by the enemy's masses, who suddenly debouched from behind their batteries, were thrown into confusion and entirely routed. Encouraged by this success, kray made a sally with his right wing, and advanced into the plain; but it was received in so resolute a manner by the French left, that he was not only compelled to retire, but the victorious Republicans recovered all the ground they had lost, and the village was carried by their pursuing columns, who entered pell-mell with the fugitives. At the same time, Vandamme, with the Republican right, advanced against the Imperial left, and attacked the village of Moeskirch, the Austrians defended it with the utmost resolution, and it was taken and retaken several times; at length Lecourbe formed his division into four columns, which advanced simultaneously to the attack (2) Nothing could resist their impetuosity; they rushed down the sides of the rayines, up the opposite banks. and chased the Imperialists from the plateau, while Molitor drove them out of Moeskirch, and their victorious columns met in the centre of the town.

of Moeskirch, and their victorious columns met in the centre of the town.

Its teeps the transport have been first left forced, skilfully executed a change of position in the very middle of the battle. He drew back his left from the freperture plateau which had been so obstimately disputed, and took up a position parallel to the Danube, with his centre still resting on the plateau of Robridorf. This new position brought him on the flank of the division of Lorges, who was unsupported on that side. Kray instantly saw his advantage, and charged the exposed division, which was overthrown, and driven back in such confusion that nothing but the opportune arrival of Delmas with six fresh battalions prevented the French line being entirely broken through at that point. Both parties now made the utmost efforts; the Austrians to Delmas was furiously assailed, but all the efforts of the Imperialists were unable to break his admirable infantry. Still, however, kray redoubled his efforts, and charged limself at the head of his reserve against the division of Bastoul; Moreau also brought up reinforcements, and the combat continued tending parties was nearly equal, amounting to each to about six thousand men. The Austrians retained at the close of the day the plateau of Rohrdorf; the French slept on great part of the field of battle. But all the moral advantages of a victory were on their side; and as, on the following day, the Imperialists retired across the Danube—they in reality achieved the object for which they contended. The success was balanced chiefly in consequence of the non-arrival of St.-Gyr with his division, who lingered at Liptingen; had he come up and taken a part in the action, it would probably have terminated in a total defeat, the more disastrous to the Imperialists that they fought with their backs to the Danube. The cause of this inactivity in so able an officer, is to be found in the nature of the first instructions he had received from Moreau, and the intercepting of the couriers which conveyed the second orders to hasten to the decisive point (4).

⁽¹⁾ Jam xiii 144, 145 Dum io. 124, 125 (3) St Cyr, ii 195, 197 Dem iii 129, 131 (2) Jose xiii 146 130 i'um iii 126, 130 St - Jom xiii 150, 155

Following out the only orders he had received, St.-Cyr, on the succeeding day, was leisurely moving parallel to the Danube, between that river and the Austrian army, when he came unawares upon their whole force drawn up in a small but strong position in front of the bridge of Sigmaringen. The ground they occupied would barely have sufficed for the deploying of a single division, being formed by a bend of the Danube, the base of which fronting the enemy, was covered by a formidable array of artillery, behind which the army was posted in seven lines almost forming a close column, and protecting in this manner the passage of their stores over the river. Upon the approach of the French the surprise was equal on both sides; Kray, much alarmed, and apprehending an immediate attack, drew up his rearguard in battle-array, and disposed the artillery which had crossed as well as that which remained in their front, in such a manner as to enfilade all the roads by which the position might be approached. St.-Cyr also paused; with the half of his division, which alone had come up, he did not venture to attack the whole Austrian army, but he insulted them by a battery of twelve pieces, which was pushed forward within cannon shot; and so weakened was the spirit of the Imperialists, that they replied to this fire only by a discharge from their numerous batteries, instead of issuing from their lines and sweeping the pieces off by a charge of their powerful cavalry. There can be little doubt that if Moreau, instead of lingering at Moeskirch on the field of battle, had followed the traces of the enemy, joined St.-Cyr, and attacked them when backed by the Danube in this extraordinary position, he would have succeeded in destroying a large part of their army; but that general, with all his great qualities, had not the vigour in following up a success, which formed the leading characteristic of his more enterprising rival (2).

Affairs of Biberach. With his whole division; and with this augmented force he recrossed the Danube and moved towards Biberach. He had resolved to retire to the shelter of the intrenched camp at Ulm; but his object in this movement was to cover the evacuation of the great magazines at Biberach upon that place. Thither he was followed by the French army, and on the morning of the 9th May 9. May their advanced posts found eighteen thousand Austrians posted at the entrance of the remarkable defile which leads to that town. This rearguard was posted for the most part on a series of formidable heights behind Biberach, which could be approached only by passing through that town, and to take advantage of the short period which remained to clear his extreme right of the Prince of Reuss, who from the mountains of Tyrol was now in a situation, from the advance of the French army into the heart of Germany, to threaten its communications For this purpose Lecourbe was detached, with the right wing of the army, towards Feldkirch, the formidable nosition which covered the north-west of that rugged district, and against which all the efforts of Massena and Oudinot had failed in the preceding camnaign The troops who garrisoned their intrenchments, had been in great part drawn away to keep up the communication with the Prince of Condé, and the main body of the Imperialists on the eastern frontier of Tyrol, and those which remained, were so scattered over many different points, as to be incapable of rendering effectual resistance at any After some trifling successes at Pussen and Immenstadt, Coire and Luciensteg were abandoned to the enemy, whose superiority of force rendered opposition impossible, and, although the Austrians, in the first instance, gained some successes before l'eldkirch, they found themselves in the end unable to man sufficiently its extensive works, and on the following day that celebrated stronghold, which had lost much of its importance from the new theatre on which the war was carried on, was abandoned to the enemy (1)

⁽¹⁾ Memorial du Depoldi la Guerre, v. 92. St. (2) Nap. i. 169, 170. Dum. iii. 131. St.-Cyr, ii. Cyr, ii. 199, 201. Dum. iii. 129, 131. Jom. xiii. 203, 205.

While Lecourbe was thus clearing the right of the Republican position, Sainte Suzanne, who had been dispatched to the Lower Rinne to organize the French forces in that direction, was performing the same service on the banks of the Maine (2). He invested Philipsburg, and advanced to Aschaffenburg, where the Imperialists were repulsed, and the Lower Maine was speedily cleared of their troops.

Matters were in this situation, when the truce which had been Arm of corolladed at Alexandria between France and Austria a month before, was extended to Germany, under the appellation of the armistice of Parsdorf By this subsidiary treaty hostilities were terminated at all points in the empire, and were not to be resumed without a notice of twelve days. The French occupied all the country from Balzers in the Grisons, on the right hank of the Rhine, to the sources of the Inn, the whole valley of that river, from it by the reverse of the mountains to the sources of the Lech, and the whole intermediate country occupied by their troops along the Iser to its junction with the Danube, and from thence by Wessinburg and the Rednitz to the Maine The fortresses included within this line, still in the hands of the Imperialists, particularly Ulm, Ingolstadt, and Philipsburg, were to remain in their possession, on the condition, on the one hand, that their garrisons were not to be augmented, and on the other, that they were to be provisioned every ten days, at the sight of commissioners named by the belligerent powers (5) In the circumstances in which the Austrians then were, threatened with invasion in the Hereditary States in their most rulnerable quarter, the valley of the Danube, this armistice was a most fortunate event, and gave them a breathing-time, of which they stood much in need to repair their shattered forces, and prepare for the farther struggles which awaited the monarchy

Important as these events were, they were eclipsed by those which at the same period occurred to the south of the Alps.

An ordinary general, terrified at the dangers with which the sou-Designs of Napoléon thern departments were threatened, would have hastened with the army of reserve to the Var, in order to protect the menaced frontier of Piedmont. But Napoléon, who was well aware of the difficulties attending a front attack upon the Imperialists in that mountainous region, and appreciated with all the force of his genius the importance of the central position which he occupied in Switzerland, determined upon a more important and decisive operation. This was to cross the Alps by one of the central passes after the Austrians were far advanced in Piedmont, and thus interpose between them and their resources, cut them off from their communication with the Hereditary States, and compel them to fight under the most disadvantageous circumstances, with their front towards Lombardy, and their rear shut in by the Mediterranean sea and the inhospitable ridges of the Apennines (1). Defeat in such circumstances could not be other than ruin, while a disaster to the French would be of comparatively little importance, as their retreat, at least for the infantry and cavalry, was secure over the passes of the St.-Gothard or the Simplon into Switzerland, which was still in their hands, and where experience had proved they could resist the utmost efforts of the Imperialists.

But before this great blow could be struck, the French had a desthe troops perate and hopeless struggle to maintain on the ridges of the Apenmits of the nines. During the winter months, while the Austrians were reposing from their fatigues, and repairing their losses in men, horses, and equipments, in the fertile plains of Lombardy, the French army, perched on the rugged summits of the mountains, had to contend at once with the hardships incident to those sterile regions, and the contagious maladies which they brought with them from their disastrous campaign in the plains. No words can describe the sufferings they underwent during that afflicting period: a few regiments lost two thousand men in the hospitals of Genoa in four months: the wants of the troops, without shoes, blankets, or winterclothing, produced universal insubordination, and the authority of the officers being generally lost by the common calamities, vast numbers openly abandoned their colours and returned into France. The French army was rapidly melting away under such accumulated disasters, and every thing announced an easy conquest of Genoa to the Imperialists, when the torrent was arrested by the energetic measures adopted by the First Consul, immediately after he assumed the reins of public affairs (2).

Masséna is appointed to the command. Naspolicon's from the campaigns of 1795 and 1796, with that country, to the proclamation to these troops. Great general issued an energetic proclamation in Napoléon's name to the troops:—"The first quality of a soldier," said he, "is to bear with constancy the privations of war; valour is but a secondary consideration. Many corps have abandoned their colours; they have remained deaf to the voice of their officers. Are, then, the brave men of Castiglione, Rivoli, and Neumarkt no more? Rather than desert their colours, they would have perished at their feet. Your rations, you complain, have not been regularly distributed. What would you have done, if, like the 18th and 32d regiments, you had found yourselves in the midst of the desert, without either bread or water, having nothing but horse and camel flesh to subsist on ?- Victory will give us bread,' said they And you desert your standards' Soldiers of Italy a new general is to take the command of you, he was ever with the advanced guard in the days of your glory, place your confidence in him, he will again chain victory to your standards " These energetic words, and still more the magic of Napolcon's name, had a prodigious effect on the French soldiers, ever hable to pass with rapidity from one extreme to another. The desertion speedily diminished, and some severe examples which Masséna made immediately after his arrival, soon stopt it altogether. At the same time, the vigour of the First Consul provided more substantial additions to the comforts of the men their rations were augmented, and distributed " th regularity, a portion of their arrears was discharged, and by incredible conveyed to their frigid bivouacs, avering limbs By these means the spirit of the soldiers was in a 1910 so restored, that an army, which a few weeks before seemed menaced with approaching dissolution, became capable of the most persevering exertions. A new organization was completed by Massena, and four regiments, which he brought taken to resorte order with him, in the highest state of equipment from the north of Switzerland, became the model on which the army was formed. The army, which amounted to twenty-eight thousand men, in Liguria, exclusive of eight thousand on the summits of the Alps, from Argentiere to Vont Cenis, was divided into three corps. The right, under the command of Soult, sixteen thousand strong, occupied Gavi, the Campo-Freddo, the Bocchetta, and the summit of the valleys leading from Piedmont to Genoa, the centre, consisting of twelve thousand, guarded the ridges extending westward, from thence through Cadebone, Vado, Savona, and the Col di Tende, towards France, while the left wing, under Thureau, perched on the summit of the Alps which form the western boundary of the plain of Piedmont, watched the important passes of Mont Cenis, the Little St -Bernard, and the Col di Genevre (1) Post ons of The Austrians, cantoned in the plain below, and at the entrance of the numerous valleys which were occupied by the enemy, yere on the Bormida and in tuc 'i. . event for the object in view, which was the expulsion or the it-

140

" - not -six thousand men who composed their

Italy, and at length the order from Vienna arrived, and active operations commenced on the 6th April (2) The town of Genoa, against which all the efforts of the Imperialists were now directed, is situated in the centre of the gulf which bears its name, and from a very early period has occupied a distinguished place in the history of Descript on modern Europe Placed on the southern slope of the Apennine, of Genox where they dip into the Mediterranean sea, it exhibits a succession of lofty buildings, terraces, gardens, and palaces, rising one above another in imposing masses from the water's edge to a very great eminence. The gay and glittering aspect of the buildings, ascending in succession from the harbour to il e summit of the hills which screen it from the north, the splendour of the princes which adorn its higher quarters, the picture-que air of the towers and fortifications by which it is surrounded, the contrast between the dazzling whiteness of the edifices, and the dark green of the firs and ohies by (1) Eot i 1 455 456 Tap i 201 Jom 21 45 (2) Jon 25 33 58

which they are shrouded; and the blue sea which washes the southern ramparts of the city, and reflects its innumerable domes and spires, form a spectacle at once so varied and gorgeous, as to have early captivated the imaginations of the Italians, and secured for it the appellation of Genova la Superba. A double circle of fortifications surrounds this splendid city; the outer or exterior walls consist of a triangle of nine thousand toises in circumference. On the south, bounded by the sea, this line extends from the point of the Lanterne at the mouth of the rivulet called the Polcevera to the mouth of the Bisagno; the eastern side runs along the banks of the Bisagno to the fort of Eperon, which forms the apex of the triangle, and the western descends from that elevated point to the Lanterne along the margin of the Polcevera. The batteries on the western side command the whole valley of the Polcevera, with the long and straggling faubourg of St.-Pierro d'Arena, which runs through its centre; those on the east, on the other hand, are themselves commanded by the heights of Monte Ratti and Monte Faccio, a circumstance which rendered it necessary to occupy them by detached outworks, which are called the forts of Quizzi, of Richelieu, and of San Tecla, on the Madonne del Monte. Higher up the Apennines than the fort Eperon, is the plateau of the Two Brothers, which is commanded in rear by the Diamond Fort, perched on a summit twelve hundred toises from fort Eperon. The peculiar situation of Genoa, lying on the rapid declivity where the Apennines descend into the sea, rendered it necessary to include these mountains in its rear in the exterior line of its fortifications, and to occupy so many points beyond their wide circuit by detached outworks, which give the ridges by which it is encircled the appearance of an immense castle. The interior line which surrounds the city properly so called, is susceptible of some defence; but the possession of the outer works would render any protracted resistance impossible, as the batteries on the Lanterne and the fort of Eperon would expose the city to the horrors of a bombardment (1).

Measures taken for its Early in March, Admiral Keith, who commanded the British fleet be in the Mediterranean, established a close blockade of the harbour of Genoa and its dependencies, which promised to augment extremely the difficulties of the besieged; and in the beginning of April, General Mélas having completed his preparations, moved forward in three columns to the attack of the French defensive positions. Ott, with the left wing, fifteen thousand strong, was intrusted with the attack of the right, and the forts on Monte Faccio; Mélas with the centre, consisting of twenty-four thousand, was to ascend the valley of the Bormida, and separate the centre of the enemy from their left wing; while Elnitz with the right, amounting to eighteen thousand soldiers, was to assail their left, and to facilitate the important and decisive movements of Mélas in the centre. These attacks all proved attack of the Imperialists successful. The Imperialists experienced every where the most vigorous resistance, and the courage and enterprise on both sides seemed exalted to the highest pitch by the great object for which they contended, and the lofty eminences, midway between the plain and the clouds, on which the struggle took place. But the resolution of the Austrians, aided by their great superiority of numbers, and the advantage which the initiative always gives in mountain warfare, at length overcame all the aid which the French derived from the possession of the heights and the fortifications by which they were strengthened. Soult, on the French right, driven from Montenotte, the first scene of Napoleon's triumphs, was thrown separated from tile ma n body and driven back towards Genoa, while Savona, Cadebone, and Vado, were occurred by the Imperialists, and their extreme left, under Suchet, altogether detached from the centre, and thrown back towards France. Hohenzollern, who was intrusted with the attack of the Bocchetta, drove the French from the neighbourhood of Gay, far lark towards up that important pass, and with some difficulty succeeded in retaining the crest of the mountains, while on the extreme left, klenau obtained the most important advantages. Breaking up from the valley of the Trebbia, he advanced, in three columns, up the narrow ravines which led to the eastern fortifications of Genoa, carried the summit of the mountains, drove the Republicans from the Monte Faccio and the Monte Ratti, and invested the forts of Ouizzi, Richelien, and San Tecla, within cannon-shot of the walls of Genoa. Its inhabitants were variously agitated with hones and fears, as the firing of the musketry and cannon came nearer and nearer. At length the smoke was distinctly visible, even from the interior ramparts, and while the broken regiments of Soult were entering the city from the westward, by the gates of the whole heavens to the north and west were illuminated by strongly attached to the taust of the run estred a deliverance from the democratic tyranny to which for four years they had been subjected. Their ardour, strongly excited by the sight of the Austrian watchfires, and the sound of the tocsin which ince-santly rung to rouse the peasants on the neighbouring mountains, was with difficulty restrained even by the presence of a garrison, now increased, by the refluence from all quar-. . . . monty thousand men But Massena was not a man to be easily "- "- c an of Cenor.

⁽¹⁾ Nap. i. 203, 204. Jom. xiii. $8, 92. Dum. iii. 227, 231. Personal observation.

ICHAP, XXXI.

"" · "---"- (1). re espe-

lo tincens. by town, and attacked the Austrian division on the Monte Faccio with such vigour, that in a short time that important post was carried; the Imperialists were driven from the Monte Cornua, the Torrigho, and all the passes of the Apennines in that direction, and fifteen hundred men made prisoners, who have a shifull marched through the astonished crowds into the in-Imperialists in great strength on the hearth of 2" completing the separation of the French left wing from the centre of their army and the city of Genoa. No sooner was the French general informed of this disaster, than tions for the he perceived that it was not by any transient success on the Monte Faccio, but a vigorous effort towards Savona, and the re-establishment of his communications with Suchet, that the torrent of disaster was to be arrested. With this view he divided his army into three . . lor Mollis, being intrusted with the defence of the city the sea-coast. Suchel at line-(2) Pot, in 463 Jom 3 si 56 $7 Kap 1, 207

(t) Dum : 1 47 55 App.: 205 207 Jone 21 . (2) Pot, in: 452 Jom : if 5 53 57 Bot in: 460, 462 Thib. 20, 85 Argede Dum :: 52, 52, Thib. 20 110

treat, and co-operate in the general attack which, it was hoped, would lead to the capture of the Austrian division at Montenotte and Savona, and reestablish the important communication with Suchet and France. The execution of the combined attack was fixed for the 9th of April (1).

Meanwhile Melas, having so far strengthened Elnitz on the heights measures to prevent it, of Vado as to enable him to make head against Suchet, resolved to which prove successful. move with the bulk of his force against Masséna at Genoa, wisely judging that the principal efforts of his opponent would be directed to the opening a communication with France and the left wing of his army. With this view he moved forward Hohenzollern, on the evening of the 8th, who, after a sharp resistance, carried the Bocchetta by moonlight, which had been abandoned after the reverse on the Monte Faccio, and drove the French down the southern side to Campo Marone. This success so entirely disconcerted Soult, who directed Gazan's division, that though he had gained considerable advantages, he deemed it prudent to suspend the march of his troops. On the following night, however, he was strongly reinforced by the general-in-chief, and on the 11th he assailed with superior forces the division of St.-Julien at La Vereira, and after a desperate conflict routed it with the loss of fifteen hundred prisoners and seven standards. But this success was more than compensated by the disaster which on the same day befell the left of the French at Cogoletto, who were overwhelmed by Melas, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of Masséna in person, and driven back, sword in hand, to the neighbourhood of Voltri. At the same time, Elnitz and Suchet combated with divided success on the Monte Giacomo. At first the Republicans were victorious, and an Austrian brigade commanded by General Ulm, separated from the main body, was surrounded and compelled to lay down its arms; but this success having led Suchet to attempt on the following day the attack of the Monte Giacomo itself, a lofty ridge of prodigious strength, he was repulsed with great slaughter, and, after leaving the slopes of the mountain and its snowy crest covered with the dead and the dying, driven back in confusion to Melogno and Sette Pani on the

Thus though the Republicans combated every where with rare intrepidity, and inflicted fully as great a loss on their adversaries as they received themselves, yet, on the whole, the object of their efforts was frustrated. Gigantic efforts had been made, blood had flowed in torrents, and the rival armies, amidst the rocks and clouds of the Apennines, had struggled with unheardof obstinacy, but still the Austrians retained their advantage; their columns were still interposed in strength between the French centre and left, and the multitude of killed and wounded was weakening, in an alarming degree, an army now cut off from all external assistance. Both parties now made the utmost efforts to concentrate their forces, and bring this murderous warfare to a termination. On the 15th, Melas renewed the attack with the utmost vigour at Ponte Ivrea, and at the same time reinforced Hohenzollern on his left, and directed him to press down from the Bocchetta, and threaten the communication of the French with Genoa. Both armies, though Continued successes of exhausted with fatigue, and almost destitute of provisions, fought with the utmost obstinacy on the following day; but at length Soult, finding that his rear was threatened by a detachment of Hohenzollern, fell back to Voltri, overthrowing in his course the Austrian brigade who endeavoured to dispute the passage. On the same day, Massen's in person was repulsed by the Imperialists under Latterman, and finding his retreat also menaced by Hohenzollern, he also retreated to Voltri in the night, where the ty o French divisions were united on the following morning (1) But the Imperialists, who now approached from all quarters, gave the wearred Republicans no rest in this position. From the heights of Monte Payole, Melas beheld the confusion which prevailed in the army of his opponents, while the corps of Ott, whose right wing now began to take a part in the hostilities, already threatened Sestri, and the only line of retreat to Genoa which still remained to them A general attack was immediately commenced Melas descended the Monte Fayole, while Ott, whose troops were comparatively fresh, assailed it from the eastern side, and by a detachment menaced the important post of Sestrain their rear. Ott forced his way to Voltri, while Soult was still resolutely combating Melas on the heights of Madonna dell' Acqua, at the foot of Monte Fayole, and a scene of matchless horror and confusion immediately ensued Soult, informed that his communications were threatened, instantly began his retreat; the victorious troops of Ott were assailed at once by the flying columns of that general, who fought with the courage of despair, and the troops they had displaced from Voltri, who railied and returned to the rescue of their comrades

144 HISTORY OF EUROPE. CUAP XXXI.

Polcevera, and found shelter within the walls of Genoa (2).

Thus, after a continued combat of fifteen days, maintained with matchless constancy on both sides, and in which the advantages of a fortified central position on the side of the Republicans long compensated their inferiority of force to the Imperialists, Massena with his heroic troops was shut up in Genoa, and all hope of co-operating with Suchet, or receiving reinforcements from France, finally abandoned In these desperate conflicts the loss of the French was seven thousand men, fully a third of the force which remained to their general after he was shut up in Genoa, but that of the Austrians was fully as great, and they were bereaved, in addition, of above four thousand prisoners (5), a success dearly purchased by the I reach in a city where the dearth of provisions already began to be severely felt. Meanwhile Suchet, having been informed by Oudinot, who had made a perilous presage by sea in the midst of the English cruisers, of the desire of Massen's that he should co-operate in the general attack, instantly made preparations for a fresh assault on the blood-stained ridge of the Monte Giacomo, but in the interval, Melas, now relieved on his left by the retreat of Massens into Genoa, had reinforced Fluitz by three brigades, and the position of the Imperialists, naturally strong, was thereby rendered impregnable. The consequence was, that the moment the Republicans made their appearance at the foot of the mountain, they were attacked and overthrown so completely, that it vas only owing to an excess of caution on the part of the Imperialists that they were not wholly cut off and made prisoners. By this disastrous defeat Suchet lost all hope of regaining his communication with Genoa and was compelled to full back, for his own security towards the Var and the frontier of Piedmont (1).

⁽¹⁾ Pot at 461 465 hap 1 211 Jona and 71 75 Dam 1 69 73 Thib 189 200 (2) Thib 200 217 Dam in 11,78 Jept 20 76 78 Bot in 457 (3) Dam 1 16 7° Jon 2 i 26 78, 25 (4) Dam ij *9 Jon 21 1, 19 20

On the other hand, Melas, having completed the investment of Genoa, and left Ott with twenty-five thousand men to blockade that fortress. moved himself, with the bulk of his forces, to reinforce Elniz on the Monte Giacomo, and pursue his successes against Suchet. To aid in the accomplishment of this object, he moved up part of the twenty-five thousand men, who, during this desperate struggle in the Apennines, had lain inactive in Piedmont under Kaim. Threatened by so many forces, Suchet re-Who is tired with about ten thousand men to Albuega, in the rear of driven over the Varinto Loano, and took a position at Borghetto, where Kellermann, in 4795, had so successfully arrested the advance of General Divini. There, however, he was attacked a few days after by Melas with superior forces, and driven from the field with great loss: He endeavoured in vain to make a stand on the Monte di Torria and the Col de Tende: the columns of the Austrians turned his flanks and drove him across the frontier and over the Var, with the loss of fifteen hundred prisoners, and an equal number killed and wounded. Thus the French, after a desperate struggle, were at length driven back into their own territories; and nothing remained to them of their vast conquests in Italy but the ground which was commanded by the cannon of Genoa (1). While Melas was thus chasing the Republican eagles from the tack on the Maritime Alps, Ott was preparing a general attack, by which he honed to drive the French from the exterior line of defence, and render their position untenable in that important fortress. With this view, while the English fleet kept up a severe cannonade upon the town from the entrance of the harbour, a general assault was planned both against the defence of Massena on the Bisagno, the Polcevera, and the fortified summits of Madonna del Monte and Monte Ratti. These attacks were all in the first instance successful. Bussy, supported by the fire of the English gunboats, made himself master of St.-Pierro d'Arena and the valley of the Polcevera; while Palfi, by a vigorous attack, carried the Monte Ratti, surrounded the fort Richelieu, surprised the fort Quizzi, and made himself master of all the southern slopes of the Monte Faccio and the Madonna del Monte. At the same time Hohenzollern stormed the important plateau of the Two Brothers, and summoned the commander of fort Diamond, now completely insulated (2), to surrender. The Imperialists even went so far as to make preparations for establishing mortar batteries on the commanding heights of Albaro, and bombarding the city over its whole extent, so as to render the French position untenable within its walls.

Which, at first successful, is finally advantages thus gained, they would have speedily brought the repulsed by Masséna. Siege of Genoa to a conclusion, and by a concentration of all their forces on the Bormida, might have defeated the invasion by Napoléon over the Alps, and changed the fate of the campaign. But General Ott had only twenty-five thousand men at his disposal, while an equal number, under Kaim, lay inactive in the plains of Piedmont, and this imprudent distribution of force proved in the highest degree prejudicial to the Imperial interests through the whole campaign. Availing himself with skill of the immense advantage which the possession of a central position in an intrenched camp afforded, Masséna withdrew four battalions from the eastern side, where he judged the danger less pressing, and despatched them, under Soult, to re-

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

146

gain the heights of the Two Brothers, while he himself bastened, with four battalions more, to reinforce Miellis on the Monte Albaro The Austrians, who had gained time to strengthen their acquisitions, received the attack with great resolution, the fury of the combatants was such that soon fire-arms became useless, and they fought hand to hand with the bayonet, for long the result was doubtful, and even some success was gained by the Imperialists. but at length the Republicans were victorious, and the Monte Ratti, with its forts and four hundred prisoners, fell into their hands. At the same time, Soult glided round by the ravines into the rear of the Two Brothers, and the Austrians, under Hohenzollern, assailed in front by the garrison of fort Diamond, and in the rear by these fresh troops, were thrown into confusion, and escaped in small parties only, by throwing themselves with desperate resolution on the battalions by which they were surrounded By the result of this day the Austrians lost three thousand men, of whom eighteen hundred were made prisoners, and they were forced to abandon all the ground which they had gained from their opponents, excepting the Monte Faccio, while the spirits of the French were proportionally elevated by the unlooked for and glorious success which the sternation of the besieger and attacked the fortified up in the walls of Genoa (2) Successful Nothing of moment occurred for the next ten days, but during that time Massena, finding that famine was likely to prove even a more formidable enemy than the Austrian bayonets, and that it was necessary at all hazards to endeavour to procure a supply of provisions, resolved upon a sally The Austrians had been celebrating, by a fen de joie along their whole lines, the success of Melas on the Yar, when Massena determined, by a vigourous effort, both to prove that the spirits of his own garrison were not sinking, and to facilitate the meditated descent of the First Consul into Piedmont Miollis was charged with the attack of the Monte Faccio on the front of the Sturla, while Soult, ascending the bed of the torrent Bisagno. was to take it in flank. The attack of Miollis, commenced before Soult was at hand to second it, failed completely. He gained possession in the first instance of the front positions of the enemy on the slopes of the mountain, and was advancing over the ground, drenched with the blood of so many brave men of both nations, when his troops were charged by the Imperialists in close column with such vigour, that they were instantly thrown into confusion, and driven back in the utmost disorder to the glacis of the Roman gate of Genoa, where, by the opportune arrival of the general in chief with a reserve, some degree of order was at length restored The expedition of Soult was more fortunate The Imperialists, assailed in front by the Republicans whom Massena had railed on the Sturia, and in flank by the troops of Soult, were driven from the Monte Faccio, and were only able to force their way

..

he was repulsed with gre

⁽⁵⁾ Dum i 236 241 Jon x 7 27 25 Nap 1 212 Rot, ii 472 413 Th b 210, 230 (2) A angular c reumstance occurred at the assault of the House Faccio. The sold era of two breach reg ments the 25 h light infautry and the

had in consequence been earefully kept anumber from each o her; but during the confusion of this bloody coull et their ranks became intermingled monopy could character ranks became interminging the same thirst if r glory an unted hotherpre and these greenes sent sents for the trained their former pelousines that the soff reads trained their former pelousines that the soff read sentence of the m d 1 of the fire all for ghis side by a del the brackets during the terms independent of the day —See Brans 11 215 216

The cheering intelligence of the passage of the Alps by Napolcon, A fresh sor and the first successes of Moreau in Germany, revived the dying hopes of the French garrison. The spectres who wandered along the ramparts were animated with a passing chullition of joy, and Massena, taking advantage of this momentary enthusiasm, commenced a general attack on the Monte Ratu and the Monte Faccio But this effort was beyond the strength of his men. The soldiers marched out with all their wonted enthusiasm, and with a fierce countenance began the ascent of the heights; but the unusual exertion were out their exhausted strength, and when they arrived at the foot of the redoubts, they were torn to pieces by a tremendous and well-sustained fire of grape and musketry, without the possibility of making any effort to avert their fate Broken and dispirited, the enfeebled mass was driven back into the city, after having acquired, from sad experience, the mournful conviction that the Imperialists, whatever their reverses might have been in other situations, had abated nothing of their firm countenance in the neighbourhood of Genoa. Two days afterwards, the rolling of distant thunder in the Apennines was mistaken by General Gazan for the welcome note of their approaching deliverers Massena himself hastened, with a palpitating heart, to the heights of Tinaille, but he was there witness to the im-

of provisions had been extravagantly high, and in its latter days grain of any sort could not be had at any cost. The horrors of this prolonged famine, in a city containing above a hundred thousand souls, cannot be adequately described. All day the cries of the unhappy richins were heard in the streets, while the neighbouring rocks, within the walls, we recovered with a famished crowd, seeking, in the vilest animals and the smallest traces of regetation, the means of assuaging their intolerable of the neonle were still more dreadful.

dure the agony by which they were surrouses, . . , . . . to relieve them from their sufferings. In this extremity, the usual effect of long-endured calamity was conspicuous, in closing the fountains of mercy in the human heart, and rendering men insensible to every thing but their own disasters. Infants deserted in the streets by their parents, women who had sunk down from exhaustion on the public thoroughfares, were abandoned to their fate, and sought, with dying hands, in the sewers and other receptacles of filth, for the means of prolonging for a few hours a miserable existence. In the desperation produced by such prolonged torments, the more ardent and impetuous sought the means of destruction; they rushed out of the gates, and threw themselves on the Austrian bayonets, or precipitated themselves into the harbour, where they perished without either commiscration or assistance. In the general agony, not only leather and skins of every kind were consumed, but the horror at human flesh itself was so much abated, that numbers were supported on the dead bodies of their fellowcitizens. Pestilence, as usual, came in the rear of famine, contagious fevers swept off multitudes, whom the strength of the survivors was unable to inter. Death in every form awaited the crowds whom common suffering had blended together in the hospitals, and the multitude of unburied corpses which encumbered the streets threatened the city with depopulation (1), almost as certainly as the grim hand of famine under which they were melting away.

Such accumulated horrors at length shook the firm spirit of Mas-Masséna at length sursena. The fermentation in the city had risen to an alarming height, renders. and there was every probability that the extenuated French garrison would be overpowered by the multitudes whom despair had armed with unwonted courage. Matters were in this desperate state, when the French general received a letter from Melas, couched in the most flattering terms, in which he invited him, since resistance had now become hopeless. to conclude an arrangement for the evacuation of the city. Masséna at first suspected that this was merely a ruse to cover the approaching raising of the siege, and refused to accede to any terms; but a severe bombardment both by land and sea, on the night of the 51st, having convinced him that there was no intention on the part of the Allies of abandoning their enterprise, and provisions, even after the most rigid economy, existing only for two days more, the negotiation was resumed, and at length, on the 4th June, when they were totally exhausted, a capitulation was agreed to, in virtue of which the gates were surrendered to the Allies on the following day at noon. It was stipulated that the garrison should evacuate Genoa, with their arms, artillery, baggage, and ammunition; they were conducted by the Allies, to the number of nine thousand, by land and sea, to Voltri and Antibes. The conditions of the treaty were faithfully observed towards the vanguished. and all the stipulations in favour of the democratic party at Genoa implemented by the Austrians with true German faith (2); a trait as honourable to them, as the opposite conduct of the English admiral at Naples a year before, was derogatory to the well-carned character of British integrity.

When the evacuation took place, the extent of suffering which the besieged had undergone appeared painfully conspicuous. "Upon entering the town," says the faithful annalist of this memorable siege, "all the figures we met bore the appearance of profound grief or sombre despair; the streets resounded with the most heart-rending cries; on all sides death was reaping its victims, and the rival furies of famine and pestilence were multiplying their devastation; in a word, the army and the inhabitants seemed approaching their dissolution (5)." The Allies acted generously to the heroic garrison, with their illustrious chief; while, upon the signal of a gun fired from the ramparts, innumerable barks, laden with provisions, entered the harbour, amidst the transports of the inhabitants. "Your defence," said Lord Keith to Masséna, "has been so heroic, that we can refuse you nothing; yet you alone are worth an army; how can we allow you to depart (4)?"

Melas sets out to meet Napoleon. It was not without reason that the Imperialists urged forward the evacuation, and granted the most favourable terms to the besieged, in order to accelerate their departure. At the very time when the negotiations were going on, a messenger arrived from Melas, with intelligence of the entry of Napoléon into Milan, and an immediate order to raise the siege. The embarrassment of the Austrian general, between his reluctance to relinquish so important a conquest and his apprehensions at disobeying the orders of his superior officer, was extreme; and he deemed himself happy at being able to escape from so serious a dilemma, by granting the most favourable terms of capitulation to his enemy. No sooner was the place surrendered, than he detaclied a division to Tortona, and a brigade to Placentia, and set out on the following day with his remaining forces in the same direction, leaving Hohenzollern to occupy Genoa with sixteen battahons (4)

⁽¹⁾ Bot. iii. 476, 477. Dum. iii. 257. Jom. xiii.

⁽⁴⁾ Jom, xiii. 229, Dum, iii. 263.

Meanwhile Suchet continued his refrograde movement towards the Air to the Var, and on the 14th May effected the passage of that river is the Var, and on the 14th May effected the passage of that river is the was closely followed by the Austrans under Melas, who, on the same day, entered into Aice, and took up their quarters in the territory of the Republic The enthusiasm of the troops rose to the highest pitch, at length they found themselves on the soil of France, and that ambitious power, which had so long sent forth its armies to devastate and oppress the adjoining states, began now to experience the evils it had inflicted on others (2) profit from The Var is a mountain river, in general fordable, but which, like on on all mountain streams in those latitudes, is readily swelled by rains in a few hours into an impetuous torrent. It has always been considered as a weak part of the French frontier, because, to give solidity to its left extremity, it would be necessary to carry the line of defence far into the French Alps, at the distance of ten or twelve leagues from the sea The portion of this line, however, which was occupied by Suchet, was much more inconsiderable, and did not extend above half a mile in breadth between the sea and the first rugged emmences. It had been fortified with care during the years 1794 and 1790, and the long bridge which traverses the river was covered by a formidable tete de-pont, mounted with a plentiful array of heavy artiflery In this position Suchet hoped to arrest the enemy until the army of reserve, under Napolcon, had descended into Italy and appeared in their rear In effect, the alarming reports which he received of the appearance of a powerful French force in the valley of Yosta, induced Melas, soon after his arrival at Aice, to detach a large part of his troops in that direction, and at length, when there could not longer be any doubt of the fact, he set out in person for Piedmont, leaving Elmitz, with eighteen thousand men, to make himself master of the bridge of the Var Suchet had but thirteen thousand, but they were covered by formidable works, and were daily receiving additions of strength from the conscripts and national guard in the interior. The Imperialists having at length, got up their heavy artiflery from Aice, unmasked their batteries on the 22d, and advanced with great intrepidity to the attack. But when Suchet evacuated the territory of Nice, May 22 At 2 k by he left a garrison in Fort Montauban, perched on a rock in the the Aus t ans on it rear, from whence every thing which passed in the Austrian lines policel was visible, and from which he received, by telegraph, hourly intelligence of what was preparing on the enemy's side. Thus warned, the Republicans were on their guard, the Austrian columns, when they arrived within pistol shot of the works, were received with a tremendous fire of grape and musketry, and after remaining long and bravely at the foot of the loss (3)

Fresher and them

Carry this important post, in order to secure a barrier against the french, in the event of its being necessary to retire, and make head against intrenchments, a prey to a murderous fire which swept off numbers by every discharge, they were compelled to retire, after sustaining a considerable

⁽³⁾ Jon xil 200 201 Dam. 11 04 261

the invasion of the First Consul. Already accounts had arrived of the descent of Thureau upon Suza, and the capture of Ivrea by Lannes with the vanguard of Napoléon. Collecting, therefore, all his forces, he made a last effort. Twenty pieces of heavy cannon, placed in position within musket-shot, battered the Republican defences, while the English cruisers thundered on May 27. The right of the position. Under the cover of this imposing fire, the Hungarian grenadiers advanced to the assault, and the sappers succeeded in breaking through the first palisades; but the brave men who headed the column almost perished at the foot of the intrenchment, and, after sustaining a heavy loss, they were compelled to abandon their enterprise. After this check, all thoughts of carrying the têtes-de-pont on the Var were laid aside, and the Austrians broke up during the night, and retreated, with seventeen thousand men, in the direction of Piedmont (1).

It is now time to resume the operations of Napoléon and the of the army army of reserve, which rendered these retrograde movements of of reserve the Imperialists necessary, cut short their brilliant career of victories, and ultimately precipitated them into the most unheard-of reverses. This army, which had been in preparation ever since its formation had been decreed by the Consuls, on 7th January, 1800, had been intrusted, since the commencement of April, to Berthier, whose indefatigable activity was well calculated to create, out of the heterogeneous elements of which it was composed, a formidable and efficient force. Thirty thousand conscripts and twenty thousand veteran troops rendered disposable by the conclusion of the war in la Vendée, were directed to different points, between Dijon and the Alps, to form the basis of this armament. Napoléon, whose gigantic mind was equal alike to the most elevated conceptions and the superintendence of the minutest details, was indefatigable in his endeavours to complete the preparations, and from the interior of his cabinet directed the march, provisioning, and equipment of every regiment in the army. He was at first undecided whether to direct the great reserve upon Germany or Italy; but the angry correspondence which had passed between him and Moreau. joined to the reverses experienced by Masséna in the environs of Genoa, at length determined him to cross the Alps and move upon Piedmont. Reports were obtained from skilful engineers, on the state of all the principal passes, from Mount Cenis to the St.-Gothard. After full consideration, he determined to cross the Great St.-Bernard. The advantages of this passage were obvious. It was at once the shortest road across the mountains, being directly in front of Lausanne, Vevay, and Besancon where the greater part of the army was cantoned, and it led him in a few days into the rear of the army of Melas, so as to leave him no alternative but to abandon his magazines and reserves, or fight his way to them, with his face towards Milan and his back to the Maritime Alps. In such a situation, the loss of a considerable battle could hardly fail to be fatal to the Imperial army, and might reasonably be expected to lead to the conquest of all Italy; whereas a reverse to the Republicans, who could fall back upon the St.-Gothard and the Simplon, was not likely to be attended with any similar disaster (2).

Towards the success of this great design, however, it was indispensable that the real strength and destination of the army of reserve should be sk fiel mea carefully concealed, as the forces of the Austrians lay in the valaurest kee ley of Aosta, on the southern side of the St.-Bernard, and by ocus street cupying in strength the summit of the mountain, they might render the passage difficult, if not impossible. The device fallen upon by the first Consul for this purpose was to proclaim openly the place where the army was collected, and the service to which it was destined, but to assemble such inconsiderable forces, there as might render it an object rather of rulicule than alarm to the enemy. With this view it was pompously announced, in various ways, that the army of reserve, destined to raise the siege of Genoa, was assembling at Dijon, and when the Austrians spies reparred tither, they found only a few battalions of conscripts and some companies of troops of the line, not amounting in all to eight thousand men, which entirely dissipated the fears which had been formed by its announcement. The army of reserve at Dijon in consequence became the object of general ridicule throughout Europe, and Melas, relieved of all fears, for his rear, continued to press forward with perseverance his attacks on the Var, and considered the account of this army as a mere feint, to serve as a diversion to the siege of Genoa (1).

The St.-Bernard, which had been used for above two thousand of the pay years as the principal passage between Italy and I rance, lies age of the between Martigny in the Valais, and Aosta in the beautiful valley of the same name on the southern side of the Alps Though the direct communication between these countries, however, and perfectly passable for horsemen and foot-soldiers, it presented great difficulties for the transit of artillery and caissons. As far as St.-Pierre, indeed, on the side of the Valais, the passage is practicable for cannon, and from Aosta to the Italian plains the road is excellent, but in the interval between these places the track consists merely of a horse or bridlepath, following the sinuosities of the ravines through which it is conducted, or round the innumerable precipiees which overhang the ascent. The summit of the ridge itself, which is little short of 8000 feet above the level of the sea (2), consists of a little plain or valley, shut in by snowy mountains of still greater elevation, about a mile in length, with features of such extraordinary gloom as to be indelibly imprinted in the recollection of every traveller who has witnessed it. At the northern extremity, where the path, emerging from the steep and rugged ascent of the Valley of Desolation, as it is emphatically called, first enters upon the level surface, is situated the convent of St.-Bernard, the highest inhabited ground in Europe, founded a thousand years ago by the humanity of the illustrious saint whose name it bears, and tenanted ever since that time by pious and intrepid monks, the worthy followers of such a leader, who there, amidst ice and granite, have fixed their abode, to rescue from destruction the travellers overwhelmed by snow, amidst the storms to which those elevated regions are at almost every season of the year exposed. At the southern end are still to be seen a few remains of the Temple of Jupiter Denninus which formerly stood at the summit of the Italian side of the pass, guage their gratitude to Heaven for having surmounted the dangers of me massage. In the centre of the valley, midway between the remains of heather review at Lausanne the vanguard of the real army of reserve, consisting of six regiments of veteran troops newly equipped, and in the finest possible order Shortly after, he received a visit from Carnot, the minister of war, who brought accounts of the victory of Moeskirch, and the advance of Moreau in Germany, while the stores and artillery arrived from all quarters, The preparations were rapidly completed A hundred large firs were hollowed out so as to receive each a piece of artillery, the taken for carriages were taken to pieces and put on the backs of mules, the ammunition dispersed among the peasants, who arrived from all quarters with their beasts of burden to share in the ample rewards which the French engineers held forth to stimulate their activity. Two companies of artillery workmen were stationed, the one at St -Pierre, on the north, the other at St -Remi, on the south of the mountains, to take to pieces the artillery and remount them on their carriages; the ammunition of the army was conveyed in little boxes, so constructed as to go on the backs of mules With such admirable precision were these arrangements made, that the dismounting and replacing of the guns hardly retarded for an hour the march of the columns, and the soldiers, animated by the novelty and splendour of the enterprise, vied with each other in their efforts to second the activity of their officers Berthier, when they reached the foot of the mountains, addressed them in the following proclamation "The soldiers of the Rhine have signaised themselves by glorious triumphs, those of the army of Italy struggle with invincible perseverance against a superior enemy. Emulating their virtues, do you ascend and reconquer beyond the Alps the plains which were the first theatre of French glory Conscripts I you behold the ensigns of victory, march, and emulate the veterans who have won so many triumphs, learn from them how to bear and overcome the fatigues inseparable from war, Bonaparte is with you, he has come to witness your first triumph. Prove to him that you are the same men whom he formerly led in these regions to immortal renown (1)." These words inflamed to the highest pitch the ardour-

gaged Passage of On the 16th May the First Consul slept at the convent of St.-Maurice, and on the following morning the army commenced the passage of the mountain During the four following days the march continued, and from eight to ten thousand men passed daily. The first night they slept at St -Pierre, the second at St -Remi or Etroubles, the third at Aosta Aapohon lumself remained at St -Maurice till the 20th, when the whole had crossed. The march, though toilsome, presented no extraordinary difficulties till the leading column arrived at St -Pierre But from that village to the summit, the ascent was painful and laborious in the highest degree. To each gun a hundred men were harnes-ed, and relieved by their comrades every half mile, the soldiers yied with each other in the fatiguing undertaking of dragging it up the toilsome and rugged track, and it soon became a point of honour for each column to prevent their cannon from falling behind the array. To support their efforts, the music of each regiment played at its head, and where the paths were peculiarly steep, the charge sounded to give additional vigour to their exertions Toding painfully up the ascent, hardly venturing to halt to draw breath lest the march of the column should be retarded, ready to sink under the weight of their arms and baggage, the of the soldiers, and there was but one feeling throughout the army, that of seconding to the uttermost the glorious enterprise in which they were ensoldiers animated each other by warlike songs, and the solitudes of the St.-Bernard resounded with the strains of military music. From amidst the snows and the clouds, the glittering bands of armed men appeared; and the distant chamois on the mountains above, startled by the unwonted spectacle, bounded away to the regions of desolation, and paused on the summit of its inaccessible cliffs to gaze on the columns which wound around their feet (1).

After six hours of toilsome ascent, the head of the army reached the hospice at the summit; and the troops, forgetting their fatigues, traversed with joyful steps the snowy vale, or reposing beside the cool waters of the lake, rent the air with acclamations at the approaching termination of their labours. By the provident care of the monks, every soldier received a large ration of bread and cheese, and a draught of wine at the gate; a seasonable supply, which exhausted the ample stores of their establishment, but was fully repaid by the First Consul before the termination of the campaign. After an hour's rest, the columns wound along the margin of the lake, and began the steep and perilous descent to St.-Remi. The difficulties here were still greater than on the northern side. The snow, hard beneath, was beginning to melt on the surface, and great numbers both of men and horses lost their footing, and were precipitated down the rapid declivity. At length, however, they reached a more hospitable region; the sterile rocks and snow gave place to herbage, enamelled with the flowers of spring; a few firs next gave token of the descent into the woody region, gradually a thick forest overshadowed their march, and before they reached Etroubles, the soldiers, who had so recently shivered in the blasts of winter, were melting under the rays of an Italian sun (2).

Napoléon himself crossed on the 28th. He was mounted on a sure-footed mule, which he obtained from the Priory of St.-Maurice, and attended by a young and active guide, who confided to him, without knowing his quality, all his wishes, and was astonished to find them, some time after, all realized by the generous recollection of the First Consul. He rested an hour at the convent, and descended to St.-Remi, over the hard and slippery surface of the snow, chiefly on foot, often sliding down, and with considerable difficulty (5).

That on the limits of the living world Strikes in the ice its roots; Another and another now, And now the larch, that flings its arms Down curving like the falling wave, And now the aspen's glittering leaves Grey glitter on the moveless twig, The poplar's varying verdure now, And now the buch so beautiful, Light as a lady's plume."

(3) Nap. i. 261. of the pas-Alps, by Hannibal, Napoléon,

The passage of the St.-Bernard has been the subject of great exaggeration from those who are unacquainted with the ground. To speak of the French troops traversing paths Suwarrow, known only to the smuggler or the and Macdo- chamois hunter, is ridiculous, when the road has been a beaten passage for two thousand years, and is traversed daily in summer by great numbers of travellers. One would suppose from these descriptions, it was ever the Col du Geant between Chamouni and Aosta, or over the summit of the Col du Bonhomme, that the French army had passed. It will bear no comparison with the passage of Hannibal over the Little St .-

(1) Nap. i. 259. Dum. ii. 170. Bot. iv. 13.
(2) Dum. iii. 171, 172. Bot. iv. 14, 15. Nap. i. by paths comparatively unformed, and in the course of which the Carthaginian general lost nearly half his army. Having traversed on foot both the ground over which Napoléon's army the Great St.-Bernard, that traversed by passed at the Great St.-Bernard, that traversed by Suwarrow on the St.-Gothard, the Schachenthal, and the Engiberg, and that surmounted by Macdonald in the passage of the Splugen, the Monte Aprigal, and the Mont Tonal, the author is enabled to speak with perfect confidence as to the compara-tive merit of these different undertakings. From being commenced in the depth of winter, and over ridges comparatively unfrequented, the march of Macdonald was by lar the most hazardous, so far as mere natural difficulties were concerned; that of Suwarrow was upon the whole the most worthy of admiration, from the vigorous resistance he experienced at every step, the total inexperience of his troops in mountain warfare, and the unparalleled hardships, both physical and moral, with which its later stages were involved. That of National Action of the control of the c poleon over the St.-Bernard, during a fine season, without any opposition from the enemy, with every aid from the peasantry of the district, and the experience of his own officers, and by a road impracticable only for carriages and cannon, must, with every impartial observer acquainted with the ground, rank as the casiest of these memorable enterprises.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

The army is Lannes, who commanded the advanced guard, descended rapidly stopped in the beautiful valley of Aosta, occupied the town of the same name, Aosta by the and overthrew at Chatrillon a body of fifteen hundred Croatians who endeavoured to dispute his passage. The soldiers, finding Bard themselves in a level and fertile valley, abounding with trees, vines, and pasture, deemed their difficulties past, and joyfully followed the hourly increasing waters of the Dora Baltea, when their advance was suddenly checked by the fort and the cannon of Bard. This inconsiderable fortification had wellingh proved a more serious obstacle to the army than the whole perils of the St -Bernard. Situated on a pyramidal rock midway between the opposite chil's of the valley, which there approach very near to each other, and at the distance of not more than fifty yards from either side, it at once commands the narrow road which is conducted close under its ramparts, and is beyond the reach of any but regular approaches. The cannon of the ramparts, two-and-twenty in number, are so disposed upon its well-constructed bastions, as to command not only the great road which traverses the village at its feet, but every path on either side of the adjacent mountains by which it appears practicable for a single person to pass (1). No sooner was the advanced guard arrested by this formidable obstacle, than Lannes advanced to the front, and ordered an assault on the town, defended only by a single wall. It was quickly carried by the impetuosity of the French grenadiers, but the Austrians retired in good order into the fort on the rock above, and from its secure casements the garrison kept up an incessant fire upon every column that attempted the passage, Marescot, the chief of the engineers, reported, cross the mountains (2),

Napoleon, deeming all his difficulties surmounted, was advancing with joyful steps down the southern declivity of the St.-Bernard, when he received this alarming intelligence. Instantly advancing to the vanguard, he ascended the Monte Albaredo, which commanded the fort on the left bank of

after a reconnoissance, that the fort could not be carried by a coup-de-main, while the rocky chil's of the mountains on either side opposed the greatest difficulties to a regular siege. The advance of the army was instantly checked.

tillery. In vain the Austrian commandant was summoned, and threatened with an instant assault in case of refusal to surrender; he replied as became a man of courage and honour, well aware of the importance of his position, and the means of defending it which were in his power, A few pieces of artillery were, by great efforts, hoisted up to an emmence on the Monte Great shill with wh th the obstacle was carried Albaredo which commanded the fort, but their fire produced little impression on the bomb-proof batteries and vaulted easements pressed, however, and it was indispensable that thearmy should without me

lay continue its advance. Contrary to the advice of Marescot, Napoléon ordered an escalade, and Berthier formed three columns, each of three hundred grenadiers, who advanced with the utmost resolution at midnight to the assault. They climbed in silence up the rock, and reached the works without being discovered. The outer palisades were carried, and the Austrian videttes retired precipitately to the ramparts above, but at its foot all the efforts of the Republicans were frustrated. The garrison was instantly on the alert. A shower of balls spread death through their ranks, while vast numbers of shells and hand grenades thrown down amongst them (1), augmented the confusion and alarm inseparable from a nocturnal attack. After sustaining a heavy loss, they were compelled to abandon the attempt; the passage seemed hermetically closed; the army could not advance a step further in its progress.

In this extremity, the genius and intrepidity of the French engineers surmounted the difficulty. The infantry and cavalry of Lannes' division traversed one by one the path on the Monte Albaredo, and re-formed lower down the valley, while the artillerymen succeeded in drawing their cannon, in the dark, through the town, close under the guns of the fort, by spreading straw and dung upon the streets, and wrapping the wheels up, so as to prevent the slightest sound being heard. In this manner forty pieces and a hundred caissons were drawn through during the night, while the Austrians, in unconscious security, slumbered above, beside their loaded cannon, directed straight into the street where the passage was going forward. A few grenades and combustibles were merely thrown at random over the ramparts during the gloom, which killed a considerable number of the French engineers, and blew up several of their ammunition waggons, but without arresting for a moment the passage. Before daylight a sufficient number were passed to enable the advanced guard to continue its march, and an obstacle, which might have proved the ruin of the whole enterprise, was effectually overcome. During the succeeding night, the same hazardous operation was repeated, with equal success; and while the Austrian commander was writing to Melas that he had seen thirty-five thousand men and four thousand horse cross the path of the Albaredo, but that not one piece of artillery or caisson should pass beneath the guns of his fortress, the whole cannon and ammunition of the army were safely proceeding on the road to Ivrea. The fort of Bard itself held out till the 5th June; and we have the authority of Napoléon for the assertion, that if the passage of the artillery had been delayed till its fall, all hope of success in the campaign was at an end. The presence of an Austrian division seven thousand strong would have equally sufficed to destroy the French troops as they emerged without cannon from the perilous defile of the Albaredo. On such trivial incidents do the fate and the revolutions of nations in the last result often depend (2).

After a short skirmish at livrea, the French advance to lurin 1704 had withstood for ten days all the efforts of the Duke of Vendome with a formidable train of artillery, had of late years fallen into decay, and its ruined walls, but partially armed, hardly offered an obstacle to an enterprising enemy. Lannes ordered an assault at once on the three gates of the city. He advanced himself with the column on the right, and with his own hand directed the first strokes of the hatchet at the palisades. The defences were soon broken down, the chains of the drawbridges cut, the gates blown open, and the Republicans rushed, with loud shouts, on all sides into the town. A battalion which defended the walls was forced to fly, leaving three hundred prisoners in the hands of the enemy, and the Austrian troops drawn up behind the town retired precipitately towards Turin. They took post behind the Chinsella, spreading themselves out, according to custom, over a long line, to cover every approach to the capital of Piedmont. They were there attacked on the following day by Lannes, and a warm contest ensued. The Imperialists, confident in the numbers and provess of their cavalry, vigorously charged the Republicans; but, though they led up their horses to the very bayonnets of the infantry, they were in the end repulsed, and the bridge over the river was carried by the assailants. After this check the Austrians retired towards Turin, and Lannes, pursuing his successes, pushed on to the banks of the Po, where he made himself master of a flotilla of boats, of the greater value to the invading army, as they did not possess the smallest bridge equipage. The whole army, thirty-six thousand strong, was assembled at Ivrea, with all its artillery, on the 28th, while the advanced guard pushed its patrols to the gates of Turm (1).

⁽¹⁾ Nap. i. 263. Jom. xiii. 185. Bour. iv. 102. (2) Nap. i. 263, 265. Jom. xiii. 185, 188. Dum. Dum. iii. 176. Bour. iv. 102, 103.

Passage of While the centre of the army of reserve was thus surmounting the detached with sixteen thousand choice troops from the army of the Ilhine, crossed the St.-Gothard, and began to appear in the neighbourhood of the Lago Maggiore. At the same time General Bethencourt, with a brigade of Swiss troops, ascended the Simplon, and foreing the terrific defile of Gondo, appeared at Duomo d'Ossola, and opened up the communication with the left of the army. Thus, above sixty thousand men, converging from so many different quarters, were assembled in the plains of Piedmont, and threatened the care of the Imperial army engaged in the defiles of the Apennines from Genoa to the mouth of the Var (2).

all the strength he could collect to the Bormuda. The orders arrived at Geora just at the time when the capitulation was going forward, so that the advance of the army of reserve was too fate to raise the siege of that fortress, but still an important and decisive operation awaited the First Consul. To oppose him in the first instance, the Austrians had only the corps of Wukassowich, Laudon, and Haddick, who could hardly muster eighteen thousand men in all, and not above six thousand in any one point, so widely were their immense forces scattered over the countries they had conquered, while the concentration of their troops from the Var and the coast of Genoa would require a considerable time (5).

Different In these circumstances the French commander had the choice of plant which three different plans, each of which promised to be attended with hypoton important results. The first was to incline to the right, form a

^{(1) \}text{\text{Typ.}} 1 256, 247. Dum. 11. 135, 137. Jom. (2) Jom. xii. 120 192. Dum. id. 187, 192. xii. 193. 193.

iunction with Thureau, and, in concert with Suchet, attack the Austrian army under Melas; the second, to cross the Po by means of the barks so opportunely thrown into his power, and advance to the relief of Masséna, who yet held out; the third, to move to the left, pass the Ticino, form a junction with Moncey, and capture Milan with the stores and reserve parks of the Imperialists. Of these different plans the first appeared unadvisable, as the forces of Melas were superior to those of the First Consul without the addition of Moncey, and it was extremely hazardous to run the risk of a defeat while the fort of Bard still held out and interrupted the retreat of the army. The second was equally perilous, as it plunged the invading army, to occupy Milan. without any line of communication, into the centre of the Imperial forces, and it was doubtful whether Genoa could hold out till the Republican eagles approached the Boccheta. The third had the disadvantage of abandoning Massena to his fate, but to counterbalance that, it offered the most brilliant result. The possession of Milan could not fail to produce a great moral impression, both on the Imperialists and the Italians, and to renew, in general estimation, the halo of glory which was wont to encircle the brows of the First Consul. The junction with Moncey would raise the army to lifty thousand effective men, and secure for it a safe retreat in ease of disaster by the St.-Gothard and the Simplon; the magazines and parks of reserve collected by the Austrians, lay exposed to immediate capture in the unprotected towns of Lombardy; while, by intercepting their communications with Germany, and compelling them to fight with their rear towards France and the Maritime Alps, the inestimable advantage was gained of rendering any considerable disaster the forerunner of irreparable ruin (1).

Moved by these considerations, Napoléon directed his troops rapidly Adiance in-to Lambar- towards the Ticino, and arrived on the banks of that river on the dy, and cap. 31st May. The arrival of so great a force, in a quarter where they were totally unexpected, threw the Austrians into the utmost embarrassment. All their disposable infantry was occupied at Belinzona to oppose the advance of Moncey, or had retired behind the Lago Maggiore, before Bethencourt. The only troops which they could collect to oppose the passage were the cavalry of Festenberg, with a few regiments of Laudon, a force under five thousand men, and totally inadequate to maintain the line of the Ticino from Sesto-Calende, where it flows out of the Lago Maggiore, to Pavia, where it joins the Po, against an enemy thirty thousand strong. Unable to guard the line of the river, the cavalry of Festenberg was drawn up in front of Turbigo, when Gérard, with the advanced guard, crossed the river under cover of the French artillery, advantageously posted on the heights behind, and instantly made himself master of the bridge of Naviglio, by which the infantry of the division began to defile to his assistance. He was immediately and warmly attacked by the Imperial cavalry, but though they at first had some success, yet the French having retired into a woody position deeply intersected by canals, they succeeded in maintaining their ground, until the Republicans had crossed over in such numbers as to enable them to carry Turbigo with the bayonet, and effectually establish themselves on the left bank of the river. At the same time Murat effected a passage at Buffalora, on the great road from Turin to Milan, with hardly any opposition; the Austrians retired on all sides, and Napoléon, with the advanced guard, made his triumphant entry into Milan on the 2d June, where he was received with transports of joy by the democratic party, and the same applause by the inconstant populace which they had lavished the year before on Suwatrow (1)

Nothing could exceed the astonishment of the Vilanese at this He spreads sudden apparation of the republican hero. Some believed he had died near the Red Sea, and that it was one of his brothers who commanded the army, none were aware that he had so recently crossed the Alps, and revisited the scenes of his former glory lie instantly dismissed the Austrian authorities, re established, with more show than sincerity, the republican magistrates, but, foreseeing that the chances of war might expose his partisans to severe reprisals, wisely forbade any barsh measures against the dethroned party. Taking advantage of the public enthusiasm which his unexpected arrival occasioned, he procured, by contributions and levies, large supplies for his troops, and augmented their numbers by the regiments of Moncey, which slowly made their appearance from the St -Gothard On the 6th and 7th June these troops were reviewed, and the French outposts extended in all directions. They were pushed to Placentra and the Po, the principal towns in Lombardy being abandoned, without resistance, by the Austrians Pavia fell into their hands, with 200 pieces of cannon, 8,000 muskets, and stores in proportion. At the same time the following animated proclamation was addressed to the troops, and electrified all Europe, long accustomed only to the reverses of the Republicans -"Soldiers' when we began our march, one of our departments was in the possession of the enemy consternation reigned through all the south of Trance The greatest part of the Ligurian republic, the most faithful ally of our country, was invaded. The Cisalpine republic, annihilated in the last campaign, groaned under the feudal yoke You advanced, and already the French territory is delivered joy and hope have succeeded in our country to consternation and fear You will restore liberty and independence to the people of Genoa you already are in the capital of the Cisalpine The enemy, terror-struck, seeks only to regain his frontiers, you have taken from him his hospitals, his magazines, his reserve parks. The first act of the campaign is finished, millions of men address you in strains of praise. But shall we allow our audacious enemies to violate with impunity the territory of the republic? Will you permit the army to escape which has carried terror into your families? You will not March, then, to meet him, tear from his brows the laurels he has won, teach the world that a malediction attends those who violate the territory of the great people. The result of our efforts will be unclouded glory and a durable peace (2) " unclouded glory and a durable peace (2) " While these important operations were going forward in I om beautiful Mile these important operations were going forward in I om beautiful States and States and States are supported to the project of threatening his autoriary's to the states are communications by a movement on Vercell. But when on the point the Austrian in of executing this design, he received intelligence of the simul taneous disasters which in so many different quarters were accumulating out the Austrian monrichy, the repeated defents of kryin Germanny, and his concentration in the intrenched camp at Lim, the arrival of Moncey at Bil linzona, and the retreat of Wukassowich towards the tida. In these circums stances more cautious measures secund necessary, and he resolved to con centrate his army under the camon of Alexandria. But while the Frinch soldiers were abandoning themselves to the flattering illusions which his extraordinary and rapid success suggested, they received the disastrous intelligence of the surrender of Genoa; and Napoleon had the mortification of finding, from the point to which the troops who capitulated were to be conveyed, that they could be of no service to him in the decisive operations that were fast approaching. It was evident, therefore, that he would have the whole Austrian army on his hands at once, and therefore no time was to be lost in striking a decisive blow. The fort of Bard capitulated on the 5th June, which both disengaged the troops of Chabran employed in its reduction, and opened the St.-Bernard as a secure line of retreat in case of disaster. The rapid marches and countermarches of the Republicans through the plain of Lombardy, had made the enemy fall back to Mantua and the line of the Mineio, and the French troops already occupied Lodi and blockaded Pizzighitone, and other fortresses on the Po; but from this dispersion of force, and eccentric direction given to a large portion of the army, arose a most serious inconvenience; it reduced to one-half the mass that could be collected to make head against Melas in Piedmont. In effect, out of the sixty thousand men which he commanded in Lombardy, Napoléon could only collect thirty thousand in one body to meet the main army of the enemy; but, confident in his own abilities and the spirit of his troops, he resolved with this inconsiderable force to cut Melas off from his line of retreat, and for this purpose moved upon Stradella, on the right bank of the Po, which brought him on the great road from Alexandria to Mantua (1).

The French army began its march towards the Po on the 6th June, and Lannes, commanding the advanced guard, crossed that river with the Australia at St.-Cipriano. At the same time, Murat, who had broken up from Montebells. Lodi, attacked the tete-de-pont at Placentia, and drove the Austrians out of that town on the road towards Tortona, while Duhesme, not less fortunate, assailed Cremona, and expelled the garrison, with the loss of eight hundred men. The line of the Po being thus broken through at three points, the Imperialists every where fell back, and abandoning all hope of maintaining their communication with Mantua and their reserves in the east of Italy, concentrated their forces towards Casteggio and Montebello. Ott there joined them with the forces rendered disposable by the surrender of Genoa, and stationed his troops, on a chain of gentle eminences, in two lines, so disposed as to be able to support one another in case of need. Fifteen thousand chosen troops were there drawn up in the most advantageous position; their right resting on the heights which formed the roots of the Apennines, and commanding the great road to Tortona which wound round their feet; their left extending into the plain, where their splendid cavalry could act with effect. At the sight of such an array, Lannes was a moment startled, but instantly perceiving the disastrous effect which the smallest retrograde movement might have on a corps with its rear resting on the Po, he resolved forthwith to attack the enemy. His forces did not exceed nine thousand men, while those of the enemy were fifteen thousand strong; but the division of Victor, of nearly equal strength, was only two leagues in the rear, and might be expected to take a part in the combat before its termination (2).

Desperate The French infantry, with great gallantry, advanced in echellon, and bloody action there, under a shower of grape-shot and musketry, to storm the hills on in which the right of the Austrian position, where strong batteries were Austrians placed, which commanded the whole field of battle; and succeeded in carrying the heights of Revetta: but they were there assailed, while disordered by success, by six fresh regiments; and driven with great slaughter down into the plain In the centre, on the great road, Watrin with difficulty maintained himself against the vehement attacks of the Imperialists; and notwithstanding the utmost efforts of Lannes, defeat appeared inevitable. when the battle was restored by the arrival of a division of Victor's corps, which enabled the Republicans to rally their troops and prepare a fresh attack. New columns were immediately formed to assail the heights on the left. while Watrin commenced a furious onset in the centre, the Austrians were every where driven back, and the triumph of the French appeared certain, when Ott brought up his reserves from the second line, and victory again inchined to the other side. The Republicans, attacked in their turn by fresh troops, gave way, and the loud shouts of the Imperialists announced a total overthrow, when the arrival of the remainder of Victor's corps not only restored the balance, but turned it against the Austrians Their troops, however, were too experienced, and their confidence in themselves too great, to vield without a desperate heart-stirring recollections . won in the first Italian cam, . . reaped in so many later triumphs, and both parties felt that the fate of the war, in a great degree, depended on their exertions; for the Austrians struggled to gain time for the concentration of their forces to meet this new enemy, the Republicans to avoid being driven back with rumous loss into the Po-The last reserves on both sides were soon engaged, and the contending parties fought long hand to hand with the most heroic resolution. At length the arrival of Napoleon with the division Gardanne, decided the victory (1). Ott, who now saw his right turned, while the centre and left were on the point of giving way, reluctantly gave the signal of retreat, and the Imperialists, in good order, and with measured steps, retired towards S -Juliano, after throwing a garrison of a thousand men into the fortress of Tortona (2).

⁽¹⁾ Napoléon, i. 275, 277. Dum. iii. 276, 279. (2) Bot. iv. 23. Nap. i. 279. Dum. iii, 288, 299. Jom. xiii. 212, 220. Bul. 121, 127. Jom. xiii. 257, 258.

Position of In this bloody combat, the Austrians lost three thousand killed in treps and wounded, and fifteen hundred prisoners. The French had to of Stradells lament nearly an equal number slain or disabled; but the moral Apronies effect of the victory was immense, and more than counterbalanced all their losses. It restored at once the spirit of their troops, which the conti-, nued disasters of the preceding campaign had severely weakened; and when Napoleon trave diers lying on their ancient e formed by the advance of a lower ridge of the Apennines towards the Po, where the intersected and broken nature of the ground promised to render unserviceable the numerous squadrons of the enemy. In this position he remained the three following days, concentrating and organizing his troops for

Melas in front, and occupied, at Stradella, the sole line by which the Austrian general could re-establish his communications with the plain of Lombardy, disasters of the most formidable kind were accumu-

⁽¹⁾ hap i 278 280 Bot iv 23, 24 Join an 256 260 Dum. in 293 227 Bul 137, 145 (2) 73hs was one of the nost desperate actions while had yet occurred in the war. The bours."

said fantes + cracked in my diess on like glass to a be teterm. -- Forsessesse, ir 112 (3) \ap 1 280 Dum 111, 22", 3.3 June 5 ... 260. 251

Gallatter of 1 cscrre, amounting in all to sixty thousand men; while in his selation of a rear; Suchet occupied all the mountain passes, and was driving through before him the scattered Imperialists like chaff before the wind. On the large of the his left, the awful barrier of the Alps, leading only into a hostile country, precluded all hopes of retreat; while on his right, the ridges of the Apeninies, backed by the sea, rendered it impossible to regain by a circuitous route the Hereditary States. Nothing could be more perilous than his situation, but the Austrian veteran was not discouraged, and concentrating all his disposable forces, he resolved to give battle, and open a communication, sword in hand, with the eastern provinces of the empire. Nor was it without reason that he ventured on this step, albeit hazardous at all times, and doubly so when retreat was impossible and communication with the base of operations cut off. He could collect above thirty thousand veteran troops, admirably adapted for his numerous and magnificent cavalry. Having taken his resolution, he dispatched froops in all directions to concentrate his forces; Elinitz, with the broken remains of his corps, was recalled from Coa, Albertacollern from Genoa, the defence of which was intrusted to the extenuated prisoners, liberated from captivity by its fall (1); while a courier was dispatched, in haste, to Admiral keith, to accelerate the arrival of a corps of twelve thousand English, who at this decisive crisis lay inactive at Minorca.

of the First Consul The right rested on impracticable morasses, extending to the Po; the centre was strengthened by several large villages; the left, commanding the great road, extended over heights, the commencement of the Apennines, crowned with a numerous artillery. Appoleon remained there, awaiting the attack, for three days, but the Austrian general had scarcely completed his operations, and he judged it not advisable to abandon the open plain, so favourable for his cavalry, for the broken ground selected by the enemy On the 11th, Desaix, who had returned from Egypt, and performed quarantine at Toulon, arrived at headquarters with his aides-de-camp, Savary and Rapp. They sat up all night conversing on the changes of France, and the state of Egypt since they had parted on the banks of the Aile; and the First Consul, who really loved his heutenant, and appreciated his military talents, immediately gave him the command of the division of Boudet Finding that the Austrians were resolved not to attack him where he was, and remained grouped under the cannon of Alexandria, and fearful that they might recoil upon Suchet, or incline to the right towards Genoa, or the left to the Ticino, and threaten in turn his armed with cannon.

Melas learned on the 10th, at Alexandria, the disastrous issue of the combat at Montehello, and the immense extent of the fosces sustained by Flauts.

Far from being stunned by so many reverses, he only tose in firmness as the

⁽¹⁾ Dam, 11 208, 209 Jons 216 244, 248 Bul. (2) App 1 221 223 But iv 21 Dum, 12 220, 209.

left in front, and the right at half a day's march in the rear, in marching order, not more than twenty-two thousand men, under Lannes and Victor. could be brought till noon into the field to withstand the shock of the whole Austrian army. The vehemence of the cannonade soon convinced him that a general battle was at hand, and be instantly dispatched orders to Desaix to remeasure his steps, and hasten to the scene of action. But before he could do this, events of the utmost importance had taken place. At eight o'clock, the Austrian infantry, under Haddick and haim, preceded by a numerous and splendid array of artillery, which covered the deploying of their columns, commenced the attack. They speedily overthrew Gardanne, who, with six battalions, was stationed in front of Marengo, and drove him back in disorder towards that village. They were there received by the bulk of Victor's corps, which was by this time drawn up, with its centre in the village, and its wings along the hollow of Fontanone, which separated the two armies; that of Lannes was still in the rear. For two hours. Victor withstood all the efforts of Haddick and haim with heroic resolution, and at length the corps of Lannes came up, and the forces on both sides became more equal. The battle now raged with the utmost fury, the opposing columns stood, with invincible firmness, within pistol-shot of each other, and all the chasms, produced by the dreadful discharges of artillery, were rapidly filled up by a regular movement to the centre of the brave men who formed the ranks. While this desperate conflict was going on, intelligence was received that the advanced guard of Suchet had reached Acqui in the rear Melas, uneasy for his communications, detached two thousand five hundred horse to arrest his progress, an unnecessary precaution, as he was too far off to effect any thing on the held of battle, and which, perhaps, decided the fate of the day. At length the perseverance of the Austrians prevailed over the heroic devotion of the French . Marengo was carried, the stream of the Fontanone forced, and the Republicans were driven back to the second line they had formed in the rear. Here they made a desperate stand, and Haddick's division, disor-Great suc dered by success, was repulsed across the stream by Watrin with the right of Lannes' division, but the Republicans could not follow up their advantage, as Victor's corps, exhausted with fatigue, and severely weakened ipport any offensive move-

i pport any otensive moveredoubled their efforts; a which victor's corps, weakened by four hours' meessant fighting, was at length broken. The imperialists pressed forward with redoubled vigour, when their adversaries gave way, their regiments were rapidly pursued, and frequently surrounded, and no recource remained but to traverse for two leagues the open plun as far as S.-Juhano, where the reserve under Lannes might be expected to arrive for their support. The imperialists rapidly followed, preceded by fifty pieces of

however, the retreat became more disorderly; in vain kellermann and Cham-peaus, by repeated charges, arrested the Imperial casalry, which swept round the retreating columns. He could not check the Hungarian Indiatry, which advanced steadily in pursuit, haling at every lifty yards, and pouring in destructive volleys, while the intervals between the regiments were filled up by a powerful artillery, which incessantly sent a storm of grape-shot through the retreating masses. No firmness could long endure such a trial; gradually the squares broke; the immense plain of Marengo was covered with fugitives; the alarm spread even to the rear of the army, and the fatal cry, "Tout est perdu, sauve quipeut," was already heard in the ranks (1).

Matters were in this disastrous state when Napoléon, at eleven o'clock, arrived on the field of battle with his guard. The sight of his staff, surrounded by two hundred mounted grenadiers, revived the spirits of the fugitives; the well-known plumes recalled to the veterans the hopes of success. The fugitives rallied at S.-Juliano, in the rear of those squares of Lannes which still kept their ranks, and Napoléon detached eight hundred grenadiers of his guard to the right of the army, to make head against Ott, who there threatened to turn its flank. At the same time, he himself advanced with a demibrigade to the support of Lannes, in the centre, and detached five battalions, under Monnier, the vanguard of Desaix's division, to Castel Ceriolo, on the extreme right, to hold in check the light infantry of the enemy, which was there making serious progress. The grenadiers first advanced in square into the midst of the plain, clearing their way equally through the fugitives and the enemy; from their sides, as from a flaming castle, issued incessant volleys of musketry, and all the efforts of the Imperialists were long unable to force back this intrepid band. At length, however, they were shaken by the steady fire of the Imperial artillery, and being charged in front by the Hungarian infantry, and in flank by the Austrian hussars, were broken and driven back in disorder. Their destruction appeared certain, when the leading battalions of Desaix's division, under Monnier, arrived, disengaged this band of heroesfrom the numerous enemies by whom they were surrounded, and advancing rapidly forward, made themselves masters of the village of Castel Ceriolo. Here, however, they were charged with fury by Vogelsang with part of Ott's division, who retook Castel Ceriolo, and separated Monnier from the grenadiers of the guard; it was soon, however, retaken by the French, and Cara St.-Cyr, barricading himself in the houses, succeeded in maintaining that important post during the remainder of the day (2).

While the reserves of Napoléon were thus directed to the French brought into right, with a view to arrest the advance of the Austrians in notion under that quarter, the left was a scene of the most frightful disorder. Then was felt the irreparable loss to the Austrians which the detachment of so large a portion of their cavalry to the rear had occasioned; had the squadrons detached to observe Suchet poured in upon the broken fugitives in that quarter, the defeat of the left and centre would have been complete; and Desaix, assailed both in front and flank, would have come up only in time to share in the general ruin. But nothing of the kind was attempted; Melas, deeming the victory gained, after having had two horses shot under him, and being exhausted with fatigue, retired at two o'clock to Alexandria, leaving to his chief of the staff, Zach, the duty of following up his success; and the broken centre and left of the Republicans retired to S.-Juliano, leisurely followed by the Austrian army. Zach put himself at the head of the advanced guard, and at the distance of half a mile behind him came up Kaim with three brigades, and at an equal distance in his rear the reserve, composed of Hungarian grenadiers. Napoléon on his part had resolved to abandon the great road to Tortona, and effect his retreat by the shorter line of Sale or Castel Nuova (5).

⁽¹⁾ Nap. i. 289, 290. Bot. iv. 27, 28. Dum. iii. iv. 29, 30. Jom. xiii. 279, 282. Sav. i. 176. Bul. 310, 317. Jom. xiii. 272, 279. Sav. i. 171, 175. 249, 260. (3) Nap. i. 291, 292. Jom. xiii. 232, 283. Bot. (2) Nap. i. 290, 291. Dum. iii. 313, 321. Bot. iv. 29, 30. Dum. iii. 320. Sav. i. 177. Bul. 260, 261.

Matters were in this desperate state, when, at four o'clock, the main body of Desarx at length made its appearance at S -Juliano "What think you of the day 9" said Amoleon to his heutenant, when he arrived with his division. "The battle," said Desary, "is completely lost But it is only four o'clock, there is time to gain another one (1) " Napolcon and he alone were of this onimon, all the others counselled a retreat In pursuance of this resolution, the remains of Victor and Lannes' corps were re-formed, under cover of the cavalry, which was massed in front of S -Juliano, a masked battery prepared under the direction of Marmont, and Desaix advanced at the head of his corns, consisting of little more than four thousand men, to arrest the progress of the enemy Napoleon, advancing to the front, rode along the line, exclaiming, "Soldiers! we have retired far enough. You know it is always my custom to sleep on the field of battle" The troops replied by enthustastic shouts, and immediately advanced to the charge. Zach, little anticipating such an onset, was advancing at the head of his codefeated lumn, five thousand strong, when he was received by a discharge from twelve pieces, suddenly unmasked by Marmont, while at the same time Desaix debouched from the village at the head of his division. The Imperialists, astonished at the appe expected to find only fugitives

a snare, paused and fell back, a the front, and checked the advance of the enemy. At this moment Desaix was struck by a ball in the breast, and soon after expired. His last words were, "Tell the First Consul that my only regret in dying is, to have perished before having done enough to live in the recollection of posterity." This cata-nadiers advanced to the charge; the French in their turn hesitated and broke, and victory was more doubtful than ever (2).

At this critical moment, a happy inspiration seized kellermann, hellering which decided the fate of the day. The advance of Zach's column converta a had, without their being aware of it, brought their flank right before his mass of cavalry, eight hundred strong, which was concealed from their view by a vineyard, where the festions, conducted from tree to tree, rose above the horses' heads, and effectually intercented the sight hellermann instantly charged, with his whole force, upon the flank of the Austrians, as they advanced in open column, and the result must be given in Tach himself, with two thousand men, were made prisoners, the remainder, routed and dispersed, fled in the utmost disorder to the rear, overthrowing in their course the other divisions which were advancing to their support (1).

> success, in all the disorder as d secur ty of vic ory, success, in all the investiges of security of vices; I see it, I am in the in direct films they lay down their arms. The white did not acre yes much time as it took mate we te these a at less "make" thouse v 351 The Duckers of Shranter states shot that all expected v heard the Lott e of Marrage discussed by Launes, Victor and the other governia engaged, at her own table, and that they and meet ed the victory to Athermana charge will Are

(4) Sar 1, 178, 179, Bul. 271, 275 Nop. 1 292.

took place; our line wavered, broke, and fed; the Austrians rapidly advanced to follow up their

That defeat This great achievement was decisive of the fate of the battle. The of the Austrans. remains of Victor and Lannes' corps no sooner beheld this success, than they regained their former spirit, and turned fiercely upon their pursuers. The infantry of Kaim, overwhelmed by the tide of fugitives, gave way; the cavalry, which already inundated the field, was seized with a sudden panic, and, instead of striving to restore the day, galloped off to the rear, trampling down in their progress the unfortunate fugitives who were flying before them. A general cry arose, "To the bridges-to the bridges!" and the whole army disbanding, rushed in confusion towards the Bormida. In the general consternation, Marengo was carried, after a gallant defence, by the Republicans; the cannoniers, finding the bridges choked up by the fugitives plunged with their horses and guns into the stream, where twenty pieces stuck fast, and fell into the hands of the enemy. At length Melas, who hastened to the spot, rallied the rearguard in front of the bridges, and by its heroic resistance, gained time for the army to pass the river; the troops, regaining their ranks, re-formed upon the ground they had occupied at the commencement of the day; and after twelve hours' incessant lighting, tho sun set upon this field of carnage (1).

Such was the memorable battle of Marengo; one of the most tained on both sides. obstinately contested which had yet occurred during the war, in which both parties performed prodigies of valour, and which was attended with greater results perhaps than any conflict that had yet occurred in modern Europe. The Imperialists had to lament the loss of seven thousand men killed and wounded, besides three thousand prisoners, eight standards, and twenty pieces of cannon. The French sustained an equal loss in killed and wounded, besides one thousand prisoners taken in the early part of the day. But although the disproportion was not so great in the trophies of victory, the difference was prodigious in the effect it produced on the respective armies, and the ultimate issue of the campaign. The Austrians had fought for life or death, with their faces towards Vienna, to cut their way sword in hand through the French army. Defeat in these circumstances was irreparable ruin. By retiring either to Genoa or the Maritime Alps, they ran the risk of being cooped up in a corner of a hostile territory, without any chance of regaining their own country, and the certainty of depriving the empire of the only army capable of defending its Italian possessions. The French, on the other hand, had now firmly established themselves in the plains of Piedmont; and could, by merely retaining their present position, effectually cut off the Imperialists, and hinder their rendering any assistance to the Hereditary States. In these circumstances, the victory gave the Republicans, as that under the walls of Turin had given the Imperialists a century before, the entire command of Italy. Such a result was in itself of vast importance; but coming as it did, in the outset of Napoléon's career as First Consul, its consequences were incalculable. It fixed him on the throne, revived the 293. Dum. iii. 324, 325. Jom. xiii. 288, 289. Bot. iv. 30, 31. Mem du Dépôt de la Guerre, iv. 272.

(1) Bul. 275, 280. Sav. i. 179. Nap. i. 293, 294.

(1) hdt. 275, 200. 38v. 1. 175. 1845. 1. 235, 234. 315. 30m. xiii. 290, 291. Dum. iii. 325, 326. Bot. iv. 31. Saalfeld, iv. 230, 231. Gaz. Mil. d'Autriche, Ann. 1823.

There is a most extraordinary similarity between the crisis of Marengo and that of Waterloo, with this difference, that the rout of the French was complete before the arrival of Desaix, while not an English square was broken before the final charge of the old guard. But the defeat of the last attacks in both battles was accomplished in the same way.

The rout of Zach's columns, by the fire of Desaix's division in front, aided by the charge of Kellermann in flank, was precisely similar to the defeat of the old guard at Mount St. John by the English guards, aided by the happy flank attack of Major Gawler with the 52d and 71st regiments, and the gallant charge of Sir Hussey Vivian with the 10th and 18th hussars. In both cases the overthrow of the last columns of attack drew after it the total defeat of the army.—See "Crisis of Waterloo." By Majon Gawlen and Sir II. Vivian. United Service Journal. July, 1833.

military spirit of the French people, and precipitated the nation into that career of conquest which led them to Cadiz and the kremlin (1)

United with the great qualities of Aapoleon's character was a selfish thirst for glory, and consequent jealousy of any one who had either effectually thwarted his designs, or rendered him such services as might diminish the lustre of his own exploits. His undying jealousy of Wellington was an indication of the an instance sence of the .

charge this evening," and mamediately turning to Bessieres, added, "The guard has covered itself with glory "-" I am glad you are pleased," replied hellermann, "for it has placed the crown on your head" He repeated the same expression in a letter, which was opened at the post-office and brought to Napoleon The obligation was too great to be forgiven hellermann was not promoted like the other generals, and never afterwards enjoyed the favour of the chief on whose brow he had placed the diadem (2)

While nothing but congratulation and triumph were heard in the person of French lines, the Austrian camp exhibited the utmost consternation The night was spent in re-forming the regiments, repairing the losses of the artillery, and replenishing the exhausted stores of ammunition A council of war was summoned, the majority, thunderstruck by the magnitude of the disaster and the hopeless nature of their situation, inclined for a treaty to evacuate the Piedmontese territory "If we cut our way through," said they, "supposing us to be successful, we must sacrifice ten thousand men left in Genoa, and as many in the fortresses of Piedmont, and shall not be the less compelled to take refuge under the cannon of Mantua It is better to save these twenty thousand men than to preserve towns for the king of Sardinia" In conformity with these views, a flag of truce was dispatched on the following morning to the French headquarters, to propose terms of capitulation. He arrived at their outposts just at the time when an attack on the totes-de-pont on the Bormida was preparing, and, after some difficulty, the terms of the treaty were agreed upon between the two generals (5)

Armin lee of By this convention it was provided that "there should be an ar-Alexand is mistice between the two armies till an answer was obtained from the Court of Vienna. That in the mean time the Imperial army should occupy the country between the Minero and the Po, that is, Peschiera, Mantua, Borgoforte, and from it the left bank of the Po, and on its right bank, Ferrara, Ancona, and Tuscany, that the French should occupy the district between the Chiesa, the Oglio, and the Po, and the space between the Chiesa and the Minero should not be occupied by either army That the fortresses of Tortuna, Milan, Turin, Pizzighittone, Arona, Placentia, Ceva, Savona, Urbia, Coni, Alexandria, and Genoa, should be surrendered to the French, with all their ferno. In who had so great a share in a h er ng the success, we tten on the marg u of the concertain of the various accounts of the battle contained in the M mor al du l sot de la Guerre " + 20%, 313 For these valuable manuscr pt notes, the au bor a indebted to the kindness of his esteemed is end,

⁽¹⁾ Nap i 294 Join al 295 296 Dum is 328 329 Bot iv 32 34 Austrian Offic al become Gaz Wil d'Autriche 1823 Memor al du Depot de

n Rus f ffall

rienne . That I it e Ardermann m crease " and the Actorisation mass " "; charte He struck in at the cell committy we owe him much On what it all creats do offers depend?" Duran and fe 124 (2) four ail 246, 224 hap 1 281 Del. 454 (3) Jour ai 1 2/6, 391 artillery and stores, the Austrians taking with them only their own cannon." The evacuation of all these places, and the final retreat of the Austrian army, were to be completed by the 24th June (1).

Thus the complete reconquest of Piedmont and the Milanese, the result. cession of twelve fortresses, armed with fifteen hundred pieces of cannon, and the advance of the Republican eagles to the Mineio, were the immediate effect of the stubborn resistance of Desaix and the happy charge of Kellermann. A few battalions and eight hundred horse changed the face of the world. But Napoléon must not be deprived of his share in these glorious results. These incidents were but the last steps in a chain of causes which his genius had prepared, and his skill brought to bear upon the final issue of the campaign. He had thrown himself upon his adversary's communications without compromising his own, and thence its astonishing consequences. Defeated at Marengo, Napoléon could still have retired upon an equal force detached in his rear, and, in the worst event, have retired over the St.-Gothard and the Simplon, with no other sacrifice but his artillery. To have achieved such results, at so inconsiderable a risk, is the greatest triumph of genius in the science of war (2).

remarkably The convention of Alexandria was religiously observed by the chartest by Austrian commanders. The English expedition under Abercromby, train. With twelve thousand men, arrived in the bay of Genoa just in time to see that important city surrendered to the Republican commanders; but, notwithstanding that important succour, German integrity swerved nothing from its good faith. Had this important reinforcement, instead of lying inactive at Minorca, arrived a fortnight sooner with the troops which so soon afterwards conquered in Egypt, what important effects might it have had upon the fortune of the war! But the English at that period were ignorant of the importance of time in military operations, and but novices in the art of war. The time was yet to come when they were to appear in it as masters (5).

Napoleon, after this great victory, appointed Jourdan regent in the continental dominions of the King of Sardinia until their destiny was determined by a general peace, and returned to Milan to enjoy his triumph. He was received with extraordinary demonstrations of joy by the inconstant populace, and Italian adulation lavished on him those splendid epithets which, during three centuries of servitude, they have learned to bestow upon their rulers. He discoursed there much on peace, religion, litterature, and the sciences. The Ligurian republic was immediately re-organized, and regained its nominal independence. He shortly after returned by Mont Cenis and Lyon to Paris. When passing through that town, he laid, with extraordinary pomp, amidst an immense concourse of spectators, the first stone of the new Place Bellecour, erected on the site of that which had heen destroyed by the barbarity of the Convention. Napoléon was in high spirits during the remainder of the journey; but his triumphs, great as they were, appeared to him but as nothing in comparison of those which he yet desired to achieve. "Well," said he, "a few more great events like those of this campaign, and I may really descend to posterity: but still it is little enough; I have conquered, it is true, in less than two years, Cairo, Paris, Milan; but were I to die to-morrow, half a page of general history would, after ten centuries, be all that would be devoted to my ex-

Nap. i. 295, 296. Jom. xiii. 300.
 Jom. xiii. 301, 302.

plosts." He reached Paris during the night; and nothing could exceed the universal transports on the following day when his arrival was known. The people had been kept in a cruel state of suspense during his absence; the first news they received of the battle of Marengo was from a mercantile traveller who left the field at one o'clock, and reported that all was lost (1). Rich and poor now vied with each other in their demonstrations of joy; all business was suspended, nothing but songs of triumph were heard in the streets, and at night a general illumination gave vent to the umiversal transports.

Such was the memorable campaign of Marengo. Inferences of the most important kind, both in a moral and political view, may be drawn from the events which occurred during its progress.

I. Great changes in human affairs never take place from trivial on the causes The most important effects, indeed, are often apparently owing to inconsiderable springs, but the train has been laid in all such cases by a long course of previous events, and the last only puts the torch to its extremity A ht of passion in Mrs. Masham arrested the to trivial course of Marlborough's victories, and preserved the tottering Lingdom of France, a charge of a few squadrons of horse, under Kellermann, at Marengo, fixed Napoleon on the consular throne, and another, with no greater force, against the flank of the old guard at Waterloo, chained him to the rock of St.-Helena. Superficial observers lament the subjection of human affairs to the caprice of fortune or the casualties of chance, but a more enlarged observation teaches us to recognise in these apparently trivial events the operation of general laws, and the last link in a chain of causes which have all conspired to produce the general result. Mrs Masham's passion was the ultimate cause of Marlborough's overthrow, but that event had been prepared by the accumulating jealousy of the nation during the whole tide of his victories, and her indignation was but the drop which made the cup overflow; hellermann's charge, indeed, fixed Napolcon on the throne, but it was the sufferings of the Revolution, the glories of the Italian campaigns, the triumphs of the Pyramids, which induced the nation to hail his usurpation . ! th hussars broke the last column of . of the triumph of Wellington had sular victories and the bloody catastroplie of the Moscow campaign Extrao da II The sudden resurrection of France, when Napoleon assumed the helm, is one of the most extraordinary passages of European the accession history, and singularly descriptive of the irresistible reaction in the favour of a firm government which inevitably arises from a long course of revolutionary convulsions Let not future ages be deluded by the idea that a period of democratic anarchy is one of national strength; it is, on the contrary, in the end, the certain forerunner of public calamity. The glories of the Revolutionary wars were achieved under the despotie rule of the Convention, wielding ten times the power which was ever enjoyed by Louis XIV; the effects of democratic anarchy appeared upon its dissolution, in the disasters of the Directory After the fall of the Committee of Public Safety, the triumphs of France centred in Napolcon alone; wherever he did not command in person, the greatest reverses were experienced. In 1795 the Republicans were defeated by Clarifact on the Rhine, in 1796 by the trehduke Charles in Germany. In 1799 their reverses were unexampled both in Italy and Germany; from the 9th Thermidor to the 18th Brumaire, a period of above five years, the fortunes of the Republic were singly sustained by the sword of Napoleen and the lustre of his Italian campaigns. When he seized the helm in November, 1799, he found the armies defeated and ruined; the frontier invaded, both on the sides of Italy and Germany, the arsenals empty, the soldiers in despair deserting their colours, the royalists revolting against the government, general anarchy in the interior, the treasury empty, the energies of the Republic apparently exhausted. Instantly, as if by enchantment, every thing was changed; order re-appeared out of chaos, talent emerged from obscurity, vigour arose out of the elements of weakness. The arsenals were filled, the veterans crowded to their eagles, the conscripts joyfully repaired to the frontier, la Vendée was pacified, the exchequer began to overflow. In little more than six months after Napoléon's accession, the Austrians were forced to seek refuge under the cannon of Ulm, Italy was regained, unanimity and enthusiasm prevailed among the people, and the revived energy of the nation was finally launched into the career of conquest. Changes so extraordinary cannot be explained by the influence of any one man. Great as the abilities of Napoléon undoubtedly were, they could not be equal to the Herculean task of reanimating a whole nation. It was the transition from anarchy to order, from the tyranny of demagogues to the ascendant of talent, from the weakness of popular to the vigour of military government, which was the real cause of the change. The virtuous, the able, the brave, felt that they no longer required to remain in obscurity; that democratic jealousy would not now be permitted to extinguish rising ability; financial imbecility crush patriotic exertion; private cupidity exhaust public resources; civil weakness paralyse military valour. The universal conviction that the reign of the multitude was at an end, produced the astonishing burst of talent which led to the glories of Marengo and Hohenlinden.

Causes of the disasters of the disastrous issue of the German campaign to the Imperiation to the rialists, is not to be entirely ascribed either to the genius of Moreau, raign to the imperiations or the magnitude of the force which the first consul placed at his III. The disastrous issue of the German campaign to the Impecommand. It was chiefly owing to the ruinous dispersion of the Austrian army and their obstinate adherence to-the system of a cordon, when, by the concentration of their enemy's troops, it had become indispensably necessary to accumulate adequate forces on the menaced points. Kray, at the opening of the campaign, had nearly one hundred and ten thousand men at his command; but this immense force, irresistible when kept together, was so dispersed over a line above two hundred miles in length, from the Alps to the Maine, that he could not collect forty-five thousand men to resist the shock of the French centre, of nearly double that strength, at Engen or Biberach. The loss of these battles, by piercing the Allied line, compelled the whole body to fall back, and thus seventy thousand men abandoned Swabia and Franconia without firing a shot, while half their number, added to the Austrian centre, would have prevented the Republicans ever crossing the Black Forest. The brief campaign of 1815 afforded another example of the same truth; the Allied forces, quartered over all Flanders, though greatly superior, upon the whole to the army of Napoléon were inferior to their assailants, both at Ligny and Waterloo; and the intrepid daring of Wellington, joined to the devoted heroism of his troops, alone prevented in that struggle the continued disasters of Biberach and Moeskirch. The successful stand, on the other hand, made by the Austrian army when concentrated under the cannon of Ulm and the effectual covering which, in that confined spot, they gave to the whole Hereditary States, affords the clearest proof of the superior efficacy of such an assembled force to any cordon, however shiffully disposed, in arresting an invading enemy. No army will ever advance into an enemy's country, leaving sixty or eighty thousand men together in their rear, for, in such a case, they are exposed to the danger of losing their communications, and being compelled, as at Marengo, to peril all upon the issue of a single battle; but nothing is easier than to make double that force, dispersed over a long line, abandon a whole frontier, by striking decisive blows with a superior force at a part of its extent. In fifteen days, the Imperial cordon was driven back, by attacks on its centre, from the filmie to the Danube, for six weeks its concentrated force in position at Ulm, not only arrested the victor, but covered the Imperial frontier, and gained time for the revival of the spirit of the monarchy.

IV. The successful stand which Kray, with a defeated army, made against the vast forces of Moreau for six weeks, under the cannon of Ulm, demonstrates the wisdom and foresight of the Archduke Charles in fortifying, at check which this single fortress gave to the powerful and victorious army of Moreau, suggests a doubt, whether central are not more serviceable than frontier fortifications, or, at least, whether a nation, in contemplation of invasion by a powerful and ambitious enemy, should not always be provided with some strongholds in the interior, to the shelter of which a defeated army may retire, and where it may both recruit its losses and recover its spirit. Certain it is, that it is the want of some such points d'appui that the sudden prostration of Austria, after the defeats of Ulm and Eckmuhl, of Prussia, after that of Jena; and of France, after the disasters of 1814 and 1815, are mainly to be ascribed. But for the fortifications of Vienna, Austria, before the arrival of John Sobieski, would have been overwhelmed by the arms of Soliman; without those of Genoa, the conquest of Italy would have been complete, and the victorious Austrians grouped in irresistible strength in the plains of Piedmont before the Republican eagles appeared on the St -Bernard, and but for those of Torres Vedras, the arms of England, instead of striking down the power of France on the field of Waterloo, would have sunk, with lustre for ever tarnished into the waters of the Tagus. A mere fortified position, like that of the Drisa, to which Barelay de Tolly retired in 1812, is not sufficient; it is an intrenched camp, connected with a strong fortress, which forms the real formidable obstacle. The defeat of the Prussians, in the first attack on Warsaw in 1791, and the astonishing stand made by Shrynecki, with forty thousand regular troops, against the whole forces of the Russian empire in 1831, prove the mestimable effect of central fortresses, such as Warsaw and Modlin, in forming a nucleus to the national strength, and enabling an inconsiderable to withstand the forces of a powerful monarchy. The difference between central and frontier fortresses in this respect is great and important. The former constitute so many secure asylums, round which the national strength is agglomerated, in the last struggle for national independence, and the retreating army finds itself strengthened in the heart of the empire by the garrisons of the interior fortresses and the new levers who are disciplined within their walls, while their fortifications form an imposing stronghold, to the siege of which the largest armies are hardly adequate: the latter prove an impassable barrier only to armies of inconsiderable magnitude; and if, by an overwhelming force, the protecting army is compelled to retire, it too often finds itself severely weakened by the great detachments doomed thereafter to useless inactivity in the frontier fortresses. When Napoléon was struck to the earth in 1814, he still held the fortresses on the Elbe and the Rhine: above a hundred thousand veteran troops were there immured, when he maintained an unequal conflict with fifty thousand in the plains of Champaigne; and that which her boasted triple line of fortresses could not do for France, would have been certainly effected by an intrenched camp, like that at Ulm, on Montmartre and Belleville. The conclusion to be drawn from that is, not that frontier fortresses are totally useless and central ones are alone to be relied on, but that the combination of the two is requisite to lasting security; the former to cover the provinces and impede an inconsiderable enemy, the latter to repel those desperate strokes which are directed by a gigantic foe at the vitals of the state.

V. The march of Napoléon across the St.-Bernard, and his con-Najotion in sequent seizure of the Austrian line of communication, is one of the greatest conceptions of military genius, and was deservedly crowned by the triumph of Marengo; but, in the execution of this design, he incurred unnecessary hazard (1), and all but lost his crown by the dispersion of his troops before the final struggle. The forces at his command, after he debouched on the plains of Piedmont, were, including Moncey's division, sixty thousand men; while the Imperialists by no exertions could have brought forty thousand into the field to meet them, so widely were their forces dispersed over the vast theatre of their conquests (2); whereas, when the die came to be cast on the field of Marengo, the Austrians had thirty-one thousand, and the French only twenty-nine thousand in line. This but ill accords with the principle which he himself has laid down, that the essence of good generalship consists, with equal or inferior forces, in being always superior at the point of attack. The march to Milan was the cause of this weakness; while Lannes and Victor, with twenty thousand men, struggled with an overwhelming enemy on the banks of the Bormida, twenty-nine thousand were in position or observation on the Mincio and the Po. So great a dispersion of force to secure the rear was altogether unnecessary; for, in case of disaster, the French army, after the fort of Bard had capitulated on the 1st June, could have retreated as well by the St.-Bernard and Mont Cenis, as the Simplon and St.-Gothard. A forward movement, in conjunction with Thureau, after the army, numbering forty thousand combatants, was concentrated at Ivrea on the 24th May, would have delivered Masséna, who did not capitulate till the 4th June, and added his troops, ten thousand strong, to the invading army, while Moncey, with sixteen thousand would have adequately protected the rear; and the retreat of Melas, then far advanced in the defiles of the Maritime Alps, would have been equally cut off. The astonishing consequences which followed the battle of Marengo, afford no proof that the campaign in this particular was not based on wrong principles; the same results might have been gained without the same risk; and it is not the part of a prudent general to commit to chance what may be gained by combination. Had the torrent of the Scrivia not swollen, and stopped the march of the French army on the evening of June 45; had Desaix advanced an hour later on the 14th, had hellermann not opportunely charged an unsuspecting foe when concealed by luxuriant vines, had Melas not detached his cavilty to the rear to observe Suchet, the fate of the action would probably have been reversed, and Marengo been Pavia. An scruple need be felt at making these observations, even in reference to so great a commander. The inilitary art, like every other branch of knowledge, is progressive, the achievements of one age illuminate that which succeeds it, and mediocrity can, in the end, judge of what genius only could at first conceive. A school-boy can now solve a problem, to which the minds of Thales and Archimedes alone were adequate in the commencement of geometry.

And the VI If the conduct of the Austrian commander is examined, it And the Austrian for the found to be not less open to exception, previous to the battle of Marengo, than that of the First Consul The desire to retain every thing, to guard at once all the points which had been gained, was the cause of a dispersion, on his part so much the more reprehensible than that of Napolcon, as, being in a conquered country, with all the fortresses in his possession, it was the less necessary. Two thousand men would have sufficed for the garrison of Tortona, as many for that of Con. The surplus troops thus acquired, with the cavalry detached to observe Suchet, would have formed a force considerably superior to the reserve of Desax, which would have ensured the victory. Of what avail were the four thousand men in either of these fortresses the next morning, when all the strong places of Piedmont were surrendered to the enemy? Thrown muto the scale when the beam quivered after the repulse of Desax, they would have hurled Aapolcon from the consular throne (1).

Prop e yof VII The conduct of the Austrian commander, during and after to of the the battle, has been the subject of much severe animalversion and the control from the German writers. Bulow, in particular, has charged him with having unnecessarily surrendered the fortresses of Piedmont on the following day, when he had still at command a force capable of breaking through the enemy, and regaining his communications with Mantua (2) Certain it is that Melas, whose conduct in the outset of the action is worthy of the highest praise, did not follow up his first successes so vigorously as seems to have been possible, that his detachment of cavalry to the rear was unnecessary and emmently hurtful, and it is more than probable that, if Napo-Icon had been in his place, Marengo would have been the theatre of as great a reverse to the Republicans as Salamanea or Vittoria But, in agreeing to the armstice on the following day, his conduct appears less hable to exception He had then only twenty thousand men on whom he could rely in the field, and these, with the garrisons in the Piedmontese fortreses, formed the chief defence of the Austrian possessions in Italy This chief duty was to preserve this nucleus of veteran troops for the monarchy, and transport them from a situation where they were cut off from their communications and could be of little service to their country, to one in which they were restored to both Perched on the Manmes, or shut up in the walls of Genoa, they would have been expo ed to the whole weight of the army of reserve, which might thus have been raised, by the concentration of its forces from the rear, to forty five thousand men, besides the victorious troops of Suchet, with the gree a of Cor or pearly twenty-five thousand more It is doubtful whether concentration of seventy thousand combatants, flushed with victory, and headed by Napoléon; and if they failed, disasters tenfold greater awaited the monarchy. Thirty thousand men might have been made prisoners at once, and the walls of Genoa witnessed as great a catastrophe as the heights of Ulm (1).

VIII. The oblique attack, or the attack by column coming up after Inexpecolumn by echellon, has frequently achieved the most decisive battle in the success in war; and the victories of Leuthen by Frederic, and Salamanca by Wellington, were chiefly owing to the skilful use of that method of action. But to receive battle in that position is a very different matter. To do so is to expose the successive columns to be overwhelmed by a superior enemy, who, by the defeat of the first, acquires a superiority which it becomes afterwards a matter of extreme difficulty to counterbalance. The action of Montebello was an instance of the successful application and great effect of an attack in this order; the narrow escape from a catastrophe at Marengo; an example of the peril to which troops themselves attacked in such a situation are exposed. The difference between the two is important and obvious. When the attacking army advances in echellon, if it can overthrow the first column of the enemy, it throws it back upon the one in rear, which soon finds itself overpowered by a torrent of fugitives, or shaken by the sight of its comrades in disorder; while, if it is stubbornly resisted, it is soon supported by fresh troops advancing on its flank, in perfect order, to the attack. But when the troops in echellon stand still, all these advantages are reversed; the disorder created in front speedily spreads to the rear, and the successive columns, instead of coming up to the aid of an advancing, too often find themselves overwhelmed by the confusion of a retreating army (2). Napoléon was perfectly aware of these principles; he never intentionally received an attack in echellon; at Marengo, as at Eylau, he was assailed unawares in that position by the enemy, and his ultimate extrication from destruction in both battles was owing to the opportune arrival of troops, whom his first orders had removed far from the scene of action, or upon events on which no human foresight could have calculated at the commencement of the struggle.

IX. When it is recollected that Abercromby's corps, twelve thousand strong; lay inactive at port Mahon in Minorca during this interesting and important crisis, big as the event proved with the fate not only of the campaign but of the war, it is impossible not to feel the most poignant regret at its absence from the scene of action; or to avoid the reflection, that England at that period partook too much of the tardiness of her Saxon ancestors; and that, like Athelstane the Unready, she was never ready to strike till the period for successful action had passed. What would have been the result if this gallant force had been added to the Imperialists during their desperate strife around Genoa, or thrown into the scale, when victory was so doubtful, to meet the troops of Kellermann and Desaix at Marengo! When it is recollected what these very men accomplished in the following year, when opposed to an equal force of Napoléon's veterans on the sands of Alexandria, it is impossible to doubt that their addition to the Allied forces in Italy at this juncture would in all probability have been attended with decisive effects. But, notwithstanding all this, it is impossible to say that the British government were to blame for this apparently inexcusable inactivity of so important a reserve. The equality of force at Marengo, it must always be recollected, was not only unforessen, but could not have been calculated upon by any degree of foresight. At the outset of the campaign the Imperalists were not only victorious, but greatly superior to their antagonists in Italy; and even after Napoleon and the formidable army of reserve were thrown into the balance, their advantage was so marked, that, but for a runnous and unnecessary dispersion of force, they must have crushed him on that well-contested field. In these circumstances, no crisis in which their co-operation was likely to be attended with important consequences was to be anticipated in the north of Italy; there was no apparent call upon them to after the direction of a force destined for important operations either on the shores of Provence or on the banks of the Mie; and the British historian must therefore absolve the English government from any serious blame in this matter, however much he may lament the absence of a band of veterans stationed so near the scene of action, which was adequate, as the event proved, to have turned the scales of fortune and altered the destines of the world.

178

CHAPTER XXXII.

CAMPAIGN OF HOHENLANDEN.

FROM THE ARMISTICE OF ALEXANDRIA TO THE PEACE OF LUNEVILLE.

JUNE, 1800-FEB. 1801.

ARGUMENT.

Universal joy in France at the victory of Marengo-Treaty previously signed between Austria and England-Good faith of the Imperial Government in adhering to it-Count St.-Julien arrives at Paris and signs preliminaries, which are disavowed by the Imperial Cabinet-Negotiations with England for an armistice, which full from the unreasonable demands of France-Conspiracy to assassinate Napoleon-Preparations of France for a renewal of hostilities-And of Austria-Put Russia and Prussia keep aloof from the contest-English expedition under Sir James Pultency fails at Ferrol-And from dread of the plague declines to attack Cadiz—Surrender of Malta to the British blockading squadron—Affairs of Italy— Election of Pope Plus VII at Venice—Hostility of Naples and insurrection of Piedmont against France-TheFrench crush the insurrection in the Tuscan States with great cruelty -Leghorn is seized and the English merchandise confiscated-Last remnant of Swiss independence is destroyed-Capture of Surinam and Demerara by the English squadrons-Permanent incorporation of the Netherlands with France-Description of the line of the Inn-Project of the Imperialists-Hostilities on the Lower Rhine,-The Austrians advance into Pavaria—Movements of Moreau—Great success of the Austrians in the outset—French retire to Hohenlinden-Description of the field of battle-Able plans of Moreau-Pattle of Hohenlinden- Dreadful struggle at the entrance of the Forest-Decisive charge of Richepanse-The Austrian line of communication is intercepted-Great victory gained by the French -tts prodigious consequences-Merit of Moreau in gaining it-The Austrians retire behind the Inn-Skilful managure by which the passage of that river was effected by Moreau-Rapid advance of the French towards Salzburg-They are defeated by the Austrian Cavalry in front of that town-But the Imperialists are nevertheless oblined to retire. Moreau pushes on towards. Vienna—Great successes gained by his advanced guard—The Archduke joins the army, but cannot arrest the disaster—An armistice is agreed to—Operations of the army on the Maine-And in the Grisons-Designs of Napoleon there-Description of the ridges to be surmounted-Napoleon's design for the passage of that mountain- Pre- . parations of Macdonald for crossing it-Description of the passage of the Split, en-Extremo difficulties experienced by the French troops in the passage—Heroism of Macdonald in persisting notwithstanding-the arrives at Chiavenna, on the Lake of Como - Unworthy jealousy of this passage displayed by Napoleon-He is placed under the orders of I rune-Diffleuft passage of the Col Apriga-Attack on the Mont Tonal-In which the French are repulsed-Positions and forces of the French and Austrians in Italy-First operations of Brune-Passage of the Mincio-Desperate conflict of the troops who had passed over-Brune at length relieves them, and the passage is completed-Great losses of the Imperialists-Bellegarde retires to Caldiero-Advance of the Republicans in the valley of the Adigo -Alarming situation of Laudon on the Upper Adige-Macdonald makes his way into the Italian Tyrol Laudon is surrounded at Trent - He escapes by a lateral path to Bassano-Bellegarde retires to Bassano and Treviso-Armistice concluded at the latter place- Insurrection breaks out in Piedmont-Neapolitans invade the Roman states, and are totally defeated-Queen of Naples flies to St.-Petersburg to implore the aid of Paul-Napoleon willingly yields to his intercession-Peace between France and Naples at Foligno-Its conditions-French take possession of the whole Neapolitan territories-Siege of Elba-Its gallant defence by the English garrison—Treaty of Luneville—The Emperor subscribes for the empire as well as Austria-Extravagant joy excited by this peace at Paris-Important consequences of this treaty on the internal situation of Germany Reflections on this campaign-The real object of the war was already gained by the Allies-Evidence of Napoleon's implacable hostility to England -Increasing and systematic pillage of the people by the Republican armies-Symptoms of patriotic and general resistance spring up.

France soon experienced the beneficial results of the triumphs in Italy and the successes in Germany. More passionately desirous than any other

Universal yoy in Fran e at the v c ory
of Mo

people in Europe of military glory, its cuizens received with the utmost enthusiasm the accounts of their victories, and the angry passions of the Revolution, worn out by suffering, willingly turned into joyful comparison of their present triumphs with the disasters and preceded the return of the first consul The battle of Marengo into joyful comparison of their present triumphs with the disasters which had preceded the return of the first consul. The battle of Marengo fixed Napoleon on the consular throne. The Jacobins of Paris, the Royalists of the west, were alike overwhelmed by that auspicious event, and two August. English expectitions, which appeared, as usual too late, on the coast of Britanny and la Vendee, under Sir Edward Pellew and Sir James Pulleney (1), were unable to rouse the inhabitants to resistance against the triumphlant authority of the capital.

Two days before intelligence was received of the battle of Ma-Trays tongs, a treaty for the further prosecution of the war had been signed at Vienna, between Austria and Great Britain By this convention it was provided, that within three months England was to pay to Austria a loan of L 2,000,000 sterling, to bear no interest during the continuance of the war, and that neither of the high contracting parties should make any separate peace with the enemy, during the period of one year from its date (2)

The disastrous intelligence of the defeat at Marengo, and the Good fa h armistice of Alexandria, followed up as it soon was by similar periol goand still more pressing calamities in Germany, could not shake the firmness or good faith of the Austrian cabinet. The inflexible Thugut, who then presided over its councils, opposed to all the representations with which he was assailed, as to the perils of the monarchy, the treaty recently concluded with Great Britain, and the disgrace which would attach to the Imperial government if, on the first appearance of danger, engagements of such long endurance and so solemnly entered into were to be abandoned. Nor did the situation of affairs justify any such desponding measures If the battle of Marengo had lost Predmont to the allied nowers. the strength of the Imperial army was still unbroken, it had exchanged a disadvantageous offensive position in the Ligurian mountains for an advantageous defensive one on the frontiers of Lombardy, the cannon of Mantua, so formidable to France in 1796, still remained to arrest the progress of the victor, and the English forces of Abercromby, joined to the Acapolitan troops and the Imperial divisions in Ancona and Tuscany, would prove too formulable a body on the right flank of the Republicans to permit any considerable advance towards the Hereditary States. Nor were affairs by any means desperate in Germany The advance of Moreau into Bavaria, while Ulm and Ingolstadt were unreduced, was a nerdous measure, the line of the Inn furnished a defensive frontier not surpassed by any in Lurope, flanked on one side by the mountains of Tyrol, and on the other by the prosinces of Bohemia, both in the possession of the Imperial forces, the strength of the monarchy would be more strongly felt, and reinforcements more readily obtained, when the enemy as proached its frontiers, and the ancient patriotism of the inhabitants were called forth by the near approach of danger, and the disastrous issue of the campaign of 1790 to the Republican forces proved how easy was the transition from an unsupported advance to a rumous retreat I maily, the treaty of Campo Formio had only been signed after a whole campaign of disasters, and when the standards of France were almost within sight of Vienna, and it would be disgraceful to subscribe the same conditions when the Imperial banners were still on the Mincio, or lose the fruits of a long series of triumphs in the terror produced by a single misfortune (1).

⁽²⁾ Aun. Leg 1500, 211 State Popers.

Influenced by these considerations, the Austrian cabinet resolved Julien arto gain time; and if they could not obtain tolerable terms of peace, Paris, and run all the hazards of a renewal of the war. Count St.-Julien s gus pirarrived at Paris on the 21st July, as plenipotentiary on the part of Austria, bearing a letter from the Emperor, in which he stated: "You will give credit to every thing which Count St.-Julien shall say on my part, and I will ratify whatever he shall do." In virtue of these powers, preliminaries of peace were signed at Paris in a few days by the French and Austrian ministers. The "treaty of Campo Formio was taken as the basis of the definitive pacification, unless where changes had become necessary; it was provided that the frontier of the Rhine should belong to France, and the indemnities stipulated for Austria by the secret articles of the treaty of Campo Formio were to be given in Italy instead of Germany (2)."

Which are distributed by the letter from the Emperor only, and without an exchange of full by the limperial carbon powers, it was provided that "these preliminary articles shall be ratified, and that they shall not bind their respective governments till after the ratification." The cabinet of Vienna availed themselves of this clause to avoid the ratification of these preliminary articles, in subscribing which their plenipotentiary had not entered into the views of his government. He was accordingly recalled, and the refusal to ratify notified on the 15th August, the appointed time, by Count Lehrbach, accompanied, however, by an intimation of the wish of the Imperial cabinet to make peace, of the treaty which bound them not to do so without the concurrence of Great Britain, and of the readiness of the latter power to enter into negotiations, on authority of a letter from Lord Minto, the British ambassador at Vienna, to Baron Thugut (5).

Negotia-Napoleon either was, or affected to be, highly indignant at the Lugland refusal by Austria to ratify the preliminaries, and he immediately gave notice of the termination of the armistice on the 10th September, and sent orders for the second army of reserve, which was organizing at Dijon, to enter Switzerland on the 5th of that month, and ordered Augereau, with eighteen thousand men from Holland, to take a position on the Lahn, in order to co-operate with the extreme left of Moreau's army. But he soon returned to more moderate sentiments, and dispatched full powers to M. Otto, who resided at London as agent for the exchange of prisoners, to conclude a naval armistice with Great Britain. The object of this proposal, hitherto unknown in European diplomacy, was to obtain the means, during the negotiations, of throwing supplies into Egypt and Malta, the first of which stood greatly in need of assistance, while the latter was at the last extremity from the vigilant blockade maintained for nearly two years by the British cruisers (4).

No sooner was this proposal received by the English government, than they proceeded to signify their anxious desire to be included in the general pacification, and proposed, for this purpose, that passports should be forwarded for Lord Grenville's brother to proceed, in the character of plenipotentiary of Great Britain, to the congress at Lunéville; but they declined to agree to a naval armistice, as a thing totally unknown, till the preliminaries of peace had been signed. Aspoleon, however, resolutely bent on saving Malta and Egypt, continued to insist on the immediate adoption of a naval armistice as a sine qua non, and signified that, unless it was agreed to before the 11th September, he would recommence hostilities both in Italy and Germany (1)

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xiv, 7, 8. (2) 28th July, 1800. State Papers, Ann. Reg. 180, 278.

⁽³⁾ Dum. v. 8, 9. Nap. ii. 2, 3. (4) Parl. IIi. xxvv. 510, 542. Jom. xiv. 3, 4. Dum. 9, 10. Ann. Reg. 1800, 211.

The urgency of the case, and the imminent danger which tustria would run, if the war were renewed on the continent at so early a period, induced the cabinet of London to forego the advantages which a declinature of the proposals of the First Consul promised to afford to the maritime interests of Great Britain On the 7th September, therefore, they presented to M Otto a counter project for the general suspension of hostilities between the belligerent powers. By this it was proposed that an armistice should take place by sea and land, during which the ocean was to be open to the navigation of trading vessels of both nations, Malta and the harbours of Egypt were to be put on the same footing as Ulm, Philipsburgh, and Incolstadt, by the armistice of Parsdorf, that is to say, they were to be provisioned for fourteen days, from time to time, during the dependence of the negotiation. The blockade of Brest and the maritime ports was to be raised, but the British squadrons were to remain on their stations off their mouths, and ships of war were not to be permitted to sail Aothing could be more equitable towards France, or generous towards Austria, than these propositions. They compensated the recent disasters of the Imperialists by land with concessions by the British at sea, where they had constantly been victorious, and had nothing to fear, they placed the blockaded fortresses which the French retained on the ocean, on the same footing with those which the Imperialists still held in the centre of Germany, and abandoned to the vanguished on one element those advantages of a free navigation, which they could not obtain by force of arms, in consideration of the benefits accruing from a prolongation of the armistice to their allies on another (2) Appoleon, however, insisted upon a condition which ultimately proved fatal to the negotiation. This was, that the French ships of the line only should be confined to their ports, but that frigutes should have free liberty of egress, and that six vessels of that description should be allowed to go from Toulon to Mexandria without being visited by the English cruisers. He has told us in his " Memoirs" what he intended to have done with these frigates. They were to be armed en flute, and to have carried out three thousand six hundred troops, besides great military stores, to Alexandria What rendered this condition peculiarly unreasonable was, that at the Which fail from the moment (20th September) when M Otto declared to the British able de-Government that the condition as to these frigates was a sine qua non for the continuation of the negotiation, he addressed to Moreau

mands of France

made a condition for the preservation of the maritime blockaded fortresses a sine gun non with the British Government, he made the immediate cession of the corresponding blockaded ones on the continent an indispensable condition of a continuation of the armistice with the Austrian Cabinet In these simultaneous propositions is to be seen little of that spirit of moderation which he so loudly professed, but much of that inflexible desire for aggrandisement, which so long was attended with success, but ultimately occasioned his ruin (1).

The Imperialists, with the dagger at their throats, were in no condition to resist the demands of the victor. A new convention was therefore concluded at Hohenlinden, on the 28th September, by which the cession of the three German fortresses was agreed to, and the armistice was prolonged for forty-five days. A similar convention, signed at Castiglione a few days afterwards, extended the armistice for the same period to the Italian peninsula (2).

The English Government, however, was under no such necessity; and as Napoléon peremptorily refused to abandon his condition as to despatching six frigates to Egypt, the negotiation was broken off, the Cabinet of the Tuileries having declared that they would treat only with each of the two courts separately. This was equivalent to its total abandonment, as both the allied powers had intimated to France, that they were bound by the recent convention to treat only in concert with each other (3).

No sooner was it evident that Great Britain would not consent to to assas'sinate Nathe demands of the first consul, than he resolved to prosecute the war with vigour against Austria. On the 8th October, accordingly, the portfolio of the war office was put into the hands of Carnot, with instructions to redouble his exertions to put all the armies immediately on a footing to resume hostilities. On the same day on which this took place, a plot to assassinate Napoléon at the opera was discovered by the police; Ceracchi and Demerville, the leaders of the conspiracy, and both determined Jacobins, were arrested and executed. It originated in the remains of the democratic faction, and served to increase the already formed exasperation of the first consul at that party (4).

During the interval of hostilities, both parties made the most intions of France for defatigable efforts to put their armies on a respectable footing, and a renewal of hostiliprepare for a vigorous prosecution of the war. A corps of fifteen thousand men was formed at Dijon, under the name of the second army of reserve, the command of which was intrusted to General Macdonald, already well known by his campaigns in Naples, and the battle of the Trebbia. The official reports gave out that it was to consist of thirty thousand, and even Macdonald himself was led to believe it amounted to that force; the object in spreading this delusion was to augment the troops, which the Austrians, recollecting what the first army of reserve had effected, would deem it necessary to watch his operations. It was destined to penetrate through the Grisons into the Tyrol, and threaten the flank of the Imperialists either in Italy or Germany, as circumstances might render advisable. Another army, 20,000 strong, was assembled, under Augereau, on the Maine; it was intended to advance along the course of that river to Wurtzburg, and threaten Bohemia, so as to prevent the troops in that province from undertaking any thing against the flanks or rear of the grand army under Moreau in Bavaria. That army was raised to above 110,000 men, all in the highest state of discipline and equipment; the soldiers were all newly clothed, the artillery and cavalry remounted, and all the materiel in the finest possible state; the Republic had never, since the commencement of the war, had on foot an army so perfect in its composition, so admirably organized, and so completely furnished with all the appointments requisite for carrying on a campaign. The army of Italy

⁽¹⁾ Parl. His. xxxv. 566, 583, Nap. ii, 8, 9. Dum. v. 12, 14. Ann. Reg. 1800, 215.
(2) Jom. xiv. 15. (3) Dum. v. 13, 14. Nap. ii. 9. (4) Jom. xiv. 21.

was reinforced to 80,000 men; its cavalry and artillery were in an especial manner augmented, and, besides these great forces, a reserve of 10,000 chosen troops was formed at Am.ens, to watch the movements of the English expeditions, and which, as soon as they proceeded to the coast of Spain, was moved to the south to support the army of Italy or the Grisons. In all, the Republic had 240,000 men in the field, ready for active operations (1); and besides this, there was nearly an equal force in Egypt, Malta, in the depots of the interior, or stationed along the coasts.

of England. Actes on any sounce described in the first on any sounce described in the measures for the common defence. As sooner was it announced, by the refusal of Napoleon to treat with either court separately, that peace was no longer to be hoped for, than the generous flame, like an hunself at the head of the army, and actually repaired to the lim for that purpose. His presence excited to the highest degree the spirit of the people to that accomplished prince a helmet set with magnificent jewels. These warlske measures excited the utmost enthusiasm among all classes; the peasantry every where flew to arms; the nobles vied with each other in the equipment of regiments of horse, or the contribution of large sums of money; every town and village resounded with the note of military preparation. But unfortunately the jealousy, or erroneous views of the Aulic Council, were but ill calculated to turn to the best account this general burst of patroite spirit; the Archdul wishes of the army, head the forces on t

the government of Bohemia. Kray, whose talents at Ulm had so long arrested the progress of disaster, was dismissed to his estates in Hungary, while the command of his army was given to the Archduke John, a young man of great promise and thorough military education, but whose inexperience, even obtained from Bayaria, the cession of Philipsburgh, Um, and Ingolstadt, had rendered disposable 18,000 more; and the recruits from the interior amounted to 43,000 men. These additions had so far counterbalanced the heavy losses sustained during the campaign by sickness, faigue, and the sword, that the Imperialists could reckon upon 110,000 effective men on the Inn, to defend the frontiers of the Hereditary States. But this great force, after the usual system of the Austrians, was weakened by the vast extent of country over which it was spread. The right, 27,000 strong, occupied Ratisbon and the Palatinate; the left, consisting of 18,000 men, under Hiller, was stationed in the German Tyrol: so that not more than 60,000 combatants could be relied on to maintain the important line of the Inn. In Italy, Field-marshal Bellegarde had 100,000 under his command, but they too were weakened by the immense line they had to defend; 15,000 were in the Italian Tyrol, under Davidowich; 10,000 in Ancona and Tuscany; 20,000 were formed of the Neapolitan troops, who could be little relied on: so that, for the decisive shock on the Mincio, not more than 60,000 effective men could be assembled (1).

But Burda Nor was the Imperial Cabinet less active in its endeavours to available. Nor was the Imperial Cabinet less active in its endeavours to available. Awaken the northern powers to a sense of the dangers which menaced them, from the great abilities and evident ambition of the first consul. Special envoys were despatched to St.-Petersburg and Berlin to endeavour to rouse the Russian and Prussian cabinets into activity, but in vain. Frederick William persisted in the system of neutrality which he had so long pursued, and was destined so bitterly to expiate; and the Emperor Paul, intent upon his newly-acquired ideas of the freedom of the seas, refused to embroil himself with France, and in the pursuit of the imaginary vision of maritime independence, fixed upon Europe thereal evils of territorial slavery. He retained a hundred and twenty thousand men inactive, under Ketusorr and Count Pahlen, on the frontiers of Lithuania, who, if thrown into the scale at this critical moment, might have righted the balance when it was beginning to decline, and saved Russia from the rout of Austerlitz and the conflagration of Moscow (2).

It is painful to be obliged to add, that the military efforts of England. though intended to follow out the true spirit of the alliance, were not better calculated to aid the common cause. On the 4th June an attack was made on the forts in Quiberon bay, by the squadron under the command of Sir Edward Pellew; but after gaining a trifling success, and dismantling the fortifications, they embarked without making any permanent impression. Early in July a secret expedition, under the command of Sir prdition of James Pulteney, consisting of eight thousand men, sailed for the bir James Pultency coast of France. It first appeared off Belle-Isle; but as the strong fails at works on that island rendered any attack a difficult enterprise, it shortly made sail from the coast of France, and landed in the neighbourhood of Ferrol. After two skirmishes, in which the Spaniards were defeated, the British took possession of the heights which overlook the harbour, and every thing promised the immediate reduction of that important fortress, with the fleet within its walls, when the English commander, intimidated by the rumour of reinforcements having reached the town, withdrew his forces, and made sail for Gibraltar, where Abercromby, with the expedition which had so long lain inactive at Port Mahon, awaited his arrival (3).

And from dread of the plague, declines to attack Cadiz. The union of two squadrons, having on board above twenty thoughters to attack Cadiz. alarm through the whole Peninsula. This armament, the greatest which had yet sailed from the British shores during the whole war, menaced alike Carthagena, Seville and Cadiz. Reinforcements from all quarters were hastily directed to the lines of St.-Roch in front of Cibraltar; vessels were sunk at the entrance of the harbour of Cadiz, and all the means adopted which could be thought of to repel the threatened attack. The British commanders, instead of making sail, the moment they arrived, for the isle of St -Leon, lay above a forinight mactive in the straits of Gibraltar, and at length appeared off Cadiz on the 5th October. Never was a more formidable armament assembled; the naval forces consisted of twenty sail of the line, twenty-seven frigates, and eighty-four transports, having on board above twenty thousand foot soldiers. As far as the eye could reach, the ocean was covered by the innumerable sails of the British armada, which seemed destined to revenge upon Spain the terrors of the celebrated armament which had been baffled by the firmness of Elizabeth. Asways intimidated by the formidable spectacle, the Spanish governor wrote a touching letter to the British commanders, in which he adjured them not to add to the calamities which already overwhelmed the inhabitants from an epidemic which carried off several hundreds of persons daily. They replied, that the town would not be attacked if the ships of war were delivered up; and as this was not accorded to, preparations were made for landing the troops, but before they could debark, the accounts, received of the yellow fever within its walls were so serious, that the British commanders apprehended that if the city were taken, the ulterior objects of the expedition might be frustrated by the effect of the contagion among the troops, and withdrew from the infected isle to the straits of Gibraltar (1).

(2) Dum. v. 21, 22. Jom. xiv. 23, 24.

⁽¹⁾ Nap. ii. 19, 20. Jom. xiv. 72, 73. Dum. v. (3) Ann. Reg. 1800, 212, 213. Jom. xiv, 46, 47. 20, 21.

Surrendra But while the honour of the British arms was tarnished by the the British failure of such mighty forces on the western coast of Europe, an blocked of event of the utmost importance to the future progress of the maritime war occurred in the Mediterranean Malta, which for above two years had been closely blockaded by the British forces by land and sea, began, in the course of this summer, to experience the pangs of hunger. Two frigates sailed from the harbour in the end of August with part of the garrison, one of which was speedily taken by the British cruizers. At length, all their means of subsistence having been exhausted, a capitulation was entered into in the middle of September, in virtue of which the French were to be conveyed as ٠.

British dominions (2)

Affa ta of The hopes of the Imperial cabinet, in the event of a renewal of the of Fine war, were not a little founded on the hostile attitude of the south , the arrival of the English expedirtain degree of consistency. Pope tion

Pius . is captivity in France, and died in March of this year The choice of the Roman Conclave, assembled, under the Imperial influence, at Venice, fell on the Cardinal Chiaramonte, who assumed the trara, under the title of Pius VII. At the same time when he ascended the Papal throne the inhabitants of Rome were suffering severely under the exactions of the Acapolitans, and he wively resolved to do his ulmost to alleviate their misfortunes. Without, therefore, engaging openly in the war, he lent a willing ear to the propositions which the first consul, who was extremely desirous of the support of the supreme pontiff, instantly made to him. But the other parts of Italy were in the most hostile state. A body of ten thousand Neapolitans had taken a position on the Tronto between the Upper (2) Ann Reg 1509, 215, Jone 217, 13, 11 Tol.

Hostility of Numers, and insuffections in Padmont tenira

Abruzze and the march of Ancona; a Neapolitan division, under Count Roger de Damas, was in the Roman states; Piedmont, in consternation at the recent annexation of the Novarese territory to the Cisalpine republic, and the innumerable oppressions of the French armies, was in so agitated a state, that a spark might blow it into open combustion; while the peasants of Tuscany, in open insurrection to support the Imperial cause, presented a tumultuary array of seven or eight thousand men. These bands, it is true, were little formidable to regular troops in the field; but as long as they continued in arms, they required to be watched by detachments, which diminished the strength of the army; and it was one of the motives which induced Napoleon to accede to the prolongation of the armistice with Austria, that it would give him time, during its continuance, to clear his flank of these troublesome irregulars (1).

As the armistice, by a strange oversight, did not extend to the Italian powers, and the English expedition was detained in useless Tuscan demonstrations on the coast of Spain, it was no difficult matter for the French troops to effect this object. General Sommariya, to whom the Grand Duke of Tuscany had intrusted the military forces of his states, was rapidly proceeding with the organization of the peasants in the Apennines, when Dupont, early in October, intimated to him, that unless the insurrection was forthwith disbanded, he would move against Tuscany with a formidable force. As these summonses met with no attention, the French troops advanced in great force, in three columns. After a vain attempt to defend the Apennines, Florence was occupied on the 15th. The Austrians, under Sommariya, refired towards Ancona, and the greater part of the insurgents retired to Arezzo, where they resolved to defend themselves to the last extremity. An attempt to force open the gates having failed, the Uct. 18. French General Meunier made preparations for a general assault, which took place on the following morning at five o'clock. Nothing could resist the impetuosity of the French columns; the grenadiers mounted the scaling ladders amidst a shower of balls ; quickly they made themselves masters of the rampart, and chasing the unhappy peasants from house to house, and street to street, soon filled the town with conflagration and carnage. The slaughter was dreadful; a few escaped by subterraneous passages, and made good their flight into the country; others retired into the citadel, which was soon obliged to surrender at discretion, and was razed to the ground; but by far the greater number perished in the town, under the sword of an irritated and relentless victor (2).

dise confis-cated,

This bloody stroke proved fatal to the Tuscan insurrection. The seized, and the English fugitives who escaped the carnage, spread far and wide the most dismal accounts of the fate of their unhappy comrades, and the peasants, thunderstruck with the rapidity and severity of the blow, lost no time in deprecating the wrath of an enemy who appeared irresistible. Sommariya, fettered by the armistice with Austria, retired entirely from the Tuscan states, and the inhabitants, left to their own means of defence, had no resource but in immediate submission. A strong division was immediately despatched to Leghorn, which entered the place without opposition, and after the barbarous method of carrying on war now adopted by the first consul, instantly confiscated the whole English property in the harbour and town. Forty-six vessels, with their cargoes, besides 750,000 quintals of wheat and barley, and 90,000 quintals of dried vegetables, were thus obtained for the use of the army, an acquisition of great importance to its future operations (1); but which, like all other ill-gotten gains, in the end recoiled upon the heads of those who acquired them, and contributed to form that deep and universal hatred at the French dominion, which at length precipitated Napokon from the throne.

At the same period the Swiss, whose divisions and democratic Oct 16. transports had exposed their country to the severities of Republi-Last remcan conquest, were doomed to drain to the dregs the cup of misery and humiliation. The shadow even of their independence vanished before the armed intervention of the first consul. The numerous insurrections of the peasants against the enormous requisitions of the Republican agents; the obstinate resistance of the partizans of the ancient constitutions; the general anarchy and dissolution of government which prevailed, loudly called ted his orders; a declaration which at once brought the whole country under the immediate sway of the central government at the Tuileries (2).

tapture of The English in the course of this year made themselves masters of and Deme- Surmam, Berbice, St.-Eustache, and Demerara, Dutch settlements Permanent on the mainland and in the islands of the West Indies. At the same incorporation of the time Napoleon published an edict, permanently incorporating the Neiher provinces acquired by the Republic on the left bank of the Rhine, and extending the French laws and institutions to these valuable acquisitions. Thus, while England was extending its mighty arms over both hemispheres (5), France was laying its iron grasp on the richest and most important provinces of Europe. The strife could not be other than desperate between two such powers. 2814 You Such was the state of Europe when the armistice of Hohenlinden was denounced by the first consul, and hostilities recommenced at all points in the end of November.

exception Had the Aulie Council determined to remain on the defensive, no of the line was more capable of opposing an obstinate resistance to the invader than that of the Inn. That river, which does not yield to the Rhine either in the impetuosity or the volume of waters which it rolls towards the Danube, meanders in the Tyrol, as far as hufstein, between maccessible ridges of mountains, whose sides, darkened with pine forests, are surmounted by bare peaks, occasionally streaked, even in the height of summer, with snow. From thence to Muhldorf it flows in a deep bed, cut by the vehemence of the torrent through solid rock, whose sides present a series of perpendicular precipices on either bank, excepting only in a few well-known points, which were strongly guarded, and armed with cannon. This powerful line, supported on the left by the fortress of kufstein, and on the right by that of Braunau, both of which were in a formidable state of defence, was flanked on either side by two immense bastions, equally menacing to an invading enemy, the one formed by the Tyrol, with its warlike and devoted population and maccessible mountains, the other by Bohemia and the chain of the Bohmerwald, which skirts the Danube from Lintz to Straubing, where the Archduke Charles was organizing a numerous body of forces (1).

⁽⁴⁾ Personal observations, June. 2 1 11. 16. (1) Dum. v 63 Nap in 18 Jona ziv, 145, 145 Da.a v $2 31p.11 21. (2) Dum v 71 (3) Dum v 21 25

Had the Austrians, headed by the Archduke Charles, remained on the defensive in this strong position, it is probable that all the disasters of the campaign would have been avoided. It was next to impossible to force such a central line, defended by eighty thousand men, under the direction of that great commander; while to attempt to turn it, either by the Tyrol or Bohemia, would have been equally perilous. To detach thirty thousand men into the defiles leading into Bohemia would have been imminently hazardous, when so large a force threatened the centre of the invader; while a similar movement into the Tyrol, besides being attended with the same danger, would have incurred the hazard of being defeated by the Prince of Reuss, who occupied the impregnable passes and fortresses which guarded the entrance into that difficult country. But from these difficulties the French were relieved by the resolution of the Imperialists to cross the Inn, and carry the war vigorously into the heart of Bavaria, a project which might have led to victory if conducted by the experience and ability of the Archduke Charles, but terminated in nothing but disaster in the hands of his brave but inexperienced successor (1).

Although the offensive movement of the Imperialists led to such calamitous results, it was skilfully combined, and promised in the outset the most brilliant success. The Republican right, under Lecourbe, stretched through the Voralberg mountains to Feldkirch in the Tyrol; the centre, under Moreau in person, was in position at Ebersberg, on the high road leading from Munich to Haag; the left, commanded by Grenier, was stationed at Hohenlinden, on the road to Muhldorf. The project of the Imperialists was to detach Klenau from Ratisbon towards Landshut, where he was to be joined by Keinmayor with twenty thousand men (2); meanwhile the centre was to advance by echellons towards Hohenlinden, and bear the weight of their forces on the Republican left, where the least resistance might be expected.

zith Nov. Hostilities were commenced by Augereau, who was at the head of the Gallo-Batavian army. He denounced the armistice four days before his colleagues, and advanced, at the head of twenty thousand men, from Frankfort by the course of the Maine towards Wurtzburg. Though the Imperial forces in that quarter were nearly equal to his own, they opposed but a feeble resistance, from being composed chiefly of the troops recently levied in Bohemia and the states of Mayence, little calculated to resist the French veterans. After a slight combat, the Imperialists were repulsed at all points; the Baron Albini, after an ephemeral success at Aschaffenbourg, was driven with loss out of that town and forced back to Schweinfurth, while Dumonceau pushed on to Wurtzburg, and summoned the garrison, which shut itself in the citadel. The first effect of these disasters was to dissolve the insurrectionary troops of Mayence under Albini, who never appeared again during the campaign. The Austrian general Simbschen, reduced by this defection to thirteen thousand men, took a position at Bourg-Eberach to cover Bamberg; he was there attacked on the following day by Augereau, and after an obstinate conflict driven back to Pommersfield. Satisfied with this success, the French general established his troops behind the Regnitz to await the fall of the citadel of Wurtzburg, which Dumonceau was beginning to besiege in regular form (5). These advantages were much more important upon the issue of the campaign than might have been supposed from the quality and numbers of the troops engaged; for by clearing the extreme left of Morcau they permitted him to draw his left wing, under Sainte Suzanne, nearer to his centre, and reinforce the grand army on the Inn, in the precise quarter where it was menaced by the imperialists.

Jom. xiv. 76.
 Jom. xiv. 79. Dum. v. 96, 97.

ii. 90 om tom, xiv. (3) Dum. v. 86, 97 81, 85.

Meanwhile, operations of the most decisive importance had taken, place on the Inn. On the 27th November the Imperialists broke up to execute their intended concentration on the right towards Landshut; but the heavy rains which fell at that time retarded considerably the march of their columns; and it was not till the 20th that their advanced guard reached that place. At the same time Moreau concentrated his forces in the centre, and advanced by Haag towards Ampling and Muhldorf. Fearful of continuing his flank movement in presence of a powerful enemy, who threatened to fall perpendicularly on his line of march, the archduke arrested his columns, and ran the hazard of a general battle on the direct road to Munich. They accordingly, on the 50th, retraced their steps, and moved through cross roads towards Ampling and Dorfen. This lateral movement performed amidst torrents of rain, and in dreadful roads, completed the exhaustion of the Austrian troops, but it led, in the first instance to the most promising results (1).

By a singular accident, Moreau had heard nothing of the advance of the Imperialists towards Landshut, far less of their cross movement to Ampfing; but some confused accounts had merely reached the Republican head-quarters of considerable assemblages of the enemy towards Muhldorf, and the French general, desirous to explore his way, pushed forward strong reconnectring parties in that direction. His right occupied an alice of a contract

o -- '---

The effect of this state of things, and of the able manuavre of the archduke, speedily shewed itself. The French army, turned and out-generaled, was exposed to be cut up in detail, while separated in a line of march by an enemy drawn up in battle array on one of its flanks. Gremer, who was the first in advance, was leisurely approaching Ampfing, when he was suddenly assailed by vast masses of the enemy, in admirable order and battle array; he was speedily thrown into confusion, and put to the rout. In vain Great auc-Ney displayed all his talent and resolution to sustain the weight of the Imperial columns; his troops, after a brave resistance, were Austriana la the oul broken and driven back upon the division of Grandjean, while that of Hardy, time Legr.

to fall back to the neighbourhood of porters and a where successful. They had attacked, in compact and regular masses, the enemy's divisions while in march and separated, and spread alarm and discouragement from the general's tent to the sentinels' outposts (5).

French to. So far the most brilliant success had attended the Austian adtire to the vance, and if it had been vigorously followed up by a general capable of appreciating the immense advantages which it offered, and forcing back the enemy's retreating columns without intermission upon those which came up to their support, it might have led to the total defeat of the French army, and changed the whole fortune of the campaign. But the Archduke John, satisfied with this first advantage, allowed the enemy to recover from their consternation. On the following day no forward movement was made, and Moreau, skilfully availing himself of that respite, retired through the forest of Hohenlinden to the ground which he had originally occupied. and carefully studied as the probable theatre of a decisive conflict(1).

³ Jon 21e, 50, 91, Aspett 30, 31 Bur. C. (1) Jom. xiv 85, 87 Dum. v 103, 105. 3 Jos (2) Nep. II 30. Jum xiv, 88, 90 Dum. v. 101. 101. 101.

The space which lies between the Inn and the Iser, which is from twelve to fifteen leagues in breadth, is intersected in its centre by field of this forest, now celebrated not less in history than poetry (2). Parallel to the course of the two rivers its woods form a natural barrier or stockade, six or seven leagues long, and from a league to a league and a half broad. Two great roads only, that from Munich to Wasserbourg, and from Munich to Muhldorf, traverse that thick and gloomy forest, where the pinetrees approach each other so closely, as in most places to render the passage of cavalry or artillery, excepting on the great roads, impossible. The village of Hohenlinden is at the entrance on the Munich side of the one defile, that of Matenpot at the mouth of that leading to Muhldorf. The village of Ebersberg forms the entrance of the other defile leading to Wasserbourg. Between these two roads the broken and uneven surface of the forest is traversed only by country paths, almost impracticable during the storms of winter even to foot soldiers (3).

Moreau with his staff had carefully reconnoitred this ground: and Able plan of Moreau, as soon as it became evident that the archduke was to advance through its dangerous defiles, he prepared, with the art of a consummate general, to turn it to the best account. Rapidly concentrating his forces in the plain at the entrance of the defiles on the Munich side, he at the same time gave orders to Richepanse, with his division, to advance across the forest, so as to fall, early on the morning of the 5d, perpendicularly on the line of the great road from Hohenlinden to Muhldorf. He naturally anticipated that this movement would bring him on the flank of the Austrian · centre, when entangled in the defile, with its long train of artillery and chariots; and that if the Republican force at the entrance of the pass could only maintain its ground till this side attack took place, the ruin of the whole column, or at least the capture of all its cannon, would be the result. To effect this object, he concentrated all the forces he could command at the mouth of the defile; but so unforeseen was the attack, that not above twothirds of his army could take a part in the action; neither the right-wing under Lecourbe, nor the half of the left, under Sainte Suzanne, could be expected to arrive so as to render any assistance (4).

The Imperialists had committed the great error of allowing the den, Dec. 3. surprised Republicans all the 2d to concentrate their scattered forces, but they did not on the following day repeat their mistake. Early on the morning of the 5d, a day ever memorable in the military annals of France, all their troops were in motion, and they plunged, in three great columns, into the forest to approach the enemy. The centre, forty thousand strong, advanced by the great road from Muhldorf to Munich, the only road which was practicable, in the dreadful state of the weather, for artillery; above a hundred pieces of cannon and five hundred chariots encumbered its

Ode to Hobenlinden.

⁽¹⁾ Nap. ii. 31. Dum. v. 107, 108. Jom. xiv. 91, 92.
(2) The reader will recollect Mr. Campbell's noble

⁽³⁾ Dum. v. 109, 110. Personal observation. (4) Nap. ii. 31, 32. J v. 94, 96. Dum 111, 112. M(m. du L) v. 94, 97, 2' 'v. 94, 96. Dum movements. The infantry marched first; then came the long train of artillery and caissons; the cavalry closed the procession. The right wing, under the command of general Latour, consisting of twenty-five thousand men, followed the inferior road leading from Wasserbourg to Munich; Kenmayer moved on the flank of that column, with his light troops, through the forest; while the left wing, under Riesch, was directed to proceed by a cross path by Albichen to St-Christophe. The imperial columns, animated by their success on the preceding days, joyfully commenced their march over the yet unstained snow two hours before it was daylight, deeming the enemy in full retreat, and little anticipating any resistance before their forces were united and disposed in battle array, in the open plain, on the Munich side of the forest (1).

From the outset, however, the most sinister presages attended their steps. During the night the wind had changed; the heavy rain of the preceding days turned into snow, which fell, as at Eyleau, in such thick flakes as to render it impossible to see twenty yards before the head of the column, while the dreary expanse of the forest presented, under the trees, a uniform white surface, on which it was impossible to distinguish the beaten track (2). The cross-paths between the roads which the troops followed, bad at any time, were almost impassable in such a storin; and each body, isolated in the snowy wilderness, was left to its own resources, without either receiving intelligence or deriving assistance from the other. The central costruggle at lumn, which advanced along the only good road, outstripped the others; and its head I i: • 1 Hohenlinden about nine o'clock and a formus conflict immediatel ,: to debouche from the defile and extend themselves along the front of the wood, the French to coerce their movements and drive them back into the forest. Both parties made the most incredible efforts; the snow which fell without interruption, prevented the opposing lines from seeing each other; but they aimed at the flash which appeared through the gloom, and rushed forward with blind fury to the deadly charge of the bayonet. Insensibly, however, the Austrians gained ground; their ranks were gradually extending

White this desperate conflict was going on in front of Hohenhaden, the leading ranks of the Austrian right began to appear at the entrance of the forest on the other road. Ney instantly repaired with his division to the scene of danger, and by a vigorous charge on the flank of the enemy's column, in front of the wood, when Generals Grouchy and Grandjean put themselves at the head of fresh battahons, and by a decisive charge drove them back into the forest. The imperial ranks were broken by the trees, but still they resisted bravely in the entangled thickets; posted behind the trunks, they kept up a murderous fire on the enemy; and the contending armies, broken into sincle file, fought, man to man, with invincible resolution (3).

z the

⁽¹⁾ hap il 21 Men. v. 251. Dam v. 118. 116 Jona. njv 93. 97.

⁽a) w On Linden when the new was low, All bloodiess by the natroiden new And dark as winter was the flow Of fact rolling reposity.

⁽³⁾ Dam v, 117, 118 Jam 217, 98, 98, Men v. 200, 257 Tap il 32 II. "Tis more del seure per ferel sen

[&]quot;Tis more bet warre you level ton Can pierce the war cloude volling date Where foreces from and bery flow, though their sulpherone scoopy" [5] W. Marie H. H. Co. Von H. M. Da⁽t) Yey a Mess. il. 41, 57. Xap il. 31. Done ..

deploying of the heads of the Imperial columns from the forest, was to introduce vacillation and confusion into the long train in their centre, which, unable to advance from the combat in its front, and pressed on by the crowd in its rear, soon began to fall into confusion. They were in this state, jammed up amidst long files of cannon and waggons, when the division of Richepanse, which had broken up early in the morning from Ebersberg, on the Munich side of the one defile, and struggled on with invincible resolution through dreadful roads across the forest, arrived in the neighbourhood of Matenpot, on the Muhldorf side of the other, directly in the rear of the centre of the Austrian army, and at the close of its protracted array. But Decisive Charge of just as it was approaching this decisive point, and slowly advan-Riche. cing in open column through the forest, this division was itself panse. pierced through the centre, near St.-Christophe, by the Austrian left wing, under Riesch, which, moving up by the valley of Albichen, to gain the chaussée of Wasserbourg, by which it was destined to pierce through the forest, fell perpendicularly on its line of march. Thus Richepanse, with half his division, found himself irretrievably separated from the remainder; the manœuvre which he was destined to have performed on the centre of the Imperialists was turned against himself, and with a single brigade he was placed between that immense body and their left wing. An ordinary general, in such alarming circumstances, would have sought safety in flight, and thus, by allowing the Imperial centre to continue its advance, endangered the victory; but Richepanse, whose able mind was penetrated with the importance of his mission, bravely resolved to push on with the single brigade which remained under his command, and fall on the rear of the grand column of the enemy. He sent orders, therefore, to his separated brigade to maintain itself to the last extremity at St.-Christophe, and advanced with the utmost intrepidity towards Matenpot and the line of march of the grand Austrian column (1). The Austrian line of When the troops approached the great road, they came upon the communication is intercepted. had dismounted, and were reposing leisurely under the trees until the great park of artillery and the reserves of Kollowrath had passed the defile. It may easily be imagined with what astonishment they beheld this new enemy on their flank, who was the more unexpected, as they knew that their left wing, under Riesch, had passed through the forest, and they deemed themselves perfectly secure on that side. They made, in consequence, little resistance, and were speedily driven off the chaussée. Not content with this success, Richepanse left to his cavalry the charge of keeping off the Imperial cuirassiers, and advanced himself with the two remaining regiments of infantry to attack the rear of the Imperial centre in the forest of Hohenlinden. The appearance of this force, amounting to nearly three thousand men, behind them, excited the utmost alarm in the Austrian column. The troops of that nation are proverbially more sensitive than any in Europe to the danger of being turned when in a line of march. A brigade of the Bavarian reserve was speedily directed to the menaced point, but it was overwhelmed in its advance by the crowds of fugitives, and thrown into such disorder by the overturned cannon and caissons which blocked up the road, that it never reached the enemy. Three Hungarian battalions were next brought up, but after resisting bravely, amidst the general consternation around them, they too at length were broken and fled. This little action

Skilful mancurre, by which the passage of that river was

While the boats of the Iser were publicly conducted, with the utmost possible eclat, to the lower Inn, Lecourbe caused a bridge pieces during the night of the 8th December at Neuperen, where the fun flows in a narrow channel, and which is the only point in that quarter where the right bank is commanded by the left. At six o'clock on the following morning, while it was still pitch-dark, the brench cannon, whose arrival was wholly unknown to the Austrian videttes, opened a furious fire, so well directed that the Imperialists were obliged to retire, and the Republicans instantly constructed a bridge, and threw across so strong a body of troops as gave them a solid footing on the left bank. At the same time a battery was placed in front of the bridge at Rosenheim, in order to prevent the burning of the remaining arches of that wooden structure, of which one only had been destroyed, but the corps of the Prince of Condi, which was stationed on the opposite bank, faithfully discharged its duty, and the whole bridge was soon consumed In consequence of this circumstance. Lecourbe's troops were obliged to make a circuit by the passage at Neuperen, but so dilatory were the movements of the Imperialists, that no sufficient force could be collected to oppose their progress, a second bridge of boats was constructed near Rosenheim, by which Richepanse's division was passed over, and the Austrians, abandoning the whole line of the Upper lnn, retired behind the Salza. Thus was one of the most formidable military lines in Europe broken through in the space of a few hours, without the loss of a single man (1).

This extraordinary success was chiefly owing to the Imperialists having been led, by the demonstrations of Moreau against the Lower Inn, to concentrate the right wing of their army, which had suffered least in the disastrous battle of Hohenhinden, in that quarter, which removed it three or four marches from the seene where the real attack was made. No sooner did they receive intelligence of the passage of Lecourbe over the Upper Inn, than they hastily, moved all their disposable troops towards the minaced point; but finding that the enemy were established on the right bank in too great force to be dislodged, they fell back on all sides, and abandoning the whole line of the Inn, concurrated their army behind the Alza, between Altumarkt and the lake of Sine, to cover the roads to Salzbourg and Vienna (2).

Moreau, conceiving with reason that the spirit of the Austran that the spirit of the that the spirit of extending themselves over a rast him in equal force throughout, which, since the communication of the war, they had so obstinately followed, they found themselves unable to arrest the march of the victor at any point, and by the rapid advance of Locourhe were irrecoverably separated from their left wing in the Tyrol. Moreau having resolved not to allow them to establish themselves in a solid manner behind the Salza, pushed rapidly forward across the belight with the advanced guard, approached the Salz, he found the bulk of the Austran army, thirty thousand strong, including ten thousand exaltry, posted in a strong position covering the approach to Salzhourg. Its front was covered by the Saal, the rapid course of which offered no inconsiderable obstacle to an attacking force; its right rested on inaccessible rocks, and its left was protected by the confluence of the Saal and the Salza. But this position, how strong soever, had its dangers; it was liable to be turned by a passage of the Salza, effected below the town between Lausten and Salzbourg, in which case the army ran the risk of being cut off from Vienna, or thrown back in disorder upon the two bridges of boats which preserved its communication with the right bank of the river (1).

⁽¹⁾ Dam v. 131, 140 Jon 21v, 112, 115. Nsp. (2) Joz. 21v 114, 118 Deaz. v. 111, 113 1 23, 39.

Lecourbe commenced the attack with his accustomed vigour; Gudin carried the village of Salzbourghoffen, and made six hundred prisoners; but Montrichard was so rudely handled by the Imperial cavalry, that he was driven back in disorder, with the loss of five hundred men. But this success was of little avail, for Moreau ordered Decaen to cross the Salza at Lhuffen, an operation which was most successfully performed. While the attention of the Imperialists was drawn to the broken arches of the bridge by a violent cannonade, this able general directed four hundred chosen troops to a point a little lower down, who, undeterred by the violence and cold of the winter torrent, threw themselves into the stream, swam across, and made themselves masters of some boats on the opposite side, by which the passage was speedily effected. Moreau was no sooner informed of this success, than he pushed Richepanse, with two fresh divisions, across at this place, and advanced against Salzbourg by the right bank. Encouraged by this sup-15th Dec. They are defeated by port, Lecourbe, on the day following, renewed his attack on the Austrian rear-guard, commanded by the Archduke John in person, the Austrian posted in front of Salzbourg. His troops advanced in two columns, cavalry in front of that one by the road of Reichenthal, the other formed in front of Vaal; a thick fog covered the ground, and the French tirailleurs advanced inconsiderately to the attack, deeming the Austrians in full retreat, and desirous of having the honour of first reaching Salzbourg. They were received by the fire of thirty pieces of cannon, whose discharges soon dissipated the mist, and discovered two formidable lines of cavalry drawn up in battle array. Lecourbe brought up his horse, but they were overwhelmed by the first line of the Imperial cavalry, which broke into a splendid charge when the Republicans approached their position. Lecourbe finding himself unequal to the task of opposing such formidables forces, drew back his wings behind the Saal, and posted his infantry in the rear of the village of Vaal. He there maintained himself with difficulty till the approach of night, glad to purchase his safety by the loss of two thousand men left on the field of battle (2).

But the Imperial lists are lists are less obliged to lether at Salzbourg no longer tenable. Moreau, at the head of twenty thousand men, was rapidly advancing up the right bank, and the Archduke John, unable to oppose such superior forces, was compelled to retire during the night, leaving that important town to its fate. Decaen, with the advanced guard of Moreau, took possession of Salzbourg, without opposition, on the following morning, and the Republican standards for the first time waved on the picturesque towers of that romantic city (3).

The occupation of Salzbourg, and the abandonment of the line of the Salza, decided the fate of the monarchy. The shattered remains of the grand army, which had been unable to maintain the formidable lines of two such rivers, broken in numbers, subdued in spirit, were unable therefter to make any head against a numerous enemy, flushed large and endured with consummate military skill. Embeldesed by therefiter to make any nead against a numerous enemy, flushed with victory, and conducted with consummate military skill. Emboddened by the unexpected facility with which he had passed these considerable rivers, Moreau resolved to give the enemy no time to recover from his consternation, but to push on at once towards Vienna, and decade the war in the centre of the Hereditary States, before the other French armies had begun scriously to skirmish on the froutier. He disquieted himself little about the forces in the Tyrol, deening the troops in that province sufficiently occupied with the invasion of Lombardy by Brune, and the march of Macdonald through the Grisons, which shall immediately be noticed. Satisfied with the precautions, therefore, of leaving on the right small bodies as he advanced, to mark the principal passes into that mountainous region, and on the left of detaching sainte-Suzanne with his wing to watch the motions of klenau, who was threatening the Gallo-Batavian army at Wurzburg, he hunself pashed on with his whole centre and right wing in pursuit of the enemy (1).

⁽¹⁾ Jonn. xiv. 115, 116. Dum. v. 195, 197. Nap. ii. 39, 40. (2) Nap. ii. 40, 41. Jonn. xiv. 116, 120. Dum. v. 198, 206. (3) Nap. ii. 40. Dum. 2

Moreau pusies on towards Vien 2

Richepanse, who conducted his advanced guard, marched with so much expedition, that he came up with the Austrian rear at Herdorf. Activitible to the leading the fathgue of his troops, who the day before had marched with leading the fathgue of his troops, who the day before had marched twelve leagues, he attacked the enemy at daybreak, routed them, and made a thousand prisoners. The two following days was a continued running fight; the Austrians retured, combaining all the way, to Schwanstadt. This indefatigable leader was closely followed by Decaen and Grouchy, who came up to his support the moment that any serious resistance arrested his columns; while Lecourbe, at the head of the oliter wing of the fin advanced by the mountain road, in order to turn the streams where they were easily fordable, and constantly meance the left fains of the enemy. In front of Schwanstadt the Imperialists made an effort to arrest this terrible advanced guard. Three thousand cavalry, supported by reach.

rocky thickets, lined with trailleurs on either flank, stood firm, and awaited the onset of the Republicans; but they were now in a state of exultation which nothing could resist. The infantry advanced to within three hundred paces of that formidable mass of cavalry, without nothing the tiral-leurs, who rattled incessantly on either flank, and then breaking into a hears, who rathed messaniny on their rank, and men breaking into a best of charge, approached the horse with levelled bayonets with so much resolution, that the Austrians broke and fled, and nearly a thousand men were killed or made prisoners. On the following day, a scene of dreadful confusion ensued, when the Austrian rear-guard crossed the fraun. A column of twelve hundred, under Prince Lichtenstein, stationed in front of the all slam of made prisoners. Immediately the whole remaining Imperialists who had not passed fled towards the defile; they were rapidly followed by the Republicans. A scene of indescribable horror ensued; in the melec of figitives, carriages, and trainpling squadrons, the arches were fired, and multitudes threw themselves into the stream; but such was the resolution of the French green diers, that, regardless alike of the flames and the discharges of grape from the opposite bank, they rushed across; by their exertions the Deem Rednitz. On the 21st he was again attacked and defeated at Neukerchen by the united Imperial generals, but they were unable to follow up their advantages, from having received orders on the inglit of their rictory to retire to Bohemia, in order to succour the heart of the unonarchy, now voicintly assailed by the enemy (1) They were in the course of executing these orders, when the armistice of Steyer put a period to their operations.

Thus the Republican army, in a short campaign of little more than three weeks, in the middle of winter, and in the most severe weather, marched minety leagues; crossed three considerable rivers in presence of the enemy; made twenty thousand priseners, killed, wounded, or dispersed as many; captured 150 pieces of cannon, 400 caissons, and 1000 carriages; and never halted till its advanced guard, arrested by an armistice, was within twenty leagues of Vienna. Such results require no cologium, the annals of war have few such triumphs to recount, and they deservedly placed Moreau in the very highest rank of the captains of the eighteenth century (2).

Operations in the Grisons. Designs of Vapoléon there

wille these great events were in progress in Germany, operations inferior indeed in magnitude, but equal in the heroism with which they were conducted, and superior in the romantic interest with which they were attended, took place in the snowy amplitheatre of the Alps. It has been already noticed, that the second army of reserve, consisting of fifteen thousand men, was moved forward in October to the valley of the Rhine, in the Grisons, and that it was destined to menace the rear of the Imperial army on the Minero, while Brune attacked it in front. This auxiliary corps would probably have rendered more essential service if it had been directed to the grand army of Moreau, which was distined to operate in the valley of the Danube, the true asenue to the Austrian states;

enal part in the campaign, with the troops when he was to lead by the Alps to Vienna. Independently of this secret feeling, which undoubledly had its weight, Napoleon was misled by the great results of the Italian campaigns of 1790 and 1797, and the paralysing effect of the march of the army of reserve across the St. Elemand in the present year. He conceived that Italy was the theatre where the decisive events were to take place, and fad the properties of the valley of the Daulou, in which corps took place, as it brought to light the intreplanty of an accordance of whose descent Scotland has so much reason to be proud; while it led to the interesting episode of the passage of the splugen, perhaps the most wonderful achievement of modern war, and which has been portrayed by one of its ablest leaders, with the fidelity of Xinophon, and the pencil of Luy (3).

the state of the s

sentations to the first consul, and requested that the chosen to serve of

(1) Nop. 11 25, 23 Pulsar 222, 211; John Mr.

3) John S. W. Ark 1 254 Nop in 64
131, 137

(2) Jon 217 157, 133

thousand men, which Murat was leading from the camp at Amiens to the plains of Italy, should be put under his orders. But Napoléon, who intended this corps in the Mps to operate on the campaign, more by the apprehensions it excited among the Imperialists than its actual achievements in the field, refused to change the destination of Murat's division, and it continued its route for the banks of the Mincio. He still believed that the frontier of the Inn would sufficiently cover the Hereditary States on that side, and that it was by accumulating ninety thousand men in the southern Tyrol and Italy, that the decisive blow against the Austrian power was to be struck. The command of this great army, destined to dietate peace under the walls of Vienna, he ultimately designed for himself (1).

of all the passages from Switzerland to Italy, there was none which presented more serious natural obstacles, and was more carefully guarded by the enemy, than that which leads over the Splugen into the Italian Tyrol. It is first necessary to pass from the valley of the Rhine, near its source, over the Splugen into that of the Adda, which descends in a rapid course from the Julian Alps to Chiavenna and the lake of Como; from thence, if an advance to the eastward is required, the Col Apriga, a steep ridge entangled with wood and lofty chesnuts, must be surmounted, which brings the traveller into the valley of the Oglio; between which and the stream of the Adige there is interposed the rugged ridge of the Monte Tonal, whose snowy summit was occupied and had been carefully fortified by the Austrian troops (2). Macdonald no sooner was made acquainted with these obstacles than he despatched his chief of the staff, General Mathieu Dumas, to lay before the first consulan account of the almost insuperable difficulties which opposed his progress. No man could be better qualified than the officer whose graphic pencil has so well described the passage to discharge this delicate mission; for he was equally competent to appreciate the military projects of the general-in-chief, and to portray the physical obstructions which opposed their execution. Napoléon listened attentively to his statement; interrogated him minutely on the force and positions of Hiller's corps, and the divisions of Landon, Davidowich, and Wukassowich, which were stationed near the head of the valleys which in that part of the Alps separate Italy from Germany; and then replied, "We will wrest from them without a combat that immense fortress of the Tyrol; we must manouvre on their flanks; menace their last line of refreat, and they will immediately evacuate all the upper valleys. I will make no change on my dispositions. Return quickly; tell Macdonald that an army can always pass, in every season, where two men can place their feet. It is indispensable that, in fifteen days after the commencement of hostilities, the army of the Grisons should have seen the sources of the Adda, the Oglio, and the Adige; that it should have opened its fire on the Monte Tonal which separates them; and that, having descended to Trent, it should form the left wing of the army of Italy, and threaten, in concert with the troops on the Mincio, the rear of Bellegarde's army. I shall take care to forward to it the necessary reinforcements; it is not by the numerical force of an army, but by its destination and the importance of its operations, that I estimate the merit due to its commander (5)."

Having received these verbal instructions, Macdonald prepared, with the devotion of a good soldier, to obey his commands. His troops advanced the

⁽¹⁾ Dam. v. 118, 119. Nap. ii. 61. (2) Personal observation.

⁽³⁾ Dum. v. 153, 154.

Persua moment the armistice was denounced, into the upper RheinHal, and concentrated between Corre and Tusis, at the entrance of the Spi-art the celebrated defile of the Via Mala, which is the commencement of the ascent of the Splugen, while, at the same time, to distract the enemy, and conceal his real designs, demonstrations were made towards Teldkirch, as if it was intended to break into the Tyrol in that quarter. A few was dismounted, and placed on sledges constructed in the country, to which oxen were harnessed, the artiflery annuminon was divided, and placed on the backs of mules, and in addition to his ordinary arms, hall cattridge and knapsack, every soldier received five days' provisions, and five packets of cartridges to bear on his shoulders over the rugged ascent. Hall he hied to see the French infautry preparing, in the middle of December, under the weight of these controls butdens, to cross the snow-clad rugges of the Rha tian Alps, by paths hardly accessible at that season to the mountainers.

Tusis is situated at the confluence of the Albula and the Rhine, at the foot of a range of pine-clad chills of great elevation, which run across the valley, and in former times had formed a barrier, creating a lake in the valley of Schams, a few miles farther up its course. Through this enormous mass, three or four miles broad, the Rhine has, in the course of ages, found its way in a narrow bed, seldom more than thirty or forty, sometimes not more than eight or ten yards broad, shut in on either side by stupendous cliffs which rise to the height of two or three thousand feet above its rocky channel. The road, conducted along the sides of these perpendicular precipices, repeatedly crosses the stream by stone bridges, of a single arch, thrown from one chiff to the other, at the height of three or four hundred feet above the raging torrent. Innumerable cascades descend from these lofty precipices, and are conducted in subterraneous channels under the road, or lost in the sable forests of pine which clothe their feet. Impetuous as the Rhine is in this extraordinary channel, the roar of its waters is scarcely heard at the immense elevation above it at which the bridges are placed. The darkness of the road, overshadowed by primeral pines of gigantic stature, conducted through galleries cut out of the solid rock, or on arches thrown over the awful abyss: the solitude and solemnity of the impenetrable forests around, the stunendous precinices above and beneath, which make the passenger feel as if he were suspended in middle air, conspire to render this pass the most extraordinary and sublime in the whole amphitheatre of the central Alps (2)

Emerging from this gloom, delile, the road taverses for two leagues the open and similar valley of schims, it next accords by a winding course the nune-clad chifts of La Roffa, and at length reaches in a narrow and desolate

⁽¹⁾ Hum v 151, 161. See Gibbon, chap I Jon x v 165, 167 (2) I cre not observat one Tum, v 151 Else Art 332, Mala

The define of the big Man is not so contrained as its matchless fea ures descript but the admirable road which its now on dusted through its romant of edition and over the plagery, must not matchy being it into more general notice. It exceeds in settling by ad barres air seema in the Alps. There is no land or the Latrie of Isabatuse in the Pyrosers but exceeds in stupendous foutness to het of these extraceds cary scenes.

pastoral valley the village of Splugen, situated at the foot of the ascent of the mountain of the same name. Here the road, leaving the waters of the Rhine, which descend cold and clear from the glaciers of Hinter Rhin, turns sharp to the left hand, and ascends a lateral valley as far as its upper extremity, when it emerges upon the bare face of the mountain above the region of wood, and by a painful ascent, often of forty-five degrees elevation, reaches the summit in an hour and a half. This description applies to the old road as it stood in 1800. The new road, over the same ground, is wound gradually up the ascent, with that admirable skill which has rendered the works of the French and Italian engineers in the Alps the object of deserved admiration to the whole civilized world. The wearied traveller then beholds with joy the waters flowing towards the Italian streams, in a narrow plain about four hundred yards broad, situated between two glaciers at the base of overhanging mountains of snow. From thence to Isola, on the Italian side of the declivity, is a descent of two leagues, conducted in many places down zig-zag slopes, attended with great danger. On the right, for several miles, is a continued precipice, or rocky descent, in many places three or four hundred feet deep, while, on the left, the road is cut out of the solid rock, on the bare face of the mountain, exposing the traveller to be overwhelmed by the avalanches, which, loosened on the heights above by the warmth of the southern sun, often sweep with irresistible violence to the bottom of the declivity (1).

In summer, when the road is well cleared, it is possible to go in three hours from the village of Splugen to the hospice on the summit; but when the newly fallen snow has effaced all traces of the path in those elevated regions, above the zone of the arbutus and rhododendron; when the avalanches or the violence of the winds have carried off the black poles which mark the course of the road, it is not possible to ascend with safety to the higher parts of the mountain. The traveller must advance with cautious steps, sounding, as he proceeds, as in an unknown sea beset with shoals; the most experienced guides hesitate as to the direction which they should take; for in that snowy wilderness the horizon is bounded by icy peaks, affording few landmarks to direct their steps, even if they should be perceived for a few minutes from amidst the mantle of clouds which usually envelope their summits (2).

It may easily be conceived, from this description, what labours are requisite during the winter season to open this passage. It is necessary for an extent of five leagues, from the village of Splugen, to that of Isola, either to clear away the snow, so as to come to the earth, or to form a passable road over its top; and the most indefatigable efforts cannot always secure success in such an enterprise. The frequent variations of the atmosphere, the clouds which suddenly rise up from the valleys beneath, the terrible storms of wind which arise in these elevated regions, the avalanches which descend with irresistible force from the overhanging glaciers, in an instant destroy the labour of weeks, and obliterate, by a colossus of snow, the greatest efforts of human industry (5).

Such were the difficulties which awaited Macdonald in the first mountain ridge which lay before him in the passage of the Alps. He arrived with the Nav 26 advanced guard, on the evening of the 26th, at the village of Splugen, the point where the mountain passage, properly speaking, begins, with a company of sappers, and the first sledges conveying the artillery.

⁽¹⁾ Dum. v. 164, 165. Personal observation.

Fatreme d ffcult ca esperi tie Freich troops in the passage

The country guides placed poles along the ascent; the labourers followed and cleared away the snow; the strongest dragoons next marched to beat down the road by their horses' feet, they had already, after incredible fatigue, nearly reached the summit, when the wind suddenly rose, an avalanche fell from the mountain, and sweeping across the road, precipitated thirty dragoons at the head of the column into the gulph beneath, where they were dashed to pieces between the Nov 27 ice and the rocks. General La Riboissiere, who led the van, was a-head of the cataract of snow, and reached the hospice, but the remainder of the column, thunderstruck by the catastrophe, returned to Splugen; and the wind, which continued for the three succeeding days to blow with great violence, detached so many avalanches, that the road was entirely blocked up in the upper regions, and the guides declared that no possible efforts could render it passable in less than fifteen days (1).

Macdonald, however, was not to be daunted by any such obstacles. Independently of his anxiety to fulfil his destined part in the campaign, necessity forced him on, for the unwonted accumulation of men and horses in those elevated Alpine regions promised very soon to consume the whole subsistence of the country, and expose the troops to the greatest dangers from actual want. He instantly made the best arrangement which circumstances would admit for re-opening the passage. First marched four of the strongest oxen that could be found in the Grisons, led by the most experienced guides; they were followed by forty robust peasants, who cleared or beat down the snow; two companies of sappers followed and improved the track, behind them marched the remnant of the squadron of dragoons, which had suffered so much on the first ascent, and who bravely demanded the post of danger in renewing the attempt. After them came a convoy of artiflery and a hundred beasts of burden, and a strong rear-guard closed the party. By incredible efforts the head of the column, before night, reached the hospice, and although many men and horses were swallowed up in the ascent, the order and discipline so necessary to the success of the enterprise were maintained throughout. They here joined general La Biboissiere, who continued the same efforts on the Italian side, and led this adventurous advanced guard in safety to the sunny fields of Campo Dolemo at the southern base of the mountain. Two other columns, arrayed in the same order, followed on the 2d and 5d December, in clear frosty weather, with much less difficulty, because the road was beaten down by the footsteps of those who had preceded them; but several men died of the excessive donald advanced with the rethe 4th December, and leaving only a slight rear-guard on the northern side of the mountain, commenced his march on the morning of the 5th, at the head of seven thousand men. Though no tempest had been felt in the deep valley of the Rhine, the snow had fallen during the night in such quantities, that from the very outset the traces of the track were lost, and the road required to be made anew, as at the commencement of the ascent. The guides refused to proceed; but Macdonald insisted upon making the attempt, and after six hours of unheard-of fatigues, the head of his column succeeded in reaching the summit. In the narrow plain between the glaciers, however, they found the road blocked up by an immense mass of snow, formed by an avalanche newly fallen, upon which the guides refused to enter, and in consequence the soldiers returned, unanimously exclaiming that the passage was closed. Macdonald instantly hastened to the front, revived the sinking spirits of his men, encouraged the faltering courage of the guides, and advancing himself at the head of the column, plunged into the perilous mass, sounding every step as he advanced with a long staff, which often sunk deep into the abyss. "Soldiers," said he, "the army of reserve has surmounted the St.-Bernard; you must overcome the Splugen; your glory requires that you should rise victorious over difficulties to appearance insuperable. Your destinies call you into Italy? advance and conquer, first the mountains and the snow, then the plants and the armies (1)." Put to shame by such an example, the troops and the peasants redoubled their efforts; the vast walls of ice and snow were cut through, and although the hurricane increased with frightful rapidity, and repeatedly filled up their excavations, they at length succeeded in rendering the passage practicable. The tempest continued to blow with dreadful violence during the passage to the hospice and the descent of the Cardinal; the columns were repeatedly cut through by avalanches, which fell across the road (2), and more than one regiment was entirely dispersed in the leg wilderness. At length, by the heroic exertions of the officers, whom the example of their general had inspired with extraordinary ardour, the head-quarters reached Isola, and rested there during the two succeeding days, to fally the regiments, which the hardships of the passage had broken into a confused mass of insulated men, but above one hundred soldiers, and as many horses and mules, were swallowed up in the abysses of the mountains, and never more heard of (5).

(1) A paradely added occurred transient types, and, what is very extraor finary, during the decay of Roman virtue. "The finary for Papiran, "says Gibbon, "Icd his troops over the Appring over matter. The lamp for Icd the may on foit, and in complete armour, a mining with his long staff the depth of the new orshow, and encounaging the Scythiam, who complained of the extreme cell, by the cheefful assurance that they should be satisfied with the heat of Mrien,"—Declinear Itall, c. xxxv. (2) bet. iv. 59. John xxv. 156, 157. Dune v. 171.

(3) Bot. iv. 59. Jem. xiv. 156, 157. Dun. v. 171, 171.

University The passage of the Spluger by Mac-jealous, of double is the most memorable and this passage extraordinary undertaking of the kind dis, layed by recorded in modern war, so for as the Napoleon. obstacles of nature are concerned. It yields only to the march of Suvarrow over the St. Gothard, the Shachenthal, and the Lugiberg, where, in addition to similar natural difficulties, the efforts of an able and indefatigable enemy were to be overcome. The passage of the St.-Bernard by Aspoleon in fine weather, and without opposition, will hear no comparison with either the one or the other. That he himself was conscious of this, is obvious from the striking terms of disparagement in which he speaks of Mardonald's exertions in this passage; an instance of that jealousy of every rival in any of his great achievements, which is almost inconceivable in so great a min. "The passage of the Splugen," says he, " presented, without doubt, some difficulties; but winter is by no means the season of the year in which such operation, are conducted with most difficulty, the snow is then firm, the neather settled, and there is nothing to fear from the avalanches, which constitute the true and only danger to be ap-probeaded in the Alpa. In December, you often meet with the line t weather, on these elevated mountains, or dry frost, during which the air is perfectly called "Arminary, it, $1, 62. Accollecting that this was written after the first consul had received the full details from Macdonald of the extransdinary difficulties of the per age, it is mexcu-sible, and electly betrays a consciousness of the inferiority of his own pas ago over the St.-Bernard. In his otherst despatch, by orders of the first consul, to Miedona'd, Buthier says, "I have received the relation which the chief of your staff has tran mitted to me relative to the passage of the Splugen by the army which you commund. I have commumeated the details to the consuls, and they have enjoined me to make known to you their high salis-faction at the intrepidity and heroic con tancy which the officers, and soldiers, and generals, have evinced in this pissage, which will form a memurable epoch in our infiltary annils. The consuls, confident in your talents, behold with interest the new position of the army of the Grisons. I impatiently expect the details of the celebrated passage of the Splugen, and the losses which it occasioned, to enable them to appreciate the admiration and gratitude which is due to the chiefs and soldiers of your army." [14th Dec. 1800. See Dum. vi. 255.

It was equally unworthy of Napoleon to say in his Memoirs —" The march of Macdonald produced no good effect, and contributed in no respect to the success of the campaign; for the corps of Baragury d'Hilliers, detached into the Upper Engadine, was too weak to effect any thing of importance. Macdonald arrived at Trieste on the 7th January, when the enemy was already classed from it by the left of the army of Italy, by the corps in der the orders of Moncey and Rochambeau." [8" 63-]

Dec "
He arrives at Chia venna on the lake of Lome

Late on the evening of the 6th December, the greater part of the troops and a large part of the artillery had passed the mountain, and head-quarters were advanced to Chiavenna, at the upper extremity of the lake of Como. No sooner did littlers hear of this they be greated forward by solution to said the head of the a literal to the columns to said the head of the a literal to the said of the said of tremity of the lake of Como. No sooner did littlers hear of this advance, than he moved forward his columns towards the head of the valley of the Inn to assail him, but the intelligence of the disastrous battle of Hohen-Iniden arrived that very day, and by rendering it evident that all the forces of the monarchy would be required to defend the capital, precluded the possibility of following up any distant enterprises. The Austrians therefore took post on the summits of the Albuda, the Juhierberg, and the Broglio, the three ridges which separate the Italian from the German side of the mountains in that quarter, and strongly reinforced the division on the Tonal, the only pass between the valley of the Oglio, to which Macdonald was lastening, and that of the Adige, which was the ultimate object of this efforts (1).

lie is placed un While still on the banks of the Adda, the French general had the misfortune to receive intelligence of the capture of a battalion of der the erders of dismounted hussars, which negligently lay in the elevated valley at its upper extremity, by a well-concerted surprise from the Imperial forces in the Engadine At the same time, he received orders from the first consulto place himself under the command of General Brune, of whose army he was to form the left wing; a mortifying circumstance to a general who had just achieved so important a service in a separate command as the passage of the Splugen, but which abated nothing of his zeal in the public cause. He suggested to Brune that two divisions should be detached from the army of Italy to reinforce his corps, and thus with a body of twenty-four thousand men he would advance across the mountains to Trieste, and effect a decisive operation on the rear of the imperial army. But the general-in-chief refused to comply with this request, which was evidently hazardous, as exposing to overwhelming attacks in detail two separate armies, too far severed from each other to be able to render any effectual assistance in case of need (2).

Difficult Mapoleon's orders had directed Macdonald to penetrate as soon as possible into the valley of the Adige, in order to threaten the flank

and rear of the imperalists on the Minero. For this purpose it was necessary to cross the Col Apriga, which lay between the valley of the Adda and that of the Ogho, and afterwards surmount the cy summit of Mont Total, between the latter stream and that of the Adge. The passage of the Stonte Apriga, though considerably less elevated than the Splugen, was even more difficult by reason of the extreme steepness of the ascents, the entangled wood which encumbered its lower region, and the dreadful nature of the road, which in many places is little better than the bed of a torrent. In seven hours, however, all these difficulties were overcome; the army found itself on the banks of the Ogho, and extended its outposts as far as Bornou at the upper extremity of the valley (3).

Another There still remained, however, the Herculcan task of surmounting the Tonal, a mountain ridge of great elevation, which could be reached at that rude season only by a path through the snow, in which the fast, it is no no sees of the high states of the former at La Fetro with 100g need? The great total willings as twentile the fast of present of the seed of the se account of transcripes were I be expected by poreray and thought he could decesse feture agre as he did his own by means of symphosicish we terb and as males of great and argulated 3 va. (1 Jun. 214 152, 1.2 Iron v 174 175 (2) Jun. 214 155, 1.2 Iron v 175, 175, 175, 156,

^{153.} (3) June 217, 155, 152, Dinne 7, 253, 151, $4. ir 61

troops were confined to single files. The summit, as usual in these elevated regions, consisted of a small plain three hundred yards broad, situated between two enormous and inaccessible glaciers. Across this narrow space the Austrians had drawn a triple line of intrenchments, faced for the most part by enormous blocks of ice, cut in the form of regular masonry, and even more difficult to scale than walls of granite. Notwithstanding these obstacles, the French grenadiers, after a painful ascent by the narrow and slippery path, reached the front of the intrenchments. Though received by a shower of balls, they succeeded in forcing the external palisades; but all their efforts were ineffectual against the walls of ice which formed the inner strength of the works. They were in consequence obliged to retreat, and brought back the disheartening report that this important position was impregnable (1).

Dec. 3r. Sensible, however, of the vital importance of forcing this passage, the French: Macdonald resolved to make another attempt. Eight days afterpulsed. wards, another column was formed, under the command of Vandamme, and approached the terrible intrenchments. The Austrians had in the interval added much to the strength of the works; but they were assaulted with so much vigour, that two external forts were carried; still, however, when they approached the principal intrenchment, the fire from its summit, and from a block-house on an elevated position in its rear, was so violent, that all the efforts of the Republicans were again ineffectual, and they were forced to retire, after staining with their bravest blood the cold and icy summit of the mountain. Macdonald was in some degree consoled for this disaster by the success of his left wing, which spread itself into the Engadine, driving the Imperialists before it, and made itself master of the well-known stations of Glurens and Martinsbruck, on the Tyrolean side of the mountains (2).

The importance of these operations, and the obstinacy with which the attack and defence of the inhospitable Alpine ridges were conducted at this inclement season, will be best understood by casting a glance over the positions and movements of the contending armies in the Italian plains at this period.

When hostilities were recommenced to the south of the Alps by Positions and forces the denunciation of the armistice, the Imperial army, sixty-five French and thousand strong, of which fifteen thousand were cavalry, occupied Austrians the formidable line of the Mincio, covered by a hundred pieces of cannon, flanked on the one extremity by the Po, on the other by the lake of Guarda, and strengthened by the strong fortress of Mantua, and the inferior fortifications of Peschiera and Borghetto, which gave them the immense advantage of being able to debouche at pleasure on either side of the river (5). The Imperialists had received orders to remain on the defensive in this excellent position until their flanks were secured, and the prospect of an advantageous attack was afforded by the advance of the Neapolitan troops over the hills of Tuscany; and the descent of Laudon and Wukassowich from the moun-: tains of Tyrol.

The French forces in Italy were immense. In the peninsula altogether there were 95,000 men, besides 27,000 who encumbered the hospitals. Of this great body, 61,000 infantry, 9,000 cavalry, and 178 pieces of cannon, were ready for active operations on the Mincio, while the remainder occupied

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xiv. 161, 162. Dum. v. 186, 188. Bot. (3) Dam. v. 213, 214. Julih viv. 106, 127. Exiv. 61. Pérsonal observation. iv. 63. (2) Jom. xiv. 162, 163. Dum. v. 188, 191. Bot.

Tuscany, Lombardy, Piedmont, and Liguria. During the five months that these troops had occupied the fertile plains of the Po, they had profiled to an extraordinary degree by the resources of the country. The soldiers had been completely new clothed, the artiflery horses renewed, the cavalry was adversably mounted the magazines were full, the troops in the highest state of excited the utmost discontent in the pennsula. The imbadiants compared the high-sounding proclamations of the invaders with the sad consequences which had followed their footsteps, and, rendered more sullen by the disappointment of their hopes than even the serious injuries they had undergone, were ready upon any reverse to have risen unanimously upon their oppressors. This state of things was well known to the French commanders, and to secure their flanks and rear they were obliged to detach twenty-five thousand from the grand army on the Micro, how well soever they were aware that it was there the fate of tlay was to be decided (4).

Hostilities were first commenced by Brune, who found the spirit of his troops so much elevated by the intelligence of the battle of Hohenlinden, and the passage of the Splugen by Macdonald, that their ardour could no longer be restrained The firing commenced on the 16th, but nothing except inconsiderable skirmishes ensued before the 25th. The Mincio, in its course of twenty miles from the lake of Guarda to Mantua, though fordable in many p winter, and the five bridges Saleconzo, Valleggio, Volta, L tions, or strongly intrenched and barricaded. The left bank, in the hands of the Austrians, was generally more elevated than the right, in the possession of the Republicans; but at Mozambano and Molino, near Pozzuolo, the right had the advantage, which evidently pointed out these stations as the most advantageous for forcing a passage. For these reasons they had been fortified with care by the Austrian engineers, who had pushed their intrenchments, which were occupied by twenty thousand combatants under Hohenzollern, to a considerable distance from the right bank of the river; and against these advanced works it first believed Brune to direct his efforts (2).

Innustration On the 20th the whole French army approach (4) the shores of the Mantian lake; the centre, under Dupont, moved towards the shores of the Mantian lake; the centre, under Suchet, advanced direct upon Volta; the Hird column, destined to mask Peschiera, was ordered to take post near Pontit; the left and the reserve were directed against Mozambano. The French general had intended to have made fugued attacks only on the centre and right, and to have attempted to force the passagein good carnest near the lake of Guar

otherwi

had orums ----

had the whole French army on their hands, successively ananomous ampositions they had fortuned with so much care, and withdrew to the other side, leaving only detachments to occupy Valleggio and the lete-de-point of Borghetto, on the Republican side. The French patrols, in consequence, every where approached the river; and thipoint, ignorant that the attack on his side was intended only to be a feint, and that the left was the real point of attack, made the most active preparations for effecting a passage. He succeeded so well, that, early on the morning of the 25th, he had thrown a battalion over, near Molino, which speedily established a bridge, and soon enabled a whole division to obtain a firm footing on the left bank. Hardly was the passage completed, when orders arrived from the commanderin-chief to cover, by a fire of cannon, merely the bridge which had been established, and allow no troops to pass over to the other side. But this despatch arrived too late; the division of Watrin was already over; the enemy's troops opposed to it were hourly and rapidly increasing, and any attempt to fall back to the bridge would have exposed it to certain and irremediable ruin. In these trying circumstances Dupont conceived that the execution of his orders had become impossible, and resolved to retain the advantage he had gained, by aiding Watrin with his remaining troops. In this resolution he was confirmed by Suchet, who was no sooner informed that the passage was irrevocably engaged on the right, than he resolved to support it with all his forces, and hastening to the bridge at Molino, crossed over with his whole corps. On their side, the Imperialists, who had judiciously placed the bulk of their army in mass, a little in the rear of the centre of the line, no sooner heard of the passage at Molino than they directed an overwhelming

the troops who had

force to assail the advanced guard of the enemy. But for the timely assistance afforded by Suchet, Dupont's troops would have been totally destroyed; as it was, a furious combat ensued, which continued with various success till night, in which the Republicans only maintained their ground by the sacrifice of the bravest of their men. For long the French infantry repulsed with invincible sirmness the repeated and vehement charges of the Austrian cavalry; but at length they were driven, by a desperate effort of the Hungarian grenadiers, out of the village of Pozzuolo. and forced in disorder to the water's edge. All seemed lost; when the Imperialists, checked by a terrible discharge of grape from the batteries on the French side, hesitated in their advance; and Dupont took advantage of their irresolution to animate his men, and lead them back to the charge, which was executed with such vigour, that Puzzuolo was regained, and the Imperialists repulsed with the loss of seven hundred prisoners and five pieces of cannon. The Austrians, however, brought up fresh troops; Pozzuolo was again carried at the point of the bayonet; Suchet advanced with his division and retook it; it was again carried by the Imperialists, and continued to be alternately conquered and reconquered till nightfall, when it finally remained in the hands of the Austrians (1). Even the darkness of a winter night could not suspend this terrible combat: between eleven and twelve the fitful gleams of the moon, through a tempestuous and cloudy sky, enabled the Republicans to perceive two deep masses of grenadiers who silently approached their intrenchments. They were received with a general discharge of firearms of all sorts; the batteries thundered from the opposite bank; for a few minutes a volcano seemed to have burst forth on the shore of the Mincio, but all the efforts of the Imperialists were unavailing; and after a gallant struggle they were obliged to retire, leaving the French in possession of their bloodstained intrenchments (2).

Brune, during this bloody conflict, remained in a state of the greatest irresolution, hesitating between his original design of effecting a passage at Mo-

the German character makes it probable the former was the true account.
(2) Nap. ii. 67, 75. Bot. iv. 63, 64. Dum. v. 251, 266, Jom. xiv. 175, 185.

4.

⁽¹⁾ Bellegarde says it remained in the hands of the Austrians: Oudinot affirms it was ultimately carried by the French. The well-known veracity of

zambano, and the new project to which he was urged, of supporting the ground, won at so dear a price, in the lower part of the stream. He thus ran the risk of losing his whole right wing, which was in truth only saved by the desnerate valour of the troops of whom it was composed (1). At length he resolved to pursue his original design, and form a passage at Mozambano. For this purpose, Marmont, at daybreak, on the 26th December. established a battery of forty pieces of cannon on the heights above that place, which commanded the left bank, and despatched orders to Dupont and Suchet to keep themselves within their intrenchments until they heard Brune at the bring warmly engaged on their left. Under cover of a thick fog. the passage was speedily effected, and the French advanced lieves tiem and guard soon after came to blows with the enemy. It was evident, the passage however, that they fought only to cover their retreat: Oudmot, at the head of the Republican grenadiers, bravely resisted till sufficient reinforcements passed over, to enable them to resume the offensive, which they did with such vigour, that the Imperialists were driven back to Valleggio, from whence they continued their retreat in the night, leaving Borghetto to its fate, which, next day, after repulsing an assault with great loss, surrendered with the garrison of eight hundred men. In effect, Bellegarde, conceiving the nassage of the river effected by the bridge established at Mohno, had resolved unon a general retreat, his troops fell back in all quarters towards the Adige, leaving garrisons in Mantua, Verona, Legnago, and Peschiera, which reduced his effective force to forty thousand combatants (2).

In the passage of the Mincro, the Austrans lost above seven thouresulting and men, of whom one-half were prisoners, and forty pieces of cannon, but its moral consequences, as is generally the case with a lirst decisive success, determined the fate of the campaign. The French resumed the career of victory with their worded abertly, the Imperalists full into the despondency which is the sure prehule to defeat; and the dissistous intelligence they received from the Bavarian frontier contributed to spread the disheartening impression that the Republicans were invincible under their new leader, and that no chance of safety remained to the monarchy, but in a speedy submission to the conqueror (3).

Bellegarde Brune, however, advanced cautiously after his victory. Leaving detachments to mask Mantua, Verona, and Peschiera, he approached the Adige in the end of December. To effect the passage of that river, the French general made use of the same stratagem which had been attempted for the passage of the Minero, viz., to make demonstrations both against the lower and upper part of the stream; and while the enemy were distracted in their attention by a multiplicity of attacks, the artiflery and bridge equipage were secretly conducted to Bassolengo. Sixty meces of cannon were established there in battery, on the heights of the right bank, on the 1200, 1, 1801 morning of the 1st January, which opened their are at daybreak, under cover of which a bridge was speedily constructed without opposition from the enemy. The troops passed over, and established themselves on the left bank, without hring a shot; the Imperialists were much less solicitous about interrupting their operations than effecting a junction with the corps of Wukassowhich and Laudon, which were hastening by the deales of the Brenta towards the plain of Bassano. Bellegarde withdrew his forces on all sides, and concentrated them in the strong position of Caldiero, already signalized by a victory over Napoléon, while the Republicans closely followed his footsteps, and extending their left up the rocky gorge of the Adige, made themselves masters, after severe combats, of the narrow defile of Corona and the immortal plateau of Rivoli (1).

⁽¹⁾ bur th all encurred the just and increited training (1) During 275, 274, Journa of 172, 174, 274, at rest like first rate 1 - big baroting in 25 % in 10

⁽²⁾ J m. z v 158 1.12. Dame v. 265, 275 Aug.

Advance of the Republicans, under Moncey, pursued their advantages; the licans in the Imperialists, under Laudon, long and obstinately defended the valley of the Adige. town of Alta, in the valley of the Adige, but were driven from it with the loss of five hundred prisoners; they again held firm in the intrenchments of S.-Marco, but were at length forced to retreat, and took refuge in the defile of Calliano, already celebrated by so many combats. At the same Jan. 2. time, the Italian division of Count Theodore Lecchi ascended the valley of the Oglio, and entered into communication with Macdonald's corps immediately after its repulse from the icy ramparts of Mont Tonal; while detachments in the rear formed the blockade of Mantua, Peschiera, Verona, and Legnago. Laudon retired with six thousand men to Roveredo, from whence he was soon after driven, and fell back, disputing every inch of ground, to the foot of the fort of Pietra, overhanging the deep and rapid stream of the Adige between that town and Trent (2).

Bellegarde, finding his force so materially weakened by the garrisons which he was obliged to throw into the fortified towns on the Mincio, and the losses sustained in the passage of that river, had given orders to Wukassowich and Laudon, whose united forces exceeded twenty thousand men, to fall back from the Italian Tyrol, through the defiles of the Brenta, and join him in the plains of Bassano, in the rear of Calliano; and it was to give them time to accomplish this junction that he took post on the almost impregnable heights of Calliano. Alarming situation of Laudon was commencing this movement when he was rudely assailed by the division of Moncey, and harassed in his retreat up Laudon on the Upper the valley of the Adige in the manner which has been mentioned. But a greater danger awaited him. On the very day on which he retired to the castellated defile of La Pietra, he received the alarming intelligence that Trent, directly in his rear, and by which he required to pass to gain the upper extremity of the Brenta, was occupied by Macdonald, at the head of nine thousand men! To understand how this happened, it is necessary to resume the narrative of the army of the Grisons, after its repulse from the glaciers of Mont Tonal (5).

Macdonald After that check, Macdonald had collected in the Val Camonica, makes his including the Italian division of Lecchi, above nine thousand men; way into the Italian and with them he eagerly sought for some defile or mountain-path by which to penetrate across the rocky chain which separates that valley from that of the Sarca, from whence he could reach Trent and the banks of the Adige. But these rugged cliffs, which push out, with hardly any declivity, almost to Brescia, in the plain of Lombardy, defeated all his efforts; and it became necessary to turn their southern extremity by Pisogno, at the head of the lake of Iseo, from thence cross the Col di San Zeno, into the valley of Sabia, and again surmount another ridge into the Val Trompia; in order to ascend by the beautiful sides of the Chiesa into the valley of Sarca. This long circuit, which would have been completely avoided by forcing the passage of Mont Tonal, irritated to the highest degree the French troops, who had expected at once, after surmounting the Splugen, to take a part in the glories

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xiv. 196, 197. Dum. v. 276, 290. Nap. ii. 78, 79. Bot, iv. 66. (2) Jom. xiv. 198, 199. Dum. v. 288, 290. (3) Bot. iv. 66, 67. Jom. xiv. 198, 199. Dum. v. 288, 290.

At the moment when this double armistice consolidated the Insurrec French power in Italy and Germany, a dangerous insurrection out in broke out in Piedmont The people of that country were exaspe-Lielmont Jas 15 rated to the highest degree at the endless and vexations requisitions of the French troops, the most ardent democrats were thunderstruck by the annexation of the territory of Vercelli to the Civalpine republic, and the clergy and nobles justly apprehensive of the extinction of their rights and properties, from the continued ascendant of France Fed by so many sources, the flame of discontent, though long smothered, at length broke out. the peasants of the Valley of Yosta took up arms, expelled the French detachments, and shut up their depot of conscripts in the fortress of lives, while symptoms of insurrection appeared at Turin (1) But the vigour of Soult overcame the danger, he speedily surrounded and disarmed the insurgent quarter of the capital, and the appearance of Murat, who at that moment descended from the mountains in their rear, extinguished the revolt in the Alpine valleys The revolutionary party of Piedmont found themselves inextricably enveloped in a despotic net from which it was impossible to escape

The cannon of Marengo had shaken the throne of the Two Sicitans invad lies, the court of Naples was conscious that the sanguinary execusta es, and tions which had disgraced its return to the shores of Campania, had exposed it to the utmost danger from the vengeance of the popular party, and that it had little to hope from the mercy of the first consul, if the Imperial standards were finally chased from Italy Feeling its very existence thus endangered, the Cabinet of Ferdinand IV had made exertions disproportioned to the strength of the kingdom. An army, sixteen thousand strong, splendid in appearance, and formidable, if numerical strength only were considered, under the command of Count Roger de Damas, had advanced through the Roman states, and taken post on the confines of Tuscany, ready to foment the discontent of its inhabitants, which the enormous requisitions of the French authorities had exasperated to the greatest degree, and act in conjunction with the Imperialists at Sommariva, whose head-quarters were at Incona The weakness of Mollis, the I reach commander in Tuscany, whose forces had been reduced, by the garrisons left in I ucca. Leghorn. and Florence, to four thousand men, encouraged them to attempt in offensive movement. They advanced to Sienna, which rose in insurrection against the French, while Arezzo, supported by detachments from Ancona, again displayed the standard of revolt. But on this, as on every other occasion during the war, the utter loss of military character by the Acapolitans was namfully conspicuous. Miellis collected six thousand veterans from the neighbouring garrisons, and advanced against the invaders. The vanguard of Ferdinand fled at the bare sight of the enemy. In vain the infan-Jan 14 trampling under foot their own flying regiments, and the whole army soon became a useless crowd of fugitives, which hastened, like a flock of sheep, towards the Roman frontier, without having sustained any serious loss. On this occasion the French hardly fired a shot, and the Neapolitans were discomfited by the mere sight of the Piedmonteso levies, a striking troof how much more rapidly unitiary virtue had declined in the south than the north of the princula (2).

Even, however, if the Neapolitan troops had combated with the valour of the ancient Samnites, the result would have been the same. Sommariva no sooner heard of this disaster at Sienna than he retraced his steps towards Ancona; the insurgents at Arezzo made haste to offer their submission to the conqueror; Murat's corps, ten thousand strong, was approaching Parma; Jam. 16. and the armistice of Treviso, a few days after, put a final period to the co-operation of the Imperialists. Ancona was delivered up agreeably to the convention; Ferras passed into the hands of the Republicans; southern Italy lay open to the invader; and the unwarlike Neapolitans were left alone.

Jun. 200. to combat a power before which the veteran bands of Austria and Russia had fallen (1). Napoléon openly expressed his determination to overturn the throne of the Two Sieilies, and Murat, at the head of an army of twenty-eight thousand men, composed of his own corps, that of Miollis, and two divisions of veteraus from the Mincio, soon after crossed the Apennines, to carry into execution the mandates of Republican vengeance.

Queen of Naples dies to St-Pe-But the Court of Naples had not trusted merely to its military preparations; the address of the queen extricated the throne from the imminent danger to which it was exposed, and gave it a few years longer of a precarious existence. No sooner had the battle of Marengo and the armistice of Alexandria opened the eyes of this able and enterprising, though vehement and impassioned woman to the imminence of the danger which threatened the Neapolitan throne, if it were left alone to resist the redoubtable forces of France, than she adopted the only resolution which could ward off the impending calamities. Setting off in person from Palermo, shortly before the winter campaign commenced, she undertook a journey to St.-Petersburg to implore the powerful intercession of the Czar, should events prove adverse, to appease the wrath of the conqueror. It soon appeared how prophetic had been her anticipations. The Emperor Paul, whose chivalrous character and early hostility to the principles of the Revolution had been by no means extinguished by his admiration for Napoléon, was highly flattered by this adventurous step. The prospect of a queen setting out in the depth of winter to undertake the arduous-journey from Palermo to St.-Petersburg to implore his aid, was as flattering to his vanity as the renown of upholding a tottering throne was agreeable to his romantic ideas of government (2). He warmly espoused the cause of the unfortunate princess, and not only promised to intercede with all his influence in her favour with the first consul, but forthwith despatched M. Lowascheff, an officer high in his household, and who enjoyed his intimate confidence, to give additional weight to his mediation with the Cabinet of the Tuileries.

Napoléon had many reasons for yielding to the efforts of the withingly helds to his northern emperor. A conqueror, who had recently usurped the histories oldest throne in Europe, was naturally desirous to appear on confidential terms with its greatest potentate; and the sovereign who had just placed himself at the head of the northern maritime coalition against England could hardly be expected to intercede in vain at the court of its inveterate enemy. For these reasons, M. Lowascheff was received with extraordinary distinction at Paris: On the road to Italy he was treated with the honours usually reserved for crowned heads; and the Italians, who recollected the desperate strife between the Russians and Republicans, beheld with astonishment the new-born harmony which had risen up between their envoys. He arrived at Florence at the same time that General Murat made his entry. The city was brilliantly illuminated in the evening, every where in public they appeared together, overshadowed by a tri-colour and a Russian standard, and the Russian city of defared to the bewildered Florentines, "that two great nations should for ever be united for the repose of manking (4)"

Backed by such powerful influence, and the terrors of thirty thoulines and I rench soldiers on the Tiber, the negotiation was not long of being brought to a termination Napoléon had directed that the first of Naples should be altogether eveluded from the articles of the armsitee at Trevise, in order that he might alone regulate the destines of a kingdom, the old ally of England, and the impassioned enemy of the trevolution. The terms prescribed to Murat, and embodied in the armsitice of Foligno, were less distinguished by severity towards the Acapolitans than hostility to the English, and this treaty is remarkable as containing the first official connectation of the Continent, Servey, to which, through the whole remainder of his career, he so inflexibly adhered, and which had so large a share, through the misery which it occasioned, in bringing about his ultimate overthrow (2)

By the armistice of Foligno it was provided that the Neapolitan troops should forthwith evacuate the Roman states, but that, even after their retreat, the Republicians should continue to occupy Narm and the line of the Nera, to its junction with the Tiber, that "all the ports of Naples and Sicily should instantly be closed against English vessels of merchandise is well as war, and remain shut till the conclusion of a general peace, that all prosecutions on account of political offences should cease, and the scientific men, junworthily detained at Naples on their return from Egypt, should be instantly set at hiberty (5)"

Na chas By the treaty of Foligno, which was signed soon afterwards, the ambittous projects of the first consul were more completely doverses on a loped, and the first indications were manifested of that resolution to envelope the continent in an iron net, which was afterwards so completely carried into effect. By this treaty it was provided, that "all the harbours of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily should be closed to all English or Turkish vessels until the conclusion of a general peace. that Porto Longone in the island of Elba, Piombino in Tuscany, and a small territory on the sea-coast of that duchy, should be ceded to France, that all political prosecutions should cease, and the sum of 50,000 francs be paid by the Neapolitan Government to the victims of former disorders on the return of the court of Sicily, that the statues and paintings taken from Rome by the Neapolitan troops should be restored, and that, in case of a menaced attack from the troops of Turkey or England, a French corps, equal to what should be sent by the Emperor of Russia, should be placed at his disposal " Under these last words was veiled the most important article in the treaty, which was speedily carried into effect, and revealed the resolution of the French Government to take military possession of the whole peninsula On the 1st April, only three days after the signature of this treaty, and before either any requisition had been made by the Acapolitan Government or any danger menaced their dominions, a corps of twelve thousand men, under the command of General Soult, set out from the French lines, and before the end of the same month took possession of the fortresses of Tarentum, Otranta,

Brindisi, and all the harbours in the extremity of Calabria By a secret article

(i) Jon x "17,218 Dam. x 333 334 Bot (2) Jom x x 219 223 Dam x 311 342 Est
10 21

(ii) Jon x "17,218 Dam. x 333 334 Bot (3) Jon x 311 342 Est
10 21

(iii) Jon x 313 343 Bot (3) Jon x 311

in the treaty, the Neapolitan Government were to pay 500,000 francs (L.20,000) a-month for the pay and equipment of this corps, besides furnishing gratis all the provisions it might require (4). The object of this occupation was to facilitate the establishment of a communication with the army in Egypt, and it excited the utmost solicitude in the breast of Napoléon. His instructions to Soult are extremely curious, as proving how early he had embraced the new political principles on which his government was thereafter founded. Among other things, he directed that the general "should engage in no revolution, but, on the contrary, severely repress any appearance of it which might break out; that he should communicate to all his officers that the French Government had no desire to revolutionize Naples: that with all his staff he should go to mass on every festival with military music, and always endeavour to conciliate the priests and Neapolitan authorities; that he should maintain his army at the expense of Tuscany and Naples, as the Republic was so overwhelmed by the return of its armies to the territory of France, that he could not send them a single farthing." Finally, he gave minute directions for the reduction of porto Ferraio and the island of Elba, little anticipating that he was seeking to acquire for the Republic his own future place of exile (2). This little island, which has since acquired such interest from the

July, 1801. residence of Napoléon in 1814, was at first deemed an easy conquest by the French general. But he soon found that he had a very different enemy to deal with from the pusillanimous troops of Naples. The English garrison of porto Ferraio consisted merely of three hundred British soldiers, of eight hundred Tuscan troops, and four hundred Corsicans in the pay of Great Britain; but into this motley assemblage the governor, Colonel Airley, had infused his own undaunted resolution. At first the French commenced the siege with fifteen hundred men only; but finding that number totally inadequate, they gradually augmented their force to six thousand men, while three frigates maintained a strict blockade, which soon reduced the garrison to great straits from want of provisions. But in the end of July, Sir John Borlase Warren hove in sight with an English squadron; the French cruizers instantly took refuge in the harbour of Leghorn; and the Republicans, in their turn, began to experience the hardships of a blockade. Three French frigates were captured in endeavouring to convey supplies across the straits of Piombino to the besiegers, but as in spite of these disasters the labours of the siege advanced, a general effort was made on the 15th September to destroy the works. Two thousand men, consisting of the Swiss regiment of Watteville and detachments from the marines of the fleet, were landed, and attacked the Republicans in rear, while Airley, by a vigorous sortie, defence by the English assailed them in front. The attack was at first successful, and some of the batteries which commanded the entrance of the harbour were taken and spiked; but the Republicans having returned in greater force, the besieged were obliged to retire, and the troops who had landed were again embarked. Notwithstanding this, however, the most vigorous defence was made; the terrors of a hombardment were tried in vain to shake the resolution of the garrison; and after a siege of five months, the governor had the glory of surrendering the fortress intrusted to his charge only in consequence of an express condition in the treaty of Amiens (5). This successful resistance by a handful of men to the troops who had vanquished the greatest military monarchies of Europe, excited a great sensation both in England and on the continent, and served as a presage of that desperate struggle which awailed them, when, after trampling under foot the southern hosts, they encountered the stubborn valour of northern freedom "It was," says the impartial I rench historian, "an extraordinary speciated in the midst of the triumphal songs, and in the bosom of a continental peace, so long desired, so painfully acquired, to behold a misland, of easy access and almost touching the continent, the scene of a long-continued and doubtful strife (1), and Europe heheld with amazement, in that island, a single fortress arrest the arms which the forces of the coalition had been unable to subdue".

⁽³⁾ Article 7, Treaty of Amiens,

By the treaty of I uncville, which the Emperor Francis was obliged to subscribe, " not only as Emperor of Austria, but in the Teraty of name of the German empire," Belgium and all the left bank of the Rhine were again formally ceded to I rance, Lombardy was creeted into an independent state, and the Adige declared the boundary betweet it and the dominions of Austria, Venice, with all its territorial possessions as far as the Adige, was guaranteed to Austria, the Duke of Modena received the Brisgau in exchange for his duchy, which was annexed to the Cisalpine republic, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the emperor's brother, gave up his dominions to the infant Duke of I arma, a branch of the Spanish family, on the promise of an indemnity in Germany, France abandoned Kehl, Cassel, and Ehrenbreitzen, on condition that these forts should remain in the situation in which they were when given up, the princes dispossessed by the cession of the left bank of the Rhine were promised an indemnity in the bosom of the I'mpire, the independence of the Batavian, Helyetic, Lisalpine, and Ligurian republics was guaranteed, and their inhabitants declared "to have the power of choosing whatever form of government they preferred (2) "

These conditions did not differ materially from those contained in the treaty of Campo Formio, or from those offered by Napoleon previous to the renewal of the war, a remarkable circumstance, when it is recollected how tast an addition the victories of Marengo, Hohenlinden, and the Mincio had since made to the preponderance of the French arms

The article which compelled the Emperor to subscribe this treaty, Imperor and cribes as head of the empire as well as Emperor of Austria, gave rise in the sequel, as shall be shown, to the most painful internal divisions By a fundamental law of the empire, the Lmperor could not bind the electors and states of which he was the head, without either their concurrence or express powers to that effect previously conferred. The want of such powers had rendered mextricable the separate interests referred to the Congress at Rastadt, but Napoleon, whose impatient disposition could not brook such formalities, cut the matter short at Luneville, by throwing his sword into the scale, and insisting that the emperor should sign for the empire as well as himself, leaving him to vindicate such a step as he best could to the princes and states of the Imperial Confederacy The Emperor hesitated long before he subscribed such a condition, which left the seeds of interminable discord in the Germanic body, but the conqueror was inexorable, and no means of evasion could be found. He vindicated himself to the before that electors in a dignified us Imperial when the treaty wa it point in a authority was restra precise manner, and therefore that he had been compelled to sign, as head of the empire, without any title so to do, he added, "Bu', on the other hand, the consideration of the melancholy situation in which, at that period,

(1) Dann r 252 359 Ann. Reg 1801 p 179 (2) See the Treaty in Dumos, vi 252, et seq

Jone x v 213 374

a large part of Germany was placed, the prospect of the still more calamitous fate with which the superiority of the French menaced the empire if the peace was any longer deferred (1); in fine, the general wish, which was loudly expressed, in favour of an instant accommodation, were so many powerful motives which forbade me to refuse the concurrence of my minister to this demand of the French plenipotentiary." The electors and princes of the empire felt the force of this touching appeal; they commiserated the situation of the first monarch in Christendom, compelled to throw himself on his subjects for forgiveness of a step which he could not avoid; and one of the first steps of the Diet of the empire, assembled after the treaty of Lunéville was signed, was to give it their solemn ratification, grounded on the extraordinary situation in which the Emperor was then placed. But the question of indemnities to the dispossessed princes was long and warmly agitated. It continued for above two years to distract the Germanic body; the intervention both of France and Russia was required to prevent the sword being drawn in these internal disputes; and by the magnitude of the changes which were ultimately made, and the habit of looking to foreign protection which was acquired, the foundation was laid of that league to support separate interests which afterwards, under the name of the Confederation of the RHINE, so well served the purposes of French ambition, and dissolved the venerable fabric of the German empire (2)."

Reflections The winter campaign of 4800 demonstrates, in the most striking on this campaign. manner, the justice of the observation by the Archduke Charles, that the valley of the Danube is the quarter where vital blows against the Austrian monarchy are to be struck, and the importance of frontier or central fortifications to arrest the march of a victorious invader. The disaster of Marengo was soon repaired, and did not prevent the Austrians again taking the field at the head of an army which almost balanced the Republican forces; but the battle of Hohenlinden at once laid open the vitals of the monarchy. The reason is to be found in the numerous fortresses which covered the Imperial frontiers in Lombardy, and the total want of any such barrier between Austria and Bavaria. After the passage of the Mincio, the army of Brune was so severely weakened, by the detachments left in the rear to blockade the fortresses on that river, that he was unequal to any farther offen-

(1) See the original, Dum, vi. 298. Pièces Just, (2) Dum. vi. 29, 30. Hard. viii. 52.

March 20, This glorious peace excited, as might 1801. Extrawell have been expected, the most envagant joy thusiastic joy in Paris. It was anathus peace nounced in these terms to the inhabiting Paris. in Paris. tants by Napoléon; -" A glorious peace has terminated the continental war. Your frontiers are extended to the limits assigned to them by nature; nations long separated from you them by nature; nations long separated from your rejoin their brethren, and increase by a sixth your numbers, your territory, and your resources. This success you owe chiefly to the courage of your soldiers, to their patience in fatigue, their passion for liberty and glory: but you owe it not less to the happy restoration of concord, and that union of feelings and interests, which has more than once saved France from ruin. As long as you were divided, your cuemies never lost the hope of subjugating your they hope of subjugating your they hope of the property and they have been received. ing you; they hoped that you would be vanquished by yourselves, and that the power which had triumphed over all their efforts would crumble away in the convulsions of discord and anarchy. Their hope has been disappointed; may it never revive. Remain for ever united by the recollection of your domestic misfortunes, by the sentiment of your present grandeur and force. Beware of lowering by base passions a name which so many exploits have consecrated to glory and immortality.

"Let a generous emulation second our arts and our industry; let useful labours embellish that France which external nations will never mention but with admiration and respect; let the stranger who hastens to visit it, find among you the gentle and hospitable virtues which distinguished your ancestors. Let all professions raise themselves to the dignity of the French name; let commerce, while it reforms its relations with other people, acquire the consistency which fixes its enterprises, not on huzardous speculations, but constant relations. Thus our commerce will resume the rank which is due to it; thus will be fortified the bonds which unite us to it; nus will be fortified the bonds which unite us to the most enlightened people of the continent; thus will that nation, even, which has armed itself against France, be taught to abjure its excessive pretensions, and at length learn the great truth, that, for people as individuals, there can be no security for real prosperity hut in the happeness of all." [Dum. vi. 296. Pièces Just.] It is curious to observe how early, amidst his continental triumphs, the ambition of the first his continental triumphs, the ambition of the first consul was directed to commercial and maritime greatness, in the effort to attain which he was led to include in such implacable hostility to this country

sive movements, and if the war had continued, he would probably have been compelled to retreat; but, after the battle of Hohenhaden, the undiminished battalions of Moreau poured in resistless strength into the undefended Heredhatry States. The Archduke Charles had long before foreseen this, by the forthications of Ulm he enabled Kray for six weeks to arrest the victor in the middle of his career; and so sensible was Napolion of their importance, that his first measure, when they fell into his hands, was to level them with the ground.

The peace of Lunch ille was the first considerable pause in the continental strife, and already it had become manifest that the objects of the war had been changed, and that hostilities were now to be carried on, for the subjugation of a different power from that which was at first contemplated.

The extinction of the revolutionary spirit, the stoppage of the insiduous system of propagandism, by which the French democracy were shaking all the thrones, and endangering all the institutions for all and there is of Europe, was the real object of the war. The restoration of the Bourhons was never considered of importance, farther than as afforthing a guarantee, and what at first appeared the best guarantee, against proved was far more efficacious. The restoration of a brave and honourable, but weak and unwarlike race of monarchs, would have been but a feeble barrier against the turbulent spirit of French democracy, but the elevation of an energetic and resolute conqueror to the throne, who guided the army by his authority and dazzled the people by his victories, proved perfectly sufficient to coerce its excesses Napolcon said truly, "that he was the best friend which the cause of order in Europe ever had, and that he did more for its sovereigns, by the spirit which he repressed in France, than evil by the victories which he gained in Germany." The conquests which he achieved affected only the external power or present liberty of nations, they did not change the internal frame of government, or prevent the future resurrection of freedom, and when his military despotism was subverted, the face of Furopean society reappeared from under the mask of slavery without any material alteration, but the innovations of the National Assembly totally subverted the fabric of a constitutional monarchy, and by destroying all the intermediate classes between the throne and the peasantry, left to the people of France no alternative for the remainder of their history but American equality or Asiatic despotism. The cause of order and freedom, therefore, gained existence of liberty, which arose from the democratic innovations of his predecessors

But though the cause of liberty was thus relieved from its most ressing dangers, the moment that the first consul serzed the helm, for the perit to the undependence of the surrounding states, and of England in particular, became extreme His conduct soon shewed whith his memoirs have since confessed, that he had formed, from the very commencement, a resolution to make France the first of European powers, ed forces against the existence of all directed to this end, he made rquished nations, that they should exclude English ships from their harbours, and he had contrived, by flattering the vanity of the Emperor of Russia, and skilfully fomenting the jealousy of the neutral states, to combine a formidable maritime league against England in the north of Europe. Thus, as time rolled on, the war totally altered its object; and the danger of subjugation changed sides. Commenced to stop the revolutionary propagandism of France, it terminated by being directed against the maritime preponderance of Great Britain; and England, which set out with heading the confederacy, ended by finding herself compelled to combat for her existence against the power of combined Europe.

In the progress of the conflict also, a change not less important in and system-and pullage the mode of carrying on the war had arisen; and the Revolutionary armies, compelled by the penury of their domestic resources, had adopted a system of extorting supplies from the vanquished states, hitherto unknown in modern warfare. It is the boast of the philosophic historian that civilisation had softened even the rude features of war in modern Europe; that industry securely reaped its harvest amidst hostile squadrons, and the invaded territory felt the enemy's presence rather by the quickened sale for its produce than the ruthless hand of the spoiler (1). But though this was true when Gibbon wrote, the French Revolution had introduced a very different system, and made war retrograde to the rapine and spoliation of barbarous times. The Revolutionary armies issued from the Republic as the Goths from the regions of the north, powerful in numbers, destitute of resources, starving from want, but determined to seek for plenty, at the sword's point, from the countries through which they passed; the principle on which they uniformly acted was to make war maintain war, and levy in its theatre, whether a hostile or neutral territory, the means of carrying on the contest. They formed no magazines; brought with them no money; paid for nothing; but by the terrors of military execution wrung from the wretched inhabitants the most ample supplies. "The army of Moreau," says General Mathieu-Dumas, "ransacked the country between the Rhine and the Inn, devoured its subsistence, and reduced the inhabitants to despair, while it maintained the strictest discipline. The devastation of war for centuries before, even that of the Thirty Years, was nothing in comparison. Since the period when regular armies had been formed, the losses occasioned by the marches and combats of armies were passing evils; the conquest of a country did not draw after it its ruin. If a few districts or some towns carried by assault were abandoned to the fury of the soldiers, the inexorable pen of history loaded with reproaches the captains who permitted, or the sovereigns who did not punish such outrages. But Moreau's army levied, in a few months, above twenty millions in requisitions; enormous contributions were unceasingly exacted; the people were overwhelmed; the governments of the oppressed states entirely exhausted. It was reserved for our age to witness, in the midst of the rapid progress of civilization, and after so many eloquent declamations in favour of humanity, the scourge of war immeasurably extended; the art of government become in the hands of the conqueror an instrument of extortion, and systematic robbery be styled, by the leaders of regeneration, the right of conquest (2)." springing

Even in this gloomy state of the political horizon, however, the of patriotic and general streaks of light were becoming visible which were destined to resistance springing expand into all the lustre of day. The invasion of the French troops, their continued residence in other states, had already gone far to dispet those illusions in their favour, to which, even more than the terror of their arms, their astonishing successes had been owing. Their standards were no longer halled with enthusasm by the people who had experienced their presence; the declaration of war to the palace and peace to the cottage had ceased to deceive mankind. The consequences of their conquests had been felt; requisitions and taxes—merciless requisitions, grievous taxes—had been found to follow rapidly in the footsteps of these alluring expressions; penury, want, and starvation were seen to stalk in the rear of the tri-color flag. Already the symptoms of roullan resistance were to be seen; the peasantry even of the unwarlike Italian pennsula had repeatedly and spontaneously flown to arms; the patriotic efforts of Austria had recalled the glorious days of Maria Theresa, and the heroic sacrifices of the Forest Cantons had emulated the virtues, if not the triumphs, of Sempach and Morgarter. Unmarked as it was amidst the blaze of military glory, the sacred flame was beginning to spread which was destined to set free mankind; bamshed from how uniformly, when oppression becomes intolerable, an under current begins to flow, destined ultimately to correct it, that the surest foundation is laid for confidence in the final arrangements of Supreme Wisdom, amidst the misfortunes or the vices of the world.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

FROM THE PEACE OF LUNEVILLE TO THE DISSOLUTION OF THE NORTHERN MARITIME CONFEDERACY.

NOVEMBER 1799-MAY, 1801.

ARGUMENT.

Origin of the difference between the laws of war at sea and land-Early usages of war on both elements—Gradual change at land—Original customs still kept up at sea—Common maritime law of Europe as to neutral vessels—Principles of that law—It was universal in Europe prior to 1750—But these rights were sometimes abated by special treaty—Origin of resistance to them-Armed neutrality-Subsequently abandoned by the Northern Powers in their own case-Treaties with Russia, Sweden, and America since 1780, recognising this right to England - But neutrals suffered severely in the close of the war-Excessive violence of the Directory against America—Napoleon terminates the differences of France with that power-Maritime treaty between France and America-Revival of the principles of the armed neutrality—Lord W bitworth is sent to Copenhagen—And enters into an accommodation-Growing irritation of the Emperor Paul at the Alfres-Politic conduct of Napoleon-Difference about Malta-Violent Proceedings of Paul against England-He is joined by Sweden, Denmark, and Prussia—His warm advances to Napoleon—General maritime confederacy signed on 16th December - Its threatening consequences to England-Measures of retaliation by Mr. Pitt—Diplomatic dehate with the neutral powers—Hauover is invaded by Prussia-Meeting of Parliament-Perilous situation of England-Debates on the neutral question-Mr. Pitt resigns in consequence of the Catholic claims-But this was only the ostensible ground—Vigorous measures of his successors for the prosecution of the war -Prosperous state of Great Britain at this period—Its income, expenditure, exports and imports-Naval forces of the confederacy-Energetic measures of the British Government —Nelson appointed second in command of the fleet destined for the Baltic—British fleet sails from the Downs—And approaches the Sound—Splendid appearance of that strait—Undaunted spirit of the Danes-Passage of the English fleet-Preparations of the Danes-Nelson's plan of attack—Great difficulty experienced by the pilots in conducting the fleet to the enemy—Battle of Copenhagen—Heroic deeds on both sides—Nelson's proposal for an armistice-Melancholy appearance of the Danes after the battle-Armistice agreed on for fourteen weeks-Hanover overrun by Prussia-Designs of Paul and Napoleon against British India—Death of the Emperor Paul—Causes of that catastrophe—General irritation at the Czar-Symptoms of insanity in his conduct-Conspiracy among the nobles for his dethronement-Particulars of his assassination-Accession of Alexander-Immediate approach to an accommodation with England—His character and early pacific and popular measures-Nelson sails for Cronstadt-His conciliatory steps there-Peace with Russia, and abandonment of the principles of the armed neutrality-Napoleon's indignation at it-Dissolution of the naval confederacy—Reflections on these events.

There arises, from the very nature of the elements on which they the difference of the are respectively exercised, an essential difference between the laws laws of wir of war at sea and at land. Territorial conquests are attended by immediate and important advantages to the victorious power; it gains possession of a fruitful country, of opulent cities, of spacious harbours, and costly fortresses; it steps at once into the authority of the ruling government over the subject state, and all its resources in money, provisions, men, and implements of war are at its command. But the victor at sea finds himself in a very different situation. The most decisive sea-fights draw after them no acquisition of inhabitants, wealth, or resources; the ocean is unproductive alike of taxes or tribute, and among the solitary recesses of the deep you will search in vain for the populous cities or fertile fields which reward the valour of terrestrial ambition. The more a power extends itself at land, the more formidable does it become, because it unites to its own the forces of the van-quished state; the more it extends itself at sea, the more is it weakened, because the surface which it must protect is augmented, without any proportional addition to the means by which its empire is to be maintained.

In the infancy of mankind the usages of war are the same on both elements Abke at sea as on shore the persons and property of the vanquished are at the disposal of the conquerors, and from the sack of cities and the sale of captives the vast sums are obtained which constitute the object and the reward of such inhuman hostility. The liberty for which the Greeks and Romans contended was not mere national independence or usegra of war on both civil privileges, but liberation from domestic or predal servitude, from the degradation of helots, or the lash of patricians. Such is to this day the custom in all the uncivilized portions of the globe, in Asia, Africa, and among the savages of America, and such, till comparatively recent times, was the practice even among the Christian monarchies and chivalrous nobility of modern Europe. But with the growth of opulence, and the extension of more humane ideas, these rigid usages have been universally softened among the European nations. As agriculture and commerce improved, it was found to be as impossible as it was inhuman to carry off all the property of the vanquished people, the growth, perhaps, of centuries of industry The revenue and public possessions of the state furnished an ample fund to reward the conquering power, while the regular pay and fixed maintenance at the public expense of the soldiers took away the pretext for private pillage as a measure of necessity All nations, subject in their turn to the vicissitudes of fortune, found it for their interest to adopt this lement system, which so materially diminished the horrors of war, and hence the practice became general, excepting in the storming of towns, and other extreme cases, where the vehemence of passion hid defiance to the restraints of discipline, to respect private property in the course of hostilities, and look for remuneration only to the public revenue, or property of the state. It is the disgrace of the leaders of the French Revolution, amidst all their declamation in favour of humanity, to have departed from these beneficent usages, and, under the specious names of contributions, and of making war support war, to have restored at the opening of the nineteenth the rapacious oppression of the minth century

Illumanty would have just reason to rejoice, if it were practicable to establish a similar system of restrained hostility at sea, if the principle of confining the right of capture to public property could be introduced on the one element as well as the other, and the private merchant were in safety to navigate the deep anidst hostile fleets in the same manner as the c

never been foun

been attempted, ... own to state the may sometimes have demanded it as a own hostilities, however loudly they may sometimes have demanded it as a bridle upon those of their enemies. And when the utter sterility of the occan, except as forming a linghway for the intercourse of manhind, is considered, it does not appear probable, that until the human heart is essentially changed, such an alteration, how describle soever by the weaker states, ever will be adopted. It may national rivalry cease to sway the hur is, that of all nations upon earth, revi contend for such a change; she having not only incomunprecedented rigour in modern times, at least in her warfare at land, but issued and acted upon edicts for her maritime hostility on principles worthy only of Turkish barbarity (1).

But it is not merely with the subjects of nations in a state of Common maritime hostility that belligerents are brought in contact during modern law of Eutope as to warfare; they find themselves continually in collision also with neutral NEUTRAL VESSELS trading with their enemies, and endeavouring, vessels. from the prospect of high profits, to furnish them with those articles which they are prevented from receiving directly from the trade of their own subjects. Here new and important interests arise, and some limitation of the rigour of maritime usage evidently becomes indispensable. If the superior power at sea can at pleasure declare any enemy's territory in a state of blockade, and make prize of all neutral vessels navigating to any of its harbours, it will not only speedily find itself involved in hostilities with all maritime states, but engaged in a species of warfare from which itself at some future period may derive essential injury. On the other hand, it is equally impossible to maintain that the vessels of other states are to be entirely exempted from restraint in such cases; or that a belligerent power, whose warlike operations are dependent perhaps upon intercepting the supplies in progress towards its antagonist, is patiently to see all its enterprises defeated, merely because they are conveyed under the cover of a neutral flag instead of its enemy's bottoms. Such a pretension would render maritime success of no avail, and wars interminable, by enabling the weaker power, under fictitious cover, securely to repair all its losses. These considerations are so obvious, and are brought so frequently into collision in maritime warfare, that they early introduced a system of international law, which for centuries has been recognised in all the states of Europe, and is summed up in the following propositions by the greatest masters of that important branch of jurisprudence that ever appeared in this or any other country.

Principles 1. That it is not lawful for neutral nations to carry on, in time of that law of war, for the advantage or on the behalf of one of the belligerent powers, those branches of their commerce from which they are excluded in time of peace.

2. That every belligerent power may capture the property of its enemies wherever it shall meet with it on the high seas, and may for that purpose detain and bring into port neutral vessels laden wholly or in part with any such property.

3. That under the description of contraband of war, which neutrals are prohibited from carrying to the belligerent powers, the law of nations, if not restrained by special treaty, includes all naval as well as military stores, and generally all articles serving principally to afford to one belligerent power the instrument and means of annoyance to be used against the other.

4. That it is lawful for naval powers, when engaged in war, to blockade the ports of their enemies by cruising squadrons bona fide allotted to that service, and duly competent to its execution. That such blockade is valid and legitimate, although there be no design to attack or reduce by force the port, fort, or arsenal to which it is applied; and that the fact of the blockade, shut against all vessels which had touched at an English harbour; and it requires certificates of origin; under the hands of French consuls, exactly as the Berlin and Milan decrees afterwards did.—Rollmon's Admirally Reports, i. 341.

⁽¹⁾ The decree of the Directory, 18th January, 1798, declares, that all vessels found on the high seas with any English goods whatever on hoard, to whomever belonging, shall be good prize; that neutral sailors found on board English vessels shall be put to death, and that the harbours of France shall be with due notice given thereof to neutral powers, shall affect not only vessels actually intercepted in the attempt to enter the blockaded port, but those also which shall be elsewhere met with, and shall be found to have been destined to such port, under the circumstances of the fact and notice of the blockade.

5 That the right of visiting and searchipg neutral vessels is a necessary consequence of these principles; and that, by the law of nations (when unrestrained by particular treaty), this right is not in any manner affected by the presence of a neutral ship of war, having under its convoy merchant ships, either of its own nation or of any other country (1)

In these propositions are contained the general principles of the maritime code of the whole European nations, as it has been exercised by all states towards each other, and laid down by all authorities on the subject from the dawn of civilisation. The special application of these principles to the question immediately at issue between the contending powers in 1801 is contained in the following propositions, laid down as incontestable law by that great master of maritime and international law, Sir William Scott -

1 "That the right of visiting and searching merchant ships exposition upon the high seas, whatever be the ships, whatever be the carrit me law goes, whatever be the destinations, is an incontestable right of the lawfully commissioned cruizers of a belligerent nation (2)

2 "That the authority of the sovereign of the neutral country being interposed in any matter of mere force cannot legally vary the rights of a legally commissioned belligerent cruizer, or deprive him of his right to search at common law (3)

5 "That the penalty for the violent contravention of this right, is the confiscation of the property so withheld from visitation and search (4)

4 "That nothing farther is necessary to constitute blockade, than that there should be a force stationed to prevent communication, and a due notice or prohibition given to the party (5)

5 "That articles tending probably to aid the hostilities of one of the belligerents, as arms, ammunition, stores, and, in some cases, provisions, are contraband of war, and as such hable to seizure by the vessels of the other party, with the vessel in which they are conveyed (6)

(1) Lord Greny He s speech 13th Nov 1801 on the convention w th Russia Part, flist xxxvi 241, 212

(4) Sir Will am Scott in the Mar a Rob nson s

Adm restry Ceports, i 359 363,
(5) lb d 1 86
(6) The Jouge Margaretta lb d 1 190 191
The judgments of > r W ii am Scott are here referred to with perfect on fidence as eaple and not merely the English understanding of the maring a law 1 till at while freenances is seen existing and merely regulate the exercise of t. All

This law in Europe

These rights had never formed any peculiar or exclusive privilege, which the English claimed alone of all other nations. On the contrary, under the equitable modifications introduced by the common maritime law, they had, from the dawn of European civilisation, been universally acknowledged and maintained equally by the courts and the lawyers of Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, and England (1). Authors there were indeed who contended in their studies for a different principle, and strenuously asserted that the flag should cover the merchandise; but these innovations never received any sanction from the maritime law or practice of Europe, or the practice, independent of express treaty, of belligerent states; and, accordingly, various treaties were entered into among different powers, restraining or limiting the right of search between their respective subjects (2), precisely because they knew that but for that special stipulation the common maritime law would admit it. So strongly was this felt by the English lawyers, who, in the House of Commons, espoused the cause of the neutral powers previous to the maritime confederacy in 1800, that they admitted the right of Great Britain to search neutral ships for the goods of an enemy, and that the northern confederacy contended for a principle which militated against the established law of nations, as laid down with universal assent by that great master of the maritime law, Lord Mansfield; and maintained merely that it would be prudent to abate somewhat of former pretensions in the present disastrous crisis of public affairs (3).

Sweden as a neutral country, which he would not admit to belong to Great Britain in the same character." [Robinson's Reports, i. 350.] And of the impartiality with which this great duty at this period was exercised by this distinguished judge, we have the best evidence in the testimony of another eminent statesman, the warm advocate of neutral rights, and certainly no conceder of unde-served praise to his political opponents. "No-thing," says Lord Chancellor Brougham, "can be more instructive than the decisions of our prize courts on this point (the right of search), and nothing can give us more gratifying views of the purity with which those tribunals administer the law of nations, and their impartiality in trying the delicate questions which come before them, between their own sovereign or their own countrymen, and the rulers or the people of other states. It is with pleasure, therefore, that we have to consider how anxiously and rigorously at this period (1799 —1800) the principles for which we are contending have been enforced in the High Court of Admiralty under the presidency of Sir William Scott."—

Edin. Review, vol. xix. 298, 299.

(1) Sir William Scott. Robinson, i. 360. Lord Eldon. Parl. Hist, xxxv. 886.

(2) Per Sir W. Grant. Parl. Hist. xxxv. 922.

(3) See Sir William Grant, Parl. Hist. xxxv. 922;

and Dr. Lawrence, 919, 920.

The hardihood with which it is constantly asserted by the foreign diplomatists and historians, that the principles of maritime law for which England contends, are a usurpation on her part, founded on mere power, and unsanctioned, either by the usage of other states, or the principles of maritime jurisprudence, renders it important to lay before the reader a few of the authorities of foreign legal writers on the subject.

Eineccius says "Idem statuendum arbitramus, si res hostiles, in navibus amicorum reperiantur. Illas capi posse nemo dubitat, quia hosti in res hostiles omnia liciunt, eatenus ut eas ubicunque repertus sibi possit vindicari."—De Navibus ob. vict, c. ii.

"I believe it cannot be doubted," says President

Jefferson, "that by the general law of nations, the goods of a friend found in the vessels of an enemy, are free; and the goods of an enemy found in the vessels of a friend are good prize."—Jeffenson's Letter to Gener, 24th July, 1797.

"The ordinances of the old French marine, under the monarchy, direct that not only shall the enemy's property, found on board a neutral vessel, be confiscated, but the neutral ship itself be declared lawful prize." The practice of England has always been to release all neutral property found on board an enemy's ship; but France always considered it as lawful prize .- Ordonnance de Marine. Art. 7. Valin.

"Les choses qui sont d'un usage particulier pour la guerre, et dont on empêche le transport chez un ennemi, s'appellent marchandises de contrebande. Telles sont les armes, les munitions de guerres, les bois, et tout ce qui sert à la construction et à l'armement des vaisseaux de guerre."—VATTELL, c. 7, sect. 112.

In their letter to M. Pinckney, January 16, 1797, the American Government expressly declare that, "by the law of nations, timber and other naval stores are contraband of war."—See Parl. Hist. xxxvi. 213, note.

"On ne peut empêcher le transport des effets de contrebande. Si l'on ne visite pas les vaisseaux neutres que l'on rencontre en mer, on est donc en droit de les visiter."—VATTELL, c. 3, sec. 114.

"Tout vaisseau qui refusera d'amener ses voiles après la sommation qui lui en aura eté faite par nos vaisseaux ou ceux de nos sujets, armés en guerre, pourra y être contraint par artillerie ou autrement; bonne prise."—Ordomance de la Marine de France.

—Tit. Procès, Art. 12. The Spanish ordinance of 1718, has an article to the same effect.

"Other nations," says Heeren, "advanced similar claims in maritime affairs to the English; but as they had not the same naval power to support them, this was of little consequence."—Europeen Staats

The claims of neutrals for the security of their commerce are stated by Bynkershoch, as limited to From motives of policy, indeed, England had repeatedly waived or abated this right of search in favour of particular states by special agreement. This Dec 10, 1611 was done towards Holland in 1674, to detach that power from I rance, and in the belief that the United States would never be neutral when England was at war; and to France, by the commercial treaty of 1787, under nature the influence of the same idea that she would never be neutral when Great Britain was in a state of hostility. But in the absence bardely of such express stipulation, these rights were invariably exercised both by England towards other nations, and other nations towards Legiand; particularly by Lord Chatham during the whole course of the seven years, and the ministers of Anne during the long war of the succession, without any complaint whatever from neutral states (4). And of the disposition of England to submit in her turn to the marting law which she requires

years, and the ministers of Anne during the long war of the succession, without any complaint whatever from neutral states (4). And of the disposition of England to submit in her turn to the maritime law which she requires from others, no better instance can be desired than occurred during the Duke of Wellington's administration, when the English Government declined to interfere in the capture of a British merchantman trying to clude the blockade of Terceira, though a few English fingates would have sent the whole Portuguese navy to the bottom.

original and the obvious disadvantage, however, to which such a maritime code must occasionally expose neutral states, by sometimes depriving them of a trade at the very time when it is likely to be most that of search, especially when put inforce by the stronger against the weaker

Armad the fleets of France and Spain at the close of the American war, deemed the opportunity favourable to establish by force of arms a new code of maritime laws, and, accordingly, entered into the famous confederacy, known by the name of the Armed Aruthality, which was the first open declaration of war by neutral powers against Great Britain and the old system of maritime rights. By this treaty, Russia, Sweden, and Demmark proclaimed the principles, that free ships make free goods, that the flag covers the merchandise, and that a blockaded port is to be understood only when such a force is stationed at its entrance as renders it dangerous to enter (2).

this, that they may continue to trade in war as they did in peace but this claim he adds is inn ted by the rights of a bell gerent. Quaering ou discret aut non facter possibly inter-duos hostes, own a forte inquies qu'a polucruit ainsi pax esset i iter est, quos inter au e est bellum.—Byerkersbock,

See Parl H at xxxvi 225
(1) Fer Sir W Grant Larl Hist. xxxv 925

ring powers shall be free in all neutral vessels, except contraband merchand se. 3. That the articles are to be deemed contraband which are met toured in the 19th and 11th articles of her treaty of com-

So undisguised an attack upon the ancient code of European law, which England had so decided an interest to maintain, because its abandonment placed the defeated in as advantageous circumstances as the victorious power, in fact amounted to a declaration of war against Great Britain; but her Cabinet were compelled to dissemble their resentment at that time, in consequence of the disastrous state of public affairs at the close of the American contest. They contented themselves, therefore, with protesting against these novel doctrines at the northern capitals, and had influence enough at the court of the Hague, soon after (1), to procure their abandonment by the United States. The Baltic Powers, however, during the continuance of the American war,

Subsequently abandoned by the Northern Powers in their own case. adhered to the principles of the armed neutrality, although no allusion was made to it in the peace which followed; but they soon found that it introduced principles so much at variance with the practice of European warfare, that they were immediately obliged, when they in their turn became belligerents, to revert to the old in particular, when Sweden went to war with Russia in 1787, she system. In particular, when Sweden went to war with Russia in 1787, she totally abandoned the principles of the armed neutrality, and acted invariably upon the old maritime code. Russia, in the same year, reverted to the old principles, in her war with the Turks, and in 1795 entered into a maritime treaty with Great Britain, in which she expressly gave up the principles of the year 1780, and engaged to use her efforts to prevent neutral powers from protecting the commerce of France on the high seas, or in the harbours of that country. Both Denmark and Sweden were bound, by the treaties of 1661 and 1670, with England, to admit the right of search, and give up the pretension to carry enemy's property; and by a convention entered into be-

Treaties with flus- x sia, Sweden, and America, receptising this right to England. tween these two powers in 1794, which was communicated by them to the British Government, they bound themselves "to claim no advantage, which is not clearly and unexceptionably founded on their respective treaties with the powers at war, and not to claim, in cases not specified in their treaties, any advantage which is not founded giversal law of pations, bitherto acknowledged, and respected by all on the universal law of nations, hitherto acknowledged and respected by all the powers and all the sovereigns of Europe, and from which they can as little suppose that any of them will depart, as they are incapable of departing from it themselves (2)." Farther, both Russia (5) and Denmark had issued merce with Great Britain. 4. That to determine what is meant by a blockaded port, this only is to be understood of one, which is so well kept in by the ships of the power which altacks it, and which keep their places, that it is dangerous to enter into it. See Declaration of Russia, 23d April 1780. Ann. Reg. xxxv. 318, State Papers. It is worthy of observation, as Sir William Scott observes, that even in this manifesto no denial of the right of search is to be found, at least to the effect of determining whether or not the neutral has contraband articles on board.—See Roemson's Reports, i. 360.—The Maria.

(1) Ibid. 206, 207.

(2) Convention, 27th March, 1791. Ann. Reg. 1791, 238.

(3) In 1793, the Empress of Russia herself proposed and concluded a treaty with Great Britain in which she expressly engaged to unite with his Britannie Majesty "all her efforts to prevent other powers not implicated in this war from giving any protection whatever, directly or indirectly, in consequence of their neutrality, to the commerce and property of the French on the sea, or in the posts of France;" and, in execution of this treaty, she sent a fleet into the Baltic and North seas, with express orders "to seize and capture all the ships bearing the pretended French flag, or any other flags which they may dare to hoist; and to stop also and to compel all neutral cessels bound to or freighted for France, according as they shall deem it most expedient either to sail back or enter some neutral harbour."—Note, 30th July, 1793, by the Russian Ambassador to the High Chancellor of Sweden, Ann. Reg. 1793, p. 175, State Papers. A similar note was presented to the Court of Denmark at the same date, and both Denmark and Sweden, in their treaty with each other, on July 6, 1794, Prussia in her treaty with America in 1797, Russia in her war with the Turks in 1787, and Sweden in her war with Russia in 1789, promulgated and acted upon these principles, diametrically opposite to the doctrines of the armed neutrality. [Parl, Hist, xxxvi, 203.] With such ardour was this system acted upon by the Emperor Paul, that he threatened the Danes with immediate hostilities in 1799, on account "of their supplying assistance and protection to the trade of France, under the neutral colours of the Danish flag;" and he was only prevented from carrying these threats into immediate execution by the amicable interference of Great Britain: A ceasonable interposition, which Demark repeated—ly acknowledged with becoming gratitude.—Ann. Reg. 1800, p. 91. In the following year the same edicts, at the commencement of the war, in which they prohibited their subjects from taking on board contraband articles (1), while America, in the same year, had entered into a maritime treaty with England, in which the right of search was expressly admitted (2). Both by the common maritime law, and by the force of recent and subsisting treaties, therefore the right of search, claimed by Great Britain, was founded on an unquestionable basis

But this pacific state of matters was totally altered by the result of the maritime war, and especially the decisive battle of the Nile. la tile close These great events, by entirely sweeping the French flag from the ocean, left them dependent on other powers for the supplies necessary for their navy; and the Republican Government saw the necessity of relaxing the rigour of their former proceedings against neutrals, in order, through their intervention, to acquire the means of restoring their marine. The intemperate conduct of the Directory, and the arbitrary doctrines which they enforced in regard to neutrals, had all but involved the Republic in open hostilities with America, Denmark, and Sweden, and on the accession of the first consul, he found an embargo laid on all the ships of these powers in the French harbours (5) The arrets of the Directory of 18th January, and 20th October, 1798, were, to the last degree, injurious to neutral commerce, for they deemed every vessel good prize which had on board any quantity, however small, of British merchandise, and in virtue of that law, numbers of American vessels were seized and condemned in the French harbours. Adding insult to injury, the Directory, in the midst of these piratical proceedings, gravely proposed to the Americans that they should lend them 48,000,000 francs: insinuating at the same time, that the loan should be accompanied with the sum of 1,200,000 francs (L 48,000), to be divided between Barras and Talleyrand. These extravagances so irritated the Americans, that, by an act of July 7 1 98 the Legislature, they declared the United States "liberated from the stipulations in the treaty 1778 with France, and authorized y olence of the Direc the president to arm vessels of war to defend their commerce tory aga net against the French cruisers;" grounding these extreme measures upon the narrative that the French had confiscated the cargoes of great numbers of American vessels having enemy's property on board, while it was expressly stipulated, by the treaty 1778, that the flag should cover the cargo; had equipped privateers in the ports of the Union contrary to the rights of neutrality, and treated American seamen found on board enemy's ships, as pirates This led, in its turn, to an embargo in the French harbour, on all American vessels (1), and nothing but the Atlantic which rolled between system was farther acted on In 1794 the Empress not fied to the Swedish Court that 'the I moress of Russia has thought proper to ft out a fleet of twentytake any sweds h merchantmen laden with aug such com nod ties to der their com oy fler imperial Majesty farther orders all merchant sh ps wl ch ler that should any vessel bound to a neutral harbour take in such goods or merchandise as, if they were consigned to any harbour of the belingerent powers lading to show the dest nation of the said th p-helding to show the clear nations with a single of the defended per solution of results for reach levels of period for the single control of the single co May 1795 -Art 18 specifies what articles are to be deemed contrabend - Ann Reg 1795, p 296-297, State Papers

(3) Bignon's li st, de France, 1 260 (4) Nap 1 109, ii 110, 111 in 112. Diga, i, them, and the British cruisers which prevented them reaching each other, prevented these two democratic states from engaging in fierce hostility with each other.

275, 216

But this state of mutual hostility was soon terminated after the accession of the first consul to the helm. He at once perceived the extreme impolicy of irritating, by additional acts of spoliation, a power recently at war with Great Britain, and still labouring under a strong feeling of hostility towards that state; the firm ally in better times of France, and one of the most important in the maritime league which he already contemplated reb 9, 1800. against the English naval power. He received therefore with distinguished honour the American envoys who were despatched from New York, in the end of 1799, to make a last effort to adjust the difference between the two countries; and published a warm eulogium on the great Washington, when intelligence arrived in France, early in the spring following, of the death of that spotless patriot. At the same time the embargo on American vessels was taken off in the French harbours, and every possible terminates facility given to the commencement of negotiations between the the differences of two powers. Prospective arrangements were readily agreed on, Trance with Ameboth parties having an equal interest to establish the new maritime code of the armed neutrality; but it was not found so easy a matter to adjust the injuries that were past, or reconcile the consular Government to those indemnities which the Americans so loudly demanded for the acts of piracy long exercised upon their commerce. At length it was agreed to leave these difficult points to ulterior arrangement in a separate convention, and conclude a treaty for the regulation of neutral rights in future times. By this Sept 30, 1800. treaty, signed at Morfontaine on the 50th September, 1800, the new code was fully established. It was stipulated, 1st, That the flag treaty with should cover the merchandise. 2d, That contraband of war should be understood only of warlike stores, cannon, muskets, and other arms. 3d. That the right of search to ascertain the flag and examine whether there were any contraband articles on board should be carried into effect, out of cannonshot of the visiting vessel, by a boat containing two or three-men only; that every neutral ship should have on board a certificate, setting forth to what country it belonged, and that that certificate should be held as good evidence of its contents; that if contraband articles were found on board they only should be confiscated, and not the ship or remainder of the cargo; that no vessels under convoy should be subject to search, but the declaration of the commander of the convoy be received instead; that those harbours only should be understood to be blockaded where a sufficient force was stationed at their mouth to render it evidently dangerous to attempt to enter; and that enemy's property on board neutral vessels should be covered by their flag, in the same manner as neutral goods found on board enemy's vessels. So far the French influence prevailed in this convention; but they failed in their attempt to get the Americans openly to renounce the treaty concluded in 1794 with Great Britain, which could not have been done without at once embroiling them with the British Cabinet (1). A similar convention had previously been entered into on the same principles between the United States and the Prussian Government (2).

Circumstances at this period were singularly favourable to the revival of the principles of the armed neutrality. A recurrence of the same political relations had restored both the grievances and the ambition which, at the close of the American war, had led to that formidable confederacy Neutral vessels, endeavouring to slide into the lucrative trade which the destruction of the French marine opened up with that country, found themselves perpetually exposed to inquisition from the British cruisers. and numerous condemnations had taken place in the English courts, which, though perfectly agreeable to the law of nations and existing treaties, were naturally felt as exceedingly hard by the sufferers under them, and renewed the ancient and inextinguishable jealousy of their respective governments at the British naval power. In December, 1799, an altercation took place in the straits of Gibraltar between some English frigates and a Danish ship, the Hausenan, in which the Dane refused to submit to a search of the convoy under his command, but the conduct of the captain in this instance was formally disavowed by his government, and the amicable relations of the two countries continued unchanged But the next collision of the same kind which took place occasioned more serious consequences On 25th July, 1800, the commander of the Danish frigate, Freya, refused to allow his convoy to be searched, but, agreeably to the recent stipulations in the treaties between France and America, offered to show his certificates to the British officer, intimating, at the same time, that if a boat was sent to make a search it would be fired upon The British captain upon this laid his vessel alongside the Dane, and resistance being still persisted in, gave her a broadside, and, after a short action, brought her into the Downs (1) The English Cabinet at this time had received intelligence of the worth is hostile negotiations which were going on in the northern courts penta en Aug 23 relative to neutral rights, and deeming it probable that this event would be made the signal for openly declaring their intentions, they wisely resolved to anticipate an attack. For this purpose, Lord Whitworth was sent on a special message to Copenhagen, and to give the greater weight to his representations, a squadron of nine sail of the line, four bombs, and five frigates, was despatched to the Sound, under the command of Admiral They found four Danish line-of-battle ships moored across that strait, from Cronberg castle to the Swedish shore, but the English fleet passed without any hostilities being committed on either side, and cast anchor off the harbour of Copenhagen The Danes were busily employed in And enters strengthening their fortifications, batteries were erected on advan-IR O AD #C commoda tageous situations near the coast, and three floating bulwarks 1 on moored across the mouth of the harbour, but their preparations were not yet complete, and the strength of the British squadron precluded the hope of successful resistance. An accommodation was therefore entered into, the principal conditions of which were, " that the frigate and convoy carried into the Downs should be repaired at the expense of the British Government, the question as to the right of search was to be adjourned for farther consideration from the Barbary cruisers, and in the mean time their other vessels were to be hable to be searched as heretofore (2). Stuated as Creat Britain was, this treaty was a real triumph to her arms, and reflected no small credit on the vigour and ability of the Government by which this delicate matter had been brought to so favourable a conclusion

⁽¹⁾ Treaty Articles 18, 19. Ann. Reg. 1800, 288, (2) On July 11, 1799, See State Papers, Ann. 289. Nap. 11, 122, 123. Big. 1, 277, 278, Dum. Reg. 1800, 294, 295. Articles 13, 14, 15, vi. 96,

Ars. 29 to London Until this point was settled, the Danish ships were to sail with convoy only in the Mediterranean, for the purpose of protection

⁽¹⁾ And Ree" 1800 94 95 Nap 11 f17, 118 (2) Ann Reg 1800, 93, 97 Nap 11 f17 112 Bign 292 Hard in 444 443 Bg 292

It might have been adjusted without any further effusion of blood, had it not been for a train of circumstances which, about the same time, alienated the vehement and capricious Emperor of Russia from the British alliance. The northern autocrat had been exceedingly irritated at the ill success of the combined operations both in Switzerland and Holland; the first of which he ascribed to the ill conduct of the German, the latter of the British auxiliaries. This feeling was increased by the impolitic refusal of the British Government to include Russian prisoners with English in the exchange with French; a proposal which, considering that they had fought side the Empeby side in the Dutch campaign, in which English interests were mainly involved, it was perhaps imprudent to have declined, although the dubious conduct of Paul, in having withdrawn his troops from the German alliance, and broken with Austria, gave him no title to demand such an act of generosity. Napoléon, as already observed, instantly and adroitly duct of Naavailed himself of this circumstance to appease the Czar. He professed the utmost indignation that the gallant Russians should remain in captivity from the refusal of the British Government to agree to their liberation for French prisoners; set them at liberty without exchange, and not only sent them back to their own country, but restored to them the arms and standards which they had lost, and clothed them anew from head to foot in the uniform of their respective regiments. These courteous proceedings produced the greatest impression on the Czar, the more so as they were contrasted with the imprudent refusal of the English Government to include them in their exchange; they led to an interchange of good offices between the two courts, which was soon ripened into an alliance of the strictest kind, in consequence of the impetuous character of the Emperor, and the unbounded admiration which he had conceived for the first consul (1).

Differences Another circumstance at the same time occurred, which contributed not a little to widen the breach between the Cabinets of St.-Petersburg and London. Disengaged from his war with France, and ardently desirous of warlike renown, the Emperor had revived the idea of the armed neutrality of 1780, and made proposals, in May and June, 1800, to the Cabinets of Stockholm and Copenhagen to that effect, which had produced the sudden change in the Danish instructions to their armed vessels to resist the search of the British cruisers. The island of Malta, it was foreseen, would soon surrender to the British squadron, and it was easy to anticipate that the English Cabinet would not readily part with that important fortress; while the Emperor conceived that, as Grand Master of the order of St.-John of Jerusalem, to which it had formerly belonged, he was bound to stipulate its restoration to that celebrated order (2).

Aug 28, Violent phorced. Ings of Paul to a crisis. The Czar, with that vehemence which formed the leading feature of his character, instantly ordered an embargo on all Nov. 5. The British ships in the Russian harbours; and in consequence nearly three hundred vessels, most of them with valuable cargoes on board, were forcibly detained till the frost had set in, and the Baltic had become impassable. Nor was this all. Their crews were, with Asiatic barbarity; in defiance of all the usages of civilized states, marched off into prisons in the interior, many of them above a thousand miles from the coast; while the whole English property on shore was put under sequestration. Several British vessels at Naria weighted anchor and escaped the embarge, this so enraged the autocrat, that he ordered the remaining ships in the harbour to be burnt; and in the official gazette, published a declaration that the embargo Nova should not be taken off till Malta was given up to Russia. This demand was rested on the allegation, that the restitution of that island to the forder of Jerusalem was agreed upon in the convention, December, 1798, between Great Britian and Russia, whereas that treaty contained no such stipulation. These proceedings on the part of the Emperor Paul were in a peculiar manner arbitrary and oppressive, not merely as contrary to the general practice of civilized states, which never an event of a rupture between the two powers, there should be no embargo laid on vessels in the harbours of either, but the merchants on both sides have a year to convey away or dispose of their effects (1).

He taining Nothing more than the support of Russia was necessary to make by a time the northern powers, who derived such benefits from the luctative benefits from the fuer trade which had recently fallen into their hands, combine for the purpose of enforcing a new martine code, which might extend its advantages to the whole commerce of the belligerent states. The King of Sweden, young and high-spirited, entered, from the very first, warmly and readily into the views of the Emperor; but Benmark, which, during the long continuance of the war, had obtained a large share of the carrying trade, and whose capital lay exposed to the first strokes of the English mayy, was ject, and Denmark even hesitated whether she should not throw herself into the arms of England, to resist the dictation of her imperious neighbours, and preserve the lucrative trade from which her subjects were deriving such immense advantages. But the Russians soon found means to assail her in the most vulnerable quarter. Prussia had lately become a considerable maritime power, and from the effect of the same interests, she had warmly embraced the views of the northern confederacy. Her influence with Denmark was paramount, for the most valuable continental possessions of that power lay exposed, without defence, to the Prussian troops. In the beginning of October, a Prussian vessel, the Triton, belonging to Emden, laden with naval stores, and bound for the Texel, was taken and carried into Cuxhaven, a port belonging to Hamburg, by a British cruiser. The Prussian Covernment eagerly took advantage of that circumstance to manifest their resolution, they marched a body of two thousand men into the neutral territory, and took possession of Cuxhaven, and although the senate of Hamburgh purchased the vessel from the English captain and restored it to the owners, and Lord Carysfort, the British ambassador at Berlin, warmly protested against the occupation of the neutral territory after that restitution, the Prussian troops were not withdrawn. A month before, a more unjustifiable act had been committed by the British cruisers off Barcelona, who took possession of a Swedish brig, and under its neutral colours sailed into the harbour of that town, and captured by that means two frigates which the King of Spain had built for the Batavian republic (1).

His warm advances to Napoléon. Though every thing was thus conspiring to forward the views of France, and augment the jealousy of the maritime powers of Great Britain, the course of events by no means kept pace with the impatient disposition of the Czar. He suspected Prussia of insincerity, and openly charged Denmark with irresolution, because they did not embark headlong in the projects which he himself had so recently adopted. Impatient of delay, he wrote in person to the first consul in these terms:-"Citizen first consul-I do not write to you to open any discussion on the rights of men or of citizens; every country chooses what form of government it thinks lit. Wherever I see at the head of affairs a man who knows how to conquer and rule mankind, my heart warms towards him. I write to you to let you know the displeasure which I feel towards England, which violates the law of nations, and is never governed but by selfish considerations. I wish to unite with you to put bounds to the injustice of that government (2)." At the same time, with that candour and vehemence which distinguished his character, he published a declaration in the St.-Petersburg Gazette, in which he stated:-"Being disappointed in his expectations of the protection of commerce by the perfidious enterprises of a great power which had sought to enchain the liberty of the seas by capturing Danish convoys, the independence of the northern powers appeared to him to be openly menaced: he consequently considered it to be a measure of necessity to have recourse to an armed neutrality, the success of which was acknowledged in the time of the American war." And Oct. 29, 1800. shortly after he published a ukase, in which he directed, that all the English effects seized in his states, either by the sequestration of goods on land or the embargo on goods affoat, should be sold, and their produce di-Nov. 17. 1500. vided among all Russians having claims on English subjects! Napoléon was not slow in turning to the best account such an unlooked-for turn of Dec. 5. 1800. fortune in his favour, and redoubled his efforts with the neutral powers to induce them to join the maritime confederacy against Great Britain. To give the greater éclat to the union of France and Russia, an ambassador, Count Kalitchef, was despatched from St.-Petersburg to Paris, and received there with a degree of magnificence well calculated to captivate the Oriental ideas of the Scythian autocrat (5).

maritime confude.

Pressed by Russia on the one side and France on the other, and sufficiently disposed already to regard with a jealous eye the maritime preponderance of Great Britain, the fears and irresolution of the northern powers at length gave way. On the 16th December a maritime confederacy was signed by Russia, Sweden, and Denmark, and on the 19th of the same month by Prussia as an acceding party. The principles of this league were in substance the same as those of the armed neutrality in 1780, with a slight variation in favour of belligerent powers. A minute specification was given of what should be deemed contraband articles, which included only arms of all sorts, with saddles and bridles, "all other articles not herein enumerated shall not be considered as war or naval stores, and shall not be subject to confiscation, but shall pass free and without restraint." It was stipulated, "that the effects which belong to the subjects of belligerent powers in neutral ships, with the exception of contraband goods, shall be free;" that no harbour shall be deemed blockaded unless the disposition and number of ships of the power by which it is invested shall be the British Government. Under cover of a regard for the rights required to the mainty and the principles of justice, it evidently went to misolate a sistem luther to unheard of in naval warfare, eminently favourable to the weaker maritime power, and calculated to render naval success to any state of little avail, by enabling the vanquished party, under neutral colours, securely to repair all its losses. It was evident that, if this new code of martime law were introduced, all the victories of the British navy would go for nothing, France, in neutral vessels, would securely regain her whole commerce, under neutral flags she would import all the materials for the construction of a havy, and in neutral ships safely exercise the seamen requisite to navigate them. At the close of a long and 1.

⁽¹⁾ Dum. vi. 88. Bign. 1. 298. (2) Nap. ii. 129.

⁽³⁾ Dum. vi. 121, 123. Ann. Reg. 1801, 98, and . 1800, 260. State papers.

tence, and attended with unexampled the fruits of her exertions torn from he antagonist's maritime strength, by the intervention of the powers for whose behoof, as well as her own, she had taken up arms

England at this period was not, as at the close of the American war, obliged to dissemble her indignation at a proceeding which was evidently prejudicial to her national interests, and the first stroke levelled by continental jealousy at her national independence. The statesman who still held the helm was a man who disdained all temporary shifts or momentary expedients, who, fully appreciating the measure of national danger, holdly looked it in the face, who knew that from humiliation to subjugation in nations is but a step; and that the more perilous a struggle is, the more necessary is it to engage in it while yet the public resources are undiminished, and the popular spirit is not depressed by the appearances of vacillation on the part of government. On these prudent not less than resolute principles, Mr Pitt was no sconer informed of the signature of the armed neutrality, than he took the most decisive steps for letting the northern powers feel the disposition of the nation they had Jan 14 1801 thought fit to provoke On the 14th January, 1801, the British Government issued an order for a general embargo on all vessels belonging to any of the confederated powers, Prussia alone excepted, of whose accession to the league intelligence had not as yet been received. Letters of marque were at the same time issued for the capture of the numerous into the British harbours (2).

These hostile proceedings led to a warm debate between the British ambaseodors and those of the neutral powers, which was conducted with great ab 1

⁽i) Convent on Dec 16, 1809. Ann Reg 1800. (2) Aun Reg 1801, 103 266 270 State pagers

It was stated by the British Government, "That a solemn treaty had been entered into between Russia and Great Britain calculated completely to secure their trade, in which it was stipulated that, in case of a rupture, not only no embargo should be laid on, but the subjects on both sides should have a year to carry away their effects; that in violation of these sacred stipulations the ships of British merchants had been scized, their crews sent to prison in the interior, and their property sequestrated and sold by Russia; that these acts of violence, as well as the conclusion of a hostile confederacy, which the Emperor of Russia has formed for the express and avowed purpose of introducing those innovations into the maritime code which England has ever opposed, have led to an open war between Great Britain and Russia; that these measures openly disclose an intention to prescribe to the British empire, on a subject of the greatest importance, a new code of laws, to which she never will submit, that the confederacy recently signed by the Baltic powers, had for its object the establishment of these novel principles of maritime law, which never had been recognised by the tribunals of Europe, which the Russian Court, since 1780, had not only abandoned, but, by a treaty still in force, she had become bound to oppose, and which were equally repugnant to the express stipulations of the treaties which subsist between the courts of Stockholm and Denmark and the British empire; that in addition to this, the parties to the confederacy were pursuing warlike preparations with the utmost activity, and one of them had engaged in actual hostilities with Great Britain. In these circumstances, nothing remained to the British Government but to secure some pledge against the hostile attacks which were meditated against their rights, and therefore they had laid an embargo on the vessels of the Baltic powers, but under such restraints as would guard to the utmost against loss and injury to individuals; that the King of Great Britain would never submit to pretensions which were irreconcilable to the true principles of maritime law, and strike at the foundation of the greatness and maritime power of his kingdoms; and that being perfectly convinced that his conduct towards neutral states was conformable to the recognised principles of law and justice, and the decisions of the admiralty courts of all the powers of Europe, he would allow of no measures which had for their object to introduce innovations on the maritime law now in force, but defend that system in every event, and maintain its entire execution as it subsisted in all the courts of Europe before the confederacy of 4780(1)."

On the other hand it was answered by Prussia and the neutral powers,—"The British Government has in the present, more than any former war, usurped the sovereignty of the seas, and by arbitrarily framing a naval code, which it would be difficult to unite with the true principles of the law of nations, it exercises over the other friendly and neutral powers a usurped jurisdiction, the legality of which it maintains, and which it considers as an imprescriptible right, sanctioned by all the tribunals of Europe. The neutral sovereigns have never conceded to England the privilege of calling their subjects before its tribunals, and of subjecting them to its laws, but in cases in which the abuse of power has got the better of equity, which, alas! are but too frequent. The neutral powers have always taken the precaution to address to its cabinet the most energetic remonstrances and protests; but experience has ever proved them to be entirely fruitless; and it is not surprising if, after so many repeated acts of oppression, they have resolved to find a remedy against it, and for that purpose to establish a well-arranged convention. which execution rights and places them on a proper level with the powers ated, nus declare, that he recognises in its own principles, that he is fully convinced of its necessity and utility; that he has formally acceded to the convention of the 16th December, and has bound himself not only to take a direct share in all the events which interest the cause of the neutral powers, but, in virtue of his engagements, to maintain that connexion by such powerful measures as the impulse of circumstances may require. It is not true that the confederated powers have for their object to introduce a new code of maritime rights hostile to the interests of Great Britain; the measures of the Danish Government are purely defensive, and it cannot be considered as surprising that they should have adopted them, when it is recollected what menacing demonstrations that court had experienced from Great Britain, on occasion of the affair of the Freya frigate (1)." The Prussian Government concluded by urging the English Government to take off the embargo on the Danish and Swedish vessels, as the first and necessary step to an amicable settlement of the difficult question, without making any such stipulation in regard to that laid on Russian ships, and thereby in effect admitting the justice of the measure of retaliation adopted in regard to the latter power (2).

These hostile declarations were soon followed up by measures which demonstrated that Prussia was not inclined to be merely a passive spectator of this great debate. On the 50th March a declaration was issued by the king of Prussia to the Government of Hanover, in which he stated that he was to take possession provisionally of the English dominions in Germany, and the Hanoverian States being in no condition to resist such April 3 1807 an invasion, they submitted, and the Prussian troops entered the country, laid an embargo on British shipping, and closed the Elbe and the Weser against the English flag At the same time a body of Danish troops took possession of Hamburgh, and extended the embargo to that great commercial emporium, while Denmark and Sweden had a short time before also laid an embargo on all the ports of their dominions. Thus the British flag was excluded from every harbour, from the North Cape to the straits of Gibraltar; and England, which a year before led on the coalition against France, found herself compelled to make head against the hostility of combined Europe (3), with an exhausted treasury and a population suffering under the accumulated pressure of famine and pestilence (4).

Parlia-Perslous

Never did a British Parliament meet under more depressing cir-Meeting of cumstances than that which commenced its sittings in February erious 1801. After ten years of a war, costly and burdensome beyond example, the power of France was so far from being weakened,

⁽¹⁾ Baron Hangwitz s answer Ann Reg 1801,

¹¹ State papers
12) Baron Haugwatz s answer Ann Reg 1801, 13 State papers App 11 132
(3) Ann Reg 1800, 107
(4) It deserves to be recorded to the credit of

Pruss a in this transaction that he ng well aware how severely Great Britain was suffering at this time under an uncommon warsety of provis ons, she pera tited the vessels baving grain on board to proceed to the places of their destination, notwith standing the embargo.—a humane indulgence, which forms a striking contrast to the violent and cruel onerer Paul on the same occa-

Just to vis 2 upon that gained from their ch ef, who all out that period began to give symptoms of their retribulity of disposition and menial aheranion, which is soon brought about the bloody catastrophe which terminated his ruigu [Dum vi 167 Ann Reg 1800, 107]

that she had extended her sway over all the south of Europe. The strength of Austria was, to appearance at least, irrecoverably broken; Italy and Switzerland crouched beneath her yoke, Spain openly followed her banners, and Holland was indissolubly united with her fortunes. Great Britain, it is true, had been uniformly, and to an unparalleled extent, victorious at sea, and the naval forces of her adversary were almost destroyed; but the northern confederation had suddenly and alarmingly altered this auspicious state of things, and not only were all the harbours of Europe closed against her merchant vessels, but a fleet of above a hundred ships of the line in the Baltic was preparing to assert principles subversive of her naval power. To crown the whole, the excessive rains of the two preceding autumns had essentially injured two successive crops; the price of all sorts of grain had reached an unprecedented height (1), and the people, at the time when their industry was checked by the cessation of commercial intercourse with all Europe, were compelled to struggle with famine of unusual severity (2).

This subject of the northern coalition was fully discussed in the on the subparliamentary debates which took place on the King's speech at the jeet in Par-liament. opening of the session. It was urged by Mr. Grey and the Opposition, "That although without doubt the Emperor of Russia had been guilty of the grossest violence and injustice towards Great Britain in the confiscation of the property of its merchants, yet it did not follow that ministers were free of blame. He accuses them of having violated a convention in regard to the surrender of Malta to him as a reward for his co-operation against France: did such a convention exist? The northern powers have, along with Russia, subscribed a covenant, the professed object of which is to secure their commerce against the vexations to which they have hitherto been subject; and it is impossible to discover any thing either in the law of nations or practice of states, any law or practice universally acknowledged, the denial of which is tantamount to a declaration of war against this country. It is a mistake to assert that the principles of the armed neutrality were never heard of till they were advanced in the American war. In 1740 the King of Prussia disputed the pretensions of this country on the same grounds as the armed neutrality; and in 1762 the Dutch resisted the claim of right to search vessels under convoy. In 1780 these objections assumed a greater degree of consistency, from their principles being publicly announced by all the powers in Europe.

"There is one principle which should ever be considered as the leading rule by which all questions of this sort should be determined, and that is the maxim of justice. Can, then, the pretensions of Great Britain bear the test of this criterion? Our naval ascendency, indeed, should ever be carefully preserved, as the source of our glory and the bulwark of our safety; but sorry should I be, if, to preserve the rights and interests of the British nation, we should be compelled to abandon the rules and maxims of justice, in which alone are to be found true and permanent greatness, true and permanent security.

"Even supposing the pretensions of England to be just, are they expedient? Its maritime superiority is of inestimable value, but is this claim, so odious to our neighbours, essential to its existence? Let the advantage, nay, the necessity, of the privilege be clearly demonstrated before we engage in a uni-

⁽¹⁾ In the winter 1800-1801, wheat rose to L 1, 4s, the bushel; being more than quadruple what it had been at the commencement of the war; and all other species of food were high in proportion. Large quantities of maize and rice were imported, and contributed essentially to relieve the public distress.

(2) Ann. Reg. 1801, 117.

IIIXXX at ood Admitting ccur which jus-

240 HISTORY OF EUROPE.

the concession of versal war for its defence and purchase it at the price of blee been the ino supply I rance even that the right was just and useful, circumstances may be fleets without ١.,

with many articles necessary for their navy, what would haarine, and supconvenience thence arising? France, destitute of seamen, hipe now outlank discipline, what the better would she be of all the naval styline inestimable of Europe? What, on the other hand, is the consequence of Id not otherwise the northern powers? Do we not in a moment double her men! And if our pl. u٩ be obtained, and is not that the real object which she request, that the sup-commerce is excluded from every harbour in Europe, if every the instructions argainst us, what is to become of the involved account of ac.

against us, what is to become of the invaluable sources of ou Lord North was security? Ind in the presen. ply from the I to our naval : never arraign to extremitie neutrality was wholly omitted. In subsequent commercial |u "It has only ferent countries, the question of neutral rights has been set of for by Great ciples of the armed neutrality; and there is at least as much hesitation on a deration now as there was at the close of the American war e whole courts, To these arguments Mr. Pitt been stated as doubtful whethe.

Britain is founded in justice; b. subject which has been acknowledged and acted upon by the a particular not only of this country, but of Europe, and on which all the as the very cir-island merely, but of every belligerent state in Europe, havile general law of conducted? The advocates for the neutral powers constanted a concession error of supposing that every exception from the general lay7, because it was treaty proves the law to be as stated in that treaty, wherevere at war, but cumstance of making an exception by treaty, proves that thould be undernations would be the reverse but for that exception We mi to other state." of this description to France, in the commercial treaty of 178 ral advocates is supposed that that power would never be neutral when we littles of 1661 and was it ever for one moment imagined, that by so doing, we not in those treastood to have relinquished our maritime rights with referencing. With respect "With respect to the Baltic powers, the case of the neulcontrary, in the peculiarly untenable Nobody here has to learn, that the trd the commence-1670 are in full force with respect to Sweden and Denmark, a to observe this ties the right of carrying enemy's property is expressly given fowers from proto Russia, the right of search was never abandoned. On the'rs Even, thereconvention signed between this country and that power, aferse, as in reality ment of the present war, the latter bound herself not merel the Baltic powers principle herself, but to use her efforts to prevent neutral & of laws against tecting the commerce of France on the seas or in its harbouland with her? fore, if the general principles of the maritime law were as adv

they are favourable to Great Britain, still the treaties with are in full force, and how can they now contend for a cod "Denmark, in August last, with her fleets and her arsenals at our mercy, entered into a solemn pledge, not again to send vessels with convoy until the principle was settled; and yet she has recently bound herself by another treaty, founded upon the principles of 1780, one of the engagements of which treaty is, that its stipulations are to be maintained by force of arms. Is this, or is it not, war? When all these circumstances are accompanied by armaments, prepared at a period of the year when they think they have time for preparation without being exposed to our navy, can there be the slightest doubt, that in justice we are bound to take up arms in our own defence?

"As to the question of expenditure, the matter is if possible, still less doubtful. The question is, whether we are to permit the navy of our enemy to be supplied and recruited; whether we are to suffer blockaded forts to be furnished with warlike stores and provisions; whether we are to allow neutral nations, by hoisting a flag upon a sloop or a fishing-boat, to convey the treasures of South America to the harbours of Spain, or the naval stores of the Baltic to Brest or Toulon? The honourable gentleman talks of the destruction of the naval power of France; but does he imagine that her marine would have decreased to the degree which it actually has, if, during the whole of the war, this very principle had not been acted upon? And if the commerce of France had not been destroyed, does he believe, that if the fraudulent system of neutrals had not been prevented, her navy would not now have been in a very different situation from what it actually is? Does he not know, that the naval preponderance which we have by this means acquired, has since given security to this country amidst the wreck of all our hopes on the Continent? If it were once gone, the spirit of the country would go with it. If in 1780, we were not in a condition to assert the right of this country to a code of maritime law, which for centuries has been acted upon indiscriminately by all the European states, we have not now, happily, the same reason for not persisting in our rights; and the question now is, whether, with increased proofs of the necessity of acting upon that principle, and increased means of supporting it, we are for ever to give it up (1)?"

The House of Commons supported ministers, by a majority of 245 to 65 (2). The union of Ireland with England, from which such important results were anticipated, proved a source of weakness rather than strength to the empire at this important crisis. By a series of concessions, which commenced soon after, and continued through the whole reign of George III, the Irish Catholics had been nearly placed on a level with their Protestant fellow subjects, and they were now excluded only from sitting in Parliament, and holding about thirty of the principal offices in the state. When Mr. Pitt, however, carried through the great measure of the Union, he gave the Catholics reason to expect that a complete removal of all disabilities would follow the Union, not indeed as a matter of right, but of grace and favour. This understood pledge, when the time arrived, he found himself unable to redeem. The complete removal of Catholic disabilities, it was soon found, involved many fundamental questions in the constitution; in particular, the Bill of Rights, the Test and Corporation Acts, and, in general, the stability of the whole Protestant Church establishment; and for that reason it might be expected to meet with a formidable opposition from the aristocratic party in both houses; and in addition to this, it was discovered, when the measure was brought forward in the Cabinet, that the King entertained scruples of conscience on the subject, in consequence of his oath at the coronation "to maintain the Protestant religion established by law," which the known firmness and integrity of his character rendered it extremely improbable he would ever be brought to abandon. In these circumstances, Mr. Pitt stated that he had no alternative but to resign res to his official situations. On the 40th February, it was announced in Parliament that ministers only held the scals till their successors were appointed, and shortly after Mr. Pitt, Lord Greuville, Earl Spenser, Mr. Bundas, and Mr. Windham resigned, and were succeeded by Mr. Addington, then Speaker of the House of Commons, as First Lord of the Treasury, Lord Hawkesbury, as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and a new Ministry, taken, however, entirely from the Tory party (1).

It has long been the practice of the Administration of Great bet only Britain, not to resign upon the real question which occasions their table remains retirement, but select some minor point, which is held forth to the public as the ostensible ground of the change, and this custom is attended with the great advantage of not implicating the Crown or the Government openly in a collision with either House of Parliament. From the circumstance of Mr. Pitt having so prominently held forth the Catholic question as the reason for his retirement, it is more than probable that this was not the real ground of the change; or, that if it was, he readily caught at the impossibility of carrying through any farther concessions to the Catholics of Ireland as a motive for resignation, to prevent the approach to other and more important questions which remained behind. There was no necessity for bringing forward the Catholic claims at that moment, nor any reason for breaking up an Administration at a period of unparalleled public difficulty, merely because the scruples in the Royal breast prevented them from being at that time conceded. But the question of peace or war stood in a very different situation. Mr. Pitt could not disguise from himself that the country was now involved in a contest, apparently endless, if the principles on which it had so long been conducted were rigidly adhered to; that the dissolution of the continental coalition, and the formation of the northern confederacy had immensely diminished the chances, not merely of success, but of salvation during its future continuance. As it was possible, therefore, perhaps probable, that England might be driven to an accommodation at no distant. period, and the principles he had so long maintained might prove an obstacle to such a necessary measure, Mr. Pitt took the part of retiring with the leading members of his Cabinet, and was succeeded by other inferior adherents of his party, who, without departing from his principles altogether, might feel themselves more at liberty to mould them according to the pressure of external circumstances. In doing this, the English minister acted the part of

⁽¹⁾ Park Hist xxxv 966 Aun Reg 1801, 117.

<sup>1211.

1212.

1213.

1214.

1215.

1216.

1217.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

1218.

12</sup>

a true patriot. "He sacrificed himself," says the chosen historian of Napoléon, "to the good of his country and a general peace. He showed himself more than a great statesman, a good citizen (1)."

But though Mr. Pitt retired, he left his mantle to his successors; measures of neither timidity nor vacillation appeared in the measures of Government towards foreign states. For both the land and sca-forces ers to proaccure the a larger allowance was provided than in any previous year since the commencement of the war. For the navy there was voted 159,000 seamen and marines, and 120 ships of the line were put in commission. The landtroops altogether amounted to 500,000 men'(2); and the navy, in service and ordinary, amounted to the predigious force of above 200 ships of the line and 250 frigates (5). Mr. Pitt, on February 18th, brought forward the budget immediately before he surrendered the seals to his successors. The charges of the army and navy were each of them above L.15,000,000; and the total expenditure to be provided for by the United Kingdom amounted to L.12,000,000, besides above L.20,000,000 as the interest of the debt. To provide for these prodigious charges, war-supplies to the amount of L.17,000,000 existed; and to make up the difference he contracted a loan of L.25,500,000 for Great Britain; while Ireland, according to the agreement at the Union, was to provide 2-17ths of the whole expense, or L.4,500,000. To provide for the interest of the loan, and the sinking fund applicable to its reduction, new taxes, chiefly in the excise and customs, were imposed to the amount of L.1,794,000. These additional taxes, according to the admirable system of that great financier, were almost all laid on in the indirect form, being intended to be a permanent burden on the nation till the principal was paid off; and a sinking-fund of L.100,000 a-year was provided for this purpose in the excess of the additional taxes above the interest of the debt (4).

Notwithstanding the unexampled difficulties which had beset the British empire in the years 1799 and 1800, from the extreme Great Britain at this severity of the searcity during that period, and the vast expenditure which the campaigns of these two years had occasioned, the condition

2.8

1. 1

Lottery,

(1)	Bigo, i. 406 Viz—Regular l	۱nn.	R	g.	180	١٥,	11	9, 120.
(2)	Viz-Regular l	rorc	cs,	•			٠	193,000
	Militia,	•	•	٠			•	79,000
	Fencibles	, .	•		٠	•	•	31,000
	•	т.	ota	ı,	•	•	•	302,000

The expense of maintaining which was estimated at L.12.910,000. The total forces, both of land and sea, in 1792, was not 120,000; a signal proof what much greater efforts than she was generally sup-posed capable of, England could really make, and of the overwhelming force with which, at the commencement of the war, she might, by a proper exertion of her strength, have overwhelmed the revolutionary volcano. - See Ann. Reg. 1800, p. 112, and Journ, xiv. 251.

(3) Ships of the line, in commission and ordinary, Building, Fifty-gun ships, . . 27 257 Frigates, Brigs and sloops, . 312 Total, . . .

(4) Parl. Deb. xxxv. 971, 978. Mr. Pitt stated the War Revenue of the Same for the year 1801, as follows :-

Income Tax, Duty on Exports and logicity. Surplus of the Committed Fund, Irish Taxes at Law, Balance not modifier Salvables, Surplus of Grants.	$1250,000 $1,250,000 $1.5 40,000 $1.5 $1.00 $00,000 $00,000
Maya 20, 1 Med 22, 4 . L.	Activity of the second
Acts, Aray and fatentialinery, Ordinary Ordinary Control of the Co	Confession of the Confession o attended of the following of the second of t and the file of the second

Sugar, Malt, and Tobacco, . . . 1-2,750.000

200 (03

[—]See James's Naval Hist, iii. Table ix pand de 🛶 . xiv. 252.

of the empire in 1801 was, to an unprecedented degree, wealthy and prosperous. The great loan of twenty-five millions of that year was borrowed at a rate of interest under six per cent, although loans to the amount of above two hundred millions had been contracted in the eight preceding years, the exports, as compared with what they were at the commencement of the war, had tripled, and the imports more than tripled, in addition to the vast sums of money which the nation required for its loans to foreign powers, and pryments on account of its own forces in foreign parts. Nearly a fourtif had been added to the tomage of the shipping and the scames employed in it during the same period, while the national expenditure had risen to above sixty-eight millions, of which nearly forty millions were provided from permanent or war-taxes (1). Contrary to all former prece-

brosined non bermaners of wat-197	es (1) Contrary to an former prece-
(1) Mr Chancellor Add noton on June 29 1801	Loa for Irels d 2 500 000 brought forward a ser es of f nance re olut ons	Excheq er b'lis charged on suppl es which as fully explan sthes that on of the British	of 1802 2 000 000
emp re at that pe od a e vell de crv ng of a ten- t on The r mat r al ports are as follow -	Add o at produce of taxes defe ent
	n 1800 1 100 000 Unpa d part of German Ioan $60 000
1 Expend tu e fo 1801	Redeemed land tax 62 000
Interest of debt and a nkin, fund L 20 144 000
Add t mad interest on loans of 1801 1812 000 Cvll, share of Great Br ta 1376 000	Total income L 67 963 000
Cv i government 1 ens ons charges
etc in Sco la d 632 000	3 Public Debt
Charges of Collect on 1 851 000	Public debt on the 5 h January
Great Br ta n s share of the war char ges of 1601 39 238 000	1793 L 227 000 000 Annu t es at same per od 1 293 000
Advances to Irelan I from England 2 500 000	Publ e debt creat d from 5th Jan
Interest on Imperial loans 497 000	1793 to 1st Feb 1801 214 661 000
	Annu es created s nee the same pe
Total charges 1 68 153 000	r od 302 000 Debt redeemed from 1793 to 1801 52 281 000
	Drawn by land tax redeemed 16 083 000
2 I come for 1801	Total publ c debt on 1st February
Permanent Revenue as n 1800 L 27 419 000	1601 000 000
Produce of first quarter s taxes 1801 1 000 000 Income tax 5 522 000	Annut es ex st n, tlen 1540 000
Experts a d Imports 1 200 000	An unlicharge of delit curred be fore 1793 who sinking fuld 10 325 000
Repayments fro a Grenada 800 000	Annualch ree of debt neurred's nee loan 25 500 000	1793 w th do 10 395 000
4 S nl	ng Fund
Amount of saking fund > 1786	L 1 000 000 or 1-238 of deld
ın 1793	1 427 000 or 1-160 of do
ın 1801	5 300,000 or 1—76 of do
	ce of Taxes
1 a s Permenent Tax-
1794 13 941,600	1793 L.13 332 000 1799 14 275 000
1795 13 858 000	1800 15 743 000
1796 * 13 57,000	1801 11 194 000
1797 14 292 000
	801 L 8 079 000
3 0 Imports	and Exports Imports
Average of six years end no 5th Jan 1784	L 13 122 000
• 1793	18 685 000
Real value of amports in 1801	25 259 000 54 500 000
Meat table of infinite it too.
	For an Goods B his Manufac- Exported u es Exported.
Average of a x years and ng 5th Jan 1784	L 4 263 080 L 8 616 000
1796 1801	5 468 000 14 771 000 17 168 000 20 085 000
Real value of exports in 1801	17 166 000 20 085 000 16 300 000 39 500,000
	pp ng
Registe ed	resse s Tonnage Seamen
1788 13 83	7 1 363 000 107 500
1732 16 07
1800 18 8	7 1 905 000 143 000
The vast increase of exports imports and ships	ing between 1793 and 1800 and esper ally a nee the Bank Restr ction Act in 1797 is particularly worthy of observat on -See Parl II it 2227 1561 dent, the country had eminently prospered during this long and arduous Notwithstanding the weight of its taxation, and the expenditure, immense sums which had been squandered in foreign loans or exports, and services, and of course lost to the productive powers of Great Britain, the industry of the nation in all its branches had prodigiously increased, and capital was to be had in abundance for all the innumerable undertakings, both public and private, which were going forward. Agriculture had advanced in a still greater degree than population; the dependence of the nation on foreign supplies was rapidly diminishing; and yet the united kingdom, which had added nearly a sixth to its inhabitants since 1791, numbered above fifteen million of souls in the British isles (1). The divisions and disaffection which prevailed during the earlier years of the war had almost entirely disappeared; the atrocities of the French Revolution had weaned all but a few inveterate democrats from Jacobinical principles; the imminence of the public danger had united the great body of the people in a strong attachment to the national colours; the young and active party of the population had risen into manhood since the commencement of the contest, and imbibed with their mother's milk the enthusiastic feelings it was calculated to awaken; while the incessant progress and alarming conquests of France had generally diffused the belief that no security for the national independence was to be found but in a steady resistance to its ambition. A nation animated with such feelings and possessed of such resources, was not unreasonably confident in itself when it bade defiance to Europe in arms.

England, however, had need of all its energies, for the forces of the maritime league were extremely formidable. eighty-two sail of the line and forty frigates in her harbours, of which forty-seven line-of-battle ships were in the Baltic and at Archangel, but of these not more than fifteen were in a state ready for active service; and the crews were extremely deficient in nautical skill. eighteen ships of the line and fourteen frigates, besides a great quantity of small craft, in much better condition, and far better served, than the Russian navy; while a numerous flotilla, with ten thousand men on board, was prepared to defend its shores, and twenty thousand troops, stationed in camps in the interior, were ready to fly to any menaced point. Denmark had twenty-three ships of the line and fourteen large frigates, which the brave and energetic population of Zealand had made the utmost efforts to equip and man, to resist the attack which was shortly anticipated from the British arms. Could the three powers have united their forces, they had twenty-four ships of the line ready for sea, which might in a few months have been raised with ease to fifty, besides twenty-five frigates, a force which, combined with the fleet of Holland, might have raised the blockade of the French harbours, and enabled the confederated powers to ride triumphant in the British Channel (2).

In these circumstances every thing depended on England striking measures of the British Government. In these circumstances every thing depended on England striking a decisive blow in the outset, and anticipating by the celerity of her movements that combination of force which otherwise might prove so the extening to her national independence. Fortunately the Government were fully aware of the necessity of acting vigorously at the commencement, and by great exertions a powerful squadron was assembled at Yarmouth in the beginning of March It consisted of eighteen ships of the line, four frigates, and a number of bomb vessels, in all fifty-two sail Nelson ap This powerful force was placed under the command of hir Hyde po ated so d in Parker, with Nelson for his second in command The hero of the Aile had good reason to be dissatisfied at finding himself placed of 1e firet under the command of an officer who, though respectable, and his superior in rank, was comparatively unknown in the annals of naval glory, but he was not a man to allow any personal feelings to interfere with his duty to his country Though sensible of the slight, therefore, he cheerfully accepted the subordinate command. When he arrived at Yarmouth he "found the admiral a little nervous about dark nights and fields of ice, but we must brave up," said he, "these are not times for nervous I hope we shall give our northern enemies that hail-storm of bullets which gives our dear country the dominion of the sea. All the devils in the north cannot take it from us, if our wooden walls have fair play (1) "

- 3

⁻See Pennen's Tables, 332, and Population Re-

⁽²⁾ Ann. Reg. 1801, 109. Dum. vi. 169, 172. Nap. ii. 137, 138. Southey's Life of Nelson, ii. 91.

The British fleet sailed from Yarmouth on the 12th March, but Br t sh flect sa la soon after putting to sea, it sustained a serious loss in the wreck of the invincible, which struck on one of the sand banks in that dangerous coast, and shortly sunk with a large part of the crew Mr Vansittart accompanied the squadron in the capacity of plenipotentiary, to endeayour to arrange the differences by negotiation, which unfortunately proved totally impossible. It arrived on the 27th off Zealand, and Sir Hyde immediately despatched a letter to the governor of Cronenberg castle, to inquire whether the fleet would be allowed without molestation to pass the Sound The governor having replied that he could not allow a force, whose intentions were unknown, to approach the guns of his fortress, the British admiral declared that he took this as a declaration of war. By the earnest advice of Nelson it was determined immediately to attempt the passage, a resolution which, in the state of the northern powers, was not only the most gallant but the most prudent that could have been adopted (2). On the 50th March the British fleet entered the Sound, with a fair wind from the northwest, and spreading all sail, proudly and gallantly bore up towards the harbour of Copenhagen (5)

spreams The scene which opened upon the British fleet when it entered this effect when detected passage was every way worthy of the cause in which it was engaged, and the memorable events of which it was soon to become the theatre. Nothing in the north of Europe can be compared to the prospect afforded by the channel which lies between the opposite shores of Sweden and Denmark. On the left, the coast of Scandinavia exhibits a becultful assemblage of corn lands, pastures and copses, rising into picturesque and varied hills, while on the right, the shores of Lealand present a continued succession of rich plains, woods, meadows, orchards, villas and all the accompaniments of long established civilization. The slees of linen, Saltholm, and

⁽i) Southey is 85
(2) Nelson on the occas on addressed Sir lijde as follows — The more I have retice ed it e more

s ent Here you are with almost all the safety cer

Amack appear in the widening channel; the former celebrated as bearing the observatory of the great Tycho Brahe, and where most of his discoveries were made, the latter nearly opposite to Copenhagen. At the foot of the slope, on the Swedish side, is situated the old city of Helsinborg, with its picturesquo battlements and mouldering towers; while on the south, the castle of Cronenberg and city of Elsinore rise in frowning majesty to assert the dominion of Denmark over the straits. Both are associated with poetic and historical recollections. Elsinore is familiar to every reader of Hamlet, and has recently been celebrated in thrilling strains by the greatest of modern lyric nocts (1); while Cronenberg castle was the scene of a still deeper tragedy. There Queen Matilda was confined, the victim of a base court intrigue, and enlivened the dreary hours of captivity in nursing her infant; there she was separated from that, the last link that bound her to existence; and on these towers her eyes were fixed, as the vessel bore her from her country, till their highest pinnacle had sunk beneath the waves, and her aching sight rested only on the waste of waters (2).

To one approaching from the German ocean, the fortresses of Helsingborg, Elsinore, and Cronenberg seem to unite and form a vast castellated barrier on the north-east of an inland lake; but as he advances the vista opens, the Baltic is seen, and the city of Copenhagen, with its Gothic spires and stately edifices, appears crowding down to the water's edge. Its harbour, studded with masts; its arsenals, bulwarks, and batteries; its lofty towers and decorated buildings, render it one of the most striking cities in the north of Europe. During summer, the Sound exhibits an unusually gay and animated spectacle; hardly a day clapses in which an hundred vessels do not pass the straits, and pay toll to Denmark at Elsinore; and in the course of the season, upwards of ten thousand ships, of different nations, yield a willing tribute in this manner to the keeper of the beacons which warn the mariner from the dangerous shoals of the Cattegat. But never had so busy or brilliant a spectacle been exhibited there as on this day, when the British fleet prepared to force a passage where till now all ships had lowered their topsails to the flag of Denmark. Fifty vessels, of which seventeen were of the line, spread their sails before a favourable wind, and pressing forward under a brilliant sun, soon came abreast of Cronenberg castle. The splendour of the scene, the - undefined nature of the danger which awaited them, the honour and safety of their country intrusted to their arms, the multitude who crowded every. headland on the opposite shores, conspired to awaken the most thrilling emotions in the minds of the British seamen. Fear had no place in those dauntless breasts; yet was their patriotic ardour not altogether unmixed with painful feelings. The Danes were of the same lineage, and once spoke the same language as the English; the two nations had for centuries been united in the bonds of friendship; and numbers who now appeared in arms against them were sprung from the same ancestors as their gallant opponents. The effect of this common descent has survived all the divisions of kingdoms and political interest; alone, of all the continental states, an Englishman finds himself at home in that part of Jutland from whence the Angles originally sprung (3); and even the British historian, in recounting the events in this melancholy contest, feels himself distracted by emotions akin to those of civil

⁽¹⁾ Now joy, old England, raise!
For the tidings of thy might,
By the festal cities' blaze,
While the winecup shines in light;
And yet amidst that joy and uproar,
Let us think of them that sleep,

Full many a fathom deep,
By thy wild and stormy steep,
Elsinore!,
CAMPBELL'S Battle of the Baltic,

⁽²⁾ Southey, i. 108, 109. Reg. 1801, 111. (3) Clarke's Travels, i.

warfare, and dwells with nearly the same exultation on the heroism of the vanquished as the prowess of the victors (1).

Though they had enjoyed profound peace for nearly a century, the best and during that time had been ruled by a government in form absolute, the banes had lost none of the courage or patriotism by which their ancestors, in the days of Canute and the Sca-kings, had been distinguished. Never was the classes made the unmose excitions again. dition; the nobles, the clergy, the burghers, and the peasant yied with each other in their endeavours to complete the preparations for defence. The Prince Royal set the example by presiding at the labours of his subjects; workmen presented themselves in crowds to take a share in the undertakings, children even concealed their age in order to be permitted to join in the patriotic exertion, the university furnished a corps of twelve hundred youths, the flower of Denmark, the merchants, including those whose fortunes were at stake from the English embargo, came forward with liberal offers, the peasants flocked from the country to man the arsenals: the workmen in the dock-yards refused to leave their station, and continued labouring by torch-light during the whole night, with relays merely of rest, as in a man-of-war. Battalions were hastily formed, batteries manned with inexperienced hands, muskets made, and all kinds of warlike stores provided with astonishing celerity (2) History has not a more touching example of patriotic ardour to commemorate, nor one in which a more perfect harmony prevailed between a sovereign and his subjects for the defence of rights naturally dear to them all Proofe of From a praiseworthy, but ill-timed desire to avoid coming to the Sound extremities, the British armament had given a long delay to the Danes, which was turned to good account by their understagable citizens, and occasioned in the end an unnecessary effusion of blood. They had arrived in the Cattegat the sahore, with a but neverthele... attempted In the interval, the Danes had powerfully strengthened their means of defence, the shore was lined with batteries, and Cronenberg castle opened a heavy fire, from above a hundred pieces of cannon, upon the leading ships of the squadron when they came within range. Aclaim's division led the chined to the Swedish shore, and were thus enabled to pass atmost the reach of the Danish guns. The cannon balls and shells fell short of the line-of-battle ships, and did little injury even to the smaller craft, which is a did panel, cost afforting no small increment to the hours, and about noonday the fleet came to anchor opposite to a congningen (5).

⁽¹⁾ Ann Reg 1801, 111 Souther, 11 108 (3) Ann Reg 1801, 110 Souther, 11 109, 111. (2) Dam vs 172 Jan xiv 252 253 Southey, Dam vs, 183, 181, Jon. xiv 252 253 ; 115, 130

The garrison of this city consisted of ten thousand men, besides the battalions of volunteers, who were still more numerous. All possible precautions had been taken to strengthen the sea defences; and the array of forts, ramparts, ships of the line, fire-ships, gun-boats, and floating batteries, was such as would have deterred any other assailant but the hero of the Nile. Six line-of-battle ships, and eleven floating batteries, besides a great number of smaller vessels, were moored in an external line to protect the entrance to the harbour, flanked on either side by two islands, called the Crowns, on the smaller of which fifty-six, while on the larger, sixty-eight heavy cannon were mounted. To support these, four other sail of the line were moored within across the harbour mouth; and a fort, mounting thirtysix heavy cannon, had been constructed in a shoal, supported on piles. The fire of these formidable works crossed with that of the batteries on the island of Amack and the citadel of Copenhagen; it seemed hardly possible that any ships could endure, for a length of time, so heavy and concentric a discharge. But tremendous as these dangers appeared, they were neither the only nor the greatest with which the British fleet had to contend. The channel by which alone the harbour could be approached, was little known, and extremely intricate; all the buoys had been removed, and the sea on either side abounded with shoals and sand-banks, on which, if any of the vessels grounded, they would instantly be torn to pieces by the fire from the Danish batteries. The Danes considered this obstacle insurmountable, deeming the narrow and winding channel impracticable for a large fleet in such circumstances. Nelson was fully aware of the difficulty of the attempt; and a day and a night were occupied by the boats of the fleet in making the necessary soundings, and laying down new buoys in lieu of those which had been taken away. He himself personally assisted in the whole of this laborious and important duty, taking no rest night or day till it was accomplished. "It had worn him down," he said, "and was infinitely more grievous than any resistance he could experience from the enemy (1)."

No sooner were the soundings completed than Nelson, in a council of war, suggested the plan of operations, which was, to approach from the south and make the attack on the right flank of the enemy. The approach of the Danish exterior line was covered by a large shoal, called the Middle Ground, exactly in front of the harbour, at about three quarters of a mile distant, which extended along the whole sea front of the town. As this sand bank was impassable for ships of any magnitude, he proposed to follow what is called the King's channel, lying between it and the town, and thus interpose, as at Aboukir, between the Danish line and the entrance of the harbour. On the morning of the 1st April the whole fleet anchored within two leagues of the town, off the north-west end of the Middle Ground, and Nelson, having completed his last examination, hoisted the signal to weigh anchor. It was received with a loud shout from his whole division of the fleet, which consisted of twelve sail of the line, besides some smaller vessels. The remainder, under Sir Hyde Parker, were to menace the Crown batteries on the other side, threaten the four ships of the line at the entrance of the harbour, and lend their aid to such of the attacking squadron as might come disabled out of action. The small craft, headed by Captain Riou, led the way, most accurately threading their dangerous and winding course between the island of Saltholm and the Middle Ground; the whole squadron followed with a fair wind, coasting along the outer edge of the shoal, doubled its farther extremity, and cast made early in the evening, and the seamen passed the night in the evening and the seamen passed the night in the evening and the seamen passed the night in miles ff, expectation of the dawn which was to usher in the eventful had bee (4).

⁽¹⁾ Southey, ii. 112, 113. Ann. Reg. 1801, 112, 113. Dum. vi, 186, 187. Jom. xiv, 256, 257.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [CHAP. XXXIII.

anxiou was a night of anxiety and trepidation, but not of unmanly alarm, in morrowagen. The citizens saw evidently that the attack would be made on

This owing day, and, amidst the tears of their mothers and children, Copenb' repaired to their appointed stations. Few cyclids were closed, save the follulose about to combat, in all its peopled quarters, so strongly was the bravelyly of the occasion, and the coming dangers to all they held dear, imamong ion the minds of the citizens. Nelson sat down to supper with a large solemnt his officers. He was, as he was ever wont to be on the eve of a battle, and he? and the enemy. He approached so near as to sound round their night in to come on board, and when they had received their final instructions announce the signal for action (2). captair pilots who were to conduct the fleet soon showed by their indecision captair, pulgts who were to conduct the fleet soon showed by their indecision he may the absence of the buoys to which they had been accustomed to look,

The Irdly knew what course to follow; and Nelson experienced the utmost that, my mind from their failure, as the wind was farr, and there was not a they hat to lose. At length the master of the Bellona declared he was preagony so lead the floet, and put himself at its head accordingly. Captain momen in the Edgar led the line-of-battle ships. The Agamemnon was next pared by, but, in attempting to weather the shoal, she struck aground, and Murra's immovable, at the time her services were most required. The Belin orded Russell soon after grounded also, but in a situation which enabled becam lona a

them
want thereby prevented a heavy loss on board the Defiance and Monarch, action ero exposed to their fire without the possibility of making any returnlave who was the state of the state of whiclot obey the signal, enemin within these ill-fa did nyed the whole fleet i passeral's track, and thereby keeping in deep water, arrived opposite to their passejal's track, and thereby keeping in deep water, arrived opposite to men he sai ill kouthey, il. 113, 115. Ann. Reg. 1801, 112. (2) Southey, il. 117, 119. Ann. Reg. 1801, 112. 1, 187. Jom. 217. 257, 258, James 11. 99, James 11. 99, 100.

appointed stations, anchored by the stern, and presented their broadsides, at the distance of half a cable's length from the Danes (1).

The action began at five minutes past ten, and was general by Copeneleven. Nine only of the line-of-battle ships could reach the station allotted to them; only one of the gun-brigs could stem the current so as to get into action; and only two of the bomb-vessels were enabled to take up their appointed position on the Middle Ground. Captain Riou, with his squadron of frigates, undertook the perilous task of fronting the Crown batteries-a duty to which the three standard ships of the line would have been hardly adequate-and in the discharge of which that gallant and lamented officer lost his life. Nelson's agitation was extreme when, at the commencement of the action, he found himself deprived of three of his best ships of the line; but no sooner had he reached the scene of danger, where his squadron was assailed with the fire of above a thousand guns, than his countenance brightened, and he became animated and joyous. The cannonade soon became tremendous; above two thousand pieces of cannon on the two sides poured forth death within a space not exceeding a mile and a half in breadth; from the city on the one side, and the remainder of the squadron, under Sir Hyde, on the other, the hostile fleets seem wrapped in one dazzling conflagration. For three hours the fire continued without any appearance of diminution on either side; and Sir Hyde, seeing three ships aground under the iron tempest of the Crown batteries, and being unable, from the wind and current, to render any assistance, made the signal of recall; generously supposing that, if Nelson was in a situation to continue the contest, he would disobey the order; but that if he was not, his reputation would be saved by the signal for retreat having been made by his superior officer (2).

In the midst of this terrific cannonade Nelson was rapidly walking the quarter deck. A shot through the mainmast scattered splinters around; he observed to one of his officers with a smile, "This is warm work; and this day may be the last to any of us in a moment: but mark me, I would not be elsewhere for thousands." About this time the signal-lieutenant called out that the signal for discontinuing the action had been thrown out by the commander-in-chief, and asked if he should repeat it. "No," he replied; "acknowledge it." He then continued walking about in great emotion; and meeting Captain Foley, said, "What think you, Foley, the admiral has hung out No. 59 (5). You know I have only one eye; I have a right to be blind sometimes:" and then putting the glass to his blind eye, he exclaimed, "I really don't see the signal. Keep mine for closer battle still flying. That's the way I answer such signals. Nail mine to the mast." Admiral Graves and the other ships, looking only to Nelson, continued the combat with unabated vigour; but the order to retire was seen in time to save Riou's little squadron, though not to preserve its gallant commander. "What will Nelson think of us," was that brave man's mournful exclamation, as with a heavy heart he gave orders to draw off. His clerk was soon after killed by his side, and several marines swept away, by a discharge from the Crown batteries. "Come then, my boys, let us all die together," said Riou; and just as the words were uttered, he was cut in two by a chain-shot (4).

Southey, ii. 119, 123. Ann. Reg. 1801, 112.
 Dum. vi. 189. James, iii. 101.
 Southey, ii. 125. Ann. Reg. 1801, 112. Dum.
 vi. 189, 190. Jem. xiv. 259. James. iii. 101, 101.
 "The fire," he said, " is too hot for Nelson to oppose; a reticat must be made. I am aware of the consequences to my own personal reputation, but it would be cowardly in me to leave Nelson to hear the whole shame of the failure, if shame it should be deemed."-See Soctatr, ii. 125.

⁽³⁾ The signal for discontinuing action.
(1) Southey, ii. 126, 129. Jom. xiv. 259. Ann.
Reg. 1801, 112. James, iii. 104, 107.
It is needless to say from whom the chief inci-

But it was not on the English side alone that heroic deeds were performed; the Danes in that trying hour sustained the ancient both side reputation of the conquerors of the north. From the prince royal, who, placed on one of the principal batteries, was the witness of the glorious resistance of his subjects, to the humblest citizen, one heroic mind and purpose seemed to animate the whole population. As fast as the crews of the guard-ships were moved down by the English fire, fresh bands of undaunted citizens crowded on board, and, unappalled by the dreadful spectacle, calmly took their station on decks choked by the dying and flooded with blood. Captain Lassen, in the Provensten, continued to fight till he had only two pieces standing on their carriages, and a few men to work them; he then spiked these guns, and throwing himself into the sea, swam at the head of his brave followers towards the isle of Amack. Captain Thura, in the Indosforetten, fell early in the action, her colours were shot away; and a boat was despatched to the prince royal to inform him of her situation, "Gentlemen," said he, "Thura is killed, which of you will take the command?"-" I will," exclaimed Schroedersee, a captain who had recently resigned on account of extreme ill health, and instantly hastened on board. No sooner had he arrived on the deck than he was struck on the breast by a ball and perished; a lieutenant, who had accompanied him, then took the command, and fought the ship to the last extremity. The Dannebrog sustained for two hours with great constancy the terrible fire of Nelson's ship, at length, after two successive captains and three-fourths of the crew had been swept away, she took fire, and the gallant survivors precipitating themselves into the sea, left the vessel to its fate, which soon after blew up with a tremendous explosion (1). But all these efforts, how heroic soever, were of no avail, the rapidity and precision of the British fire were irresistible, at one o'clock the cannonade of the Danish fleet began to slacken, loud cheers from the English sailors announced every successive vessel which struck, and before two the whole front line, consisting of six sail of the line and eleven huge floating batteries, was all either taken, sunk, burnt, or destroyed (2).

In this desperate battle the loss on board the British fleet was very severe, amounting to no less than 1200, a greater proportion to the number of seamen engaged than in any other general action during the whole war. On board the Monarch, there were 210 killed and wounded; she had to support the united fire of the Holstein and Zealand, besides being raked by the Crown battery (5). But the situation of the crews of the Danish vessels was still more deplorable. Their loss in killed and wounded had been above double that of the British, including the prisoners, it amounted to 6000, and the line had completely ceased firing, but the shot from the Crown batteries and the isle of Amack still continued to fall upon both fleets, doing as much injury to their friends as enemies; while the English boats sent to take posses-

dents in the actions of Nel on are taken Mr South ey a incomparable life is so deservedly popular that its descript o is have become almost as firmly rooted in the public memory as the events they descr be, and deviation from the one is as unpardonable as fro n the other aro a the other (4) The gallout Welmone a stripling of seventeen stationed b until on a stuall raft extrying any quint with it reit from tene, right under the howes of Nelmon as hip, and though severely galled by the markety of the first part of the first part of the cloud of the hermot couldn't. Nelmon embraced hum at the repart which followed un the radice ashores and wall to the which followed in the palace ashore; and said to the crown prince he si o ild make him an admiral "If, my lord replied il e prince, "I were to make all my brave olicers admirals, I should are no explains or licultinants in my service "—Aniel Chroni cle, x1. 308

(2) Join xiv 259 260 Southey il 130 131. Dunt 11 190 Ann Reg 1801, 112 Ja nes, 11 105,

(3) A singular piece of cool essoccurred on board this vessel. A four and twenty pounder from the Crown battery struck the keithe and dail of the peas and pork about the sauors pieced up the fragments and also while they were working the guns,--- Socraer, 11, 130.

sion of the prizes were fired on by the Danish batteries, and were unable to extricate them from destruction. In this extremity, Nelson retired into the stern gallery, and wrote to the crown prince in these terms: "Lord Nelson has been commanded to spare Denmark when she no longer resists. proposal for an ar-mistice. The line of defence which covered her shores has struck to the British flag; but if the firing is continued on the part of Denmark, he must set fire to all the prizes he has taken, without having the power of saving the men who have so nobly defended them. The brave Danes are the brothers, and should never be the enemies, of the English." A wafer was brought him; he ordered a candle from the cockpit, and scaled the letter deliberately with wax. "This is no time," said he, "to appear hurried and informal." At the same time the Ramillies and Defence, from Sir Hyde's squadron, worked up near enough to silence the remainder of the Danish line to the eastward of the Trekroner battery; but that tremendous bulwark was comparatively uninjured, and to the close of the action continued to exert with unabated vigour its giant strength (1).

In half an hour the flag of fruce returned; the Crown batteries ceased to fire: and the action closed after four hours' continuance. The Crown prince enquired what was the English admiral's motive for proposing a suspension of hostilities. Lord Nelson replied-" Lord Nelson's object in sending the flag of truce was humanity; he therefore consents that hostilities shall cease, and that the wounded Danes may be taken ashore. And Lord Nelson will take his prisoners out of the vessels, and burn or carry off the prizes as he shall think fit. Lord Nelson will consider this the greatest victory he has ever gained, if it shall be the means of re-establishing a good understanding between his own Sovereign and the King of Denmark." The Danish prince made a reply, which was forwarded to the commander-in-chief; and Nelson, skilfully availing himself of the breathing time thus afforded, made the signal for the squadron to weigh anchor in succession. The Monarch led the way, and touched in rounding the shoal, but was got off by being taken in tow by two other ships; but Nelson's own ship, the Elephant, and the Defiance, grounded about a mile from the Crown batteries, and remained fast, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of their wearied crews. With these two exceptions, however, the whole fleet got clear off from the perilous shoals, and rejoined Sir Hyde's squadron in the middle of the straits; a fact which demonstrates that, though some of the British ships might have been lost if the action had continued, it could have made no difference on the ultimate result after the Danish line of defence had been destroyed (2).

The scene which now presented itself was heart-rending in the highest degree. The sky, heretofore so brilliant, became suddenly the Danes after the battle. The sky, heretofore so brilliant, became suddenly overcast; white flags were flying from the mast-heads of the Danes; guns of distress were occasionally discharged from those scenes of woe; while the burning vessels which had floated to a distance threw an awful and lurid light over the melancholy scene (3). The English boats, with generous but not undeserved humanity, covered the sea, rendering all the assistance in their power to the Danes who had escaped from the flaming wrecks; and the wounded men, as fast as the ships could be evacuated, were

⁽¹⁾ Southey, ii. 135, 137. Ann. Reg. 1801. 113. Jom. xiv. 260. Dum. vi. 191, 192. James, iii. 109,

⁽²⁾ Ann. Reg. 1801, 113. Southey, ii. 140, 141. Jou. xiv. 261. James, iii. 115.

⁽³⁾ Again, again, again, Aud the havor did not slack,

Till a feeble cheer the Dane
To our cheering sent us back:
Their shots along the deep slowly boom inthe cear'd and all is wall,
As they strike the shattered sail,
Or, in conflagration pale,
Light the gloom.

sermon was delivered, and sent ashore; but great numbers perished, for such had been the unprepared ardour of the enemy that hardly any surgeons were provided to stanch the wounds of the numerous victims to patroute duty. At daybreak on the following morning, the Elephant, to the infinite joy of Nelson, was got afloat; and the boats of the fleet being all manned, the prizes were brought away, including the Zealand of seventy-four guns, from under the cannon of the redoubted Trekroner battery. Thus terminated this murderous battle, one

Next day was 600d Friday, but all distinctions were longouted in the capital of Denmark. Every house was filled with mourners, the streets were occupied with the weeping crowds which bands.

defended. At more and the more and the manufacture washed slowly up from the quay through the crowded and agitated streets. The behaviour of the people was such as became a gallant nation, depressed, but not subdued by misfortune. "They did not," says the Danish chromicler, "either disgrace themselves by acclamations, nor degrade themselves by murmurs, the admiral was received as one brave enemy over should receive another, he was received with respect." During the repast which followed, the particulars of the convention, which ultimately took place, were arranged. Nelson told the prince the French fought bravely, but they could not have stood for one hour the fight which the Danes had supported for four. Melancholy tributes were paid by the people of Copenhagen to the brave men who had fallen in the conflict, a public mausoleum was creeted on the spot where the slain had been interred, a monument rused in the principal church, surmounted by the Danish colours, young with the widows or the ore were in that state of mingled grief and exultation, when the bitterness of individual less is almost forgotten in the sympathy of general distress, or the pride of heroic achievement (2)

Arm use Of all these vessels taken, the Holstein, of sixty-four guns, was agreed on a service alone brought to Eng , service allow by the fire.

hagen. The negotiation which for the free that the renew hostilities that very might unless the armistice was concluded. The Danes candidly stated their fears of Russia; and the English admiral avowed, that his object in wishing to make the armistice as long as possible, was, that he might have time to go to Cronstadt before returning to Copenhagen. At length it was agreed that it should last for fourteen weeks, and not be broken without a formight's previous notice; that the armed ships of Denmark should remain, during its continuance, in static goo, that the principles of the armed neutrality the previous members of the same decutality.

⁽¹⁾ Southey, 11 143 147. Ann Reg 1801, 113 (3) Ann Reg 1801, 114 Southey, 11 119, 120 (2) Ann Reg 1801, 114 Southey, 11 146, 147 Dum v1. 193, 194

(1) Pr new Mecherchi wrote a feiter to Paul in the shift og court er came back w thout the elicit

chief offices of state, and the Czar was compelled to take counsel from those sued on his accession to the throne. The conspirators nere invested with the recolution speedily appeared in the measures which the young Emperor pur-The influence of the causes which had occasioned this riolent and frightful occasionally capable of heroic actions (5) and capricious, but not without a large intermixture of generous feeling, and sensiply augmented the public improvement. He was rehement, inconstant, cessor the prodigalities even contributed to the erreulation of wealth, and foundation of the rapid strides which it made under his more fortunate sucimprovements in the administration of the army were immense, and laid the tance in a government partaking so largely of the Oriental character. His blished the hereditary succession to the crown, a matter of infinite imporimportant ameliorations which he effected in his country He first estathe shade the good qualities which at an earlier period he displayed, and the British seamen, and general extravagance of demeanour, must not throw into ton stds the close of his teign, his fickleness of conduct, tyrannical usage of The evident symptoms of meanity which this ill-fated monarch evinced for Alexander to assume the reins of government (4). pensably required a change of policy, and that nothing now remained but ment, but Palilen, calm and collected, represented that the empire indisdespair of the empress and the Grand Duke Constantine was equally vehethe catastrophe which had prepared the way for his ascent to the throne The of grief, and broke out into sincere and passionate exclamations of sorron at plainly the melancholy tale, and the joung prince tore his hair in an agony was over, whether they had saved his father's life. Pablen's silence told too dukes nere in the room belon. Alexander eagerly inquired, the moment it narch, and he was strangled after a desperate resistance (5) The two Grand struggle an officer's sash was presed round the neck of the unhappy mo-Emperor his abdication to sign Paul refused A contest arose, and in the nas soon discovered, and dragged from his retreat. They presented to the ing them narm, observed that the Emperor could not be far off, and be never lost his presence of mind, put his hand on the bed-clothes, and feelneakness, or I will put you all to death " At the same time Pahlen, who said some of the conspirators "That he has not," return Benngsen " No ing the noise, had got up, and hid himself in a press " He has escaped," the whole party entered, and found the royal apartments empty Paul, hearthe door A hussar, who refused admission, was cut down on the spot, and to the imperial chambers, presented himself with the other conspirators at Subof, whose situation and credit in the palace gave him access at all times morron (2) He retired to bed at twelve At two in the morning Prince he was threatened He put it in his pocket, saying he nould read it on the On the evening before his death, Paul received a note, when at On the evening before his death, Paul received a note, when at son, only stelded on condition that his father's life should be spared (1) give their consent to the conspiracy, and Alexander in particular, the eldest whose hands had recently been imbrued in his faller's blood, in subsequent experience convinced him of the extreme daper of prematurely was called on to act as the pacificator of the world after the fall of Paris; but and philanthropic, moulded by the precepts of La Harpe, had strongly imbued his mind with liberal principles, which shone forth in full lustre when he the French invasion and the Congress of Vienna, a solidity of judgment equal-led only by the strength of his resolution. A disposition naturally generous great determinations, and evinced in the most trying circumstances, during from the ease and occasional levity of his manner, he was early formed to affairs of nations. Misunderstood by those who formed their opinion only Deart secured the admiration of all whose talents fitted them to judge of the ful princes; while the qualities of his understanding and the feelings of his sway over the multitude which ever belongs to physical advantages in youth-A majestic figure, a denevolent expression of countentince, gave him that array which ambition had ever marshalled against the Herties of mankind. invincible bands which, in the day of trial, hurled back the most terrible sel, like his great predecessor, from misfortune, and prepared in silence those he fulfilled his destiny.—Repeatedly defeated, never subdued, he took counfortitude which arise in the earlier ages of social existence. Well and nobly the strength of continental power, with the dauntless resolution and enduring meet the condensed military force of a revolution, which had beat down all and enthusiasm of the desert, the superiority of advance d information, and lead in the great struggle for European freedom; to compaty with the energy between ancient civilisation and barbaric vigour, he was called to take the head of the most powerful and rising empire in existence, stationed midway place in the theatre of the world than the Emperor Alexander. Placed at the called to higher destinies, or more worthily filled an important Perhaps no sovereign since the days of the Antonines ever was which was received with equal shouts of joy in London as St.-Petersburg (2). desire to re-establish the amicable relations of the two empires; a declaration his own hand to the King of England, expressing in the warmest terms his tors of Russian produce. The young Emperor shortly after wrole a letter with pulation of the British isles, and hardly less material to the gorged proprie-, -oq gnidzinist oft ob som or and importance to the famishing pobeen severally taken. At the same time all prohibitions against the export of carefully conducted, at the public expense, to the ports from which they had sequestration, and marched into the interior, should be set at liberty, and British sailors and captains, who had been taken from the ships laid under-Catherine; and one of the first acts of his reign was to give orders that the according to the maxims and system of his afigust grandmother, eith Eng. throne, issued a proclamation declaring his resolution to govern •เนงววช แช approach to The new Emperor, on the day succeeding his elevation to the of Alexan-der, and simmediate every thing connected with the government of the empire (1).

shortly after that event, teathbed, and publicly expresenting him on his 'Hospital, which was under presenting him on his 'Hospital, which was under posed at the Foundling protigious crowds having her peculiar charge the special count Public became been attracted by the sirgues, and prevailed on altermed at the consequence, and prevailed on altermed at the consequence mother to, have it removed. Mexander to request his to be stacken, "thy son," and the princess was not loose between Publien and said she, "you must chimed, and the minister was soon after dismissed from his situations.—D'Abe, vi. 342.

vi, 342.

young Emperor walked, preceded by the assassing of his grandlather, followed by those of his father, and surrounded by his own."—" There," said Found and surrounded by his open."—" Lie woman who speaks Tacitus."—See Bign. occasion of a public ceremony at which the Emperor was present soon after his accession—" The (1) A lady of rank and wit wrote to Fouche, on influence through life over her son, openly and uni-formly avoyed her horror at Paul's murder; and (2) Jom. xiv. 268, 269, Ann. Reg. 1801, 116.

(2) Jom. xiv. 268, 269, Ann. Reg. 1801, 116.
The empress-mother, a woman of heroic spirit and moble character, and who possessed the greatest and inoble character, and who possessed the greatest and grea corn were removed; a measure of no small importance to the famishing population of the British isles, and hardly less material to the gorged proprietors of Russian produce. The young Emperor shortly after wrote a letter with whose hands had recently been imbrued in his father's blood, in Accession of Alexanevery thing connected with the government of the empire (4). der, and immediate The new Emperor, on the day succeeding his elevation to the approach to an accomthrone, issued a proclamation declaring his resolution to govern modation with Engaccording to the maxims and system of his august grandmother. land. Catherine; and one of the first acts of his reign was to give orders that the British sailors and captains, who had been taken from the ships laid under sequestration, and marched into the interior, should be set at liberty, and carefully conducted, at the public expense, to the ports from which they had been severally taken. At the same time all prohibitions against the export of his own hand to the King of England, expressing in the warmest terms his desire to re-establish the amicable relations of the two empires; a declaration which was received with equal shouts of joy in London as St.-Petersburg (2). Perhaps no sovereign since the days of the Antonines ever was called to higher destinies, or more worthily filled an important place in the theatre of the world than the Emperor Alexander. Placed at the head of the most powerful and rising empire in existence, stationed midway between ancient civilisation and barbaric vigour, he was called to take the lead in the great struggle for European freedom; to combat, with the energy and enthusiasm of the desert, the superiority of advanced information, and meet the condensed military force of a revolution, which had beat down all the strength of continental power, with the dauntless resolution and enduring fortitude which arise in the earlier ages of social existence. Well and nobly he fulfilled his destiny.-Repeatedly defeated, never subdued, he took counsel, like his great predecessor, from misfortune, and prepared in silence those invincible bands which, in the day of trial, hurled back the most terrible array which ambition had ever marshalled against the liberties of mankind. A majestic figure, a benevolent expression of countenance, gave him that sway over the multitude which ever belongs to physical advantages in youthful princes; while the qualities of his understanding and the feelings of his heart secured the admiration of all whose talents fitted them to judge of the affairs of nations. Misunderstood by those who formed their opinion only from the ease and occasional levity of his manner, he was early formed to great determinations, and evinced in the most trying circumstances, during the French invasion and the Congress of Vienna, a solidity of judgment equalled only by the strength of his resolution. A disposition naturally generous and philanthropic, moulded by the precepts of La Harpe, had strongly imbued his mind with liberal principles, which shone forth in full lustre when he was called on to act as the pacificator of the world after the fall of Paris; but subsequent experience convinced him of the extreme danger of prematurely shortly after that event, had a picture painted, representing him on his deathbed, and publicly exposed at the Foundling Hospital, which was under her peculiar charge Prodigious crowds having been attracted by the sight, Count Pahlen became alarmed at the consequences, and prevailed on Alexander to request his mother to have it removed. But the princess was not to be shaken. "My son," said she, "you must choose between Pahlen and me." The painting remained, and the minister was soon after dismissed from his situations,—D'Ara, vi. 342.

⁽¹⁾ A lady of rank and wit wrote to Fouché, on occasion of a public ceremony at which the Emperor was present soon after his accession—"The young Emperor walked, preceded by the assassins of his grandfather, fellowed by those of his father, and surrounded by his own."—"There," said Fouche," is a woman who speaks Tacitus."—See Bign. i. 445 Hard, vii. 103.

⁽²⁾ Jon. xiv. 268, 269. Ann. Reg. 1801, 116.
The empress-mother, a woman of heroic spirit and nobic character, and who possessed the greatest influence through life over her son, openly and uniformly avowed her horror at Paul's murder; and transplanting the institutions of one country into another in a different stage of civilisation; and his latter years were chiefly directed to objects of practical improvement(1), and the preparation of his subjects, by the extension of knowledge and the himness of government, for those privileges which, if suddenly conferred, would have involved in equal ruin his empire and himself.

The first measures of his administration were eminently calculated to win that popularity which, notwithstanding the proverbal lated to win that popularity which, notwithstanding the proverbal because of the multitude, never afterwards forsook him. By an ukase, published on the 14th April, he restored to the nobility their privileges, and prerogatives, such as they had been in the time of the Empress Catherine, re-established the rights of municipalities, abolished secret proceedings in criminal cases, awarded a general amnesty, and stopped all the state proceedings which had been commenced. Indulgences were at the same time granted to the clergy, and measures taken to re-open those vents for the rude produce of the state, the closing of which had occasioned so much alarm. Independent of his letter to the king of England, the Emperor wrote to Sir Hide Parker, expressing an amnows wish to close with the amicable propositions made by the British Government to his predecessor, provided it port it by a hostile demonstration, made sail with all his squadron to Carlscrona, where, in answer to a message inquiring whether the Swedish Government was willing to be included in the armistice concluded with Denmark, but received an answer that they "could not listen to separate proposals, but would close with any equitable offers made by Great Britain to the united April 12 morthern nowers." This reply, coupled with the well-known pacific for Compties.

concluc

tion with the whole battle states, it includes the proposed instantly to sail for kered, where a large portion of the Russian flect lay in an open bay, exposed to his attacks, and unable from the ice to make their escape. But Sir Hyde, who trusted that the death:

"I of all the differences, miss!

anchor, and remained till the bith May, when he was technically an account of the command in chief to sooner was he the unfettered master of his own actions, than he set sail for the gulf of Finland. But when he arrived there he found that in the interval the enemy had escaped, they had cut through the ice in the mole, say feet the search the chief of the control of the same that the control of the control o

Emperor expressed great uncasiness at the presence of the English squadron, and it was evident that the negotiation would proceed more favourably if this cause of irritation was removed, Nelson stood out to sea, and proceeded down the Baltic, leaving only a brig to bring off the provisions which had been contracted for. This judicious and conciliatory conduct was met with a corresponding disposition on the part of Russia. When at anchor off Rostock, he received an answer to his letter to the Emperor, couched in the most flattering terms, and containing the important intelligence, that the British vessels and crews which had been detained were ordered to be liberated. On his return to Copenhagen, he found that the conduct of Denmark during his absence had been actuated by very different principles; the most hostile preparations had been going forward, in defiance of the treaty, and ample grounds existed, if the English Covernment had been inclined, to renew hostilities, and utterly destroy the Danish naval power. But the death of Paul had dissolved the confederacy; conciliatory measures were now the most prudent course which could be adopted, and Nelson, wisely dissembling his resentment, proceeded to England to receive the thanks of a grateful nation, which his valour and skill had brought victorious out of a state of unprecedented danger (1).

The British Cabinet immediately sent Lord St.-Helens to St.-Pe-Russia, and tersburg; and soon after his arrival at that capital, he signed a abandonment of the treaty as glorious to England as it was confirmatory of the corprinciples rectness of the view she had taken of the law of nations in this great question. By this convention it was provided, "That the right of searching merchant-ships belonging to the subjects of one of the contracting powers, and navigating under a ship-of-war of the same power, shall only be exercised by ships-of-war of the belligerent party, and shall never extend to the fitters out of privateers or other vessels which do not belong to the imperial or royal fleet of their majesties, but which their subjects shall have fitted out for war; that the effects on board neutral ships shall be free, with the exception of contraband of war and of enemy's property; and it is agreed not to comprise in the number of the latter the merchandise of the produce, growth, or manufacture of the countries at war, which should have been acquired by the subjects of the neutral power, and should be transported for their account." And the contraband articles between the two powers were declared to be the same as those specified in the treaty 10th February 1797; viz. "cannons, mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, balls, bullets, firelocks, flints, matches, sulphur, helmets, pikes, swords, sword-belts, pouches, saddles and bridles, excepting such quantity of the said articles as may be necessary for the defence of the ship and crew." And "that, in order to determine what shall be deemed a blockaded port; that denomination only is given to such a one where there is, by the disposition of the power which attacks it, with ships stationary or sufficiently near, an evident danger in entering (2)." By this treaty the right of search was placed upon its true footing; it was divested of the circumstances most likely to occasion irritation in neutral vessels, and not stipulated in favour of either party as a new right, but merely recognised as a privilege already existing, necessarily inherent by the practice of maritime states in every belligerent power, and subjected to such restraints as the enlarged experience of mankind had proved to be expedient.

. .

Napoléon has observed upon this agreement, "Europe beheld with astonishment this ignominious treaty signed by Russia, and which, by consequence, Denmark and Sweden were compelled to adopt It was equivalent to an admission of the sovereignty of the seas in the British Parliament, and the slavery of all other states. This treaty was such that Lugland could have desired nothing more, and a power of the third order would have been ashamed to have signed it " A stronger panegyric could not have been pronounced on this memorable convention, or a more valuable enlogium on the firmness of the Cabinet and the intrepidity of the seamen. by whom these important advantages had been secured. The first consulearly despatched Duroc to St -Petersburg to endeavour to counterbalance the influence of Great Britain, and bring Alexander back to the footsteps of his predecessor, but though he received the most flattering reception, he could effect nothing against the ascendant of Aelson, and the treaty was signed, to the universal loy of both nations (1)

Sweden and Denmark were not expressly included in the conven-Dissolve for of the 17th June, but they were compelled to follow the example of Russia Unable of themselves to contend with the naval nower of England, the anticipated loss of all their colonies, and the certainty of being deprived of their whole commerce, if they continued the contest, ultimately overcame the influence of France, and the recollection of their recent wounds at Copenhagen On the 20th May, a convention was agreed to by the Danish Covernment, in virtue of which the city of Hamburgh was, three days afterwards, evacuated by the Danish troops, and the free navigation of the Elbe restored, and on the 19th, the embargo was raised both in Russia, Sweden, and Denmark. These measures were immediately met by corresponding steps on the part of the British Government, the embargo on all the ships of the Baltic powers in the harbours of Great Britain was raised, and the expense both of putting it on and taking it off, so far as Danish vessels were concerned, defrayed by the English treasury Prussia had been unwillingly drawn into the struggle, and took the first opportunity of escaping from its effects. Under the mediation of Russia, an arrangement was concluded, by which the Prussian troops were to evacuate Hanover, and restore the free navigation of the Weser (2) of the seas, it was really directed against the grandeur and prosperity of Great Britain, breathing only the sentiments of freedom and justice, it was, in truth, intended to divide among the coalesced states the power and the ascendency of a more fortunate rival. The rapidity with which this powerful alliance was broken up by England, at the conclusion of a long and burdensome war, and when her people were labouring under the combined pressure of severe want and diminished employment, is one of the most remarkable features of this memorable contest, and, perhaps more than any other, characteristic of the vast ascendency, moral as well as political, which she has acquired among the other nations in the world. It is in vain to say, the dissolution of the confederacy was owing to the death of Paul, the revolution at St -Petersburg was itself the result of the influence of Great Britain, of that vast commerce, which has made her intercourse essential to the very existence of the most haughty continental states; and that moral sway, which ranges under her banners the most powerful and important classes of distant nations. The conduct of the English Government and people, during this trying crisis, was a model of firmness and moderation, and was deseryedly crowned by one of the most glorious triumphs recorded in their history. Disdaining to submit to the menaces even of combined Europe, they boldly fronted the danger; anticipated by the rapidity of their movements the iunction of their adversaries, paralysed by the thunder of their arms the first of their opponents, and at the same time holding out the olive branch. succeeded in detaching the greatest power from the confederacy, and ultimately dissolving it, without the abandonment of one principle for which the war had been undertaken. The convention of 17th June fixed the maritime question upon its true basis; it arrogated no peculiar privilege to Great Britain, subjected to no exclusive humiliation the neutral states, but prescribing one equal rule for all belligerent powers, and imposing one equal obligation upon all neutrals, settled the right of search and blockade upon that equitable footing, which, alike obligatory upon England and inferior nations, must ever remain the law of the seas, while ambition and revenge continue to desolate the world.

P Bee ons Thus w formed. even s

English maritime p

CHAPTER XXXIV

EXPEDITION TO ECTPT-CONCLUSION OF THE WAR.

ALGUST, 1799-OCTOBER, 1881.

ARGUMENT.

State of the Egyptian army when left by Napoléon-Desponding letter of Kléber to the Directory-It falls into the hands of the English, who forward it to Napoléon-Mourad Bey issues from the Desert, and is defeated-Advance of the Turkish force- Defeat of a detachment at the mouth of the Nile-Convention of El-Arish-The British Government had previously prohibited such a convention-Hostilities are in consequence resumed-Eaule of Heliopolis-Total defeat of the Turks-Desperate situation of the garrison at Cairo-Storm and massacre at Poulak-Cairo is retaken-Defeat of the Turks in every quarter-Improved tack alone-Arrival of the expedition on the coast of Egypt-Landing of the troops-Severe action on the S nd-hills, and defeat of the French there-Cautious measures of the Enghish general - Bloody encounter with the French advanced guard-Description of the ground now taken up by the British Army-Position of the French-Interesting recollections connected with the spot-Battle of Alexandria - Wound and death of Sir Raigh Abercromby -Immense moral effects of this victory , but its first results are not equally decisive-Surrender of Damietta-Divisions break out among the French generals-Inderisive measures of Menou-General Hutchison assumes the command of the English army, and advances towards Cairo-Capture of Ramanich-General Belliard is repulsed near Cairo-Which is invested-Advance of Sir David Baird's division from the Red Sea-Their march from Cossier to Thebes across the Desert-General Hutchison moves against Menou at Alexandria-Progress of the Siege-Surrender of Menou Change in the Government of Egypt-Which falls into the hands of the Turks-Extravagant rejoicings in Constantinople and London at these events-Great maritime exertions of Napoléon to preserve Egypt-Naval action in the bay of Algestraz-The English are worsted-Second battle of Algestraz-Terrible catastrophe of the Snamsh vessels, and defeat of the French-Attack of Napoléon on Portugal-Treaty with Spain for this purpose-The Portuguese apply to the English for aid-But can make no resistance to France-Peace concluded, which the hirst Consul refuses to ratify-A French army invades Portugal-Peace purchased by enormous pecuniary spoliation-Nanoleon offers Hanover to Prussia-which declines the proposal-Preparations for the clusion of the contest.

State of tie Egyp t an army

WHEN Napol(on quitted the Egyptian shores, and the career of Asiane glory, to follow his fortunes on the theatre of Europe, he left Kléber in the command of the army, and addressed to him a long letter, containing minute directions for the regulation of his conduct in all possible emergencies which might occur. As it was evident that the victory of the Nile had completely cut off all chance of maintaining a regular intercourse with France, and it was therefore more than probable that the Egyptian army would be compelled to capitulate, he distinctly authorized his successor to conclude a convention for the evacuation of Egypt, if he received no succours or assistance from France during the following year, and the deaths by the plague should amount to above fifteen hundred persons. Immediately after being invested with the command, Kléber wrote a letter to the Directory, in which he gave the most desponding view of the situation of the army; asserted that it was reduced to half its former amount; was destitute of every thing, and in the lowest state of depression; that the manufactories of powder and arms had totally failed; that no resources existed to replace the stores which had been expended; that General Bonaparte, so far from leaving any money behind him to maintain the troops, had bequeathed to them only a debt of 12,000,000 of francs (L.480,000), being more than a year's revenue of the province; that the soldiers were 4,000,000 (L.160,000) in arrear of their pay; that the Mamelukes were dispersed, not destroyed; and that the Grand Vizier and Djezzar Pacha had arrived at Acre at the head of 50,000 men. He concluded in these terms: "Such ing letter of arc, citizen directors, the circumstances under which General Bo-Kicher to the Direcnaparte has laid upon me the enormous burden of the Army of the tory. East. He saw the fatal crisis was approaching; your orders doubtless prevented him from attempting to surmount it. That the crisis was at hand is attested equally by his letters, his instructions, his negotiations. It is notorious to all the world, and unhappily as well known to our enemies as to the French in Egypt. In these circumstances, I think the best thing I can do is to continue the negotiations commenced by Bonaparte, even if it should lead to no other result than to gain time. I have annexed the letter I have written to the Grand Vizier, sending him at the same time the duplicate of that of Bonaparte (1)."

(1) Napolcon and Kleber's letters, in Dum. iv. 110, 125.

Aug. 17, 1799. The letter which Napolcon had addressed to the Grand Vizier previous to his de-parture from the Eist, is one of the most character-istic of all his compositions. "Alast" said he," why are the Sublime Porte, and the French nation, after having been friends for so many years, now at war with each other? Your excellency cannot be ignorant that the French nation has ever been warmly attached to the Sublime Porte. Endowed as your excellency is with the most distinguished talents, it cannot have escaped your penetration, that the Austrians and Russians are united in a perpetual league against the Turkish empire, and that the French, on the other hand, have done every thing in their power to arrest their wicked designs. Your excellency knows that the flussians are the enemies of the Mussulman faith; and that the Emperor Paul, as Grand-Master of Malta, has solemnly sworn enmity to the race of Osmanlis. The French, on the other hand, have abolished the Order of Malta, given liberty to the Mahommetan prisoners detained there, and profess the same belief as themselves, 'That there is no God but the true God.' Is it not strange then, that the Sublime Porte should declare war on the French, its real and sincere friend, and contract alliance with the Russians and Germans, its implacable enemies?

"As long as the French were of the sect of the Messiah they were the friends of the Sublime Porte; nevertheless that power declares war against them. This has arisen from the error into which the Courts of England and Russia have led the Turkish Divan. We had informed it by letter of our intended expedition into Arabia; but these Courts found means to interrupt and suppress our letters; and although I had proved to the Sublime Porte that the French Republic, far from wishing to deprive it of any part of its dominions, had not even the smallest intention of making war on it, his most Glorious Majesty, Sultan Selim, gave credit to the English, and with unaccountable precipitance declared war on the French his ancient allies. Though informed of this war, I despatched an ambassador to avert it; but he was seized and thrown into prison, and I was obliged, in spite of myself, to cross the Desert and carry the war into Syrio.

"Though my army is as innumerable as the sands of the sea, full of courage; though I have fortresses and castles of prodigious strength; though I have no fear or apprehension of any sort; yet, out of commiscration to the human race, and above all from a desire to be reunited to the first and most faithful of our allies, the Sultan Selim, I now make known my disposition for peace. If you wish to have Egypt, tell me so. France never entertained an idea of taking it out of the hands of the Sublime Porte and swallowing itap. Give authority to your minister who is at Paris, or send some one to Egypt with full powers, and all shall be arranged without animosity, and agreeably to your desires."

Under such a specious guise did Napoléon conceal his ambitious designs on the East; his resolution, so early formed and steadily adhered to, of making Egypt a French colony; his unprovoked seizure of that country while at peace with the Ottoman empire, and his attempt which, but for the repulse at stances and sufferings of the army, is abundantly proved by the roous when they In truth, kleber ring deserted the Egyptian army, and his letter is tinged by those gloomy colours in which all exiles, but in an especial manner the French, regard the country of their hanishment It fell into the hands of the English during its passage across the Mediterranean, and was by their Government forwarded to the first consul-tian officers, and never sought to revenge upon his absent heutenant the spiteful expressions which, in an official despatch to Government, he had used towards humself (1) But although kluber, under the influence of these gloomy views, addressed proposals of accommodation to the Grand Vizier, he made from the Desert and the most vigorous preparations to repel the attack with which he was threatened from the Ottoman army The greater part of the French troops were stationed at El-Arish and the eastern frontier to watch the motions of the Syrian host, while six thousand were scattered along the course of the Nile, from the cataracts to the ocean, to overawe the Mamelukes, and guard the sea-coast from Turkish invasion. Encouraged by the approach of the Grand Vizier's army, the indefatigable Mourad Bey again issued from the Desert, at the head of two thousand Mamelukes; but he was attacked by Desaix, early in August, at Syout, and obliged to fall back. Following up his success, the French general mounted his infantry on dromedaries, and, at the head of a chosen band, pursued the Mameluke chief into his farthest recesses. The latter, conceiving he had only to deal with horsemen, charged the attacking column with great impetuosity, but the cavaliers instantly dismounted, placed their dromedaries in the centre, order into the Desert, and did not again appear on the theatre of Egyptian warfare (2).

Advance of The Turkish army which Napoléon destroyed at Aboukir, was but ish force the advanced guard of the vast force which the Sublime Porte had Defeat of collected to recover Egypt from the Republican arms. Their main a detach n ent at the body, consisting of twenty thousand Janizaries and regular soldiers, mouth of and twenty-five thousand irregular troops, arrived in the end of Nov t October in the neighbourhood of Gazah, on the confines of the Desert which separates Syria from Egypt At the same time a corps of eight thousand lanizaries, under the convoy of Sir Sidney Smith, arrived at the mouth of the Aile, to effect a diversion in that quarter. The leading division, consisting of four thousand men, landed, and made themselves masters of the tower of Bogaz, at the mouth of the Aile, where they immediately began to fortify themselves; but before their works had made any progress, they were attacked by General Verdier, at the head of a thousand French, routed, and

(1) Dum 17. 130, 131 Jom 17. 376 Yap. 18 Acre would in all probability have succeeded, of revolutionizing the whole of Asia Minor, and mount-ing himself on the throne of Constantine.—See the Original Letter in Ann. Reg. 1800, 218, 219 Mouth 11 215 (2) Jom, zer 377,378 Dum ir 151 Derth 198 driven into the sea, with the loss of five pieces of cannon, and all their standards (1).

Relieved by this decisive victory from all apprehensions in that Convention of El-Arish. quarter, Kleber turned his whole attention to the great array which was approaching from the Syrian Desert. The check at the mouth of the Nile rendered the Grand Vizier more disposed to enter into negotiations, while the declining numbers and desponding spirits of the French rendered them desirous on any terms to extricate themselves from a hopeless banishment, and revisit their beloved country. Napoléon had made propositions for an accommodation so early as 17th August; and Sir Sidney Smith had warned Kleber that, in virtue of the treaty, 5th January, 1799, Turkey could no longer make peace with France, but in concert with Russia and Great Britain. An unexpected reverse facilitated the negotiation; the Grand Vizier having crossed the Desert laid siege to El-Arish. The operations were conducted by Major Douglas and other British officers, and the fort carried, during a tumult of insubordination on the part of the garrison, on the 29th December. After their means of defence were exhausted, the garrison capitulated; but the terms were disregarded by the unruly crowd of Mussulmans, and in spite of the utmost efforts of the British officers, above three hundred French were put to the sword. The capture of this stronghold, which Napolcon termed one of the keys of Egypt, and the proof it afforded of the degree to which the spirit of the troops had been shaken, had a powerful effect in Jan. 24. 1500. accelerating the negotiations; and a convention was signed at El-Arish about a month afterwards, by which it was stipulated, that the French army should return to Europe with its arms and baggage, on board its own vessels, or those furnished by the Turkish authorities; that all the fortresses of Egypt, with the exception of Alexandria (2), Rosetta, and Aboukir, where the army was to embark, should by surrendered within forty-five days; that the prisoners on both sides should be given up, and that the Grand Vizier should pay L.120,000 during the three months that the evacuation was going forward.

This convention was not signed by the British admiral, Sir Sidney Smith; nor was he vested either with express authority to conclude such a treaty, nor with such a command as necessarily implied such a power. It was, however, entered into with his concurrence and approbation, and like a man of honour, he felt himself as much bound to see it carried into effect, as if his The Brisignature had been affixed to the instrument. But the British Gotish Government had, three months before, sent out orders to Lord Keith, vernment. had previcommanding the English fleet in the Mediterranean, not to consent ously pro-hibited such to any treaty in which it was not stipulated that the French army a convenwere to be prisoners of war; and Lord Keith, on the 8th January, a fortnight before the convention of El-Arish was signed, had sent a letter from Minorca, to Kléber, warning him that any vessels having on board French troops, returning home in virtue of a capitulation, other than an unconditional surrender, would be made prisoners of war (5). No sooner was this letter received by General Kléber, in February following, than he was filled with indignation, despatched instant orders to put a stop to the evacuation of the country, which had commenced, and resolved to resume hostilities. In an animated proclamation to his troops, he declared:—"Soldiers! we can only answer such insolence by victories—prepare to combat (1)." This announcement was received with loud shouts by the troops, who had already become highly dissatisfied at the humilating convention which had been concluded, and they joyfully prepared to forget all their cares in the excitement of a battle (2).

kleber drew up his army, which had now arrived from all parts of Egypt, and was twelve thousand strong, by moonlight, on the lattle of night of 19th March, in four squares, in the plain of houbbe, in front of the ruins of Heliopolis The heavens ever serene in those latitudes, enabled them to perform the movement with precision, though the light was too feeble to permit the enemy to perceive what was going forward. In front were stationed the four squares, with artillery at the angles, and the cavalry in the intervals. Companies of grenadiers doubled the corners of each square, and were ready to be employed either in resisting an attack, or offensive movements. Order, silence, and regularity prevailed in the European army; the solemnity of the occasion had subdued the usual vivacity of the French character, they felt that the moment had arrived when they must either conquer or die. The Turks, on the other hand, were encamped, after the manner of Asiatics, in confused masses, in the neighbourhood of El-Hanka, six thousand Janizaries lay in the village of Matarich, where they had thrown up some rude fortifications; their numerous cavalry, with the Mamelukes of Ibrahim Bey, extended on the right of that advanced guard as far as the banks of the Mile. Their whole force amounted to nearly fifty thousand men; but more than half of this array consisted of irregulars, upon whom little reliance was to be placed, and the situation of the regular corps in the village of Matarieh suggested the hope that they might be cut off before the remainder of the army could come up to their support. For this purpose, General Friant advanced before daybreak straight towards that village, while Regnier, with his division, moved forward in front of the ruins of Heliopolis to cut off the communication between their detached corps and the bulk of the Turkish army. No sooner did the Janizaries perceive that the enemy were approaching their intrenchments, than they sallied forth with their redoubtable seimitars in their hands, and commenced a furious attack estat and a and bit both of enusculed to a re-

letter was founded on instructions sent out by the Loglish Cabinet to Lord Keith, dated December 17th, in consequence of the intercepted letters of kleber, which had fallen into their hands innords selection to profess a return. Alsher no sooner reon the French squares. But Asiatic valour could effect nothing against European steadiness and discipline; the Ottomans were received in front by a murderous rolling fire, and charged at the same time, while disordered by their rush forward, in flank. In a few minutes they were mown down and destroyed; the ditches filled by their wounded fugitives, and over the breathing and bleeding mass the French grenadiers pressed on and scaled the works. Instantly the camp of the Janizaries was carried; cannon, ammunition, tents, all fell into the hands of the victors; and the small remnant who fled towards the main army were swept away by the fire of Friant's division, or cut down by the charges of the French cayalry (1).

The Grand Vizier no sooner saw his advanced guard destroyed than he moved forward with his whole army to avenge their loss. The French were reposing after the fatigues of their first onset, when the rays of the newly-risen sun were intercepted by a cloud of dust in the east. It was the Ottoman army, still forty thousand strong, which was approaching to trample under their horses' hoofs the diminutive band of Franks which had dared to await their charge. Immediately the French order of battle was formed; the troops were drawn up in squares, Friant on the left, Régnier on the right; the cannon advanced into the intervals between the masses; the cavalry remained close behind, ready to break through the moment a favourable opportunity occurred. The cannonade soon became extremely warm on both sides; but the balls of the Ottomans, ill-directed, flew over the heads of the Republicans, while their own artillery was rapidly dismounted by the well directed fire of their adversaries, and even the Grand Vizier's staff was melting away under the deadly tempest of bombs. Torn to pieces by the hail-storm of bullets, the Osmanlis prepared for a general charge. The concentration of their standards along their whole line gave the French warning that it was approaching; a cloud of dust filled the sky, the earth trembled as if shaken by an earthquake, and the roar of twenty thousand horsemen at full speed was enough to have struck terror into the most dauntless breasts. But nothing could break the firm array of the Republicans: As the enemy approached, they were received by a terrible discharge of grape-shot; their front rank almost all fell under the fatal storm; the rear wheeled about and fled, and in a few minutes the mighty array had disappeared, without a single musket having been fired by the French infantry. The Vizier rallied his troops, and brought them up again to the attack; but they were unable to break those flaming citadels, from which a devouring fire issued on every side. Surrounded by an innumerable multitude, not one of the balls from the French squares fell without effect, and in a short time the carnage became intolerable, and the Ottomans fled in indescribable confusion towards the desert. Kleber, following up his success, advanced rapidly to El-Hanka; the Turks fled the moment the French bayonets appeared; the whole army pressed forward, and before nightfall they had made themselves masters of the Ottoman camp, and reposed in the splendid tents, where the luxury of the East had displayed all its magnificence (2).

While these important events were going forward in the plain of Heliopolis, the garrison of Cairo were reduced to the last extremity. Two thousand men had been left in that city, under the command of Generals Verdier and Zayoncheck, with orders, if a general insurrection broke out, to retire

⁽¹⁾ Berth. 399, 400. Jom. xiii. 406, 407, Dum. (2) Berth. 400, 403. Jom. xiii. 407, 408. Dum. iv. 137, 138.

Upon Kleber's death, Menou, the governor of Cairo, and the oldtakes the est of the generals of division, assumed the command. Intoxicated with the prosperity of his situation, and carried away by the idea that he would succeed in amalgamating the French and Egyptians, so as to render them impervious to any foreign attacks, he declined all steps towards an accommodation, rejected the new overtures of the Grand Vizier to exacuate the country at the conclusion of a general peace, and refused to listen to the pronosals of Sir Sidney Smith, who was now empowered by his government to carry into effect the unauthorized convention of El-Arish. At the same time he exasperated the inhabitants by the imposition of additional imposts to meet the expenses of government, which had increased 400,000 francs (L 16.000) a-month since the death of his predecessor, and vainly flattered himself that. by assuming the title of Abdallah (the servant of God), wearing the Oriental costume, and embracing the religion of Mahomet, which he publicly did, he would succeed in maintaining the country against the united hostility of the Turks and English (1)

But the time was now approaching when the Republicans were to pay dear for their resolution to maintain themselves in Egypt, and that glorious train of military triumphs was to commence, which was destined to throw into the shade the disasters of former years, and terminate in the final overthrow of Napolcon on the field of Waterloo. The English Government no sooner received intelligence of the resolution of Menou to decline the execution for the convention of El-Arish than they put in motion all their the L glith resources to effect the expulsion of the French from that important For this purpose their ambassador at Constantinople, Lord Elgin, received orders to use his utmost efforts to induce the Turks to make a grand exertion, in conjunction with the forces of Great Britain, the corps of Abercromby, so long doomed to hurtful mactivity in the Mediterranean, was to hear the brunt of the contest, and an English expedition from India was to ascend the Red Sea, cross the Desert, descend by the waters of the Mile, and display the standards of Brama on the shores of Alexandria. So great and

(1) Dum 17 150, 151 Regn. 93, 97. Jom 217. 312 Bign 11 28

Sidney bin the on the 21st February, 1800 stated, in a letter to General Richer that he had received to the instructions as prevented him from acquescing in the convention of kl Arab. He adds, 'You will observe that the despatches I enclose are of old date (1st January) written after orders transmitted from London on the 15th or 17th December, evident ly dictated by the idea that you were about to treat separately with the Turks, and to prevent the execution of any measure contrary to our treaty of alliance But now that my Covernment is better in formed, and that the convention is really rat fied, I have not the slightest doubt that the restriction sary to carry a sto execution the treaty of El Arab He had presented himself at Alexanders but was refused admittarce, and he had come round by the Desert He had endeavoured to induce the troops to revolt against the generals who refused to lead them back to brance He was sent back. And this ary of the execution of the treaty will be removed town mack to reace He ast tent best Ano this is what the French call the British want of a hi are refusing to ratify the treaty of LLAr sh and yet their declamations on the subject received frequent and able support from the 0; position in the English Parliament.—See Parl, Debates, 3227, 325. 598, and 1436, 1438.

ment, that though they had previously resolved to agree to no treaty between the Turks and French, in which the latter did not surrender as prisoners of extensive a project had never been formed by any nation, ancient or modern; and it was not the least marvellous circumstance of this eventful period, that a remote province of the Roman empire should have assembled at the foot of the Pyramids the forces of Europe, Asia, and Africa, in one combined enterprise, and brought to the shores of the Nile tribes unknown to the arms of Casar and Alexander (1).

Macnificent conception of

Agreeably to this plan, the corps of Sir Ralph Aberchomby, which had so long been tossed about by the winds in the bay of Biscay and the Mediterranean sea, set sail from Malta on December 10th, and after a tedious voyage of six weeks, and remounting two hundred of its cavalry with Turkish horse, arrived at Marmarice in the Levant in the beginning of February. Eight thousand men, under Sir David Baird, were to embark at Bombay at the same time, and proceed by the Red Sea to Suez, while the army of the Grand Vizier, which was to be reinforced since its late disasters, was to break up from Acre, and again cross the Desert which separates Egypt from Syria. The project was magnificently conceived, but it presented almost insurmountable difficulties in the execution, and it was easy to perceive that the weight of the contest would fall upon Abereromby's forces. To combine an attack with success from various quarters, on an enemy in possession of a central position from whence he can at pleasure crush the first which approaches, is at all times a difficult and hazardous operation. But what must it be, when the forces brought together for the enterprise are drawn from different quarters of the globe, and the tumultuary levies of Asia Minor were to be supported by the infantry of England and the sable battalions of Hindostan (2)?

The English army had long delayed the commencement of operatest falls on tions in Egypt, in order to await the reorganization of the Turkish by's come forces, and give time to the Grand Seignior to collect an armament of the promised strength on the Syrian side of the Desert. But when the fleet approached the Levant, they learned that no reliance could be placed on any co-operation in that quarter. The Ottoman forces, notwithstanding all the levies ordered in Asia Minor, did not yet amount to twelve thousand men, and they were all in the most wretched state of discipline and equipment. So completely had their spirit been broken by the recent disasters, that they anticipated with the utmost dread a renewal of the contest, and it was extremely doubtful whether they ever could be brought to face the French infantry. To complete their inefficiency, the plague had broken out in the camp, and rendered their co-operation a subject of dread rather than ambition; a frightful epidemic ravaged Palestine; the most violent discord raged between the Grand Vizier and the Pacha of Acre, and a reinforcement of ten thousand mén, who had been collected at Aleppo to repair their losses, received a different destination, from the alarming rebellion of Oglou Pacha, one of the eastern satraps of the Turkish empire (5).

Deprived of all hope of co-operation in this quarter, and unable to rely on the distant and uncertain aid of the Red Sea expedition, Sir Ralph Abercromby perceived that the success of this great enterprise, on which the hopes of the nation had so long been set, and on which, in some measure, the fate of the war was involved, would depend on his own troops. Fortunately, he was of a character not to be intimidated by the prospect of danger, and although the forces at his disposal were little more than half of

⁽¹⁾ Wilson's Egypt, 3. Jom. xiv. 308. (2) Wils. 4, 5. Ann. Reg. 1801, 226. Jom. xiv. 309.

SrRatib resolves to pake the attack

those which it was ultimately proved were in the hands of his adversary, he gallantly resolved, alone and unaided, to make the attempt Orders, therefore, were given to the fleet to weigh heb at 1801 anchor, and although the weather was still very tempestuous. and the Greek pilots unanimously declared that it was impracticable to attempt a landing on the Egyptian coast till the equinoctial gales were over, the admiral stood out to sea, bearing with him a noble array of two hundred ships (1) On the 1st March the leading frigate made a signal for land, and March 2 on the following morning the whole fleet anchored in Aboular tt e expedi tion on the hay, precisely on the spot where Nelson's great victory had been gained three years before. The remains of that terrible strife were still visible, the Foudrovant chafed her cables against the L'Orient's wreck, and soon after fished up her anchor A nobler sight could hardly be imagined, two hundred vessels covered the ocean almost as far as the eye could reach, the sand-hills of Egypt were already covered with cannon and hostile troops, while every heart heat high with exultation at the prospect of soon measuring their strength with the enemy, and engaging in a contest on which the whole eyes of the world were fixed. The state of the weather for several days prevented the possibility of landing, but at length the wind having abated, the preparations were completed on the evening of the 7th, and on the morning of the 8th, at two o'clock, the tirst division, five thousand five hundred strong, assembled in the boats, one hundred and fifty in number, which were prepared to convey them to the shore The clear silence of the night, the solemnity of the scene, the magnitude of the enterprise on which they were engaged, the unknown dangers to which they were approaching, filled every mind with auxious suspense, and thousands of brave hearts then throbbed with emotion, who were yet destined to astonish Europe by their gallant bearing, when the hour of trial approached But not a vestige of confusion or trepidation appeared in the conduct of the debarkation, silently the troops descended from their transports, and took their places assigned them in the boats, and not a sound was heard as they approached the coast, but the measured dip of thousands of oars in the water, incessantly urging towards the shore

(1) Wils, 7 As a Reg 1801 220
The forces on hoard the fleet and those to which they were opposed in Egy1 t stood as follows -

Eu _n 1 sh		French
Infantry, Cavalry Art Bery,	15 463 472 578	Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery Dismounted Cava		:	23,650 1 250 1 100 450
S ci., Total.	16 513 999 17 512	Sick,	•		25,520 990 27 516

13 672

10 508

| Sir Balph Al ercromby a return Wilson 270 273 If ere were 999 sick in the British army when it the flower of the British empire (2).

landed and 996 in the French, so that this dimit u tio , left the relative forces of the two nations the same as I clore The French trnops who can stulated at

Ca to were, And at Alexandria

24,180 So that supposing 4 000 had been lost in a fied and we inded, at d | risoners, during the camp arguthe total force at its commencement must have been Tableau, No. 2

[Jem x1v 316]

(2) Ann Reg, 1801, 227 Will. 12, 13 Jun zir 322,

..

The French on the heights were about two thousand strong, action on posted in a concave semicircle, about a mile in length, supported the sandby twelve pieces of artillery on the one side, and the eastle of Aboukir on the other. The boats remained for some time in the middle of the bay, menacing different points of the coast, and at length the whole being assembled, the signal was made to advance at nine o'clock. One hundred and fifty boats, each filled with fifty men, instantly moved forward with extraordinary rapidity, while the armed vessels, which covered their flanks, began to cannonade the batteries on shore. The French allowed them to approach within easy range, and then opened at once so heavy a fire that the water seemed literally to be ploughed up with shot, and the foam raised by it resembled a surf rolling over breakers. Silently the boats approached the tempest, the sailors standing up and rowing with uncommon vigour, the soldiers sitting with their arms in their hands anxiously awaiting the moment to use them. When they reached the fire, several boats were sunk, and the loss among their crowded crews was very severe; but notwithstanding this the line pressed forward with such precision, that the prows of almost all the first division struck the sand at the same time. The troops instantly jumped out into the water, and rapidly advancing to the beach, formed before they could be charged by the enemy; the 42d, 23d, and 40th regiments rushed up the steep front of the heights with fixed bayonets, and carried them in the most gallant style; the guards followed, and though disordered for a moment by a charge of horse before their formation was completed, made good their ground, and drove back the enemy; while the 5th and Royals landed in time to defeat a column which was advancing through a hollow against the flank of their newly established line. In an hour the whole division was established on the heights, though weakened by five hundred men killed and wounded; the enemy retired with the loss of three hundred, and left eight pieces of cannon in the hands of the victors (1). This brilliant opening had the most important effects on the fate of the of the campaign. The gallant conduct of the troops, the splendid French spectacle which their-landing in presence of the enemy had afforded, the rapidity of their success in the sight of the whole fleet, filled both the soldiers and sailors with exultation, and already began to produce that confidence in their own prowess which in military affairs, as well as elsewhere in life, is not the least important element in success. hastened to profit by his good fortune, by landing the other divisions of the army, which was effected in the remainder of the day with the greatest expedition. Some uneasiness was at first experienced by the want of water, but Sir Sidney Smith soon relieved their anxiety by telling them that wherever date-trees grew water must be near; a piece of grateful information which, like every other furnished by that enterprising officer, proved to be correct (2).

It is now ascertained, that if the English army had pushed vigorously on before the enemy had time to recover from their consternation, they might soon have taken Alexandria with very little difficulty; and had they been as well aware of their prowess as they have since become, they would probably have done so (5). But they were then only novices in the military art, and

⁽¹⁾ Regn 205, 209. Wils, 11, 15. Ann. Reg. 1801, 227, 228.

[&]quot;This debarkation," said General Bertrand, "was admirable; in less than five or six minutes they presented 5,500 men in battle array; it was like a movement on the opera stage; three such completed the landing of the army."—Lis Cases, i. 212.

(2) Wils. 17, 18. Ann. Reg. 1801, 228.

⁽³⁾ Regn. 209. Dum. iv. 157.

naturally distrustful of themselves when opposed to the far famed veterans of I rance Abereromby, therefore, advanced with caution His first mau sof the k g sh g u sai care was to complete the disembarkation of the troops, cannon, and stores, a service of considerable difficulty and danger, from the tempestuous state of the weather, and which occupied the three following days. The castle of abouter was at the same time invested, and intrenchments thrown upround the camp. It then appeared how much reason the British had to congratulate themselves on the supmeness of Menou in retaining his principal force at Cairo when so formidable an enemy was establishing himself in his colony, for had he appeared with eighteen thousand men on the heights of aboular, the only point on the coast where a descent was practicable, the landing could never have been attempted, or if it had, it would in all probability have terminated in disaster. The truth was, the French general like all his confemporaries at that period, greatly underrated the British military forces, and he gladly heard of their debarkation, from a belief that they would soon become prisoners of war. Thus, while the English, from not being aware of their own strength, lost the opportunity of taking Alexandria in the outset of the campaign, the French, from an overweening confidence in theirs, reduced themselves, in the end, to the humiliation of the Caudine

The preparations being at length completed, the army moved forward, on the evening of the 12th, to Mandora tower, where they encamped in three lines The enemy had by this time been considerably reinforced from Cairo and Rosetta, so that their force amounted to five thousand four hundred infantry, six hundred cavalry, and twenty five pieces of cannon Notwithstanding the smallness of their numbers, Generals Friant and Lanusseresolved to make good their ground against the invaders, trusting to their great supersonty in cavalry, the strength of their position in front of an old Roman camp, and the facility of retiring to Alexandria in case of disaster The English general advanced cautiously, at day break on the morning of the 15th, in three lines, the enemy's force was un known, and it was in an especial manner necessary to take precaution against his decided superiority in horse. The first line, when it came within range of the enemy, was received with a heavy fire of grape and musketry, while a regiment of cavalry impetuously charged its flank, but both attacks were gallantly repulsed by the 90th and 92d regiments, and the advance of the second line soon compelled the Republicans to retreat. Then was the moment to have followed, up their success, and by a rapid charge completed the defeat of the enemy, in which case Alexandria would probably have fallen an easy conquest, but the Lughsh were still ignorant of their own powers, and the want of cavalry prevented them from taking the advantage which they might have derived from their victory. They contented themselves, therefore, with occupying the ground so easily won, and halted within cannon shot of their second line of defence, and it was not till the enemy had established themselves on the heights in their rear in front of Alexandria, that they again moved forward to the charge. They then advanced with admirable coolness, and in parade order, under a murderous are of cannon shot, but the attack was not conducted with the vigour and rapidity necessary to ensure decisive success, nor was any attempt made to turn a position which his great superiority of numbers would have enabled the Lughish guneral so easily to outflank. The consequence was that the British sustained a loss double of that of their adversaries (1); and though the second position was at length abandoned by the French, who withdrew the bulk of their forces within the walls of the town, yet this was done in perfect order, and without any loss of artillery; whereas had Abercromby possessed the confidence in himself and his soldiers which subsequent triumphs gave to Wellington or Picton, he would have carried the position of the enemy, by a combined attack in front and flank (2), in half an hour, and entered Alexandria along with their broken battalions.

⁽¹⁾ Dum ir 1.8 W le 18 19 Jem x r 321 3 3

The position now occupied by the British was by nature strong; tion of the ground now the right was advanced before the rest of the line nearly a quarter taken up by of a mile, on high ground, and extended to the large and magnificent ruins of a Roman palace within fifty yards of the sea; their left rested on the lake Maadieh; the intervening space, about a mile in breadth, consisted of a succession of low sand-hills. In front of the position was a level sandy surface, which commenced before the left, and extended as far as the French lines; on this plain cavalry could act, but as they approached the British videttes, they found the ground strewed with large stones, the remains of Roman edifices which formerly had covered all that part of the shore. Gun-boats in the sea and the lake Maadieh, protected each flank; on the left, in front of the lines occupied by the troops, was a redoubt mounted by twelve pieces of cannon; two were placed on the ruins of the Roman palace, and in the centre slight works were thrown up to aid the fire of the musketry. In this position the British army, now reduced by sickness, the sword, and detachments to the rear, to 11,500 men, with thirty-six pieces of cannon, awaited the attack of the enemy (5).

The position of the French was still stronger. A high ridge of hills the French, extended from the sea to the canals of Alexandria; along this elevated ground their troops were placed, with fort Cretin rising in deceitful grandeur in the centre, and fort Caffarelli in the rear of the left. Their generals were at first fearful that the advance of the English had cut off the dikes which formed their line of communication with Menou; but that commander discovered a circuitous route, by which he was enabled to reach Alexandria, and on the evening of the 19th, the whole disposable French troops, 11,000 strong, including 1400 cavalry, with 46 pieces of cannon, were drawn up on this imposing position. Every thing conspired to recommend early and decisive operations; the ancient fame and tried prowess of the Egyptian army left no room for doubt that they would speedily drive the presumptuous islanders into the sea; while by protracting operations, time would be afforded for the Grand Vizier to cut off the garrisons on the frontier of Syria, and the Indian army to menace their rear from the Red Sea (4).

The ground occupied by the two armies was singularly calculated recollections connected to awaken the most interesting recollections. England and France were here to contend for the empire of the East in the cradle of ancient civilisation, on the spot where Pompey was delivered up to the victorious arms of Cæsar, and under the walls of the city which is destined to perpetuate to the latest generation the prophetic wisdom of Alexander.

⁽¹⁾ The English lost 1,200, the French 500 men in this affair. It is impossible to refuse a tribute of admiration to the skill of the generals and valour of the soldiers, which, with such inferior forces, enabled the Republicans, at so slight a cost, to inflict so serious a loss upon their adversaries -See Wilson, 23; Regaies, 217, 219; and Ann. Reg. 1801, 227.

⁽²⁾ Wils. 20, 23. Regn. 215, 219. Jom. xiv. 327,

^{328.} Ann. Reg. 1801, 229.
(3) Wils. 21, 25, 30. Regn. 220, 222. Jom. xiv. 330. Ann. Reg. 1801, 232.

⁽⁴⁾ Wils. 25. Join. xiv. 329, 330. Regn. 222. 223. Hard, viil. 152.

Every object which met the eye was fraught with lustoric renown. On the right of the French line rose Pompey's Pillar, on the left Cleopatra's Needle, in the distance were seen the mouldering walls and Eastern domes of Alexandria, while on the extreme horizon, stretching into the sea, appeared the far-famed tower of Pharos. The British, as well as their antagonists, felt the influence of the scene and the grandeur of the occasion, and these ancient rivals in military renown prepared to join in their first serious contest since the Revolution (1), with a bravery worthy of the cause in which they were engaged, and the animating presence in which they stood.

On the 20th, the castle of Aboukir, with its garrison of 190 men, surrendered On the morning of the 21st, the army was under arms at three o'clock, eagerly expecting the attack which the movements of the preceding evening had led them to anticipate. A gloomy mist covered the plain, through which every eye was painfully striving to pierce; every car was straining to catch the smallest sound, the eastern horizon was anxiously regarded, but though the grey of the morning was perceptible, it seemed reluctant to break Suddenly the report of a musket was heard, followed by two cannon shots on the left, the officers, thinking the attack was to commence there, were already galloping in that direction, when a sharp rattle broke out on the right, followed by the loud shouts which too surely announced that the attack had begun in that quarter In fact the enemy, under Lanusse, were advancing in great force against the Roman ruins, where the 58th and 23d regiments were placed; the English officers no sooner saw the glazed hats of the Republicans emerging through the mist, than they poured in a fire by platoons, so heavy and well-directed, that the French were compelled to swerve to their left, and in making this movement the brave Lanusse received a mortal wound. His division was so disconcerted by this event, and the fire of the English, which was kept up with uncommon vigour, both on their front and flank, that they broke and fled in confusion behind the sandhills. But at this instant, General Rampon advanced at the head of a fresh column, two thousand strong, and joining the broken remains of Lanusse's division, renewed the attack with greater force, and succeeded in turning the Roman ruins so as to take the troops who defended them both in front and Menou supported this attack by a grand charge with all his cavalry. No sooner did Sir Ralph perceive it advancing than he moved up the 12d and 28th regiments from the second line to the support of the menaced wing, but soon after it arrived in the fire, the first of these corps was suddenly charged in flank by the Republican horse, and broken. Notwithstanding this, the brave Highlanders formed in little knots, and standing back to back, resisted the cavalry when they endeavoured to cut them down. The 28th regiment was maintaining a severe action in front, when they were startled by hearing French voices behind their line, the rear rank had just time to face about, column, the Republicans, in their turn, were assailed at once in front and flank, and driven into the rums, where a battalion which, by its great success in the Italian wars, had acquired the surname of the Invincibles, was obliged to lay down its arms, after having lost above two-thirds of its numbers. The French cavalry also, having now lost half their force by the close and murderous fire of the English infantry, prepared to cut their way back to their own lines. For this purpose they charged the English reserve with the utmost fury; but those steady men with admirable coolness opened their ranks so as to let the squadrons sweep through, and instantly closing them again, and wheeling about, threw in so deadly a fire upon the disordered horsemen, that they almost all, with their commander Roize, perished on the spot. The remnant, both foot and horse, of the force which had made this formidable attack, escaped in confusion from the scene of slaughter, and regained in dis-'may the French position (1).

The defeat of this desperate attack terminated the important opethe French. rations of this eventful day. On the left of the English position the operations of the Republicans were confined to a distant cannonade; and a more serious attack on the centre was repulsed by the close and destructive fire of the English guards. At length Menou, finding that all his efforts had proved unsuccessful, ordered a general retreat, which was effected in the best order, to the heights of Nicopolis on his rear, under cover of the cannon placed on that formidable position. The loss of the English amounted to 1500 in killed and wounded; that of the French to above 2000; but this was of comparatively little importance. They had lost the character of invincibles; the charm which had paralysed the world was broken; and on the standards taken by the victors, they pointed with exultation to the names, " Le Passage de la Scrivia, le Passage du Tagliamento, Ie Passage de l'Isonzo, la Prize de Gratz, le Pont de Lodi (2)."

But this important triumph was mingled with one mournful recollection. Sir Ralph Abercromby, who had the glory of first leading the English to decisive victory over the arms of revolutionary France, received a mortal wound in the early part of the day, of which he died a few days afterwards. No sooner did that gallant veteran hear of the furious irruption of the French cavalry into the lines on the right, than he mounted his horse, and galloped in that direction; he arrived while it was yet dark, when almost unattended by his aides-de-camp, whom he had despatched in various directions, on the ground over which the cavalry were sweeping, and was assailed by the French dragoons, one of whom he disarmed in a personal conflict; but soon after he received a wound from a musketshot on the thigh, which compelled him to dismount, and walk to the redoubt on the right of the guards, where he remained for the rest of the day, wallabout, exposed to a terrible cannonade, insensible alike to the pain of wound and the danger of his situation. With anxious hopes he watched progress of the action, every part of which was visible from that elevat station, and had the satisfaction of seeing the French retire and the victo. finally decided before the loss of blood began to darken his eyes. He lived to the morning of the 29th, expressing no solicitude but for the issue of the con test; he bore a painful operation for the extraction of the ball with the greate firmness; but it could not be reached by the skill of the surgeons, and he su at length in the arms of glory, leaving a name enshrined in the grateful. collection of his country [5].

The battle of Alexandria not only delivered Egypt from the Republica roke; it decided, in its ultimate consequences, the fate of the civiliz-^{1501, 202} Jam riv. 122, 212, Eich vill. 150, 154 2 Wilk 53, ann 2 yr. 1511, 212 17 Wile 31, 33. Ann. Der. 1811, 201, 201. Deri 201, 201. Jan. 201, 301, 302. S. Wile 13, 38. Dern 201, 211, Ann. Der.

Every object which met the eye was fraught with historic renown. On the right of the French tine rose Pompey's Pillar, on the left Cleopatra's Needle; in the distrince were seen the modificating walls and Eastern domes of Alexandria, while on the extreme horizon, stretching into the sea, appeared the far-famed tower of Pharos. The British, as well as their antagonists, felt the influence of the scene and the grandeur of the occasion; and these ancient rivals in military renown prepared to join in their first serious contest since the Revolution (I), with a bravery worthy of the cause in which they were engaged, and the animating presence in which they stood.

On the 20th, the castle of Aboukir, with its garrison of 190 men. surrendered. On the morning of the 21st, the army was under arms at three o'clock, eagerly expecting the attack which the movements of the preceding evening had led them to anticipate. A gloomy mist covered the plain, through which every eye was painfully striving to pierce; every car was straining to catch the smallest sound; the eastern horizon was anxiously regarded, but though the grey of the morning was perceptible, it seemed reluctant to break. Suddenly the report of a musket was heard, followed by two cannon shots on the left, the officers, thinking the attack was to commence there, were already galloping in that direction, when a sharp rattle broke out on the right, followed by the loud shouts which too surely announced that the attack had begun in that quarter. In fact the enemy, under Lanusse, were advancing in great force against the Roman ruins, where the 58th and 23d regiments were placed, the English officers no sooner saw the glazed hats of the Republicans emerging through the mist, than they poured in a fire by platoons, so heavy and well-directed, that the French were compelled to swerve to their left, and in making this movement the brave Lanusse recerted a mortal wound. His division was so disconcerted by this event, and the fire of the English, which was kept up with uncommon vigour, both on their front and flank, that they broke and fled in confusion behind the sandhills. But at this instant, General Rampon advanced at the head of a fresh column, two thousand strong, and joining the broken remains of Lanusse's division, renewed the attack with greater force, and succeeded in turning the Roman ruins so as to take the troops who defended them both in front and flank Menou supported this attack by a grand charge with all his cavalry, No sooner did Sir Ralph perceive it advancing than he moved up the 12d and nest you monte from the second line to the support of the menaced wing, but the cavalry when they endeavoured to cut them down the sam regular was remaining a covere action in front, when they were startled by hearing was r

back
this work the bad threatened the English. The British reserve during the attacks which mey had intractice the beginn. The minist when the attacking murable order, and threw in a close and well-directed fire upon the attacking column, the Repub.

Their turn were assuled at once in front and flank, and driven in

in the Italian wars,

Divisions among the Liench ge-out among the French generals. General Regnier strongly urged the expedience of leaving garrisons only in Alexandria, Cairo, and other important points, and concentrating the mass of the troops at Ramanich, in a situation either to fall upon the English army, if they should leave their lines to attack Rosetta or Alexandria, or crush the Grand Vizier if he should attempt to cross the Desert. But nothing could induce Menou to adopt any thing but half measures. He detached four thousand troops to relieve Rosetta, who arrived on the Nile too late to disengage that place, and retired to El-Aft, where they threw up intrenchments, and awaited the movements of the English; but himself remained at Alexandria, obstinately persisting in the belief that the Grand Vizier would never cross measures of the Desert, that the English would not venture to quit their position, and that if he remained firm a little longer, they would again betake themselves to their vessels. Meanwhile General Hutchison was rapidly circumscribing his limits at Alexandria; he cut the isthmus which separated the lake Maadieh from the dried bed of the lake Marcotis, and filled with the sea that monument of ancient industry, which in a great degree isolated Alexandria from the rest of Egypt; while the British flotilla ascended the Nile, and captured an important convoy descending that river for the use of its garrison. These disasters produced the greatest discouragement in the French army (1); the dissensions among the officers increased in vehemence, and General Regnier's language in particular became so menacing that the commander-in-chief, apprehensive that he might, with the concurrence of General Hutchison assumes the command, and advances tou ards Cano.

the army, assume the command, had him arrested and sent back to France (2). The detachment of La Grange, with four thousand men, having reduced the garrison of Alexandria to little more than six thousand, General Hutchison at length moved forward, with the main body of his forces, towards Ramanieh, in order to menace Cairo, and carry the war into the upper parts of Egypt. Four thousand British and six thousand Turks, in the first instance, advanced against the intrenched position of La Grange at El-Aft. On the approach of such considerable forces, he retired to the fortified position of Ramanieh, an important post on the Nile, from which the canal branches off which connects it with Alexandria, where he collected four thousand infantry, five hundred cavalry, and forty pieces of cannon. After a sharp skirmish, however, this position was abandoned, and the advance of Hutchison having cut off their retreat to Alexandria, the Republicans were compelled to fall back upon Cairo, which they reached a few days afterwards. The capture of Capture of Ramanieli. Ramanich was an important step in the campaign, as it completely isolated the troops at Cairo from those at Alexandria, cut off the chief supplies from the latter city, and rendered all attempt at co-operation impossible between them. The fruits of this acquisition soon appeared in the capture of a convoy of four hundred men and six hundred camels, bound for Alexandria, which, in the pathless solitude of the Desert, fell a prey to the activity and vigilance of the English cavalry (5).

⁽¹⁾ Jom. xiv. 339, 340. Regn. 235, 252. Wils. 56. (2) The characters of Monou and Regnier are thus given by Napoleon :- "Menou appeared to have all the qualities fitted for the command; he was learned, upright, and an excellent civil go-vernor. He had become a Mussulman, which, how ridiculous soever, was agreeable to the natives of the country; a doubt hung over his military capacity, but none over his personal courage; he had acted well in la Vendee and at the assault of Alexandria. General Regnier was more habituated to war; but he wanted the chief quality in a generalin chief; excellent when second in command, he was unfit to take the lead. His character was silent and solitary; having no knowledge of the means of electrifying, ruling, or guiding mankind."-NAP. in Month, i. 73, 74.

⁽³⁾ Join. xiv. 339, 341. Wills. 84, 96. Ann. Reg. 1801, 234.

I mense world. The importance of a triumph is not always measured by the in tal con number of troops engaged, twenty-four thousand Bomans, under se | cares Casar at Pharsalia, changed the face of antiquity; thirty thousand Republicans, at Marengo, seated Napoleon on the consular throne, and established a power which overturned all the monarchies of Europe. The contest of twelve thousand British, with an equal number of French, on the sands of Alexandria, in its remote effects overthrew a greater empire than that of Charlemagne, and rescued mankind from a more galling tyranny than that of the Roman emperors. It first elevated the hopes and confirmed the resolution of the English soldiers, it first broke the charm by which the continental nations had so long been enthralled . it first revised the military spirit of the English people, and awakened the pleasing hope that the descendants of the victors at Creey and Agincourt had not degenerated from the valour of their fathers. Authing but the recollection of this decisive trial of strength could have supported the British nation through the arduous conflict which awaited them on the renewal of the war, and induced them to remain firm and unshaken amidst the successive prostration of every continental power, tell the dawn of hope began over the summit of the Pyrenees, and the eastern sky was reddened by the conflagration of Moscow The continental nations, accustomed to the shock of vast armies, and to regard the English only as a naval power, attached little importance to the contest of such inconsiderable bodies of men on a distant shore, but the prophetic eye of Napolcon at once discerned the magnitude of its consequences, and he received the intelligence of the disaster at Alexandria with a degree of anguish equalled only by that experienced from the shock of Trafalgar (1)

But though destined in its ultimate effects to produce these imeffects pre portant consequences, the victory of Alexandria was not at first not very attended by results at all commensurate to the ardent anticipations dec sive of the English people. The movements of the English army were for long cautious and dilatory, but, though their operations were not brilliant, they were shiful, and ultimately produced the desired results. For some days after the battle they remained on the ground where they had so bravely combated, and the French occupied the heights of Nicopolis-both parties being busied in repairing their losses, and restoring the strength of their forces. At length a reinforcement of six thousand Albanians having arrived in the bay of Aboukir, they were joined by a British detachment of a thousand men, and the combined forces approached Rosetta, situated on one of the mouths of the Mile On their approach, the I rench garrison retired to Da-Apr l 1g Surrender mietta, leaving a hundred and fifty men in fort Julien, who, after of Da us 1 - clones currendered on the 19th April. Shortly after

Meanwhile divisions, the natural result of such unwound

⁽¹⁾ Brur 17 259 D Abr r 202 Jom xiv 338 "I can with safety affirm, said Junot, de 1 expt the assue great (2) Ann Reg 1861, 233 Jon., 247 338, 337.

I can

a lasting monument of the important triumph gained by the British arms on the sands of Alexandria (1).

Shortly after this capitulation was signed, the army of General Sie Pavid Paul Sudia Baird, six thousand four hundred strong, of whom 5600 were vii elica nellel British and 2800 sepoys, appeared on the banks of the Nile from India (2). They had sailed from Bombay in the end of December, but unfortunately the monsoon had set in before they arrived at the mouth of the Red Sea, which rendered it impossible for them to reach their original destination, which was Suez, in time to operate as a diversion to the British force when it first landed at the mouth of the Nile. After struggling hard with contrary winds for above two months, in the course of which two transports were lost, the expedition arrived at Cosseir, in Upper Egypt, in the beginning of July, and preparations were instantly made for crossing the Desert which separates the Red Sea from Thebes. This passage is one hundred and forty miles long; and as it was the first instance recorded in history of a European army, with the artillery and encumbrances of modern warfare, crossing one of the Eastern deserts, it is in a peculiar manner worthy of observation. The first detachment began its march from Cosseir, and in nine days it arrived at Kinneh on the Nile. The road across Farcitors the arid wilderness lies almost the whole way through a succession 10 C 10 of ravines, winding amongst hills varying from five to fifteen hundred feet in height. These hills are very remarkable, rising often perpendicularly on either side of the valley, as if they had been scarped by art, here again rather broken and overhanging, as if they were the lofty banks of a mighty river, and the traveller traversing its dry and naked bed. Now you are quite land locked; now again you open on lateral valleys, and see upon heights beyond small square towers. Dépôts of provisions had been provided at the eight stations where the army halted, and wells dug by the Arabs, from which a tolerable supply of water was obtained, though in many places rather of a brackish quality. Not a dwelling was to be seen, and hardly any traces of vegetation were discovered along this dreary tract; nothing met the eye but bare and arid rocks in the mountains, and loose sand or hard gravel in the hollows. The sufferings of the soldiers from heat and thirst were very great; for though they marched only during the night, yet the atmosphere, heated to H5 degrees of Fahrenheit in the shade during the day, was at all times sultry and oppressive in the highest degree. It was soon found that it was impossible by drinking to allay the thirst, and that indulgence in that respect only augmented the desire; a little vinegar mixed with water proved the only effectual relief. Every where the cannon and ammunition waggons passed with facility, drawn by oxen brought from India. No words can describe the transports of the soldiers when at Rensch they first came in sight of the Nile, flowing in a full majestic stream in the green plain at their feet; the bonds of discipline were unavailing to prevent a tumultuous rush of men, horses, camels, and oxen, when they approached its banks, to plunge into the waves. At length by great efforts the army was assembled at Thebes with very little loss, considering the arduous service they had undergone. They there gazed with wonder at the avenues of sphinxes and stately temples' which are destined to transmit to the latest posterity the wonders of ancient Egypt, and embarking on the Nile, fell down in boats in nine days, a distance of three hundred miles, to Grand Cairo, where they arrived on the 10th

⁽¹⁾ Jam. xiv. 315, 346. Wils. 157, 265. Ann. (2) Wils, 168, 189. Reg. 1801, 236, 237.

Meanwhile the Grand Vizier, encouraged by the unwonted intel ligence of the defeat of the brench forces, and relieved by the n or Cairo cessation of the plague in his army, one great cause of his weakness, mustered up courage to cross the Desert, and in the middle of April drew near to the French fortified position, on the frontiers of Syria, at the head of twelve thousand men At his approach, the Republicans evacuated Salabieh and Balbers, on the edge of the Desert, and Damretta, at the mouth of one of the branches of the Mile, and drew back all their forces to Cairo the arrival of La Grange with the troops from Ramanich having increased the disposable force of general Belliard to ten thousand veterans, he moved forward at the head of six thousand chosen troops to El Hanka, to meet the Turkish force But the Mussulmans were now under very different direction from that which led them to destruction at Heliopolis Major Hope, afterwards one of the most distinguished lieutenants of Wellington, was with the artillery, and Major Holloway directed all the movements of the Grand Vizier These able officers brought up the Turkish artillery and infantry to the fight in a wood of date-trees, where the superiority of European discipline was not so decisive as in the open plain, while a skilful movement of the cavalry towards their rear threatened to cut off the enemy's retreat to Cairo The consequence was, that after an indecisive action of five hours, Belliard retreated to the capital, a result so different from any which had yet attended their warfare with the Republicans, that it elevated immensely the spirits of the Ottomans, and what was of still greater consequence, disposed them to resign themselves implicitly to the guidance of the British officers attached to their staff (1)

This important advantage having thrown the enemy on all sides back into the capital, and the success of the Turl's having proved that under proper guidance some rehance could be placed upon them in active operations, of the transition of the tran effective part of the garris with the Indian army, bac would make their appearan

Cap tula length of time Impressed with these considerations, and fearful too of that he might not obtain equally favourable terms, Belliard, big 22 cycld to France within fifty days, with their arms, artinelly of beggage. This was immediately agreed to The troops embarked on the Mile in virtue of this capitulation, amounted to 15,672, besides the civil servants, and they left in the hands of the British 520 pieces of heavy cannon, besides the field pieces of the corps which they carried with them, an astomshing conquest to have been achieved by a Luropean force of smaller amount, and strances against such a condition, and threatened to destroy them rather than that they should fall into the hands of the victors, General Hutchison, with a generous regard to the interests of science and the feelings of these distinguished persons, agreed to depart from the stipulation, and allow those treasures of art to be forwarded to France. The sarcophagus of Alexander, however, was retained by the British, and formed the glorious trophy of their memorable triumph (1).

The military results of this conquest were very great. Three hundred and twelve pieces of cannon, chiefly brass, were found upon the works of Alexandria, besides seventy-seven on board the ships of war. No less than 195,000 pounds of powder, and 14,000 gun cartridges were taken in the magazines; while the soldiers who capitulated were 10,011, independent of 500 sailors and 655 civil servants. The total troops who capitulated in Egypt were nearly 25,000, all tried veterans of France; an astonishing success to have been achieved by a British force which had hardly ever seen a shot fired, and even including those who came up from India six weeks after Cairo had surrendered, never amounted to the same numerical strength (2).

(1) Ann. Reg. 1801, 233, 259. Wills. 194, 212. Jam. xiv. 850, 853, Hegn. 250, 288.

Ana. Reg. 1801, 239. (2) With 179, 216, 217, Jam, xiv. 352, 353. Begn. 280, 289,

The troops who capitulated at Caire, exclusive of [Wile, 179, 217.] which, supporing 4000 lost in the previous engagement, lea ev a total of 28,000 men, to approache British in Lgypt, having at their command in heavy cannot and field pieces, above command in heavy cannot and held pieces, above 700 gains. The amount of the force which the Leench had in this contest, is accertained by the best possible evidence, that of an unwilling witness, perfectly acquained with the fact, and never disposed to exaggerate the amount of his heaten trueps. "In March, 1201," says Napoleon, "the Engath disembarked on army of 18,000 men, withous still property and the house of the same of the same transport of the same tr out artillery or cavalry horses; it should have been destroyed. The army, vanque hed after six months of falle manuster, aut disembarked or the thores of Processe will 24,000 thong. When Napoleon quitted it, in the end of August 1799, it amounted in all to 28,500 men. As the British and allied forces did not enter simultaneously into action, but on the contrary, at an interval of several months from each miner, the victory must have remained with the French if they had had a general of capacity at their head, who knew how to avail himself skilfully of the advantages of his central position." [Nap. in Month. i 80, 81, and ii. 216.] The British forces which came with Sir Ralph Abereromby

. . . . 16.599 Landed in April, 3,000 Came with Sir David Baird, . . . 5,919

Total British and Indian troops, . 25,518

[Wils, 270, 308] The army of the Grand Vizier, which advanced against Cairo after the battle of Alexandria, was only 14,000 strong, and in such a state of disorganization as to be capable of effecting very little in the field; [Wils, 116.] and the corps which landed at Rosetta was only 6000 men, and effected very little against the enemy. When, therefore, it is recollected that the campaign was really concluded by the capitulation of General Belliard at Cairo on the 26th June, that the forces from the Red Sea only landed at Cosseir on the 8th July, and arrived at Cairo on the 10th August, and consequently that the contest was decided by

19,500 British against 28,000 French, having the advantage of a central position and possession of all the fortified places in the country, it must be admitted that modern history has few more glorious achievements to commemorate.

This being the first great disaster which the Republicans had sustained by land since the commentement of the revolution, and it having fallen on so distinguished a portion of their army as that which had gone through the Italian and hgyptian campaigus, they have been indefatigable in their endeavoyrs to underrate the credit due to the English troops on the occasion; forgetting, that if the British acted feebly, what must the French have been when, with such a superiority of force, they were compelled to capitulate. It is true, that the movements of Hotelison after the battles of 21st March were slow and cautions; but that they were not unreasonaldy so, is proved by the consideration that he had to advance with less than half his army against a force at Grand Caico, which amounted to 13,000 men, and could send 10,000 into the field, and that even after all he arrived at the scene of action, and concluded the capitulation of Cairo, six weeks before the arrival of the troops from the Red 5ca, with no more than 1,500 Europeans, and a disorderly rabble of 25,000 Turks, hardly provided with any battering train. [Wils, 158.] All the ingenuity of the French cannot obviate the important fact that, by Hutchison's advance to Ramanich, he separated their armies at Cairo and Mexandria from each other, and enabled hun, with a force greatly inferior to the two taken together, to be superior to both at the point of attack, the surest test, as Napoleon justly observes, of a good general. The British officers, after Alexandria was taken, discovered that the works on the heights of Nicopolis, and, in particular, forts Cretin and Caffarelli, were in such a state that they could have opposed no effectual resistance to a vigorous attack, and they were thus led to regret that they had been induced by their imposing appearance to relinquish the active pursuit of their advantages before Mc-nou's arrival on the 13th March: [Wils 212] but if they had done so, and Mexandria had thereby fallen, it is doubtful whether the ultimate success of the expedition would not have been endangered; as it would have only deprived the enemy of 1000 men, and led to the concentration of the remainder, above 20,000 strong, in the central position at 'Cairo, from whence they might have destroyed either the grand Vizier, Sir D. Baird, or General Hutchison, as they successively approached the inAugust. There, for the first time in the history of the world, the sable Hindoos from the banks of the Ganges, the swarthy Asiatics from the plains of the Euphrates, and the blue-eyed English from the shores of the Thames. met in arms at the foot of the Pyramids (1).

When Menou was informed of the capitulation of Cairo, he professed himself highly incensed at its conditions, and loudly pro-Doves ega nst claimed his resolution to bury himself under the ruins of Alexandria. tlexan He refused to take advantage, in consequence, of the proposal made dria to him to accede to the capitulation of the capital, and embark on the same terms for France This determination was founded on intelligence be had received by the brig Lodi, which had eluded the vigilance of the English cruisers and penetrated into Alexandria, of the approach of Admiral Gantheaume with seven sail and five thousand men, accompanied with the most peremptory orders from the first consul to hold out to the last extremity. Finding that the reduction of this last stronghold could only be effected by force, General Hutchison, after the embarkation of General Belliard and his division, brought down the greater part of his troops from Cairo, and, in the beginning of August, commenced active operations, at the head of sixteen thousand men, against Alexandria. A flotilla was rapidly collected on the lake Marcotis, but to complete the investment of the place, it was necessary to reduce fort Marabon, situated on a tongue of land which unites the town to the opposite side of the lake, and by which alone the garrison received supplies of provisions from the Arabs Four thousand men were embarked on the flotilla, and landed near the fort on the 17th, while a feint was made of a general attack on the heights of Aicopolis by General Hutchison. These operations were completely successful; the landing of the troops was effected with very little opposition; batteries were rapidly constructed, and so heavy a fire kept up, both by land and sea, that the fort was soon reduced Professes of to a heap of ruins; and the garrison, consisting of a hundred and sixty men, was compelled to capitulate. At the same time, some of the advanced batteries of the Republicans were carried on the heights near the sea, and a column of six hundred men, detached by Menou to recover them, driven back by Colonel Spencer, at the head of seven companies of the 50th, with the most distinguished gallantry. In endeavouring to set fire to the English flotilla, the French burnt their own schooners on the lake; while the light vessels of the fleet boldly sailed into the harbour of Alexandria, and opened a cannonade upon the enemy's squadron in the inner port On the following day, General Coote followed up his success; and advancing along the 1st Aug 27 Lei.

disasters at resolution to conquer or die, and agreed to a capitulation, in virtue Aug 3, of which the French were to surrender Alexandria, with all its artiflery, and be transported back to France, with their arms, baggage, and ten Surrender pieces of cannon only. It was agreed between the military comof Menou manders that the collections of antiquities and drawings which had been made by the artists and learned men who accompanied the expedition should be surrendered to the British; but as they made the most vigorous remon-

⁽¹⁾ Scherer's Egypt, 68, 69 Wals. 171, 173 Ann Reg 1801 237
A singular incident occurred on this occasion
When the Sepay reguments came to the monuments of aucton Egypt, they fell down and wotshipped

the images, and her proof among the many which ex it, of the common aregen of these early nations I have beard the curious fact from several officers Apo Mete I terent ou the occation

strances against such a condition, and threatened to destroy them rather than that they should fall into the hands of the victors, General Hutchison, with a generous regard to the interests of science and the feelings of these distinguished persons, agreed to depart from the stipulation, and allow those treasures of art to be forwarded to France. The sarcophagus of Alexander, however, was retained by the British, and formed the glorious trophy of their memorable triumph (1).

The military results of this conquest were very great. Three hundred and twelve pieces of cannon, chiefly brass, were found upon the works of Mexandria, besides seventy-seven on board the ships of war. No less than 195,000 pounds of powder, and 14,000 gun cartridges were taken in the magazines; while the soldiers who capitulated were 10,011, independent of 500 sailors and 655 civil servants. The total troops who capitulated in Egypt were nearly 24,000, all tried veterans of France; an astonishing success to have been achieved by a British force which had hardly ever seen a shot fired, and even including those who came up from India six weeks after Cairo had surrendered, never amounted to the same numerical strength (2).

(1) Ann. Rez. 1201, 233, 239. Wib. 194, 212. Julia, 214, 250, 253, Regn. 280, 288.

(2) Wile, 179, 216, 217. Ann. Reg. 1801, 239. Julia, viv. 352, 353. Regn. 280, 289.

The troops who capitulated at the re, exclusive of [Wile, 179, 217.] which, supposing 1000 to tin the previous engagement, leaves a total of 28,000 men. to of pose, the British in Lgypt, laxing at their command in heavy cannot and beld pieces, above common in nearly rannot and first precess above 703 guns. The amount of the force which the best periods in this contest, is accertained by the best periods of the total unwilling witness, perfectly acquainted with the facts, and never disposed to exaggerate the amount of his beaten troops. "In March, 1201," 2338 Napoleon, "the Possible disposed to exaggerate the amount of his beaten troops." English disembarked an army of 15,000 men, with destroyed. The army, vangar-had after its months of falle margareter, as directaled on the slove of falle margareter, as directaled on the slove of Processes still 24,000 trong. When Supoleon quitted it, in the end of August 1799, it amounted in all to 28,500 men. As the British and allied forces did not enter simultaneously into action, but on the contrary, at an interval of several months from early other, the victory must have remained with the I reach if they had had a general of capacity at their head, who knew how to avail himself skilfully of the advantages of his central position." [Nap. in Month. i 80, 81, and ii. 216.] The British forces which came with Sir Ralph Abercromby

Landed in April. 3,000 Came with Sir David Baird, . . . 5,919

Total British and Indian troops, . 25,518

[Wils, 270, 308] The army of the Grand Vizier, which advanced against Cairo after the battle of Alexandria, was only 14,000 strong, and in such a state of disorganization as to be capable of effecting very little in the field; [Wils. 116.] and the corps which landed at Rosetta was only 6000 men, and effected very little against the enemy. When, therefore, it is recollected that the campaign was really concluded by the capitulation of General Belliard at Cairo on the 26th June, that the forces from the Red Sea only I inded at Cosseir on the 8th July, and arrived at Cairo on the 10th August, and consequently that the contest was decided by

19,500 British against 23,000 French, having the advantage of a central position and possession of all the fortified places in the country, it must be admitted that modern history has few more glorious achievements to commemorate.

This being the first great disaster which the Republicans had sustained by land since the comincurrement of the revolution, and it having fallen on so distinguished a portion of their army as that which had gone through the Italian and Lgyptian campaigns, they have been indefatigable in their endeavours to underrate the credit due to the English troops on the occasion; forgetting, that if the British acted feebly, what must the French have been when, with such a superiority of force, they were compelled to capitulate. It is true, that the movements of Hutchison after the battles of 21st March were slow and cautions; but that they were not unreasonably so, is proved by the consideration that he had to advance with less than half his army again to force at Grand Cairo, which amounted to 13,000 men, and could send 10,000 into the field, and that even after all he arrived at the scene of action, and concluded the capitulation of Cairo, six weeks before the arrival of the troops from the Red Sca, with no more than 1,500 Europeans, and a disorderly rabble of 25,000 Turks, hardly provided with any battering train. [Wils. 158.] All the ingenuity of the French cannot obviate the important fact that, by flutchison's advance to Ramanieh, he separated their armies at Cairo and Alexandria from each other, and enabled him, with a force greatly inferior to the two taken together, to be superior to both at the point of attack, the surest test, as Napoleon justly observes, of a good general. The British officers, after Alexandria was taken, discovered that the works on the heights of Nicopolis, and, in particular, forts Cretin and Caffarelli, were in such a state that they could have opposed no effectual resistance to a vigorous attack, and they were thus led to regret that they had been induced by their imposing appearance to relinquish the active pursuit of their advantages before Mc-nou's arrival on the 13th Slarch : [Wils 212] but if they had done so, and Mexandria had thereby fallen, it is doubtful whether the ultimate success of the expedition would not have been endangered; as it would have only deprived the enemy of 4060 men, and led to the concentration of the remainder, above 20,000 strong, in the central position at Cairo, from whence they might have destroyed either the grand Vizier, Sir D. Band, or General Hutchison, as they successively approached the inAfter the reduction of Alexandria, the greater part of the army, with General Hutchison, returned to England, leaving twelve thousand men, including the Indian troops, to secure the country, until a general peace. The Luropean officers and soldiers were much struck by the luxury of their comrades in the Indian service, and, accustomed to sleep on the bare sand, with no other covering than a tented eanopy, beheld with astonishment the numerous retainers and sumptious equipages which attested the magnificence of Asiatic warfare. But Sir David Baird soon showed that if they had adopted the pacific habits of the soldiers of Darius, they had not forgotten the martial qualities of those of Alexander, and their morning exercises in the camp of Alexandria exhibited a combination of activity and discipline never surpassed by the finest troops of the Western world (1)

Attempted. The expulsion of the French from Egypt was followed by a piece test eye of treachery on the part of the Ottomans, which, if not firmly resisted by the English commander, would have brought indelible disgrace on the British name The Turkish Government, aware of the insecure tenure by which their authority in Egypt was held, as long as the Beys retained their ascendency in the country, had secretly resolved upon extirpating them, and in order to carry their design into effect, seven of the chiefs were invited to Alexandria, to hold a conference with the Capitan Pacha, by whom they were received with every demonstration of respect, and invited on board a British vessel But when they got into the boats which were to convey them thither, they took fright, and desired to be returned ashore, and this having been refused, a struggle ensued, in the course of which three of the Beys were Lilled, and four wounded This frightful violation of all public faith, though by no means unusual among Asmtic de-pots, excited the most high indignation in the British army, General Hutchison immediately put his troops under arms, and made such energetic remonstrances to the Capitan Pacha, that he was obliged to surrender up the four Beys who had been wounded. and the bodies of the slain, who were interred with military honours at Alexandria This resolute conduct completely cleared the British from all imputation of having been accessary to the intended massacre, though it was far from allaying the indignant feelings of the English officers, many of whom openly declared the Capitan Pacha should have been seized in the centre of his camp, and hung by the yard-arm of the frigate to which he intended to have conveyed the victims of his treachery (2)

When left to their own resources, however, the Mameluke chiefs treament were totally unable to maintain their former government in Egypt. We have been always of them had fallen in the contest with France, their repeats with the maintain of the province scarce two thousand could be mustered in arms, when the Luropeans withdrew. They were compelled to relinquish, therefore, their old feudal sovereignty on the banks of the Nile, and accept the offer of the Grand Segmort, to surrender on favourable terms the province into the hands of the Osmanlis. A pacha was established, who soon became the real sovereign of the country, and long contrived, by the regular parment of his tribute, to maintain himself undisturbed in his dominions. Under his able and undivided administration, order began to reappear out of chaos, his became comparatively secure, though excessive taxation was established, and the national resources were prodigiously augmented. By this means one singular and lasting consequence resulted from the French residence in Egypt. The old anarchical tyranny of the Mamelukes was destroyed; a powerful government established on the banks of the Nile, which, in the end, crushed the Wahabees in Arabia, extended itself over Syria, as far as the defiles of mount Taurus, and was only prevented, by the intervention of France and Russia, from utterly overturning the dominion of the Osmanlis. Thus every thing conspired to bring about the great Oriental Revolution of the nineteenth century; the power of the Turks, the chief bulwark of Mahometanism, was weakened alike by the victories of the French and the conquests of their opponents, and the Crescent, long triumphant in the East, was at length struck down, not less by the ultimate effects of the ambition of the Republicans, who ridiculed every species of devotion, than the devout enthusiasm of the Moscovites, who sought an entrance to Paradise through the breach of Constantinople.

ter or of Egypt whereas, by the retrait on of (1) Wils 177 Ann. Reg 1801, 230 Alexandras if at dispension of force was octas ourd (2) Wils, 245 Ann. Reg 1801, 230 Dum, iv which illumitely proved fatal to them in the campaign.

But neither of the victorious states foresaw those remote conse-Litters quences, which as yet lay buried in the womb of fate, and the farcings in demonstrations of joy at the surrender of Alexandria were as arin to airt dent on the shores of the Bosphorus as the banks of the Thames. The cannon of the seraglio were fired, the city was splendidly illuminated, medals were struck to be distributed among the English who had served in Egypt, and a palace built for the British ambassador at Pera, as - a lasting monument of the gratitude of the Ottoman empire. In London, the public thankfulness, if less noisy, was still more sincere. The people of England hailed this great achievement as a counterpoise to all the disasters of the war; as a humiliation of France on that element where it had been so long victorious, and a check to its ambition in that quarter where its hopes had been most sauguine; and as the harbinger of those greater triumphs which would await them, if the enemy should carry into execution their long threatened invasion of the British islands. Under the influence of these sentiments the early disasters of the war were forgotten; the fears, the asperity of former times were laid aside; and the people, satisfied with having redeemed their honour in military warfare by one great triumph, looked forward without anxiety to the cessation of the contest, in the firm belief that they could renew it without apprehension whenever the national safety required that it should be resumed (1).

Although the French were thus expelled from Egypt, it was not Great anal without the greatest efforts on the part of Napoléon to preserve so Dapolon important an acquisition, that it cluded his grasp. By great exerto preserve tions a squadron of seven ships of the line and five frigates, having on board six thousand men and vast supplies of all sorts, was made ready for sea, and sailed from Brest in the beginning of January; it eluded the vigilance of two British squadrons which were detached in pursuit under Sir John Borlase Warren and Sir Richard Bickerton, passed the straits of Gibraltar, and crept along the coast of Africa, almost to within sight of the Pharos of Alexandria; but there one of its frigates, the Africaine, was encountered, and captured by the English frigate Phœbe, of equal force; and the admiral, discouraged by this disaster, and alarmed at the accounts he received of the strength of Lord Keith's squadron off the coast of Egypt, which, united to that of Bickerton, now amounted to seventeen sail of the line, renounced his enterprise, and returned to Toulon. One of his frigates, however, the Régé-néré, passed, under false colours, through the British fleet, and made its way into Alexandria; and this the first consul considered as decisive evidence that the whole, if directed with equal skill, might have reached the same destination. Cantheaume, therefore, received positive orders to put again to seaand at all hazards to attempt the relief of Egypt. He set sail accordingly on the 20th March, avoided Sir John Borlase Warren's squadron, which he met off Sardinia, and continued his route towards the coast of Africa: but Warren instantly made sail in the same direction, and arrived off Alexandria on the 25d April. No sooner was Gantheaume informed of this than he again turned about, and regained Toulon without any disaster. Irritated beyond measure by these repeated failures, Napole on transmitted peremptory orders to the admiral to put to sea a third time, and endeavour, at all hazards, to convey the reinforcements he had on board into Alexandria; he set sail accordingly on the 20th May, threw succours in passing to the Republican force besieging porto Ferraio in the isle of Elba; increased his squadron by three frigates prepared for him by General Soult at Brundusium, and arrived in sight of the coast of Egypt, for the third time, on the 8th June. One of his brigs, the Heliopolis, reached Alexandria on the day following; but when Gantheaume was making preparations for landing the troops on the sands to the westward of that town, his look-out frigates made the enemy's fleet, and the landing of the troops in the desert shore without stores or provisions, would expose them to certain destruction. Gantheaume, therefore, refused to accede to the wishes of the officers of the army, who were destrouts to meur that perilous alternative, and made sail again for the lowest coast of France. On his route homewards he fell in with the Smitsure, of seventy-four guis, which Captain Hollowell defended long with his accustomed gallantry, but he was at length obliged to surrender to the vast superiority of the Republican force, and with this trophy the admiral regained the harbour of Toulon. The I rench journals, long accustomed to continued disasters at sea, celebrated this gleam of success as a memorable triumph, and loudly beasted of the skill with which their fleet had traversed the Mediterranean and avoided the English squadrons; "a melantlody reflection," says the historian of Napoleon, "for a country and its admirals when skill in avoiding a combat is held enuivalent to a victory, (1)."

This effort, however, was not the only one made by the first consul for the relief of Lgypt. His design was to support Gantheaume by a combined squadron of lifteen ships of the line, drawn from the harbours of France and Spain. For this purpose great efforts had been made by the Spainsh murine; six ships of the bine at Cadiz had been placed under the orders of the Frenct admiral Dumanor, and six others had reached that harbour from Ferrel, while the English blockading squadrons, under Sir John Borlase Warren and Sir Richard Bickerton, had left their stations off these harbours in search of Admiral Cantheaume; and Admiral Linois, with thage slopes of the line, was to join them from Toulon. The British Government, justly alrianced as such

when advices were received that Amiral Linois, with three ships of the him

and one frigate, was approaching from the Mediterranean. No sooner did the French admiral find that the blockade of Cadiz had been re-established by a force superior to his own, than he abandoned all hope of effecting the prescribed junction, and fell back to Algesiraz bay, where he took shelter under the powerful batteries which defend its coast. Thither he was followed by Sir James Saumarez, whose squadron was now reduced to six ships of the line by the detachment of one of his vessels to the mouth of the Guadalquiver; and the British admiral resolved upon an immediate attack notwithstanding that the forts and batteries and gun-boats, now manned by gunners from the French ships, presented the most formidable appearance. The British fleet stood into the bay, headed by Captain Hood in the Venerable, with springs on their cables, and in a short time the action began, the tion in the bay of Al-Audacious and Pompey successively approaching, and taking their gesiraz. stations alongside of the French vessels, between them and the batteries on shore. The wind, however, fell shortly after the leading ships got into action, so as to prevent the remainder of the squadron from advancing to their support; and when at length a light breeze from the south enabled the Hannibal to work into the scene of danger, she grounded in such a situation as to be exposed to the shot of the French squadron on one side, of the formidable batteries of Almirante and St. Jago on the other, while fourteen gun-boats, securely posted under her stern, kept up with great vigour a destructive raking fire. To complete the disaster, the wind totally failed soon after, so as to render it impossible for the other vessels, notwithstanding the utmost efforts, to render any effectual assistance; and the boats, which had been destined to storming the batteries on the islands, were all required to tow the line-ofbattle ships which were still afloat, so as to bring their broadsides to bear upon the enemy. After several gallant attempts, therefore, on the part of Sir James Saumarez and his squadron, to throw themselves between the batteries and the grounded vessel, they were compelled to draw off, leaving her to her fate, and after an honourable resistance, she was obliged to strike her colours (1).

The loss of the British in killed and wounded in this action was Great rejoicings in France at 564; that on the part of the French and Spaniards, 586; but the unwonted occurrence of the retreat of the former, and the capture of one of their line-of-battle ships, diffused the most extraordinary joy throughout France, in which the first consul warmly participated (2). It was publicly announced at their theatres and in the gazette published on the occasion, that three French sail of the line had completely defeated six British, and captured one of their number, without the slightest mention of

(1) James, iii. 164, 172. Ann. Reg. 1801, 249. Dum. vii. 118, 121. Jom. xiv. 366, 368. An incident, highly characteristic of the English sailors, occurred in this action. In its voyage through the Mediterranean, the French fleet had fallen in with, and captured, the brig Speedy, of fourteen guns, commanded by Captain Long Co-engage, and that gallant officer, with his little crew, was on hoard the Formidable when the action took place in the hay of Algesiraz broadside the vessel received from the English, these brave men gave three cheers, regardless alike of the threats of instant death from the French if they continued so unseemly an interruption, and the obvious danger that they themselves might be sent to the bottom by their friendly discharges.

(2) "The first consul," says the Duchess of Abrantes," recounted this triumph to us with the most lively satisfaction, with eyes literally overflowing with joy at this unlooked-for event. Naval victories were rare at that period, and Napoleon felt the full satisfaction arising from this one. Admiral Linois received the sole recompense which it was in his power at that period to bestow, a sabre of honour. All those who have narrowly studied the character of Napoléon, must have seen that the ruling passion of his great mind was the humbling of England. It was his constant object of study; and I can safely affirm that during the fourteen years that he held the reins of power, during which I certainly saw him very frequently, he was constantly set upon that object, and passionately desirous of the glory which it would produce. He constantly thought that he could give France the means of combatting that power on equal terms, and subduing it; all his measures tended towards that end."-D'Arrantes, v. 251, 256.

the batteries on shore, to which the Spanish official account, with more justice, ascribes the failure of the attack (1). But these transports were of short duration, and an awful catastrophe was destined to close the naval strice between the two nations. After the battle, the English fleet repaired to Gibraltar, and the utmost efforts were made night and day, to get the squadron ready for sea, but it was found that the Pompey was so much damaged that she could not be set affoat in time, and therefore her crew were distributed through the other vessels, and the fleet stood out to sea to avenge the affront they had received on the morning of the 12th July Meanwhile, the Spanish squadron at Cadiz, consisting of six ships of the line and three fingates, two of which bore 112 guis each, had joined the shattered Freinh fleet in Algesiraz bay, and the combined force was moving towards the isle of Leon, at the time that the English squadron, consisting of five ships of the line and one fingate, were working out of the harbone of Gibraltar (2).

Nothing in war could be conceived more animating than the circumstances under which the British fleet then set forth to redeem the honour of their flag The combined squadron, consisting of nine ships of the line and four frigates, was proudly and leisurely moving towards Cadiz, with all sails set and a favourable wind, bearing with them their prize, the Hannibal, which they had contrived to get alloat, in tow of the Indienne frigate, the anxiety of the sailors to rescue her from their hands was indescribable; the day was clear, the rock covered with spectators, and loud shouts approunced every successive British vessel which cleared the pier-head of Gibraltar to proceed on the perilous service. The mole, the quays, the batteries, the cliffs, were crowded with anxious multitudes, eager to witness the approaching conflict: the band of the Admiral's ship, the Casar, played the popular air, "Come, cheer up, my lads, 'tis to glory we steer," while the military bands of the garrison made the rock re-echo with the notes of "Britons, strike home!" So thrilling was the interest of the scene, so overpowering the feelings which it excited, that the foreigners who witnessed it wished they had been Englishmen; and even the wounded begged to be taken on board to share in the honours of the approaching conflict (3)

The break of the English garrison to behold the first series of the English garrison to behold the first series of the first s

enemy, and Sir James gave orders that they should engage the first vesses which they could o this fire upon the Rt seen to be on fire must fall into the hands of the remainder of the fleet as they came up, the

^{(1) &}quot; The action " says the Madrid Carette extra standing the utmost exertions to get her alloat it was found impossible, and the fire of the batteries very soon compelled her to strike "—See Jawas, in 173

(2) James in 170 181 Ann Beg 1801, 232
John 217 309 Dam vii 128

⁽³⁾ Braston, tit. JoJ. James, til. 120

of attenting to I ass between the I reach admiral a ship and has shore, made her ground, and notwith

Superb passed on, and in half an hour overtook and engaged the St.-Antoine, of 74 guns, which soon struck her colours. The Cæsar and Venerable came up in succession, and the chase was continued all night, in the midst of a tempestuous gale, by the light of the discharges which at intervals flashed through the gloom. But while the sailors were making the greatest efforts, and constantly nearing the enemy, a terrible catastrophe occurred, which for a mo ment daunted the stoutest hearts. The Superb, after having disabled the Real Carlos on her starboard, passed on, poured a broadside on the larboard into the San Hermenigeldo, also of 112 guns, and soon outstripped both her firstrate antagonists. In the darkness of the night these two Spanish ships mutually mistaking each other for the enemy, were involved in a mortal catastrophe combat; the violence of the winds spread the flames from the one of the to the other, the heavens were illuminated by the awful conflagration, and at midnight they both blew up with an explosion so tremendous as to shake Cadiz to its foundation, and spread a thrill of horror through every soul that witnessed it. Out of two thousand men, of which their crews consisted, not more that 250 were saved by the English boats, the remainder were blown into the air, or perished in the waves on that tempestuous night (1).

When morning dawned, both fleets were extremely scattered, the Venerable and Thames were far a-head of the rest of the British squadron, and the Formidable, of eighty guns, was seen in the rear of the French fleet. The British ships instantly gave chase, and soon brought her to action. It began within musket shot; and shortly the two ships were abreast of each other within pistol range, and a tremendous fire was kept up on both sides. Undismayed by the magnitude of the force brought against him, the French captain, made the most gallant resistance, which was soon rendered equal by the Thames unavoidably falling behind, and dropping out of the action. The fire of the Venerable, however, directed at the hull of her opponent, was beginning to tell severely on the enemy's crew, when the French gunners, by a fortunate discharge, succeeded in bringing down her mainmast, and with it most of her rigging, so that she fell behind, and soon after her other masts went by the board, and she struck on the shoals of San Pedro. In this desperate situation Captain Hood still maintained a contest with the stern chasers of the Formidable (2), and gave time for two other ships of the line to come up; upon the appearance of which the enemy relinquished their design of attacking the disabled vessel, and crowding all sail, stood in for Cadiz harbour, where they were soon after moored in safety.

The intelligence of this bold and fortunate engagement, in which a British fleet so severely handled an enemy's squadron of nearly double its own force, excited the greater joy in Great Britain, that the preceding failure in Algesiraz bay had somewhat mortified a people, nursed by long continued success to unreasonable expectations of constant triumph on their favourite element. On the other hand, the frightful catastrophe of their two first-rate men-of-war spread the utmost consternation through the Spanish peninsula, and increased that strong repugnance which the Castilian youth had long manifested for the naval service (5).

Attack of Napoleon on Portugal.

Contemporaneous with these maritime operations was a measure, from which Napoleon anticipated much more in the way of forming a counterpoise to the vast colonial acquisitions made by Great Britain during the wit, and this was an attack upon Portugal, the ancient and tried ally of Lugland. The French, according to their own admission, had no cause of complaint against that power, the only motive of the war was to provide an equivalent to the maritime conquests of Lugland. "We only wished," says Bignon, "to enter into that kingdom in order to leave it, and stipulate for that retreat some considerable concession from Great Britain." The most obvious means of effecting this object was to interest Spain in its execution, and this was adroitly managed by the first consult in the treaty of Luncville, as already observed, it was stipulated that the grand duchy of Tuscany should be ceded by the Austrian family, and erected into a Treaty of Education of the Complete of the Spainsh family, and that the duchy was soon after erected into royalty, force.

⁽¹⁾ James, iii. 180, 183. Ann. Reg. 1801, 253. Jom. Niv. 368, 371. Dum. vii. 132, 135. Bign. ii. Jom. xiv. 369. Dum. vii. 130, 132. 38. 39. (2) James iii. 181, 185. Ann. Reg. 1801, 258. (3) Jom. xix. 371. Ann. Reg. (4) 253, 251

first to divine what was the motive for this sudden condition in favour of the out is Spanish house of Bourbon, but it was soon made manifest, when it appeared that a treaty had been concluded between France and Spani, the object of which was, "to compel the court of Lebon to separate itself from the alliance of Great Britain, and cede, till the conclusion of a general peace, a fourth of its territory to the French and Spanish forces (1) "

This flagrant and unprovoked invasion of the rights of a pacific state, took place at the very time when brance was loudly proclaiming the principles of the armed neutrality, and the utter injustice of one belligerent interfering with the trade or alliances of independent powers. But it soon appeared that the first consul's tenderness for neutral rights was all on one element, where he was weakest, and that on the other, where his power was well night arresistable, he was prepared to go the utmost length of belligerent aggression, and compel every other state to enter into his projects of universal hostility against Great Britain So early as December 1800, when the victory of Hohenlinden had relieved him of all anxiety on the side of Germany. he had given orders for the formation of an army of observation at Bordeaux, which gradually drew towards the Pyrenees, and was increased to twenty thousand men, and this was followed some months afterwards by a declara-Ma h 3 801 tion of war on the part of Spain, against the Court of Lisbon The ostensible grounds of complaint on which this step was rested, were the refusal by the Court of I isbon to ratify a peace with France, signed by its plemipotentiary in 1797, accompanied with a complaint that she had furnished protection to the English fleets and sailors, and insulted the French in the harbour of Carthagena The real reasons for the war were very different "The Courts of Lisbon and Madrid," says the French historian, "united by recent intermarriages, had no real subjects of dispute. They were drawn into the contest because the one was attached to the political system of France, the other to that of Great Britain (2) ' Spain was at this time entirely under the guidance of the Prince of Peace, a vain and ambitious favourite who had risen from an obscure origin, by court intrigue, to an elevation little short of the throne, and threw himself willingly into the arms of France, in order to seek an effectual support against the pride and patriotism of the Castilian noblesse, who were exceedingly jealous of his authority. Guided by such a ruler, Spain made herself the willing instrument of France in this tyrannical aggression She afterwards explated her faults in oceans of blood (3)

In this extremity the Portuguese Government naturally turned to England

The Paise for support, and offered, if she would send an army of twentyhypto Eng. five thousand men, to give her the command of the native forces.
hand for a.d. Ilad it been in the power of Great Britain to have acceded to this offer, the desperate struggle of the peninsula might have been accelerated by eight years, and the triumphs of Busaco and Vimiera graced the conclusion of the first part of the war. But it was impossible to make such an effort;
her only disposable force was already engaged in Egypt, and the great contest in the north, as yet undecided required all the means which were at the disposal of her government. All that could be done, therefore, was to send a few regiments to Lisbon, with a loan of L.500,000, in order if possible to procure a respite from the impending danger till the general peace, which it was already foreseen could not be far distant (1).

Deprived in this manner of any effectual external aid, the Portuguese Government, to appearance at least, was not wanting to its ancient renown. An animated proclamation was put forth, in which the people were reminded of their ancestors' heroic resistance to the Romans, and their imperishable achievements in the southern hemisphere; new armaments were ordered, works hastily constructed, a levy en masse called forth, and the plate borrowed from the churches to aid Government in carrying on the means of defence. But during all this shew of resistance, there was a secret luguese makeno understanding between the courts of Lisbon and Madrid; the regutestifance. lar troops on the frontier, about twenty thousand strong, were hardly increased by a single soldier; and when, in the end of May, the Spanish army of thirty thousand combatants invaded the country, they experienced hardly any resistance. Jurumenha and Olivenza at once opened their gates; Campo Mayor, though amply provided with every thing requisite to sustain a siege, only held out a fortnight; and the Portuguese, flying in disorder, made haste to throw the Tagus between them and the enemy. Even Elvas, which never lowered its colours in a more glorious strife, Peace consurrendered, and in a fortnight after the war commenced, this chuled. collusive contest was terminated by the signature of preliminaries of peace at Abrantes. By this treaty, which was ratified on September 29th, Olivenza, with its circumjacent territory, was ceded to Spain, and the ports of Portugal were shut against the English flag (2). No sooner were the terms of this treaty known in France than the first consulfirst consul refused to ratify them. Not that he had either any anirefuses to ratify. mosity or cause of complaint against the Cabinet of Lisbon, but that by this pacification the main object of the war was missed, namely, the occupation of such a portion of the Portuguese territory by the French troops, as might give weight to the demands of France for restitution of her conquered colonies from Great Britain (3). The French army of observation, accordingly, under Leclerc and St.-Cyr, five-and-twenty thousand strong, which had advanced to Ciudad Rodrigo, entered Portugal, invested Almeida, and threatened both Lisbon and Oporto. The Portuguese Government now A French made serious preparations; six sail of the line were detached from army in-vades for-Lisbon to reinforce the English blockading squadron off Cadiz, and such efforts as the time would admit made to reinforce the army on the frontier. But the contest was too unequal, and England, anticipating the seizure of the continental dominions of the house of Braganza, had already taken possession of the island of Madeira, to secure its colonial dominions from insult,

⁽¹⁾ Ann. Reg. 256, 257. Dum. vii. 63. Jom. xiv. (2) Big. ii. 12, 13. Jom. xiv. 223, 299. Ann. Reg. 1801, 258. (3) Big. ii. 13.

when the tempest was averted by external events. The near approach of an accommodation between France and England, made it a greater object for the first consul to extend his colonial acquisitions, than enlarge his conquests on the continent of Europe; while the arrival of a convoy with a great supply of silver from Brazil, gave the Portuguese Government the means both of satisfying his pecuniary demands, and gratifying the cupidity of his inferior agents. To use the words of a French historian-"The Portuguese Government holding the purse, threw it at the feet of the robbers, and thus saved itself from destruction (1)" Bribes were liberally bestowed on the French generals (2), and so completely did this seasonable supply clu ird by remove all difficulties, that a treaty was soon concluded, in virtue pecu ary of which, Olivenza, with its territory, was confirmed to Spain, the harbours of Portugal were closed against English ships, both of war and commerce, one half of Guiana, as far as the Carapanatuba stream, was ceded to France, and the commerce of the Republic was placed on the footing of the most favoured nations (5) By a less honourable and secret article, the immediate payment of 20,000,000 francs was made the condition of the retreat of the French troops (1)

As the war approached a termination, the anxiety of Napoleon to offices the tower to procure equivalents for the English transitlantic acquisitions between the procure equivalents for the English transitlantic acquisitions between the procure equivalents for the English transitlantic acquisitions between the procure of the English transitlantic acquisitions between the Prussa to seize Hanover, an insidious though tempting offer, which would have rendered that power permanently a dependent on France, and totally altered the balance of European politics. But the Prussan Cabinet had good sense enough, at that time at least, to see that no such gratuations act of spolitions was likely to prove a permanent acquisition, and to decline the proposal (5) Meanwhile, Napokon, relieved by the treaty of Luneville, from all apprehensions of a serious continental struggle, bent all his attenthe insa tion to the shores of Great Britain, and made serious preparations for invasion on his own side of the Channel. Though not of the gigantic character which they assumed in a later period of the contest, after the renewal of the war, these efforts were of a kind to excite the serious attention of the English Government From the mouth of the Scheldt to that of the Garonne, every creek and headland was fortified, so as to afford protection to the small eraft which were creeping round the shore from all the barbours of the kingdom, to the general rendezvous of Dunkirk and Boulogne The latter harbour was the general point of assemblage, gun-boats and flat-bottomed praams were collected in great quantities, furnaces heated for redhot shot, immense batteries constructed, and every preparation made, not only for a vigor .

nanci
them
to the a cool of the cool of th streams to the harbours on the Channel The immensity of these preparations was studiously dwell upon in the I rench papers; nothing was talked of but the approaching descent upon Great Britain; and fame, ever the first to sound the alarm, so magnified their amount, that when a few buttalous pitched their tents on the heights of Boulogue, it was universally credited in England that the army of invasion was about to take its station preparatory to the threatened attempt (1).

⁽¹⁾ Eign is 13, note (2) Leclerc got 5 000,000 francs, or L 200 000. for his own share —Harb visi 136

⁽³⁾ See the treaty in Dum vii 251. Incres Just (4) B gm ii 14. Hard viii 135 (5) B gm ii 17, 15. Hard viii, 34, 35

Though not participating in the vulgar illusion as to the immisions of the British Gonence of the danger, the English Government had various weighty reasons for not disregarding the preparations on the southern coast of the Channel. The fleets of Great Britain in the narrow seas were indeed so powerful that no attempt at invasion by open-force could be made with any chance of success (2); but it was impossible to conceal the alarming fact, that the same wind which wafted the French flotilla out of its harbours might chain the English cruisers to theirs; and the recent expeditions of Gantheaume in the Mediterranean, and of Hoche to the coast of Ireland, had demonstrated that, notwithstanding the greatest maritime superiority, it was impossible at all times to prevent a vigilant and active enemy from putting to sea during the darkness of autumnal or winter months. It was easy too to foresee, that even although ultimate defeat might attend a descent, incalculable confusion and distress would necessarily follow it in the first instance. It was to be expected also, that the destruction of the armament might influence the issue of the negotiations for peace; and that if the first consul saw that his flotilla was not secure from insult even in his own harbours, he would probably abate of the pretensions which his extraordinary successes had induced him to bring forward (5).

Influenced by these views, the British Government prepared a powerful armament of bombs and light vessels in the Downs, and intrusted the command to Lord Nelson, whose daring and successful exploits at Aboukir and the Nile pointed him out as peculiarly fitted for an enterprise of that descrip-Attack on the flotilla at Boution. On the 1st August he set sail from Deal at the head of three ships of the line, two frigates, and thirty-five bombs, brigs, and logne by Nelson. · smaller vessels, and stood over to the French coast. He himself strongly urged that the expedition, aided by a few thousand troops, should be sent against Flushing; but the Cabinet resolved that it should proceed against Boulogne, and thither accordingly he went, much against his inclination. After a reconnoissance, attended with a slight cannonade on both sides, soon after his arrival, a more serious attack took place on the night of the 15th August. But in the interval the French line of boats had been rendered wellnigh unassailable. Every vessel was defended by long poles headed by iron spikes projecting from their sides; strong nettings were braced up to their lower yards; they were moored head and stern across the harbour-mouth in the strongest possible manner, chained to the ground and each other, and on board each was from fifty to an hundred soldiers, each provided with three muskets, as in defending a breach threatened with assault. In addition to this the whole were immediately under the guns of the batteries on shore, and every eminence capable of bearing a cannon had been armed with a powerful array of artillery. Notwithstanding these formidable circumstances, Nelson commenced the attack at midnight in four divisions of boats. The second division, under Captain Parker, first closed with the enemy; and in the most gallant style instantly endeavoured to board. But the strong netting baffled all their efforts, and as they were vainly endeavouring to cut their way through it, a discharge of musketry from the soldiers on board killed or wounded above half their number,

⁽¹⁾ Dum. vii. 140, 141. Jom. xiv. 380, 381. Ann. Reg 1801, 263.

⁽²⁾ England at this period had fourteen ships of the line under Admiral Cornwallis off Brest, and seventeen in the German Ocean observing the Dutch harbours."—Janus, iii. Ap. No. 2, and Dunas, vii. 114.

⁽³⁾ Ann. Reg. 1801, 266. Jon. xiv. 385.

including their gallant leader Captain Parker, who was desperately mained while cheering on his men. The darkness of the night, and the rapidity of the tide, which prevented the other divisions from getting into action at the same time as Captain Parker's, rendered the attack abortive, notwithstaining the most gallant efforts on the part of the seamen and marines engaged in the service. One of the commanders of the French division beliated like a generous enemy. He hailed the boats as they approached, and called out in Fighst, "Let me advise you, brave Englishmen, to keep off, you can do nothing here, it is only shedding the blood of brave men to attempt it." Here four hours gallant but unequal combat, the assailants were obliged to retire, with the loss of 172 men falled and wounded, but Acison declared that, "If all the boats could have arrived at their destined points at the periods assigned to them, not all the chains in France could have prevented our men from bringing off the whole of the vessels (1)."

A singular circumstance occurred at this time, which demonstrates how little the clearest intellect can anticipate the ultimate result of the discoveries which are destined to effect the greatest changes in human affairs. At the time when all eyes in Europe were fixed on the Channel, and the orators in the French tribunate were wishing for "a fair wind and thirty six hours," an unknown individual (2) presented himself to the first consul, and said, "The sea which separates you from your enemy gives him an immenso advantage. Aided alternately by the winds and the tempests, he braves you in his maccessible isle. This obstacle, his sole strength, I engage to overcome I can, in spite of all his fleets, at any time, in a few hours, transport your armies into his territory, without fearing the tempests, or having need of the winds. Consider the means which I offer you " The plan and details accompanying it were received by Napoleon, and by him remitted to a commission of the most learned men which France could produce, who reported that it was visionary and impracticable, and in consequence it, at that time, came to nothing (5) Such was the reception which steam vavi-GATION received at the hands of philosophy, such is the first success of the greatest discovery of modern times since the invention of printing, of one destined in its ultimate effects, to produce a revolution in the channels of commerce, after the art of naval war, work out the overthrow of empires, change the face of the world The discovery seemed made for the age, and yet genius and philosophy rejected it at the very time when it was most required, and when it seemed calculated to carry into effect the vast projects which were already matured by its great leader. But the conimental writers were in error when they suppose that this vast acquisition to nautical power would, if it had been fully developed at that time, have led to the subjugation of Britain, the English maritime superiority would have appeared as clearly in the new method of carrying on naval war as the old, Albion would have been encircled by steam vesse's, if the French boats, aided by such auxiliaries, could have braved the wind and the tide, the English cruisers would have been equally assisted in the maintenance of their blockade, the stoutest heart and the last guinea would have imally carried the day, whatever changes occurred in the mode of carrying on the contest, and even if their wooden walls had been broken through, the future conquerors of Vittoria and Waterloo had no cause for despondency, if the war came to be conducted by land forces on their own shores

But these warlike demonstrations were a mere cover on both sides to the real intentions of the two Cabinets; and in the midst of the hostile fleets and armies which covered the Channel and the coasts of France, couriers were incessantly passing, carrying despatches containing the negotiations for a general peace. In truth, the war had now ceased to have any present or definitive object with both the powers by whom it was maintained, tions for and they were driven to an accommodation from the experienced pesie between impossibility of finding any common element in which their hosti-France and England. lities could be carried ou. After the loss of all her colonies, the ruin of her commerce, and the disappearance of her flag from the ocean, it was as impossible for France to find a method of annoying Great Britain, as it was for England to discover the means of reducing the continental power of her enemy, after the peace of Luneville had prostrated the last array of the military monarchies of Europe. Even if their mutual hostility were inextinguishable, still both had need of breathing-time to prepare for a renewal of the contest; the former that she might regain the commerce and colonies on which her naval strength depended, the latter that she might restore the finances which the enormous expenses of the contest had seriously disorganized.

March 21. So early as the 21st March, the British Cabinet had signified to M. Otto, who still remained in London to superintend the arrangements for the exchange of prisoners, that they were disposed to renew the negotiations which had so often been opened without success; and it was agreed between the two governments that, without any general suspension of arms, the basis of a treaty should be secretly adjusted. When the terms, however, came to be first proposed, there appeared to be an irreconcilable difference between them; nor was this surprising, for both had enjoyed a career of almost unbroken success upon their separate elements, and each was called on to make sacrifices for peace, which it was quite evident could not be exacted from them by force of arms if the contest was continued. Lord Hawkes-First pro-posals of England, bury's first proposals were, that the French should evacuate Egypt, and that the English should retain Malta, Ceylon, Trinity, and Martinique, and evacuate all the other colonies which they had conquered during the war; acquisitions which, how great soever, did not seem disproportionate to the vast continental additions received by France in the extension of her frontier to the Rhine, and the establishment of a girdle of affiliated republics round the parent state. But to these conditions the first consul refused to accede. "The resolution of the first consul," says the historian of his diplomacy, "was soon taken. France could neither surrender any part of its ancient domains nor its recent acquisitions (1)."

July 23. The views of Napoléon were developed in a note of M. Otto, on the 25d July, after the dissolution of the northern confederacy had relieved England of one of the greatest of her dangers, and disposed France to proceed with more moderation in the negotiation; and their defeat in Egypt had deprived them of all hopes of retaining that colony by force of arms. He proposed that Egypt should be restored to the Porte; that the republic formed of the seven Ionian islands should be recognised; that the harbours of Italy should be restored to the Pope and the King of Naples; port Mahon ceded to Spain, and Malta to the Knights of Jerusalem, with the offer to raze its fortifications. In the East Indies, he offered to abandon Ceylon to Great Britain, upon condition that all the other colonial conquests of England in both hemispheres should be restored, and in that event agreed to respect the integrity of Portugal(1) Lord Hanke-bury, in answer, suggested some arrangement by which Milta might be rendered independent of both parties, and maisted for the retention of some of the British conquests in the West Indies (2). The negotiations were prolonged for several months, but at length the difficulties were all adjusted, and the preliminaries of a general perce signed at London on the 1-t October (5)

Ciris. By these articles it was agreed that hostilities should immediately Peril tox ice cease by land and sea between the contracting parties, that Great Britain should restore its colonial conquests in every part of the world, Ceylon in the Last and Trinidad in the West Indias alone excepted, which were edded in entire overeignty to that power, that I gypt should be restored to the Porte, Milta and its dependencies to the order of St John of Jerusalem, the Cape of Good Hope to Holland, but opened abke to the tride of both the contracting powers, the integrity of Portugal guaranteed, the harbours of the Roman and Neapolitan states evacuated by the French, and Porto Perruo by the l'aglish forces, a compensation provided for the house of Arsau, and the republic of the Seven Islands recognised by the I reach Republic. The tisheries of Newfoundland were restored to the situation in which they had been before the war, reserving their final arrangement to the definitive treaty (4)

Though the negotiations had been so long in dependence, they had been kent a profound secret from the people of both countries, and their long continuance had sensibly weakened the hone of their being brought to a satisfactory result. Lither from accident or design, this impression had been greatly strengthened, recently before the signature of the preliminaries, and the very day before, the report had gone abroad in London, that all hope of an imicable adjustment was at an end, and that interninable war was likely again to break out between the two nations. In proportion to the desponding feelings occasioned by this impression, were the transports of joy excited by the appearance of a London Gazette Extraordinary on the 2d October, announcing the signature of the preliminaries on the preceding day. The 5 per cents instantly rose from 19 to 66, the tiers consolide at Paris from 18 to 65. Tree puts Universal toy pervaded both capitals. These feelings rapidly spread sion prip gas aces alter a through the whole British nation, as the arrival of the post innounced the joyful intelligence, and the public satisfaction was at and Las its height, when on the 12th of the same month Colonel Lauriston arrived, bearing the rathertion of the treaty by the French Government Mover since the restoration of Charles II had such transports seized the public mind The populace insisted on drawing the French envoys in their carriage, and they were conducted by this tumultuary array, followed by a guard of honour from the household brigade, through Parliament Street to Downing Street, where the rathertions were exchanged, and at night a general illuminution gave vent to the feelings of universal exhibitation. Aer was the public joy manifested in a less emphatic manner at Paris. Hardly had the cannon of the Tuilcries and the Invalides announced the unexpected in-

⁽¹⁾ I to 123 days.

(3) Lg in '33 d J has not $55

(4) Le in '3 has no $23 all

The clause regard; gt la s which become of to man importance in the sequel from the matter softens the ground of it empires of the treaty was in these terms. The identified Walts with its debe placed under the guarantee of a third jumer to be no acd in the debut o treaty "-Urnes, to telligence, when every one stopped in the streets and congratulated his acquaintance on the news; the public flocked in crowds to the theatres, where it was officially announced, and in the evening the city was universally and splendidly illuminated. There seemed no bounds to the prosperity and glory of the Republic, now that this auspicious event had removed the last and most inveterate of its enemies (1).

But while these were the natural feelings of the inconsiderate suggestivet populace, who are ever governed by present impressions, and were in Luctand for the most part destitute of the information requisite to form a rational opinion on the subject, there were many men gifted with greater sagacity and foresight in Great Britain, who deeply lamented the conditions by which peace had been purchased, and from the very first prophesied that it could be of no long endurance. They observed that the war had been abruptly terminated, without any one of the objects being gained for which it was undertaken; that it was entered into in order to curb the ambition, and stop the democratic propagandism of France, and in an especial manner prevent the extension of its authority in the Low Countries, whereas by the result its power was immensely extended, its frontier advanced to the Rhine, its influence to the Niemen, and a military chieftain placed at its head, capable of wielding to the best advantage its vast resources. That supposing the destruction of some, and the humiliation of other powers, had absolved England from all her ties with the continental states, and left her at full liberty to consult only her own interest in any treaty which might be formed, still it seemed at best extremely doubtful whether the preliminaries which had been signed were calculated to accomplish this object; that they contributed nothing towards the coercion of France on one element, while they gave that power the means of restoring its fleets, and recruiting the sinews of war on another; and that then the result necessarily would be, that England would be compelled to renew the contest again, and that too at no distant period, in order to maintain her existence, and she would then find her enemy's resources as much strengthened as her own were weakened during its cessation; that during the struggle we had deprived France of all her colonies, blockaded her harbours, ruined her commerce, and almost annihilated her navy, and therefore had nothing to fear from her maritime hostility; but could this be affirmed, if, in pursuance of this treaty, we restored almost all her colonial possessions, and enabled her, by a successful commerce, in a few years to revive her naval power? If, therefore, the principle, so long maintained by Great Britain, had any foundation, and the hostility of revolutionary France was implacable, it was evident that she has every thing to fear and nothing to hope from this pacification; and while England unlooses her own armour, and lays aside her sword, she will in truth place in the hands of her redoubtable adversary the weapons, and the only weapons, by which ere long she will be enabled to aim mortal strokes at herself.

Arguments urged in support of

The partisans of administration, and the advocates for peace throughout the country, opposed to these arguments, considerations of another kind, perhaps still more specious. They contended that the real question was not, what were the views formed, or the hopes indulged, when we entered into the war, but what were the prospects which could rationally be entertained, now that we had reached its. tenth year? That without pretending to affirm that the resources of Great Britain were worn out or peace had become a matter of necessity, still it was impossible hostilities.

reducing the inhitary power of France had become almost hopeiess; mai times the question was, whether, after it had become impossible, by the disasters of our aliles, to attain one object of the war, we should obstituately and single-handed maintain the contest, without any definite end to be gained by it accounts that though the frontiers of France had been extended, and extinguished. That thus the contest had ceased to be, as at his, one of me and death to England, and returned to the usual state of warfare between regular governments, in which the cost of maintaining it was to be balanced by the advantages to be gained from its prosecution; that without doubt the return of peace, and the restoration of her colonies would give France the means of increasing her naval resources, but it would probably do the same in an equal or greater degree to Great Britain, and leave the maritime power of the two countries in the same relative situation as before, that it was impossible to remain for ever at war, lest your enemy should repair the losses he had sustained during the contest, and the enormous expenses with which the struggle was attended would, if much longer continued, involve the finances of the country in inextricable embarrassment; that it was surely worth while trying, now that a regular government was established in the Republic, whether it was not possible to remain with so near a neighbour on terms of amily; and it would be time enough to take up arms again, if the conduct of the first consul demonstrated that he was not sincere in his professions, and that a renewal of the contest would be less perilous than a continuance of peace (1) The termination of hostilities between France and England speedily drew after it the accommodation of the differences of the minor powers engaged in the war. No sooner were the preliminaries signed with Great Britain, than Napoleon used his utmost efforts to conclude a treaty on the most favourable terms with the Ottoman Porte. On this occasion the linesse of European diplomacy prevailed over the plain sense and upright dealing of the Osmanlis. The news of the surrender of Mexandria reached Paris on the 7th October, six days after the preliminaries had been signed with England; instantly the Turkish ambas-ador, Esseyd Mr Effendi, who had long been in a sort of confinement, was sent for, and before he was aware of the important success which had been gained by his countrymen, persuaded to turen France and agree to a treaty, which was signed two days uncle of their alleged with Bassis negotiation, the I rench diplomatists made great use of their alleged with Bassis. agree to a treaty, which was signed two days afterwards. In this and America. moderation in agreeing to the restoration of Egypt, which they knew was already lost, and so worked upon the fears of the ambassador by threats of a descent from Ancona and Otranto, that he agreed to give to the Republican commerce in the Levant the same advantages which the most favoured nations enjoyed, and, at the same time, the Republic of the Seven foman Islands was recognised. Thus, by the arts of M. Talleyrand, were the French, who, in defiance of ancient treaties, had done all in their power to wrest Egypt from the Turks, placed on the same footing with the English, by whose blood and treasure it had been rescued from their grasp (2).

France and Bavaria, by which the latter power renounced in favour of the former all their territories and possessions on the left bank of the Rhine, and received, on the other hand, a guarantee for its dominions on the right bank (1). The preliminaries, signed at Morfontaine on September 50, 1800, between France and America, were ratified by a definitive treaty which somewhat abridged the commercial advantages stipulated in favour of the Resept. 9. public, although it placed the French on the footing of the most favoured nations (2). But notwithstanding all his exertions, the first consul was obliged to forego the peculiar advantages which, in the treaty of 1778, the gratitude of the Americans to Louis XVI had granted to the subjects of France. Finally, a treaty of peace was, on October 8th, concluded between France and Russia, and on December 17th, between the same power and the Dev of Algiers (5).

The preliminary articles of peace underwent a protracted discussion in both Houses of Parliament, immediately after the opening of the session in November 1801. The eyes of all the world were fixed on the only assembly in existence, where the merits of so important a treaty, and the mighty interests it involved, could receive a free discussion.

It was urged by Lord Grenville, Mr. Windham, and the war party in both houses, "By the result of this treaty we are in truth a conquered people. Bonaparte is as much our master as he is of Spain or Prussia, or any of those countries which, though nominally independent, are really subjected to his control. Are our resources exhausted? Is the danger imminent, that such degrading terms are acceded to? On the contrary, our wealth is unbounded, our fleets are omnipotent, and we have recently humbled the veterans of France, even on their own element! We now make peace, it seems, because we foresee a time at no distant period, when we shall be obliged to do so; we capitulate, like General Menou, when we have still some ammunition left. The first question for every independent against the peace. power inheriting a glorious name to ask itself is, 'Is the part I am to act consonant to the high reputation I have borne in the world?' Judging by this standard, what shall we say of the present treaty? France gives up nothing, for Egypt, at the time of its conclusion, was not hers to give. England, with the exception of Trinidad and Ceylon, gives up every thing. By of affairs." The ninth article guaranteed the independence of the republic of the Seven Islands; "and it is specially provided, that those isles shall contain no foreign troops." Finally, the eleventh article, the most important of the whole, declares:—"As soon as possible after the signature of the present treaty, and these secret articles, the two contracting parties shall enter upon the consideration of the establishment of a general peace, upon the following basis : 'To restore a just equilibrium in the different parts of the world, and to ensure the liberty of the seas, binding themselves to act in concert for the attainment of these objects by all measures, whether of conciliation or vigour, mutually agreed on between them, for the good of humanity, the general repose, and the independence of governments " So early had these great potentates taken upon themselves to act as the arbiters of the whole affairs of the civilized world! These secret articles were in the end the cause of all the dif erences which ensued between those powers, and brought the French to Moscow and the Russians to Paris. So often does overweening ambition outvault itself, and fall on the other side .- See Bigaoa, ii. 90, 93.

⁽¹⁾ State Papers. Ann. Reg. 1801, 297.

⁽²⁾ Jom. xiv. 399.

⁽³⁾ Ann. Reg 1801. State Papers, 291, 300.

Important treaty between the two empires on the footing on France and which they stood prior to the commence and the two empires on the footing on France and which they stood prior to the commence of the greatest importance in the complicated system of European diplomacy. The first article related to the division of the indemnities provided by the treaty of Luneville for the princes dispossessed on the left bank of the Rhine. The two cabinets bound themselves "to form a perfect concert, to lead the parties interested to adopt their principles, which are to preserve a just equilibrium between the houses of Austria and Prussia." The second article provided, that the high contracting parties should come to an understanding to terminate on anicable terms the affairs of Italy and of the Holy See. The sixth article provides, "The first consul and the Emperor of Russia shall act in concect in relation to the King of Sardinia, and with alt the regard possible to the actual state the result of the treaty, France possesses in Europe all the continent, excepting Justria and Prussia, in Asia, Pondicherry, Cochini, Negapitatin, and the Spice Islands, in Mirica, the Cape of Good Hope, Goree, and Senegal, in the Mediterranean, every forthied port, excepting Gibraltar, so that that inland sea may now be truly called a French lake, in the West Indies, part at least of St. -Domingo, Martinique, Tobago, St. -Lucie, Guadaloupe, Curaroa, in North America, St. -Pictre and Miguelon, Louisiana, in virtue of a secret treaty with Spain, in South America, Surinam, Demerara, Berbiec, Essequibo, and Guiana, as far as the river of the Amazons. Such is the power which we are required to contemplate without dismay, and under the shadow of whose greatness we are invited to be down with perfect tranquility and composure. What would the Marlboroughs, the Goodolphins, the Somers, or such week and deluded men, as viewed with jealousy the power of Louis VIV, have said to a peace which not only confirms to France the posse sion nearly of the whole of Lurope, but extends her empire over every other part of the globe?

"But it is said that France and the first consul will stop short in the career of ambition, that they will be satisfied with the successes they have gained, and that the progress of the Revolution will stop at the elevation it has already attained Is such the nature of ambition? Is it the nature of French revolutionary ambition? Does it commonly happen that either communities or single men are cured of the passion for aggrandisement by unlimited success? On the contrary, if we examine the French Revolution, and trace it correctly to its causes, we shall find that the scheme of univer-al empire was, from the beginning, what was looked forward to as the consummation of its labours, the end first in view, though the last to be accomplished, the primum mobile that originally set it in motion, and has since guided and Loverned all their movements. The authors of the Revolution wished, in the first instance, to destroy morality and religion, but they wished these things, not as ends, but as means in a higher design. They wished for a double empire, in empire of opinion, and an empire of political power, and they used the one of these as the means of effecting the other. When there is but one country intervenes between France and universal dominion, is it to be supposed that she will stop of her own accord, and quietly surrender all the from of her efforts, when they are just within her grasp?

"But the peace is founded, it would appear, on another hope, on the idea that Bonaparte, now that he has become a sovereign, will no longer be a supporter of revolutionary schemes, but do his utmost to maintain the rank and authority which he has so recently acquired. But although nothing scenis more certain than that, in that quarter at least, the demogratic mania is for the present completely extinguished, yet it by no means follows from that circumstance that it does not exist, and that too in a most dangerous form, in other states in close alhance with the present ruler of France. Though the head of an absolute monarchy in that kingdom, he is adored as the essence of Jacobinism in this country, and maintains a party here, only the more dangerous that its members are willing to sacrifice to him not only the independence of their country, but the whole consistency of their previous opimons. If any doubt could exist in any reasonable mind that the grand object of the first consul, as of all preceding povernments in France, has been the destruction of this country, it would be removed by the conduct which has been pursued, and the objects that have been insisted for in this very treaty. What can be the object of demanding so many settlements in South America and the West Indies, the Cape, and Cochin-China, and Malta, so recently won by our arms, if not of building up a maritime and colonial power, which may in time come to rival that of this country? It does not augus very favourably of the intentious of a party in any transaction, that his conduct throughout has been marked by the clearest proofs of duplicity and fraud. Now, what shall we think of the candour and fairness which, in a treaty with us, proposes the evacuation of Egypt at the very time when they knew, though we did not, that at that moment all their soldiers in Egypt were prisoners of war? Where was their good faith to the Turks, when in the same circumstances they, knowing the fact and the Turks not, took credit from them for this very evacuation? What is this but ensuring the lottery-ticket at the moment when they know it to be drawn?

"What, it is said, are we to do? War cannot be eternal, and what prospect have we of reaching a period when it may be terminated under circumstances upon the whole more favourable? The extent to which this delusion has spread, may truly be said to have been the ruin of the country. The supporters of this opinion never seem to have apprehended the important truth, that if France is bent upon our destruction, there must be perpetual war till one or other is destroyed. This was the conduct of the Romans, who resolved that Carthage should be destroyed, because they were sensible that if that was not done, it would speedily be their own fate. If we are to come at last only to an armed truce, would it not have been better to have suspended the war at once in that way, that taken the roundabout course which has now been adopted? The evils of war are indeed many; but what are they compared to those of the armed, suspicious, jealous, peace which we have formed? Against all its own dangers war provided; the existence of our fleets upon the ocean, shut up at once all those attempts which are now let loose upon our possessions in every quarter of the globe. In peace, not the least part of our danger will arise from the irreligious principles and licentious manners which will be let loose upon our people, and spread with fatal rapidity, from the profligacy of the neighbouring capital. French Jacobinism will soon break through stronger bulwarks than the walls of Malta. The people of this country have enjoyed, in such an extraordinary degree, all the blessings of life during the war, public prosperity has increased so rapidly during its continuance, that they have never been able to comprehend the dangers which they were engaged in combating. If they had, we never should have heard, except among the ignorant and disaffected, of joy and exultation through the land, at a peace such as the present. When a great military monarch was at the lowest ebb of his fortunes, and had sustained a defeat which seemed to extinguish all his remaining hopes, we wrote from the field of battle: "We have lost all except our honour." Would to God that the same consolation, in circumstances likely to become in time not less disastrous, remained to Great Britain!

"France, it is true, has made great acquisitions; she has made the Rhine the boundary of her empire; but on our side we have gained successes no less brilliant and striking; we had multiplied our colonies, and our navy rode triumphant. We had rescued Egypt, we had captured Malta and Minorea, and the Mediterranean was shut up from the ships of France and Spain. In the East Indies we had possessed ourselves of every thing except Batavia, which we should have taken, if it had been worth the cost of an expedition. We had made ourselves masters of the Cape, an important and necessary step towards Eastern dominion. In the West Indies, we had every thing desirable, Martinique, Trinidad, St.-Lucie, and Guadeloupe; while on the continent of South America we had under the name of Sunnam and Demerara, almost equal to the European power to whom we have now restored it. But what have we done with these immense acquisitions, far exceeding in present magnitude, and ultimate importance, all the conquests of France on the continent of Europe? Have we retained them as pledges to compel the restoration of the balance of European power, or, if that was impossible, as counterposes in our hands to the acquisitions of France? Not we have surrendered them all at one fell swoop to our implacable enemy, who has thus made as great strides towards martitime supremacy in one single treaty as he had effected toward continental domination in mine successful campaigns (1).

A work of these powerful and energetic arguments it was replied by " about a Loid Hawkesbury and Mr Addington, who on this occasion found an unexpected but powerful ally in Mr Pitt, "That after the conclusion of peace between I rance and the great continental powers. after the dissolution of the confederacy of the European monarchies, a confederacy which Covernment had most justly supported to the utmost of their power, the question of peace became merely one of time, and of the terms to be obtained for ourselves. With regard to the terms which were obtained, they were perhaps not so favourable as could have been wished. but they were decidedly preferable to a continuance of the contest, after the great objects for which it was undertaken were no longer attainable. and the difference between the terms we had obtained, and those of retaining all we had given up, would not have justified us in protracting the war Minoren was a matter of little importance, for experience has proved that it uniformly fell to the power which possessed the preponderating naval force in the Mediterranean, and although it was certainly a matter of regret that we could not have retained so important an acquisition as Milta, yet, if we could not do this, no better arrangement could have been made as to its future destination, than had been made in the present treaty Ceylon, in the Last, and Trinidad in the West Indies, are both acquisitions of great value, and although it would be ridiculous to assert that they ifforded any compensation for the expense of the war, yet, if, by the force of external events, over which we had no control, the chief objects of the struggle have been frustrated, it becomes a fit subject of congratulation, that we have obtained acquisitions and honourable terms for ourselves at the termination of a contest, which to all our allies had been deeply checkered by disaster

"The great object of the war on the part of Great Britain was security, defence of ourselves and our allies in a war waged against most of the nations of 1 urope, and ourselves in particular, with especial malignity In order to obtain this, we certainly did look for the subsersion of the government which was founded on revolutionary principles, but we never insisted as a sine qua non on the restoration of the old government of I rance, we only said, at different times, when terms of accommodation were proposed, there was no government with which we could treat. It doublits would have been more consistent with the wishes of Ministers and the interest and security of this country, if such a restoration could have taken place, and it must ever be a subject of regret that cliforts corresponding to our own were not made by the other powers of I urope for the accomplishment of that great work, but in no one instance did we ever misst upon restring the monarchy. There were periods during the continuance of the war in which we had hopes of being able to put together the scattered fragments of that great and venerable edifice; to have restored the exiled nobility of France; to have re-established a government, certainly not free from defects, but built upon regular foundations instead of that mad system of innovation which threatened, and had nearly effected, the destruction of Europe. This, it was true, had been found not attainable, but we had the satisfaction of knowing that we had survived the revolutionary fever, and we had seen the extent of its principles abated. We had seen Jacobinism deprived of its fascination; we had seen it stript of the name and pretext of liberty; it had shown itself to be capable of destroying only, but not of building, and that it must necessarily end in military despotism.

"But being disappointed in our hopes of being able to drive France within her ancient limits, and to make barriers against her future incursions, it became then necessary with the change of circumstances to change our plans; for no error could be more fatal than to look only at one object, and obstinately pursue it, when the hope of accomplishing it no longer remained. If it became impossible for us to obtain the full object of our wishes, wisdom and policy both required that we should endeavour to obtain that which was next best. In these propositions there was no inconsistency, either in the former conduct or language of Ministers, in refusing to treat with the person who now holds the destiny of France; for it was even then announced, that if events should take the turn they have since done, peace would no longer be objectionable.

"Much exaggeration prevails as to the real amount of the additional strength which France has acquired during the war. If, on the one hand, her territorial acquisitions are immense, it must be recollected, on the other, what she has lost in population, commerce, capital, and industry. The desolation produced by convulsions such as France has undergone, cannot be repaired even by large acquisitions of territory. When, on the other hand, we contemplate the immense wealth of this country, and the natural and legitimate growth of that wealth, so much superior to the produce of rapacity and plunder, it is impossible not to entertain the hope, founded in justice and nature, of its solidity. When to these we add the great increase of our maritime power, the additional naval triumphs we have obtained, the brilliant victories of our armies, gained over the flower of the troops of France, we have the satisfaction of thinking, that if we have failed in some of our wishes, we have succeeded in the main object, of adding strength to our security, and at the same time shed additional lustre over our national character. Nor are our colonial acquisitions to be overlooked in estimating the consolidation of our resources. The destruction of the power of Tippoo Saib in India, who has fallen a victim to his attachment to France and his perfidy to us, cannot be viewed but as an important achievement. The union with Ireland, effected at a period of uncommon gloom and despondency, must be regarded as adding more to the power and strength of the British Empire than all the conquests of France have effected for that country. If any additional proof were required of the increase of national strength to England, it would be found in the unparalleled efforts which she made in the last year of the war, contending at once against a powerful maritime confederacy in the north, and triumphing over the French on the sands of Egypt; while at the same time the harbours of Europe were so strictly blockaded, that not a frigate even could venture out to sea but under the cover of mist or darkness. Finally, we have seen that proud array of ships, got together for the invasion of this country, driven for shelter under their own hatteries, and only preserved from destruction by the chains and nets thrown over them at their harbour mouths.

"After nine years of ceaseless effusion of blood; after contracting an increase of debt to the amount of above two hundred millions: after the indefatigable and uninterrupted exertions of this country, and, it may be added, after its splendid an unexampled achievements, there is no one who can deny that peace is emmently desirable, if it can be purchased without the sacrifice of honour. This country never volunteered into a war with France; she was drawn into it against her will by the intrigues of the Republicans in her own bosom, and the disaffection, sedition, anarchy, and revolt which they propagated without intermission in all the adjoining states; but that danger has now totally ceased, the revolutionary fervour of France is coerced by a military chieftain far more adequate to the task than the exiled race of monarchs would have been, and the only peril that now exists is that arising from her multary power. But if war is to be continued till adequate security against that danger is obtained, when will it terminate? Where are the elements to be found of a new coalition against France; and how can Great Britain, burdened as she is with colonial possessions in every part of the world, descend single-handed into the continental arena with her first-rate antagonist?

"Peace can now, for the first time since the commencement of the war, be obtained without compromising the interests of any existing ally of England. Austria, Sardima, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Holland, the original parties to the alliance, h.

quested to having don

146 -- , were bound to have done either in honour or honesty. In this respect the stipulations in favour of Naples, who had not only excluded our shipping from her harbours, but joined in an alliance against us, were highly honourable to the British character. The like might be said of the stipulations in favour of Portugal; while the Ottoman Porte, the only one of our allies who remained lighting by our side at the conclusion of the contest, has obtained complete restitution. The seven islands of the Adriatic, originally ceded by France to Austria, and again transferred by Austria to France, might, from their situation, have been highly dangerous in the hands of the latter power to the Turkish dominions, and therefore they have been erected into a senarato republic, the independence of which is guaranteed. We have even dono something in favour of the House of Orange and the hing of Sardinia, although, from having left the confederacy, they had abandoned every claim excepting on our generosity. And thus having faithfully performed our duties to all our remaining allies, and obtained terms, which, to say the least of them, took nothing from the security of this country, was it expedient to continue the contest for the sake of powers who had abandoned our alliance, and themselves given up as hopeless the objects we had originally entertained, and in which they were more immediately interested than our-clies? Compare this peace with any of those recorded in the former history of the two nations, and it will well bear a comparison. By the treaty of Ryswick and Aix-la-Chapelle we gained nothing; by that of Versailles we lost considerably: it was only by the peace of Utrecht in 1713, and that of Paris in 1765, that we made any acquisitions; but if we compare the present treaty with either of these, it will be found that it is by no means inferior either in point of advantage or the promise of durability. Minorca and Gibraltar, obtained by the former, and Canada and Florida, by the latter, will not bear a comparison with Ceylon, the Mysore, and Trinidad, the glorious trophies of the present

In the Commons no division took place on the preliminaries. In the Lords the house divided, 114 to 10, in favour of the Ministers; but in the minority were found the names of Earls Spenser, Grenville, and Caernarvon (2).

The definitive treaty of peace was signed at Amens, on the 27th March, 1802. Its conditions varied in no material circumstance from the preliminaries agreed to at London nine months before. The fisheries in Newfoundland were replaced in the condition in which they were before the war (5); an "adequate compensation" was stipulated for the House of Orange (4), and it was agreed that Malta should be placed in a state of entire independence of both powers; that there should be neither English nor French langues, or branches of the order; that a Maltese langue shall be established. and the King of Sicily invited to furnish a force of 2000 men to form treaty sign-ed at a garrison to the fortresses of the island and its dependencies, Amiens. along with the Grand Master and Order of St.-John; and that "the forces of his Britannic Majesty shall evacuate the island and its dependencies within three months after the exchange of the ratifications, or sooner if it can be done." The cession of Ceylon and Trinidad to Great Britain, and the restoration of all the other conquered colonies to France and Holland, the integrity of the Ottoman dominions, and the recognition of the republic of the Seven Islands, were provided for as in the preliminary articles (5).

A long debate ensued in both Houses on the definitive treaty, in which the topics already adverted to were enlarged on at great length. Government were supported by a majority of 276 to 20 in the Lower, and 122 to 16 in the Upper House (6).

Such was the termination of the first period of the war, and such Reflections on the the terms on which Great Britain obtained a temporary respite from peace, which apits perils and expenses. On calmly reviewing the arguments urged pears to have been both in the legislature and in the country on this great question, it is impossible to resist the conclusion, that the advocates of peace were well founded in the views they entertained of the interests of the country at that period. Even admitting all that Mr. Wyndham and Lord Grenville so strongly advanced as to the magnitude of the sacrifices made by Great Britain, and the danger to which she was exposed from the territorial acquisitions and insatiable ambition of France to be well founded, still the question remained. was it not incumbent on a prudent government to make at least the trial of a pacification, and relieve the country for a time even from the burdens and anxiety of a war, on the faith of a treaty solemnly acceded to by its new ruler. The government of the first consul, compared to any of the revolutionary ones which had preceded it, was stable and regular; and the revolutionary fervour, the continuance of which had so long rendered any safe pacification out of the question, had exhausted itself, and given place to a general and anxious disposition to submit to the ruling authority. The dissolution of the last coalition had rendered hopeless, at least for a very long period, the reduction of the military power of France; and the maritime superiority of

⁽¹⁾ Parl. Hist. xxxvi. 36, 38.

⁽²⁾ Ibid. 191.

⁽³⁾ Art. 15. (4) Art. 18.

⁽⁵⁾ See the treaty in Parl. Hist. xxxvi. 559. Ann. Reg. 1802. State papers, 62. (6) Parl. Hist. xxxvi, 733, 827.

England was so decided, as to render any danger to her own independence a distant and problematical contingency In these circumstances, it seems indisputable that it was the duty of Government, if it could be done without dishonour, to bring to a conclusion a contest of which the burdens were certain and immediate, and the advantages remote, if not illusory, and put the sincerity of the first consul's professions of moderation to such a test as might relieve them of all responsibility, in the event of their being obliged, at a subsequent period, to renew the contest. The fact of this having ultimately been found to be the case, and of the peace of Amiens having turned out only an armed truce, is no impeachment whatever of the justice of these views; it, on the contrary, affords the strongest corroboration of them, for England lost none of her means of defence during the intermission of hostilities, and she avoided the heavy responsibility which otherwise would have lain upon her to the latest generation, of having obstinately continued the war, when peace was within her power, and compelled Napolcon, although otherwise inclined, to continue a contest which ultimately brought such unparalleled calamities on the civilized world. Nor could the terms of the treaty be impugned as disgraceful, with any degree of justice towards Great Britain, when she terminated a strife, which had proved so disastrous to the greatest continental states, with her constitution untouched, and without the cession of a single acro which belonged to her at its commencement; while France, accustomed to such larged acquisitions at every pacification, was compelled to surrender territories belonging to herself, or her allies, larger than the whole realm of England, and even, in their existing state, of first-rate importance.

reserved but increase her resources at the very time when those of all the other between belingerent powers were wasting away under the influence of a proper tracted and desolating contest. The increase of the wealth, population, commerce, and industry of these islands, was unprecedented during its whole continuance, and was so great as fully to justify Mr. Pitty observation, tion, commerce, and industry of these islands, was unprecedented during its whole continuance, and was so great as fully to justify Mr. Pitt's observation, that it left the relative strength of the two powers nearly the same at its termination as at its commencement (1). Great as the increase of the French army was, that of the British had been still greater, and but for the immense 1601 was equivalent to a land force of above 100 000 men.

Now had the multirar resources of the empire increased in a least thinking moner in 1793 the army amounted only to 65 000 regular saiders and dependencing 1, Ann Bry axami 201 wheream 1201 wher proportion, as equal to as army of 120 000 mem; seesured by that standard, the Erstish navy in : 35 Introd clat de France, $13] exclusive of

- See dawn, rub wh lab to and for

⁽⁷⁾ The total many on 1st October 1801 was— Line in communion Line in ord early and be sting

Line in crd wary and be dung

2 , attra in communium

7 ; attra in communium

7 ; gates in exclinary, and be lid ng

8luope, br pt, sic.

third (2),

surface which she had to defend, and the vast colonial possessions to protect, England might have descended with confidence into the continental arena, and measured her strength, single-handed, with the conqueror of Europe (1).

During the war the British navy increased a half, while the French declined to a half. The British army was more than doubled, and the French increased in nearly the same proportion. The French revenue, notwithstanding all its territorial acquisitions, was diminished, while the permanent income of England was nearly doubled; the French debt, by the destruction of a large proportion of its proprietors, was diminished, while that of England was doubled; the French exports and imports were almost annihilated, while the British exports were doubled, and the imports had increased more than fifty per cent; the French commercial shipping was almost destroyed, while that of England had increased nearly a

77,000 provincial troops; in 1801, they amounted to 350,000 regular soldiers, exclusive of the national guards. [flum. vi. 70, 71.]

(1) General Mathieu Dumas estimates the regular force of France, after the peace of Luneville, at 277,000 men, exclusive of the coast guards, the gendarmeric, the depots of the corps, and the national guard, on active service. It is a most moderate computation to take them at 73,000 more

In 1805 the military establishment of France consisted of the following forces:—

		٠.
Infantry of the line,							341,000
Light infantry, .		•	٠	•	٠	•	100,000
lnfantry, .	•	•		•			441,000
Light cavalry,				•			60,500
Heavy cavalry, .	٠	٠	•	•	•	•	17,000
Cavalry, .		•	•	•			77,500
Foot and horse artill	er	у, г	on	ton	eer	s
engineers, etc.		•	•	•	•		53,500
Imperial guard, .	٠	•	•	•	•	•	8.500
Gendarmerie, .	•	٠,	•	•	•	•	15,600
This would amount	to	a t	ota	ıl o	ſ		•
Infantry,	•	٠	•	٠	•		1,000
Cavalry,	٠.	•	•	•	•	7	7,500
Artillery and Eng	zin	eer	S,			5	3,500
Imperial Guard,			٠				8,500
Gendarmerie,	•	٠	• .	•	•	1	5,600
Total,						59	06,100 mei

See Dumas, vi. 70-71; and Procuer, Statistique de la France, 576,580.

Comparative increase in revenue of France and England during the war.

(2) The regular revenue of France in 1789 (for no approximation even to a correct estimate can be formed of its amount during the period of confiscation and assignats) had reached 469,000,000 francs, or L.18,800,000; [Lac. vi. 110. Etat de la Dette Publique, 3. Young, i. 577.] while that of England amounted to L.16,382,000. At the termination of the war, the revenue of France was 450,000,000 fr.. or L.18,000,000, and its total expenditure 560,000,000 francs, or L.22,400,000; while the permanent revenue of England at the same period amounted to L.28,000,000 exclusive of L 8,000,000 war.taxes, and its total expenditure to L 61,617,000. [Ann. Reg. 1793, 250. Moreau and Peberer's Tables. Peb. 154. Bign ii 130, 131.] (*)

The public debt of France, which, at the commencement of the Revolution, was 5,587,060.000 fr., or 1. 249,000.000, and occasioned an annual charge of 259,000,000 francs, or L.10,150,000, was still very considerable, amounting to 1,380,000,000 fr. or L.55,000,000, and occasioning an annual charge of 69,000,000 francs, or L.2,800,000, at the termination of the war, notwithstanding the extinction of two thirds of its amount during its continuance, and the unexampled measures of spoliation by which its expenses had been defrayed. [Etat de la Dette Pub. 8,9. Gaëta, i 199. Peuchet, 500. Young, ii. 578.] Public debts, exports and was L.244,440,000, and occasioned an imports of the annual charge, including the sinkingtwo countries. fund, of L.9,317,000; while, at the termination of the war in 1801, it. had risen to L.484,465,000, funded and unfunded, of which L.447,000,000 was funded, and L.37,318,000 unfunded. The annual charge of this immense burden had swelled to L.21,661,000, of which L,8,653,000 was for the debt existing before 1792, L.13,025,000 for that created since that period, and L.4,649,000 for the sinking fund, [Moreau's tables. Peb. 154, 246.] ()

The imports of France in 1787, amounted to 349,725,000 francs, or about L.14,000,000; the exports to 310,000,000 francs, or L.12,500,000. [Young's Travels, ii. 501.] At the same period the exports of British manufactures were L.14,700,000, and of foreign merchandise L.5,460,000, and the imports L.18,680,000. [Mr. Addington's finance re-

^(*) M. Necker, in 1788, estimated the total revenue of Old France at 585,000,000 francs: whereas, in 1801, notwithstanding the great addition to its territory which the Republic had received from the Low Countries, Savoy, Nice, and the frontier of the Rhine, which yielded an addition of 100,000,000 francs yearly, it had fallen to 450,000,000 francs, a striking proof how immensely the resources of the country had diminished during the Revolution. Before the increase of its territory, the territorial revenue of France was 1,200,000,000; after it had been swelled by a fifth of superficial surface, it was unly 850,000,000. Greater lightness of taxation was certainly not the cause of the diminution, for the directland and window tax of that latter year amounted to 265,000,000, or L 10,750,000, a sum equivalent to at least double that amount in the British islands, if the dif-

^{&#}x27;ference of the value of money in the two countries is taken into account. Dupin estimates the income derived from the soil in France in 1823, at 1.626,000,000 francs, or L65,000,000. Supposing the increase of cultivation between 1801 and 1828 to counterbalance the reduction of territory by the peace of Paris in 1815, it follows that the French landholders in 1801 paid about a sixth, of sixten per cent, on their incomes.—See Necken's Compte Hendu, 1785; Stat. de la France, 514; Gaeta, i. 189, 310; Bigson, ii. 130; and Durin, Fores Commerciale de France, ii. 266.

^() In 1789, according to the Duke of Gaeta, a deficit of 54,000,000 francs, or 1.2,150,000 yearly, was made "the apology for the Revolution." In 1801, when it was closed, it was above too,000 francs annually, or 1,1,000,000 sterling—G.

Refl ct a s men e ef

Nothing but this continual and rapid increase in the resources of the British empire, during the course of the struggle, could have by Fig. and accounted for the astonishing exertions which she made towards its close, and the facility with which, during its whole continuance.

the vast supplies required for carrying it on were raised without any sensible inconvenience to the country When we reflect that, during a war of nine years duration, the yearly expenditure of the nation varied from forty to sixty millions, that loans to the amount of twenty or thirty millions were annually contracted, and that the British fleets covered the seas in every quarter of the globe, we are lost in astonishment at the magnitude of the efforts made by a state so inconsiderable in extent, and with a population, even at the close of the period, and including Ireland, not exceeding fifteen millions (1) But the phenomenon becomes still more extraordinary when the efforts made at the termination of the struggle are considered and the British empire, instead of being exhausted by eight years' warfare, is seen stretching forth its giant arms at once into every quarter of the globe, striking down the throne of Tippoo Saib by as great a force as combated under the standards of Napoleon at Marengo (2) while it held every hostile harbour in Europe blockaded by its fleets, and sending forth Aelson to crush the confederacy of the northern powers at the very moment that it accumulated its forces in Europe and Asia against the Republican legions on the sands of Egypt It had been frequently a serted that the naval forces of England were equal to those of the whole world put together, but the matter was put to the test in spring 1801, when, without raising the blockade of a single harbour from the Texel to Calabria, she sent eighteen ships of the line with Abercromby to the month of the \ile, while nineteen under Aelson dissolved by the cannon of Copenhagen the northern confederation. The annals of Itome contain no example of a similar display of strength, and few of equal resolution in exerting it solutions Parl II t xxxv 1563] in 1801 the Feo h mps ets and exports were almost a hilst ed he mport from the We tind es half a lea to Left 000 and the exports to the same qualitation.

Left 000 [10] Hist zers 37] whereas the B 1 heapersi th types were Left 0000 no
nule turer + d L 17 tho 000 for gas a dram al preduce a d be my rist 1940 000 fore give action as in releasure to about $ 540,0000 [first ld it axxxx 155] Pebrura tablesa 140,0000 [first ld it axxxx 155] Pebrura tablesa 140,1 % r had too B ish ship ngu udergu cal yaar h g cre ser the t use wh h at the ro unru cur rostor war was 1 600 000 ou having r cu i 1801 to 2.100 000 a dife mercan lear men wh , at the former per ud were 118,000 having at the latter increased to 143 000 exclusive of $20,000 seamou and mar es enp jed u the coyal lary Park. Hat saar 1563 and axxv 787

(1) Popula ion of Great Br taln in 1801 10 912 000 . ireland about

4 000 000 14 912 000

-See Parana a Tubler 332

(2) Therty five thousand fir t hand Sepoy troops formed the arme f berm apa an n May 1791 Thirty-o e thousand French combated under the first comed at Marcago

(*) The correspond theorem of the ladion Empire in the years 1 all and 1 m and then, we east law --

Revenues— Dengel, Madrat Bombay	1 93 1,5 7,000 000,6(1 1 000, 11	1 9% 1,61 jano 2,01 fee 1 6,000	tion and that Let 1 quess and 1 con t 1 con
	L639 nos	LI 60g ress	L99 14
(Marges on Beng) Mad Sa, Bombas	1,1 t) eq 1,5 to 0 3 to 0	صحب بدلط تحدد 10 تحدر خری	000.00.0.1 000 ft E 000.00.0
Se trus	المدرد الم	L per person	L 9. 96 am

The contemplation of this astonishing display of strength at the Compared with the close of the struggle, compared with the feeble and detached exerniggardly exercious at tions made at its commencement, is calculated to awaken the most mencement, poignant regret at the niggardly use of the national resources so long made by government, and the inexplicable insensibility to the magnitude of the forces at their command, which so long paralysed the might of England, during the earlier years of the war. From a return laid before the House of Commons, it appears that the number of men that had been raised for the service of the army from the commencement of hostilities down to the close of 1800, was 208,808, being at the rate of 26,000 a-year on an average during its continuance (1). France, with a population hardly double that of Great Britain, raised 1,500,000 men in 4793 alone. It is in the astonishing disproportion of the land forces of this country either to her naval armaments, her national strength, or the levies of her antagonist, that the true secret of the long duration, enormous expenditure, and numerous disasters of the war is to be found. Secure in her insular situation, protected from invasion by invincible fleets, and relieved from the most disastrous consequences which resulted from defeat to the continental powers, England was at liberty to employ her whole disposable force against the enemy, yet she never brought 25,000 native troops into the field at any one point. Had she boldly levied 100,000 men in 1793, and sent them to Flanders after the route in the camp of Casar, when the French troops were shut up in their entrenched camps, and could not be brought by any exertions to face the allies in the field, she would beyond all question have encamped under the walls of Paris in two months, and the royalists of the south and west would have obtained a decisive superiority over the anarchical faction in the capital. During the nine years of the war, upwards of L.100,000,000 was paid in army, and a still larger sum in naval expenses, while in 1793 the military charges were not L.4,000,000, and in the latter and more expensive years of the war, only amounted annually to L.12,000,000. If a fifth part of this total sum had been expended in any one of the early years in raising the military force of England to an amount worthy of her national strength and ancient renown, triple the British force which overthrew Napoléon at Waterloo, might have been assembled on the plains of Flanders, and the war terminated in a single campaign (2).

Great part of this prosperity was owing to the paper currency.

But though part of this extraordinary increase was undoubtedly a real and substantial addition to the industry and resources of the empire, arising from the vast extension of its colonial possessions, and the monopoly

(1) Parl. Ret. Dec. 31, 1800. Ann. Reg. 1800, 40.

(2) The expenses of the army and navy, during the war, were as follow :-Army. Ordnance. Navy. 1792, L.1,485,000 L.1,819,000 L. 122,000 . . . 1793, 3,971,000 . . . 3,993,000 783 000 1791, 5,525,000 . . . , 6,611,000 1,345,000 1795,-6,315,000 11,610,000 . 2,321,000 ... 1796, 11,911,000 1,951,700 11,833,000 1797. 15,488,000 1.613,000 13,033,000 . . . 1798, 12,852,000 1,303,000 13,449,000 1799, 11.810.000 1,500,000 13,642,000

1,695,000

1,639,600

13,619,000

15,857,000

11,911,000

12,117,000

1800.

e Pasaun's, Tables, 154.

of almost all the trade of the world in its hands (1), yet part was to be ascribed to other causes, attended in the outset with deceptive and temporary advantages, and in the end with real had permanent evils. Like eresse / an extravagant individual who squanders in the profusion of a few the p per years, the savings of past centuries, and the provision of unborn corrency du ng be generations, the Government of England threw a fleeting lustre over its warlike administration, by trenching deep on the capital of the nation, and creating burdens little thought of at the time when the vast expenditure was going forward, but grievously felt in subsequent years, when the excitation of the moment had passed away, and the bitter consequences of the debt which had been contracted, remained But this was not all England, during those eventful years, drank deep at the fountains of paper currency, and derived a feverish and unnatural strength from that perilous but intoxicating draught. From the accounts laid before Parliament, it appears that the notes of the Bank of England in circulation, had increased upwards of a half, from 1795 to 1801, and that the commercial paper under discount at the same establishment, during the same period, had more than tripled (2) The effect of this great increase speedily appeared in the prices of grain, and every other article of life. Wheat which, on an average of five years prior to 1792, had sold at 35 4d a-bushel, had risen, on an average of five years, ending with 1802, to 10s 8d, and on an average of five years, ending 1815, to 11s Id a bushel (3) Thus, during the progress of the war, the prices of the necessaries of life were at one time nearly tripled, and even at the peace of Amiens had permanently more than doubled. The effect of this of course was, that the money price of all the other articles of life rapidly rose in the same proportion, rents advanced, all persons who lived by buying and selling found their commodities constantly rising in value, credit, both public and private, immensely improved, industry was viviled by the progressive rise

(1) The operation of these causes appeared a an espec al manner in the rast increase of our export of fore go and colored merchand and during the war which on an average of six years, and ag 5th January 1393 was LS 468 000 and is the year end ug 5 h Japaney 1801 had room to the enormous sum of L. 17 106 000 be ug were than triple to amount at the on nuescement of the ex est ->ce Ma Ann karon a f nager fle elut ons 1801 -la f II I 2224 1564 Commercial Paper & sconnied

(a)	Circulation f	Bank of England Yours.
1792		111 00:	5 00
1793		11 58
1794		10 74
1791		14 01	1.00

1792		111 005 000 1
1793		11 555 000
1794		10 741 000
1793		14 017.000
1796		10 729 000
1797	1 cb 28	9 671,000
1795	August 31	11 114 000
1 23	-	13 095 000
1 99		13 389.000
1507		16 844 003
1501		16,213.000

500	Ippend	z ta Rep	ert on Bat	1 1832,	and Pr
	Talle .	Ji 250	and 2 9
71	.1 .1			44

the Table is sufficent to depositate to what source the cr s of believary 1"97 was ow og The paper of the bank was then contracted from fourteen

at the Bank	Gold Colord
	L-1 171,000
To account her t.	2 741 000
-	7.255.500
12946 000	493,000
3 505 000	164 000
5 3 0 000	2 000 000
 5 870 000	2 067 000
4 440 000	419 000
5 403 000	119 000
8 491 000	420 000
7,502,000	437,000

was doubtless ow up to necess ty but I unavoida bly brought about the general pan c which rendered the su pe u on of rash-payments in that mouth u are dable and hundre the nation is the lot ounless p t of paper currency inconvert his into gold and all the prod g ous change of prices with which it was necessarily attended.

toul on is amount in 1795 to mor mi hous. This (3) Lords Report on Banks, Ap No 19 and Lords Report on Corn 1814 No 12 The prices of wheat from 1720 to 1801 were as follow --

	Per Quarter		Per Quarter
1 50	L2 13 2	1756	3 12 0
1 21	2 7 0	1797	2 12 4
1792	2 2 4	1795	298
1793	2 1 1	1759	3 7 4
1 24	2 11 0	1800.	5 12 $ mart 1
1 93	1 7 0	1601	" IR O HATE]
See das Reg 180	1 187 dp= to Chron.

ny 140 * 1

CHAPTER XXXV.

RECONSTRUCTION OF SOCIETY IN FRANCE BY NAPOLEON.

YEOM THE CONTINENTAL PEACE TO BIS ASSUMPTION OF THE IMPERIAL CROWN.

OCTOBER, 1801-MARCH, 1804.

ARGUMENT.

Deplorable internal state of France when Appléon succeeded to the heim—Means which were at his disposal to reconstruct society—and difficulties which he had to encounter—life resolves to make the attempt—Constitutional freedom was then impossible in France—Explosion of the Infernal Machine—Suppleon at once ascribes is to the Jacohum—Speech which he made on the occasion to the authorities of Paris—He refuses to histen to any attempts to exculpate them—A copy default is resolved on a_ansit the Jacohum—Terms of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It is afterwards of the Senatus-Consultum ordaning si—And 130 persons are transported—It i

léor . . experienced-but it is nevertheless carried into execution-Napoleon is created First Consul for ten years add tional-Grounds set forth in the Senatus Consultum on the occasion-State of religion in France at this period-hapoteon a views on this subject-Arguments in the Council of State spainst an I stablished Church-Napoléon s reply-Concordat with the Pope-lis provisions in favour of the Gallican church-General dissatisfaction which it occasioned-Ceremony on the occasion in Notre Dame, and general discontent which it produced-Constrained religious observances at Paris-Great Joy at the change in the rural departments-Prudence of Napoléon in restraining the Iligh Church party-Ilis admirable proclamation on the subject to the neonle of France-General satisfaction which the measure excited in foreign countries—Subsequent views of Napoleon on the subject—Renewed indulgence towards the emigrants-Senatus-Consultum (roclaiming a general amnest)-Insidequacy of these measures to heal the evils of revolutionary confiscation-Immense extent of this evil in France, and its tremediable effects-liessures to promote public instruction-Trial of public feeling by the Royalists-Measures for recruiting the army and navy - Debate on that subject in the Council of State-Discussion there on the Feole militoure-Speech of Napoléon on the government of the colonies-timances of trance-General valuation, or cadastre-Statistical details-Indignation of Aspoleon at the language used in the Tribunate-Important change in the municipal government carried in spite of that body-Debate on the Tribupate in the Louncil of State-Napoleon a speech on the subject-He resolves to make himself Consul for life-Incessont efforts of Government to spread monarchical ideas-Strong opposition of Jose; hine to these attempts-The project at first fails in the Council of State- Yeans adopted to ensure its success - The question is directly

Cenerous conduct of Mr. Fox in definiding Mr. Pitt to the First Consul-Great salisfaction which these changes give in foreign courts—Rapid increase of the central executive power Magnifleent public works set on foot in I rance-last improvements of I aris.

Will's Napoleon seized the reins of power in France, he found the institutions of civilization and the bonds of society dissolved to an extent of which

fullers 14

315 in [958] the previous bedry of the world afforded na example. Not only was the threne overturned, then bless tiled, their landed estates conto ested; the protection destroyed; but the whole multitious of rehaven, langes interest, and other from had been overturned. There remained to ther held of erule, in rapid to bless, nor leachers to mitract the people, is among to take opposed its beingn influence through the resting stall is made turns; industry, in world depression, englet not mainthat is universal add delibute. The present our longer recognided with the hammat of the attentional Provider left, but on oil to call the futhful to the home of to 1; the chaterias in runs existed, only to awaken the inclinch is recollection of deposted splendour, and the falmic church a to attest the masses denselscens fits infoldimes, the event was nonce whitehed by the called its commeter, for the monatains enlise and by the can; of its displies by Lien the notations of chards, and the etablishments for the telect of a normal, had aloned in the general areal; the monasters no longer of read the and to the reseted the forest and the loss of the bods were closed against the namerous on the interactional damed under wounds or discover hardened by word and steeled against pary by the multiplicate of its objects, humanity itsed seened to be chang in the human heart; and every one, engrossed in the cares of a Representation, and distitute of the means of reheating others, turned with collocs in litterance from the spectacle of ceneral movers. In one class only the spart of relies of all each with undecaying fastre, and survived the wreck of all its motitude to. Persecuted, resiled, and destrute, the Sixters of thanky still perceived in their poinselforters assuage him in authoring; and should out the underton deable and not the rank of the Republicans who had overturned, as the Royalists who had bled for the futly of their

for resters the institution, aboth the insanity of former times had with the occitories, and draw these again the louds which previous guilt lead keepfied, we the glorious trek which awaited the first consul-The powers which he power od for it were great, but the difficulties attending its execution were almost insurmountable. On the one hand, he was at the load of a numerous, brave, and experienced army, flushed by victory, and also dient to his will; the whole remaining respectable classes of the state had raffied round his standard; and all ranks, worn out with revolutionary contention and suffering, were anxious to submit to any government which promised them the first of social Idessings, peace and protection. On the other, almost all the wealth and all the nobility of the state had disappeared during the Revolution; the church was annihilated; and great part of the landed property of the country had passed into the hands of several millions of little owners, who might be expected to be permanently resolute in maintaining them against the dispossessed proprietors. That society could not long go on, nor any durable government be esta-Lud to eu. blished, without some national religion or some connexion between the throne and the altar, was sufficiently evident; but how was either to be reconstructed in the midst of an intidel generation, and by the aid of the very men who had contributed to their destruction? That a constitutional mo-every our, little attention could be paid to the education of the young; and by destroying every sort of religious trition, the Convention had cut off the right hand of public instruction, the only branch of it which is of paramount importance to the pour .--See futs. 123.

` • · · · .

⁽¹⁾ It is not to be supposed that the revolutionary governments had done nothing for education. On the contrary, the Polytechnic School, and many other institution is, particularly a school of medicine, and the Institute itself, were using to their exertions, But in the distracted state of the country, and when the care of self-preservation came home to narchy could not exist without a representative system, founded on all the great interests of the state, and tempered by the steadiness of an hereditary aristocracy, was indeed apparent, but where were the elements of it to be found, when the former had almost all been crushed during the convisions of the Revolution, and the latter, destitute and exiled, was the object of inveterate jealousy to the numerous classes who had risen to greatness by its overthring?

these difficulties were so great that they would probably have deterred any ordinary conqueror from the attempt, and he would have been content to accept the rrown which was offered him, and leave to others the Herculean task of closing the wounds of the Revolution. But Napolion was not a man of that character. He believed firmly that he was the destined instrument in the hand of Providence to extinguish that terrible volcano, and he was conscious of powers equal to the undertaking. From the very outset, accordingly, he began, cautiously indeed, but firmly and systematically, to correct the democratic spirit, and reconstruct those classes and distinctions in society which had disappeared during the preceding consulity of the provided his provided by the society which had disappeared during the preceding consulity of the provided his provided by the society which had disappeared during the preceding consulity of the provided his provided by the society which had disappeared during the preceding consulties of the society which had disappeared during the preceding consulties of the throne. The success with memory

Constitutional freedom was III then impos- SC sible in oppre on out of the representatives of a community from which all the super sions subje and rank, ... support from the a support from the altar, or any foundation in the religious teenings of its subjects; and how a proud and victorious army could have been taught that received for the muests of the legislature which is the invaluable growth of previous samly and

mentably under the despotic rule of the emperors which constanting founded a second flome on the shores of the Bosphorus, he perceived it was too fate to attempt the restoration of the balanced constitution of the ancent republic. On Napoleon's accession to the consular throne, he found the chasms in the French aristocracy still greater and more irreparable. The only remaining means of righting the scale was by throwing the sword into the balance. The total future of all subsequent attempts to frame a constitutional monarchy out of the elements which the Revolution had left in the society of France, proves that Napoleon rightly appreciated its political situation, and secred upon the only means of restoring order to its troubled waters (1).

^{(1) &}quot;There is, in the Engule conventions," and Taponous," a lody of policies which unites to be laster of decrea a group part of the handle property of the nations. These true is remainingers, ye is great adjunctioners the period, and increase attacker at 24 the gerenament. In France some the farmle too, that that in tasted y maning. Would you re-exhibite it? If you compute it of the mea of the Revination, it would be necessary to concentrate in the chards a large portion of the national property which is now impossible. If it were computed of the anxiet todactic it would soon bridge a counter granulating, "mayor Fr serasis," 211

Circumstances soon occurred which called forth the secret but indelible hatred of the first consulat the Jacobin faction. The conspiracy of Arena and Ceracchi, which failed at the opera, had been traced to some ardent enthusiasts of that class; and soon after a more formidable attempt at his assassination gave rise to a wider proscription of their associates. On the day on which the armistice of Steyer was signed, Napoléon went to the opera. Ber-Dec. 24, 1800. thier, Lannes, and Lauriston were with him in the carriage. In going from the Tuileries to the theatre, in the rue de Richelieu, his carriage passed through the rue St.-Nicaise; an overturned chariot in that narrow thoroughfare almost obstructed the passage, but the coachman, of the inwho was driving rapidly, had the address to pass it without stopfernal maping. Hardly had he got through when a terrible explosion broke all the windows of the carriage, struck down the last man of the guard, killed eight persons, and wounded twenty-eight, besides occasioning damage to the amount of 200,000 francs (L.8000), in forty-six adjoining houses. Napoléon drove on without stopping to the opera, where the audience were in consternation at the explosion, which was so loud as to be heard over all Paris; every eye was turned to him when he entered, but the calm expression of his countenance gave not the slightest indication of the danger which he had escaped. Speedily, however, the news circulated through the theatre, and the first consul had the satisfaction of perceiving, in the thunders of applause which shook its walls, the most fervent expressions of attachment to his person (1). Before the piece had terminated, Napolcon returned to the Tuileries, where a crowd of public functionaries were assembled from every part of Paris to congratulate him on his escape. He anticipated all their observations by commencing in a loud voice, "This is the work of the Jacobins; it is they who have attempted to assassinate me. Neither the nobles, nor the priests, nor the Chouans had any hand in it. I know on what to form my opinion, and it is in vain to seek to make me alter it. It is the Septembrisers, those wretches steeped in crime, who are in a state of permanent revolt, in close column against every species of government. Three months have hardly elapsed since you have seen Ceracchi, Arena, and their associates attempt to assassinate me. Again, it is the same clique, the bloodsuckers of September, the assassins of Versailles, the brigands of 51st May, the authors of at once ascribes it to all the crimes against government, who are at their hellish work. It is the tribes of artizans, and journalists who have a little more instruction than the people, but live with them, and mingle their passions with their own ardent imaginations, who are the authors of all these atrocities. If you cannot chain them you must exterminate them; there can be no truce with such wretches; France must be purged of such an abominable crew." During this vehement harangue, delivered with the most impassioned gesticulations, all eyes were turned towards Fouché, the well-known leader of that party, and stained, at Lyon and the Loire, with some of its most frightful atrocities. Alone, he stood in a window recess, pale, dejected, hearing every thing, answering nothing. The crowd of courtiers broke into exclamations, the echo of the first consul's sentiments. One, gifted with more courage than the rest, approached, and asked the minister of police why he made no reply, "Let them go on," said he. "I am determined not to compromise the safety of the state. I will speak when the proper time arrives. He laughs securely who laughs the last (2)."

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 23, 24. Bour. iv. 199, 200. D'Ab. iv. (2) Thib. 27, 28. Bour. iv. 201, 202. D'Ab. iv. 108, 110.

Speech

On the following day a public audience was given to the prefect of the Seine, and the twelve mayors of Paris, Aanoléon said : "As made on long as that handful of wretches attacked me alone. Heft to the laws the charge of chastising their offences; but since, by a crime without example, they have endangered the lives of a part of the population of Paris. their punishment must be as rapid as extraordinary. They consist of an hundred miscreants who have brought disgrace on liberty by the crimes committed in its name; it is indispensable that they should be forthwith deprived of the means of inflicting farther injuries on society." This idea was more fully unfolded at a meeting of the Council of State which took place on the same day. It was proposed to establish a special commission to try the offenders; but this was far from meeting Napoleon's views, who was resolved to seize the present opportunity of inflicting a deathblow on the remnant of the Jacobin faction. "The action of a special tribunal," said he, "would be too slow: we must have a more striking punishment for so extraordinary an offence, it must be as rapid as lightning; it must be blood for blood. As many of the guilty must be executed as there fell victims to their designs, say fifteen or twenty; transport two hundred, and take advantage of this event to purge the Republic of its most unworthy members. This crime is the work of a band of assassins, of Septembrisers (1), whose hands may be traced through all the crimes of the Revolution. When that party sees a blow struck at its head-nuarters, and that fortune has abandoned its chiefs, every thing will return to established order, the workmen will resume their labours; and ten thousand men, who, in France, are ranged under its colours, will abandon it for ever. That great example is necessary to attach the middling classes to the throne; the industrious citizens can have no hope as long as they see themselves menaged by two hundred enraged wolves, who look only for the proper moment to throw themselves on their prev-

"The metaphysicians are the men to whom we owe all our misfortunes. Half measures will no longer do, we must either pardon every thing, like Augustus, or adont a great measure which may be the guarantee of the social order. When after the conspiracy of Catiline, Cicero caused the guilty to be strangled, he said he had saved his country. I should be unworthy of the great task which I have undertaken, and of my mission, if I evinced less firmness on this trying occasion. We must regard this affair as statesmen, not as jud es I am so convinced of the necessity of making a great example, that I am ready to call the accused before me, interrogate them, and myself subscribe their condemnation. It is not for myself that I speak; I have braved greater dangers, my fortune has preserved me, and will preserve me; but we are now engaged with the social order, with the public morality, the national glory."

In the midst of this energetic harangue, it was evident that Napoleon was losing sight of the real point to be first considered, which was, who were the 1.10 1, by y , , , , , , that of the best of the court of the priests, whose denunciations against the holders of the national domains, had already appeared in several recent publications, might possibly be the authors of the infernal project. Napoleon warmly interrupted him, "You will not make me alter my opinion by such vain declamations; the wicked are known;

they are pointed out by the nation. They are the Septembrisers, the authors to listen to any afte jt to excit; ato

of every political crime in the Revolution, who have ever been spared or protected by the weak persons at the head of affairs. Talk not to me of nobles or priests. Would you have me proscribe a man for a title, or transport ten thousand grey-haired priests! Would you have me prosecute a religion, still professed by the majority of Frenchmen and two-thirds of Europe La Vendée never was more tranquil; the detached crimes which still disgrace its territory are the result merely of illextinguished animosities. Would you have me dismiss all my counsellors excepting two or three; send Portalis to Sinnamary, Devaine to Madagascar, and choose a Council from the followers of Babouf. It is in vain to pretend that the people will do no wrong but when they are prompted to it by others. The people are guided by an instinct, in virtue of which they act alone. During the Revolution they frequently forced on the leaders who appeared to guide them; the populace is a tiger when he is unmuzzled. I have a dictionary of the men employed in all the massacres. The necessity of the thing being once admitted, our duty is to attain it in the most efficacious way. Do they take us for children? Do not hope, citizen Truguet, that you would, in the event of their success, be able to save yourself by saying, 'I have defended the patriots before the Council of State.' No, no. These patriots would sacrifice you as well as us all." He then broke up the Council, and when passing Truguet, who was endeavouring to say something in his vindication, said aloud, "Come now, citizen, all that is very well for the soirces of Madame Condorcet or Maille-Garat, but it won't do in a council of the most enlightened men of France (1)."

These vehement apostrophes from a man vested with despotic authority cut short all discussion, and the Council found itself compelled, notwithstanding a courageous resistance from some of its members, to go into the arbitrary designs of the first consul. The public mind was prepared for some great catastrophe by repeated articles in the public journals, drawn up by Fouché, in which that astute counsellor, suppressing his private information, directed A copy d'erat the thunders of the executive against his former associates (2). But is realized on while these measures were in preparation, Fouché and the first consul received decisive information that it was the Royalists, and not the Jacobins, who were the real authors of the conspiracy, and a clue was obtained which promised soon to lead to the discovery of the guilty parties. The minister of police, therefore, received secret instructions not to allude in his report against the Republicans to the affair of the infernal machine, but to base the proposed coup-d'état generally on the númerous conspiracies against the public peace, and on this report Napoléon urged the immediate delivery to a military commission of eighteen, and transportation of above an hundred persons, without aither trial or evidence taken against them. In vain Thibaudeau and Roederer urged in the Council of State, that there was

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 33, 31. (2) In one of these, the minister of police addresssed the following report to the first consul .-

[&]quot;It is not against ordinary briginds, for whose correson the ordinary tribunals are sufficient, and who menace only detached persons or articles of property, that the Government is now required to act; it is the enemies of entire France, who are now at the bar; men who threate i every instant to denver it up to the fury of anarchy.

"These frightful characters are few in number, but their crimes are innumerable. It is by them that the Convention has been attacked with an armed force in the bosom of the sanctuary of the laws; it is they who have endersoured so aften to render the committees of bovernment the igents of their atrocions designs. They are not the enemies of this or that government, but of every species of authority. " They persist in an atrocious wir, which cannot be terminated but by an extraordinary measure of the supreme police. Among the men whom the po-lice has denounced, many were not found with the pomard in their hands, but all were equally espable of sharpening and using it. In disposing of them, we must not merely punish the past, but look to a guarantee of social order in future."—See Impau-DEAL, 13, 11, and BOURRIENNE, 1v. 201, 205.

no evidence against the suspected persons, and that it was the height of injustice to condemn a crowd of citizens untried and unheard, to the severe punishment of transportation. The first consul, though well aware that they had no connexion with the late conspiracy, was resolved not to let sho the onportunity of getting quit at once of so many dangerous characters "We have strong presumptions, at least," said he, " if not proofs against the Terrorists The Chouannerie and emigration, are maladies of the skin, but terrorism is a malady of the vital parts. The minister of police has purposely omitted the mention of the late conspiracy, because it is not for it that the measure is proposed If that reserve were not observed, we would compromise our character The proposed step is grounded upon considerations independent of the late event, it only furnished the occasion for putting them in force, The persons included in the lists will be transported for their share in the massacres in the prisons on September 2d, for their accession to the Jacobin revolt of 31st May, for the consuracy of Babouf, and all that they have done since that time. Such a step would have been necessary without the conspiracy, but we must avail ourselves of the enthusiasm it has excited to carry it into execution " In pursuance of these views, an arrest was proposed by the Council of State, and adopted by the Senate, which aud th riv condemned to immediate transportation no less than a hundred and thirty individuals, among whom were nine persons who had been engaged in the massacres of September, and several members of the Convention, Choudien, Taillefer, Thirion, and Talot, Felix Lepelletier, and Rossignol, well known for his cruelty in the war of la Vendce. The decree was forthwith carried into execution, and thus did the arbitrary tyranny which the Jacobins had so long exercised over others, at length, by a just retribution, recoil upon themselves (1) It to after In less than a month afterwards, Fouche made a second report wards diese upon the conspiracy of the infernal machine, in which he admitted, that when these measures of severity were adopted a ainst and Me e the Jacobins, he had other suspicions, that George Cadoudal and gn lty par ties other emigrants had successively disembarked from England, and that the horse attached to the machine had furnished a clue to its authors, who had at length been detected in the house of certain females of the las 14, 1801 Royalist party Saint Regent and Carbon accordingly, the really guilty persons, were tried by the ordinary tribunals, condemned, and executed Not a shadow of doubt could now remain that the conspiracy had been the work of the Royalists, but Napoleon persisted, though he saw that as clearly as any one, in carrying into effect the sweeping decree of transportation against the Jacobins "There is not one of them," he said to those who petitioned for a relaxation of the sentence in favour of certain individuals, "who has not deserved death an hundred times over, if they had been judged by their conduct during the Revolution, these wretches have covered France with scaffolds, and the measure adopted in regard to them is rather one of mercy than severity; the attempt of the infernal machine is neither mentioned as a motive nor the occasion of the Senatus-Consultum: with a company of grenadiers I could put to flight the whole faubourg St.-Germain, with its Royalist coteries; but the Jacobins are men of determined character, whom it is not so easy to make retreat. As to the transportation of the Jacobins, it is of no sort of consequence; I have got quit of them; if the Royalists commit any offence, I will strike them also (1)."

⁽¹⁾ The 42 of Rome for 201. 200. The man of her like Seaton Convolution was a witness with the formation of the seaton Convolution was a seaton of the seaton Convolution with the convolution with the shades of a yeapened refer one, the seaton is called upon to 2 to effect to the winner. If the people approprial playment light that them to the convolution of which is in theory any that according to that prince yells the Seaton of the convolution of the convolution of the convolution of the convolution of the Seaton of its final mineral gold and yourserval to suranize proposed in per lower trunchasers by the Guerramond; and considering that the suranize

I be tog me so body and the fr bunning one or was mused at ly put in force we bout the remains truck onder Tarantains $1, $2

The next important step of Napoleon was the exhibition of a king of his own creation, to the astonished Parisians. By a convention with Spain, it was stipulated that the province of Tuscany, ceded to the Infanta Napilcon of Spain, Marie-Louise, third daughter of Charles IV, and the Duke errates the King of of Parma, her husband, should be erected into a monarchy, under Litruria. the title of the kingdom of Etruria. In May, 1801, the newly-created king, Louis 1, with his young bride, arrived in Paris, on his way from Madrid to Florence, and was received with extraordinary distinction both on the road and in the capital. Numerous fêtes succeeded each other in honour of the royal pair, among which those of M. Talleyrand, in his villa at Neuilly, was remarked as peculiarly magnificent. The young King early evinced symptoms of that imbecility of character by which he was afterwards distinguished; but it was deemed of importance to accustom the court of the first consul to the sight of royalty, and the Parisians to the intoxicating idea that, like the Roman Senate, they were invested with the power of making and unmaking kings. Napoléon received the reward of this policy in the transports with which, when he was present, the celebrated line of OEdipus was received at the theatre (2)-

" J'ai fait des souverains, et n'ai pas voulu l'être."

But it was not merely by such exhibitions of royalty that Napoléon endeayoured to prepare the French nation for his own assumption of the crown. At the time when the public mind was strongly excited by the danger which the state had run from the success of the infernal machine, a pamphlet appeared, with the title, "Parallel between Casar, Cromwell, and Bonaparte," tucca Cein which the cause of royalty and hereditary succession was opensar, Gramly advocated. It excited at first a great sensation, and numerous copies were sent to the first consul from the prefects and magistrates, with comments on the dangerous effects it was producing on the public mind. Fouché, however, soon discovered that it had issued and been distributed from the office of the minister of the interior, and shortly after that it came from the pen of Lucien Bonaparte. Napoléon affected to be highly indignant at this discovery, and reproached Fouché with not having instantly sent his imprudent brother to the Temple; but the cautious minister was too well informed to put the hint in execution, as Lucien had shown him the original manuscript corrected by the hand of the first consul himself. However, it was necessary to disavow the production, as its effect proved that it had prematurely disclosed the designs of the fortunate usurper, and therefore Lucien was sent into an moment intelligence was received of the leading stroke given in the capital! A striking instance of the distrust with which the officious zeal of such authorities should be received, and of the necessity of the executive not letting their wishes be known, if they would in such circumstances preserve the semblance even of justice in their proceedings .-See Thisaudeau, 53, 63; Bourstenne, iv. 212.

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 51, 62. Bour. iv. 212, 213, 214. It is a curious and instructive fact, that no sooner was the determination of the first consul, in regard to the Jacobins, known, than a multitude of revelations flowed in from the prefects, mayors, and magistrates over all France, implicating the Republicans still farther in the conspiracy, and detailing discoveries of the vast Jacobin plot which was to have burst forth in every part of the country the

(2) Thib. 61. 69. Bour. iv. 270, 273.

honourable exile, is ambassador at Madrid, with many reproaches from Napoleon for having allowed the device to be discovered. "I see," said Napoleon to his secretary, "that I have been moving too fast, I have broken ground too soon, the pear is not jet ripe." He received secret instructions to exert all his influence at the court of Spain, to induce that power to declare war against Portugal, in order to detach the whole pennisula from the alliance with England, and shut its harbours against the British flag (1)

The numerous complaints against the lists of eligibility which formed so important and remarkable an effect in the constitution under the consulate, induced Napolcon to bring them again under in the the consideration of his state council It was justly objected against this institution, that it renewed, in another and a more odious form, all the evils of privileged classes which had occasioned the Revolution, that to confine the seats in the legislation, and all important offices under government, to five thousand individuals, out of above thirty millions of souls, was to the last degree unjust, and seemed peculiarly absurd at the close of a Revolution. the main object of which had been to open them indiscriminately to all the citizens. It became necessary to consider whether these complaints should be attended to, as the time was approaching when a fifth of the legislative body and tribunate were to be renewed, in terms of the constitution, and therefore the lists, already formed, were about to be forwarded to the electors It was urged by the advocates for a change in the Council of State, that " public opinion had strongly pronounced itself against these lists, because they at once deprive a great body of citizens of that result of the Revolution which they most prized, eligibility to every public function. Out of delicacy to my e thousand persons, who are inscribed on the highest class of these lists, you leave the seeds of a dangerous discontent in a hundred times that number. Doubtless it is not impossible from these lists to make for a few years a suitable choice of representatives, but such a result would only the more confirm a system radically vicious, and augment the difficulty which will hereafter be experienced in correcting it "

The first consul replied -" The institution of the lists is objectionable. It is an absurd system, the growth of the ideology which, like a malady, has so long overspread I rance It is not by such means that a great nation is reorganized Sovereignty is malienable Nevertheless, bad as the system is, it forms part of the constitution, we are only intrusted with its execution. It is impossible, besides, to let the people remain without any species of organizabetter a bad one than none at all. It is an error to suppose that the people are organized merely because the constitution has created the powers of government. The supreme authority must have intermediate supports, or it has neither any stability nor any hold of the nation. We must not think, therefore, of abandoning the lists without substituting something else in their room It is admitted that they form at present a sufficient body out of which to choose the Legislature, the constitution has established them, they form an organic law of the state, all I rance has aided in their construction, in the rural districts in particular they are universally approved of Why, then, should we overlook the people of I rance, and their expressed approbation, merely because Paris has made a bad choice for her share of the list, and her citizens reckon the departments as nothing? It is better for the Government to have to deal with a few thousand individuals than a whole nation What harm can there be in going on for two or three years longer with these lists? They form the sole channel by which the influence of the people is felt on the Government. It will be time enough at the close of that period to consider what changes should be made on it." Guided by these considerations, the Council resolved that the lists should remain unchanged. They were already regarded as the nucleus of a new nobility instead of that which had been destroyed, and as an indispensable attendant on the throne which was anticipated for the first consul (1).

But Napoléon's views in this important particular went much farther, and he resolved to establish an order of nobility, under the Homar title of the Lagion or Honora, which should gradually restore the gradation of ranks in society, and at the same time attach the people to its support. This important matter was brought before the Council of State in May, 1801. It met with more opposition than any other measure of the consulate; the debates on it in the Council of State were in the highest degree curious and instructive.

"The eighty-seventh article of the constitution," said Napoléon, "sanctions the establishment of military honours, but it has organized nothing. An arret has established arms of honour, with double pay as a consequence; others with a mere increase; there is nothing formal or regular constructed. The project I propose to you gives consistence to the system of recompenses; it is the beginning of organization to the nation." It was proposed by General Mathieu-Dumas that the institution should be confined to military men, but this was strongly combated by the first consul. "Such ideas," said he, "might be well adapted to the feudal ages, when the chevaliers combated each other man to man, and the bulk of the nation was in a state of slavery; but when the military system changed, masses of infantry, and phalanxes constructed after the Macedonian model, were introduced, and after that it was not individual prowess, but science and skill which determined the fate of nations. The kings themselves contributed to the overthrow of the feudal régime, by the encouragement which they gave to the commons; finally, the discovery of gunpowder, and the total change it induced in the art of war, completed its destruction. From that period the military spirit, instead of being confined to a few thousand Franks, extended to all the Gauls. It was strengthened rather than weakened by the change; it ceased to be exclusive in its operation, and from being founded solely on military prowess, it came to be established also on civil qualities. What is it now which constitutes a great general? It is not the mere strength of a man six feet high, but the coup-d'ail, the habit of foresight, the power of thought and calculation; in a word, civil qualities, not such as you find in a lawyer, but such as are founded on a knowledge of human nature, and are suited to the government of armies. The general who can now achieve great things is he who is possessed of shining civil qualities; it is their perception.

(1) Thib. 69, 71. The subject of the lists was warmly debated both in the Council of State and before the Legislature, and the maintenance of the existing system only carried by a majority of 56 to 26 in the Tribunate, Decision on it and 239 to 36 in the legislative Body, by the Legis- It is not surprising that it excited a violent opposition in the popular party, seeing that it overturned the whole objects for which the nation had been fighting during the Revolution. "The law," says Thibaudeau, " called to the honours and the advantages of eligibility for offices in the communes, 50,000 individuals; to cligibility for offices in the departments, 50,000; to eligibility for the legislature or national offices, 5,000. The whole of the other inhabitants were altogether excluded both from the rights of election and eligibility. The partisans of representative governments regarded this as far too narrow a circle in a country embracing thirty millions of souls. But the public in general took very little interest in this matter, justly observing, that as the electors were no longer intrusted with the choice of representatives, or of persons to fill any offices, but only of a large body of candidates from whom the selection was to be made by the government, it was of very little consequence whether this privilege was confined to many or few hands."—THERAUDEAU, 200. 324 [CHAP, XXXV. of the strength of his talents which makes the soldiers obey him. Listen to them at their bivouacs; you will invariably find them award the preference to mental over physical qualities. Mourad Bey was the most powerful man among his Mamelukes, without that advantage he never could have been their leader. When he first saw me, he could not conceive how I could preserve authority among my troops, but he soon understood it, when he was made acquainted with our system of war, "In all civilized states force yields to civil qualities. Bayonets sink before the priest who speaks in the name of Heaven, or the man of science who has gained an ascendency by his knowledge. I predicted to all my military followers that a government purely military would never succeed in France till at had been brutalized by fifty years of ignorance. All their attempts to govern in that manner accordingly failed, and involved their authors in their ruin It is not as a general that I govern, but because the nations believe me possessed of the ability in civil matters necessary for the head of affairs; without that I could not stand an hour I knew well what I was about, when, though only a general, I took the title of member of the Institute, I felt confident of being understood by the lowest drummer in the army

"We must not reason from ages of barbarity to these times. France consists of 30,000,000 of men, united by intelligence, property, and commerce. Three or four hundred thousand soldiers are nothing in such a mass. Not only does the general preserve his ascendency over his soldiers chiefly by civil qualities, but when his command ceases he becomes merely a private individual. The soldiers themselves are but the children of citizens. The tendency of military men is to carry every thing by force, the enlightened civilian, on the other hand, elevates his views to a perception of the general good The first would rule only by despotic authority, the last subject every thing to the test of discussion, truth, and reason I have no hesitation, therefore, in saying, that if a preference was to be awarded to the one or the other, it belongs to the civilian. If you divide society into soldiers and citizens, you establish two orders in what should be one nation. If you confine honours to military men, you do what is still worse, for you sink the people into nothing (1)"

Moved by these profound observations, the Council agreed that the proposed honours should be extended indiscriminately to civil and military distinction.

But the most difficult part of the discussion remained, the consideration of the expedience of the institution itself, even in its most extended form. Great opposition was manifested to it in the capital, from its evident ten-

Notwithstanding the profound and unanswerable observations by the result which he supported it, it was by a very slender majority that the results institution of the Lexion of Honour passed the great bodies of the results in high it request first times which have belt to this property of the anomal protein to a social state as a social state a person a softhe great to her a school of the come of the last projected for come of the last projected for come of the last person of the last projected for come of the last person of " The lage notif wat me becausing recells i the element and chilaconica allegate things ere bitues 3. Lility, entre last it er er gemerat ... ire, for they as I have been over. Hardly any notice beauties military the continue the literater matte which nuctages. Here in a stagette liberting a concard intelligence sull the lighter fither on a real which contains guary ter against any rechal u.e. the his and bratt meacethers we are mulifiliers, reger stores und republication were the It concedences. know the endertee of the begins and extreme after that the second projetiers, and their profite disease and fortily the middings speed at 1 to it post for reliebly, at but where is inquerate or the in the of the general substeat. Valer prete are eleftered the last traces of a dality, at nell a tel ath a new energent steer into en terestion to the interest in a Intermediate leady, the Lagre 1 is, taxay the least of it, a perfect adjustifung. North i itere extrate budgen are of the un use in despotue mutrics, but in a representative state, and an erg a nation fortunate e mugh to pariers a free dire action on public affairs. the sole intermediate leady which is required, he should be telerated, is the representatives of the people. The lastituties proposed in alike contrary to the principles of the Berclution and the text of the constitution. The proposed other leads directly tra morarily. Croves and ribbins are the pillers of an hereditary throne; they were unknown to the Romans who conquered the world."

Napolem's Napoleon replied:—"Wearralways refer.

It is singular that, as an argument against distinctions, reference should sofrequently be made to the nation that ever existed in which they were most firmly established. The Bonnaus had patricians, the equisition order, citizens, and knights; for each class they had a separate of stone, different habits. To reward achievements, they awarded all sorts of distinctions, sirmanes recalling great services, mural crowns, triumplus. Superstition was called in to lend her aid to the general impression. Take away the religion of Bonne, and nothing remains. When that fine body of patricians was desmandered.

triped. To wood to in present there encorriently as a the form of Marona, the processphous of System to agree of these of these of the encountry the state of the entire of the entire to the entire of the entire that agree the entire to a state of the entire the entire to a state of the entire the entire of th

the entry of evaluation of the people of this varies is a mind of a properly of the people of the pe

11 Id to a. " be dance called a three Mean deep at five sous a fay the careight, they ecoly are to. He you believe that you provide ever hake a more light by able text per in free house, each riens are in only for the cele tree in his collection to the celling at her the ateria while hie, giamat have they and do to to the terr operates are the first which countries in a qualities. The armies of the Republic lave if is such great though, bushe e they note responsed a father is not beten serve with a state of the for its, as I is take mere galdles because the clusers steat into the extention and those of those of renter a I were in mate it y the commer itments of his are it is the raine principle which led to all the terming to of the in Mil. Then may called you please, the trained of the error of the error red, names will not after the cature of things. For ten years you have been econtrolly speaking of is defutioned, and what, after all, his exima done? Bothings - the namenthind not not arrived - The Republicans prepared to noise the people to the constrainty accombing them in churches, where, dying of cold, they were raide to listen to the reading and exposition of the law; it may entity be than an institution but effect such an institution but in attaching them to their government. I am well aware, that, if you judge of this institution according to the prejudices produced by ten years of a revolution, it must appear wor other weless; but if you consider that we are placed after a resolution, and called upon to reconstruct menty, a very difforcid opinion will be formed. Livery thing has been destroyed; we must commence the work of creation. We have, indeed, a nation and a government; but they are united by a rope of sand. There exist at the same time amongst us reveral of the old privileged classes, organized from the unity of their principles and interests, and who will always pursue one definite object. But we are scattered, without union, system, or lasting bond of connexion. As long as I survive I will answer for the Republic; but we must consider what is likely to occur after my death. Do you suppose the Republic is definitely established? You never were more mistaken.

^(*) These observations of Napoléon are very remarkable. They show how much more clearly his natural sepacity, even amidst all the tumult of camps, had apprehended the truth of ancient history, than the numerous declaimers who, through the whole of the Revolution, had descanted on its examples.

state (1) So strongly implanted were the principles of the Revolution, even in the lighest functionaires of the reality, and so difficult was it to extinguish that hatred at distinctions or honous, which formed so feading a feature in the passions by which it was at first distinguished. No measure during the consulate experienced nearly so powerful an opposition. Aspolicion was much struck with this circumstance, and confessed in private that he had precipitated matters, and that it would have been better to have waited before so obnavious a change was introduced (2)

It was carried into execution, however, with all those circumstances of pomp and ceremony which \applicon well knew are so powerful with the multitude. The manguration of the dignitaries of the order took place, with extraordinary magnificence, in the church of the Hotel des Invalides, in presence of the first consul and of all the great functionaries of the Republic, and the decorations soon began to be eagerly coveted by a people whose passion for individual distinction had been the secret cause of the Revolution (3)

The event, however, proved that Napoléon had rightly appreciated the true character of the revolutionary spirit. The leading object in the Revolution was the extinction of castes not of ranks, equality of rights and not of classes, the abolition of hereditary not personal distinction (1) " \anity," as Napoleon elsewhere observed, "is the ruling principle of the French, and was at the bottom of all the convulsions of the Revolution, it was the sight of the noblesse enjoying privileges and distinctions to which they could not aspire, which filled the Tiers-Ltat with inextinguishable and natural animosity (5) But an institution which conferred lustre on individuals and not on families, and led to no hereditary distinctions, was so far from running counter to this desire, that it afforded it the highest gratification, because it promised the objects of this passion to any, even the humblest of the citizens, who was worthy of receiving it The Legion of Honour accordingly, which gradually extended so as to embrace two thousand persons of the greatest emmence in every department, both civil and military, in France, became an institution in the highest degree both useful and popular, and served as the forerunner to that new nobility which Napoléon afterwards created as safeguards to his imperial throne

New your When so many institutions were successively arising which factor of pointed to the establishment of a regular government, it was you was a major short to the stablishment of a regular government, it was you was in major short to that its head could remain in a precarous situation is a stable of the party was created by the obsequious legislature first consul for ten years, beyond the first ten fixed at his original appointment an appointment which, although far from coming up to the anticipations and wishes of the first consul, was yet important as a

```
de I have seen forty non obtain the absolute direction of a department that a the system that we must make use of [To b 83 8.] (1) The numbers were Noes.
It sadopt In the Counc 1 of State 10 14
                                - Tr bupate
                                                                                                       38
                                  - Corps Leg slat f 166
                                                                                                      110 158
                                                                                                       78 [Th b 92]
                                                       Major by
                                                                  (4) Jon Lede Vap 1 526
 (2) Th b 91 92 Bour iv 357 358
```

(5) DAb v1 169 170

(3) DAb vi 21

step to the establishment of perpetual and hereditary succession in his family (1).

But all these measures, important as they were, yielded to the great step which at the same time was adopted of re-establishing the Catholic religion in France, and renewing those connexions with the Pope, which had been violently broken during the fury of the French Revolution.

Although the institutions of religion had been abolished, its ministers scattered, and its property confiscated, by the different revothis period. lutionary assemblies who had governed the country, yet a remnant of the Christian faith still lingered in many parts of the rural districts. When the horrors of Robespierre ceased, and a government comparatively lenient and regular was established under the Directory, the priests obtained leave to open their churches, provided they undertook to maintain them at their own expense, and a considerable number returned from exile, and commenced in poverty and obscurity the reconstruction of religious observances. They were again exposed to persecution and danger after the 18th Fructidor, and being destitute of any species of property, and entirely dependent upon the voluntary contributions of their flocks, they were totally unequal to the Herculean task of combating the irreligious spirit which had acquired such strength during a revolutionary interregnum of ten years. A remnant of the faithful, composed for the most part of old women, attended the churches on Sunday, and marked by their fidelity an institution which might otherwise have been totally forgotten; but they were hardly observed amidst the crowds who had discarded every species of devotion; and a great proportion of the churches, both in the towns and the country, had either been pulled down, or converted to secular purposes during the Revolution; while of those which remained, a still greater number were in such a state of dilapidation, from the total absence of any funds for their support, as to threaten speedily to become unserviceable for any purpose whatever. In this general prostration of the Christian faith, the bewildered multitude had sought refuge in other and extravagant creeds; the sect of the Theophilanthropists had arisen, whose ravings amidst fruits and flowers, were listened to by a few hundreds, perhaps thousands, of the credulous or enthusiastic of Paris; while the great majority of the people, educated without any religious impressions, quietly passed by on the other side, and lived altogether without God in the world (2).

Although neither a fanatic nor even a believer in Christianity, Napoléon's views on Napoléon was too sagacious not to perceive that such a state of this subthings was inconsistent with any thing like a regular government. He had early, accordingly, commenced a negotiation with the Pope; and the head of the Church, delighted at finding such a disposition in a revolutionary chief, had received the advances with the utmost cordiality. Cardinal Gon-

(1) Bour, iv. 361.
Grounds set The grounds of this change are forth in the thus ably set forth in the Senatus Senatus Con- Consultum which introduced it:—sultum on "Considering that in the existing the occasion. the occasion, circumstances of the Republic, it is the first duty of the Conservative Senate to employ all the means in its power in order to give to the government the stability which can alone augment the national resources, inspire confidence without, establish credit within, reassure our allies, discourage our secret enemies, remove the evils of war, bring to maturity the fruits of peace, and leave to the wisdom of administration the selection of the proper period for bringing forward all the designs which it may have in view for the happiness of a free people," etc. Napoleon replied in the following words, which subsequent events rendered pro-phetic: -- "Fortune has hitherto smiled on the Republic, but she is inconstant; and how many are there whom she has overwhelmed with her favous have lived too long by a few years! The interests of my glory and happiness seem to have marked as the more than the marked as the more than the termination of my public career the moment when a general peace was signed. But you deem a new a general peace was a surface necessary on my part. I will not scruple to undertake it, if the wishes of the people prescribe what your suffrages authorize, -Dumas, viii. 98, 99.

(2) D'Abr. vi. 38, 41. Thib, 151, 152. Jom. Vie de Nap. i. 489.

zalvi, who with singular ability directed the conclave, had, in the name of the supreme Pontiff, written to General Murat, when advancing towards the Roman states, after the armistice of Treviso, to express " the lively admiration which he felt for the first consul, to whose fortunes were attached the tranquillity of religion not less than the happiness of Europe," The views of Napole on on that matter were strongly expressed to the counsellors of state with whom he conversed on the subject. "Yesterday evening," said he, "when walking alone in the woods, amidst the solitude of nature, the distant hell of the church of Ruel struck my car. Involuntarily I felt emotion; so powerful is the influence of early habits and associations. I said to myself, if I feel thus what must be the influence of such impressions on simple and credulous men? Let your philosophers, your ideologues answer that if they can. It is absolutely indispensable to have a religion for the people; and not less so, that that religion should be directed by the government. At present, lifty bishops in the pay of England, direct the French clergy, we must forthwith destroy their influence, we must declare the Catholic the established religion of France, as being that of the majority of its inhabitants, we must organize its constitution. The first consul will appoint the fifty bishops; the Pope will induct them They will appoint the parish priests, the people will defray their salaries. They must all take the oath; the refractory must be transported. The Pope will, in return, confirm the sale of the national domains. He will consecrate the Revolution, the people will sing, God save the Gallican Church. They will say I am a Papist, I am no such thing I was a Mahometan in Egypt; I will become a Catholic here for the good of my people. I am no believer in particular creeds, but as to the idea of a God, look to the beavens, and say who made that (1) "

Notwithstanding these decided opinions of the first consul, the negotiations with the Court of Rome were attended with conrisk negotiations with the court of another tedious At length, however, April 1802 they were brought to a conclusion, and, despite the opposition of a > exist, and ever will exist, they will exist as long as the people are embued with a rel gious spirit, and that dispositio i is permanent in the human heart hapoleon s We have seen republics and democra cies, history has many examples of evil would exist only in half, but if a foreign potentate, the Poj e, is its leader, a schism is intro-Argumenta duced into the community herer in the Coun will you attach the elergy sincerely cil of State to the new order of things The Feaga nat en volut on has despo led them both of establ sh their bonours and their property, ment they will sever pardon these a juries ever ial war as sworn between the raral powers. The clergy will he le a dangerous when il ey are detached from each opposed to a return to Catholicism We are nearer the truths of Christ austy than the priests of Ro ne lou have I at to say the word, the I spacy is ruined and beance takes at place as a Protestant state

You are deceased said hips con, the clergy large portion of the Council, and a still larger proportion of the Legislature, the concordat with the Pope passed into a law, and the Christian religion was re-established through the French territory (1).

By this memorable law the Catholic religion was declared that of the French people. Ten archbishops and fifty bishops were established, the former with a salary of 13,000 francs (L.600) a-year, the latter with one of 10,000, or L.400. It was provided that there should be at least a parish priest in every district of a juge de paix, with as many additional ministers as might be deemed necessary; the bishops and archbishops were to be appointed by the first consul; the bishops nominated the parish priests and inferior clergy, subject to the approbation of the same authority. The salary of the priests in the larger parishes was fixed at 1500 francs, or L.60 a-year; in the smaller, 1200, or L.48. The Departmental Councils were charged with the procuring of houses, or lodgings and gardens, for the bishops, priests, and curates. The churches which had survived the Revolution were placed at the disposal of the bishops, and provision made for the repair, at the expense of the department, of such as were ruinous. Such was the establishment which in France emerged from the chaos of the Revolution, and such the provision for the ministers of religion made by the nation which, in the outset of the convulsions, had confiscated the vast possessions of the church, on the solemn'assurance contained in the decree of the Constituent Assembly, that it "committed the due and honourable maintenance of religion and its ministers to the honour of the French people (2).".

Although the opposition in the Legislature was not nearly so fortion which it occasions ed.

Although the opposition in the Legislature was not nearly so fortion which it occasions stronger feeling of discontent was excited by the change in the Revolutionary party and the army. "Bonaparte," said they, "is striving in vain to destroy the remains of the Revolution, and to close every avenue against the anti-revolutionary party, when by his concordat he opens to the latter an ample gateway, and with his own hands digs the mine which is to blow his edifice into the air." In truth, such was the extraordinary and unprecedented extent to which irreligion had spread under the Republican Government, that "two-thirds of the French people," according to the admission of their own historians, "were ignorant of the principles on which

Its provisions in fa-

whereas the Legion of Honour was only carried by a majority of 236 to 158; a striking proof howmuch more strenuous the opposition was to any approach towards the re-establishment of a nobility, than even the Christian religion, which was held forth as so much the object of obloquy.—Thirdt-Deau, 210.

(2) See the Concordat and Articles Organiques, in Nap. Mclanges. i. 297, et seq.

Some very important articles were included in the same treaty relative to the independence of the Gollican Church. It was provided, "1. That no bull, brief, rescript, decree, mandate, or provision, or other writing whatever, emanating from the Court of Rome, even concerning individuals, should be received, published, printed, or put in execution, without the authority of government. 2. That no individual announcing himself as legatee, vicar, or commissioner of the Hofy See, should, without the same authority, exercise on the French territory vour of the Galhean Church.

General councils, should not be published in France, without a previous examination by the Government, to ascertain whether they were in harmony with the laws and institutions of the French Republic, or were in any way calculated to affect the public tranquillity. 4. That no national or metropolitan council, diocesan synod, or other deliberative assembly, should be held without the express authority of government. 5. That an ap-or elsewhere, any function relative to the affairs of the Gallican Church.

or inetropolitan council, diocesan synod, or other deliberative assembly, should be held without the express authority of government. 5. That an appeal should lie to the Council of State in every case of alleged abuse or misgovernment on the part of the superior ecclesiastical authorities; and that under this head should be included every infraction of the rules established in the Councils of the Church, every attempt calculated to injure the liberties of the Gallican Church, every infringement on the liberty of public worship, or of the rights which the laws secured to its ministers." [Nap. Mélanges, i. 301.] By these articles, the Church in France was practically rendered nearly as independent of the Papul authority as the Protestant establishment of Great Butain.

such a measure was founded, and regarded it as a strange and dangerous innovation." The opposition which it experienced was indeed almost inconcervible, and afforded the clearest evidence of the permetons tendency of those measures of extermination which former governments had adopted against the possessions of the established church, and how randly the conher than of ecclesiastical property, founded on the pretence of applying it to purposes of beneficence and public instruction, leads to the total destruction of every species of religious belief. Universally the opinion prevailed that the restoration of the alter was but a prelude to that of the throne, and that the concordat was to be regarded as a solumn pledge for the speedy resustablishment of the ancient require, a manifesto against all the principles of the he volution. These feelings were in an especial manner prevalent among the military and democratic parties. Moreau, Lannes, Oudinot, Victor, and many others, openly expressed their repugnance to the measure, and declined to ion the ceremony which took place in Notre-Dame on the occasion of its solemn proclimation "Acres," and the soldiers, "have the Republican arms been adorned by so many faurels as since they ceased to receive the benediction of the prasts (1) "

Napoleon, however, remuned firm, notwithstanding all the opposition which took place, and the loud discontents of the capital, the re-establi hment of nublic wor hip was announced by a proclamation of the consuls, and on the following day a grand religious ceremony took place, in honour of the arous us a occasion, in Notre-Dame. All the great bodies in the state, all the constituted authorities attended, and proceeded in great pomp to the cuthedral On this occasion, for the first time, the servants of the first consul apon the rise peared in livery, the foreign ambassadors were invited to appear with all their attendants arrayed in the same manner, and a similar recommendation was addressed to such of the nubble functionaries as had carriages of their own, but so few of them were possessed of that luxury, that the equipages made a very indifferent appearance. The military, however, were obliged to attend in great numbers, and the brilliancy of their uniforms more than compensated the want of civil decoration. Such, lowever, was the remugnance of many of the generals to the ceremony, that it required all the authority of the first consul to make Launes and Augereau remain in the carriage, when they perceived they were going to hear mass. It proceeded, nevertheless, with great colut in the cathedral of Notre-Dame, which only eight years before had been polluted by the orgies of the Goddess of Reason. What thought you of the externory "" said Napoleon to General Delmas, who stood near him when it was concluded "It was a fine piece of mammery," replied he "Nothing was wanting but the million of men who have perished in order to destroy what you have now re-established." It was at his timtended to have had the standards blessed by the archbishop, but the governient were obliged to abandon the design, from being given to understand, that if this was done, the soldiers would trample them under their feet (2) So difficult is it to cradie ife the passions which have been nursed up during the frenzy and convulsions of a revolution, and so obstinately do mankind, under the influence of prejudice, sometimes resist the establishment of those very in-titutions from which they are themselves destined to receive the most it falloved advantages (5)

^{3 7 4 14 (*)} Thin 162 164 Roar is 2"9 E.g. ii 189.

⁽²⁾ Experiment Japohom suder-decempy who make these princip root an excelerator or root Constrained religious observances at Paris.

Immediately after this great change, the observance of Sunday was to a certain degree resumed. It was provided in the concordat, that the government offices should be closed on Sunday, and this was immediately done. Shortly after, a decree of the consuls directed that all marriages should be proclaimed on that day, and the daily service of mass began in the Tuileries. Encouraged by so many symptoms of returning favour, the clergy made the utmost efforts to induce the first consul to join publicly in the more solemn duties which the church prescribed; but to this he never could be brought to consent. "We are very well as we are," said he; "do not ask me to go farther: you will never obtain what you wisht: I will not become a hypocrite: be content with what you have already gained." Mass, however, was regularly performed at the Tuileries in the morning. The first consul went to it on Sunday, and remained during the service, which seldom exceeded ten minutes, in an adjoining apartment, with the door open, looking over papers, or engaged in his usual occupations. He had considerable difficulty in preserving the balance so imperiously required in the head of the state, during the first return to religious observances after the revolutionary fever, yet by great firmness he succeeded, during his whole reign, in maintaining a just equilibrium between the impassioned characters on both sides (1).

Great joy depart-

met with in the corrupted population and revolutionary circles change in of Paris was very powerful, it was viewed in a very different light in the rural districts of France. The peasants beheld with undisguised delight the re-establishment of the priests, from whose labours and beneficence they had gained so much in former times; and the sound of the village bells again calling the faithful to the house of God, was hailed by millions, as the dove with the olive branch, which first announced peace to the "green undeluged earth." The restoration of Sunday, as a day of periodical rest, was felt as an unspeakable relief by the labouring population, who had never been able to establish the exemption from work on the tenth day, which the Convention had prescribed, and were borne down by years of continued and unbroken toil (2). But the pernicious effect of the total cessa-

But although the opposition which the restoration of religion cooks, you may do with them what you please." The well-known devotion of Rapp to his general procured him impunity for these sort of speeches, which he very frequently made; but Delmas was not so fortunate. The first consul was extremely irritated at his reply, which made a great noise at the time, and he was soon after sent into exile in con-

(1) Bour. iv. 281, 282. Thib. 166,
Prudence of The wisdom with which Napoleon Napoléon in restrained the imprudent zeal of the restraining the high church party appears in the proceeding which took place on the death of hademoiselle Chameroi, a celebrated opera dancer. The priest of St. Roch refused to receive the body into his church, or celebrate over it the solemnities of interment, and this gave rise to a vehement dispute between the artists who accompanied the body and the clergy. It came to be dis-cussed in the Council of State, "It amounts to nothing," said the Senator Monge, "ht a mounts to home set of comedians with another."—"What!" said the first consul, with a severe air. "Yes, citizen-consul," replied Monge, "we may say that when the grand crosses do not hear us." But Napoléon viewed the matter in a very different light; and on the following day an article appeared in the Mont-teur which bore internal marks of his composition.

"The curate of St.-Roch, in a moment of hallucination, has refused to pray for Mademoiselle Chameroi, or to admit her body into the church, One of his colleagues, a man of sense, received the procession into the church of the Filles Saint-Thomas, where the service was performed with all the usual solemnities. The Archbishop of Paris has suspended the curate of St.-Roch for three months, to give him time to recollect that Jesus-Christ commanded us to pray even for our enemies; and that being recalled by meditation to a proper sense of his duties, he may learn that all these superstitious observances, the offspring of an age of credulity, or of crazed imaginations, tend only to the discredut of true reliable by the result for ligion, and have been proscribed by the recent concordat of the Gallican Church."—Тикаливан; 166,

April 14, 1802. (2) The conclusion of the concordat Hisadmirable was announced in these elequent proclamation words in a proclamation issued by on the subthe first consul. "An insane policy ject to the has sought during the Revolution to people of smother religious dissensions under the ruins of the altar, under the ashes of religion itself. At its voice all those pious solemnitics ceased in which the citizens called each other by the endearing name of brothers, and acknowledged their common equality in the sight of heaven. The dying, tion of all religious instruction and observances for nine years could not so easily be cradicated. A generation had been educated, who were gnorant of the very elements of the Christian failt; the frenzy of the Berolution had snapped asunder a chain which had descended unbroken from the Apostolic ages. The consequences of this chasm have been to the last degree permicious to the existing generation, and are, it is much to be feared, now irreparable. It is to this cause that we are to ascribe the spirit of irreligion which has since been so peculiarly the characteristic of the higher and urban classes of French society, and which has worked out its natural consequences throughout all the subsequent periods of the empire and the Restoration. A nation, which, in its influential classes at least, has lost all respect for religion, is incapable of freedom, and cau be governed only by force "Natura, tamen," says Teachis, "infirmitatis humanae, tardiora sunt remedia quam mala, et ut corpora, lente augescunt, eito extinguuntur, sie ingenia studiaque oppressens facilius quam revocaveris."

To foreign nations, however, who could not foresee the deplorable internal effects of this long interruption in religious instruction, the speciacle of France again voluntarily returning to the Christian faith was in the highest degree acceptable. Contrasting it with the monstrous profanations and wild extravagances of the irreligious fanaticism which had provailed during the Revolution, they deemed it the harbinger of tranquillity to its distracted people, and peace to Europe. It contributed more than any circumstance to weaken the horror with which the Revolutionary Government had so long been regarded, and opened the way to the establishment of more kindly relations, not only with the governments, but the people of foreign states. The Emwh ch the peror of Russia and the king of Prussia publicly expressed their satisfaction at the auspicious event, forgetting in their joy at the cited in forestoration of so important a member to the Christian family, the jealousy with which a change so likely to consolidate the power of the first consul might possibly have been regarded. The Emperor of Austria styled it, with great felicity of expression, 1' a service truly rendered to all Europe." And the thoughtful and religious every where justly considered the voluntary return of a great nation to the creed of its fathers, from the experienced impossibility of living without its precepts, as the most signal triumph to the Christian faith which had occurred since it ascended the Imperial throne, under the banners of Constantine (1).

It was as the first step in a great political improvement, and as closing the door against the worst principles of the Revolution, that Napoleon, in spite of so much opposition from his own subjects, undertook and carried through the concordat with Rome. Many persons urged him to complete the system; separate the church of France from the Pope, and at once declare himself its head. These persons, however, did not know the real state of the country, and still less the character of the first consul. So far from thinking that he could dispense with the court of Rome in setting this matter, he openly declared—"That if the Pope had not existed, it would have been well to have left alone in f is agon es, no longer heard that contoning voice which calls the Christian to a better world. Gold in mell fearned raisel from the face of nature. I matter afther e igon of peers less real features, your failing, let if a reigion with the nature you be 14 you by individual to cards to it e naturatis of your could be the call of the country of the country treety to that the God of peace is also it to God of arms, and that be thrown his harded overshowe who combat for the liberties of Fr.nce Citates of the Probestant faith, the law has equally attended its solicitude to your linterests, it the second ty, and yar, as budy, so brotterly, which you profess, unite you all in low to your country, and respect, for its laws; and, above all every permit of parts on doctrial plaw it to weaker that universal tharmy which rel go 140 oce inculates and commands — See 1982as, 19, 19, 26.

(1) Big to 200, 201

Subrequest or inicus et Napoleou on the cubereated him for that occasion, as the Roman consuls created a dietator in difficult circumstances. The concordat indeed recognised a foreign authority in religious matters, which might possibly disicel. turb the republic on some future occasion; but it did not create it, and, on the contrary, brought it under restraints more favourable than could possibly have been expected to the interests of the reigning power in France. By connecting the church with the state, Napoléon hoped to withdraw it from foreign or English influence, while by the conquest of Italy he expected to make the Pope the ready instrument of his will. He has himself told us, that he never repented of this great step .- "The concordat of 1801," says he, "was necessary to religion, to the republic, to the government; the churches were closed, the priests persecuted, part of the bishops were in exile, and in the pay of England, part merely apostolic vicars, without any bond to unite them to the state. The concordat put an end to these divisions, and made the Catholic apostolic church emerge from its ruins. Napoléon restored the altars, caused the disorders to cease, directed the faithful to pray for the republic, dissipated the scruples of the purchasers of national domains, and broke the last thread by which the exiled dynasty communicated with the country, by dismissing the bishops who resisted the reconciliation with the court of Rome, and holding them out as rebels to the holy see, who preferred their temporal interests to the eternal concerns of religion (1)."

Connected with the revival of religion was a great and generous design of the first consul, which it would have been well for him if he could have carried completely into effect, viz. the complete restoration of all the unalignated national property to the original proprietors. His first project was to make the restitution to that extent complete, with the single exception of the buildings devoted to public establishments; and even to restore the two-thirds which had been cut off from the public creditors by the barbarous decree of 1797. He never contemplated, however, the restoration of the alienated property, being well aware of the inextricable difficulties in which that question was involved. But when the subject was brought forward in the Council of State, he found the opposition so great that he was compelled to modify the project so much as amounted almost to its total abandonment. The severity of the laws against the emigrants had been gradually relaxed by suc-Nov. 26, 1500 cessive edicts. An important change was first made by the arret of 28th of Vendémiaire (26th November, 1800), which divided the emigrants into two classes, from the first and most numerous of which the prohibition was removed (2). They returned in consequence, in crowds; and the gates. were opened still more widely by the lenient policy of the Government, which directed the minister of police to grant passports of admission to almost all who applied for them, without regard to the formal distinctions established by the decree of the first consul. In granting these indulgences, alone extricate themselves; they possess the means of purchasing testimony in their favour. Thus the practical result is, that a duke is struck off the list, while a poor labourer is kept on it. We must extricate the matter by classing the emigrants according to certain distinctions, which may admit equally persons of all descriptions. The fists must be reduced by three-fourths of its number to the names of such as are known to be hostile to the Government. Having effected such a diminution, we shall be the better enabled to distinguish the really dangerous characters; they will no longer escape notice in the troubled flood of m sfortune."—Tru-EAUDEAU, 95.

⁽¹⁾ Nap. i. 115. Mclanges. Mr. Fox, after the peace of Amiens, ventured to blame Napoleon in conversation for not having per-mitted the marriage of priests in his domintons, "I then had," replied l.e," and still have, need to pacify. It is with water, and not oil, that you must extinguish theological volcanoes. I would have had less difficulty in establishing the Confession of Augsbourg in my empire."—Nevoctor, Mélanges, i.

<sup>121.
(2)</sup> When this arret was under discussion in the Council of State, Napoleon observed, "There are above 100,000 names on these unhappy lists; it is enough to turn one's head. In the general columity the most elevated and daugerous characters can Napoleon was influenced by more than a feeling of pity for the exiled families, he already looked forward to them as the firmest support of his throne. But it was not without difficulty that these concessions were made to the aristocratic party, the executive even was divided, and the second consul said to him, at the Council of State,—"The existence of the Lovern-

Renewed to the control of the counterbalance the influence of the current noblesse (4) "

Ap it so 1802 On the 29th April, 1802, a general amnesty was published by a senatus consultum, which reduced the exiled persons to about a thousand, and the melancholy list was, by the indulgence of the police, soon after respective to the police, and the police of the police, soon after respective to the police, and the police of the police, soon after respective to the police of the police, soon after respective to the police of the police, soon after respective to the police of the police of the police, soon after respective to the police of the police o

imnes y tread the soil and breathe t

the most part of all their possessions, The senatus consultum restored to every emigrant who was permitted to return, such part of his former property as had not been alienated by the state, but as it was soon found that they began in consequence to cut the forests to a great extent, in order to relieve their necessities, it became necessary to put a restriction upon this liberality, and a subsequent arret pro-Aug 4 1802 hibited the removal of the sequestration on the woods belonging to emigrants, amounting to three hundred arpents and upwards (2) By a subsequent decree of the legislature, it was provided, through the urgent representations of the first consul that all successions to which the republic had acquired right as coming in place of the emigrants prior to the 1st Sepsept 5 1802 tember, 1802, and were unahenated, should be restored to the persons having right to them, that all claims of the republic on the emigrants prior to the amnesty should be extinguished, and that the goods of emigrants which had devolved to the republic, and were unahenated, should be declared hable to the claims of their creditors (5)

handquare These measures, how humanely and visely soever designed by def these and the second almost totally inadequate to remedy the dreadless and the second seco

viation undoubtedly from the letter of the law, but circumstances imperiously

The navy requires them the r destruct on is con-

⁽¹⁾ Th b 96 103 Bour 1v 333 334 (2) On the occas on the first consult said in the Council of State. The emigrants who have been struck out of the lats are cutting their woods required it; our error consisted in not having foreseen it before the original law was framed. This reaction, however, on my part, destroyed all the good effect of the recall of the emigrants, and alienated from me all the great families. I would have avoided all these evils if I had followed out my original design of a syndicat; instead of one discontented great family, I would have made an hundred grateful provincial nobles, who, being all dependent on my government for their subsistence, could have been relied on to the last. It is evident that the emigrants had lost their all; that they had embarked their property on board the same vessel, and what was rescued from the waves should have been proportionally divided. It was a fault on my part not to have done so, which is the more unpardonable that I had entertained the idea; but I was alone, surrounded by thorns; every one was against me, time pressed, and still more important affairs imperiously required my attention (1)."

But in truth, even if the projects of Napoléon could have been Immensa extent of carried into complete effect, they would have remedied but a small this evil, and irreme-diable efpart of the evils consequent on the frightful confiscation of private property which took place during the Revolution. From a report fects. made by M. Ramel on the finances of the Republic, it appears that before the year 1801 there had been sold national domains to the enormous amount of 2,555,000,000 francs, or above L.100,000;000 sterling; and that there remained to sell property to the amount of 700,000,000 francs, or L.28,000,000 sterling (2). When it is recollected that during the greater part of this period, the national domains, from the insecure tenure by which they were held, and the general confusion, were sold for a few years' purchase, it may be conceived what a prodigious mass of landed property must have been torn from the rightful proprietors in this way, and how fatal was the wound thus inflicted on the social system of France. Mr. Burke declared at the outset of the Revolution, that without complete restitution or indemnification to all the dispossessed proprietors, it would be impossible to construct a stable constitutional monarchy in France (5), and the result has now completely established the justice of his opinion. The want of a landed aristocracy to coerce the people, on the one hand, and restrain the executive on the other, has ever since been felt as the irreparable want in the monarchy; its absence was bitterly lamented by Napoléon (4), and all the attempts of subsequent

(1) Las Cas, ii. 221, 222. Considerable alarm was excited among the holders of national domains by these proceedings in favour the French people, the first principle of the republic, ever must be, to preserve untouched, and without any sort of distinction, the purchasers of national domains. In truth, to have trusted the fortunes of the republic, when it was assailed with the united of the emigrants. To allay them, the following article appeared in the Moniteur:—The first duty of tunes to those of the state in such a period of anxious alarm, must ever constitute a claim on the gratitude of the state and the people."—Thibaudeau, 176.

(2) Compte rendu, par Ramel. Stat. de la France, 545. The periods during which this predigious confiscation of private property took place were as follow:-

1,500,000,000, or L. 60,000,000 611,438,000, or

24,500,000 316,454,000, or \ 12,750,000 From Nov. 25, 1797, to June 30, 1801, 127,231,000, or 5,800,000

2,555,133,000 or L.103,050,000

blesse. There were but two lines to take; that of extirpation or fusion. The first could not for a moment be entertained; the second was by no means easy, but I do not think it was beyond my strength. I was fully aware of its importance.- It was incumhent on us to complete the fusion; to cement the ⁻See Compte Rendu de Ramel, Stat. de la France, 545.

⁽³⁾ Burke v. 289, et seq.
(4) "I am now convinced," said he, "that I was in the wrong in my arrangements with the faubourg St.-Germain. I did too much and too little; enough to excite jealousy in the opposite party, and not enough to attach to my interest the restored no-governments to construct a constitutional throne, or establish public freedom on a durable basis, have failed from the absence of that element. Neither Napoléon nor the Bourbons were ever strong enough to attempt the restitution of the contiscated estates at the expense of the four millions of landed proprietors among whom they were now divided. The conclusion, to be drawn from this, however, is not that Mr. Burke's and Napoleon's opinion were erroneous, or that the fabric of liberty can be erected on the basis of robbery and spoliation; but that the national sins of France had been so great, that reparation or restitution was impossible, and she has received the doom of nernetual servitude in consequence.

When so many great ideas were passing through the mind of the first consul, the important subject of public instruction, and the progress of science, could not long remaind unnoticed. Insatiable in his desire for every species of glory, he aspired, like Charlemagne, not only to extend the frontiers, and enhance the renown of the republic, but to construct a monument to science, which should perpetuate its fame to the latest generation. When he ascended the consular throne, the state of knowledge and public instruction was in the highest degree deplorable. The old establishments of education, which were for the most part in the hands of the clergy, and endowed from ecclesiastical foundations, had shared the fate of all the feudal institutions, and perished alike with their blessings and their erils. During the long interregnum of ten years which intervened under the revolutionary government, public instruction was generally neglected, and religious education, by far its most important department, entirely ceased, except in a small and persecuted class of society. Not that the Convention had overlooked this great subject of general instruction; on the contrary, they were fully aware of its importance, and had done their utmost, during the distracted and stormy period that they held the rems of government, to fill up the chasm. They established several seminaries of medicine, the Poly-partment; and to them is due the formation of the listiture; which so long kept alive the torch of science during the melancholy night of modern civilisation. But these efforts, how incritorious society, were wholly inadequate to remedy the civils which the Revolution had produced. The distracted date of the country, after the subsession of all its institutions, raused no education to be of any value but such as tended at once to military advancement; and the abolition of religious instruction, rendered all that was, or could be, taught to the great body of the people, of little practical benefit. Ender detechnic school, which afterwards attained such deserved celebrity, various against all histories we at the should have been instantion. The mass of all his relevant was been been been for the second with the property of the property

we see, the so more resolvable to more as small, that weather stage is the fore-more of an extent of some other than the same of the source of mocratic rule, France, amidst incessant declamations in favour of general illumination, and pompous eulogies on the lights of the times, was rapidly sinking into a state of darkness, deeper than the gloom of the middle ages (1).

By directions from the first consul, Chaptal presented to the Council of State a project for a general system of public instruction. It was founded on singular principles; distrust of the general education of the people, especially in the rural districts, and an anxiety to train up a body of favoured young men in the interest of the government, were its leading features. Schools of primary instruction in the communes were every where permit-May, 1, 1802. ted, but Government contributed nothing to their support, and the teachers were left to such remuneration as they could obtain from their scholars. Secondary schools, the next in gradation, were placed on the same footing, with this difference, that they could not be established without the special authority of Government. The favour of the executive was reserved for academies of the higher kind, which, under the name of lyceums and special schools, were established to the number of thirty in different parts of the Republic, and at which not only were the masters paid by the state, but the scholars, 6400 in number, were also maintained at the public expense. The teachers in these institutions were required to be married; a regulation intended to exclude the priests from any share in the higher branches of tuition; and no mention whatever was made of religion in any part of the decree; a striking proof of the continued influence of the infidel spirit which had grown up during the license and sins of the Revolution, and which rendered the whole establishment for education of little real service to the labouring classes of the community (2).

Oct 1, 1802. Following out the same plan of concentrating the rays of government favour upon the higher branches of knowledge, the sum of 60,000 francs (L.2100) was set aside to encourage the progress of French philosophy in electricity and galvanism; a galvanic society was instituted; a senatus consultum awarded the rights of French citizenship to every stranger who had Oct. 18, 1502. resided a year in its territory, and had deserved well of the Republic by important discoveries in science or art; the Institute was divided into four classes, and each member received a pension of 1500 francs, or Dcc. 24, 1802. L.60 a-year; while a chamber of commerce was established in each considerable city of the Republic, and a council-general of commerce at Paris (5).

The rapid succession of objects, tending to monarchical ideas, encouraged the Royalists in the capital to make a trial of their Trials of public feeling by the Royalists. influence over the public mind. Duval composed a play, entitled "Edward in Scotland," which Napoléon resolved to see performed before he determined whether or not it should be allowed to be represented. He Oct. 9, 1802. listened attentively to the first act, and appeared even to be in-

(1) Thib. 122, 125. Big. ii. 211.

These observations apply to France as a nation. The splendid discoveries and vast talent displayed in mathematics and the exact sciences by the Institute, throughout all the Revolution, can never be too highly eulogized, and will be fully enlarged upon, in treating of the French literature during its progress.

(2) Thib. 134, 135. Big. ii. 212.

(3) White the second of these establishments to admit no young man whose family was ments to admit no young man of the Revolution. not attached to the principles of the Revolution.
"We must never," said Napoleon, "admit into these schools any young man whose parents have combated against the Republic. There could be no concord between officers of such principles and the soldiers of the army. I have never appointed even a sub-lieutenant, to my knowledge, unless he was either drawn from the ranks, or was the son of a man attached to the Revolution. The lion of the Revolution sleeps; but if these gentlemen were to waken him, they would soon be compelled to fly with their best speed." How much attached soever to his favourite system of fusing together the opposite parties in the Revolution, Napoleon had no notion of extending it to the armed force of the state. THIEAUDEAU, 130, 131.

(3) Thib. 134, 141. Norv. ii 189, 190.

terested in the misfortunes of the exited prince, but the warm and enthusistic appliances which ensued as the piece advanced, convinced him that it could not be permitted without risk. It was interdicted, and the author counselled to improve his health by travelling, he retired to Russia, and remained there for a vear (1).

A general system was now set on foot for the maintenance of the requisite forces by sea and land, and the mistraction of the young officers in the rudinents of the military art. A leav of 120,000 men was ordered, one-half of which was destined to replace the discharged veterans, and the other to form an army of reserve (2). At the same time, a project was discussed for the formation of a fixed body of seamen, divided into reclinents, and allotted to each vessel in the may. Truguet observed, "If you have only commerce you will never want sailors, and they will cost nothing; it is only when a nation has no trade that it is necessary to key sailors, much longer time is required to form a sailor than a solder, the latter may be trained to all his duties in six months."

Detain to Aspoleon replied, "There never was a greater mistake, nothing that sab ect can be more dangerous than to propagate such opinions, if acted upon, they would speedily lead to the dissolution of our army. At Jemappes, there were tifty thousand I reach against nine thousand tustrians, during the first four years of the war all the hostile operations were conducted in the most ridiculous manner. It was neither the volunteers nor the recruits who saved the Republic, it was the 180,000 old troops of the monarchy, and the discharged veterans whom the Revolution impelled to the frontiers Part of the recruits descrited, part died, a small proportion only remained, who, in process of time, form good soldiers. Why have the Romans done such great things, Because six years' instruction were with them required to make a soldier. A legion composed of three thousand such then was worth thirty thousan Lordinary troof . With lifteen thousand men such as the guards, I would any where beat forty thousand. You will not soon had me engaging in war with a rarmy of recruits

"In this great project we must not be startled by expense. No inland boatmen will exer voluntarily go to the sea-jorts. We must make it a matter of necessity. The conscription for the marine should come one at ten or twelve wars of 521, the min should amount to twelve though Lau lescree all their lives. We are told there is a such mard concept from I righard, but the example is not parallel. In Jan I has an immoso extent of coasts which furnish her with abundance of seamer. We have a comparatively small coast, and but few scamen. Vature has been nightful us in this particular, we must suight its defects by artificial icars." In case we presume of the set principles an area appeared upon the threst token, which fail the foundation of the conscription for the naval service of trance[5].

about the same time a project was brought before the Council for the

⁽¹⁾ Table 147 142 Book to .27 (2) Table 147 149

Defining to the problems of the first bound of the first bound of the first partial to the test to the test of the first bound of the first bound east out. I a from the extract in all set out to be proposed by the proposed by the proposed to be a first to be a establishment of Chambers of agriculture in the colonics. They were decreed; • but the war which soon afterwards broke out, prevented the plan being carried into execution. The principles, however, advanced by Napoléon in support of the proposal, are admirable for their wisdom and sagacity. "Doubtless," said he, "you must govern the colonies by force; but there can be no force without juctice. Government must be informed as to the real situation of the colonies, and for this pur-Anpoleon on the gopose, it must patiently hear the parties interested; for it is not respondit sufficient to acquire the character of justice, that the ruling power does what is right. It is also necessary that the most distant subjects of the empire should be convinced that this is the case, and this they will never be, unless they are sensible that they have been fully heard. Were the Council of State composed of angels or gods, who could perceive at a glance every thing that should be done, it would not be sufficient unless the colonists had the conviction that they had been fully and impartially heard. All power must be founded on opinion; it is in order to form it that an institution similar to that proposed is indispensable. At present there is no constitutional channel of communication between France and the colonies; the most absurd reports are in circulation there as to the intentions of the central government, and it is as little informed as to the real wants and necessities of its distant possessions. If Government had, on the other hand, a colonial representation to refer to, it would become acquainted with the truth, it would proclaim it, and transmit it in dispatches to its colonial subjects.

"Commerce and the colonies have opposite interests; the first is that of purchasers and consumers, the latter that of raisers and producers. sooner is it proposed to impose duties on colonial produce than I am besieged with memorials from all the chambers of commerce in France, but no one advances any thing in behalf of the colonies; the law, whatever it is, arrives there in unmitigated rigour, without the principles which led to it being explained, or their receiving any assurance that their interests have been balanced with those of the other side. But the colonists are Frenchmen, and our brothers; they bear a part of the public burdens, and the least that can be done for them in return is to give them such a shadow of a representation.

"Many persons here see only in the colonies the partisans of the English; that is held out merely as a pretext for subjecting them to every species of Had I been at Martinique, I should have espoused the cause of the English; for the first of social duties is the preservation of life. Had any of your philanthropic liberals come out to Egypt to proclaim liberty to the blacks or the Arabs, I would have hung him from the masthead. West Indies similar enthusiasts have delivered over the whites to the ferocity of the blacks, and yet they complain of the victims of such madness being discontented. How is it possible to give liberty to the Africans when they are destitute of any species of civilisation, and are ignorant even of what a colony or a mother country is. Do you suppose that had the majority of the Constituent Assembly been aware what they were doing, they would have given liberty to the blacks? Certainly not; but few persons at that time were sufficiently far-sighted to foresee the result, and feelings of humanity are ever powerful with excited imaginations. But now, after the experience we have had, to maintain the same principles cannot be done in good faith; it can be the result only of overweening self-confidence or hypocrisy (1)."

⁽¹⁾ Thib, 117, 121.

Words of true political wisdom, which demonstrate how admirably qualified Napoleon was to have held, with just and even hands, the reins of power in a vast and varied empire, and which have since become of still greater value from the contrast they afford to the measures subsequently pursued by another state, in regard to far greater colonial dependencies, and with the lamentable result of former rashness even more forcibly brought before its eyes (1).

France, both under the monarchy and during the course of the Finances Revolution, like every other country which has fallen under despotic power, had become burdened with an enormous and oppressive land-tax. The clear produce of the direct contributions in the year 1802 was 275,600,000 francs, or L 11,000,000 sterling, which, on the net amount of agricultural labour in the Republic, was about twenty per cent (2). This immense burden was levied according to a scale, or "cadastre," at which it was estimated the land was worth, and as the smiles of government favour were bestowed on the official persons employed in making the surveys in a great degree in proportion to the amount to which they contrived to bring up the revenue of their districts, the oppression exercised in many parts of the country was extreme, and the less likely to be remedied, that it fell on a numerous body of detached little proprietors, incapable of any effective or simultaneous effort to obtain redress The "cadastre," or scale of valuation, had been of very old standing in France, as it regulated the taille and vingtiemes, which constituted so large a portion of the revenue of the monarchy (3) By a decree of the National Assembly of 16th September 1791. sanctioned by the king on the 25d September in the same year, the method prescribed for fixing the valuation was as follows .- " When the levy of the land-tax in the territory of any community shall commence, the surveyor charged with the operations shall make out a scheme in a mass which shall exhibit the general result of the valuation, and its division in sections. He shall then make out detailed plans which shall constitute the parcelled valua-

(1) It is observed by Mr. Ilmme, that the remote provinces and colonial deper demonst of a despote empire, are always better adm n stered than those that an uncontrolled monarch being genally elvased above all his subjects, and not more dependent on one class than another rwave thought, considering the peaking with equal eyes whereas a free better than the controlled peaking with equal eyes whereas a free obtained the mastery of an other and govern as classed with the consequently actuated by personal price, and are consequently actuated by personal price, and are consequently actuated by personal consequently actuated by personal consequently actuated by personal price, and are consequently actuated by personal price and are consequently actuated by personal price, and are consequently actuated by personal pr wisdom of the true ples of colonial correments thus develored by Napoleon, compared with the unit of the colonial colonial striking situations of the particle of the colonial colonial

In this guinations on one participating of the participation of participatio

(2) MM, Lavo sier and Peuchel estimate the total ag icult duce of France in 1805 at,

Statistical de Act | roduce, c'educting cost of production, tals Direct Taxes falling on land, Ind rect Taxes,

Brawn ly the owners of the soil,

So that of the net produce of the soil ano half was also pled in statution on it no less than 20 per cent take if rous the proprietors in a d reet form, a signal proof how hitle the breaks pressurer had gared, in alterat on of burdens at least by the result of the flevolution—See Parcentr, Stat do le France, 285 237

The committee of the Constituce I Assemily, who reported in 1750 on this subject, estimated the net territural reversion of the ce at 300 m like st. or L 50 300 000 000 M Gamble, sirer various labe room calculations, estimates it in 1816, at 1 200,000,007, or L. Gard at at 1 323 000 000, or L.53 000 000. — oce

and fixed the land fax at 240 000 000 feates, or L-9,200 000 and, with the expenses of collection, 300 000 000 fraces, or L 12 000 000, being a fourth of the i some of every landed proprietor {Due de Gacta, it. 288, Peuthet, Stat. de France, 528 } tions of the community." These directions were justly and impartially conceived; but the difficulty of forming just and equal valuations in a country so immensely subdivided, and of such vast extent as France, was extreme; and, during the license and tyranny of the Revolution, the most flagrant inequality prevailed in the land-tax paid in different parts of the country. We have the authority of Napoleon's finance minister in 1802 for the assertion, that in every district of France, "there were some proprietors who were paying the fourth, the third, and even the half, of their clear revenue, while others were only rated at a tenth, a twentieth, a fiftieth, or an hundredth (1)." The gross injustice of such a system naturally produced the most vehement complaints, when the restoration of a regular government afforded any prospect of obtaining redress. The consular government, during the whole of 1802, was besieged with memorials from all quarters, setting forth the intolerable injustice which prevailed in the distribution of the land-tax, the utter inefficacy of all attempts which had been made in preceding years to obtain from the councils or prefects of the departments any thing like equality in the valuation, and the complete disregard which both the Convention and Directory had evinced towards the loud and well-founded complaints of the country (2).

The matter at length became so pressing, that it was brought before the Council of State.—The magnitude of the evil did not escape the penetration of the first consul (5). The formation of a valuation was decreed, proceeding on a different principle. This was to adopt as the basis of the scale, a valuation, laid, not on parcels of ground, but on masses of the same kind of cultivation. This system, however, although in appearance the most equitable, was found by experience to be attended with so many difficulties, that its execution did not proceed over above a fifth of the territory of the Republic, and it was at length abandoned from the universal complaints of its injustice. The discussion of the "cadastre" was again brought forward, and made the subject of anxious consideration in 1817, but the inequality of the valuation still continued, and is the subject of loud and well-founded complaints at this hour. In truth, such are the obstacles thrown in the way of an equal valuation by individual interests, and such the difficulties with which the execution of such a task is attended, from the variation in the amount of the produce of the soil, and the prices which can be got for it at different times every one, by applying it to his valuation, knows at once what he has to pay. In such a country, therefore, property may truly be said to exist. Why is it that we have never had any public spirit in France? Simply because every proprietor is obliged to pay his court to the tax-gatherers and surveyors of his district; if he incurs their displeasure he is ruined. It is in vain to talk of appealing; the judgments of the courts of review are arbitrary. It is for the same reason that there is no nation so servilely submissive to the government as France, because property depends entirely upon it. In Lombardy, on the other hand, a proprietor lives on his estate without feeling any disquietude as to who succeeds to the government. Nothing has ever been done in France to give security to property. The man who shall devise an equal law on the subject of the cadastre will deserve a statue of gold." [Bign. i. 221. Thib. 179.] What an instructive testimony as to the amount of security which the Revolution had conferred upon property in France, and the degree of practical freedom which had been enjoyed, or public spirit developed, under its multifarious democratic administrations!

⁽¹⁾ Due de Gaeta, ii. 261.
(2) Due de Gaeta, ii. 257.
(3) "Your system of land-tax," said he, in the Council of State, "is the worst in Europe. The result of it is, that there is no such thing as property or civil liberty in the country; for what is freedom without security of property? There can be no security in a country where the valuation on which the tax proceeds can be changed at the will of the surveyors every year. A man who has 3,000 francs of rent a-year (L)120) cannot calculate upon having enough next year to exist; every thing may be swept away by the direct tax. We see every day questions about fifty or a hundred francs gravely pleaded before the legal tribunals and a mare conpleaded before the legal tribunals, and a mere surveyor can, by a simple stroke of the pen, surcharge you several thousand francs. Under such a system there cannot be said to be any property in the country. When I purchase a domain, I know neither what I have got, nor what I should do in regard to it. In Lombardy and Piedmont there is a fixed valuation; every one knows what he is to pay; no extraordinary contributions are levied but on extraordinary occasions, and by the judgment of a solemn tribunal. If the contribution is augmented, to be impossible inevitable atten-- c u der the very best system of local administration. The only taxes which are, comparatively speaking, equal, just, and unfelt, are indirect burdens, which, being laid on consumption, are voluntarily incurred, disguised under the price of the article, and accurately proportioned to the amount of expenditure of each ındıvıdual (1)

and gas But in the midst of these great designs of Napoleon for the reconpoleon at struction of society in France, he experienced the greatest annovance from the independent, and sometimes cutting language used by the popular orators in discussing the projects sent from the Council of State to the Tribunate Though friendly to a free and unreserved discussion of every subject in the first of these bodies, which sat with closed doors, the first consul was irritated to the last degree by the opposition which his measures experienced in the only part of the legislature which retained a shadow even of popular constitution, and openly expressed his resolution to get quit of an institution which reminded the people of the dangerous powers which they had exercised during the anarchy of the Revolution. He loved unfettered arguments in presence only of men competent to judge of the subject, but could not endure the public harangues of the tribune, intended to catch the ears, or excite the passions of an ignorant populace (2). On marious occasions, during the course of 1802, his displeasure was strongly excited by the ebullitions of republican spirit or spicen which occasionally took place in the Tribunate An expression in the treaty with Russia roused the indignation of the veteran democrats of the Revolution. It was provided *that " the two contracting parties should not permit their respective subjects to entertain any correspondence with foreign powers ' When the treaty came to be discussed at the Tribunate, this expression gave rise to an angry discussion Thibaut exclaimed, "The French are citizens, and not subjects" Chemier observed, "Our armies have combated ten years that we should remain citizens, and we have now become subjects. Thus are accomplished the wishes of the two coalitions" Aspolcon was highly displeased with these symptoms of a refractory spirit "What," said he, "would these declaimers be at? It was absolutely necessary that my government should treat on a footing of equality with that of Russia. I would have become contemptible in the eyes of all foreign nations if I had yielded to these absurd pretensions on the part of the Tribunate. These gentlemen annoy me to such a degree that I am strongly tempted to be done at once with them (5) '

Inother law was brought forward about the same time, which Imports t chance in mu c pal go era) excited a still more vehicment opposition on the part of the public orators. It related to certain changes in the constitution of the ent car judges intrusted with the arrest of individuals and the municipal police. These powers were, by the existing law, invested in the hands of the juges de paix, who were still appointed by the people, the proposed change took this branch of jurisdiction from these functionaries, and vested it in a small number of judges appointed for that special purpose by the government, who were to take cognizance of the crimes of robbery,

⁽⁴⁾ Gaeta zu 258

⁽²⁾ low v 85 Th h 198
He ofte said to the leading oracts of the True ste — Instad of dec a ming fourtheir have why do you not come to discuss the points

under de berat on with me is my cabuet. We shoull he fan ly decusions as a my Lounc ! of State -Ta savogav 198 (3) Dour : 85 87 Th b 198 .07 plan, which was to divide the Tribunate into five sections, corresponding to the divisions of the Council of State; that the proposed laws should be secretly transmitted from the section of the Council of State to the corresponding section of the Tribunate: that they should be secretly discussed in the Tribunate. and between the Tribunate and the Council of State by three orators appointed on both sides, and no public discussion take place except by three orators, mutually in like manner chosen, between the Tribunate and the Government pleaders at tended · where it still exi leon replied. "I cannot see that. Even if it were so, a constitution must be moulded by circumstances, modified according to the results of experience, and ultimately constructed in such a way as not to impede the speech on the a bject necessary action of Government. My project secures a calm and rational discussion of the laws, and upholds the consideration of the Tribunate. What does the Tribunate mean? nothing but the tribune, that is, the power of rational discussion. The Government has need of such an addition to its means of information but what is the use of an hundred men to discuss the laws introduced by thirty? They declaim, but do nothing of real utility. We must at length organize the constitution in such a manner as to allow the Government to advance No one seems yet sufficiently impressed with the necessity of giving unity to the executive; until that is effected, nothing can be done An universal disquietude prevails, speculation, evertion of every kind is arrested. In a great nation the immense majority of mankind ever are incapable of forming a rational opinion on public affairs. Every one must contemplate, at some period or another, the death of the first consul, in that case, without a cordial union of the constituted authorities, all would be lost (1)."

The opposition, however, was very powerful against these great alterations; and Napoleon, whose prudence in carrying through political changes was equal to his sagacity in conceiving them, contented himself, at the annual renewal of the constitution, with an arret of the Senate, that thenceforward the duties of the Tribunate and the Legislative Body should be exercised only by the citizens who were insembled on the two lists as the first elected to continue the exercise of the national functions. The great change of the constitution involved in the mutitation of the Tribunate, was reserved for the period when Napoleon was to be elected first consul for life, an event which soon afterwards took place (2).

Heresire Influenced not merely by ambition, but a profound and philosolocated plus view of the existing state of France, Napolcon had firmly resolved to convert the republic into a monarchy, and not only seat limiself on the throne, but render the dynasty hereditary in his family, or those wh apparent nations, exist in classes w such institutions; exposed to all the sources of discord and corruption arising from a powerful military force, selfish and highly exvlised manners, and the influence of a vast revenue, placed in the midst of the great military monarchies of Europe, who were necessarily hostile to such institutions; from the experience they had had of the evils with which they were attended to all the adjoining states, France could not by possibility avoid falling under the government of a single individual. Napoléon had no alternative but to restore the Bourbons, or seat himself on the throne (1).

During the whole of 1802, the efforts of Government were incessant to extend monarchical ideas by means of the press, and the private Government to sorred mo- influence of all persons in official situations. Lucien Bonaparte has been already noticed as one of the earliest and most zealous propagators of these new opinions a year before; but as they came forth at too early a period, and somewhat startled the public, he was rewarded for his services by an honourable exile as ambassador at Madrid. But in the succeeding season, the change of the public mind had become so evident, that it was no longer necessary to veil the real designs of Government; and the appointment of Napoléon to the consulship for life was accordingly zealously advocated by all persons in prominent situations. Roederer supported it with all the weight of his acute metaphysics; Talleyrand gained for it the suffrages of the whole diplomatic body. Arbitrary power advanced with rapid steps in the midst of general declamations in favour of order and stability; whoever spoke of liberty or equality was forthwith set down as a Jacobin, a Terrorist, and looked on with suspicious eyes by all the servants of Government. The partisans of revolution, finding themselves reduced to a miserable minority, retired into the obscurity of private life, or consoled themselves for the ruin of their republican chimeras, by the personal advantages which they derived from situations round the consular throne (2).

The attempt The project for appointing Napoléon consul for life had failed a at first lails few months before, when the prorogation of that appointment for ten years took place. Napoléon affected at that period to decline such an elevation; the two other consuls, acquainted with his real desires, insisted that it should be forced upon him; and it was so carried in the Council of State by a majority of ten to seven. Lanfrede, who brought up the report of the committee of the Senate on the subject, and was not in the secret, proposed only a temporary prorogation; Despinasse moved that it should be for life. But Tronchet, who was president, and whose intrepidity nothing could overcome, held firm for the first proposal, and it was carried by a majority of sixty to one, Languinais alone voting in the minority. Tronchet was neither a republican nor a courtier; he preferred a monarchy, but notwithstanding his admiration for Napoléon, he feared his ambition. He said of Napoléon, in a company where several senators were assembled:—"Ile is a young man; he has begun like Cæsar, and will end like him; I hear him say too frequently,

(1) Big. ii. 231. Thib. 236. (2) Big. ii. 231, 232. Thib. 236.

Strong opposition of Josephine undisguised satisfaction bioto these at- ing elevation to the throne, the individual in existence who, next to himself, was to gain most by the change, was de-voured with anxiety on the subject. All the splendour of the throne could not dazzle the good sense of Josephine, or prevent her from anticipating in the establishment of the Napoleon dynasty, evident risk to her husband, and certain downfall to herself. "The real enemies of Bonaparte," said she to Rederer, who was advocating the change, "are those who put into his head ideas of hereditary succession, dynasty, divorce, and marriage." She employed all the personal influence which she possessed with the first consul and his most intimate counsellors to divert him from these ideas, but in vain. "I do not approve the projects of Napoleon," said she; "I have often told him so; he hears me with attention, but I can plainty see that I make no impression. The flatterers who surround him soon obliterate all I have said. The new honours which he will acquire will augment the number of his enemies; the generals will exclaim that they have not fought so long to substitute the family of the Bonapartes for that of the Bourbons. I no longer regret the want of children; I should tremble for their fate. I will remain attached to the destiny of Bonaparte, how dangerous soever it may be, as long as he continues to me the regard which he has hitherto manifested; but the moment that he changes I will retire from the Tuileries. I know well how much he is urged to separate from me." See Bouz-RIENNE, V. 41, 47; THIE AUDEAU, 237, 242.

that he will mount on horseback and draw his sword (1) " What a glorious distinction for the same individual to have with equal courage pleaded the cause of Louis XVI in the Temple, and restrained the career of Napoleon on the throne, and how noble a contrast to the baseness of so many of the popular faction, who then showed as great vehemence in the persecution of a failing. as they now displayed servicity in the adulation of a rising monarch (2)

The design of making Napolcon consul for life, having thus failed in the Senate, probably from mis-apprehension of what he really desired, the method of attaining the object was changed. He began, as he usually did in such cases, to blame severely those who had been most prominent in urging forward the plan, and in an especial manner animadverted on Roederer, whose efforts to procure his elevation had been peculiarly conspicuous. But in the midst of his seeming displeasure at the proposal which had been made, the most efficience means were taken to secure its adoption. In reply to the address of the Senate, which prorogated his power for ten years beyond the turm originally assigned, he observed-" The suffrages of the people M sus adopted to have invested me with the supreme authority, I should not deem ensure its myself sufficiently secured in the new proof which you have given me of your esteem, if it were not sanctioned by the same authority " Under cover of this regard for popular sovereignty, the partisans of Napoleon veiled a design of conferring on him hereditary power. It was proposed in the Council of State, that the people should be consulted on the question whether the consulship for life should be conferred upon him Roederer said-"A prorogation of the consulship for ten years gives no stability to Government. The interests of credit and of commerce loudly demand a stronger measure The Senate has limited its appointment to ten years, because it conceived it did not possess power to confer authority for a longer period, but we should submit to the people the question, whether the first consul should be nominated for life, and invested with the right to appoint his successor (5) So clearly was the design seen through, that the proposal was carried without a division, though some of the popular members abstained from voting. In conformity with this resolution of the Council of State, and without any authority from the other branches of the Legislature, the question was forthwith submitted to the people,-" Shall Napolcon Bonaparte be consul for life"" Registers were directed to be opened in every commune, to ice ly sub receive the votes of the citizens. Napoleon declined the addition of the question, whether he should be invested with the right to nominate his successor, deeming the inconsistency too glaring between a refusal to accept a prorogation for ten years from the Senate, if not confirmed by the people, and the demand of a right to nominate a successor to the throne of France (1).

The result of this appeal was announced by the Senatus Consultum of August 2 It appeared that 5,457,885 citizens had voted, of whom 5,508,209 were for the affirmative. This is one of the most remarkable events recorded in the history of the Revolution, and singu-

In our as he agone re in here only than republican forms we hather have with who he was now on yet all red at a part of the area of the ar

¹⁴ te that I musclf in the first instance assume a lete from what hadoes which I because on others may naturally flow. The use of Boest per is now over now because he dere redistriety lody sensible via but a vij which vegetate the consulta prices that the three viscous processions are still the properties of the viscous processions and the viscous processions are still the properties of the viscous processions are still the viscous processions and the viscous processions are still the viscous processions and the viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions and the viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions and viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions are viscous processions. The viscous processions are viscous larly descriptive of that longing after repose, that invincible desire Result of the appeal, for tranquillity which uniformly succeeds to revolutionary conand great satislaction which it gave vulsions, and so generally renders them the prelude to despotic power. The rapid rise of the public funds demonstrated that this feeling was general among the holders of property in France. They advanced with every addition made to the authority of the successful general; as low as eight before the 18th Brumaire, they rose at once to sixteen when he seized the helm, and after the consulship for life was proclaimed, reached fifty-two. Contrast this with the rise of the public securities, thirty per cent, on the day on which Necker was restored to the ministry on the shoulders of the people (1), to carry through the convocation of the States-General, and observe the difference between the anticipation and the experience of a revolution (2).

⁽⁴⁾ Th b 250 253 255 Bour . 17

The answer of the first consul to the address of the Senate on Answer of the first this important occasion is valuable, as illustrating the great views consul to the address which he already entertained of his mission, to extinguish the disof the Senate on the cord which had preceded him, and restore the reign of order upon occasion. earth. "The life of a citizen," said he, "belongs to his country; the French people have expressed their wish that mine should be solely devoted to it; I obey their will. In bestowing upon me a new, a permanent pledge of their confidence, the nation has imposed upon me the duty of moulding the system of its laws, so as to bring it into harmony with durable institutions. By my exertions, aided with your assistance, citizen-senators, by the concurrent voice of all the authorities, by the trust and the will of the whole people, the liberty, the prosperity, the equality of France will be established beyond the reach of chance. The most distinguished of people will be the most fortunate, and their prosperity will secure that of all Europe. Content to have been called by the will of Him, from whom every thing emanates, to bring back the reign of justice, order, and equality upon the earth, I will hear the voice which summons me hence without regret, and without disquietude on the opinion of future generations (5)."

Important changes in the constitution followed this alteration in ideas on the the character of the executive authority; they were preceded by memorable discussions on the principles of government in the Council of State (4).

(1) Bour. v. 55. Norv. ii. 129. Thib. ii. 81. Letter of (2) In the midst of the general unanimity, M Lafayette had the courage Lafayette declining to to vote against the appointment of the vote for it. first consul for life. He added to his vote these words: "I cannot vote for such a magistracy, until public freedom is sufficiently gualanteed; when that is done I give my voice to Napoleon Bonaparte." In a letter, addressed to the first pole on Bonaparte." In a letter, addressed to the first consul, he fully expressed the grounds of his jealousy:

"When a man," said he, "penetrated with the gratitude which he owes you, and too much enamoured with glory, not to admire that which encircles your name, has given only a conditional vote, it is the less suspected that no one will rejoice more than himself to see you the first magistrate for life, in a free republic. It is impossible that you, general, the first in that class of men who occasionally arise at the interval of ages, should wish that such a revolution, illustrated by so many victhat such a revolution, illustrated by so many victories, stained by so many crimes, should terminate only in the establishment of arbitrary power: patriotic and personal motives would lead me to desire for you that compliment to your glory which the consulship for life would afford; but the principles, the engagements, the actions of my life forbid me to wish for any such appointment if not founded on a basis worthy of you." In a private conversation with the first consul, he added:—"A free government, and you at its head; that comprehends all my desires." The veteran republican did not perceive, what indeed none of the enthusiasts of his age were aware of, that the establishment of the freedom to which he was so warmly attached had been rendered impossible by the crimes of the Revolution in which he had borne so conspicuous a part. He was taught the same truth in a still more striking manner thirty years afterwards by the re-sult of the Revolution which overturned the restoration; but it is seldom that political fanatics, how sincere or respectable snever, are taught even by the most important lessons of contemporaneous history. [Big. ii. 235, 236.]

Napoleon said on this occasion — In theory Lafayette is perhaps right; but what is theory? a mere dream when applied to the masses of mankind. He thinks he is still in the United States, as if the French were Americans. He has no conception of what is required for this country. The Catholic religion has still its root here; I have need of the Pope. He will do all I desire." From that period all com-munication between the general and the first consulceased. Napoleon tried repeatedly afterwards to regain him to his government, but in vain. (Bour. v. 81, 62.

(3) Thib. 287. Norve ii 193. (1) Napoleon did not attempt to disguise his contempt for the renal revolutionists who now fawned

Aug 4. 1802 On the views taken by Napoléon the new constitution was framed. which was proclaimed on the 4th August. The chief changes were, change in that the Tribunate was reduced from one hundred to fifty members; a diminution of importance, which was regarded at the time, as it really was, as a prelude merely to its total extinction, and which so completely deprived that remnant of freedom of consideration, as to render it from thenceforward, no obstacle whatever to the despotic tendency of the government. The legislative body was reduced to 258 members, and divided into five divisions, each of which was annually renewed; the electors also retained their functions for life. The Senate was invested with the power to dissolve the Legislative Body and the Tribunate, declare particular departments hors de la constitution, and modify the fundamental institutious of the Republic. The first consul received the right to nominate his successor, and pardon offences. In return for so many concessions to the executive, a shadow of privilege was conferred on the electors; the electoral colleges were allowed each to present two citizens for the functions of the municipality department and nation. In all but name, the consulsing was already a despotic monarchy (1). So evident did this soon become, that even the panegyrists of Napolcon have not scrupled to assert that the consular and imperial institutions were "fraudulent constitutions, systematically intended by servile hands to introduce despotic power." Subsequent experience has warranted the belief that how arbitrary soever, they were the only institutions under which France could enjoy any degree of tranquillity, and that 416 10 106 # 1 upon. We must establish relations between them and the people, a particular in whic's the constitu tion was esser hally defective. The lists of those eli nobles, never would the French peasantry disgrace themselves by similar excesses. Their passion is for equality Forthese reasons I am clearly of populonous that the English constitution is mapple able to I rance. "The constitution may be aptly compared to a ensure the stability of government, the people must have a larger share in the elections, and feel their selves really represented

"The electoral colleges attach the people to the government, and occe reese. They are a link, and a most important one, between the authorities and the nation In that link it is indispensable to combine the class of proprietors with the most distinguished of those who have not that advantage, the former, because property must be the basis of every rational system of representation; the latter, be

tause the career of ambition must not be closed to obscure or indigent genus

 We are tall to look at the English constitution for a model; I am of opin on that it is inapplicable to this country, situated as it now lay and my realody is totally wanting; it cannot be created; if you compose it of the men of the Revolution, it could reignty of the people? When the crown was hereditary, the chief situations in the hingdom were he reditory also, the fiction on which it was founded was but a branch of the general law. At present there is no longer my of that, [Thib. 293, 199] (t) Nort in 191. Bour. v. 56. Bega. ii. 212, 216. Thib 289, 291.

if they were calculated to extinguish freedom, it was because the sins of the Revolution had rendered her people neither worthy of receiving, nor capable of enjoying that first of blessings.

Aug. 8, 1802. A few days after the constitution was published, the first consul presided at the Senate, and received the congratulations of the constituted authorities, the public bodies, and the foreign ambassadors, on his appointment for life. This was remarkable as the first occasion on which he openly displayed the pomp and magnificence of regal power. The soldiers formed a double line from the Tuileries to the Luxembourg; the first consul was seated in a magnificent chariot, drawn by eight horses; the the Senate. two other consuls followed in carriages drawn by six. A splendid cortège of generals, ambassadors, and public functionaries followed, whose gorgeous appearance captivated the Parisian multitude, more passionately devoted than any in Europe to spectacles of that description. Enthusiastic applause from the inconstant populace rent the heavens; they did not manifest greater rapture when the Constituent Assembly began the work of demolishing the monarchy, than they now did when the first consul restored it (4).

The aspect of Paris at this period was sufficient to have captivated Paris and a nation gifted with a less volatile imagination than the French, the its society more especially coming as it did after the sad and melancholy scenes of the Revolution. The taste for luxury and pleasure had spread rapidly in a capital where they had all the charms of novelty; while the people, captivated with the return of enjoyments, to which they had long been strangers, drank deep and thankfully of the intoxicating draught. The vast influx of strangers, especially English and Russians, filled the streets with brilliant equipages; while the gay and party-coloured liveries dazzled the inhabitants, from the contrast they afforded to the sombre appearance of the Jacobins' costume. The whole population of Paris flocked to the Place Carousel, where their eyes were daily dazzled by splendid reviews, attended by a concourse of strangers, which recalled the prosperous days of Louis XIV; while the higher classes of citizens were not less captivated by the numerous and brilliant levees and drawing-rooms, where the court of the first consul already rivalled the most sumptuous displays of European royalty (2). M. de Markoff, who had succeeded Kalitscheff as ambassador from Russia, Lord Whitworth, the English ambassador, and the Marquis Luchesini, the representative of Prussia, were in an especial manner distinguished by the magnificence of their retinues, and the eminent persons whom they presented to the first consul. Among the illustrious Englishmen who hastened to Paris to satiate their curiosity by the sight of the remains, and the men of the Revolution, was Mr. Fox, whom Napoléon received in the most distinguished manner, and for whom he ever after professed the highest regard; but the praises of an enemy are always suspicious, and the memory of that able man would have been more honoured if the determined foe of England had bestowed on him some portion of that envenomed hatred which he so often expressed towards Pitt or Wellington, and all the British leaders who had advanced the real interests and glory of their country (3).

(3) Bour. v. 55. D'Abr. vi. 136, 110. Generous To the honour of Mr. For conduct of mentioned, that during his To the honour of Mr. Fox it must be mentioned, that during his intercourse Mr Fox in with the first consul he never failed to defending Mr. Pitt to impress upon him the absurdity and falsehood of those ideas in regard to the first the privity of Mr. Pitt to any designs against his life, or any desire for his destruction, which were then so prevalent in the Tuileries. Alone

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 305, 506.
(2) The court of Napoleon at this period was happily characterised by the Princess Dolgorucki, who then resided in Paris "The Tuileries," said who then lessed in tarts she tattes, sane, which can be she, which is not, properly speaking, a court; and yet it is as fittle a camp: The consulship is a new institution. The first consul has neither a chapeau bas under his arm, nor do you hear the clank of a sabre at his side."-Las Casus, iii, 211.

Nor was the French metropolis less illustrated by the spoils which formation of the low were collected there from the vanquished states in every part of Europe. Already the Venus de Medicis, torn from her sanctuary in the tribune of Florence, diffused over the marble halls of the Louvre her air of matchless grace; the Pallas of Velletri attested the successful researches of the French engineers in the Roman states; while the St.-Jerome of Parma. the transfiguration of Rome, and the last communion of the Vatican, exhide the softness of Correggio's colouring, the grandeur tification which afterwards ensued on the restoration of these precious remains to their rightful owners

In foreign states the re-establishment of a regular government in wi ch thesel France, and its sett changes Napolcon, diffused care in fo tants. In London, 1100

unalloyed satisfaction All enlightened persons in these capitals perceived that the restoration of the feudal regime and the property of the emigrants had already become impossible, and that the fury of the Revolution, under which they had already suffered so severely, was never so likely to be stilled as under the resolute and fortunate soldier who had already done so much to restrain its excesses The Queen of Naples, a woman endowed with masculine spirit and great penetration, expressed the general feeling at Vienna, where she then was, in these words "If I had possessed a vote in France, I would have given it to Napoleon; and written after my signature, I name him consul for life, as being the man most fitted to govern the country. He as yearly of the throne since he knows how to fill it (2) " repressed the general transports, he would have received at once the adlimited gift of absolute power. The agents of Government pursued with unrelenting severity the last remains of democratic fervour. It was generally is a at thorsty should be concentrated in the same hands, from the sugges consu.

and tl exercise of powers which may thee-

Innumerable projects were set on foot for reducing the number of the communes, the prefectures, and the tribunals; the old parliathe central ments were held up as models of the administration of justice, the ere mt se old intendants of provinces as a perfect system of local administration. So powerful was the reaction against the ideas and the changes of the Revolution (3).

> (3) Thib 311, 312-Infamous So stro So strong was the desire generally felt at the t me for perpetuat og the dynasty in the descendants of Sap ade to

Luglish admir sira en -oct 135, 143 He said frequertly, in his had I rench, "I rem er consul, dies cela de votre tete, '- See Las Casso, ir

(1) Bour v 55 DAbr vi. 2.9 (2) Bign ii. 250

must have a son, if not of him, of some one che And when she expressed her i di, not on at the pro-Possi,- Well, says he, " if you will not ce cannot

Shortly after Napoleon was appointed to the consulship for life, Suppression of the several changes in the administration took place. The most imporministry of police; tant of these was the suppression of the ministry of police, and the transference of Fouché to a comparatively insignificant situation in the Conservative Senate. This austere but able statesman, notwithstanding his share in the massacres of the Loire and the fusillades of Lyon, had now become one of the most important supporters of the consular throne. His great value consisted in his perfect knowledge of the revolutionary characters, and the clear guidance which he afforded to the first consul on all the delicate points where it was necessary to consult the inclinations, or yield to the prejudices of the immense body of men who had risen to importance on the ruins of the ancient proprietors. He formed the same link between the Government and the revolutionary interests which Talleyrand did between them and the ancient régime. The honours and fortune to which he had risen, had in no respect changed the simplicity of his former habits; but with the possession of power he had acquired a taste for its sweets, and became little scrupulous as to the means by which it was to be exercised. Ambition had become his ruling passion; he loved office and the wealth which it brought with it, not for the enjoyments which it might purchase, but the importance which it conferred. Such was his dissimulation, that he never suffered his real views to escape either from his lips or his countenance; and by the extraordinary hypocrisy of which he was master, inspired parties the most at variance with a sense of his importance, and a desire to propitiate his good-will (1). The Republicans beheld in the ancient Jacobin who had voted for the death of Louis, and presided over the executions of Nevers and Lyon, the representative of their party in the state; the ancient noblesse lavished on him their praises, and acknowledged with gratitude the favours he had conferred on many of the most illustrious of their body. Joséphine made him her confident in all her complaints against the brothers of her husband, and received large sums of money from his coffers to reveal the secrets she had elicited from the first consul; while he himself yielded to a fascination which seemed to extend alike over the greatest men and most powerful bodies in the state (2).

And dis-Frace of Fouché. Napoléon, however, at length perceived, that the immense influence which Fouché enjoyed as head of the police, might one day become formidable even to the Government. He had the highest opinion of the importance of that branch of the Administration; but he began to conceive disquietudes as to its concentration in the hands of so able an individual. It was impossible to disguise the fact that its members had conspired in favour comply, Bonaparate must have a child by some other woman, and you must adopt it; for a family is indispensable to him, and it is for your interest that he should have one; you can be at no loss to understand why."—"Lucien," replied she, "you are mad. Do you suppose France would ever submit to be governed by a bastard?" Shortly after she recounted this extraordinary scene to one of the recounsellors of state. "You may depend upon it," said she, "they have not abandoned their idea of hereditary succession, and that it will be brought about some day, one way or other. They wish that Bonaparte should have a child of some other woman, and that I should adopt it; but I told them I would never lend myself to such an infamous proposal. They are so blinded as to believe that the nation would permit a bastard to succeed. They are already beginning to hint at a divorce and a large pension to me. Bonaparte even is carried away by their ideas. The other day, when I expressed my fears in regard to the Princess Hortense, on account of the infamous reports which are in circulation about her infamt being his son, he answered, 'These reports are only accredited by the public, from the anxiety of the nation that I should have a child.' He is more weak and changeable than is generally imagined. It is owing to that circumstance that Lucien has got such an extraordinary dominion over him." [Thib. 309, 310.] Napoléon at St, Helena alluded to this proposal, though, with his usual disregard of truth, he made it come from Joséphine herself; an assertion which his secretary most properly denies, and which is completely disproved by the event. If Joséphine had been willing to adopt an illegitimate son of Napoleon, and pass it off as her own offspring, she would have lived and died Empress of France.

[Bour. v. 21, 19.]

(1) His ruling maxim was, that the chief use of words was to conceal the thoughts.

(2) Bour. v. 32, 33. Thib. 325, 326.

of the Consulate against the Directory, and the powerful machinery which was then put in motion to support Napoleon, might with equal facility be directed to his overthrow. Influenced by these considerations, the first consul lent a willing car to the party at the Tuileries who were adverse to Fouche, at the head of which was Talleyrand, who openly opposed and cordially hated his powerful rival. Let such was the ascendency of the minister of police, even over the powerful mind of Napoleon, that he long hesitated before he took the decisive step, and, after it had been resolved on, felt the necessity of veiling it under a professed measure to increase the popularity of Government. He represented to Fouche, therefore, that the office of minister of police was one which might now be dispensed with and that the Government would derive additional popularity from the suppression of so obnoxious a branch of the Administration. Fouche saw through the device; but, according to his usual policy, yielded to a power which he could not brave, and expressed no dissent to the first consul, though he was far from supposing the storm was so soon to break on his head. The arrif for his dismissal was signed when he was on a visit to Joseph Bonaparte at Morfontaine, Fouché was named a senator, and loaded with praises by the Government which deemed him too powerful to be retained in his former situation; and at the same time the ministry of police was suppressed, and united to that of justice, in the person of Regnier (1).

Aug 25 2600 Soon after, an important change took place in the constitution of Changes in the Senate It had been originally provided that those clevated the constitutionaries should, after 1

the Senate holding any other situation, the senators might hold the offices of construction, be employed in all extraordinary missions, and receive the deconstruction, be employed in all extraordinary missions, and receive the deconstruction of the Legion of Blonour. Subsequently a munificent provision was made for the Senate, and every member on his nomination received an loss is the first consul, surrounded by every species of seduction, this branch of the Government in reality served thereafter no other purpose but to throw a thin veil over the commipotence of the executive. Napoleon was careful, however, to keep up its name, and bring forward all his despote measures under the sanction of its authority, as the Roman emperors retained the venerable letters S. P. Q. R. on their ensigns, and the preamble "exauctoritate Senatus," to the most arbitrary acts of their administration (2).

Renewed er rrespon dence be tween Lou s XVIII An event occurred at this period, which tended in a remarkable manner to illustrate the dignity with which the exited family of the Bourbons here the continued rigours of fortune. When Napolcon was pursuing his projects for the establishment of a hereditary dynasty in his family in France, he caused a communication to be vity, and hat state he cut to the Government, all that the crewn tames dynamided of him. Placed now in the long on the See size, he is called negatify my portant duties; and if ever a recurrence of it e same my portant duties; and if ever a recurrence of the same recurrence of the same free of the other parts of the other parts of the other parts of Government we not distrib the state of Government we not distrib the state of the dockarge as functions. These consolitory worth operated he Fourthe a roy of his point has the state of the dockarge as the array of hope in the mid not fit in dargeray all the state of the dockarge as the array of hope in the mid not fit in dargeray all the state of the dockarge as the second of the state of the second of h a efforts were from that moment d retted to bring about I is restoration to offices and at legith as well as pearing the sequel, he attained his office ——bee Bornaisses v 37, and Taisaubase, 328, (2) This 335 at the Messe though were see tablished taud the mesice was celebrated by the trebb shop of Passe made to the Count de Lille, afterwards Louis XVIII, then residing, under the protection of the Prussian King at koningsberg, offering, in the event of his renouncing in his favour his right to the throne of France, to provide for him a principality, with an ample revenue, in Italy. But Louis answered in these dignified terms, worthy of the family from which he sprung :- "I do not confound M. Bonaparte with those who have preceded him. I esteem his valour, his military talents; I am gratified by many acts of his administration, for the happiness of my people must ever be dear to my heart. But he deceives himself, if he imagines that he will prevail upon me to surrender my rights. So far from it, he would establish them himself, if they could admit of doubt, by the step which he has taken at this moment. I know not the intentions of God to my family or myself, but I know the obligations which he has imposed upon me. As a Christian, I will discharge the duties which religion prescribes to my last breath; son of St. Louis, I will make myself be respected even in fetters; successor of Prancis I, I wish ever to be able to say with him, 'All is lost except our honour (P."

It was at the same period that Napoléon commenced the great undertaking which has so deservedly covered his memory with glory, and survived all the other achievements of his genius, the formation of a Civil Cope, and the concentration of the heterogeneous laws of the monarchy and republic into one consistent whole. In contemplating this great work, it is difficult whether to admire most the wisdom with which he called to his assistance the ablest and most experienced lawyers of the old régime, the readiness with which he apprehended the difficult and intricate questions which were brought under discussion, or the prudence with which he steered between the vehement passions and contending interests which arose in legislating for an empire composed of the remains of monarchical and republican institutions. It is no longer the conqueror of Rivoli or Austerlitz whom we recognise; it is Solon legislating for a distracted people; it is Justinian digesting the treasures of ancient jurisprudence, that arises to our view; and the transient glories even of the imperial reign fade before the durable monument which his varied genius has erected in the permanent code of half of Europe.

It is observed by Lord Bacon, that when "laws have been heaped anthedition upon laws, in such a state of confusion as to render it necessary to revise them, and collect their spirit into a new and intelligible system, those who accomplish such an heroic task, have a good right to be named among the benefactors of mankind." Never was the justice of this observation more completely demonstrated than by the result of the labours of the first consul in the formation of the Code Napoléon. The complication of the old laws of France, the conflicting authority of the civil law, the parliaments of the provinces, and the local customs, had formed a chaos of confusion which had suggested to many statesmen before the Revolution, the necessity of some attempt to reduce them to an uniform system. By an astonishing effort of mental vigour, Pothier had contrived to extract out of this heterogeneous mass, the elements of general jurisprudence, and followed out the principles of the Roman law, with a power of generalization and clearness of expression to which there is nothing comparable in the whole annals of legal achievement. But his lucid works had not the weight of Every thing breathed a return to the ancient regime. Cambacires was the great promoter of these changes; well aware of the importance of whatever Strikes the eye on the inconsiderate multitude. -

(1) Bour v. 117. Bign. ni. 283, 287, general law; they could not be referred to as paramount on every question; they contained principles to be followed from their equity, not rules to be obeyed from their authority. The difficulty of the task was immensely increased by the Revolution, by the total change in the most important branches of jurisprudence, personal liberty, the rights of marriage, the descent of property, and the privileges of citizenship, which it occasioned; and the large inroads which revolutionary legislation had made on the broken and disjointed statutes of the monarchy.

To reform a system of law without destroying it is one of the most difficult tasks in political improvement, and requiring, perhaps more than any other change, a combination of practical knowledge with the desire of social amehoration. To retain statutes as they are, without ever modifying them according to the progress of society, is to make them fall behind the great innovator, Time, and often become permicious in their operation, to new model them, in conformity with the wishes of a heated generation, is almost certainly to incur unforeseen and irremediable evils. Authing is more easy than to point out defects in established laws, because their inconvenience is felt, and the people generally lend a ready car to those who vituperate existing institutions, nothing is more difficult than to propose safe or expedient remedies, because hardly any foresight is adequate to estimate the ultimate effects which any considerable legal changes produce. They are in general calculated to remedy some known and experienced evil, and in so far as they effect that object, they are salutary in their operation , but they too often go beyond that limit, and in the pursuit of speculative good, induce unforeseen meonveniences much greater than those they remove. The last state of a nation, which has gone through the ordeal of legal innovation, is in general worse than the first

The only way in which it is possible to avoid these dangers, is to remedy experienced exils, and extend experienced benefits only, without advancing into the tempting but dangerous regions of speculative improvement the clearest proof that the Code of Napoléon was formed on these wise principles, that it has not only survived the empire which gave it birth, but continues, under new dynasties and different forms of government, to regulate the decisions of many nations who were leagued to bring about the overthrow of its author Napoleon has said, "that his fame in the eyes of posterity would rest even more on the code which bore his name than all the victories which he won," and its permanent establishment, as the basis of the jurisprudence of half of Europe, has already proved the truth of the prophecy

Deviating altogether from the rash and presumptuous innovations start subject of the Constituent Assembly, which took council of its own enin the thusiasm only, Napoleon commenced his legislative reforms, by calling to his councils the most distinguished lawyers of the monarchy Tronchet, Roederer, Portalis, Thibaudeau, Cambaccres, Lebrun, Totalen in the discussions in so it and a tock out no --

the Tr bune Cambacerra is the Advocate-General's the ir time constructs on one tode, semestance on another. The most of ficult part of the duty is the reduction of the r ideas into the process with the reduct on of the r ideas into the process with the reduct on the best of reductors in Labran,"—To BATBRAT, 415

⁽¹⁾ The errespect se mer to were thus stated by Napulcons' Tranchet is a man of the most enlightened views, and a singularly clear head for h s ad vanced years lortal a would be the most cloqu at perstor if he k ew when to mop The heardesu is not sale; ted for that sort of d scuss out he is too sold He requires, like Lucien the animation and fire of

on the most abstract questions of civil right, with a facility which astonished the counsellors who had been accustomed to consider only his military exploits. To the judgment of none did the first consul so readily defer as that of Tronchet; notwithstanding his advanced age, and monarchical prepossessions, he deemed no one so worthy as the illustrious defender of Lous XVI to take the lead in framing the code for the empire. "Tronchet," said he, " was the soul of the commission, Napoléon its mouthpiece. The former was gifted with a mind singularly profound and just; but he soared above those around him, spoke indifferently, and was seldom able to defend his opinions." The whole council, in consequence, was in general adverse to his propositions when they were first brought forward; but Napoléon, with the readiness and sagacity which he possessed in so remarkable a degree, saw at a glance where the point lay, and with no other materials than those which Tronchet had furnished, and hardly any previous acquaintance with the subject, brought forward such clear and lucid arguments as seldom failed to convince the whole assembly. He presided at almost all the meetings of the commission for the formation of the civil code, and took such a vivid interest in the debates, that he frequently remained at them six or eight hours a-day. Free discussion in that assembly gave him the highest gratification; he provoked it, sustained it, and shared in it. He spoke without preparation, without embarrassment, without pretensions; in the style rather of free and animated conversation than premeditated or laboured discussion. He never appeared inferior to any members of the council, often equal to the ablest of them, in the readiness with which he caught the point at issue, and the logical force with which he supported his opinions, and not unfrequently superior to any in the originality and vigour of his expressions. The varied powers and prodigious capacity of Napoléon's mind nowhere appeared in such brilliant colours as on those occasions; and would hardly appear credible, if authentic evidence on the subject did not exist in the proces-verbaux of those memorable discussions (1).

The limits of a work of this description render it impossible to enter into a survey of the many important subjects brought under review in the formation of the Code Napoléon. Two only can be noticed, as those on which the interests of society chiefly depend, the laws of succession, and those regarding the dissolution of marriage.

Law of succession, as finally fixed minute subdivision of landed estates, and consequent destruction by Napoce of a territorial noblesse, arising from the establishment of an equal division of property, whether in land or money, among the heirs of a deceased person, he found this system too firmly established to venture to shake it. It was identified in the eyes of all the active and energetic part of the nation with the first triumphs of the revolution; it had been carried by Mirabeau in the Constituent Assembly, with the general concurrence of the people, and had since become the foundation of so many private interests and individual prospects, that it was universally regarded as the great charter of the public liberties, and any infringement on it the first step towards a restoration of feudal oppression. Great as was the power, apparently unbounded the in-

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 412. Bour. v. 122, 123. Las Cases, iii.

Bertrand de Moleville, formerly minister of Marine to Louis XVI, and a man of no ordinary capacity, said, in reference to these discussions, "Napoleon was certainly an extraordinary man; we were very far indeed from appreciating him on the other side of the water. From the moment that I looked into the discussions on the civil code, I conceived the most profound admiration for his capacity. It is utterly inconceivable where he acquired so much information on these subjects."—Las Cases, iii, 219, 250.

fluence, of Napoléon, it would have been instantly shattered by any attempt to break in upon this fundamental institution. Wisely abstaning, therefore, from change, where he could not introduce improvement, he contented himself with consolidating the existing laws on the subject, and establishing in the Code Napoleon a general system of succession, fundamentally at variance with that in all the other states of Europe, and of which the ultimate consequences are destined to be more important than any of the other changes brought about by the Revolution.

By this statute, which may be termed the revolutionary law of succession, the right of primogeniture, and the distinction between landed and moveable property were taken away, and inheritance of every sort divided in equal portions among those in an equal degree of consanguinity to a deceased person (4). This indefeasible right of children to their parents' succession was declared to be a half, if one child was left, two thirds, if two; three-fourths, if there or more, all entails or limitations of any sort were abolished. The effects of such a system, co-operating with the immense subdivision of landed estates which took place from the sale of the forfeited properties during the

Sketch of (1) By the decree April 19 1803, the law of success on was established resolution ary system of success of the control of success of the control o

ary system of uces 1 1 The law pays no regard either of uces 500 to the sature of preperty, or the quarter from which it comes, in regulating succes sion

rumi er of descents, is the colliteral by the number which separates each from the common at testor, up and down aga a. Thus two brothers are related in the second digree the uncle and acpless and if the same branch has left several descendants, the auditions in the same mainner takes I lace per surper, and the members of each subdite as in direct what devolves to them per capita.—Code Corf.

•

are called in whole or in part by representation if the defunct leaves no stane or deare dants, I is and existing difference of up to the following rules:— If I in defact of descendants, the I enthers a distinct are called to the succession, to the extension of collaterals or the referendants. They succeed r ther per cap to or stupes, in the same way as desired at is, 2 If the father and maker of a necessed person survive him, his brothers and sisters, or their de scendints, are only e-lied to his for the succession; if the one or the other, only to three fourths 3 The division of this half, or three-fourths, is made on the same principles as that of descendants, if the collaterals are of the same marriage, if of different, the aucression is divided equally between the paternal and maternal lines — Lode Link, $750.

14 In default of collatera's, or their issue, as condants succeed according to the following rules .—

1 The succession divides into two equal parts; of which the one half ascends to the father saide, the other to the mother s 2. The ascendart, the nearest in degree, receives

2 The ascendart the nearest in degree, receives the half belonging to his line, to the exclusion of the more remote

3 Ascendants in the same degree, take per ca pita, there being no representation in the ascend

4 If the father and mother of a deceased person, who does writings to suc, surrive him, and he leaves I hothers as d astres, or their descends it, the autocasion at d vided into two parts one to the ascend at to one to the collaterals. But if it is father and mother hare predeceased him, there also accretes to that of the Collaterals—Onde Link, $746, 749.

2 Luder il e description of children in this article are included describants in whatever degrees

circ are included occess datus in minister organical cultuming these however, per titippes, not per capita. 3 Volus tary g fits, either by dresh stater v are least-amentary dresh, can or accred the balf of the of fects of the deceased if he leaves no descendas is but accerdants in a both the patternal at a material internal i

Al Natural children have a right of success on to their pares is alone, if they have been legally recogused, but not otherwise

I if it e father or mother have left legit mate isauc, the satural child has a right to a third of what he would have had right to fine had been leg it mate

2 It eater do to a half, if the decraved left no desce whole, I at ascenda to or b others up a sters

2. It extends to three-fourths, when he leaves senting disconducts one ascendants, nor brothers nor siters, to the which when he leaves neither,— Love Conel, $ 755, 758 Revolution, have been incalculable. It is estimated by the Duke de Gaeta, long minister of finance to Napoleon, that, in 1815, there were 15,059,000 individuals in France belonging to the families of agricultural proprietors, and 710,500 belonging to the families of proprietors not engaged in agriculture, all living on the revenue of profit derived from their properties (1) As may be supposed, where so extreme a subdivision of property has taken effects of this law in place, the situation of the greater part of these little proprietors is Indian France, indigent in the extreme. It appears from the authority of the same author, that there were in 1815 no less than 10,100,000 of persons taxed in France; and that of this immense number only 17,000 paid direct taxes to the amount of 1000 francs, or L.40 a-year each (2); while no less than 8,000,000 were taxed at a sum below twenty-one francs, or sixteen shillings. Direct taxes to the amount of sixteen shillings correspond to an income of five times the amount, or L.4 a-year; to the amount of L.40 a-year, to one at the same rate of L.200. Thus the incomes of only 17,000 proprietors in France exceeded L.200 a-year, while there were nearly 8,000,000 who were worth in property only L.4 per annum (3).

Singular attachment of the moral world, that when men yield to the seductions of dern French to this law, passion, and engage in the career of iniquity, they are led by anywhich precludes all real liberty. to lead to their own destruction, and cling with invincible tenacity to the institutions which are calculated to defeat the very objects on account of which all these crimes have been committed. The confiscation of property in France was the great and crying sin of the Revolution, because it extended the consequences of present violence to future ages, and injured the latest generations on account of the political differences of the present

(1) Gaeta, ij. 335.

(2) Taxed at				,					Number of Persons taxed.	Produce of Tax.
1000 francs, or	L.40 .				ŕ				17,745	31,649,468 or L. 1,300,000
500 to 1000, or f	rom 20 to L. 40,						•		40,773	27,653,016 or 1,140,000
101 to 500, or f	rom 4 to 20,			•		٠		•	459,937	90,111,706 or 3,500,000
51 to 100, or f									591,618	41,181,488 or 1,650,000
	rom 25s. to 2,								699,637	27,229,518 or 1,200,000
	rom 16s, to 25s								701.871	17,632,083 on 750,000
Below 21 frs. or l	selow 163. 10d	•	•	٠	٠	٠	•	•	7,897,110	47,178,649 or 1,900,000

[Gaeta, ii. 327.]

When it is recollected that the contribution foncière in France is fully 20 per cent, [Peuchet, 287, Ante, iv.] upon all estates without exception, this table gives the clearest proof of the changes in property brought about by the Revolution. It results from it, that in 1815 there were only 17,000 proprietors in the whole country who were worth L.200 a-year and upwards; a fact incredible, if not stated on such indisputable authority, and speaking volumes on the disastrous effects of that convulsion. (3) Due de Gaeta, ii. 327. Peuchet, 246, 217.

(3) Due de Gacta, ii. 327. Pauchet, 246, 217. From the report to the minister of the finances, published in 1817, by the commissioners on the cadastre, it appears that at that period there were 10.083,000 separate properties assessed to the landtax in France. This number has since that time been constantly increasing, as might be expected under the revolutionary order of succession. The numbers were.—

1816, .					10,083,751
1826, .					10,296,693
1833, .		•		,	10,814,799

10,414,721 282,935,928 or L.11,440,000

Allowing that there are several separate properties often accumulated in the same individuals, this implies in the estimation of the French writers at least 8,000,000 separate proprietors. The total clear produce of the agriculture of France is estimated by Dupinat 4,500,000,000 francs, or L. 180,000,000 sterling. Supposing that the half of that sum, or L. 90,000,000 sterling, is the annual clear profit of cultivation, after defraying its charges, it follows that the average income of the eight millions of French proprietors, including all the great estates, is about 1,11 a-year! Nothing more is requisite to explain the experienced impossibility of constructing a durable free government in that country. It exhibits Asiatic, not European civilisation.—See Saraham's Contre-Revolution de 1830, ii. 273, 274.—Deux Ans de Règne de Louis-Phulippe, 271.—And Durin, Force Commerciale de France, i. 7.

time; and it is precisely that circumstance which has rendered hopeless all the efforts for freedom made by the French people. By interesting so great a number of persons in the work of spoliation, and extending so far the bit interess, ...

this vast change is the leading benent continue lution; and yet nothing can be so evident to this precisely the circumstance which has ever since rendered nugatory all attempts to establish public freedom there, features and the elements of European is engaged in a hopeless contest with a f a central government, and the terrors of the illusion under which the Frenchlabqur on this subject is owing to the wide extent of the instinct which leads the Revolutionary party to sluin every thing that seems to favour an approach even to the restoration of the dispossessed proprietors; and in their terror of this remote and clumerical exit they have adonted measures

they have adopted measures the throne
al freedom rehies to the tous means

and so midssoluble is the chain which unites guilty excess with ultimate

The principle of admitting disorce in many cases was too firmly established in the customs and habits of France to admit of its being shaken. Important deliberations, however, took place on the subject of the causes which should permit it. The first consult, who entertained very singular ideas on the subject of marriage and the proper destiny of women (1), warmly supported the looser side, and it was at length agreed, here have the account of the adultery of his wife. 2 That she might discrete her husband for adultery in those cases only where he brought his concultant of the discrete his historic common hibitation. 3 Discrete was permitted for severe and steadily adhered to, and expressed in a way prescribed by jaw, is also a sufficient cause of divorce (2). The only limitations in the last case were, that it could not take place until two, nor after twenty years of married life had clapsed, or after the wife had attained the age of forty-five; that the parents or other ascendants of the spouses should concur, and that the

(i) When the article in the code, "The hu 1 20 over protect on to b swife, she chedrate to bus," was read out, happing understed, with easy chad to in A is a sed his —the word obel over is a said.

e care where the subsect to differ to let if a could be secure of sever grove good it would never what we felt to diverted it has so man should not be permitted to seve any one who is displicating to her humband? Women have constanty the words in the r mouths- "What, would you pre-tent to be for me fron seel gany our whom I che e? -Tarasvotate 430 is these express on at Levery to discret that the plan and to glob were running on to sophic e, whose extraorgence in dress and possed of it is necessarily between to bound. But independent of the 10 to be belieffer to wanter or gallentery in his disposal on, and reflect the contract wanter to great the on must, that the Orie to appear they are greated in any must, that the Orie to appear and should up my to more many priferable to the orie of the great, which per a little them to many as a sec-

(2) Cole urd, 229, 211, husband should be above twenty-five, and the wife above twenty-one years of age (1). It may easily be conceived what a wide door such a facility in dissolving marriage opened for the introduction of dissolute manners and irregular connexions; and in its ultimate effects upon society this change is destined to be not less important, or subversive of public freedom, than the destruction of the landed aristocracy by the revolutionary law of succession (2), In such a state of society, the facility of divorce and dissolution of manners act and react upon each other. Napoléon admitted this himself. -"The foundlings," says he, "have multiplied tenfold since the Revolution (3)." But it is not in so corrupted a source that we are to look for the fountains either of public freedom or durable prosperity. The effects of these great measures carried into execution by fects of Napoléon are thus justly and emphatically summed up in his own these sawords:-" In the course of the four years of the consulship, the changes of first consul had succeeded in uniting all the parties who divided France; the list of emigrants was infinitely reduced; all who chose to return had received their pardon; all their unalienated property had been restored, excepting the woods, of which, nevertheless, they were permitted to enjoy the life-rent; none remained exiled but a few persons attached to the Bourbon princes, or such as were so deeply implicated in resistance to the Reyolution as to be unwilling to avail themselves of the amnesty. Thousands of emigrants had returned under no other condition but that of taking the oath of fidelity to the constitution. The first consul had thus the most delightful consolation which a man can have, that of having reorganized above thirty thousand families, and restored to their country the descendants of the men who had illustrated France during so many ages. The altars were raised from the dust; the exiled or transported priests were restored to their dioceses and parishes, and paid by the Republic. The concordat had rallied the clergy round the consular throne; the spirit of the western provinces was essentially changed; immense public works gave bread to all the persons thrown out of employment during the preceding convulsions; canals every where were formed to improve the internal navigation; a new city had arisen in the centre of la Vendée; eight great roads traversed that secluded province, and large sums had been distributed to the Vendéens, to restore their houses and churches, destroyed by orders of the Committee of

The difficulty with which the restoration of order in a country recently emerging from the fury of a revolution was attended, cannot be better stated than by the same masterly hand. "We are told, that all the first consul had to look to was to do justice: but to whom? to the proprietors whom the Revolution had violently despoiled of their properties, for this only, that they had been faithful to their legitimate sovereign and the principle of honour which they had inherited from their ancestors? Or to the new proprietors, who had adventured their money on the faith of laws flowing from an illegitimate authority? Justice; but to whom? To the soldiers mutilated in the fields of Germany, la Vendée, and Quiberon, who were arrayed under the white standard or the English leopards, in the firm belief that they were serving the cause of their king against an usurping tyranny; or to the Public Safety (4)."

⁽¹⁾ Ibid. 275, 278.
(2) From the returns lately made, it appears that, in the year 1824, out of 28,812 births, only 18,591 were legitimate; 2378 being of children born in concubinage, and 7813 children brought to the foundling hospitals .- Durin, Force Com. de France. 99, 100.

⁽³⁾ Las Cas. v. 41. (1) Nap. in Month. ii. 225.

million of citizens, who, forming round the frontiers a wall of brass, had so often saved their country from the inveterate hostility of its enemies, and hore to so transcendent a height the glory of the French eagle? Justicel but for whom? For that clergy, the model and the example of every Christian virtue, stript of its birthright, the reward of fifteen hundred years of hencificence, or the recent acquirers, who had converted the convents into workshops, the churches into warehouses, and turned to profane uses all that had been deemed most holy for ages (4)?"

Great, b Amids these great undertakings, the internal prosperity of france is works and adapt increasing. The budget for the year 1805 presented a fixture considerable increase over that of 1802 (2). Various public works calculated to encourage industry were every where set on foot during that year, chambers of commerce established in all the principal cities of the Republic, a grand exhibition of all the different branches of industry formed at the Louvre, which has ever since continued with signal success; the Môtel des Invalides received a new and more extended organization, adapted to the immense demands upon its beneficence, which the wounds and easualclass for the military profession (b); and the great school of St -Cyr, near Paris, opened gratuitously to the children of those who had died in the service of their country (b); an academy was set on foot at Compregne for five hundred youths, where they were instructed in all the branches of manufactures and the mechanical arts (7), the institute received a new organization, in which the class of moral and political science was totally suppressed; a change highly symptomatic of the resolution of the first consul to put an end to those visionary speculations from which so many calamities had ensued to France (8), while the General Councils of the departments were authorized, in cases where it seemed expedient, to increase the slender meomes of the bishops at interpretation, under the increase the stender in the clercy throughout all:

April 8. Nor was it only in measures of legislation that the indefatigable part of the kingdom. That extensive inland navigation was set on foot, which, under the name of the canal at St.-Quentin, was destined to unite the Scheldt and the Oise; other canals were begun, intended to unite the waters of the Saone to the Vonne, the Saone to the Rhine, the Meuse to the Rhine and the Scheldt, the Rance to the Villaine, and thereby open an internal communi-

(1) Nap is Morth ii 225
(2) The bulget for that year stood thus, being as increase of 17,000 000 fraces, or 1,700 000 over the preceding year.

rali tax 2 400 000 — or 92 0

(3) July 8, 1803 (4) June 15, 1803

(5) Jan 28, 1803

(6) Oct 8, 1803 (7) April 1803

(8) Jan 1803

(9) Big. st 252, 218

570 365 000 or L 21 342,000 -See Bicror ii: 245, and Gazza, : 301. cation between the channel and the ocean; the canals of Arles and Aigues-Mortes were opened, and an inexhausable supply of fresh water was procured for the capital by the canal of Ource. This great step led to farther improvements. Paris had long suffered under the want of that necessary element. and the means of cleaning or irrigating the streets were misgraphy deficient; but, under the auspices of Napoleon, this great want was soon supplied. Numerous fountains arose in every part of the city, alike refreshing to the eye, and salutary to the health of the inhabitants; the beautiful cascade of the Chateau-d'I'm cooled the atmosphere on the Boulevard du Temple, while the water-works and lofty jets d'eau in the gardens of the Tuileries, attracted additional crowds to the shady alleys and marbled parteries of that splendid spot. Immense works, undertaken to improve and enlarge the har-Lours of Baulogue, Havre, Cherbourg, Bochelle, Marseille, Antwerp, and Osteral, sufficiently demonstrated that Napoleon had not ahandoned the hope of wresting the sceptre of the seas from Great Britain; while the order to erect in the centre of the place Vendome, a pillar, in imitation of the column of Trainn, to be surmounted by the statue of Charlemagne, already revealed the secret design of his Imperial successor to reconstruct the Empire of the West (1).

(1 Tig. m. 252, 254.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

NAPOLEON'S ASSUMPTION OF THE IMPERIAL THRONE.

143 -YAT.-1891.

ARGUMENT.

Favourable prospects of Napoleon's Government in the beginning of 1504-Discontent, however, of the Republican part of the army-Pichegru in London-Royalist movements in France-Project of Fouche for getting up a conspiracy composed of Royalists and Repubheans - The Royalist leaders are landed on the French coast - triful measures of Fouche to draw them on - He reveals the plot to Napoléon and is in consequence restored to power -Arrest of Moreau-Consternation which it excites in Poris-Seizure of Pichegru- and of Georges Cadoudal-History and character of the Duke d Enghien-Generous conduct of his father on receiving a proposal to assassmate Napoleon-Ilis arrest is unjustly resolved on by Napolcon and the Council of State-Occupations of the Prince at that time-He is seized and conducted to Strasbourg-Fruitless intercession of Josephine-ila had been vainly warned of his danger-Is removed to Paris and sent to Vincennes-Where he is delivered over to a military commission by hapoleon's orders-Gross iniquity committed towards him-He is convicted upon his declaration only, without any evidence-lies noble demeanour before the judges-Sentence and execution- His innocence is completely established after his death-Napoleon's vindication of himself on this subject at M -Helena-Remarkable retribution which reached all the actors in this murder-Consternation which it excited in Paris and in the foreign ambassadors there-Courageous conduct of V., Chiteaubriand-Opinion which Aspoleon entertained of him-Death of Pichegru-Surgeon s report on his body-Reflections on the probable privity of the First Consul to his death-Napoloon s defence of himself on this subject at St Alelena - Intense interest exerted at Paris-Letter of Moreau to Aspoleon-Stoical indifference of Georges-Condemnation of the prisoners-Public Iceling on the subject-Clemency of the First Consul after the consictions were obtained-lies lently to Moreau-Death of Captain Wright in prison at Paris-Napoleon resolves to assume the Imperial Crown - This explains his murdering the Duke d Enghien-First broaching of the project to the Senate-The Tribunate is put forward to make the proposal in public-speech of the mover on the occasion-Honourable resistance of Carnot - Universal adulation with which Sapoleon was surrounded - His answer to the address of the Senate-key which it affords to his whole conduct on the throne-lie is declared Emperor of the French-General concurrence of the nation-Rank conferred on his family - Absolute power vested in the Emperor-Creation of the Warshals of the empire-Rapid progress of court eliquette-Dignibed protest of Louis \\ III - Reflections on these events-Difference between the English and French Revolutions-Which was all owing to the violence and injustice of the French convulsion-Vast concentration of influence at this period in the hands of Government-Total destruction of the liberty of the Press-Inference in political science to which this leads

t neigr of

is the civil admin n silence to an authority which they could not resist. The army, dazzled by his brilliant exploits, rathed round his standard, and sought only to give expression to its admiration for the illustrious chief who had raised to such an unprecedented height the glory the republican eagles. The people, worn out with the sufferings and anxieties of the Revolution, joyfully submitted to a government which had given them that first of blessings, security and protection, and forgetting the dreams of enthusiasm and the fumes of democracy, returned to their separate pursuits, and sought in the enjoyments of private life a compensation for the experienced vanity of their political anticipations (1).

But among the generals and higher officers of the army the same of the Res.

publican of unanimity by no means prevailed. Bernadotte, though brother-inficers of the larve to Jessey Bernadotte. law to Joseph Bonaparte, was constantly in opposition to the first consul. Early attached to republican principles, he viewed with undisguised icalousy the evident approaches which the chief magistrate was making to arbitrary power; and in consequence of his influence, a number of officers in his staff and in the garrison of Rennes voted against the consulate for life. Moreau, however, was the head of the malecontent party. On every occasion he made it a point to oppose, to the increasing splendour of military dress and uniformity of court etiquette, the simplicity and uniformity of republican costume. The conqueror of Austria traversed, amidst crowds of brilliant uniforms, the place Carousel or the saloons of the Tuileries, in the plain dress of a citizen, without any sort of decoration. He declined on various pretences repeated invitations to the Tuileries, and at length was no longer asked to appear. He often manifested to the first consul, when they met in public, a degree of coldness, which must have estranged persons even less jealous of each other's reputation than the heroes of Marengo and Hohenlinden. Nothing could induce him to attend the ceremony performed in Notre-Dame on occasion of the concordat; and at a dinner of military men at his house on the same day, he openly expressed the greatest contempt for the whole proceeding. Female jealousy added to the many causes of discord which already existed between these rival chiefs; Madame Hulot, his mother-in-law, and Madame Moreau, his wife, were influenced with the most violent jealousy at the elevation of Joséphine, and unceasingly urged Moreau to step forward, and openly claim that place in society and the state to which his dignity and services so well entitled him. So far did this spirit of rivalry proceed, that Madame Moreau could not be prevented from breaking out into unseemly expressions, when, on one occasion of a visit, she was detained a few minutes waiting in the antechambers of Joséphine; and on one occasion she was only prevented by force from taking the precedence, at a public assembly, of the wife of the first consul (2).

Pichegru in While Moreau was thus insensibly and unavoidably becoming the London. Ieader of the discontented Republicans in Paris, circumstances were preparing for another distinguished general of the Revolution the chief direction of the royalist party. Escaped from the deserts of Sinnamari, Pichegru had found an asylum in London, where he entered into close correspondence with the French emigrants who endeavoured in that capital to uphold the sinking cause of the monarchy. His great abilities and acknowledged reputation procured for him the confidence of the British Government, and he was occasionally consulted by them, especially in 1799, as to the probability of a Royalist movement declaring itself in the south of France (5).

-Royalist On the renewal of the war, various attempts were made by the Royalist emigrants in London to effect an insurrection in favour of the exiled family in different parts of France (1). The object of these attempts was the restoration of the Bourhons, and to effect the expulsion of the first consul from the throne, that it formed no part of the plan of any design, at least in which Louis XVIII, or any of the royal family were participants, to embrue their hands in his blood, or do aught to him that he had not repeatedly done to every state with which he was in hostility. The celebrated Chouan chief, Georges, was the soul of the conspiracy. He had resisted all the offers of the first consul, who was antious to engage him in his service, and in a secret interview the elevation and disinterestedness of his character excited the admiration of that keen observer of human character (2). Since that time he had resided chiefly in London, and was deeply implicated, along with Pichegru in a conspiracy, which had for its object to rouse the Royalist.

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 321.

⁽³⁾ Big. iii. 318. Norv. ii. 272.

project of uniting them in a conspiracy which might at once prove ruinous to both, and restore him to that consideration in the eyes of the first consul, which it had been his unceasing object to regain since his dismissal from Prjetof Fouchéfor office The words of the Senatus Consultum were constantly present to his mind, that "if difficult circumstances should again get ng up a co p a y arise, there was no one to whom the ministry of police might so licens and fitly be entrusted," and if he could only engage the two greatest Royal ata. generals in the Republic, next to the first consul, in a conspiracy against his government, there seemed to be no doubt that he would attain the object of his ambition. With this view, in the end of 1803, he began to instigate some of their mutual friends to effect a reconciliation between these illustrious characters The Abbé David was the first person employed in this service, but having been arrested and sent to the Temple, his place was supplied by General Lajolais, a relation of Generals Klingin and Wurmser, who came to London, arranged with Pichegru the period of his departure for Paris, and returned soon after to the French capital to prepare matters for his reception

The No. Meanwhile Georges, Polignac, Lajolais, and the other conspiraare laised tors, had been landed on the coast of Normandy, and had caufriends.
Coast, Jan.
Saging in any plot at that time, but to obtain accurate information as to the real state of the Royalist party in the capital. All their measures were known to the police by means of secret information communicated by come to the capital, and remain there for a considerable time unmoiesieu.

there (1).

buen to sys can a remaining to said various in 120° 100 to said various in 120° 100 to said various in ¹¹⁴ by top-man the arishina lost laffer you the rath of the cumulative and a my armen, when the rath of I cumulative are regled scorges; I have taken an eath of felduly to it le losses of Boulous, which I will never redute. The first consul them, which I will never redute. The first consul the week abandon the cause of the king and remain que it is the consultation of the king and remain que it leads to work the consultation of the last way for the consultation of the consultation atanding His in d was raid in the true monie; in my hands he would have done great the age. I have how to appreciate be firmers of character; it would have given it is good direction." [Boar vi 153-159

^{(3,} Bour v 274 (4) Bour v 212 273. Yary il 213.

Several meetings took place between Georges, Pichegru, Lajolais, and the other leaders of the party, and Moreau had a conference with Pichegru on the Boulevard of Madeleine, and another in his own house (1). The principles of Moreau, however, were those of the Revolution, and therefore it was impossible that he could agree with the Royalists upon ulterior measures, and the only purpose of the conferences was to put the Chouan chiefs in possession of the views of this illustrious leader of the Republican party. The agents of Fouché had given the Royalists to understand that Moreau would readily enter into their views; but in this they soon found that they had been completely deceived; and, accordingly, it was proved at the trial that Moreau declared to Pichegru that he knew of no conspiracy whatever; and that Polignac was heard to say to one of the party, "All is going wrong; we do not understand each other; Moreau does not keep his word; we have been deceived." Discouraged by these appearances, the conspirators were about to leave Paris, and Georges was on the point of setting out for la Vendée (2).

But matters had now arrived at that point when Fouché deemed it expedient to divulge the information he had acquired, and reap leafon and the fruit of his intrigues. He had previously written to Napoléon to power. that "the air was full of poniards," and prepared him, by various mysterious communications, to expect some important intelligence. Regnier, who was intrusted with the duties though not the situation of minister of police, was totally ignorant of what was going forward, and confidently maintained that Pichegru had dined a few days before in the neighbourhood of London, when Fouché arrived with evidence that he had been for some time in Paris. Napoléon upon this devolved the farther conduct of the affair upon the ex-minister, whose superior information was now clearly manifested, and the immediate charge of the matter was entrusted to Real, one of his creatures, with orders to take his instructions from Fouché alone. At length, matters being ripe for the dénouement, the whole suspected persons, to the number of forty-five, with the exception of Moreau, Georges, and Pichegru,

Feb. 17, 1801. (1) The accurate intelligence which the secret police of Fouche had of all the proceedings of the Royalist leaders, and the art with which they led them into the snare prepared for them, is completely proved by the proclamation published by the Government on the day of their arrest. "In the year 1803," said legaler, the head of the police, "a criminal reconciliation took Artful measures of Fon- place between Pichegru and Moreau, two men between whom honour should ché to draw have placed an eternal barrier. The them on. police seized at Calais one of their agents at the moment when he was preparing to return for the second time to England. In his possession were found all the documents which proved the reality of an ac-commodation inexplicable on any other principle but the connexions which crime occasions. Meanwhile the plot advanced. Lajolais, the friend and confident of Pichegru, passed over secretly from Paris to London, and from London to Paris, communicating to Moreau the sentiments of Picheguu, and to Pichegru those of Moreau. The brigands of Georges were all this time preparing, underhand at Paris, the execution of their joint projects. A place was fixed on between Dieppe and Treport, at a distance from observation, where the brigands of England, brought thither in English ships of war, disembarked without being perceived, and there they met with persons corrupted to receive them; men paid to guide them during the night, from one station to another, as far as Paris. There they found rooms ready hired for them by trusty guardians;

they lodged in different quarters at Chaillot, in the Rue du Bac, in the faubourg St.-Marcau, in the Marais. Georges and eight brigands first disembarked; then Coster St.-Victor and ten others; and in the first days of this month a third party arrived, consisting of Pichegru, Lajolais, and others; the conspirators met at the farm of La Potterie; Georges and Pichegru arrived at Paris. They lodged in the same house, surrounded by thirty brigands, whom Georges commanded. They met with General Moreau; the day, the hour, the place, where the first conference was held, were known: a second was fixed on, but not realized: a third and a fourth took place in the house of Moreau himself. The traces of Georges and Moreau have been followed from house to house; those who aided in their debarkation, those who, under cloud of night, conducted them from post to post; those who gave them an asylum at Paris, their acomplices, Lajolais, the chief go-between, and General Moreau, have been arrested."—Bora. v. 293—205.

(2) Bour. v. 283, 287. Norv. ii 271, 275.

This is established by the testimony of Napoléon himself:— 'Real (the head of the police) told me," said Napoléon, "that when Moreau and Pichegru were together, they could not come to an understanding, as Georges would undertake nothing halfor the interest of the Bourbons. He had the refore a plan, but Moreau had none; he wished to overturn my power, but had no person in view to put in my place. It was no wender, therefore, they could not come to terms of agreement,"—Boun. vi. 100.

who had not yet been discovered, were arrested at once in Paris, and thrown into prison. Among them were two young men of noble family and generous dispositions, destined to a melancholy celebrity in future times.-Counts Armand and Jules Polignac (1).

Feb 15, 1804 Moreau was the first of the three who was seized. Charles d'Hozter, one of the prisoners, had attempted to commit suicide in prison, and his dying declarations, wherein he had implicated that general. were made use of as a ground to order his arrest, although the subsequent report by Regnier admitted that the police had been throughout privy to all his meetings with the conspirators. Returning from his country estate to Paris, he was arrested and conveyed to the Temple; and on the morning of the 17th, all Paris was astonished by the following order of the day, addressed to the garrison of the capital. "Fifty brigands have penetrated into the canital; Georges and General Pichegru were at their head. Their coming was occasioned by a man who is yet numbered among our defenders, by General Moreau, who was yesterday consigned to the hands of the national justice. Their design was, after having assassinated the first consul, to have delivered over France to the horrors of a civil war, and all the terrible convulsions of a counter-resolution (2).

No words can convey an adequate idea of the consternation which . . :

it excites in 1 - - : 1 the army, we are it and trated by the most glorious exploits; the simplicity and modesty of his private life had long endeared him to all classes, and especially the numerous body who were enamoured of Republican manners. To find so illustrious a name coupled with brigands, to hear the known supporter of Republican principles accused of a design to bring about a counter-revolution, was so violent a revulsion, so inconceivable a change, as to excite in the highest degree the suspicions and passions of the people. The Revolutionists regarded Moreau as the leader of their party, and the only consistent supporter of their principles; the soldiers looked back with pride to his military achievements, and bload loten again male renous ed as join after oping that meet about arrest, and declared that the first consul was about to sacrifice the greatest general of the Republic to his ambitious designs, he had then good cause to congratulate himself that Richepanse and twenty-five thousand of the conquerors of Hohenlinden had met with an untimely end on the shores of

S.-Domingo (3). Fra. 36, 3604 Napoleon, however, was not intimidated. The arrest of Moreau was soon followed up by that of Pichegru, who was seized in his bed a fortnight after. It was not without difficulty that this renowned leader was made prisoner; his ready presence of mind, undaunted spirit, and prodigious personal strength, made it no easy matter to secure him even under circumstances the most favourable to the assailants. He was at length betrayed by an old friend, in whose house he had sought refuge. This infamous wretch, who was named Leblanc, had the baseness to reveal his place

⁽¹⁾ Norv is 216 Bour v. 214, 215, 281.
(2) Norv is 216
(3) Norv is 217 Nap vis 213.
"The extraor" says Appoleon, "was of the most violent Mind public opinion was in a state of fermentation; thes accepty of Government, the real ty of the courp racy, was increantly railed in question All the risket | assons were applicated the run purs of change were increments the storm was truncatous."—Las Casas, vit. 2[3, and in, 351 of retreat for 100,000 crowns. "His treachery," says Napoléon, "was literally a disgrace to humanity (1)." Guided by this traitor, and fully informed as to the means of resistance which he always had at his command, a party of police, strongly armed, entered his bedroom at night, by means of false keys, furnished by their perfidious assistant. They found the general asleep, with a lamp burning on a table near the bed, and loaded pistols by his side. Advancing on tiptoe, they overturned the table so as to extinguish the light, and sprung upon their victim before he was aware of their approach. Suddenly awaking, he exerted his strength with undaunted resolution, and struggled long and violently with the assailants. He was at length, however, overpowered by numbers, bound hand and foot, and conducted, naked as he was, to the Temple (2).

Feb. 26, 1804. The arrest of Pichegru was immediately followed by a decree of the Senate, which suspended for two years trial by jury in all the departments of the Republic, "for the crimes of treason, attempts on the person of the first consul or the exterior or interior security of the Republic." For this purpose the tribunals were organized in a different manner, agreeably to the direction of the law of 25 Florial, 1802. All the persons accused in Paris were sent for trial to the tribunal of the department of the Seine (3).

Georges, however, was still at liberty, although a rigid blockade 1804. And of prevented his leaving Paris; but he did not long escape the vigilance of the police. On the 9th March, he was arrested as he was crossing the place of the Odéon, at seven in the evening, in a cabriolet. He never went abroad without being armed, and his arrest in that public manner cost the life of one man, whom he shot dead as he stopped his horse, and he desperately wounded another who advanced to seize him in the carriage. He was instantly conducted to the Temple, and treated with such rigour, that when Louis Bonaparte went to see him the next day in prison, he found him lying on his mattress, with his hands strongly manacled, and bound across his breast; a spectacle which excited the indignation of that humane prince as well as that of General Lauriston, who was present on the occasion (4). Moreau, however, was treated in a very different manner; he met with the most respectful attention, and was surrounded by military men who would not have permitted any insult to be offered to so illustrious a character.

On the day after the arrest of Georges, a meeting of the Council of State was held, in which Napoléon took a step from which his med'Enghien. mory will never recover. He decided the fate of the Duke d'En-CHIEN. This young prince, son to the Duke de Bourbon, and a lineal descendant of the great Condé, was born, apparently to the highest destinies, at Chantilly, on August 2, 1772. He accompanied his father, while yet a boy, in his flight from Paris on July 16, 1789, and had ever since remained in

⁽¹⁾ Las Cas. iii. 362.

⁽²⁾ Las Cas. iii. 363. Bour. vi. 10, 11.
"Pichegru's seizure was owing to his generosity in declining to receive another asylum, where he would have been perfectly safe. An old aide-decamp of his, M. Lagrenie, who had retired from the service some years before, and a man of un-doubted honour, besought him to accept an asylum in his house; but he positively refused to endanger, by accepting the offer, a man who had given so striking a proof of attachment to his person."— Boun. vi 11, 12.

⁽³⁾ Big. iii. 327, 328.
(4) Bour. vi. 37, 45.
When examined before the judge of police, Georges openly avowed his intention to overturn the first consul. " What was your motive for coming to Paris? To attack the first consul. What were your means of attack? By force. Where did you expect to find the means of applying force? In all France. There is, then, a conspiracy extending over all France, under the direction of you and your accomplices? No, but there was a reunion of force at Paris. What were the projects of yourself and your associates? To place a Bourbon in the room of the first consul. What Bourbon did you mean to place on the throne? Louis Xavier Stanislas formerly, whom we now designate Louis XVIII. What weapons were you to use? Weapons similar to those of his escort and guard."—See Caperigue—Hist. de la Restauration, ii. 159, and Norvas, ii. 279.

exile, attached to the noble but unfortunate corps which, under the Prince of Condé, continued, through adverse equally as prosperous fortune, faithful to the cause of the monarchy A noble countenance, a commanding air, and dignified expression bespoke, even to a passing observer, his illustrious descent, while the affability of his manners and generosity of his character justly endeared him to his numerous companions in adversity. On all occasions in which they were called into action, these shining qualities displayed themselves Lyer the foremost in advance, he was the last to retreat, and by his shill and bravery emmently contributed to the brilliant success gained by the emigrant corps at Bertshiem in an early period of the war. On that occa-Sect 2 1 3 Sion a number of Republican prisoners fell into the hands of the Royalists, the soldiers loudly demanded that some reprisals should be made for the sanguinary laws of the Convention, which had doomed so many of their comrades to the scallold, but the young prince replied, "the blood of our companions, shed in the most just of causes, demands a nobler vengeance (1) Let them hive, they are Frenchmen, they are unfortunate, I put them under the safeguard of your honour and humanity (2) "

It was on the fate of a prince, thus richly endowed with every noble It was on the fate or a prince, must remy choose a wine corry house in the fate or a prince, that the Council of State, under the presidence of Aspoleon, by work as tar Paris on the 40th March, 4804. It appeared from the deposite tended states stitums of two of the prisoners who had been apprehended, that a constant of the prisoners who had been apprehended, that a mysterious person was present at some of the meetings of the Royalist chiefs. who was treated by Georges with the utmost respect, and in whose presence none of the persons assembled sat down (3) Suspicion turned on some prince of the blood as the only person to whom these marks of respect were likely to be shown, and no one was thought to answer the description so completely as the Duke d'Engluen, who at that period was at Ettenheim, a chateau situated on the right bank of the Rhine, in the territories of the Duke of Baden, and four leagues from Strasbourg A confidential officer was desnatched to Strasbourg to make enquiry, he ascertained that the duke was frequently at the theatre of Strasbourg, lived a very retired life, was sometimes absent for ten or twelve days together, and appeared passionately fond of hunting, in which the greater part of his time was employed (1) On this slender basis did this iniquitous Council of State, under the immediate directions of Napoleon, hold it established that the Duke d'Englien was the mysterious stranger alluded to in the depositions of Georges' associates, upon

(1) Refutat, de M le Duc de Roy go 134 Jan 21 1803 (2) The Prince of Coi de father to the Duled hugh en, had a fed in an equally gene-rous ma ner wi en a proposal was made to h in by a person who offered to assassinate the first consul In a letter to the Lount d Arto s, he g ves thef How mae bajalem gentle and tone of to convert not which do go the errand on which he came the direction of that you were a here became to me at electron we can the more go and proposed to the greatest a picty to get up that the number of the most repulsion to the project of the project of the project of the project of the whole the project of the whole the project of the way that homes does not be the project of them with the homes does but finds the specied them with the horper they were fixed to in j. re. assuring, h.m. at the sa on t me that if you were here y would do the assuring that we should extreme the they were the same that we should extreme the same that it is not same that it is no had man ped the power and the ne of our h ng as long as he excluded him from it; that we had com-

hated him with open arms, and would do so are o if a r occas on al ound | resent strelf; but that we and a locas on a love [Freez Hyer]; but that we would never carry on loat ity by u k 1 cs s, which were suited only to the Jacob s; sixt that if they be-took themselves to cr mes, cr ts by we should not fo low the reason; he I then sent for the Baro de Roll, who confined all that I had as dief north determ at on a that re pect."—I faise on de

At all fee his norther ag — a ceep date in a. (3) The description they gree map as follows:

"therey ten or twelve days, the consister received a visit from a person with whose manse they were unar part into the holes and they were unar part into the algorithm and they were the present of the second they are years of age to its reward part in the second as a if ord nary it neurons, his dress elegants he was always reve sed with great to ject and which is he aways reve ten w in great to preclaim an aw-e ferred the appartment all persent time and re-ma and s and ng w think the racept on even of MI to gene and R v eer life was frequently the seried w in terrigers, and on these notamina they were always above. "In line one M own. It

(4) Borian Heman 31

, which Napoléon himself dictated and signed an order for his arrest in a neutral territory, with such minute directions for the seizure of the prince and his conveyance to Strasbourg, that it was evident his destruction was already resolved on. Cambacérès, the second consul, who had voted in the convention for the death of Louis, made the strongest remonstrances against this proposed measure, especially its accomplishment by means of a violation of the neutral territory of Baden; but Napoleon cut him short by the observation (1);-"You have become singularly chary of the blood of the Bourbons (2)."

The truth was, that the unfortunate prince was at Ettenheim, on tion of the account of a passion with which he was inspired for the Princess de Rohan, an emigrant lady of distinction in that neighbourhood, and it was to visit her that he was absent for the periods which in the suspi-'cious mind of the first consul, could have been for no other purpose but to concert measures with Georges in the French metropolis. Ilis mode of life is thus described by Savary, who afterwards was so deeply implicated in his execution. "Several emigrants had arrived in the environs, and were entertained by the prince. He was passionately fond of the chase, had a liaison de cœur with a French lady who shared his exile, and was frequently absent for several days together. This may easily be conceived, when it is recollected what a passion for the chase is, and what the attractions of the mountains of the Black Forest (5)." In truth, he had never been at Paris at all, nor engaged in any conspiracy whatever against either the government or life of the first consul; and the mysterious stranger who was supposed to be him in the conferences with Georges afterwards turned out to be Pichegru (4).

The designs of the first consul were too faithfully carried into seized and effect. The execution of the order was intrusted to General Ordaner, conducted who following punctually the directions he had received, set out from New Brisach with three hundred gens-d'armes, and arrested the prince in his bed at night on the 15th March. He was immediately conducted to Strasbourg, with all his papers and all the persons in the house, and intelligence despatched to Paris by the telegraph of his arrest. When it was known at the Tuileries that he had been seized, Joéephine, who never failed to exert her influence in behalf of misfortune, implored the first consul to show mercy. She threw herself on her knees, and earnestly begged his cession of life; but he said, with a stern air, "Mind your own matters; these Joséphine. are not the affairs of women; let me alone." His violence on this occasion exceeded any thing that had been witnessed since his return from Egypt. He was so prepossessed with the idea that the Bourbon princes were one and all leagued in a conspiracy against his life, that he was incapable of exercising the natural powers of his mind in considering the evidence on the subject. "I am resolved," said he, "to put an end to these conspiracies; if the emigrants will conspire, I will cause them to be shot. I am told there are some of them concealed in the hotel of M. de Cobentzell" (the Austrian ambassador), "I do not believe it; if it were so, I would shoot Cobentzell along with them. The Bourbons must be taught that they are not to sport with life with impunity; such matters are not child's play (5)."

M. Talleyrand, aware of the imminent danger which the duke ran if he con-

⁽¹⁾ Bour. v. 305, 306. Rovigo, ii. 37.
(2) Napoleon enjoined the officer intrusted with the mission to take 200 dragoons, and send 300 more, with four pieces of light cannon, to Kehl, and 100 men, with two pieces of cannon, from New Brisach .- Sec Rovigo, ii. 266 .- Pièces Just, No. 1.

⁽³⁾ Rov. ii. 35.(4) Bour. v. 307. Rov. ii. 59.

⁽⁵⁾ Bour. v. 316, 341.

tinued in his residence at Ettenheim, had secretly senthim warming? He bad been yainly to remove, through the lady to whom he was attached at that place, warned of and similar intelligence was at the same time transmitted by the King of Sweden, by means of his minister at Carlsruhe; and it augments our . regret at the issue of this melancholy tale, that he was only prevented from availing himself of the intelligence, and escaping the danger, by the tardiness of the Austrian authorities in procuring him passports. Upon receiving the warning he resolved to join his grandfather, but in doing so it was necessary that he should pass through part of the Austrian territories. Sir Charles Stuart, the English ambassador at Vienna, wrote for this purpose to the Austrian Government to demand a passport for the duke, and it was their tardiness in answering, that occasioned the delay, which permitted his arrest by Napoleon, and cost him his life (1)

Orders arrived at Strasbourg from Paris on the 18th March to Paris and have the Duke d'Enghien forthwith forwarded to the capital. The vincenness, carriage which conveyed him arrived at the barriers of Paris on the 20th, at eleven o'clock forenoon. He was there stopped, and detained for above five hours, until orders were received from the first consul. No council was summoned; Napoleon took upon himself alone the disposal of . his fate. At four in the evening orders arrived to have him conducted by the exterior barriers to Vincennes, an ancient castellated fortress of great strength, a mile and a half beyond the faubourg St -Antoine, which had been long used as a state prison, and it was dark before he arrived there. Every thing was already prepared for his reception; not only his chamber was ready, but his grave was dug (2)

No sooner was Napoleon informed of the arrival of the Duke d'Enghien at the barriers, than he wrote out and signed an order mil tary on for his immediate delivery to a military commission, to be tried for

. ;. to Murat, the governor of Paris, who forthwith sent for General Hullin and six of the senior colonels of regiments in Paris, to form a military commission. They immediately proceeded to Vincennes, where they found Sayary, .. . 1 . elite, in possession of the castle and all

The subsequent proceedings cannot be " Harel, the governor of the castle (1). Lu. -- 5.50

"In the evening of the 20th March, when the prince was arrived at the barrier, they sent to enquire of me whether I could lodge a prisoner in the

- (1) Bour v 304. 205 Pov is 300
- (2) Lour. v 318 330
- (3) The order was as follows:
 - " Paris, 29 7 mile e. Ann 2 1 . (20 March, 1801)
 - " The Government of the Republic decree as follows :

" Art 1 -The late Duke d kogbien, accused of have g borne arms aga not the Republic, of having navig sorne arms age not the expressor, it is found of locus and still be ug in the pay of Le gland of locus grapged in the plots set on foot by that power age not the external and internal security of the Republic shall be de avered ever to a mail tary consmission, composed of seven me a hera man rd by the governor of latie who shall assemble at lucrames.

"Il -The grand judge, minuter of war, and bearral governor of Par s, are charged with the execut on of the present decree

"The First Cor sul (Signed) Bonerants

. By the First Count (Signed) Houses Maser " Lime copy

The beneral in-Chief, Governor of Paris, "(' goed) Missar "

See Memoire de M. Dapin sur les artes de la Lommission mel taire pour juger le die d'Englien, 25.-

Peces Just No 2 In Mirats order, following on this decree, the commission on was directed to assemble camedately at the chatesu of 1 ocenies to take cogn sance, with at separating, of the secured, on the charges set forth in the decree of the terresuctation

15 2 82. (4) Lour v 325, 329. hor. 11. 33 castle. I answered that I could not, as no rooms were in repair but my own chamber and the council hall. They desired me then to prepare a room for a prisoner, who would arrive in the evening, and to dig a grave in the court. I said that would not be easy, as the court was paved. They replied, I must then find another place, and we fixed on the ditch, where in effect it was prepared.

"The prince arrived at seven in the evening; he was dying of cold and hunger, but his air was by no means melancholy. As his room was not yet ready, I received him into my own, and sent out to get food in the village. The prince sat down to table, and invited me to partake his refreshments. He put many questions about Vincennes, and told me he had been brought up in the environs of the castle, and conversed with much kindness and affability. He repeatedly asked what do they want with me? what are they going to do with me? but these questions made no alteration upon his tranquillity, and indicated no disquietude. My wife, who was unwell, was in bed in an alcove in the same room, concealed by a tapestry; her emotion was extreme, for she was foster-sister to the prince, had enjoyed a pension from his family before the Revolution, and she at once recognized him by his voice (1)."

The duke went to bed shortly after; but before he had time to quity com-mitted tofall asleep, the officers arrived, and conducted him into the council-chamber. General Hullin and six other officers were there assembled; Savary arrived soon after the interrogatories began, and took his station in front of the fire, immediately behind the president's chair. The accused was charged with "having borne arms against the Republic, with having offered his services to the English Government, the enemies of the French people, with having received and accredited the agents of the English Government, and furnished them with the means of obtaining intelligence, and conspired with them against the exterior and interior security of the state; with having put himself at the head of an assemblage of emigrants and others in the pay of England, formed on the frontiers of France in the territory of Baden: carried on communications in Strasbourg calculated to disturb the peace of the adjoining departments, and favour the views of England, and being engaged in the conspiracy set on foot at Paris against the life of the first consul, and about, in case of its success, to enter France (2)." The law in such a case required that a counsel should be allowed to the accused; but none was permitted to the prince, and he was obliged, at midnight, to enter unaided upon his defence (5).

No evidence whatever was brought forward against the accused; victed upon his declara. no witnesses were examined; the documentary evidence consisted tion only, without any only of one single writing, namely, the act of accusation (4). The evidence. whole case against him rested upon the answers he gave to the interrogatories put by the commission, and they were clear, consistent, and unequivocal, openly avowing the truth, but containing not one single admission which could be tortured into evidence of his culpability, (5) "There

⁽¹⁾ Bour. v. 330, 331. Biog. des Contemporains. Art. D'Enghien.

⁽²⁾ Jugement sur le Duc d'Enghien, Mem, par Dupin, 49.

⁽³⁾ Dupin, 12, 13.
(4) "On n'avait," says Savary, "qu'un seul document pour toute pièce à charge et à décharge; c'était l'arrèté des Consuls du 20 mars. La minute du jugement redigé à Vincennes le porte textuellement. Lecture faite des pièces tanlà charge qu'à décharge au nombre d'une.""—Rovico, ii, 251.

⁽⁵⁾ The material parts of the declaration were as follow:—

Being asked if he had taken up arms against France? he answered, "That he had served through the whoie war; that he had never been in England, but had received a pension from that power, and had no other means of subsistance; that he had resided for two years and a half at Ettenheim in the Brisgaw, by permission from the sovereigns of that country; that he had applied for permission to reside at Fribourg, also in the Brisgaw, and remained oninions, rende:

were," says Savary, the warmest apologist of Nipolcon, "neither documents, nor proofs, nor witnesses, against the prince, and in his declaration he emphatically denied the accusation brought against him. His connervous with England, in the rank in which he was born, his correspondence with his grandfalher, the Prince of Condé, could not be considered as evidence of any conspiracy. And even if it had been otherwise, what judge is so ignorant as not to know that the admissions of an accused person are never sufficient to e ndemn him, if unsupported by other testimony (1)?" "I must confess," says General Hullin, "the prince presented himself before us with a noble assurance, he indigmantly repelled the aspersion of having been directly or indirectly engaged in any conspiracy against the life of the first consul, but admitted having borne arms against France, saying, with a courage and resolution which forbid as even for his own sake to make him vary on that point, 'that he'

It notes that the same signing the prisent process verbal 1 carnestly request to be permitted to have a private audience of the first consul. My name, my rank, my habits of thought, and the horror of my situation, induce me to hope that he will accede to that demand "A member of the commission proposed that this request should be forwarded to Napolcon, but Savary, who was belind the president, represented that such a demand was imprortune (5). The request, however, made such an impression, that when the sentence was about to be made out, the president took up the pen, and was beginning to write a letter, expressing the wish of the prince to have an interview with him, but Savary whispered to him, "What are you about?"—
"I am writing," said he, "to the first consul, to express the wish of the council and of the accused "—"Your affair is finished," replied Savary, taking the pen out of his hand, "that is my business (1),"—"In truth," say's Savary, "General Hullin had received the most severe instructions. Even the case of the accused demanding an interview with the first consul (5), had only at I'tle heim for the pil auers of it e clase, that I is the corresponded within grantifatior in London, and also with ling father, whom he had not been expected as the second of the advance grant I since 1795, and acted with the advanced grant I since 1795, and acted with the advanced grant I since 1795, and acted with the advanced grant I since 1795, and acted with the advanced grant I since 1795, and acted with the advanced grant I since the first the advanced granting the acted in the advanced granting the acted in the part of the acted to make use of the value in the had in or advanced granting the acted in the part of the part of the first in the interest of the first granting the granti

The 1-1 pi tere cosion tree out the total of the balke of Lughe, owers not twarrow as to remier it one of the most attractors; proceedings recorded in heavy. I The transfer terring of the form of that shadow of reason, to arrors as not stoken except in no overstates of best lays, upon the sorte may cone of be agencyed in correspondence with the competence as France, 2 the arrow as sillings are packles, for the diverse of the Convention and the recently on that all polytuchnosis as they except.

pixel only to run grate taken in France, or a narrowing or congress courty at disk is was not there the one over the other, but a fract dip state 3. The laws age at the run great of the original court of the control of the control pour joner le Duc d'Enghiere

(1) Nov 11 222.

⁽¹⁾ flor ii 2.

⁽³⁾ Hall n. 13 (4) Ha ha 13, 14, (5) Rev 11- 250

Remark able rerei wh ch trac id all the a

A memorable retribution awaited all the actors in this bloody tragedy Murat, seized eleven years afterwards on the Neapolitan territory, when attempting to excite the people to a revolt, was ilelivered over to a military commission, tried under a law which he tors in Il e murder himself had made, and shot. General Hullin, after having spent, as he himself said, " twenty years in unavailing regrets; bowed down by misfortune; blind, and unhappy," wished for the grave to relieve him from his sufferings (1); Savary lived to witness calamities to himself and his country sufficient, in his own words, to draw from his eyes tears of blood (2), and Napoleon, vanquished in war, precipitated from his throne, stript of his possessions, was left an exile amidst the melancholy main, to reflect on the eter-deeds of violence excite in the human heart, must remain for ever a mystery; but in many cases, the connexion between national, equally as individual, crime, and its appropriate punishment, is so evident as to be obvious even on the surface of history. The murder of the Duke d'Enghien lighted again the flames of continental war, and induced that terrible strife which ultimately brought the Tartars of the Desert to the walls of Paris. From it may be dated. the commencement of that train of events which precipitated Appoleon from the throne of Charlemagne to the rock of St.-Helena. Consternation which this act ex-cited in orning Few ncions no rous a mass as proved of tro acquir, and subtractors, and xiety, were depicted in every countenance. It was openly stigmatized by a great proportion of the people as a bloody and needless assassination; among victim had suffered; a favourite spaniel, which had followed the prince to the place of execution, faithful in death, was to be seen constantly lying on the grave. The interest excited by its appearance was so strong, that by an order of the police the dog was removed, and all access to the place pro-Inbited (5).

The consternation which prevailed among the members of the And in the diplomatic body was still greater. Couriers were instantly des-worked up to madness by the reports he received of conspiracies and plots in every direction around him; [Las Las vii 253 257] but to his testament he reserted to the more manly course of adm ting the deed, take g upon hunself its whole responsible lity, and endeavouring to justify it on reasons of state necessity "I arrested the Duke d lugh en, said he in that a from sustramest, because that measure was necessary to the security, the 1 sterral, and the honour of the breach pergir, when the Lount d'Arters maintained, on h's own edmission, sisty assausint I similar circumstaucra (would do this same ' [Test de Nop see 6] As if a iy rea sons of honour, interest, or security can ever call for or justify the death of an innocent man we hout enber en ju ry, evidence, or trul. [Test de Asp.

It is but justice to Aspoleon, however, to add, that he said at at it the ens. - 'Most certainly if I had been informed in time of certain features in the opn one and character of the prince, and especially if I had seen a letter which he wrote to me, but which was never delivered, God knows for what reason, t Il a'ter be was no more, most certa nly I would letter, we then to him from hireshourg and only the letered it two days after his death; "[Wheets, i 321-316] but Bourr enne anetta that the whole story of such a letter having been written and heyl back is an entire fellication. Dee Borantayas, v. 312

(1) Hull as Memoirs, $ (a) Savary, iv 3$2.

(3) Por ii 45. Boar v. 333 E.g. iv. 343 estimation, and this continued in exile even after the essential injury done by that author to his cause by the celebrated pamphlet on the "Constitutional monarchy," published at the Restoration. "Chateaubrand," said he; "fina received from nature the sacred fire; his works attest it; his style is not that of flacine, it is that of a prophet. There is no one but himself in the world who could have said with impunity in the Chamber of Peers that the great coat and hat of Napoleon, placed on the end of a stick on the coast of Brest, would make Europe run to arms from one end to another (1)."

This tragic event was soon followed by another still more misterious, Farly was found strangled in pr. senarate examinations, in ' '. fronted with Georges, Lajolais, and all the witnesses who were examined against them. On all occasions, however, he had evinced an unconquerable firmness and resolution. Ao one was injured by his answers; and nothing whatever had been elicited from him calculated to effect the great object of implicating Moreau in the conspiracy. Such was the effect produced by his courageous demeanour, that Real said openly before several persons on coming from one of his examinations,-" What a man that Pichegru is?" In all his declarations he was careful to abstain from any thing which might involve any other person, and exhibited a grandeur of character and gencerous resolution in his fetters, which excited the admiration even of his enemies. He positively refused, however, to sign any of his judicial declarations, alleging as a reason, that he was too well acquainted with the arts of the police, who, having once got his signature, would by a chemical process efficace all the writing which stood above it, and insert another statement, containing every thing which they wished him to admit. He loudly announced his intention of speaking out boldly on his trial, and in particular declared that he was resolved " to unfold the odious means by which he and his companions had been entrapped into the conspiracy by the police. That they had at length become fully sensible of the Machiavelian devices which had been practised upon them, from the facility given to their landing and coming to Paris, and the utter nullity of all the reports they had received of the general disposition in their favour. That having had their eyes at length opened, they were only solicitous to get out of Paris, and were making preparations April 16 1501 for that purpose when they were arrested by the police." This intention to speak out at the trial was in an especial manner declared on the day of his last examination taken before Real, and next morning at eight o'clock he was found strangled in his cell (2).

The surgoons who were called to examine the body of the deceased signed a report, in which they stated that "the body was found with a black silk handkerchief hard twisted round the neck by means of a small stick about twe inches long, which was kept tight on the left chetk on which it rested by one end, which prevented it from unwinding, and produced the strangulation which had terminated in death." The gendarmes in attendance declared that they heard no noise, except a considerable coughing on the !

ceased; and that the sor respiration (5). This is a mysterious transaction;

⁽¹⁾ Top. in Mant. fr. 213. Bur. v. 319, 359
(3) Bont, v. 3 31. Bg in $11.

(3) Bont, v. 3 31. Bg in $11.

ral presumptions of greater strength than any such testimony did not incline to the darker side (1).

"When you would discover," says Machiavel, "who is the author Reflections on the proof a crime, consider who had an interest to commit it." Judging by bable prithis standard; moral presumption weighs heavily against the first to his death, consul. He was on the eve of the greatest step in his life; the imperial sceptre was within his grasp, and the public authorities had already heen instructed to petition him to assume the crown of Charlemagne. At the same time the crisis was of the most violent kind. The Royalist party were in the highest state of excitement, in consequence of the execution of the Duke d'Enghien; the Republicans, in sullen indignation, awaited the trial of Moreau. In these critical circumstances it was impossible to over-estimate the effect which might have been produced on such inflammable materials by the bold declarations of Pichegru at his trial, openly denouncing the intrigues and treachery of the police, and tearing aside the veil which concealed the dark transactions by which Fouche had precipitated the leaders of the opposite parties into measures so eminently calculated to aid the ascent of Napoléon to the throne. The first consul, it is true, had no cause either to. be apprehensive of Pichegru, or to doubt his conviction at the trial; but his ministers had every reason to fear the effect which might be produced by the revelations made by so energetic and intrepid a character, and the strongest grounds for believing that he would utterly negative all attempts to implicate his great rival Moreau in the conspiracy. In these circumstances, private assassination became the obvious expedient, and within the gloomy walls of the Temple numerous wr tches were to be found, trained to crime, and profoundly versed in all the means of perpetrating it in the way least likely to incur detection. There can be no reasonable doubt therefore, that Pichegru was murdered, but there is no evidence to connect Napoléon with the act; and the probability is, that it was perpetrated by Fouché and the police, to preyent the exposure of the infamous means used by them to implicate both Moreau and the Royalists in the trammels of a conspiracy, which they had so much reason to apprehend from the illustrious captive's known character and declared resolution.

This view is strongly confirmed, when it is recollected, on the other hand, Pichegru himself had no conceivable motive for committing suicide. Death to so old a soldier and determined a character could have few terrors; and the experience of the Revolution has proved that its prospect hardly ever led to self-destruction. He had uniformly and energetically declared his resolution to speak fully out at the trial, and nothing had occurred to shake that determination, for his own condemnation he must from the first have regarded as certain. Voluntary strangulation in the way in which Pichegru perished, if not an impossible, is at least a highly difficult act; the religious impressions which he had preserved from his youth upwards rendered it highly improbable; and the secrecy which Government maintained in regard to his declarations, necessarily led to the conclusion that they contained matter which it was deemed advisable to bury in the tomb. So universal was the impression produced by these circumstances, that M. Real, on the morning of his death, said, "Though nothing can be more apparent than that this was a older than the first consul, they had received their commissions as licutenants of artiflety at the same time. Now the one was about to ascend the throne of France, while the other was strangled in a dungeon—See Bouralenne, vi, 13, 15.

⁽¹⁾ It is not the least interesting circumstance in this melanchely story, that Pichegra had been the school companion of Napoleon at the military academy of Brienne. They had been bred up in the same house, and it was he who taught Napoleon the four first rules of arithmetic. Though considerably

378 HISTORY OF EUROPE.

· [CHAP. XXXVI.

ld ne entertunco, and memories :. 🔾

he bloody deed had been carried into "

enicide, set it will always be said that, despairing of conviction, nestrangled execution (a). and popular to struck by the myslerious circumstances of his death, ascribed it to the Mamelukes who had accompanied Napolion from Egypt, and had been trained to such deeds in the recesses of Eastern seraglios (4).

At length, after long and tedious preparatory examinations, Moreau, Georges, the two Polignaes, La Rivière, and all the accused, were brought to trial. Before leaving the Temple. Georg

the court, and earnestly recommended

they should abstain from criminating on casion, and the recollection that it was mount incomehad been taken to the scaffold, had subdued to a sadder and milder mood ant abaracter "If in the trials which await his naturally us," said he, ter .

gene

that I am wi

Yes! we canto mild and considerate towards each other, recoupt your affeclivii. aitgutic will. of God; in the hour of death let us pray that our country, rescued : am the yoke which oppresses it, may one day be blessed under the rule of the Bourbons. Never forget that it was from the prison which we are about to quit that Louis XVI went forth to the scaffold. Let his sublime example be your model and your guide (5)."

Early on the 28th Maj, the doors of the Palace of Justice were thrown open, and the trial began. An immense crowd instantly and others rushed in, and occupied every avenue to the half; the doors were besieged by thousands, urgent to obtain admittance. The public anxiety rose to the highest pitch. Persons of the chief rank and greatest considera-

(1) Roy is 56. (2) Bour. vi 25, 35. (3) Rov ii. 56.

Aspoltons In discoursing on ansared," that he defence of 'Helens, Napolton observed," that he hamed to defend houself

> , that the private as bees as expedient, and that the more t the character of the Republican General was was rought to triel, the more he cares her the bulsty of the destruct or of the flags est thick whe lesting my on ghit have led to his at ja ttal.

self to death 11rd I been to crime, it was not Pichegen, but Moreau, that I

(4) Ann Reg. 1831, 155-(3) Bour. vi 47.

tion in Paris were there; the remnants of the old nobility, the leaders of the modern Republic, flocked to a scene where the fate of characters so interesting to both was to be determined. The prisoners, to the number of forty-five, were put to the bar together. Public indignation murmured aloud at seeing the conqueror of Hohenlinden seated amidst persons, many of whom were regarded as the hired bravoes of England. In the course of the trial, which lasted twelve days, a letter from Moreau to the first consul, written from the prison of the Temple, was read, in which he stated his case with so much simplicity and candour, that it produced the most powerful effect on the audience (4). The result of the trial was, that Moreau's innocence was completely established, or rather the prosecutor totally failed to prove any criminal connexion on his part with the conspirators; not one witness could fix either a guilty act or important circumstance upon him. He admitted having seen Pichegru on several occasions, but positively denied that he had ever been in presence of Georges; and, though two witnesses were adduced who swore to that fact, their testimony was unworthy of credit, being that of accused persons under trial for the same crime (2). Throughout the whole trial his demeanour was dignified, mild, and unassuming. On one occasion only his indignant spirit broke forth, when the president accused him of a desire to make himself dictator: "" Me dictator!" exclaimed he, " and with the partisans of the Bourbons! Who then, would be my supporters? I could find none but in the French soldiers, of whom I have commanded nine-tenths and saved above fifty-thousand. They have arrested all my aides-de-camp, all the officers of my acquaintance, but not a shadow of suspicion could be found against any one, and they have all been set at liberty. Can there be such folly as to suppose that I proposed to make myself dictator by means of the partisans of the old French princes, who have combated for the Royalist cause since 1792? Do you really believe that these men, in twenty-four hours, should have been so suddenly changed as to make me dictator? You speak of my fortune, of my income; I began with nothing, and might now have been worth 50,000,000 francs; I possess only a house and a small property attached to it; my allowances amount to 40,000 francs, and let that be compared with my services (5)."

Letter of Moreau there said, "In the camMoreau to paign of 1797 we took the papers of Napoléon. the Austrian staff; amongst them were several which seemed to implicate Pichegru in a correspondence with the French princes; this discovery gave us both great pain, but we resolved to bury it in oblivion, as Pichegru, being no longer at the head of the army, was not in a situation to do injury to the Republic. The events of the 18th Fructidor succeeded, disquietude became universal; and two officers who were acquainted with that correspondence, represented to me the necessity of making it public. I was then a public functionary, and could no longer preserve silence. During the two last campaigns in Germany, and since the peace, he has occasionally made remote and circuitous overtures to me as to the possibility of entering into a correspondence with the French princes, but I considered them so ridiculous that I never made any answer.

"As to the present conspiracy, I can equally assure you that I have not had the smallest share in it. I repeat it, general, whatever proposition may have been made to me, I rejected it in opinion, and regarded it as the most absurd of projects. When it was represented to me that the occasion of a descent into England would be favourable to a change of government, I answered, that the Senate was the authority to which all Frenchmen would look in case of difficulty, and that I should be the first to range myself under its authority. Such overtures made to me, a private individual, wishing to keep up no connexious, neither in the army, nine-tenths of which have served under my orders, nor in the state, imposed upon me no duty but that of refusal; the infamy of becoming an informer was repugnant to my character; ever judged with severity, such a person becomes odious, and deserving of eternal reprobation when he turns against those from whom he has received obligations, or with whom he has maintained terms of friendship. Such, general, have been my connexions with Pichegru; they will surely convince you that rash and ill-founded conclusions have been drawn from a conduct on my part per-haps imprudent, but far from being criminal." These words bear the stamp of truth, and they embrace the whole of what was proved against Moreau. Not one of the 119 witnesses examined at the trial said more against him .- Bourriesse, vi. 118, 120.

(2) Lajolais and Picot were the persons who spoke to it, and Lajolais was the secret agent of Fouché throughout the whole transaction, and both were fellow-prisoners at the har with Moreau. [Rovigo,

ii. 63.] (3) Bour. vi. 115, 123, 124. Rov. ii: As the case went on, and the impossibility of convicting Moreaus of the capital charge preferred against him became apparent, the disquietude of the hist consul was extreme. He sent in private for the judges, and questioned them innutely as to the probable result of the process; and as it had become impossible to convict him of any share in the constitute of the minor charge.

would only have the effect of impelling the Government into measures of suit greater severity, and therefore this compromise was unanimously agreed to. Napolcon strongly urged a capital sentence, in the idea probably of overwhelming his rival by a pardon; but the judges returned the noble answer; "and if we do so, who will pardon us" In truth, the temper of the public mind was such, that any capital sentence on so illustrious a person would probably have produced a violent commotion, and it was extremely doubtful whether the soldiers of the arm; of the Rhime would not have rised at once the court with the infant child of Moreau in his arms, all the mintary present spontaneously rose and presented arms, and if Moreau had given the word, the court would that moment have been overturned, and the prisoners liberated. Whenever he rose to address the judges, the gendarmes, by whom he was guarded, rose also, and remained uncovered till he sat down. In fact, the public mind was so agitated, that the influence of Moreau in fetters almost equalled that of the first consul on the throne (1).

Ti a lamemour of George, throughout the whole trial was stoical

the whole blame upon himself, and to excupate the white the whole blame upon himself, and to excupate the white the whole white the public anxiety rose to the highest pit in consultation, and all the while, ed with anxious multitudes. The the judges returned to the court, and memori, scare o

dent's chair, read out the sentence, which condemned Georges Cadoudal, Bouvet de Lozier, Roussillon, M de Riviere, Armand de Polignac, Lajolars, Picot, Costor San Victor, and others, to the number of sixteen, to death; and Moreau, Jules de Polignac, Leridant, Roland, and a young girl named Issa; to two years' imprisonment (5).

Poble for Though the preservation of Moreau's life, which had been placed in an effect in such imminent hazard, was universally considered as a subject

(i) Bour 11 424 126. Big ni 420
(2) Armand de l'oligane find duchted pub sir, that he alone aux server y nu l'e coup rary, and that he silver aux per region (access, and entrey to product the sir sir per sir per give cerdit to unlat 1 general tr his prima it is a market all the cerd us well as a market all the cerdit is a market all the ce of congratulation, yet the condemnation of so great a number of persons, many of whom belonged to the highest society in Paris, to death together, spread a general consternation through the capital. During four years of a steady and lenient administration, the people had not only lost their indifference, but acquired a horror at the shedding of blood; and a catastrophe of this sort, which recalled the sanguinary scenes of the Convention, diffused universal distress. To this feeling soon succeeded a sense of the gross injustice done to Moreau, found guilty upon the unsupported declarations of two conspirators who were condemned along with himself; and with so strong a sense of the iniquity of the conviction in the breast of the judges, that they were obliged to sentence him to a punishment, ridiculous and inadequate if the were guilty, oppressive if innocent (1).

Napoleon, however, was not really cruel; he was, on the contrary, , in general averse to measures of severity, and only callous to all after the convictions the suffering they occasioned, when they seemed necessary either for the projects of his ambition, or the principles of his state policy. His object in all these measures was to attain the throne, and for this purpose the death of the Duke d'Enghien, which struck terror into the Royalists, and the condemnation of Moreau, which paralysed the Republicans, seemed indispensable. Having attained these steps, he yielded not less to his own inclinations than the dictates of sound policy in pardoning many of the persons convicted. Murat, immediately after the sentence was pronounced, repaired to Napoléon, and earnestly entreated him to signalize his accession to the imperial throne by pardoning all the accused; but he could not obtain from him so splendid an act of mercy. Joséphine, never wanting at the call of humanity, exerted her powerful influence in favour of several of the persons under sentence; many other persons at the court followed her example, and others were pardoned, in particular Lajolais, in consideration of the services they had rendered to the police during the conspiracy. In these different ways, Bouvet de Lozier, Rivière, Armand de Polignae, Lajolais, and Armand Gaillard, and three others, experienced the mercy of the first consul. The remainder were executed on the 25th June, on the place de Grève; they all underwent their fate with heroic fortitude, protesting with their last breath their fidelity to their king and country, and Georges, in particular, insisted upon dying first, in order that his companions, who knew that he had been offered his pardon by the first consul, might see that he had not deserted them in the extreme hour (2).

Napoléon asserted to Bourrienne, shortly after the trial was over, that he had been greatly annoyed by the result of the process, chiefly because it prevented him from utterly extinguishing Moreau as the head of a party in the state; that assuredly he never would have suffered him to perish on the scaffold; but that his name, withered by a capital conviction, would no longer have been formidable, and that he had been led to direct a prosecution, from his Council assuring him that there could be no doubt of a conviction. He added, that if he had forescen the result, he would have privately urged Moreau to travel, and even have given him a foreign embassy to colour his departure (5). After the sentence was pronounced, he acted with indulgence to his fallen rival. On the very day on which he requested permission to retire to America, Napoléon granted it; he purchased his estate of Gros-Bois, near Paris, which he conferred upon Berthier, and paid the expenses of his journey to Barcelona, preparatory to embarking for the United States, out of the public treasury. His ardeni mind had been singularly captivated by the stern resolution of Georges, after his sentience was pronounced, he sent Real to the Temple, and offered, if he would attach himself to his service, to give him a regiment, and even make him one of his aides-de-camp; but the heroic Vendéen remained faithful to his principles even in that extremity, and preferred dying with his comrades to all the allurements of the imperial throne (1).

⁽¹⁾ Rov. ii. 63, 64. Bour. vi. 110, 141.

One other deed of darkness belongs to the same period in the Death of Capta u Wright in government of Aapoleon. Captain Wright, from whose vessel Pichegru had been disembarked, was afterwards shipwrecked on the coast of Morbihan, and brought, with all his crew, to Paris, where they were examined as witnesses on the trial of Georges. This intrepid man, who had formerly been a lieutenant on board Sir Sidney Smith's ship, when he stopped the Eastern career of Napoleon at Acre, positively declined to give any evidence, saying, with the spirit which became a British officer, "Gentlemen, I am an officer in the British service, I care not what treatment you have in reserve for me, I am not bound to account to you for the orders I bave received, and I decline your jurisdiction " He added, after his deposition, taken in prison, was read over in court, that "they had not annexed to that declaration the threat held out to him, that he should be shot if he did not reveal the secrets of his country (2) " Some time after this, but the precise date is not known, as it was not revealed by the French Government for long afterwards, Captain Wright was found in his cell in the Temple with his throat cut from car to car By whom this was done remains, and probably will ever remain, a mystery The French authorities gave out that he had committed suicide in prison; but the character of that officer, and the letters he had written shortly before his death, in which he positively declared he had no intention of laying violent hands on himself, rendered that event extremely improbable. The previous threats which he publicly declared on the trial they had made to him, and the strong desire which the French Government had to implicate the English Cabinet in a conspiracy against the life of the first consul, in order to weaken the force of public indignation in Europe at the death of the Duked'Englien, render it more than probable that he was cut off in order to extinguish the evidence which he could give as to the disgraceful methods resorted to by the police to extert declarations from their prisoners, or possibly, as was asserted in England at the time, to destroy the traces of torture on his person (3).

Napoleon It was in the midst of these bloody events that Napoléon assumed fine-fried the inspirals cost of the spirals cost of

⁽i) Bour v 159 Ann Reg 1804, 195, Rov is

Things sion a There is one man, 'sail Aspocid Georgie, loop, 'smang the con prators whom I regreet, that is Georges. His mind is of the right stamp, In may hands be would have done great things. I spire the all the firmness of his therieter, and second the mind of the right stamp. I spire the extra and second to make the would statch inneelf to me I would not only pard so him but give has a right mean. What do I say? I would have made hum one of my andes-de-comp, Such a stepwould have excited a great chancin, but it hoods not have cared for it. Georges refused everyth ag lie is a lar of iron. What can I now do? lite most undergo his fais, for such a sone is too don, evous in a party; it is a necessity of my situation." [Dust, ri 150] 7 h s is a sufficient proof that Vapoteon was nowned at most out many formed to part of the hereditary succession was absurd, irreconcilable with the sovereignty of the people, and impossible in France (1);" and four years before that he had announced to the Italian states, "that his victories were the commencement of the era of representative governments;" and already he was prepared to adopt a measure which should establish that absurd and impracticable system in that very country, and overturn, within all the states that were subjected to his influence, those very representative institutions. Vestigia nulla retrorsum was the principle of his policy. He never looked back to the past, or attempted to reconcile former professions with present actions; success, not duty, was the ruling principle of his conduct; he deemed nothing done while any thing remained to do.

^{128 (3)} Scott, v 127, 129 Ann. Feg 1505 Sat Lobert Wilson & Egypt, 72, O Steats, L 275-

This ex-plains his It was neither from a thirst for blood, nor a jealousy of the Bourbons, that he put the Duke d'Enghien to death. Expedience, supposed political expedience, was the motive. "When about to make himself emperor," says Madame de Staël, "he deemed it necessary, on the one hand, to dissipate the apprehensions of the revolutionary party as to the return of the Bourbons; and to prove, on the other, to the Royalists, that when they attached themselves to him, they finally broke with the ancient dynasty. It was to accomplish that double object that he committed the murder of a prince of the blood, of the Duke d'Enghien. He passed the Rubicon of crime, and from that moment misfortune was written on his destiny (2)." Interposing boldly, like the Committee of Public Safety on occasion of the fall of Danton, between the Royalists and Republicans, he struck redoubtable blows to both; proving to the former, by the sacrifice of their brightest ornament, that all prospect of reconciliation with them was at an end; and to the other, by the trial of their favourite leader, that all hopes of reviving in the people the dreams of democratic enthusiasm were extinguished; while to the great body of revolutionary proprietors, the millions who had profited by the preceding convulsions, and were desirous only to preserve what they had gained, he held out the guarantee of a hereditary throne, and a dynasty competent to restrain all the popular excesses of which the recollection was so deeply engraven in the public mind (5).

The season chosen for the first broaching of these ideas, which had been long floating in prospect in the thoughts of all reflecting persons, was shortly after the death of the Duke d'Enghien; and when a vague disquietude pervaded the public mind as to the result of the conspiracies and trials which excited so extraordinary an interest. In a secret conference with several of the leading members of the Senate, held six days after that event, Napoléon represented to them the precarious state of the Republic, dependent as it was on the life of a single individual, daily exposed to the daggers of assassins; passed in review the different projects March 24, 1804. which might be adopted to give it more stability; a Republic, the restoration of the ancient dynasty, or the creation of a new one; and discussed them all as a disinterested spectator, totally unconnected with any plans which might be ultimately adopted. The obsequious senators, divining his secret intentions, warmly combated the transference of power to any other hands, and conjured him to provide as soon as possible for the public weal, by making supreme power hereditary in a race of sovereigns, commencing with himself. Feigning a reluctant consent, he at length said: "Well, if you are really convinced that my nomination as emperor is necessary to the welfare of Trance, take at least every possible precaution against my tyranny; yes, I repeat it, against my tyranny; for who knows how far, in such a situation, I may be tempted to abuse the authority with which I may be invested (1)?"

⁽¹⁾ Thib. 454. (2) Rév. Franç. ii. 328.

The project thus set on foot was the subject of secret negotiations for above, a month between the Senate and the Government. It was agreed that the first public announcement of it should come from the Tribinate, as the only branch of the legislature in which the shadow even of popular representation prevailed. So completely had the strength of that once formulable body been prostrated, and its character changed by the alterations made on its constitution when the consulate for life was proclaimed, that it proved the ready instrument of these ambitious projects. Every thing was arranged with facility for acting the great drain in presence of the popular Tribinal ment was chosen;

congratulations age

the curtain drew up, or the people were admitted to the speciacle. At length, on the 25th April, the representation began in the half of the Tribunato (2).

The results of the fourtions and the fourfactors of the fourtions, and they, "are the diseases of the body politic, every thing which has been overturned was not in reality descring of censure. There are certain bases of public prosperity at the foundation of every social ethics."

sirtue of the same authority by which they scated them on the throne. Lorope has sanctioned the change by recogning our new government. The reigning family in Lugland have no other title to the throne but the will of the people. When Pepin was crowned, it was only, says Montesquien, a ceremony the more, and a phantom the less. He acquired nothing by it but the ornaments of royalty is nothing was changed in the nation. When the successors of Charlemagne lost supreme authority, Hughes Capit already held the keys of the kingdom, the crown was placed on his head because he alono was able to defend it.

Special "An eternal barrier separates us from the return of the factions in the which would tear our entrails, and that royal family which we could be supported in 1792 because it had violated our rights, it is by place-ing the crown on the head of the first consul alone that the French can preserve their dignity, their independence, and their territory. Thus only will the army cers, ...

civil wards. Let us hasten then to demand hereditary succession in the supreme magistrate, 'for in voting this to a chief, as Phuy said to Trajan, 'we preyent the return of a master.' But at the same time let us give a worthy name to so great a power; let us adorn the first magistrate in the world by a dignified epithet; let us choose that which shall at once convey the idea of the first civil functions, recall glorious recollections, and in noways infringe on the sovereignty of the people. I see, for the chief of the national power, no name so worthy as that of Emperon. If it means victorious consul, who is so worthy to bear it? What people, what armies were ever more deserving of such a title in their chief? I demand, therefore, that we lay before the Senate the wish of the nation, that Napoléon Bonaparte, at present first consul, be declared Emperor, and in that quality remain charged with the government of the French Republic; that the imperial dignity be declared hereditary in his family; and that such of our institutions as are only sketched out be definitely arranged (1)." No sooner was the harangue delivered than a crowd of orators rushed forward to inscribe their names on the tribune to follow in the same course. The senate of Augustus was never more obsequious.

Notwithstanding the headlong course which public opinion was following towards despotic power, and the obvious necessity for it to stay the discord from which such boundless suffering had ensued, there were some determined men who stood forward to resist the change, undeterred by the frowns of power, unseduced by the cheers of the multitude, uninstructed by the lessons of experience. Carnot in the Tribunate, and Berlier in the Council of State, were the foremost of this dauntless band. There ance of is something in the spectacle of moral courage, of individual firmness withstanding public transports, of conscious integrity despising regal seductions, which must command respect, even when advocating a course which is impracticable or inexpedient. "In what a position," said they, "will this proposition place all those who have advocated the principles of the Revolution! When hereditary succession to the throne is established, there will no longer remain a shadow to the Republic of all for which it has sacrificed so many millions of lives. I cannot believe that the people of France are disposed so soon to abandon all that has been so dearly acquired. Was liberty, then, only exhibited to man to increase his regrets for a blessing which he never can enjoy? Is it to be for ever presented to his eyes as the forbidden fruit to which he dares not reach out his hand? Has nature, which has inspired us with so pressing a desire for this great acquisition, doomed us in its search to continual disappointment? No! I-can never be brought to regard a blessing so generally preferred to all others, without which all others are nothing, as a mere illusion. My heart tells me that liberty is possible, and that the system which it goes to establish is easier of institution, and more stable in duration, than either arbitrary power or an unrestrained oligarchy." Every one respected the courage and motives of these upright men, but the fallacy of their arguments was not the less apparent, the public tendency to despotism not the less irresistible (2). In the Council of State the hereditary succession was carried by a majority of 20 to 7; and in the Tribunate by a still larger majority, Carnot alone voting in the minority.

Universal adulation trith which Napoléon was surrounded. The theatrical representation thus got up in the Tribunate, and the exchange of addresses, consultations, public and private, which followed, soon produced the desired effect. In Napoléon's words, it was now evident that the pear was ripe. Addresses flowed in from all quarters, from the army, the municipalities, the cities, the chambers of commerce, all imploring the first consulto ascend the imperial throne, and vieing with each other in the strains of service adulation. Their general strain was, "Greatest of men, complete your work, render it as immortal as your glory, you have extricated us from the chaos of the past, you have overwhelmed us with the blessings of the present, nothing remains but to guarantee for us the future " To the address of the Senate, imploring him to assume the purple, Aspoleon replied, "We have been constantly guided by the principle that sovereignty resides in the people, and that therefore every thing, without exception, should be rendered conn an wer to ducive to their interest, happiness, and glory It is to attain this end that the supreme magistracy, the Senate, the Council, the Legislative Body, the Flectoral Body, and all the branches of administration. have been instituted. The people of France can add nothing to the happiness and glory which surround me, but I feel that my most sacred as my most pleasing duty is to assure to its children the idvantages secured by that revolution which cost so much, and above all, by the death of so many millions of brave men who died in defence of our rights. It is my most earnest desire that we may be able to say, on the 11th July in this year- Fifteen years 150, by a spontaneous movement, we run to 11ms, we gained liberty, country, and glory ' Now these hist of blessings, secured beyond the possi-Mark 1801 bility of chance, are beyond the reach of danger, they are preserved for you and your children Institutions, conceived and commenced in the midst of the tempests of war, both without and within, are about to be secured, while the state resounds with the designs and conspiracies of our mortal enemies, by the adoption of all that the experience of ages has demonstrated to be noce, any to guarantee the rights which the nation has deemed essential to its dignity, its liberty, and its happiness (1) "

Figure 1. In this mawer is to be found the key to the whole policy of the basins first consul on the throne, and the secret of the astonishing facility be been will which he established, on the runs of revolutionary passions, the most despote throne of Europe. Ware that the great body of mankind are merpable of judging on public affairs, but perfectly adequate to a perception of their private interests, he invariably observed the principles there set forth, of carefully protecting all the revolutionary interests, and constantly addressing the people, in the language of revolutionary quality. By steadify addressing to these rules, he succeeded in at once calming their interested fears, and flattering their impassioned feetings, by constantly holding out that the people were the source of all power, he blinded them to the fact that they had ceased to be the possessor of any, and by religiously respecting all the interests created by the Revolution, he rendered the nation indifferent to the abundonment of all the principles on which it was founded the hard for the fish May declared Napoleon Expersor of the Fish May declared Napoleon Expersor of the French but referred

The obsequious body hastened to St.-Cloud with the decree, when me two peror received them with great magnitizence. "Whatever," sat the, "can contribute to the good of the country, is essentially connected with my happines. I submit the law concerning the succession to the throne to the succion of the people. I hope France will never repe it of the homours with which she has environed myself and my family. Come what may, prespect will be no longer with my por better from the moment that they shall cease to merit the law and the confidence of the great nation [2].

The appeal to the people soon proved that the first consul, in as-General concurrence of the suming the imperial dignity, had only acted in accordance with the wishes of the immense majority of the nation. Registers were opened in every commune of France, and the result showed that there were 3,572,529 votes in the affirmative (1), and only 2569 in the negative. History has recorded no example of so unaitimous an approbation of the foundation of a dynasty; no instance of a nation so joyfully taking refuge in the stillness of despotism.

Various changes, necessarily flowing from this great step, imhis family. mediately followed. On the day after his accession, the Senate published a senatus consultum, by which the imperial dignity was established in the Bonaparte family, and the rank and precedence of his relations, as well as the other dignitaries of the empire, regulated. Various important alterations on the constitution were made by this decree, if constitution it could be called, which had only the shadow of representative institutions with the reality of military despotism; but they will more appropriately come to be considered in the chapter relating to the internal government of the Emperor. The whole real powers of government were, by the new senatus consultum, vested in the Senate and the Council of State; in other words, in the Emperor. The Legislative Body continued its mute inglorious functions. The Tribunate, divided into several sections, and obliged to in the Emdiscuss in these separate divisions the projects of laws transmitted to it by the Legislative Body (2), lost the little consideration which still belonged to it, and paved the way for its total suppression, which soon after ensued. In every thing but name the Government of France was thenceforward an absolute despotism.

Napoléon's first step on coming to the throne was to create the the Marshals of the empire, and it was ordered that they should be addressed as M. le Maréchal. Those first named were eighteen in number, well known in the annals of military glory; Berthier, Murat, Moncey, Jourdan, Massena, Augereau, Bernadotte, Soult, Brune, Lannes, Mortier, Ney, Davoust, Bessières, Kellermann, Lefebvre, Pérignon, and Serrurier. He already projected the creation in their favour of those new patents of nobility, which were destined to recall the most glorious events of the empire, and form a phalanx of Paladins to defend the imperial throne (5).

On the same day Napoléon fixed the titles and precedence of all gress of court etithe members of his family. He directed that his brothers and sisters should receive the title of imperial highness; that the great dignitaries of the empire should adopt that of most serene highness; and that the address of "my lord" should be revived in favour of these elevated personages. Thenceforth the progress of court etiquette and Oriental forms was as rapid at the Tuileries as in the seraglio of the Byzantine empire. "Whoever," says Madame de Staël, "could suggest an additional piece of etiquette from the olden time, propose an additional reverence, a new mode of knocking at the door of an antechamber, a more ceremonious method of presenting a petition, or folding a letter, was received as if he had been a benefactor of the human race. The code of imperial etiquette is the most remarkable authentic record of human baseness that has been recorded by history (4)."

Diguified protest of Louis XVIII.

No sooner did he receive intelligence of the assumption of the imperial crown by Napoléon, than Louis XVIII, Tylli, on the shores of the Pat to protest against an act so si

⁽¹⁾ Bign. iii. 389.

⁽²⁾ Art. 96. Senatus Cons. May 19, 1804. Bign. iii, 363. Bour. vi. 76, 77.
(3) Bour. vi. 78. Bign. iii. 401.
(4) Rev. Franç. ii. 334, 335. Bour. vi. 77, 78.

Iteffections Such was the termination of the political changes of the French a these Revolution such the consequences of the first great experiment tried in modern Europe of regenerating society by destroying all its inslitu-Born of the enthusiasm and philanthropy of the higher and educated classes, adopted by the fervour and madness of the people, coerced by the severity of democratic tyranny, fanned by the gales of foreign conquest, disgraced by the cupidity of domestic administration, having exhausted every art of seduction, and worn out every means of delusion, it sunk at length into the stillness of absolute power. But it was not the slumber of freedom, to awaken fresh and vigorous in after-days, it was the deep sleep of despotism, the repose of a nation worn out by suffering, the lethargy of a people who in the preceding convulsions had destroyed all the elements of durable freedom In this respect there is a remarkable difference between the state tie Costist of the public mind and the disposition of the people in England during the usurpation of Cromwell, and in France under the empire of Napoleon Both were military despotisms, originating in the fervour of former times, but the philosophic observer might discern under the one symptoms of an unconquered spirit, destined to restore the public freedom when the tyranny of the moment was overpast, in the other, the well known features of Asiatic servility, the grave, in every age, of independent institutions The English nobility kept aloof from the court of the protector, he strove in vain to assemble a house of peers; the landed proprietors remained in sullen silence on their estates, such was the refractory spirit of the commons, that overy parliament was dissolved within a fix weeks after it assembled, and when one of his creatures suggested that the crown should be offered to the victorious soldier, the proposal was rejected by a great majority of the very parliament which he had moulded in the way most likely to be subservent to his will. But the case was very different in France There the nation rushed voluntarily and headlong into the arms of despotsin, the first consul experienced scarcely any resistance in his strides to absolute power either from the nobility, the commons, or the people, all classes yied with each other in their serviity to the reigning authority, the old families eagerly sought admittance into his antechambers, the new greedily covered the spoils of the empire, the cities addressed him in strains of Lastern viduation, the peasants dimost unanimously scated him on the throne Rapid as his advances to absolute power were, they could hardly keep pace with the desire of the nation to receive the chains of a master, and with truth might he apply to all his subjects what Therius said of the Roman Senate.—"Only hommes ad scritten parati " which were We should widely err if we supposed that this extraordinary all possess difference was owing either to any inhercuit servicity in the French lighter er and character, or any deficiency in the spirit of freedom among the lighter error inhabitants of that country when the contest communiced There was a nation more thoroughly and unanimously imbued parted y a body which has seed on legal or seems, a greatest against that the and all the sales period actains with a timing year or "This proof a water fitter or order by the French Insertament that of war published on they a fact, and the decarates war published on they a fact, and the decarates were published on they a fact, and the decarates were published on they a fact, and the decarates were published.

Sce Liuses, 1 1, 3.2 371

with the passion, both for liberty and equality, than the French were during the early years of the Revolution; and in the prosecution of that object they incurred hardships, and underwent sufferings, greater perhaps than any other people ever endured in a similar time. It was the magnitude of the changes produced by the Revolution, the prostration of all the higher classes which it induced, which produced this effect. When France emerged from the Revolution, almost all the old families were destroyed; commerce and manufactures were ruined, and the only mode of earning a subsistence which remained to the classes above the cultivators of the soil, was by entering into the service, and receiving the pay of Government. Necessity, as much as inclination, drove all into servility to the reigning authority; if they did not pay court to persons in power, they had no alternative but to starve. Necker, in his last and ablest work had already clearly perceived this important truth. "If by a revolution in the social system, or in public opinion," says he, "you have lost the elements of great proprietors, you must consider yourselves as having lost the elements requisite for the formation of a tempered monarchy, and turn, with whatever pain, to a different constitution of society. I do not believe that Bonaparte himself, with all his talent, his genius, and his power, could succeed in establishing in France a constitutional hereditary monarchy. There is a mode of founding a hereditary monarchy, however, widely different from all the principles of freedom; the same which introduced the despotism of Rome; the force of the army, the Prætorian guards, the soldiers of the East and the West. May God preserve France from such a destiny." What a testimony to the final result of the Revolution, from the man who, by the duplication of the Tiers-État, had so great a share in creating it (1)! * Madame de Staël'has well explained the prodigious and unpreof influence cedented accumulation of power and influence which was conat this period in the centrated in the hands of the first consul when reconstructing the disjointed members of society after the preceding convulsions. Govern. "Every mode of earning a subsistence had disappeared during ten years of previous suffering. No person could consider himself secure of his livelihood; men of all classes, ruined or enriched, banished or rewarded, equally found themselves at the mercy of the supreme power. Thousands of Frenchmen were on the list of emigrants; millions were the possessors of national domains; thousands were proscribed as priests or nobles; tens of thousands feared to be so for their revolutionary misdeeds. Napoléon, who fully appreciated the immense authority which such a state of dependence gave him, took care to keep it up. To such a one he restored his property, from another he withheld it; by one edict he gave back the unalienated woods to the old proprietors, by another he suspended the gift. "There was hardly a Frenchman in the whole kingdom, who had not something to solicit from the Government, and that something was the means of existence. The favour of Government thus led, not to an increase of vain or frivolous pleasures, but to a restoration of your country, a termination of exile, the bread of life. That unheard-of state of dependence, proved fatal to the spirit of freedom in the nation. An unprecedented combination, of circumstances put at the disposition of a single man the laws passed during the Reign of Terror, and the military force created by Revolutionary enthusiasm. All the local authorities, all the provincial establishments were suppressed or annulled; there remained only in France a si movement, and that was Paris; and all the men i . 12 pro driven to solicit public employment were compelled to come to the capital to find their livelihood. Thence has proceeded that rage for employment or situations under Government, which has ever since devoured and degraded France (1)."

⁽¹⁾ Necker, Dernières Vues, 235, 240.

Another element which powerfully contributed to the same effect. struct on of was the complete concentration of all the influence of the press in of the press the hands of Government, in consequence of the changes and calamities of former times. "The whole journals of France were subjected." says the same author, "to the most rigorous censure; the periodical press reneated, day after day, the same observations without any one being permitted to contradict them Under such circumstances, the press, instead of being, as is so often said, the safeguard of liberty, becomes the most terrible arm in the hand of power. In the same way, as regular troops are more formidable than militia to the independence of the people, so do hired writers deprave and mislead public opinion, much more than could possibly take place when men communicated only by words, and formed their opimons on facts which fell under their observation. When the appetite for news can be satisfied only by continued falsehood; when the reputation of every one depends on calumnies, universally diffused, without the possibility of their refutation, when the opinions to be advanced on every circumstance, every work, every individual, are submitted to the observations of journalists as a file of soldiers to the commands of their officers, the art of printing becomes what was formerly said of cannon, 'the last logic of kings (2)."

These profound observations suggest an important conclusion in are destroyed, and the balance in the state state that preponderance of popular or regal power, it instantly changes its functions, and instead of the arm of independence, becomes the instrument of oppression. It immensely augments the power of the weapons with which the different classes of society combat each other; but the direction which this great engine receives, and the objects to which it may be directed, are as various constitu

but m .

and become, as in Republican America, and a

the only security, power.